THE OXFORD DICTIONARY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Edited by F. L. CROSS

Third Edition edited by
E. A. LIVINGSTONE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
1997

Oxford University Press, Great Clarendon Street, Oxford OX2 6DP

Oxford New York
Athens Auckland Bangkok Bogota Bombay
Buenos Aires Calcutta Cape Town Dar es Salaam
Delhi Florence Hong Kong Istanbul Karachi
Kuala Lumpur Madras Madrid Melbourne
Mexico City Nairobi Paris Singapore
Taipei Tokyo Toronto and associated companies in Berlin Ibadan

Oxford is a trade mark of Oxford University Press

Published in the United States by Oxford University Press Inc., New York

First Published 1957
Second Edition 1974, Reprinted (with revisions) 1983
Third Edition 1997

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data
Data available

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data
Data available

ISBN 0-19-211655-X

Typeset by Wyvern 21 Limited Printed in the United States of America on acid-free paper

PREFACE

THE first edition of the Dictionary was an immediate success, unforeseen by anyone except perhaps the Editor, who had visions of a copy in every parsonage house in the country. In the decade that followed its publication in 1957, the outward practices of the Church underwent changes unparalleled in any similar time-span in modern history, many of them popularly associated with Second Vatican Council (1962–5), though their origins can often be traced earlier. The liturgical changes in the RC Church and its more liberal attitude both to Biblical scholarship and towards other communions were reflected in the second edition, published in 1974. In the last twenty years or so the shifts in attitude that marked the earlier period have increased in strength; changes in practice may have been less dramatic but perhaps more fundamental. The challenges to accepted orthodoxy encapsulated in Feminist Theology, Liberation Theology, and a more positive evaluation of other religions have made significant changes in the life and thought of the Church. Feminist Theology, for instance, has promoted a new perspective on the position of women in the Church and (indirectly) the divisions stemming from the ordination of women to the priesthood (and episcopate) in some parts of the Church which claim Catholic continuity. The new insights which have arisen out of these approaches have also led to changes in the understanding of some of the most basic doctrines. Doctrinal articles which could remain unaltered in the second edition have often had to be revised to take account of this thinking. There has also been a parallel resistance to change and a yearning for certainty, reflected in the strength of Evangelicals in England and of Fundamentalists in parts of the USA, and in the attraction of Orthodoxy for the Western World. The majority of Christians are now in Africa, Asia, and South America, not Europe and North America. This edition endeavours to record these changes, including new articles on a number of countries not separately treated in the past and increasing the coverage of Evangelical figures. It also includes more recent bibliographical material. Some may feel there is too much of this, but St Gregory the Great commented that the Scriptures provide water in which lambs may walk and elephants swim,[1] and a dictionary of this kind has to provide for a similar range of readers. What one person finds useless is just what another needs, and with interlibrary loans most books are eventually obtainable if sufficient detail is provided.

The first edition was largely the personal work of the Revd Dr F. L. Cross, assisted by a small group of helpers who, with a few exceptions, were junior when the work began, even if they held senior posts by the time it was published. For the second edition, he commissioned the Rt. Revd Dr K. T. Ware to fill gaps in the coverage of Eastern Orthodoxy. After Dr Cross's death, a wonderfully generous group of his friends and colleagues, led by Dr R. W. Hunt, the Revd Prof. H. F. D. Sparks, and Dr J. F. Mason, rallied round and pressed into service their colleagues and pupils; the Rt. Revd Mgr. J. D. Crichton and the Rt. Revd Mgr. L. L. McReavy looked after changes in RC liturgy and canon law. Much of their work has stood the test of time and survives in this edition, to which some of them have contributed new material.

The third edition is more of a corporate effort, with a larger number of scholars contributing their expertise. To all of them I am immensely grateful, and it is to them that the Dictionary owes whatever merit it may have. I am especially indebted to the Revd Prof. M. F. Wiles, who encouraged me in the beginning and has provided wise guidance whenever I ran into problems that seemed insuperable; to Dr Andrew Louth, who has written many articles and for fourteen years has generously put at my disposal his immense learning; to Dr Paul Joyce, the Revd Prof. J. Barton, the Revd G. M. Styler, and the Revd R. C. Morgan, who revised articles on Biblical subjects; to Prof. Peter Brunt, who wrote on subjects touching Roman history; to Dr S. P. Brock, who looked after much to do with the Middle East; to the Revd H. E. J. Cowdrey, who told me about medieval Popes and other Churchmen; to the Very Revd Dr Simon Tugwell, OP, who wrote articles and fielded queries about matters of spirituality and Dominican history; to the Revd Dr A. E. McGrath, the Revd Dr Diarmaid McCulloch, and Dr Richard Rex, who taught me about the Reformation; to the Revd Robert Ombres, OP, and the Revd Dr S. J. Pix who looked after the entries on canon law in the RC and Anglican Churches respectively; and to Prof. A. Hastings and Dr D. L. Hilliard who guided me on things African and Asiatic. The Revd Dr G. F. Nuttall, from whom I sought guidance over Nonconformity, went beyond even the second mile and read the second edition from cover to cover, pointing out what needed attention at every turn. On American matters Prof. J. Pelikan agreed to answer questions and never failed to respond with a helpful suggestion, and the Revd Dr R. W. Pfaff went through the book showing me opportunities to drop or abbreviate what was no longer important and suggesting gaps to be filled. Besides the contributors listed on pp. xiii–xxii, and the multitude too numerous to mention by name who have answered individual questions, I am indebted for advice on various points to Revd E. W. F. Agar, Prof. J. W. Allan, Revd Pio G. Alves de Sousa, Mr H. Anderson, Revd J. Andriessen, SJ, Rt. Revd Dr G. W. Ashby, the late Canon J. G. B. Ashworth, Miss Karen Aveyard, Dr W. Baier, Miss I. D. Baird, Prof. J. W. Baldwin, Prof. B. W. Ball, the late Dr C. P. Bammel, Miss Melanie Barber, Dr Alexandra Barratt, Rt. Revd T. Bavin, Prof. P. Bayley, Mr A. S. Bell, Revd Dom Aidan Bellenger, OSB, Dr B. S. Benedikz, Rt. Revd J. M. Bickersteth, KCVO, Dr E. G. W. Bill, OBE, Mrs Joan Bloodworth, M. F. Boespflug, Mr John A. Bollier, Sr. M. Borgia, OSU, M. M.-L. Bossuat, Revd W. Boulton, Revd Dr Leonard E. Boyle, OP, Mrs Ann Bradshaw, Revd Dr T. Bradshaw, Revd J. Brady, Revd I. F. M. Brayley, SJ, Miss G. M. Briggs, the late Canon H. M. Brown, Dr Michelle P. Brown, Rt. Revd Mgr. R. Brown, Revd Thomas Brown, SSM, Canon W. R. F. Browning, Mr David Brunton, Dr C. E. Bryant, Miss A. Buchan, Dr Charles Burnett, the late Rt. Revd Dr B. C. Butler, OSB, Mrs C. Butler, Mr P. A. Byrnes, Revd G. M. Cagni, Barnabite, Revd D. A. Cameron, Revd F. D. G. Campbell, SSJE, Dr G. N. Cantor, Revd Dr Elizabeth D. H. Carmichael, Revd Danilo Castello, CM, Revd G. R. Chapman, Revd Graeme Chatfield, Revd Huw Chiplin, Canon T. R. Christie, Mr Colin T. Clarkson, Revd K. E. Claus, Mr A. W. F. Coghill, the late Mr L. S. Colchester, Miss G. E. Coldham, Revd Dr Richard Conrad, OP, Mr M. Conway, Most Revd Dr Maurice Couve de Murville, the late Dr R. W. Cowley, Mrs Barbara Crossland, Revd Dr Eugene Csocsán de Várallja, Dr J. R. Curran, Dr Mark Curthoys, the late Canon M. E. Dahl, Revd W. Davage, the late Canon E. T. Davies, Dr G. I. Davies, the late Revd Dr R. E. Davies, Revd Thomas Davitt, CM, Prof. A. C. de la Mare, OBE, FBA, Mrs Lyle Dennen, Dr G. E. M. de Ste Croix, Dom Adalbert de Vogüé, OSB, Revd G. R. Dimock, OP, Dr Alexis Doval, FSC, Revd J. M. V. Drummond, Rt. Revd Michael Hare Duke, Revd Prof. G. R. Dunstan, CBE, Revd Dr H. D. Dupree, Revd G. D'Urso, OP, Révd. Père A. Duval, OP, Mrs E. R. Ehrhardt, Revd J. T. Ellis, Revd Prof. J. A. Emerton, FBA, the late Revd Dr H. Escott, Prof. J. M. Estes, Revd Ambrogio Eszer, OP, Dr P. Évieux, Dr P. J. Fedwick, Canon J. C. Fenton, Revd Dr Paul S. Fiddes, Dr John Fines, Dr R. A. Fletcher, DSC, OBE, Revd Dr T. S. Flynn, OP, Mrs M. J. Fox, Revd Fr. Gamelin, OSB, Prof. D. Ganz, Revd J. Garrow, Revd A. Gilmore, Revd R. J. Ginn, Mr J. P. Godwin, Rt. Revd Ronald Gordon, Mr R. J. Goulden, Dr M. D. Goulder, Dr R. Goulet, Mr B. J. Grant, Revd Benedict Green, CR, Metropolitan P. Gregorios, Mr Stephen Gregory, Mª Cristina

[1] Moralia sive Expositio in Iob, Dedication, 4.

Guillén, Prof. H. F. Guite, Mr R. E. Gurney, Revd Dom Rhaban Haacke, OSB, Mr I. T. Hall, Revd Prof. S. G. Hall, Revd Serge Hallette, Revd Dr R. J. Halliburton, Prof. M. Harl, Dr Andreas Haug, Rt. Revd Mgr. G. A. Hay, Dr Felicity Heal, the late Very Revd Dr E. W. Heaton, the late Miss W. A. G. Herrington, Prof. Y.-M. Hilaire, Rt. Revd Dom Giles Hill, OSB, Mr D. B. Hindmarsh, the late Revd Prof. W. A. Hinnebusch, OP, Dr Mary Hobbs, Prof. P. M. Holt, FBA, Prof. A. M. Honoré, FBA, Mr David J. Hooson, Miss B. Horley, Mr J. E. Horsch, Revd Austin Horsley, SM, Revd Ulrich Horst, OP, Dr James Howard-Johnston, Rt. Revd Dr J. W. A. Howe, Dr David Howlett, Very Revd E. Hubner, SJ, Revd Dr Gordon Huelin, Revd Alvaro Huerga, OP, Mr R. Ironman, Revd Robin Isherwood, Revd Miquel Itza, OP, Mrs Ritva Jacobbson, Dr N. W. James, Mr R. C. Johnson, Canon Brian H. Kelly, Sir Anthony Kenny, FBA, Dr E. J. King, Mrs Sophie Kisling, Revd J. M. Knight, Miss A. S. Kroese, Revd Prof. M. Lacko, SJ, Mr J. B. Lasek, Dr J. Latham, SJ, Prof. C. H. Lawrence, Mrs J. G. McK. Laws, the late Revd Dr J. S. Lawton, Revd Dr A. Lenox-Conyngham, Very Revd Bertie Lewis, Prof. W. Liebeschuetz, Revd Dr J. T. Lienhard, SJ, Dr S. N. L. Lieu, Most Revd F. G. Linale, Mr G. M. Longley, Mr M. H. Lowes, Revd Dr T. M. McCoog, SJ, Revd Catherine T. R. MacDonald, Revd Dr J. A. McGuckin, Prof. Dr Maria Leonar Machado de Sousa, Rt. Revd Mgr. T. G. McKenna, Dr C. M. MacRobert, Dr John Maddicott, FBA, Mr L. Maddison, Archimandrite J. H. Maitland Moir, Revd Dr G. A. Maloney, SJ, Dr W. S. Maltby, Revd George Marcil, OFM, Miss Jackie Marsh, Mr J. K. Martin, Prof. H. C. G. Matthew, FBA, Dr D. L. Mealand, Revd Renzo Meneghini, IMC, Revd Dr B. M. Metzger, M. Hubert Meyer, Revd Dr Dennis Minns, OP, Very Revd P. R. Mitchell, the late Prof. E. Molland, the late Révd. Père C. Mondésert, SJ, Mr Michael Montgomery, Dr Densil Morgan, Revd B. Mountford, Canon M. A. Moxon, Mr David Murphy, Revd A. Nadson, Mr S. R. Nairn, the late Very Revd Michael Napier, Cong. Orat., the late Revd F. J. Nash, Canon C. B. Naylor, Rt. Revd Dr Michael Nazir-Ali, Mr J. D. R. Newhouse, Mr J. S. Nicoll, Mrs M. Nixon, Dr J. O. W. Norris, Dr Ragnar Norrman, Revd Dr D. W. Norwood, Revd M. K. O'Halloran, SJ, Very Revd Dom Alexander Olivar, OSB, Revd Dr E. Panella, OP, Miss K. F. Pantzer, Mrs J. H. Parker, Dr Philip Pattenden, the late Canon B. C. Pawley, Revd Dr A. R. Peacocke, MBE, Revd Isacio Pérez Fernández, OP, Mr D. C. Peterson, M. Pierre Petitmengin, Prof. M. Philonenko, Mr Neil Plummer, Dr Colin Podmore, Dr Alex Popescu, Dr Karen Pratt, Dr R. D. F. Pring-Mill, FBA, Canon D. Probets, Dr Huw Pryce, Revd S. Rajamancickam, SJ, Dr Nigel L. Ramsay, Dr G. Redworth, Revd Dom D. D. Rees, OSB, Revd M. Rees, Prof. T. B. W. Reid, Mr D. H. Rice, Mr C. R. Riches, Revd G. M. Roberts, Mr R. Robinson, Dr Frank E. Robson, OBE, Revd H. Rooke, Canon James M. Rosenthal, Revd G. W. Rusling, Prof. P. Russell, Very Revd Patrick Ryall, OSM, Very Revd José Maria Salaverri, SM, Revd A. T. J. Salter, Revd Andrew Saville, Rt. Revd Dr Christoph Schönborn, OP, Revd Dom Jeremias Schröder, OSB, Revd Dom Gregory Scott, OSB, Mr R. D. Scott, Revd M. Searle, OFM, Revd Prof. A. P. F. Sell, Revd E. Simmons, CR, Miss Kate Skrebutenas, the late Miss Beryl Smalley, the late Dr Elsie Smith, Mrs J. J. M. Smith, Révd. Père L. Soltner, OSB, Revd Dr B. D. Spinks, Prof. H. F. Stander, Very Revd H. E. C. Stapleton, Revd Dr J. N. Steenson, Dr Elizabeth B. Stuart, Prof. Dr R. Stupperich, Dr Henry Summerson, Miss B. M. Swinson, Revd G. A. Tancred, Revd Michael Tavinor, Revd Dr Michael Tavuzzi, OP, the late Canon C. V. Taylor, Revd Dr J. J. Taylor, SM, Mr N. C. Thomas, Revd T. C. G. Thornton, Revd B. G. Thorogood, OBE, Very Revd J. H. Tidy, Ven. G. B. Timms, Miss R. B. Tingley, Revd A. Trabucchi, MCCJ, Miss M. S. Travis, the late Dr K. Treu, Dr J. Vennebusch, Dr G. Vermes, FBA, Canon R. D. Vicary, Dr P. A. Wakely, Revd Dom Henry Wansbrough, OSB, the late Canon M. A. C. Warren, Mr D. S. Watson, the late Revd Prof. J. A. Weisheipl, OP, Ven. F. V. Weston, Sr. M. Immolata Wetter, IBMV, Revd Dr L. R. Wickham, Miss Audrey Wild, Miss Elizabeth Wilford, Miss Alice Wilkinson, Prof. G. H.

Williams, Miss Joan Williams, the Rt. Revd Dr R. D. Williams, FBA, Mr N. G. Wilson, FBA, the late Prof E. Wind, Prof. Dr Wolgast, Revd Dr J. L. Womer, Mr Richard Wood, Rt. Revd Dr K. J. Woollcombe, and Mr D. G. Wright. Thanks for bibliographical and other assistance are also due to the staffs of the Biblioteca Nacional, Madrid; the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris; the British Library; Lambeth Palace Library; the Vatican Library; the Libraries of the Universities of Birmingham, Cambridge, Leeds, Manchester, Princeton, and Yale, and the University of Wales, Bangor; of Princeton Theological Seminary, the Courtauld Institute, Queen Mary and Westfield College, London, the Union Seminary, New York, and Yale Divinity School; the Victoria and Albert Museum; the Indian and Bangladeshi High Commissions in London; and above all to the staff of the Bodleian Library and other libraries in Oxford, and therein especially to Mr P. G. Allmond, Dr B. Barker-Benfield, Mr R. D. Bell, Ms C. Blundell, Miss J. Dean, Dr G. A. Evison, Mrs A. L. Flavell, Dr M. R. Kauffmann, Mr R. A. Lindo, Mr R. A. McNeil, Mr J. P. Mialon, Mrs S. J. Miles, Mrs W. L. F. Minty, Ms A. M. Northover, Miss A. J. Peters, Miss M. Sheldon-Williams, Mrs P. J. Skinner, and Mr P. Warren, who have all gone far beyond the call of duty. All these, and those whose names occur in the List of Contributors, gave unstintingly, but of course what remains amiss is my responsibility.

Production of the book has been a long and complicated process. Modern typographical conventions, such as the use of arabic rather than roman numerals, have been introduced in the hope that this will prove easier for a new generation of readers. The reordering of articles has been designed with the same end in view. Short titles have normally been used for English statutes rather than the older system of citation by regnal years. Thus the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1926 replaces 16 & 17 Geo. V, c. 55. Where the date incorporated in the official short title differs from the more familiar one when the legislation was passed, both dates are indicated. For example, 'The Toleration Act 1688, passed in 1689 . . .'. The terms man, mankind, etc., are normally used in an inclusive sense; to spell out men and women every time seemed an unnecessary use of space and the distinction is normally made only when there is a particular point at issue, as in discussion of the early chapters of Genesis. In the absence of agreement about the superiority of one modern translation of the Bible over another, quotations are usually from the Authorized Version, though other translations are used in exceptional cases.

For invaluable help in dealing with the various stages in the production process I am grateful to the Very Revd Ephrem Lash, who read the structured proofs and told me much about Orthodox practice; the Revd Dr Simon Francis Gaine, OP, who read all the galley proofs against the original copy, not only picking up printer's errors but also alerting me to recent shifts in RC practice and teaching; and the Rt. Revd Michael Manktelow, who achieved the herculean task of reading both galley and page proofs to a strict (and often inconvenient) timetable, and pointing me to improvements at every stage. To all these my debt is incalculable. I have also been assisted in checking and settling queries by Mrs Skinner, Dr Mark Vessey, Dr R. A. Cross, the Revd Dr J. R. Garrard, Dr Peter Cramer, Dr Gaine, Miss Paula Gooder, Miss Christine Joynes, Miss Ruth Owen, and Dr Maria Sherwood-Smith. Without their help, the Dictionary would not have been published before the millennium.

15 St. Giles
Oxford
October 1996

E. A. LIVINGSTONE

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

THE Christian Church has been so closely interwoven with the course of Western civilization that her history, life, and institutions are matters of deep concern not only to those who through Holy Baptism have been admitted to membership in the Body of Christ, but to all who take an intelligent interest in contemporary culture. The present Dictionary has been compiled in order to bring together, in a concise and handy form, as large a body of information as possible directly bearing on the Christian Church. It is addressed to the needs not merely of those whose primary vocation lies in the Christian ministry or in the professional study of theology or church history, nor even only to the general body of professing Christians who seek information about their faith and its growth, but to the educated public as a whole. For this and other reasons technicalities have been avoided, and it is hoped that throughout the entries are so written as to be immediately intelligible to the layman. If the Dictionary has any apologetic purpose, it seeks to achieve it solely through the objective presentation of fact.

The scope of the Dictionary need not be outlined here, as it will be discovered most readily from a rapid perusal of its pages. If a historical treatment predominates, the employment of this method will need no defence in the case of a faith which is so evidently rooted in history as is Christianity. The attempt has been made to give due and proportionate attention to the several parts and aspects of a vast field, covering over nineteen centuries. But history, as modern studies in its structure by Wilhelm Dilthey, Ernst Troeltsch, and a host of others have made abundantly clear, is by its nature selective, and a discipline in which the employment of objective canons, for example on a statistical basis, is an intrinsically unattainable ideal. If in the present work fuller attention has been paid to Western Christendom than to later Eastern Orthodoxy, to Christianity in Britain than to that of the Continent, to the events of the nineteenth century than to those of the tenth, this disproportion is only relative. In any case it may be presumed that the reader will welcome fuller information on matters at closer range. If, on the other hand, to some readers outside Europe it seems that insufficient attention has been given to the non-European lands where Christianity is now firmly planted, it must be recalled that the Church's connexion with Mediterranean and European countries is of far longer standing, and this fact is necessarily reflected in the subject-matter of a work in which the treatment is historical.

Perhaps some readers will look for a rather fuller treatment of Biblical matters in a Dictionary of the Christian Church than will be found here; and reasonably. The importance of the Bible throughout the history of the Church—and especially whenever she has been fully alive to her theological vocation—has always been fundamental. But it would have been impossible to give any adequate treatment of Biblical subjects in the present work without making disproportionate demands on space. There seemed the less need for doing so in view of the abundance of Biblical aids in the form of dictionaries (lexical, factual, and theological), concordances, and compendious commentaries of varying dimensions. These works are readily accessible in libraries. But as they are seldom privately possessed except by the clergy and others with a direct interest in theological studies, it was felt that some information of an elementary kind would be welcomed by a considerable body of lay people whose needs the Dictionary might be expected to serve. It is primarily for such readers that the entries on Biblical subjects are included.

A notable constituent of the Dictionary is the bibliographies in small type at the end of the articles. To enable the reader to use these to the best advantage it may be of service to add a few details about their construction and purpose. They were mostly compiled independently of the articles, and their form, it must be confessed, was devised as the Dictionary developed, so that complete consistency has not been achieved. They do not set out to record (as is not infrequently the case in dictionary works) the sources which the compiler happens to have found specially useful. Their purpose, rather, is to record the principal items of primary and permanent interest bearing on the subject of the entry. The reader is asked, therefore, not to be too hasty in his strictures when he finds a work listed which the best critics assure him is 'superseded'. Still less must he suppose that the inclusion of a book implies an editorial nihil obstat. It is sufficiently familiar that a bad book has sometimes had great intrinsic importance in relation to a particular subject; and since the historical student may need to discover details of such a book, they have been included. Careful attention has also been given to recording the original date of publication of all items, partly to enable the bibliographies to be used by those interested in the authors as well as the contents of the books. Unless the contrary is expressly stated, the date given is always to be taken as that of the first edition. For those who want further readily accessible material, either by way of bibliography or on the subject itself, a liberal citation of articles in the larger standard dictionaries and encyclopaedic works has been made on a selective basis. Our own experience of dictionary works is that PRE[1] is to be especially commended for its thoroughness and accuracy, DTC for its amplitude, and EC for its modernity. We have found no reason to contest what appears to be the general verdict about the limitations of DACL. But that dictionary, despite its inaccuracies, is so often the only pointer to further material on archaeological and liturgical matters that we have frequently cited it. With use, the reader will perhaps accustom himself to finding guidance from the bibliography also by its omissions. Thus, where in the case of a person no biography is recorded, it can ordinarily be assumed that none is known to the Editor.

We hope, finally, that the inclusion of this relatively extensive bibliography needs no apology. Those who pursue theological and historical studies rarely possess a large private library in these days, and are more than hitherto dependent on public libraries, often at some distance. It is believed that the Dictionary will put the student of church history in possession of a larger body of bibliographical material than any other work of similar compass. If a good deal of this information will be rarely, if ever, wanted by many users of the Dictionary, this is a common phenomenon in a reference book. The same is true of Bradshaw or Whitaker or Crockford.

In the construction of the Dictionary constant use has naturally been made of the standard sets of texts, historical collections, and histories, as well as the larger dictionaries, encyclopaedias, chronological tables, gazetteers, atlases, and other works of reference. Where any question of accuracy arose, the attempt was always made to verify details from first-hand sources. The extent to which this process could be carried had obvious limits. Where there are many hundreds of opportunities for error on every page, doubtless many inaccuracies survive. But it may be worth pointing out that in some instances considerable labour has been involved in the establishment of a single reference or date; and hence where such, as given in this Dictionary, differs from that currently found elsewhere, while it might be prudent to treat it with reserve, it would be mistaken to conclude that it was necessarily wrong.

[1] The full titles corresponding to these and the many other abbreviations used will be found in the 'List of Abbreviations', pp. xxiii–xxxii.

It is unnecessary to recount in detail the stages by which the Dictionary has assumed its present shape. It owes its inception to Mr G. F. J. Cumberlege of the Oxford University Press, who invited the Editor to undertake the work as long ago as 1939. Reference to the list of Contributors on pp. [x–xii][1] will show that it is the work of many hands, among them several scholars of high distinction. Roughly half the entries, including most of those of major importance, were drafted by these Contributors working independently. The rest, together with the bibliographies, were compiled by the Editor and his immediate associates. In some cases the reader who is versed in contemporary theological literature will have little difficulty in identifying the authorship of certain articles. But in order to secure the maximum uniformity it was agreed at the outset that all contributions should be subject to such editorial modification and reconstruction as seemed desirable, and that anonymity should be preserved. In the event many of the articles in the Dictionary are the work of several hands.

A consequence of this method of composition is that revision has been continuous. The material as put at the Editor's disposal needed welding, as far as possible, into a unity. By the close interrelation of the articles much economy of space has been achieved. In this connexion the Publisher generously allowed a great deal of recasting in the proof stage. The Editor is conscious that with the expenditure of further time and labour this process could with profit have been carried further, especially, he believes, in the earlier sections of the work. But a year or so ago it seemed to the Press and the Editor alike that the time had come to eschew further revision and to start the book on its way. In a dictionary (and particularly in one on a new pattern) perfection is an unattainable ideal. If in its future editions this work is to be less imperfect, the Editor must look to the goodwill of his readers to inform him of points needing correction.

There remains the happy task of expressing my own thanks, and also, I doubt not, those of future users of the Dictionary, to the very large company of those who in innumerable ways have contributed to its making. It is possible to mention by name only a few of them.

There are, first, my immediate associates. In the earliest stages of the work I had as a collaborator in the Editorship my then colleague the Revd T. M. Parker, cuius eruditionis fontes plurimi gustavimus exhausit nemo.[2] Though he had a decisive formative influence on the Dictionary, he was, alas, soon compelled to withdraw by pressure of other work. At this period valuable assistance was also given by the Revd H. J. Sutters who, among other labours, compiled the original list of entries. During several of the War years, when progress was necessarily slow, Miss Hilda C. Graef, now known as the biographer of Therese Neumann and Edith Stein, drafted or revised a great number of the early entries; and it was to her, more than to anyone else, that the possession of a continuous first draft was due. In the herculean task of finally producing from a vast assemblage of material a work which had form, unity, and completeness, my principal debt is to Miss Elizabeth A. Livingstone. For over five years the Dictionary has engaged her devoted and untiring energies. No problem that arose could be allowed to rest until it had been pursued to its limits, whether by research, correspondence, or personal interviews, and in some cases by all three means; and in this connexion abundant thanks are also due to the large body of those who have generously responded to Miss Livingstone's inquiries. The drafting of the bibliographies is almost wholly due to the same collaborator. There are relatively few of the books or articles cited which Miss Livingstone has not handled, or, where this proved impossible, pursued to an unimpeachable source; and, it need hardly be said, there are a vast number of others which, though examined, have been passed by unrecorded, either through the exigencies of space or through their want of permanent interest. This task has involved the consultation of what must be almost, if not quite, a record number of books in public libraries; and it would be impossible not to mention our indebtedness to the staffs of the Bodleian Library and of the Reading Room of the British Museum, on whom the compilation of the Dictionary has imposed (in the literal sense as well as in others) many very heavy burdens. At the Bodleian Library, particular thanks are due to Mr R. G. Chapman, MA, Mr R. J. Key, MA, and Miss Angela M. Jackson.

[1] These pages relate to the first edition.
[2] Words originally applied to F. E. Brightman, an earlier Librarian of Pusey House, by C. H. Turner.

At a comparatively early stage in the work, the Press invited Professor F. M. Powicke and the Revd Professor S. L. Greenslade to report on and, as far as opportunity allowed, to read the proofs. Professor Powicke's valuable comments on the earlier drafts of the medieval articles preserved us from many pitfalls, while Professor Greenslade, who scrutinized the whole work, made innumerable suggestions which were of untold service. It must be insisted, however, that so many modifications have been made in the text since these two scholars concluded their task several years ago, that they must not be held in any way responsible for errors. In the later stages of the work much assistance was received with the medieval articles from Dr R. W. Hunt, the Keeper of Western Manuscripts at the Bodleian Library, and, in the matter of the medieval bibliographies, from Dr Daniel Callus, OP. The Editor hopes that in consequence of this abundant assistance even specialists in medieval studies will find the work a useful reference book. In Semitic matters, where the Editor's own incompetence has made him much in need of guidance, he has also to thank Professors G. R. Driver, C. A. Simpson, and H. F. D. Sparks, and Mr O. H. M. Lehmann for help on specific points.

A word of special thanks is due for help of another kind. With a generosity which would be unbelievable to those who do not know him, Mr Samuel Gurney went through the whole of the galley proofs, almost line by line, assiduously checking references against standard works and producing lively comments and suggestions from his wide store of learning about all things ecclesiastical and unecclesiastical.

It need hardly be said that the production of the Dictionary has involved a great deal of typing and other secretarial work. Usually each article needed to be drafted many times before it was in the right form for the printer. In this connexion thanks are due to some of those already mentioned as well as to Miss G. I. Johns, to Mrs M. Bridge, and to Mrs J. Barnicoat, among others.

Finally, a word of thanks must be said to the Oxford University Press and their printers. The Editor had the good fortune to have a publisher with unique experience in Dictionaries. To learn that the construction of a dictionary is not the wholly humdrum task of Dr Johnson's lexicographer, the reader need but turn to the fascinating Preface to the new Liddell and Scott. If the finished work is not quite the companionable and attractive book that I believe Mr Cumberlege originally envisaged, this is because it became clear, as the work proceeded, that it was not within the present Editor's capacity to produce it. But I am grateful to him for his generous and continuous interest in the work until he retired from the Press last September, and also to all other members of the staff of Amen House who have been concerned with the Dictionary since its inception. The printers, Messrs. R. & R. Clark of Edinburgh, have earned the gratitude of the Press, the readers of the Dictionary, and myself by their patience and accuracy at every stage of the long and complicated process of production, and through them the Scottish, as well as the English, tradition of academic printing and publishing has contributed to this book.

Christ Church
Oxford
May 1957

F. L. CROSS

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

†N. J. ABERCROMBIE, MA, D.Phil., sometime Editor of the Dublin Review
The Revd A. W. ADAMS, DD, Emeritus Fellow and sometime Dean of Divinity, Magdalen College, Oxford
P. S. ALEXANDER, MA, D.Phil., Nathan Laski Professor of Postbiblical Jewish Literature, University of Manchester
†D. J. ALLAN, MA, FBA, sometime Professor of Greek, University of Glasgow
The Revd G. W. ANDERSON, MA, Hon.DD, Hon.Theol.D., FRSE, FBA, Professor Emeritus of Hebrew and Old Testament Studies, University of Edinburgh
A. ELIZABETH ARMSTRONG, MA, D.Phil., Emeritus Fellow of Somerville College, Oxford
A. H. ARMSTRONG, MA, FBA, Emeritus Professor of Greek, University of Liverpool, and Emeritus Professor of Classics, Dalhousie University, Halifax, Nova Scotia
The Revd D. J. ATKINSON, MA, Ph.D., M.Litt., Canon Residentiary and Chancellor of Southwark Cathedral
The Revd J. BACKHOUSE, BA, sometime priest-in-charge of Bitteswell, Leics
IRENA BACKUS, D.Phil., Dr.theol.hab., titular professor, Institut d'histoire de la Réformation, University of Geneva
†The Revd D. S. BAILEY, D.Litt., sometime Canon Residentiary and Precentor of Wells
The Revd AELRED BAKER, OSB, MA, Prinknash Abbey
†The Revd M. B. BANISTER, MA, sometime Vicar of King's Sutton, Banbury, Oxon
The Revd ANSELM BANKS, OSB, MA, Buckfast Abbey
The Revd MICHAEL BANNER, MA, D.Phil., Ph.D., F. D. Maurice Professor of Moral and Social Theology, King's College London
GILES BARBER, MA, B.Litt., sometime Librarian, The Taylorian Institution, Oxford
MALCOLM BARBER, BA, Ph.D., Reader in Medieval History, University of Reading
W. H. BARBER, MA, D.Phil., Emeritus Professor of French, Birkbeck College, London
RUTH BARBOUR, MA, sometime Assistant in the Department of Western Manuscripts, Bodleian Library, Oxford
FRANK BARLOW, CBE, MA, D.Phil., Hon.D.Litt., FBA, Emeritus Professor of History, University of Exeter
The Revd L. W. BARNARD, MA, Ph.D., sometime Senior Lecturer in Theology, University of Leeds
T. C. BARNARD, MA, D.Phil., Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford
ANNIE BARNES, MA, D.Phil., Honorary Fellow of St Anne's College, Oxford
S. J. B. BARNISH, MA, D.Phil., Lecturer in Late Antique and Early Medieval European History, Royal Holloway, University of London
†The Revd J. W. B. BARNS, MA, D.Phil., sometime Professor of Egyptology, University of Oxford
The Revd JAMES BARR, DD, FBA, Professor of Hebrew Bible, Vanderbilt University, and Regius Professor of Hebrew Emeritus, University of Oxford
The Revd C. K. BARRETT, DD, FBA, Emeritus Professor of Divinity, Durham University
The Revd P. L. S. BARRETT, MA, BD, LL M, Rector of Compton and Otterbourne
†The Revd J. V. BARTLET, MA, Hon.DD, sometime Professor of Church History, Mansfield College, Oxford
The Revd J. BARTON, MA, D.Phil., D.Litt., Oriel and Laing Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture, University of Oxford
†The Rt. Revd Mgr. J. M. T. BARTON, DD, sometime Consultor, Pontifical Biblical Commission, and Canon of Westminster Cathedral
R. J. BAUCKHAM, MA, Ph.D., Professor of New Testament Studies, University of St Andrews
RICHARD BEADLE, Ph.D., Lecturer in English, University of Cambridge, and Fellow of St John's College
JAMES A. BECKFORD, D.Litt., Professor in the Department of Sociology, University of Warwick
R. A. P. J. BEDDARD, MA, D.Phil., Fellow and Tutor in Modern History, Oriel College, Oxford
The Very Revd T. R. BEESON, MA, sometime Dean of Winchester
†A. F. L. BEESTON, MA, D.Phil., FBA, sometime Laudian Professor of Arabic, University of Oxford
S. BERTELLI, Professor of Modern History, University of Florence
The Revd THOMAS F. BEST, Ph.D., Executive Secretary in the Secretariat of the Faith and Order Commission, World Council of Churches, Geneva
MARTIN BIDDLE, MA, FBA, Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford
†L. BIELER, D.Phil., sometime Professor of Palaeography and Late Latin, University College, Dublin
T. J. BINYON, MA, D.Phil., Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford
†The Revd HUGH BISHOP, CR, MA, sometime Superior of the Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield
E. BLACKBURN, Wakefield
†The Revd ANDREW BLAIR, CR, MA, sometime of the Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield
W. J. BLAIR, MA, D.Phil., FSA, Fellow and Praelector in Modern History, The Queen's College, Oxford
†T. S. R. BOASE, MA, Hon.DCL, sometime President of Magdalen College, Oxford REINHARD BODENMANN, D.Th., Research Fellow, University of Geneva
GERALD BONNER, MA, Reader-Emeritus, University of Durham, and sometime Distinguished Professor of

Early Christian Studies, Catholic University of America
The Revd M. A. Bourdeaux, MA, BD, DD (Lambeth), Director, Keston Institute, Oxford, and Hon. Canon of Rochester
The Revd John Bowden, MA, Hon.DD, Editor and Managing Director, SCM Press Ltd., London
Fiona Bowie, BA, D.Phil., Lecturer in Theology and Religious Studies, University of Wales, Lampeter
The Revd J. W. Bowker, MA, Adjunct Professor, University of Pennsylvania
†The Revd H. S. Box, BD, Ph.D., sometime Vicar of St Barnabas, Bexhill
†The Revd H. R. T. Brandreth, OGS, sometime Vicar of St Saviour's, Highbury, and St Dunstan's, Fleet Street, London
D. Brass, BA, Ph.D., sometime Senior Lecturer in Spanish and Portuguese, University of Bristol
Martin Brett, D.Phil., Fellow and Tutor, Robinson College, Cambridge
Lord Briggs, MA, Hon.D.Litt., FBA, sometime Provost of Worcester College, Oxford
S. P. Brock, MA, D.Phil., FBA, Reader in Syriac Studies, and Fellow of Wolfson College, Oxford
C. N. L. Brooke, CBE, Litt.D., FBA, Dixie Professor Emeritus of Ecclesiastical History, University of Cambridge, and Life Fellow of Gonville and Caius College
G. J. Brooke, MA, Ph.D., Senior Lecturer in Intertestamental Literature, Department of Religions and Theology, University of Manchester
Peter Newman Brooks, MA, D.Phil., Fellow of Robinson College and Lecturer in Divinity, University of Cambridge
The Revd D. W. Brown, MA, Ph.D., Van Mildert Professor of Divinity in the University of Durham and Canon of Durham Cathedral
P. R. L. Brown, MA, Hon.D.Theol., Hon.DHL, Hon.D.Litt., FBA, Rollins Professor of History, Princeton University
The Revd Raymond Brown, BD, M.Th., Ph.D., sometime Principal of Spurgeon's College, London
†J. H. Brumfitt, MA, D.Phil., sometime Professor of French, University of St Andrews
P. A. Brunt, MA, FBA, Camden Professor Emeritus of Ancient History, University of Oxford, and Emeritus Fellow of Brasenose College
The Rt. Revd C. O. Buchanan, MA, DD (Lambeth), Bishop Suffragan of Woolwich
D. A. Bullough, MA, FSA, Emeritus Professor of Mediaeval History, University of St Andrews
J. A. Burrow, MA, FBA, Winterstoke Professor of English, University of Bristol
J. A. Caldwell, B.Mus., MA, D.Phil., University Reader in Music, University of Oxford
†The Revd Daniel Callus, OP, MA, D.Phil., sometime of Blackfriars, Oxford
E. K. Cameron, MA, D.Phil., Reader in Reformation History, University of Newcastle upon Tyne
†The Revd J. T. Campion, MA, sometime Chaplain of the Blue Nile Province
†The Revd A. C. Canner, MA, sometime Vicar of Tintagel, Cornwall
†The Revd R. E. Cant, MA, sometime Canon Residentiary and Chancellor of York
The Very Revd E. F. Carpenter, KCVO, MA, BD, Ph.D., Hon.DD, sometime Dean of Westminster
†The Rt. Revd H. J. Carpenter, MA, Hon.DD, sometime Bishop of Oxford
J. I. Catto, MA, D.Phil., Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford
The Revd Henry Chadwick, KBE, DD, FBA, sometime Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge
Allan Chapman, MA, D.Phil., FRAS, Faculty of Modern History, University of Oxford
†C. R. Cheney, CBE, D.Litt., FBA, sometime Professor of Medieval History and Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
The Revd A. C. Cheyne, Professor Emeritus of Ecclesiastical History, New College, University of Edinburgh
The Revd J. P. H. Clark, MA, BD, DD (Lambeth), Vicar of Longframlington, Northumberland
Stuart Clark, Ph.D., Lecturer in History, University of Wales, Swansea
W. H. Clennell, MA, sometime Senior Assistant Librarian, Bodleian Library, Oxford
R. A. Coles, MA, D.Phil., Papyrology Rooms, Ashmolean Museum, Oxford
The Revd Edmund Colledge, OSA, MA, Emeritus Professor, Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Toronto
Barry Collett, MA, D.Phil., Senior Lecturer in the Department of History, University of Melbourne
The Revd D. Cook, MA, Chaplain, Cranbrook School
Joyce Coombs, sometime member of the Mothers' Union Central Council, London
M. P. Costeloe, BA, Ph.D., Professor of Hispanic and Latin American Studies, University of Bristol
John Cottingham, MA, D.Phil., Professor of Philosophy, University of Reading
William J. Courtenay, Ph.D., C. H. Haskins Professor of History, University of Wisconsin, Madison
†The Revd F. Courtney, SJ, DD, sometime Librarian and Lecturer, Heythrop College, University of London
The Revd H. E. J. Cowdrey, MA, FBA, Emeritus Fellow, St Edmund Hall, Oxford
†The Revd C. Stuart Craig, BA, sometime General Secretary of the Congregational Council for World Mission
P. J. Cramer, MA, Ph.D., Winchester College
†The Revd W. J. Cratchley, Ph.D., DD, sometime Vicar of St Mark's, Swindon, and Honorary Canon of Bristol
The Very Revd Mgr. J. D. Crichton, sometime Parish Priest of Pershore and editor of Life and Worship
The Revd G. Croft, SJ, MA, Ph.D., Lecturer in Psychology, The Seminary, Harare
†A. C. Crombie, MA, B.Sc., Ph.D., FBA, sometime Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford
†The Revd F. L. Cross, DD, FBA, sometime Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford
R. A. Cross, MA, D.Phil., Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford

†The Revd J. Crozier, sometime Parish Priest at Abingdon and Hon. Canon of Portsmouth diocese
†The Revd G. J. Cuming, DD, sometime Canon Theologian of Leicester Cathedral
The Revd Colin Davey, Ph.D., Co-ordinating Secretary for Church Life, Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland, London
The Revd Brian Davies, OP, MA, D.Phil., M.Th., Professor of Philosophy, Fordham University, New York
The Revd G. Henton Davies, M.Litt., MA, Hon.DD, Principal Emeritus of Regent's Park College, Oxford
Oliver Davies, MA, D.Phil., Lecturer in Theology, University of Wales, Lampeter
R. T. Davies, MA, sometime Reader in English Literature, University of Liverpool
†N. Davis, MBE, MA, FBA, sometime Merton Professor of English Language and Literature, University of Oxford
†R. H. C. Davis, MA, FBA, sometime Professor of Medieval History, University of Birmingham
N. R. M. de Lange, MA, D.Phil., Lecturer in Rabbinics, University of Cambridge
†The Revd V. A. Demant, MA, D.Litt., Hon.DD, sometime Regius Professor of Moral and Pastoral Theology and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford
†The Revd D. R. Dendy, MA, BD, sometime Vicar of Bledington, Oxford
The Revd R. A. Denniston, MA, M.Sc., sometime Academic and General Publisher, Oxford University Press
†Sirapie Der Nersessian, Litt.D., sometime Professor of Byzantine Art and Archaeology, Dumbarton Oaks, Washington
A. M. Devine, MA, Ph.D., sometime Fellow of Wolfson College, Oxford
A. G. Dickens, CMG, MA, D.Litt., FBA, FSA, Emeritus Professor of History, University of London
†The Revd J. C. Dickinson, MA, B.Litt., sometime Senior Lecturer in Theology, University of Birmingham
J. P. B. Dobbs, BA, M.Ed., M.Phil., D.Phil., Dip.Ed., Dip.Theol., FRSA, FRAS, sometime Director of Music Studies and Deputy Principal of Dartington College of Arts
†Sir Godfrey R. Driver, MA, Hon.DD, FBA, sometime Professor of Semitic Philology, University of Oxford
The Very Revd J. H. Drury, MA, Dean of Christ Church, Oxford
E. T. Dubois, D.Phil., D.-ès-Lettres, sometime Reader in French, University of Newcastle upon Tyne
Jean Dunbabin, MA, D.Phil., Fellow and Tutor in History, St Anne's College, Oxford
The Revd A. Ian Dunlop, TD, MA, BD, Edinburgh
The Revd A. O. Dyson, MA, BD, D.Phil., Professor of Social and Pastoral Theology, University of Manchester
T. F. Earle, MA, D.Phil., University Lecturer in Portuguese, University of Oxford
Robert Easting, MA, D.Phil., Reader in English Language and Literature, Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand
Revd Canon Peter Eaton, BA, Rector of St James Episcopal Church, Lancaster, Penn.
Brother Elias, O.Carm., BA, M.Phil., Aylesford
†A. B. Emden, MA, Hon.D.Litt., FBA, FSA, sometime Principal of St Edmund Hall, Oxford
The Revd Philip Endean, SJ, MA, BD, D.Phil., Lecturer in Systematic Theology, Heythrop College, University of London
The Revd G. H. Ettlinger, SJ, MA, D.Phil., Professor of Patristics, St John's University, Jamaica, New York
R. J. W. Evans, MA, D.Phil., FBA, Professor of European History, University of Oxford
The Revd M. Everitt, MA, Chaplain and Fellow of Merton College, Oxford
†The Revd H. H. Farmer, MA, Hon.DD, sometime Norris-Hulse Professor of Divinity and Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge
Margot Fassler, MA, Ph.D., Director, Yale Institute of Sacred Music; Professor of Religion and Music, Yale Divinity School; and Professor of Musicology, Yale School of Music
E. Ferguson, Ph.D., Professor Emeritus of Church History, Abilene Christian University, Abilene, Texas
The Revd Ronald Ferguson, MA, BD, Th.M., Minister of St Magnus Cathedral, Kirkwall, Orkney
The Rt. Revd Mgr. B. E. Ferme, D.Phil., DCL, Professor of Canon Law, Università Pontificia Gregoriana, Rome
K. C. Fincham, MA, Ph.D., Senior Lecturer in History, University of Kent
The Revd C. B. Firth, MA, sometime Asia Secretary of the Conference of Missionary Societies of Great Britain and Ireland, London
Ian Fisher, MA, Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland, Edinburgh
The Revd J. D. C. Fisher, MA, BD, sometime Honorary Canon of Chichester
†The Revd B. FitzGibbon, SJ, MA, sometime Lecturer in History, Campion Hall, Oxford
The Revd Joseph A. Fitzmyer, SJ, Professor Emeritus, Biblical Studies, Catholic University of America
A. J. Flavell, MA, Assistant Librarian, Bodleian Library, Oxford
†J. D. Fleeman, MA, D.Phil., sometime Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford
R. A. Fletcher, MA, Reader, University of York
Derek W. Flitter, MA, D.Phil., Lecturer in Modern Spanish Language and Literature, University of Birmingham
†Sir Idris Foster, MA, FBA, sometime Jesus Professor of Celtic, University of Oxford
†Ruth Fraenkel, Ph.D., Oxford
The Revd J. E. Francis, BD, sometime Principal of Overdale College, Birmingham
†The Revd R. S. Franks, MA, D.Litt., sometime Principal of Western College, Bristol
The Revd R. H. Fuller, MA, Professor Emeritus, Virginia Theological Seminary
The Revd Simon Francis Gaine, OP, MA, D.Phil., Blackfriars, Oxford

List of Contributors

The Revd C. Gallagher, SJ, MA, DCL, sometime Rector of the Pontifical Oriental Institute, Rome

†Dame Helen L. Gardner, MA, D.Litt., FBA, FRSL, sometime Merton Professor of English Literature, University of Oxford

The Revd J. R. Garrard, D.Phil., Assistant Curate, Team Parish of Elland

D. J. Gazeley, Director of Watts and Co., London

†Sir Frederick Gibberd, RA, FRIBA, London

†M. T. Gibson, MA, D.Phil., sometime Senior Research Fellow, St Peter's College, Oxford

R. N. Gildea, MA, D.Phil., University Reader in Modern History and Fellow of Merton College, Oxford

†The Revd J. Gill, SJ, BA, Ph.D., sometime Rector of the Pontifical Oriental Institute, Rome

Mark Goldie, MA, Ph.D., Fellow and Lecturer in History, Churchill College, Cambridge

B. J. Golding, MA, D.Phil., Senior Lecturer, Department of History, University of Southampton

†The Revd N. Goodall, MA, D.Phil., sometime Assistant General Secretary of the World Council of Churches

P. R. Gooder, MA, Lecturer, Ripon College Cuddesdon, Oxford

M. D. Goodman, MA, D.Phil., FBA, Professor of Jewish Studies and Fellow of Wolfson College, Oxford

†The Revd E. L. H. Gordon, MA, sometime Rector of Great Chart, Ashford, Kent

Pamela O. E. Gradon, MA, Ph.D., Emeritus Fellow of St Hugh's College, Oxford

†Hilda C. Graef, sometime Senior Assistant on the Patristic Greek Lexicon

The Revd J. W. Grant, MA, D.Phil., Hon.DD, Hon. LL D, sometime Professor of Church History, Victoria University, Toronto

The Revd K. Grayston, MA, D.Litt., Emeritus Professor of Theology, University of Bristol

The Revd V. H. H. Green, DD, Honorary Fellow and sometime Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford

†The Revd S. L. Greenslade, DD, FBA, sometime Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford

Diana Greenway, Ph.D., Reader in Medieval History, Institute of Historical Research, University of London

The Revd Jacques Gres-Gayer, D.Theol., D.Hist., Associate Professor of Church History, Catholic University of America

Martin Griffiths, MA, Dip.Law., of the Inner Temple, Barrister

R. M. Griffiths, MA, Ph.D., Professor of French, King's College London

†E. M. Grinling, MA, sometime Principal Lecturer in Religious Education, Darlington College of Education

W. J. Grisbrooke, MA, BD, sometime Lecturer at the Queen's College, Birmingham, and at St Mary's College, Oscott

Erik Gunnes, dr.philos., Emeritus Professor of Medieval History, University of Oslo

†Samuel Gurney, MA, Trinity College, Oxford

The Revd J. R. Guy, BA, Ph.D., Vicar of Betws Cedewain and Tregynon and Llanwyddelan, Powys, and Editor of the Journal of Welsh Religious History

The Revd Benedict Hackett, OSA, Ph.D., St Mary's Priory, Birmingham, formerly Assistant General of the Order

The Revd Jacques Haers, SJ, D.Phil., Lecturer in Theology, Catholic University of Leuven

C. A. Haigh, MA, Ph.D., Tutor in Modern History and Student of Christ Church, Oxford

A. Hamilton, MA, Ph.D., Professor of the History of the Radical Reformation, University of Amsterdam

B. Hamilton, Ph.D., Professor of Crusading History, University of Nottingham

†The Revd R. J. Hammer, MA, BD, Ph.D., sometime Lecturer at the Queen's College, Birmingham, and Recognized Lecturer in the Faculty of Theology, University of Birmingham

Robert T. Handy, M.Div., Ph.D., Hon.LHD, Hon.DD, Henry Sloane Coffin Professor Emeritus of Church History, Union Theological Seminary, New York

†The Rt. Revd R. P. C. Hanson, DD, FBA, MRIA, sometime Professor of Theology, University of Manchester

C. G. Hardie, MA, Emeritus Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford

G. L. Harriss, MA, D.Phil., FBA, Emeritus Fellow, Magdalen College, Oxford

The Revd H. St. J. Hart, BD, Life Fellow and Hebrew Lecturer at Queens' College, Cambridge, and Emeritus Reader in Hebrew and Intertestamental Studies in the University

†The Very Revd F. P. Harton, BD, sometime Dean of Wells

The Revd A. E. Harvey, MA, DD, Canon Residentiary and Sub-Dean of Westminster

M. M. Harvey, MA, D.Phil., Lecturer in History, University of Durham

The Revd A. Hastings, MA, D.Theol., Hon.DD, Emeritus Professor of Theology, University of Leeds

P. J. Heather, MA, D.Phil., Lecturer in Early Medieval History, University College London

The Revd B. L. Hebblethwaite, MA, BD, Lecturer in Divinity, University of Cambridge, Life Fellow of Queens' College, and Canon Theologian of Leicester Cathedral

†The Revd M. M. Hennell, MA, sometime Canon of Manchester

J. R. L. Highfield, MA, D.Phil., FSA, Emeritus Fellow of Merton College, Oxford

Christopher Hill, MA, FBA, sometime Fellow and Tutor in Modern History and then Master, Balliol College, Oxford

The Revd D. I. Hill, MA, Hon.DD, sometime Canon Residentiary of Canterbury Cathedral

David Hilliard, MA, Ph.D., Reader in History, The Flinders University of South Australia

†The Revd P. B. Hinchliff, DD, sometime Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford

The Revd P. D. Hocken, Ph.D., Mother of God Community, Gaithersburg, Maryland
†The Revd J. P. Hodges, MA, sometime Rector of Streatham
The Revd Marcus Hodges, OP, STL, M.Theol., Blackfriars, Cambridge
C. Holdsworth, MA, Ph.D., Professor of Medieval History, University of Exeter
The Revd Dom P. D. Holdsworth, OSB, MA, STL, sometime Master of St Benet's Hall, Oxford
George Holmes, MA, Ph.D., FBA, Chichele Professor Emeritus of Medieval History, University of Oxford
The Very Revd R. T. Holtby, MA, BD, FSA, sometime Dean of Chichester
†The Revd A. F. Hood, CBE, MA, sometime Canon and Chancellor of St Paul's Cathedral, London
Irvin B. Horst, MA, D.Theol., Emeritus Professor in Church History, University of Amsterdam
I. H. Hoskins, MA, member of the General Council of the Theosophical Society (Adyar)
R. J. Howells, BA, Ph.D., Reader in French, Birkbeck College, London
Anne Hudson, MA, D.Phil., FBA, Professor of Medieval English, University of Oxford
†The Revd Dom Anselm Hughes, OSB, MA, sometime monk of Nashdom Abbey, Bucks
Jeremy Hughes, MA, D.Phil., Pusey and Ellerton Fellow, University of Oxford
E. D. Hunt, MA, D.Phil., Lecturer in Classics and Ancient History, University of Durham
†G. N. S. Hunt, MA, Wadham College, Oxford
†R. W. Hunt, MA, D.Phil., FBA, sometime Keeper of Western Manuscripts, Bodleian Library, and Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford
R. L. Hunter, B.Sc., TD, Edinburgh
S. S. Hussey, MA, Ph.D., Professor Emeritus of English, University of Lancaster
M. B. Hutchinson, MA, Balliol College, Oxford
The Revd S. Ickert, Ph.D., sometime Lutheran Fellow, Mansfield College, Oxford
†The Revd E. O. James, D.Litt., FSA, sometime Professor of the History and Philosophy of Religion, University of London
H. T. Jenkins, MA, B.Litt., sometime Assistant Editor, Victoria County History of Oxfordshire
K. Jensen, Ph.D., Assistant Librarian, Bodleian Library, Oxford
The Revd E. R. G. Job, MA, ARCM, sometime Vice-Dean and Precentor of Winchester Cathedral
The Revd S. A. C. B. John, MA, sometime Vicar of Barlow, Derbyshire
J. Johns, MA, D.Phil., University Lecturer in Islamic Archaeology and Fellow of Wolfson College, Oxford
The Revd P. F. Johnson, MA, Canon Residentiary of Bristol Cathedral
P. M. Joyce, MA, D.Phil., University Lecturer in Old Testament Studies and Fellow of St Peter's College, Oxford
Elaine Kaye, MA, BD, Ph.D., College Historian, Mansfield College, Oxford
The Revd J. N. D. Kelly, DD, FBA, sometime Principal of St Edmund Hall, Oxford
The Rt. Revd E. W. Kemp, DD, Bishop of Chichester
M. S. Kempshall, MA, D.Phil., Murray Fellow in History, Faculty of Modern History, University of Oxford
†Sir Frederic Kenyon, MA, D.Litt., FBA, sometime Director and Principal Librarian, British Museum, London
†Dame Kathleen M. Kenyon, MA, D.Litt., FBA, FSA, sometime Principal of St Hugh's College, Oxford
The Revd D. A. Kerr, SS, MA, D.Phil., Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Maynooth
The Very Revd F. Kerr, OP, MA, STM, Blackfriars, Edinburgh
S. D. Keynes, MA, Ph.D., Litt.D., Reader in Anglo-Saxon History, University of Cambridge, and Fellow of Trinity College
†The Revd G. D. Kilpatrick, DD, sometime Dean Ireland's Professor of Exegesis of Holy Scripture, University of Oxford
†The Revd H. P. Kingdon, MA, sometime Vicar of Chewton Mendip
W. J. Torrance Kirby, MA, D.Phil., Tutor, St John's College, Santa Fe, New Mexico
R. Klibansky, MA, Ph.D., D.Habil., FRSC, Emeritus Frothingham Professor of Logic and Metaphysics, McGill University, and Emeritus Professor of the University of Heidelberg
George Knight, OBE, MA, RN, Retired Naval Officer
†The Revd H. Knight, BD, D.Phil., sometime Assistant Master, Gordonstoun School
†The Revd M. D. Knowles, MA, Litt.D., FBA, FSA, sometime Regius Professor of Modern History and Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge
The Revd R. Buick Knox, DD, sometime Professor of Church History, Westminster College, Cambridge
H. G. Koenigsberger, MA, Ph.D., FBA, Professor of History Emeritus, King's College London
A. J. Krailsheimer, MA, Ph.D., Emeritus Student of Christ Church, Oxford
W. G. Lambert, MA, FBA, Professor Emeritus of Assyriology, University of Birmingham
†The Revd G. W. H. Lampe, DD, sometime Regius Professor of Divinity and Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge
E. Lampert, Lic.ès-Lettres, D.Phil., FRSL, Emeritus Professor of Russian Studies, University of Keele
John Lankford, MS, Ph.D., Special Assistant to the Provost and Adjunct Professor of History, Kansas State University
Frances Lannon, MA, D.Phil., Fellow of Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford
Michael Lapidge, Litt.D., FBA, Elrington-Bosworth Professor of Anglo-Saxon, University of Cambridge
The Very Revd E. C. Lash, MA, STB, sometime Lecturer in Biblical and Patristic Studies, University of Newcastle upon Tyne
†The Revd A. C. Lawson, DD, sometime Vicar of St Michael's, Shrewsbury

†KATHLEEN M. LEA, MA, sometime Fellow of Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford

The Revd JÉSUS M. LECEA, Sch.P., Procurator General of the Piarist Fathers

†The Revd Dom JEAN LECLERCQ, OSB, STD, sometime monk of Clervaux Abbey, Luxembourg

O. H. M. LEHMAN, MA, B.Litt., D.Phil., Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, and Miami University, Oxford, Ohio

GILLIAN LEWIS, MA, D.Phil., Fellow and Tutor in Modern History, St Anne's College, Oxford

P. S. LEWIS, MA, Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford

†The Revd P. OSMUND LEWRY, OP, STL, D.Phil., sometime of Blackfriars, Oxford, and Fellow of the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Toronto

†K. J. LEYSER, MA, FBA, sometime Chichele Professor of Medieval History, University of Oxford

The Revd F. LINYARD, BA, BD, sometime Chairman of the Provincial Board of the Moravian Church in Great Britain and Ireland

ELIZABETH A. LIVINGSTONE, MBE, MA, DD (Lambeth), St Anne's College, Oxford

Sir CHRISTOPHER LLOYD, MA, B.Litt., Surveyor of The Queen's Pictures

The Revd G. LLOYD JONES, BD, MA, STM, Ph.D., Hon.DD, Senior Lecturer, School of Theology and Religious Studies, University of Wales, Bangor, and Canon Chancellor of Bangor Cathedral

ANN LOADES, MA, Ph.D., Professor of Theology, University of Durham

A. LOUTH, DD, Reader in Patristics, University of Durham

D. E. LUSCOMBE, Litt.D., FBA, Professor of Medieval History, University of Sheffield

The Revd D. McL. LYNCH, CBE, MA, sometime Chief Secretary of the Church Army and Prebendary of St Paul's Cathedral

The Revd JAMES MCCONICA, CSB, MA, D.Phil., Hon.D.Litt., FRSC, Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford, and President of the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Toronto

The Revd DIARMAID MACCULLOCH, MA, Ph.D., FSA, University Lecturer in Church History and Fellow of St Cross College, Oxford

D. MCDIARMID, MA, Ph.D., Fundraising Director, Royal Melbourne Institute of Technology, Melbourne

The Revd JOHN MACDONALD, MA, B.Litt., sometime Lecturer in Theology, University College, Lampeter

The Revd B. J. MACDONALD-MILNE, MA, Rector of Radwinter with Hempstead, and Rural Dean of Saffron Walden, Essex

The Revd A. E. MCGRATH, BD, MA, D.Phil., Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Research Lecturer in Theology, University of Oxford, and Professor of Systematic Theology, Regent College, Vancouver

†ANGUS MACINTYRE, MA, D.Phil., sometime Fellow and Tutor in Modern History, Magdalen College, and Principal-elect, Hertford College, Oxford

The Revd DONALD K. MCKIM, BA, M.Div., Ph.D., Minister, Presbyterian Church (USA), Berwyn, Pennsylvania

†D. M. MACKINNON, MA, FBA, FRSA, sometime Norris-Hulse Professor of Divinity and Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge

†MAY MCKISACK, MA, sometime Professor of History, Westfield College, London

R. D. MCKITTERICK, MA, Ph.D., Litt.D., Reader in Early Medieval European History, University of Cambridge, and Fellow of Newnham College

I. W. F. MACLEAN, MA, D.Phil., Professor of French and Fellow of The Queen's College, Oxford

N. B. MCLYNN, MA, D.Phil., Lecturer, Faculty of Law, Keio University, Yokohama, Japan

The Revd J. MCMANNERS, D.Litt., FBA, Fellow of All Souls College and Emeritus Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History, University of Oxford

ALAN MACQUARRIE, MA, Ph.D., Research Centre in Scottish History, University of Strathclyde

The Revd J. MACQUARRIE, D.Litt., DD, FBA, Lady Margaret Professor Emeritus of Divinity, University of Oxford

†The Rt. Revd Mgr. L. L. MCREAVY, JCD, MA, sometime member of the Pontifical Commission for the Revision of the Code of Canon Law

The Rt. Revd MICHAEL MANKTELOW, MA, sometime Bishop Suffragan of Basingstoke

†The Revd W. W. S. MARCH, MA, BD, sometime Canon Residentiary of Chichester

ELIZABETH MARCHANT, Taizé

R. A. MARKUS, MA, Ph.D., FBA, Professor Emeritus, University of Nottingham

†The Revd J. MARSH, MA, D.Phil., sometime Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford

†The Revd P. M. MARTIN, MA, sometime Canon Residentiary and Chancellor of Wells

†The Revd E. L. MASCALL, DD, FBA, sometime Professor of Historical Theology, University of London

J. F. A. MASON, MA, D.Phil., Emeritus Student of Christ Church, Oxford

†The Revd A. GERVASE MATHEW, OP, MA, sometime of Blackfriars, Oxford

R. A. MAY, MA, sometime Leonard Stein Lecturer in Medieval Hebrew, University of Oxford

The Revd A. MEREDITH, SJ, MA, D.Phil., Farm Street, London

C. MEWS, D.Phil., Lecturer in History, Monash University, Australia

The Very Revd R. L. P. MILBURN, MA, FSA, Honorary Fellow of Worcester College, Oxford; sometime Dean of Worcester

BELLA MILLETT, MA, B.Phil., D.Phil., Reader in English, University of Southampton

E. H. MILLIGAN, BA, sometime Librarian of the Religious Society of Friends, London

The Revd J. O. MILLS, OP, MA, sometime Counsellor on Communication Development to the Master of the Order of Preachers, Rome

The Revd L. MINHINNICK, MA, sometime Vicar of St John's, Lytham

A. G. MOLLAND, MA, Ph.D., Honorary Senior Lecturer in History, University of Aberdeen

Ingun Montgomery, Professor of Church History, University of Oslo
†The Revd E. Garth Moore, MA, DCL, barrister, sometime Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and Chancellor of Southwark, Durham, and Gloucester dioceses
P. R. S. Moorey, MA, D.Phil., FBA, FSA, Keeper of Antiquities, Ashmolean Museum, Oxford
†The Rt. Revd J. R. H. Moorman, DD, FSA, sometime Bishop of Ripon
The Revd R. Morgan, MA, Priest-in-charge of Sandford-on-Thames, and University Lecturer in Theology, University of Oxford
The Revd Dom Augustine Morris, OSB, sometime Abbot of Nashdom Abbey, Bucks
The Revd Colin Morris, MA, Emeritus Professor of Medieval History, University of Southampton, and Emeritus Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford
†The Rt. Revd R. C. Mortimer, DD, sometime Bishop of Exeter
†The Revd C. B. Moss, DD, sometime Vice-Principal, St Boniface College, Warminster
The Revd J. Muddiman, MA, D.Phil., University Lecturer in Theology and Fellow and Tutor, Mansfield College, Oxford
The Revd J. A. Munitiz, SJ, MA, D.ès Lettres, Master of Campion Hall, Oxford
Alexander Murray, MA, B.Phil., FBA, Fellow and Praelector in Modern History, University College, Oxford
†P. Murray, Ph.D., FSA, sometime Professor of the History of Art, Birkbeck College, University of London
†The Rt. Revd S. C. Neill, MA, Hon.DD, FBA, sometime Professor of Philosophy and Religious Studies, University of Nairobi
The Revd S. A. Nelson, BA, M.Div., Ph.D., Professor of Theology, Golden Gate Baptist Seminary, Strawberry Point, California
B. C. Neveu, MA, D.ès L., D.en D., President of the École pratique des Hautes Études (Sorbonne), Paris
The Revd G. M. Newlands, MA, BD, Ph.D., Professor of Divinity, University of Glasgow
D. H. Newsome, MA, D.Litt., FRSL, sometime Lecturer in Ecclesiastical History, University of Cambridge
†The Revd R. W. Nicholls, BA, AKC, sometime Vicar of Barnham, Bognor Regis
The Revd A. Nichols, OP, MA, Ph.D., STL, Blackfriars, Cambridge
The Revd D. Nicholson, MA, Dipl.Th., sometime Vice-Principal of Edinburgh Theological College, Life-President of the Society of Retreat Conductors, and Hon. Canon of Edinburgh and Aberdeen
The Revd E. W. Nicholson, DD, FBA, Provost of Oriel College, Oxford
Oliver Nicholson, MA, D.Phil., Associate Professor, Department of Classical and Near Eastern Studies, University of Minnesota
J. B. W. Nightingale, MA, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford
The Revd D. E. Nineham, DD, Emeritus Professor of Theology, University of Bristol, and Honorary Canon of Bristol Cathedral and sometime Warden of Keble College, Oxford
The Revd K. W. Noakes, MA, D.Phil., sometime Librarian of Pusey House, Oxford
Peter B. Nockles, MA, D.Phil., Assistant Librarian, John Rylands University Library of Manchester
The Revd E. R. Norman, DD, Canon Residentiary and Treasurer of York Minster
J. L. North, MA, Ph.D., Barmby Lecturer in New Testament Studies, University of Hull
Sir Dimitri Obolensky, MA, Ph.D., D.Litt., FBA, FSA, Emeritus Professor of Russian and Balkan History, University of Oxford
†The Revd J. B. O'Connell, MA, BD, sometime Honorary Canon of the Diocese of Menevia, Wales
Donnchadh Ó Corráin, MA, D.Litt., MRIA, Professor of History, University College, Cork
The Revd O. M. T. O'Donovan, MA, D.Phil., Regius Professor of Moral and Pastoral Theology and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford
†H. S. Offler, MA, FBA, sometime Professor of Medieval History, University of Durham
The Revd J. O'Malley, SJ, MA, Ph.D., Professor of Church History, Weston School of Theology, Cambridge, Mass.
The Revd Robert Ombres, OP, STL, JCL, LL B, LL M, Barrister, Blackfriars, Oxford
D. M. Owen, MA, Litt.D., FSA, sometime Keeper of the Archives, University of Cambridge
Nigel F. Palmer, MA, D.Phil., Professor of German Medieval and Linguistic Studies, University of Oxford
Richard Parish, MA, D.Phil., Professor of French and Fellow of St Catherine's College, Oxford
†The Revd T. M. Parker, DD, sometime Fellow of University College, Oxford
R. A. Paterson, MA, LL B, Solicitor of the Church, Church of Scotland
Thomas S. Pattie, MA, Curator of Manuscripts, British Library, London
†The Revd E. A. Payne, CH, MA, B.Litt., Hon.DD, Hon.LL D, sometime General Secretary and later President, Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland
†The Revd A. F. Scott Pearson, D.Litt., sometime Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Symbolics, Presbyterian College, Belfast
R. Peters, Oxford
†Simone Pétrement, Docteur ès lettres, sometime Conservateur honoraire à la Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris
The Revd R. W. Pfaff, MA, D.Phil., DD, Professor of History, University of North Carolina
†The Very Revd R. Pilkington, DCL, sometime Honorary Canon of the Chapter of Westminster Cathedral
M. Louise Pirouet, BA, Ph.D., sometime Lecturer in Religious Studies, Makerere University, Kampala; Nairobi University; and Homerton College, Cambridge
The Revd W. N. Pittenger, STD, Senior Resident, King's College, Cambridge
The Revd S. J. Pix, MA, Dip.Th., Hon.D.Litt., Vicar of St Michael at the North Gate with St Martin and All Saints, Oxford

The Revd J. E. Platt, MA, M.Th., D.Phil., Fellow and Chaplain of Pembroke College, Oxford

V. Pohle, Liverpool

D. S. Porter, MA, sometime Senior Assistant Librarian, Bodleian Library, Oxford

D. C. Potts, MA, D.Phil., Emeritus Fellow of Keble College, Oxford

†Sir Maurice Powicke, MA, D.Litt., FBA, sometime Regius Professor of Modern History, University of Oxford

†The Revd G. L. Prestige, DD, sometime Canon and Treasurer of St Paul's Cathedral, London

The Revd D. T. W. Price, MA, Senior Lecturer in History and Theology, University of Wales, Lampeter, and Canon of St David's Cathedral

W. W. Price, BA, BD, Th.M., D.Theol., Mansfield College, Oxford

Antony Quinton (Lord Quinton), MA, FBA, sometime President of Trinity College, Oxford, and Chairman of the British Library Board

Albert J. Raboteau, MA, Ph.D., Henry W. Putman Professor of Religion, Princeton University

The Revd A. Race, B.Tech., MA, Rector of St Andrew's, Aylestone, Leicester

The Revd Henry D. Rack, MA, Ph.D., Honorary Fellow, formerly Bishop Fraser Senior Lecturer in Ecclesiastical History, University of Manchester

†The Revd A. A. H. Radice, MA, sometime Rector of Hepworth, Norfolk

The Revd P. Raedts, SJ, D.Phil., Professor of Medieval History, University of Nijmegen, and Lecturer in Church History, University of Leiden

The Revd Oliver P. Rafferty, SJ, BA, M.Th., Christ Church and Campion Hall, Oxford

René Rancoeur, Conservateur en chef honoraire à la Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris

†The Revd E. C. Ratcliff, MA, sometime Regius Professor of Divinity, Cambridge

The Revd Bernard M. G. Reardon, MA, sometime Head of the Department of Religious Studies, University of Newcastle upon Tyne

S. R. Rebenich, Dr.phil., Privatdozent, Seminar of Ancient History, Mannheim University

R. Reece, B.Sc., D.Phil., Institute of Archaeology, University College London

M. E. Reeves, CBE, MA, D.Phil., D.Litt., FBA, Honorary Fellow of St Anne's and St Hugh's Colleges, Oxford

Richard Rex, MA, Ph.D., Lecturer in Church History, University of Cambridge

J. S. C. Riley-Smith, MA, Ph.D., Dixie Professor of Ecclesiastical History, University of Cambridge

R. H. Robbins, MA, D.Phil., Fellow and Tutor in English, Wadham College, Oxford

A. D. S. Roberts, MA, M.Litt., Keeper of Oriental Books, Bodleian Library, Oxford

†The Revd B. J. Roberts, DD, sometime Professor of Hebrew and Semitics, University College of North Wales, Bangor

†C. H. Roberts, CBE, MA, FBA, sometime Fellow of St John's College, Oxford

The Revd J. Robinson, M.Th., BD, FKC, Master of the Temple, London, and Canon Emeritus of Canterbury Cathedral

†The Revd C. F. Rogers, MA, sometime Professor of Pastoral Theology, King's College, London

†D. M. Rogers, MA, D.Phil., sometime Head of Special Collections, Bodleian Library, Oxford

M. I. Rogers, London

N. J. Rogers, MA, M.Litt., Archivist, Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge

Sr. M. John Ronayne, OP, BA, Monjas Dominicanas, Lisbon

The Revd Andrew C. Ross, MA, BD, STM, Ph.D., sometime Principal of New College, Edinburgh; Senior Lecturer in the History of Missions, University of Edinburgh

R. H. Rouse, MA, Ph.D., Professor of History, University of California, Los Angeles

Philip Rousseau, MA, D.Phil., Associate Professor of History, University of Auckland, New Zealand

The Rt. Revd D. G. Rowell, MA, D.Phil., Bishop Suffragan of Basingstoke and Emeritus Fellow of Keble College, Oxford

The Revd C. C. Rowland, MA, Ph.D., Dean Ireland's Professor of Exegesis of Holy Scripture and Fellow of The Queen's College, Oxford

†The Revd E. G. Rupp, DD, FBA, sometime Dixie Professor of Ecclesiastical History, University of Cambridge

The Revd Joy Russell-Smith, MA, BD, sometime Lecturer in English, Birkbeck College, London

†Sr. Frideswide Sandeman, OSB, BA, Stanbrook Abbey, Worcs

The Very Revd W. Roy Sanderson, MA, Hon.D.D., sometime Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland

The Rt. Revd J. R. Satterthwaite, CMG, BA, sometime Bishop of Gibraltar in Europe

† The Revd H. P. Saunders, MA, BD, sometime Principal of Ely Theological College and Canon of Ely

J. E. Sayers, MA, Ph.D., Litt.D., Professor of Archive Studies, University College London

The Revd R. J. Schiefen, CSB, MA, STB, M.Ed., Ph.D., Professor in History, University of St Thomas, Houston

The Rt. Revd J. L. Schuster, MA, sometime Bishop of St John's

A. B. Scott, D.Phil., Emeritus Professor of Late Latin, Queen's University, Belfast

R. D. Scott, MA, Reader in Classics, University of Melbourne

Tom Scott, MA, Ph.D., FRSA, Reader in History, University of Liverpool

The Revd M. A. Screech, D.Litt., FBA, FRSL, Extraordinary Fellow of Wolfson College and Emeritus Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford; sometime Fielden Professor of French Language and Literature, University College London

†The Revd W. B. Selbie, DD, sometime Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford

†The Revd E. N. C. Sergeant, MA, sometime Chaplain of Millfield School, Street, Somerset
J. R. Sharp, MA, Worcester College, Oxford
R. Sharpe, MA, Ph.D., FSA, Reader in Diplomatic, University of Oxford
The Very Revd M. W. Sheehan, OFM Cap., MA, D.Phil., sometime Warden, Greyfriars, Oxford
†I. P. Sheldon Williams, D.Litt., sometime Visiting Lecturer, University College, Dublin
†G. T. Shepherd, MA, sometime Professor of Mediaeval English Language and Literature, University of Birmingham
†A. N. Sherwin-White, MA, FBA, sometime Reader in Ancient History and Fellow of St John's College, Oxford
The Revd Aylward Shorter, WF, President of the Missionary Institute, London
J. S. G. Simmons, OBE, MA, Hon.D.Litt., FLA, FSA, Emeritus Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford
†The Very Revd C. A. Simpson, DD, sometime Dean of Christ Church, Oxford
The Revd C. D. Smith, MA, sometime Vicar of St Mary Magdalene, Oxford
Lesley Smith, M.Sc., D.Phil., Senior Research Fellow, Linacre College, Oxford
The Rt. Revd A. Smithson, MA, Bishop Suffragan of Jarrow
R. J. Song, MA, D.Phil., Lecturer in Theology, St John's College, Durham
Sir Richard Southern, MA, Hon.D.Litt., FBA, sometime President of St John's College, Oxford
†The Revd H. F. D. Sparks, DD, FBA, sometime Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture, University of Oxford
†G. D. Squibb, QC, BCL, MA, sometime Bencher of the Inner Temple
The Revd Dom Aelred Squire, OSB Cam., B.Litt., New Camaldoli Hermitage, Big Sur, California
The Revd Dom A. J. Stacpoole, OSB, MC, MA, D.Phil., sometime Senior Tutor, St Benet's Hall, Oxford
Clare E. Stancliffe, MA, D.Phil., Honorary Lecturer in the Department of Theology, University of Durham
The Revd G. C. Stead, Litt.D., FBA, sometime Ely Professor of Divinity, University of Cambridge
Stephen J. Stein, MA, Ph.D., Professor of Religious Studies, Indiana University, Bloomington
†S. M. Stern, MA, D.Phil., sometime Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford
†C. E. Stevens, B.Litt., MA, sometime Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford
†The Revd Dom Anselm Stoelen, O.Carth., Parkminster
†The Revd D. Stone, DD, sometime Principal of Pusey House and Honorary Canon of Christ Church, Oxford
†The Revd John Sturdy, MA, sometime Dean of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge
The Revd G. M. Styler, MA, Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge
The Revd H. J. Sutters, MA, St John's College, Oxford
N. T. J. A. Swarbrick, MA, Assistant Teacher, Grandpont Nursery School, Oxford
†The Very Revd. N. Sykes, MA, D.Litt., Hon.DD, FBA, sometime Dean of Winchester
The Rt. Revd S. W. Sykes, MA, Bishop of Ely
†The Revd H. Edward Symonds, CR, DD, sometime of the Community of the Resurrection, Mirfield
The Revd N. Tanner, SJ, MA, D.Phil., Tutor in Medieval History, Campion Hall, Oxford
Robert Brian Tate, MA, Ph.D., FBA, Emeritus Professor, University of Nottingham
The Revd David W. A. Taylor, BA, BD, Th.M., Hon.DD, sometime General Secretary, Consultation on Church Union
The Revd Colin P. Thompson, MA, D.Phil., Fellow of St Catherine's College, Oxford
David M. Thompson, MA, Ph.D., BD, University Lecturer in Modern Church History and Fellow of Fitzwilliam College, Cambridge
†The Revd G. I. F. Thomson, MA, sometime Chaplain of All Souls College, Oxford
Robert W. Thomson, MA, Ph.D., FBA, Calouste Gulbenkian Professor of Armenian Studies, University of Oxford
†The Revd J. P. Thornton-Duesbery, MA, sometime Master of St Peter's Hall, Oxford
†Jocelyn M. C. Toynbee, MA, D.Phil., FSA, FBA, sometime Laurence Professor of Classical Archaeology, Cambridge
†The Revd G. C. Triffitt, BA, SSJE, sometime Superior General of the Society of St John the Evangelist, Oxford
The Revd A. W. Trotman, Th.B., BD, AKC, minister of Wesleyan Holiness Church, Leytonstone, London
R. W. Truman, MA, D.Phil., Student of Christ Church, Oxford
†C. A. Trypanis, MA, D.Litt., FRSL, sometime Bywater and Sotheby Professor of Byzantine and Modern Greek Language and Literature, University of Oxford, Professor of Classics, Chicago University, and President of the Academy of Athens
The Revd Geraint Tudur, BD, D.Phil., Lecturer in Church History, University of Wales, Bangor
The Very Revd Simon Tugwell, OP, STM, DD, STD, President of the Dominican Historical Institute, Rome, and Consultor to the Congregation for Causes of Saints
†The Revd H. E. W. Turner, DD, sometime Van Mildert Professor of Divinity, University of Durham, and Canon of Durham Cathedral
K. C. Turpin, B.Litt., MA, sometime Provost of Oriel College, Oxford
†W. G. Urry, MA, Ph.D., sometime Reader in Palaeography, University of Oxford
Werner Ustorf, D.Th., Professor of Mission, Selly Oak Colleges, Birmingham, and University of Birmingham
M. G. A. Vale, MA, D.Phil., Fellow of St John's College, Oxford
J. van den Berg, D.Theol., Emeritus Professor of Church History, State University of Leiden
Mark Vessey, MA, D.Phil., Lecturer in English, University of British Columbia
J. A. Vickers, BA, BD, Ph.D., sometime Head of Religious and Social Studies, Bognor Regis College of Education

†The Revd A. R. VIDLER, DD, sometime Fellow and Dean of King's College, Cambridge

The Revd F. E. VOKES, MA, BD, sometime Professor of Divinity, Trinity College, Dublin

The Revd G. S. WAKEFIELD, MA, M.Litt., DD (Lambeth), sometime Principal of Queen's College, Birmingham

The Rt. Revd P. K. WALKER, MA, sometime Bishop of Ely

†J. M. WALLACE-HADRILL, CBE, MA, D.Litt., FBA, sometime Chichele Professor of Medieval History, University of Oxford

A. F. WALLS, OBE, MA, B.Litt., DD, FSA Scot., Director of the Centre for the Study of Christianity in the Non-Western World and Hon. Professor, University of Edinburgh

J. J. WALTERS, MA, Hertford College, Oxford

P. A. WARD JONES, MA, FRCO, Music Librarian, Bodleian Library, Oxford

BRYAN WARD-PERKINS, MA, D.Phil., Fellow and Tutor in History, Trinity College, Oxford

The Rt. Revd KALLISTOS T. WARE, MA, D.Phil., Bishop of Diokleia, Spalding Lecturer in Eastern Orthodox Studies, and Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford

†S. WATSON, OBE, MA, D.Mus., sometime Organist of Christ Church, Oxford, and Choragus to the University

D. E. R. WATT, MA, D.Phil., FRSE, Emeritus Professor of Scottish Church History, University of St Andrews

The Revd P. A. WELSBY, MA, Ph.D., sometime Canon Residentiary of Rochester

†The Revd H. K. WHITE, MA, sometime Vicar of St Mary Aldermary, London

The Revd W. A. WHITEHOUSE, B.Litt., MA, Hon.DD, Emeritus Professor of Theology, University of Kent at Canterbury

†The Revd D. E. H. WHITELEY, MA, sometime Fellow and Chaplain of Jesus College, Oxford

†The Revd W. T. WHITLEY, MA, LL D, sometime Principal of Melbourne Baptist College, Victoria, Australia

The Revd R. E. WHYTE, BA, Vicar of St Paul's Church, Rusthall, Tunbridge Wells

The Revd L. R. WICKHAM, MA, Ph.D., Lecturer in the Faculty of Divinity, University of Cambridge

†The Revd B. J. WIGAN, MA, sometime Honorary Canon of Rochester

The Revd M. F. WILES, DD, FBA, Regius Professor Emeritus of Divinity, University of Oxford

M. J. WILKS, MA, Ph.D., Professor Emeritus of Medieval History, Birkbeck College, London

The Revd TREVOR WILLIAMS, MA, Chaplain, Fellow, and Lecturer in Theology, Trinity College, Oxford

†The Revd G. G. WILLIS, DD, sometime Editor of the Chronicle of the Convocation of Canterbury

B. R. WILSON, MA, D.Litt., Emeritus Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford

The Revd R. McL. WILSON, DD, FBA, Emeritus Professor of Biblical Criticism, University of St Andrews

†The Ven. C. WITTON-DAVIES, MA, sometime Archdeacon of Oxford

DIANA WOOD, BA, Ph.D., Lecturer in History, University of East Anglia, Norwich

†H. G. WOOD, DD, sometime Professor of Theology, University of Birmingham

The Revd G. W. WOOLFENDEN, Ph.B., STB, M.Phil., Lecturer in Liturgy and Worship, Ripon College Cuddesdon, Oxford

A. D. WRIGHT, MA, D.Phil., Senior Lecturer in Modern History, University of Leeds

J. R. C. WRIGHT, MA, D.Phil., Student of Christ Church, Oxford

†The Very Revd RONALD SELBY WRIGHT, CVO, DD, FRSE, sometime Minister of the Canongate, Edinburgh, and Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland

The Revd P. H. WYLD, MC, MA, sometime General Editor, USPG, London

The Revd E. J. YARNOLD, SJ, DD, University Research Lecturer, Campion Hall, Oxford

The Revd Dom RICHARD YEO, OSB, MA, JCD, Downside Abbey, Bath

RONALD JOHN ZAWILLA, MSL, Ph.D., Director, Gallery Genesis, Chicago

C. J. ZEALLEY, MA, Wolfson College, Oxford

GROVER A. ZINN, BA, BD, Ph.D., Danforth Professor of Religion, Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio

ABBREVIATIONS

(A) The most common abbreviations, used throughout the book

These abbreviations are used in the text and in the titles of books in the bibliographies, but in citations and titles of articles (within quotation marks) the typography of the original is preserved.

AD	anno Domini
ASB	*Alternative Service Book 1980.
AUC	ab urbe condita.
AV	*Authorized Version [i.e. King James Version, 1611] of the Bible.
BC	before Christ.
BCP	Book of *Common Prayer.
Bl	Blessed.
BVM	Blessed Virgin *Mary.
C of E	*Church of England.
CIC (1918)	Codex Iuris Canonici* (1918).
CIC (1983)	Codex Iuris Canonici* (1983).
Comm.	Commentaries.
EVV	English versions.
Fr.	French.
Ger.	German.
Ital.	Italian.
JB	Jerusalem Bible (Eng. tr., 1966).
LXX	*Septuagint.
NEB	New English Bible (NT, 1961; OT and Apocrypha, 1970).
NJB	New Jerusalem Bible (1985).
n.p.	no place.
NRSV	New Revised Standard Version (1989).
NT	New Testament.
OT	Old Testament.
RC	Roman Catholic.
REB	Revised English Bible (1989).
RSV	Revised Standard Version (NT, 1946; OT, 1952; Apocrypha, 1957).
RV	[English] Revised Version (NT, 1881; OT, 1885; Apocrypha, 1895).
s.a.	sub anno.
Skt.	Sanskrit.
St	Saint.
Sp.	Spanish.
Vulg. or Vg.	*Vulgate.

An asterisk (*) preceding a word indicates a relevant article in the Dictionary under that (or a closely similar) heading.

It is recommended that the present edition of this Dictionary should be quoted as ODCC (3rd edn.).

(B) Further abbreviations, mainly bibliographical

[The editions mentioned are those cited in the Dictionary]

AAS	Acta Apostolicae Sedis* (Rome, 1909 ff.).
AASS	Acta Sanctorum* (Antwerp, 1643–1770; Brussels, 1780–86, 1845–83, and 1894 ff.; Tongerloo, 1794; and Paris, 1875–87).
Abh. (Bayr.)	Abhandlungen der philosophisch-philologischen (und historischen) Classe der (königlich) bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften (Munich, 1835 ff.).
Abh. (Berl.)	Abhandlungen der (königlichen) preussischen [from 1947 deutschen] Akademie der Wissenschaften (Berlin, 1815–1907; philosoph.-hist. Kl., ibid., 1908–49).
Abh. (Gött.)	Abhandlungen der (königlichen) Gesellschaft (Academie) der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen. Philolog.-hist. Kl., NF (Berlin, 1897–1939).
Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge	Abhandlungen der Gesellschaft (Akademie) der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen. Philolog.-hist. Kl., Dritte Folge (Berlin, 1932–9; Göttingen, 1937 ff.).
Abh. (Heid.)	Abhandlungen der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften. Philosoph.-hist. Kl. (Heidelberg, 1913 ff.).
Abh. (Sächs.)	Abhandlungen der philologisch-historischen Classe der (königlich) sächsischen Gesellschaft (Akademie) der Wissenschaften (Leipzig, 1850–1943; Berlin, 1950 ff.).
ACO	Acta Conciliorum Oecumenicorum [Series I], ed. E. *Schwartz and J. Straub (Strasbourg, 1914; Berlin, 1922–84); Series II, ed. sub auspiciis Academiae Scientiarum Bavaricae (Berlin, 1984 ff.).
ACW	Ancient Christian Writers, ed. J. Quasten and others (Westminster, Md., and London, 1946–67; Westminster, Md., 1970 ff.).
AFH	Archivum Franciscanum Historicum (Quaracchi, 1908 ff.).
AHDLMA	Archives d'histoire doctrinale et littéraire du moyen âge (Paris, 1926 ff.).
AHMA	Analecta Hymnica Medii Aevi, ed. G. M. Dreves, SJ, and C. Blume, SJ (55 vols., Leipzig, 1886–1922); Register, ed. M. Lütolf (3 vols., Bern and Munich, 1978).
Altaner and Stuiber (1966)	B. *Altaner, Patrologie: Leben, Schriften und Lehre der Kirchenväter (6th edn. revised by A. Stuiber, 1966).
Altaner and Stuiber (1978)	B. *Altaner, Patrologie: Leben, Schriften und Lehre der Kirchenväter (8th edn. revised by A. Stuiber, 1978).
AM	Hymns Ancient and Modern* (London, Standard Edition, 1916).
Anal. Boll.	Analecta Bollandiana (Paris and Brussels, 1882 ff.).
ANCL	Ante-Nicene Christian Library (25 vols., Edinburgh, 1864–97).
ASS	Acta Sanctae Sedis (41 vols., Rome, 1865–1908).
Bardenhewer, 1	O. *Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, 1 (2nd edn., 1913).
Bardenhewer, 2	O. *Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, 2 (2nd edn., 1914).
Bardenhewer, 3	O. *Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, 3 (1912).
Bardenhewer, 4	O. *Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, 4 (1924).
Bardenhewer, 5	O. *Bardenhewer, Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur, 5 (1932).
Beck	H.-G. Beck, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Byzantinisches Handbuch, 2.2; Munich, 1959).
Ber. (Sächs.)	Berichte (from 1962 Sitzungsberichte) über die Verhandlungen der (königlich) sächsischen Gesellschaft (Akademie) der Wissenschaften zu Leipzig. Philologisch-historische Classe (Leipzig, 1849–1947; Berlin, 1950 ff.).
Bettenson	H. Bettenson (ed.), Documents of the Christian Church (World's Classics, London, 1943). [Also pub., with different pagination, in Galaxy Edition, New York, 1947.]
Bettenson (2nd edn., 1963)	H. Bettenson (ed.), Documents of the Christian Church (2nd edn., 1963).

BGPM	Beiträge zur Geschichte der Philosophie des Mittelalters. Texte und Untersuchungen, begründet von C. Baeumker (Münster i.W., 1891 ff.; from 1930 Beiträge zur Geschichte der Philosophie und Theologie des Mittelalters; NF, 1970 ff.; Supplementbände, 1913 ff.).
BHG (3rd edn., 1957)	Bibliotheca Hagiographica Graeca, 3rd edn. by F. Halkin, SJ (3 vols., Brussels, 1957).
BHL	Bibliotheca Hagiographica Latina Antiquae et Mediae Aetatis, ediderunt Socii Bollandiani (Subsidia Hagiographica, 6; 2 vols., Brussels, 1898–1901; Novum Supplementum, ed. H. Fros, ibid. 70; 1986).
BHO	Bibliotheca Hagiographica Orientalis, ediderunt Socii Bollandiani (Subsidia Hagiographica, 10; Brussels, 1910).
Black's N.T. Comm.	Black's New Testament Commentaries, ed. H. Chadwick (London, 1957 ff.).
Braun, AG	J. Braun, SJ, Das christliche Altargerät (1932).
Braun, CA	J. Braun, SJ, Der christliche Altar (2 vols., 1924).
Braun, LG	J. Braun, SJ, Die liturgische Gewandung im Occident und Orient nach Ursprung und Entwicklung, Verwendung und Symbolik (1907).
Braun, LP	J. Braun, SJ, Die liturgischen Paramente in Gegenwart und Vergangenheit (2nd edn., 1924).
Bremond	H. *Bremond, Histoire littéraire du sentiment religieux en France depuis la fin des guerres de religion jusqu'à nos jours (11 vols., 1916–33, + index, 1936).
Brightman, LEW	F. E. *Brightman, Liturgies Eastern and Western, vol. 1: Eastern (1896; all pub.).
BRUC	A. B. Emden, A Biographical Register of the University of Cambridge to 1500 (Cambridge, 1963).
BRUO	A. B. Emden, A Biographical Register of the University of Oxford to A.D. 1500 (3 vols., Oxford, 1957–9).
BRUO, 1501–1540	A. B. Emden, A Biographical Register of the University of Oxford A.D. 1501 to 1540 (Oxford, 1974).
BZ	Byzantinische Zeitschrift (Leipzig, 1892–1943; Munich, 1943–89; Stuttgart, 1990 ff.).
Camb. Bib.	The Cambridge Bible for Schools (1878–1936; RV, 1903–30).
C. Anc. H.	The Cambridge Ancient History, ed. J. B. Bury and others (12 vols., 1923–39).
C. Anc. H. (rev. edn.)	The Cambridge Ancient History (revised edition of vols. 1–2; originally issued in fascicles, 1961–71).
C. Anc. H. (2nd edn.)	The Cambridge Ancient History, 2nd edn. by J. Boardman and others (1982 ff.).
C. Anc. H. (3rd edn.)	The Cambridge Ancient History, 3rd edn. by I. E. S. Edwards and others (1970 ff.).
CBEL	The Cambridge Bibliography of English Literature, ed. F. W. Bateson (4 vols., Cambridge, 1940, + supplement, 1957).
CC	Corpus Christianorum (Turnhout, 1954 ff.).
CCCM	Corpus Christianorum, Continuatio Mediaevalis (Turnhout, 1967 ff.).
CCSA	Corpus Christianorum, Series Apocrypha (Turnhout, 1983 ff.).
CCSG	Corpus Christianorum, Series Graeca (Turnhout, 1977 ff.).
CCSL	Corpus Christianorum, Series Latina (Turnhout, 1954 ff.).
CE	Catholic Encyclopedia (15 vols. + index, New York, 1907–14).
Cent. Bib.	The Century Bible, ed. W. F. Adeney (34 vols., Edinburgh, 1901–22).
CGT	The Cambridge Greek Testament for Schools (and Colleges) [ed. J. J. S. Perowne and others] (20 vols., Cambridge, 1881–1933).
CHS	*Church Historical Society.
Clar. Bib.	The Clarendon Bible (Oxford, 1922 ff.).

C. Med. H.	Cambridge Medieval History, planned by J. B. Bury, ed. H. M. Gwatkin, J. P. Whitney and others (8 vols., 1911–36, and vol. of maps, 1936; vol. 4 revised under the editorship of J. M. Hussey, 2 parts, 1966–7).
CMH	Cambridge Modern History, planned by Lord *Acton, ed. A. W. Ward, G. W. Prothero, and S. Leathes (12 vols., 1902–10, + index, 1911, and atlas, 1912).
CPG	Clavis Patrum Graecorum, ed. M. Geerard and F. Glorie (5 vols., Turnhout, 1974–87).
CPL (3rd edn., 1995)	Clavis Patrum Latinorum, ed. E. Dekkers [OSB] and A. Gaar (3rd edn., CCSL; Turnhout and Steenbrugge, 1995).
CQR	Church Quarterly Review (169 vols., London, 1875–1968).
CRS	*Catholic Record Society (London, 1905 ff.).
CSCO	Corpus Scriptorum Christianorum Orientalium: Scriptores Aethiopici (Paris etc., 1903–12; Louvain, 1953 ff.). Scriptores Arabici (Paris etc., 1903–12; Rome, 1922; Louvain, 1926 ff.). Scriptores Armeniaci (Louvain, 1953 ff.). Scriptores Coptici (Paris etc., 1906–49; Louvain, 1949 ff.). Scriptores Iberici (Louvain, 1950 ff.). Scriptores Syri (Paris etc., 1907–19; Louvain, 1919 ff.). Subsidia (Louvain, 1950 ff.).
CSEL	Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum (Vienna, 1866 ff.).
CSH Byz.	Corpus Scriptorum Historiae Byzantinae (49 vols., Bonn, 1828–78).
DAC	Dictionary of the Apostolic Church, ed. J. *Hastings (2 vols., 1915–18).
DACL	Dictionnaire d'Archéologie Chrétienne et de Liturgie, ed. F. *Cabrol, OSB, and H. *Leclercq, OSB (15 vols., 1907–53).
Darlow and Moule	T. H. Darlow and H. F. Moule, Historical Catalogue of the Printed Editions of Holy Scripture in the Library of the British and Foreign Bible Society (2 vols. bound in 4, 1903–11).
Darlow and Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, 1 (1968)	A. S. Herbert, Historical Catalogue of Printed Editions of the English Bible 1525–1961. Revised and Expanded from the Edition of T. H. Darlow and H. F. Moule, 1903 (1968).
DCA	Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, ed. W. Smith and S. Cheetham (2 vols., 1875–80).
DCB	Dictionary of Christian Biography, ed. W. Smith and H. Wace (4 vols., 1877–87).
DCG	Dictionary of Christ and the Gospels, ed. J. *Hastings (2 vols., 1906–8).
DDC	Dictionnaire de Droit Canonique, ed. R. Naz (7 vols., 1935–65).
DECH	Dictionary of English Church History, ed. S. L. Ollard and G. Crosse (1912).
DECH (3rd edn., 1948)	Dictionary of English Church History, 3rd edn. by S. L. Ollard, G. Crosse, and M. F. Bond (1948).
Denz. and Bann.	H. Denzinger, Enchiridion Symbolorum Definitionum et Declarationum de Rebus Fidei et Morum, 28th edn. after that of C. Bannwart, SJ, and I. B. Umberg, SJ, by C. *Rahner, SJ (Freiburg i.B., 1952).
Denz. and Schön. (36th edn., 1976)	H. Denzinger, Enchiridion Symbolorum Definitionum et Declarationum de Rebus Fidei et Morum, 36th edn. by A. Schönmetzer, SJ (Freiburg i.B., 1976).
Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991)	H. Denzinger, Enchiridion Symbolorum Definitionum et Declarationum de Rebus Fidei et Morum, 37th edn., with Ger. tr., by P. Hünermann (Freiburg i.B., 1991).
DHGE	Dictionnaire d'Histoire et de Géographie Ecclésiastiques, ed. A. Baudrillart and others (1912 ff.).

Dict. Amer. Biog.	Dictionary of American Biography, published under the Auspices of the American Council of Learned Societies, ed. A. Johnson and others (20 vols., 1928–36, + index, 1937, and 7 Supplements, 1944–81).
Dict. Bibl.	Dictionnaire de la Bible, ed. F. Vigouroux, PSS (5 vols., 1895–1912).
Dict. Bibl., Suppl.	Dictionnaire de la Bible, Supplément, ed. L. Pirot (1928 ff.).
Dict. Sp.	Dictionnaire de Spiritualité, ed. M. Viller, SJ, and others (16 vols. + index, 1937–95).
DIP	Dizionario Italiano di Perfezione, ed. G. Pelliccia and G. Rocca (1974 ff.).
DNB	Dictionary of National Biography, founded by G. Smith, ed. L. Stephen and S. Lee (63 vols., 1885–1900). [Also repr., with some corrections, in 21 vols., 1908–9.]
DNB, Suppl.	Dictionary of National Biography, Supplement, ed. S. Lee (3 vols., 1901). [Also repr. in 1 vol., 1909.]
DNB, 1901–1911	Dictionary of National Biography, Supplement January 1901–December 1911, ed. S. Lee (3 vols., 1912).
DNB, 1912–1921	Dictionary of National Biography, 1912–1921, ed. H. W. C. Davis and J. R. H. Weaver (1927).
DNB, 1922–1930	Dictionary of National Biography, 1922–1930, ed. J. R. H. Weaver (1937).
DNB, 1931–1940	Dictionary of National Biography, 1931–1940, ed. L. G. Wickham Legg (1949).
DNB, 1941–1950	Dictionary of National Biography, 1941–1950, ed. L. G. Wickham Legg and E. T. Williams (1959).
DNB, 1951–1960	Dictionary of National Biography, 1951–1960, ed. E. T. Williams and H. M. Palmer (1971).
DNB, 1961–1970	Dictionary of National Biography, 1961–1970, ed. E. T. Williams and C. S. Nicholls (1981).
DNB, 1971–1980	Dictionary of National Biography, 1971–1980, ed. R. Blake and C. S. Nicholls (1986).
DNB, 1981–1985	Dictionary of National Biography, 1981–1985, ed. R. Blake and C. S. Nicholls (1990).
DNB, 1986–1990	Dictionary of National Biography, 1986–1990, ed. C. S. Nicholls (1996).
DPAC	Dizionario Patristico e di Antichità Cristiane, ed. A. Di Berardino (3 vols., Casale Monferrato, 1983–88).
DTC	Dictionnaire de Théologie Catholique, ed. A. Vacant, E. Mangenot, and É. Amann (15 vols., 1903–50); Tables Générales by B. Loth and A. Michel (3 vols., 1951–72).
Duchesne	[see LP].
EB (11th edn.)	Encyclopaedia Britannica, 11th edn. (28 vols. and index, 1910–11).
EB (14th edn.)	Encyclopaedia Britannica, 14th edn. (23 vols. and index, 1929).
EB (1968 edn.)	Encyclopaedia Britannica (23 vols. and index; Chicago, 1968).
EB (1974 edn.)	The New Encyclopaedia Britannica (30 vols., Chicago, 1974).
EB (1977 edn.)	The New Encyclopaedia Britannica (30 vols., Chicago, 1977).
EB (1985 edn.)	The New Encyclopaedia Britannica (30 vols. + index in 2 vols., Chicago, 1985).
E.Bi.	Encyclopaedia Biblica, ed. T. K. *Cheyne and J. S. Black (4 vols., 1899–1903).
EC	Enciclopedia Cattolica, ed. P. Paschini and others (12 vols., 1949–54).
EETS	Early English Text Society (London, 1864–1980; Oxford, 1976 ff.).
EH	Exegetisches Handbuch zum Alten Testament, ed. J. Nickel and others (Münster i.W., 1911 ff.).
EH	English Hymnal* (London, 1906).
EHR	English Historical Review (London, 1886 ff.).
Eissfeldt	O. Eissfeldt, The Old Testament (Eng. tr. by P. R. Ackroyd, Oxford, 1966).
EJ	Encyclopaedia Judaica, ed. J. Klatzkin and others (10 vols., Berlin, 1928–1934).

EKL	Evangelisches Kirchenlexikon, ed. H. Brunotte and O. Weber (4 vols., incl. Registerband, 1956–62).
EKL (3rd edn.)	Evangelisches Kirchenlexikon, 3rd edn. by E. Falbusch and others (4 vols, 1986–96).
EL	Ephemerides Liturgicae (Rome, 1887 ff.).
Enc. Jud.	Encyclopaedia Judaica, ed. C. Roth and others (16 vols., Jerusalem, 1971–2, + Yearbooks).
ÉO	Échos d'Orient (39 vols., Paris, 1897–1942).
EOMIA	Ecclesiae Occidentalis Monumenta Iuris Antiquissima, ed. C. H. *Turner (Oxford, 1899 ff.).
Fliche and Martin	A. Fliche and V. Martin (eds.), Histoire de l'Église depuis les origines jusqu'à nos jours (Paris, 1935 ff.).
GCS	Die griechischen christlichen Schriftsteller der ersten drei Jahrhunderte (Leipzig, 1897–1941; Berlin and Leipzig, 1953; Berlin, 1954 ff.).
Gee and Hardy	H. Gee and W. J. Hardy (eds.), Documents Illustrative of English Church History (1896).
Gel. Anz. (Gött.)	Göttingische gelehrte Anzeigen unter der Aufsicht der (königl.) Gesellschaft (Academie) der Wissenschaften (Göttingen, 1884 ff.).
Hardouin	J. *Hardouin [Harduinus], Acta Conciliorum et Epistolae Decretales, ac Constitutiones Summorum Pontificum (12 vols., Paris, '1714–15').
Hardy	T. D. Hardy, Descriptive Catalogue of Materials Relating to the History of Great Britain and Ireland to the End of the Reign of Henry VII (3 vols. bound in 4, Rolls Series, 1862–71).
HAT	Handbuch zum Alten Testament, ed. O. Eissfeldt and others (Tübingen, 1934 ff.).
Hb. NT	Handbuch zum Neuen Testament, begründet von H. *Lietzmann (1906 ff.).
HBS	*Henry Bradshaw Society (1891 ff.).
HDB	J. *Hastings (ed.), Dictionary of the Bible (4 vols., 1898–1902, with extra vol., 1904).
HE	Historia Ecclesiastica.
Hefele and Leclercq	C. J. *Hefele (tr. into Fr. by H. *Leclercq, OSB), Histoire des conciles d'après les documents originaux (11 vols., 1907–52).
Heimbucher	M. Heimbucher, Die Orden und Kongregationen der katholischen Kirche, 1 (3rd edn., 1933), 2 (1934).
HERE	J. *Hastings (ed.), Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics (12 vols. + index, 1908–26).
Hist. Eccl.	Historia Ecclesiastica.
Hist. J.	Historisches Jahrbuch (Münster i.W., 1880–82; Munich, 1883–1930; Cologne, 1931–50; Munich and Freiburg i.B., 1950 ff.).
HKAT	Handkommentar zum Alten Testament, ed. W. Nowack (18 vols., Göttingen, 1892–1933).
HTR	Harvard Theological Review (New York, 1908 f.; Cambridge, Mass., 1910 ff.).
HTS	Harvard Theological Studies (Cambridge, Mass., 1916 ff.).
HUL	Home University Library (London, 1911 ff.).
HZ	Historische Zeitschrift (Munich etc., 1859 ff.).
ICC	International Critical Commentary (Edinburgh, 1895 ff.).
ILS	Inscriptiones Latinae Selectae, ed. H. Dessau (3 vols. in 5, Berlin, 1892–1916).

Jaffé	P. Jaffé, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum ab Condita Ecclesia ad Annum post Christum Natum MCXCVIII, 2nd edn. by G. Wattenbach (2 vols., Leipzig, 1885–8).
JE	Jewish Encyclopedia, ed. I. Singer and others (12 vols., New York and London, 1901–6).
JEH	Journal of Ecclesiastical History (London, 1950 ff.).
JLW	Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft (Münster i.W., 1921–41).
Joannou	P.-P. Joannou, Discipline Générale Antique (Pontificia Commissione per la Redazione del Codice di Diritto Canonico Orientale, Fonti, 9; 2 vols. in 3 parts, Rome, 1962–3).
JQR	Jewish Quarterly Review (London, 1888–1908; Philadelphia, 1910 ff.).
JTS	Journal of Theological Studies (London, 1900–5; Oxford, 1906–49; NS, ibid., 1950 ff.).
Jungmann (1952)	J. A. Jungmann, SJ, Missarum Sollemnia: Eine genetische Erklärung der römischen Messe (3rd edn., 2 vols., 1952).
Jungmann (1958 edn.)	J. A. Jungmann, SJ, Missarum Sollemnia: Eine genetische Erklärung der römischen Messe (4th edn., 2 vols., 1958).
Jungmann (Eng. tr.)	J. A. Jungmann, SJ, The Mass of the Roman Rite (Eng. tr. of 1948 edn. of Missarum Sollemnia; 2 vols., New York, 1951–5).
Kaeppeli	T. Kaeppeli, OP, and E. Panella, OP, Scriptores Ordinis Praedicatorum Medii Aevi (4 vols., Rome, 1970–93).
KAT	Kommentar zum Alten Testament, ed. E. Sellin and others (Leipzig, 1913–39; Gütersloh, 1962 ff.).
KEH	Kurzgefasstes exegetisches Handbuch zum Alten Testament (Leipzig, 1838 ff.).
KEK	Kritisch-exegetischer Kommentar über das Neue Testament, ed. H. A. W. *Meyer (16 vols., Göttingen, 1832–52; Eng. tr., 20 vols., 1873–95; also subsequent edns.).
KHAT	Kurzer Hand-Commentar zum Alten Testament, ed. K. Marti (21 vols., Freiburg i.B., 1897–1906).
Kidd	B. J. Kidd (ed.), Documents Illustrative of the Continental Reformation (1911).
Krumbacher	K. Krumbacher, Geschichte der byzantinischen Literatur von Justinian bis zum Ende des oströmischen Reiches, 527–1453 (2nd edn., 1897).
Kümmel	W. G. Kümmel, Introduction to the New Testament (Eng. tr. by H. C. Kee, 1975).
LACT	Library of *Anglo-Catholic Theology (97 vols., Oxford, 1841–63).
Latourette	K. S. Latourette, History of the Expansion of Christianity (7 vols., New York and London, 1938–45).
Lauchert	F. Lauchert, Die Kanones der wichtigsten altkirchlichen Concilien (1896).
LF	*Library of the Fathers (43 vols., Oxford, 1838–74).
LLE	Library of Liturgiology and Ecclesiology for English Readers, ed. V. Staley (9 vols., 1902–11).
Loeb	Loeb Classical Library (London and Cambridge, Mass., 1912 ff.).
LP (Duchesne)	*Le Liber Pontificalis, ed. L. *Duchesne (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2 vols., 1886–92).
L.Th.K.	Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche, ed. M. Buchberger (10 vols., 1930–8).
L.Th.K. (2nd edn.)	Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche, 2nd edn. by J. Höfer and K. *Rahner (10 vols. and index, 1957–67, + 3 supplementary vols., Das zweite vatikanische Konzil, 1967–8).
L.Th.K. (3rd edn.)	Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche, 3rd edn. by W. Kasper and others (1993 ff.).

LW	L. Brinkhoff, OFM, and others (eds.), Liturgisch Woordenboek (2 vols., 1958–68).
McNeile	A. H. McNeile, An Introduction to the Study of the New Testament (2nd edn. by C. S. C. Williams, 1953).
Mai, NPB	A. *Mai (ed.), Nova Patrum Bibliotheca (8 vols., Rome, 1844–71).
Mai, SR	A. *Mai (ed.), Spicilegium Romanum (10 vols., Rome, 1839–44).
Mai, SVNC	A. *Mai (ed.), Scriptorum Veterum Nova Collectio e Vaticanis Codicibus edita (10 vols., Rome, 1825–38).
Manitius	M. Manitius, Geschichte der lateinischen Literatur des Mittelalters (Handbuch der klassischen Altertumswissenschaft, ed. I. von Müller, 9, Abt. 2; 3 vols., 1911–31).
Mann	H. K. Mann, The Lives of the Popes in the (Early) Middle Ages (18 vols., bound in 19, 1902–32).
Mansi	J. D. *Mansi, Sacrorum Conciliorum Nova et Amplissima Collectio (31 vols., Florence, 1759–98).
MGH	Monumenta Germaniae Historica.
Mirbt	C. Mirbt, Quellen zur Geschichte des Papsttums und des römischen Katholizismus (4th edn., 1924).
Mirbt and Aland (1967)	C. Mirbt, Quellen zur Geschichte des Papsttums und des römischen Katholizismus, 6th edn., ed. K. Aland, Band 1: Von den Anfängen bis zum Tridentium (1967).
Moff. Comm.	The *Moffatt Commentaries.
Mordek	H. Mordek, Kirchenrecht und Reform im Frankenreich (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Quellenkunde des Mittelalters, 1; 1975).
NA	Neues Archiv der Gesellschaft für ältere deutsche Geschichtskunde zur Beförderung einer Gesammtausgabe der Quellenschriften deutscher Geschichte des Mittelalters (Hanover, 1876–1922; Berlin, 1922–35).
Nachr. (Gött.)	Nachrichten von der (königlichen) Gesellschaft (Academie) der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen. Philolog.-hist. Kl. (Göttingen, 1894 ff.).
Nachr. (Gött. Gesch. Mitt.)	Nachrichten von der (königlichen) Gesellschaft (Academie) der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen. Geschaftliche Mitteilungen (Göttingen, 1894–1939; Jahrbuch der Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, 1940 ff.).
NCBEL	The New Cambridge Bibliography of English Literature, ed. G. Watson and others (5 vols., Cambridge, 1969–77).
NCE	New Catholic Encyclopedia (14 vols. + index, New York, etc., 1967, + 3 supplementary vols., 16–18; 1974–89).
New Cent. Bib.	The Century Bible, New Edition (1966 ff.; entitled The New Century Bible, 1967 ff.).
New Clar. Bib.	New Clarendon Bible (Oxford, 1963 ff.).
NF	Neue Folge.
Novum Auctarium	Novum Auctarium Bibliothecae Hagiographicae Graecae, by F. Halkin, SJ (Subsidia Hagiographica, 65; Brussels, 1984).
NPB	[see Mai].
NPNCF	Nicene and Post-Nicene Christian Fathers (New York, 1887–92; Oxford, 1890–1900).
NS	New Series.
OC	Oriens Christianus* (Leipzig, 1901 ff. For details see s.v.).
OCD (2nd edn.)	The Oxford Classical Dictionary, 2nd edn., ed. N. G. L. Hammond and H. H. Scullard (1970).

OCD (3rd edn.)	The Oxford Classical Dictionary, 3rd edn., ed. S. Hornblower and A. Spawforth (1996).
OCP	Orientalia Christiana Periodica (Rome, 1935 ff.).
OCT	Oxford Classical Texts (1894 ff.).
OED	A New [Oxford] English Dictionary on Historical Principles founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society, ed. J. A. H. Murray, H. Bradley, W. A. Craigie, and C. T. Onions (10 vols. + supplement, 1884–1933).
OED (2nd edn.)	The Oxford English Dictionary, 2nd edn., ed. J. A. Simpson and E. S. C. Weiner (20 vols., 1989).
OHS	Oxford Historical Society (Oxford, 1885 ff.).
Pastor	L. *Pastor, The History of the Popes from the Close of the Middle Ages, Eng. tr. (40 vols., 1891–1954).
PBD (1912)	Prayer Book Dictionary, ed. G. Harford, M. Stevenson, and J. W. Tyrer (1912).
PBD (1925)	Prayer Book Dictionary, ed. G. Harford, M. Stevenson, and J. W. Tyrer (1925 edn.).
PG	Patrologia Graeca, ed. J. P. *Migne (162 vols., Paris, 1857–66).
PL	Patrologia Latina, ed. J. P. *Migne (221 vols., Paris, 1844–64).
PO	Patrologia Orientalis, ed. R. Graffin and F. Nau (Paris, 1907 ff.).
Polgár	L. Polgár, SJ, Bibliographie sur l'Histoire de la Compagnie de Jésus 1901–1980, 3: Les Personnes (3 vols., Rome, 1990).
Pourrat	P. Pourrat, PSS, La Spiritualité chrétienne (4 vols., 1918–28).
PRE (3rd edn.)	Realencyklopädie für protestantische Theologie und Kirche, begründet von J. J. *Herzog, 3rd edn. by A. *Hauck (21 vols., 1898–1908, + Register, 1909, and Ergänzungen und Nachträge, 2 vols., 1913).
PW	A. Pauly, Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Altertumswissenschaft, ed. G. Wissowa and others (1893 ff.).
Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986)	A. Di Berardino (ed.), Patrology, 4 (Eng. tr. of Patrologia, 3; Turin, 1978) (Westminster, Md., 1986), designed as a continuation of J. Quasten, Patrology 1–3 (1950–60).
Quétif and Échard	J. Quétif, OP, and J. Échard, OP, Scriptores Ordinis Praedicatorum Recensiti (2 vols., Paris, 1719–21).
Raby	F. J. E. Raby, A History of Christian Latin Poetry from the Beginnings to the Close of the Middle Ages (1927).
Raby (1953)	F. J. E. Raby, A History of Christian Latin Poetry from the Beginnings to the Close of the Middle Ages (2nd edn., 1953).
RAC	Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum, ed. T. Klauser, E. Dassmann, and others (Stuttgart, 1950 ff.).
R. Bén.	Revue Bénédictine (vols. 1–5 pub. under the title Le Messager des Fidèles; Lille and Bruges, 1884; Maredsous, 1885 ff.).
R. Bibl.	Revue Biblique (Paris, 1892 ff.).
Rech. S.R.	Recherches de Science Religieuse (Paris, 1910 ff.).
Rev. S.R.	Revue des Sciences Religieuses (Paris, 1921 f.; Strasbourg and Paris, 1923 f.; Strasbourg, 1925 ff.).
RGG (2nd edn.)	Die Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart, 2nd edn. by H. *Gunkel and L. Zscharnack (5 vols., 1927–31).
RGG (3rd edn.)	Die Religion in Geschichte und Gegenwart, 3rd edn. by K. Galling (6 vols. + Register, 1957–65).
RH	Revue Historique (Paris, 1876 ff.).

RHE	Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique (Louvain, 1900 ff.).
RHPR	Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses (Strasbourg, 1921–4; Strasbourg and Paris, 1925–49; Paris, 1950 ff.).
Riv. A.C.	Rivista di Archeologia Cristiana (Rome, 1924 ff.).
Rohault	C. Rohault de Fleury, La Messe: Études archéologiques sur ses monuments (8 vols., 1883–9).
RQ	Römische Quartalschrift für die christliche Alterthumskunde und für Kirchengeschichte (Rome, 1887 ff., + 28 Supplementhefte, 1893–1931).
RQH	Revue des Questions Historiques (Paris, 1866–1933; Blois, 1933; Paris, 1934; Blois, 1935 f.; Bourges, 1937–9).
RS	Rolls Series (1858 ff.).
RSPT	Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques (Kain and Paris, 1907–12; Paris, 1913 ff.).
RTAM	Recherches de Théologie Ancienne et Médiévale (Louvain, 1929 ff.).
Sb. (Bayr.)	Sitzungsberichte der (königlich) bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften (zu München) (Munich, 1860–71; philosoph.-philolog. und hist. Cl., 1871–1930; philosoph.-hist. Abt., 1930 ff.).
Sb. (Berl.)	Sitzungsberichte der (königlichen) preussischen [from 1948 deutschen] Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin (Berlin, 1882–1921; philosoph.-hist. Kl., 1922–49).
Sb. (Heid.)	Sitzungsberichte der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften. Philosoph.-hist. Kl. (Heidelberg, 1910 ff.).
Sb. (Wien)	Sitzungsberichte der (kaiserlichen) [from 1947 Österreichischen] Akademie der Wissenschaften (in Wien). Hist.-philolog. or Philolog.-hist. Kl. (Vienna, 1848 ff.).
SC	Sources Chrétiennes (Paris, 1942 ff.).
Schneemelcher	E. Hennecke, Neutestamentliche Apokryphen in deutscher Übersetzung, 3rd edn. by W. Schneemelcher (2 vols., 1959–64; Eng. tr., 1963–5).
Schneemelcher (5th edn.)	E. Hennecke, Neutestamentliche Apokryphen in deutscher Übersetzung, 5th edn. by W. Schneemelcher (2 vols., 1987–9; Eng. tr., 1991–2).
Schottenloher	K. Schottenloher, Bibliographie zur deutschen Geschichte im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 1517–1585 (7 vols., 1933–66).
Soggin	J. A. Soggin, Introduction to the Old Testament (3rd edn., 1989; Eng. tr. of Introduzione all'Antico Testamento, 4th edn., Brescia, 1987).
Sommervogel	Augustin de Backer, SJ, Aloys de Backer, SJ, and A. Carayon, SJ, Bibliothèque de la Compagnie de Jésus, ed. C. Sommervogel, SJ (12 vols., 1890–1932; repr., Louvain, 1960).
SPCK	*Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. (See p. 1527 f.)
SPG	*Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. (See p. 1529.)
SR	[see Mai].
SSL	Spicilegium Sacrum Lovaniense (Louvain, 1922 ff.).
ST	Studi e Testi (Rome, 1900 ff.).
ST	Summa Theologica* or Summa Theologiae.
Stammler	W. Stammler and others (eds.), Die Deutsche Literatur des Mittelalters: Verfasserlexikon (5 vols., 1933–55).
Summa Theol.	Summa Theologica or Summa Theologiae.
SVNC	[see Mai].
Tanner, Decrees	N. P. Tanner, SJ (ed.), Decrees of the Ecumenical Councils (2 vols., 1990).
Teub.	Bibliotheca Scriptorum Graecorum et Romanorum Teubneriana (Leipzig, 1849 ff.).
Th.Q.	Theologische Quartalschrift (Tübingen, 1831–1928; various places, 1929 ff.).
TLS	The Times Literary Supplement (London, 1902 ff.).
TLZ	Theologische Literaturzeitung* (Leipzig, 1876 ff., + Bibliographisches Beiblatt, ibid., 1922 ff.).

TRE	Theologische Realenzyklopädie, ed. G. Krause, G. Müller, and others (Berlin etc., 1977 ff.).
TU	*Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur, begründet von O. von Gebhardt und A. *Harnack (Leipzig, 1882–1943; Berlin, 1951 ff.).
Turner	[see EOMIA].
TWNT	Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, ed. G. *Kittel and G. Friedrich (1933–73 + Register and Supplement, 1978–9; Eng. tr., 10 vols., Nashville, 1964–76).
Überweg, 1	F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, 1 (12th edn. by K. Praechter, 1926).
Überweg, 2	F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, 2 (11th edn. by B. Geyer, 1928).
Überweg, 3	F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, 3 (12th edn. by M. Frischeisen-Köhler and W. Moog, 1924).
Überweg, 4	F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, 4 (12th edn. by T. K. Oesterreich, 1923).
Überweg, 5	F. Überweg, Grundriss der Geschichte der Philosophie, 5 (12th edn. by T. K. Oesterreich, 1928).
VC	Vigiliae Christianae (Amsterdam, 1947 ff.).
VCH	Victoria County History (London, 1900–75; Oxford, 1976 ff.).
Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.)	Die Deutsche Literatur des Mittelalters: Verfasserlexikon, begun by J. Stammler and others, 2nd edn., ed. K. Ruh and others (1978 ff.).
Vogel, Sources	C. Vogel, Medieval Liturgy: An Introduction to the Sources (rev. Eng. tr. by W. Storey and N. Rasmussen, OP, of Vogel's Introduction aux sources de l'histoire du culte chrétien aux moyen âge (Biblioteca degli 'Studi Medievali', 1 [1966]); Washington, DC [1986]).
West. Comm.	Westminster Commentaries [until 1903, 'Oxford Commentaries'], ed. W. Lock and others (London, 1899 ff.).
ZATW	Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft (und die Kunde des nachbiblischen Judentums) (Giessen, 1881–1932; Berlin, 1933 ff.; + Beihefte, Giessen, 1896–1934; Berlin, 1936 ff.).
ZKG	Zeitschrift für Kirchengeschichte (Gotha, 1877–1930; Stuttgart, 1931 ff.).
ZKT	Zeitschrift für katholische Theologie (Innsbruck, 1877–1940; Vienna, 1947 ff.).
ZNTW	Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde des Urchristentums (und der älteren Kirche) (Giessen, 1900–32; Berlin, 1933 ff.; + Beihefte, Giessen, 1923–34; Berlin, 1936 ff.).

(C) Biblical Books

OT: Gen., Exod., Lev., Num., Deut., Jos., Jgs., Ruth, 1, 2 Sam. (= 1, 2 Reg., Vulg.), 1, 2 Kgs. (= 3, 4 Reg., Vulg.), 1, 2 Chron. (= 1, 2 Paralip., Vulg.), Ez. (= 1 Esd., Vulg.), Neh. (= 2 Esd., Vulg.), Est., Job, Pss., Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs (= Cant., Vulg.), Is. (= Es., Vulg.), Jer., Lam., Ezek., Dan., Hos., Joel, Am., Obad., Jon., Mic., Nah., Hab., Zeph., Hag., Zech., Mal.

Apocrypha: 1, 2 Esd. (= 3, 4 Esd., Vulg.), Tob., Judith, Rest of Est., Wisd. Sol., Ecclus. (= Sirach, Vulg.), Bar., S. of III Ch., Sus., Bel (or Dragon), Pr. Man., 1, 2 Macc.

NT: Mt., Mk., Lk., Jn., Acts, Rom., 1, 2 Cor., Gal., Eph., Phil., Col., 1, 2 Thess., 1, 2 Tim., Tit., Philem., Heb., Jas., 1, 2 Pet., 1, 2, 3 Jn., Jude, Rev. (= Apoc., Vulg.).

FRANK LESLIE CROSS
1900–1968

To a younger generation of English-speaking theologians the name of F. L. Cross has become almost synonymous with the Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church. On the Continent of Europe it is revered in connexion with international conferences on academic aspects of theology which somehow broke through denominational barriers at a time when ecumenical dialogue between Catholics and Protestants was virtually prohibited. However his achievements are estimated, it may well be that those who did not know him personally will ask what manner of man Cross was. The answer that would be almost universally given is that he was a shy and retiring scholar, and a man of God.

Frank Leslie Cross was born exactly a year before Queen Victoria died. He was the eldest child of parents who were not young; his father retired from business when Leslie was eleven and the family then moved from Honiton to Bournemouth. As a day-boy he attended the local grammar school, which at that time specialized in science. While he was still at school he passed the London Intermediate B.Sc. examination and won the Domus Scholarship for Natural Science at Balliol College, Oxford.

After one term at Oxford Cross was involved in military service during the last months of the First World War. The letters which he sent home suggest that he was less unhappy than might be expected and looking back on his time in the Army he described the exercises as futile rather than positively frustrating. The Armistice was signed before he was sent to the Front, and in due course he returned to Balliol. He took Honours in Chemistry and Crystallography at Oxford in 1920 and in the same year completed the London B.Sc. He devoted the rest of his life to the study of theology, though the scientific habit of taking nothing verifiable on trust never left him. Since Balliol had no theologians among their Fellows, Cross was sent to Keble for tuition by D. C. Simpson and K. E. Kirk. Despite the handicap of having to learn Greek at a late stage, Cross took First Class Honours in Theology in 1922. He also collected a number of University prizes and scholarships, which in those days were sought for their financial as well as for their honorific value. He went to Germany for a year to work at Marburg and Freiburg on the material for his doctoral dissertation on Husserl, eventually taking his D.Phil. at Oxford in 1930. In 1923 he became an ordinand at Ripon Hall, of which H. D. A. Major was then Principal. He co-operated with Major in editing the papers left unpublished on Hastings Rashdall's death in 1924; these formed three volumes published in 1927–30. Cross certainly came under Major's influence, but it may well be doubted if he ever accepted the more extreme tenets of the so-called Modernism. In 1925 he was ordained to the title of Tutor and Chaplain of Ripon Hall.

In 1927, rather surprisingly, Cross received from the Governors an invitation to become one of the priest-librarians of Pusey House, a house of study founded in memory of E. B. Pusey, with 'the pursuit of personal holiness' as one of its avowed aims. He seems to have met with some suspicion in his early years on account of his continued association with the Modernist movement, but gradually, particularly under the influence of Darwell Stone, he made it clear that his theological position was basically Anglo-Catholic. His little book, Religion and the Realm of Science, published in 1930, reflects the influence upon his mind at this time of the scientific method, the moralism of Rashdall and Major, and the intense aesthetic attraction of Catholic ceremonial and sacramental religion. The centenary of the Oxford Movement in 1933 provided the occasion for a number of small works on the subject and probably led him to embark on a study of Newman, published in 1935. This contains letters of Newman which were previously unknown.

Also in 1933 Cross became an Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Bradford, a post which he conscientiously filled for ten years. His correspondence makes it clear that he found the work arduous and inclined to interfere with his other interests, but it was a task which he valued for the contact it gave him with the parochial ministry. It is also worth recording that despite all his diffidence he was exercising a strong pastoral influence over the many undergraduates who sought his counsel at Pusey House, and that the strength of his spirituality impressed others who came in contact with him at this time. He was during the 1930s an ardent pacifist, and he persuaded many to share his views. In 1934 he became Custodian of the Library of Pusey House. He did much to expand as well as to catalogue the library and made known its uses among non-theologians in the University.

In 1934 he was appointed University Lecturer in the Philosophy of Religion and from 1935 to 1938 he was also Wilde Lecturer in Natural and Comparative Religion, choosing as his subject the history of the relations between religion and scientific theory. It would seem, however, that his interests were turning in other directions. In 1935 he published a collection of extracts from 17th-century Anglican divines which he edited with P. E. More under the title Anglicanism; from its continued sales it appears that this has become a standard work. The following year he produced his adaptation of Huck's Synopsis of the First Three Gospels, also widely used. But he was already drawn to the early Fathers. On a walking tour in Majorca in December 1935 to January 1936 he records that he spent a good many evenings translating Bardenhewer. He had already lectured for a number of years on Leo and Athanasius, and in 1939 he published a students' edition of the De Incarnatione. Both from his Inaugural Lecture on Athanasius when he became Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity (1944) and from the papers he left unfinished, it seems clear that he meant to produce a critical edition of the text; but his energies were diverted to other channels. On Stone's death in 1941 Cross succeeded him as Editor of the Lexicon of Patristic Greek (as it was then called). On this project he toiled much, working in the Bodleian Library on the intractable slips, persuading others to give freely of their time, and raising funds by appeal and by his own work. When he undertook to look after parishes during the University vacation he would ask for his fees to be paid to the LPG. In 1941 he was also concerned with the foundation of the Theological Literature Association, of which he was one of the two secretaries throughout its useful life. In addition, he set to work, as a labour of piety, on a life of Darwell Stone, which he completed in record time. The book was published in 1943. Even if it fails to give a vivid portrait of its subject, the material it contains remains one of the sources for the history of the Church of England during the period of the Modernist crisis and the controversy over the revision of the Book of Common Prayer.

On Maundy Thursday 1939 Cross and his fellow-librarian, the Revd Dr T. M. Parker, were invited by the Oxford University Press to produce a semi-popular volume to be called The Oxford Companion to the Christian Religion; it was to be analogous to The Oxford Companion to Music. After a year it became clear that it would not be quickly completed, and Dr Parker resigned. Cross continued to work at the first draft in spasms, but with the intervention of the Second World War and other troubles the completion of the book, and its metamorphosis into the first edition of this Dictionary, had to wait until he had become Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity. On the death of Dr N. P. Williams in April 1943 this chair became vacant. At that time it was filled by an election in which all holders of Oxford degrees in Divinity were entitled to vote. When it was first suggested to Cross that he should stand he refused, but after an overnight journey he changed his mind and allowed his name to go forward. Partly because of war-time conditions, the election was not held until January 1944, when Cross was elected by a respectable majority.

The Lady Margaret Chair carries with it a canonry of Christ Church and a large mansion of over thirty rooms in the heart of the college. To this abode Cross took his books in suitcases and devoted his afternoons to taming the garden. At first he had a housekeeper and tried to turn his lodgings into an almost monastic house of study. Later, after his mother's death, his father and sisters came to live in his house, but he still offered accommodation to many generations of undergraduates, in many cases without charge. In the Cathedral his influence was quickly felt, partly because of his regular attendance at every office and partly because he soon introduced an additional weekday celebration of the Holy Communion at an early hour which at times drew a sizeable congregation; at first he was himself the normal celebrant, but as others wished to join in he gladly took his turn in the rota.

The principal achievements of his Professorship were the publication in 1957 of the Oxford Dictionary of the Christian Church, as it was eventually called, and the organization of international conferences. The Dictionary was very largely his own work. Other scholars supplied him with information, and assistants helped with compiling bibliographies and first drafts, but he himself welded the material into a unity and his hand is clearly visible throughout. The book has become a standard work of reference, and at the time of his death he was working on the second edition.

The international conferences grew out of his desire for peace and co-operation among scholars and Christians. Almost immediately after the end of the Second World War he took part in a mission to Germany to try to restore relations with German Christians, and when Patrick McLaughlin suggested to him that a gathering of scholars interested in the study of the Fathers of the Church would further relations between Christians of different denominations, he readily agreed to convene such a meeting. The First International Conference on Patristic Studies took place in 1951. In those days the academic nature of the assembly had to be stressed, and even then all members of one of the principal Roman Catholic orders were forbidden at the last moment to attend, on the ground that the gathering was 'crypto-ecumenical'. This was a severe blow. But about 200 people came, from every continent. The value of the Conference for exchange of views was so obvious that a small delegation asked Cross to arrange another; and since at a late stage he had suddenly begun to call the 1951 meeting 'The First International Conference on Patristic Studies' it was not difficult to see that a series was envisaged. The Second took place in 1955, and from then until long after his death the Proceedings were published by the Berlin Academy in Texte und Untersuchungen. The Conferences, at four-yearly intervals, grew, until that of 1967, opened by Cardinal Pellegrino, was more than double the size of the first, and everyone took part without denominational distinction. In 1957, at the first of the parallel New Testament Congresses, which developed from earlier congresses intended to foster the exchange of ideas between the Anglican clergy and academics, Dr [later Cardinal] Heenan, then Archbishop of Liverpool, took the chair for Dr Ramsey, then Archbishop of York. These conferences owed their being to Cross's powers of organization and their success to his attention to every detail and to his powers of control and persuasion; he somehow contrived to keep Continental professors content with their ration of 18 minutes, while he was able to encourage the diffident and young. It is likely that the conferences on Patristic studies played some part in bringing about the enormous increase in popularity of the Fathers as a field of research which is reflected in the output of the University Presses over the next twenty years; it is also likely that they played some part—though it is impossible to assess precisely what—in bringing together Christians of different allegiances and making for an atmosphere in which ecumenism became fashionable. This search for unity certainly figured largely in his plans for his conferences and in his prayers.

Partly at least because of these labours Cross did not produce a large output of original work.

He took enormous care over the supervision of his pupils and the encouragement of other scholars. He contributed to the Journal of Theological Studies a number of important articles, including those on the pre-Leonine elements in the Roman Mass in 1949, the African Canons in 1961, and the development of Western liturgical manuscripts in 1965. At the time of his death he was working on the Stowe Missal; he felt confident that he had discovered the purpose for which the original manuscript was written and he was concerned to see just how it fitted into the development of the Roman Mass. He published an interesting reconstruction of 1 Peter as a Paschal Homily in 1954, a view which he later doubted. Other insights on particular points he buried in unlikely places: he propounded his interpretation of Melito's Peri Pascha in a lecture which he never published and he printed his findings first in a review of someone else's edition and then in his own handbook, Early Christian Fathers (1960).

His lectures were badly attended, largely because his delivery was painful. It was equally difficult to follow his sermons, which were frequently first-rate pieces of work and read well. It is something of a surprise to find that he was chosen as Select Preacher at Cambridge on more than one occasion and that he also preached in St Paul's Cathedral in 1939.

He was personally shy and by nature retiring. Throughout his life he disliked parties and found social contacts difficult. He was completely lacking in small-talk and on a superficial level a bad judge of character, and he frequently overestimated people's ability. On the other hand few were able to refuse his requests and he was deeply respected by the college servants who said that he was almost unique in his appreciation of what they did. When he was in charge of college and university livings he invariably visited the parishes in which an incumbent was to be appointed, and he got on well with the country people. He enjoyed walking and, up to 1960, bicycling both in Britain and on the Continent. He spent much time with religious communities, making it his habit during vacations to act as chaplain to communities of nuns whose own priests were on holiday or during an interregnum. These visits provided him with a peace of mind which he seldom seemed to find elsewhere.

Towards the end of his life honours came to him from many quarters. He had obtained his own Oxford DD in 1950; in 1959 and 1960 he received honorary degrees from Aberdeen and Bonn and was later offered others in America; in 1967 he was elected a Fellow of the British Academy. He retired from his chair in September 1968 and died on 29 December of the same year.

A

Aaron. In Hebrew tradition *Moses' brother. He is first mentioned in the narrative of Moses' vision on Mt. Horeb (Exod. 4: 14), when Yahweh assigns him to Moses as his assistant. Yahweh afterwards appointed him and his descendants to be priests (Exod. 28 and 29; Num. 8 and 18), an office he kept despite his share in setting up the *golden calf (Exod. 32: 1–6). The power of his priestly intercession is emphasized in the story of his staying a plague (Num. 16: 43–8), and his authority is miraculously confirmed by the budding rod (Num. 17: 1–8). Aaron's priesthood, whose chief function was the offering of acceptable sacrifice to God, gave him a unique position. He was the head of his sons and the Levites; he alone offered incense in the Holy of Holies and mediated between God and the people; and, like a king, he was anointed and crowned with diadem and tiara (Exod. 28).

In Christian theology he is a type of Christ. This conception of Aaron as at once foreshadowing and being replaced by Him is worked out in the Ep. to the Hebrews, where the superiority of the perfect sacrifice of Calvary to the animal sacrifices of the Aaronic priesthood is established.

H. Valentin, Aaron: Eine Studie zur vor-priesterschriftlichen Aaron-Überlieferung (Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis, 18; 1978). F. Rivkin in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, suppl. vol. (Nashville, 1976), pp. 1–3, s.v. 'Aaron, Aaronides', with bibl. See also works on Priesthood in the OT cited s.v. PRIEST.

Abailard. See ABELARD.

Abba. The Aramaic word for 'Father'. It occurs three times in the NT, Mk. 14: 36, Rom. 8: 15, and Gal. 4: 6, in each case with its Greek equivalent ('Αββᾶ, ὁ Πατήρ, 'Abba, Father'). It is used as a title for individual Desert Fathers, e.g. in the Apophthegmata Patrum*.

S. V. McCasland, '"Abba, Father"', Journal of Biblical Literature, 72 (1953), pp. 79–91. J. C. G. Greig, 'Abba and Amen: Their Relevance to Christology', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Evangelica, 5 (TU 103; 1968), pp. 3–13, esp. pp. 3–10, with refs. J. Barr, '"Abbā" isn't "Daddy"', JTS NS 39 (1988), pp. 28–47. G. Kittel in TWNT 1 (1933), pp. 4–6 (Eng. tr., 1964, pp. 5 f.), s.v. ἀββᾶ. See also comm. to Mk. etc.

abbé. A French term, originally restricted to the *abbot of a monastery, but in modern times applied to every person wearing secular ecclesiastical dress. The extension of meaning took place in the 16th cent., when the Concordat of 1516 authorized Francis I to nominate secular priests abbots *in commendam. As the number of nominations far exceeded the abbacies available, many 'abbés', who often were not even in *major orders, devoted themselves to other work, e.g. educational and literary pursuits, whence the term was transferred to secular clerics in general. Today such clerics are correctly addressed as 'M. l'Abbé'.

abbess. The superior of certain sui generis (i.e. autonomous) houses of nuns. The title is used among the *Benedictines, *Cistercians, *Trappists, *Poor Clares, and some *canonesses. Its earliest known use (Lat. abbatissa) is in a sepulchral inscription (514) on the site of an ancient convent near the basilica of St Agnes extra muros at *Rome. The power of an abbess is determined by the fact that her house is sui iuris: because of this, she is a major superior (CIC (1983), can. 613, s. 2), and, depending on the Constitutions of her house or Order, she may hold office for a term of years, for an indefinite period, until a certain retiring age, and sometimes even for life (cf. CIC, can. 624, s. 1). A newly elected abbess normally receives a liturgical blessing, at which she may be invested with a *ring. In the Middle Ages wide powers were claimed by certain abbesses, e.g. the Abbess of Conversano on election, vested in a mitre, received the homage of the local clergy, while *Innocent III had to forbid the Abbesses of Burgos and Palencia from hearing the confessions of their nuns. In England abbesses attended councils on several occasions, e.g. St *Hilda was present at *Whitby in 664. The Council of *Trent put an end to most special prerogatives.

A. Tamburinius, OSB, De Jure Abbatissarum et Monialium (Rome, 1638). T. J. Bowe, Religious Superioresses: A Historical Synopsis and a Commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, 228; 1946). E. Power, Medieval English Nunneries, c.1275 to 1535 (1922), pp. 42–95. J. de Puniet in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 57–61, s.v. 'Abbesse'; A. Pantone in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 14–22, s.v. 'Abbadessa'.

Abbo, St (*c.*945–1004), otherwise 'Abbon', Abbot of *Fleury. He was born nr. Orleans, entered the Benedictine abbey of Fleury, and studied at *Paris, *Reims, and Fleury. From 985 to 987 he was in charge of studies at the monastery school of Ramsey, at the same time helping *Oswald, Abp. of *York, in the restoration of monasticism in England. While at Ramsey he composed his Passio S. Eadmundi; and shortly after returning to Fleury he addressed his Quaestiones Grammaticales to the Ramsey monks. He was elected Abbot of Fleury in 988. He supported the *Cluniac Reform and was an ardent defender of Papal authority and of the freedom of the monasteries from both episcopal and secular interference. He was killed in a revolt occasioned by the reform of the priory of La Réole in Gascony. His correspondence is a valuable source for the relations between France and the Papacy during the reign of Robert the Pious. He also issued writings on logic, mathematics, and astronomy and an Epitome of the Lives of the Popes. Feast day, 13 Nov.

Works and Letters in J. P. Migne, PL 139. 417–578 (incomplete). Opera inedita ed. A. Van de Vyver, posthumously pub. with introd. by R. Raes (Rijksuniversiteit te Gent. Werken uitgegeven door de Faculteit van de Letteren en Wijsbegeerte, 140, etc.; Bruges, 1966 ff.). Passio S. Eadmundi also ed. M. Winterbottom, Three Lives of English Saints (Toronto Medieval Latin Texts, 1972), pp. 67–87. Quaestiones Grammaticales, ed., with Fr. tr., by A. Guerreau-Jalabert (Paris, 1982). The principal authority is the Vita by a monk Aimonus repr. from the Acta Sanctorum* abbot (from Aram. and Syr. abba, i.e. father; Gk. ἀββάς, Lat. abbas). In the W. Church it is the official title of the superior of certain monasteries of monks or monastic *Congregations belonging to the *Benedictine, *Cistercian, or *Trappist families, or of some houses of certain orders of *Canons Regular (e.g. the *Augustinian Canons Regular of the Lateran and the *Premonstratensians). Acc. to the Rule of St *Benedict, the abbot is to be regarded as the father of his monastic family, and as such has far-reaching powers in the government of his house, the rules of which he may regulate in accordance with the needs of climate, customs of the times, etc. Nowadays abbots are always elected and hold office in accordance with the Constitutions of their Order or Congregation: sometimes for life, sometimes for an indefinite term, sometimes until reaching a certain retiring age, sometimes for a term of years (cf. CIC (1983), can. 624, s. 1). An abbot is a major superior (CIC (1983), can. 613, s. 2), and, since all the Orders and Congregations which have abbots are recognized by canon law as clerical institutes (cf. CIC (1983), can. 588, s. 2), an abbot must be a priest, he exercises ecclesiastical power (CIC (1983), can. 596, s. 2), and is recognized as an *Ordinary (CIC (1983), can. 134, s. 1). Unlike other major superiors, an abbot receives a liturgical blessing, at which he may be invested with a *ring, *mitre, and *crosier. The abbot of a territorial abbey (formerly known as an 'abbot nullius [sc. dioecesis]') also has quasi-episcopal jurisdiction over the territory of his abbey (CIC (1983), can. 370). The older practice of occasionally conferring the title of abbot on a monk as a mark of honour, without jurisdiction, is now falling into disuse. In the Middle Ages, certain abbots gradually acquired the right to certain insignia and privileges normally reserved to bishops, and also the right to assist at Church Councils (since the 8th Council of *Toledo in 653). The ancient distinction between mitred abbots (in pre-Reformation England, peers of Parliament) and others does not now exist. The superiors of certain prominent monasteries have the name of 'Archabbot', and, in addition, the presiding abbot of a *Congregation (q.v.) is often known as the 'Abbot President' or 'Abbot General'. Since 1893 the Benedictine Confederation has had an 'Abbot Primate' who presides over the whole order. The corresponding rank in the E. Church is *hegumenos or *archimandrite (q.v.).

Ordinis Sancti Benedicti in J. P. Migne, loc. cit., 375 414. P. Cousin, OSB, Abbon de Fleury-sur-Loire (Paris, 1954). A. Van de Vyver, 'Les Œuvres inédites d'Abbon de Fleury', R. Bén. 47 (1935), pp. 125–69. A Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, 1 (SSL 6; 1924), pp. 47–60. U. Berlière, OSB, in DHGE 1 (1912), cols. 49–51, s.v. 'Abbon de Fleury', with details of his works and edns. of them. A. Amanieu in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 71–6, s.v. 'Abbon de Fleury'.

Chs. 2, 3, 46, and 64 of the 'Rule of St Benedict' are esp. concerned with the abbot; RB 1980: The Rule of St Benedict in Latin and English with Notes, ed. T. Fry, OSB (Collegeville, Minn. [1982]), pp. 322–78 (app. 2, 'The Abbot', by C. Peifer, OSB); see also other comm. to rule cited under BENEDICT, RULE OF ST. A. Tamburinius, OSB, De Iure Abbatum (3 vols., Lyons 1640). B. Hegglin, OSB, Der Benediktinische Abt in rechtsgeschichtlicher Entwicklung und geltendem Kirchenrecht (Kirchengeschichtliche Quellen und Studien, 5; 1961). A. de Vogüé, OSB, La Communauté et l'Abbé dans la Règle de Saint Benoît (Textes et études théologiques [Bruges], 1961; Eng. tr., Cistercian Studies Series, 5; 2 vols., Kalamazoo, Mich., 1979–88). P. Salmon, OSB, L'Abbé dans la Tradition monastique: Contribution à l'histoire du caractère perpétuel des supérieurs religieux en Occident (Histoire et sociologie de l'Église, 2; Sirey, 1962; Eng. tr., Cistercian Studies Series, 14; Washington, DC, 1972). A. Veilleux, OSB, 'The Abbatial Office in Cenobitic Life', Monastic Studies, 6 (1968), pp. 3–45; A. de Vogüé and A. Veilleux, 'Apropos of the Abbatial Office', ibid. 7 (1969), pp. 160–4. U. Berlière, OSB, Les Élections Abbatiales au Moyen Age (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques, Mémoires. Collection in-8°, deuxième série, 20, fasc. 3; 1927). J. Baucher, OSB, in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 29–62, s.v. 'Abbés'; J. de Puniet, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 49–57, s.v. 'Abbé'; A. Nocent in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 3–14, s.v. 'Abate'. See also works cited s.v. MONASTICISM.

Abbot of Misrule. See MISRULE, LORD OF.

Abbot, Ezra (1819–84), biblical scholar. A native of Maine, USA, and a *Unitarian by belief, in 1856 he became assistant librarian at Harvard university and in 1872 professor of NT at the Harvard divinity school. In 1871 he was appointed one of the original members of the American NT Revision Company in charge of the RV, where his judgement exercised great influence. Several of his textual researches were incorporated into C. R. Gregory's Prolegomena (1890) to the 8th (last) edition of C. *Tischendorf's Greek NT. Though extreme care for detail much restricted the extent of his own publications, his work bore fruit in the writings of many others, who sought his assistance. His other writings included 'The Authorship of the Fourth Gospel: External Evidences', an able defence of the Johannine authorship, in the Unitarian Review (1880), and a very thorough discussion of the punctuation of Rom. 9: 5 in the Journal of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis for 1883. These items, as well as several other of his papers, were reprinted after his death in Critical Essays (1888).

Ezra Abbot (Cambridge, Mass., 1884), with pref. by S. J. Barrows, addresses by J. H. Thayer (pp. 28–60) and others, memorial tributes, short biog. note (p. 7), and list of Abbot's publications (pp. 69–73). B. W. Bacon in Dict. Amer. Biog. 1 (1928), pp. 10 f.

Abbot, George (1562–1633), Abp. of *Canterbury. A native of Guildford, he was educated and later taught at Balliol College, Oxford. In 1597 he became master of University College, Oxford, and in 1600, 1603, and 1605 he was vice-chancellor. In 1600 he also became Dean of *Winchester. He displayed from an early date strong *Puritan sympathies which brought him increasingly into conflict with the rising party of *High Churchmen in the university, esp. W. *Laud. He won *James I's favour by his mission to Scotland (1608) in which he persuaded the Presbyterians of the lawfulness of episcopacy. Preferments followed rapidly. In 1609 he was made Bp. of *Lichfield and Coventry; early in the following year he was translated to London; and in 1611 he became Abp. of Canterbury. As his long archiepiscopate was marked by the decline of Puritanism among the influential classes, Abbot found himself forced to fight a losing battle. He was severe on RCs and correspondingly partial to *Calvinists both at home and abroad. Thus he encouraged the King's endeavours to secure the dismissal of C. *Vorstius as an *Arminian from his chair at *Leiden; he arranged for the settlement of M. A. *de Dominis, the apostate Abp. of Spalato, in English benefices; and he ensured that England was represented at the Synod of *Dort. The strong line he took in the Essex nullity suit (1613), however, in which he upheld justice against the King and others in high position, won him deserved respect and a temporary popularity among Anglicans of all schools. His unhappiness culminated in the curious consequences of an accident while hunting at Bramshill, Hants, in 1621. Having accidentally shot a gamekeeper, Abbot was considered by some of his fellow-bishops to have become irregular as a man of blood. When the case was tried by a commission of six bishops and four laymen, and opinion was equally divided as to the irregularity, James gave his decision in Abbot's favour. On 24 Dec. James signed on his behalf a formal dispensation and Abbot resumed his duties. In 1625 he crowned *Charles I, but, owing to various differences with the monarch, esp. on the subject of the *Divine Right of Kings, he exercised little influence during his reign, and for a time he was sequestered from his jurisdiction in 1627. His writings include a widely circulated Geography, or a Brief Description of the Whole World (1599), and an Exposition on the Prophet Jonah (1600).

His elder brother, Robert Abbot (1560–1618), was Bp. of *Salisbury from 1615 till his death.

Standard modern Life by P. A. Welsby (London, 1962). K. Fincham, 'Prelacy and Politics: Archbishop Abbot's Defence of Protestant Orthodoxy', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, 61 (1988), pp. 36–64. R. A. Christophers, George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury 1562–1633: A Bibliography (Charlottesville, Va., 1966). S. L. Lee in DNB 1 (1885), pp. 5–20, s.v.

abbreviator. An official of the Roman chancery, whose principal duty was the preparation of letters and writs for the collation of Church dignities. He was so named from the extensive abbreviations employed in Papal documents. *Pius II erected the abbreviators into a college of prelates divided into three ranks (1463). In 1814 Pius VII abolished the junior ranks, and in 1908, when *Pius X reorganized the chancery, the college as a whole was suppressed and its functions transferred to a group of *protonotaries (protonotarii apostolici participantes).

J. Ciampinus, De Abbreviatorum de Parco maiori, sive assistentium S.R.E. vicecancellario in literarum apostolicarum expeditionibus antiquo statu, illorumve in Collegium erectione, munere, dignitate, praerogativis, ac privilegiis dissertatio historica (Rome, 1691). E. Fournier in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 98–106, s.v. 'Abbréviateurs'.

Abdisho'. See EBEDJESUS.

à Becket, St Thomas. See BECKET, ST THOMAS.

Abel. Acc. to Gen. 4: 2, the second son of *Adam and *Eve, who became a shepherd, whilst his brother Cain cultivated the land. He was slain by Cain, jealous that Abel's sacrifice of the firstlings of his flock had been accepted by Yahweh, whereas his own was rejected (Gen. 4: 3 ff.). Gen. 4 contains the only mention of him in the OT. In the NT the Lord places him at the beginning of the line of prophets who were killed ('from the blood of righteous Abel', Mt. 23: 35), and the author of Heb., who attributes the acceptance of his sacrifice to his faith (11: 4), opposes his blood to that of Christ 'that speaketh better things than that of Abel' (12: 24; cf. also 1 Jn. 3: 12). The Fathers, who frequently commented on his story, regarded him as a type of Christ, the principal points of comparison being his innocent life as a shepherd, his accepted sacrifice, and his violent death. As the first of martyrs he also sometimes stands for the persecuted Christians, belonging to the city which is in heaven (St *Augustine, De Civ. Dei, 15. 1). In the Liturgy, his name is mentioned with those of *Abraham and *Melchizedek in the *Canon of the Roman Mass (and is also mentioned in the Liturgy of St *Basil), and in the prayers for the dying he was until recently invoked to assist the soul. See also ABELITES.

V. Aptowitzer, Kain und Abel in der Agada, den Apokryphen, der hellenistischen, christlichen und muhammedanischen Literatur (1922). J. Hennig, 'Abel's Place in the Liturgy', Woodstock Studies, 7 (1946), pp. 126–41; Y. *Congar, 'Ecclesia ab Abel' in Abhandlungen über Theologie und Kirche: Festgabe für Karl Adam, ed. M. Reding (Düsseldorf, 1952), pp. 79–108. J. Lewinsohn, I. Chanoch, and B. Heller in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 1 (Berlin, 1928), cols. 207–14, s.v., with bibl. See also comm. on Gen.

Abelard, Peter (1079–1142/3), philosopher and theologian. (Abailard, used by some scholars, is prob. nearer the original form of his name and its pronunciation than the conventional spelling.) He was born at Le Pallet, near Nantes, the son of a Breton knight. The pupil successively of *Roscelin, *William of Champeaux, and of *Anselm of Laon, he early showed evidence of a lively, restless, and independent mind which brought him into frequent conflict with his masters. His brilliant refutation of the *Realism of William of Champeaux at once established his renown as a teacher. He went on to lecture at *Paris to large audiences of enthusiastic students, first in dialectics and later in theology, until the tragic issue of his love-affair with Héloïse, the niece of Fulbert, Canon of *Notre-Dame, caused him to retire to the monastery of *St-Denis in 1117/18. Roscelin and others then attacked the orthodoxy of his teaching on the Trinity; he was condemned unheard at the Council of *Soissons (1121) and made to burn his book on the subject (the 'Theologia Summi Boni'). He returned to St-Denis, but, having already provoked the monks' hostility, he was forced to flee when he criticized the legend of St *Dionysius, the patron of the abbey. He established a small oratory called the Paraclete, near Troyes, where he was soon joined by a band of pupils; it was here that Héloïse was later to become Abbess of a house of nuns. In 1127 Abelard became Abbot of St-Gildas, but by 1136 he was back in Paris, where he had among his students *John of Salisbury and *Arnold of Brescia. In June 1140, after St *Bernard of Clairvaux had denounced his teaching to Rome, a list of propositions ascribed to him was condemned at the Council of *Sens. The sentence was confirmed by Pope Innocent II, but, as a result of the intervention of *Peter the Venerable, Abelard was reconciled to Bernard, restored to communion, and received by Peter at Cluny. He died at the Cluniac priory of St-Marcel, near Chalon-sur-Saône.

Abelard's versatility is reflected in his writings. His philosophical works include 'Scito te ipsum' (also called 'Ethics'), a 'Dialectica', and some 'Glossulae' on *Porphyry. His 'Sic et Non', a collection of apparently contradictory excerpts from the Bible and the Fathers on a large number of questions, was intended to help the reader to reconcile the contradictions by making him aware of the difference between authority itself and the many forms in which it is expressed. In his 'Theologia Summi Boni' (*c.*1119–20), he did not apply reason directly to the doctrine of the Trinity, but rather sought to show how this doctrine might be understood by way of 'analogies provided by human reason'. He continued to refine and defend this method in a series of new versions of the 'Theologia'. In his 'Dialogus' (*c.*1125–6), he displayed a sympathy in debate (with a Jew and a philosopher) at variance with his earlier more combative style. He was also the author of a collection of hymns, written at the request of Héloïse for the nuns of the Paraclete. These include the well-known 'O quanta qualia' ('O what the joy and the glory must be'), to be sung at Vespers on Saturday, which, with its characteristic combination of devotional feeling and dialectical play, hymns the joys of an endless Sabbath in heaven.

Abelard's philosophical and theological doctrines were to a great extent determined by his early interest in the problem of *universals. Inspired no doubt by his lessons with the *Nominalist Roscelin, he maintained that only individuals could be described as things ('res'), and that language represented an abstraction from these things. The 'vox' or 'nomen' of language could not be considered a thing, but only a concept, because the qualities shared by individuals are not in themselves things, but the results of a mental act. Later he came to give more importance to the question of meaning in language. The understanding of the thing, which is required for words to have meaning, is at least in part (he said) a true understanding of the thing as it was conceived in the mind of God. With this thinking he moved from his earlier scepticism back to a position nearer to the Realism he had begun by attacking. In his 'Ethics', he argued that sin, 'properly speaking', consisted not in any action but in contempt for the wishes of God; while thus emphasizing the importance of intention in moral action, he held that it must nevertheless be informed by a knowledge of right and wrong which depended ultimately on revealed truth. Similarly, his stress on the suffering and death of Christ as our supreme example (his exemplarist theory of the *Atonement) involved no denial of the place of Christ's death in effecting salvation through the sacraments.

It was never Abelard's purpose simply to set reason against faith. His writings are best seen as a sustained attempt to question the content of faith, and so to gain a fuller, more lucid perception of it. The 'Historia Calamitatum', the account which he gave of his life to *c.*1132, records some of the difficulties, private and public, caused by such an approach. As well as the pleasure he took in his own powers of argument, it tells of the disappointments which he suffered when he felt that his ideas had been misunderstood. Despite his frequent immersion in controversy, after his separation from Héloïse he held increasingly to an ideal (derived partly from St *Jerome) of the monk as one engaged in a solitary, intellectual search for God. His influence is evident in the many authors who took up his method and, in a sense, in the history of scholasticism itself.

There is not yet a complete edn. of Abelard's works, which have only slowly come to light in modern times. Early edn. by A. Du Chesne (Paris, 1616), repr., with additions, in J. P. Migne, PL 178; modern collections of Ouvrages inédits (Paris, 1836), and Opera hactenus seorsim edita (2 vols., ibid., 1849–59), both by V. Cousin. Opera theologica, ed. E. M. Buytaert, OFM, and C. J. Mews (CCCM 11, 12, 13, etc., 1969 ff.; vol. 13, 1987, incl. recent bibl.). Crit. edn. of hymns by G. M. Dreves, SJ (Paris, 1891; also AHMA 48 (1905), pp. 141–232); and by J. Szövérffy (Medieval Classics, Texts and Studies, 2–3; Albany, NY, 1975). I 'Planctus' ed., with musical transcription, by G. Vecchi (Modena, 1951). Short early glosses on logical texts ed. M. Dal Pra (Rome and Milan, 1954); further writings on logic ed. B. Geyer (BGPM 21, Hefte 1–4; 1919–33; 2nd edn. of Heft 4, 1973). Glossae super librum Porphyrii secundum vocales, attributed to Abelard, ed. C. Ottaviano, Testi medioevali inediti (Fontes Ambrosiani, 3; Florence, 1933), pp. 95–207. Super Periermenias, 12–14, and Sententie secundum M. Petrum, prob. by Abelard, ed. L. Minio-Paluello, Twelfth Century Logic: Texts and Studies, 2 (Rome, 1958). Dialectica, ed. L. M. De Rijk (Assen, 1956). Sic et Non, ed. B. Boyer and R. McKeon (6 fasc., Chicago and London, 1976–7). Crit. edn. of Historia Calamitatum, with Fr. tr., by J. Monfrin (Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques, 1959; 3rd edn., 1967); Ethics, ed., with Eng. tr., D. E. Luscombe (Oxford, 1971); Dialogus inter Philosophum, Iudaeum et Christianum, ed. R. Thomas (Stuttgart and Bad Cannstatt [1970]); Eng. tr. by P. J. Payer (Mediaeval Sources in Translation, 20; Toronto, 1979); Soliloquium, ed., with Eng. tr., by C. Burnett in Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 25 (1984), pp. 857–94. Various letters between Abelard and Héloïse, ed. J. T. Muckle, CSB, Mediaeval Studies, 15 (1953), pp. 47–94; 17 (1955), pp. 240–81, and by T. P. McLaughlin, CSB, ibid. 18 (1956), pp. 241–92 [the letters are here described as 1–7; they were subsequently renumbered, the Historia Calamitatum being counted as letter 1]. Letters 9–14 (of the new enumeration), ed. E. R. Smits (Groningen, 1983). Eng. tr. of the Historia Calamitatum and some letters by B. Radice (Harmondsworth, 1974). C. Waddell, OCSO, has identified elements in the late 13th-cent. *Ordinal of the Paraclete prob. by Abelard: The Old French Paraclete Ordinary and the Paraclete Breviary (Cistercian Liturgy Series, 3–7; Gethsemani Abbey, Ky., 1983–5). Principal modern studies by J. G. Sikes (Cambridge, 1932); E. *Gilson, Héloïse et Abélard (1938; 3rd edn., 1964; Eng. tr., 1953); R. Oursel, La Dispute et la Grâce: Essai sur la Rédemption d'Abélard (Publications de l'Université de Dijon, 19; 1959); J. Jolivet, Arts du langage et théologie chez Abélard (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, 57; 1969; 2nd edn., 1982); D. E. Luscombe, The School of Peter Abelard: The Influence of Abelard's Thought in the Early Scholastic Period (Cambridge, 1969); R. Weingart, The Logic of Divine Love: A Critical Analysis of the Soteriology of Peter Abailard (Oxford, 1970). Peter Abelard: Proceedings of the International Conference, Louvain, May 10–12, 1971, ed. E. M. Buytaert (Mediaevalia Lovaniensia, Series 1, Studia, 2; 1974); Pierre Abélard—Pierre le Vénérable: Les courants philosophiques, littéraires et artistiques en Occident au milieu du XII^e siècle, Abbaye de Cluny, 2 au 9 juillet 1972, ed. R. Louis, J. Jolivet, and J. Châtillon (Colloques internationaux du centre national de la recherche scientifique, 546; 1975); Abélard en son temps: Actes du colloque international organisé à l'occasion du 9e centenaire de la naissance de Pierre Abélard (14–19 mai 1979), ed. J. Jolivet (1981); Petrus Abaelardus (1079–1142): Person, Werk und Wirkung, ed. R. Thomas (Trierer Theologische Studien, 38; 1980). D. E. Luscombe, 'From Paris to the Paraclete: The Correspondence of Abelard and Heloise', Proceedings of the British Academy, 74 (1988), pp. 247–83. Raby, pp. 319–26. E. Portalié in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 36–55; R. Peppermüller in TRE 1 (1977), pp. 7–17.

Abelites (also Abelians and Abelonians). A small African sect which originated in the diocese of Hippo and is known only from St *Augustine (De Haer. 87). Admitting marriage and, indeed, holding it to be obligatory, its members lived in complete continence after the alleged example of *Abel. They perpetuated their existence by each husband and wife adopting a boy and a girl. By St Augustine's time it had ceased to exist as a sect, the few surviving Abelite families having been received back into the Church.

Abercius, Inscription of. The Greek epitaph of Abercius Marcellus, Bp. of Hieropolis (not Hierapolis), in Phrygia Salutaris (d. *c.*200). Discovered by W. M. *Ramsay in 1883, it had been composed and apparently set up by Abercius over his future tomb. It mentions his travels to Rome and Nisibis and, making allusive use of early Christian symbolism, gives Abercius' testimony to the currency everywhere of the Eucharist. The inscription, which was presented by the Sultan Abdul Hamid to *Leo XIII, is now in the *Vatican Museum. The attempts of certain scholars (e.g. G. Ficker, A. Dieterich) to maintain that Abercius was a pagan priest, not a Christian bishop, have now been abandoned.

The 'Life of Abercius', which exists in three recensions, is of much later date. It attributes to Abercius a 'Book of Teaching' (βίβλος διδασκαλίας) as well as a letter to the Emp. *Marcus Aurelius, and also incorporates the text of the Inscription. The original form of this 'Life' was apparently written at Hieropolis towards the end of the 4th cent. Despite J. B. *Pitra's defence, the Vita appears to be of no independent historical value. Abercius is commemorated in both E. and W. as a saint. Feast day, 22 Oct.

The Greek text with Eng. tr. is in J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers (1889), 2. 1, pp. 492–501; also, with introd. and Lat. tr., in J. Quasten, Monumenta Eucharistica et Liturgica Vetustissima (Bonn, 1935), 1, pp. 21–4. The three texts of the Life are in S. Abercii Vita, ed. T. Nissen (Teub., 1912). W. Lüdtke and T. Nissen, Die Grabschrift des Aberkios: Ihre Überlieferung und ihr Text (ibid., 1910). A. Abel, 'Étude sur l'Inscription d'Abercius', Byzantion, 3 ('1926' [1928]), pp. 321–411, with full bibl. W. Wischmeyer, 'Der Aberkiosinschrift als Grabepigramm', Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, 23 (1980), pp. 22–47, incl. text. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 66–87, s.v.

Abgar, Legend of. An old tradition ascribes to Abgar V (reigned 4 BC–AD 7 and 13–50), one of the kings of *Edessa, an exchange of letters with the Lord. The King, being ill, wrote to Christ asking Him to visit and heal him; He, though declining to come Himself, promised that, after His Ascension, He would send a disciple to cure the King and preach the Gospel to the people. In one version of the story is added a special blessing for Edessa. The legend is reported in variant forms by *Eusebius (HE 1. 13) and in the 'Doctrine of *Addai'. In the account of Eusebius the letter is followed by a recital of the mission of *Thaddaeus, one of the Seventy, who is sent by St *Thomas 'who is also called Jude', heals the King and converts many inhabitants of the city. Acc. to the 'Pilgrimage of *Egeria', the letter of Christ, written in Syriac on parchment, was preserved at Edessa; there existed many copies of it to which were ascribed miraculous powers of healing and protection. In the 'Doctrine of Addai' Abgar's emissary brings back a portrait of Christ, as well as his reply to Abgar's letter; it is disputed whether Eusebius has suppressed this detail, or whether it represents a later development. Acc. to some scholars the legend as a whole is a retrojection into the 1st cent. of the conversion (itself uncertain) of Abgar VIII (177–212); acc. to others it was an invention of the late 3rd or early 4th cent. (possibly designed to counter *Manichaean propaganda). The letter was placed among the apocryphal books in the Decretum Gelasianum, but long remained popular in both E. and W.

R. A. *Lipsius, Die edessenische Abgarsage kritisch untersucht (1880); L. J. Tixeront, Les Origines de l'Église d'Édesse et la légende d'Abgar (1888); E. von Dobschütz, 'Der Briefwechsel zwischen Abgar und Jesus', Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, 43 (1900), pp. 422–86. H. C. Youtie, 'A Gothenburg Papyrus and the Letter to Abgar', HTR 23 (1930), pp. 299–302; id., 'Gothenburg Papyrus 21 and the Coptic Version of the Letter to Abgar', ibid. 24 (1931), pp. 61–5, with further refs. S. Giversen, 'Ad Abgarum: The Sahidic Version of the Letter to Abgar on a Wooden Tablet', Acta Orientalia, 24 (1959), pp. 71–82, with refs. R. Peppermüller, 'Griechische Papyrusfragmente der Doctrina Addai', VC 25 (1971), pp. 289–301. A. Cameron, The Sceptic and the Shroud (Inaugural Lecture, London, 1980; repr. in id., Continuity and Change in Sixth-Century Byzantium, 1981, no. 5). H. J. W. Drijvers in Schneemelcher (5th edn., 1987), 1 pp. 389–95; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 492–500. E. Kirsten in RAC 4 (1959), cols. 588–93, s.v. 'Edessa'.

abjuration. The act of renouncing any idea, person, or thing to which one has previously adhered. It was in the past defined in RC canon law as an external retractation, made before witnesses, of errors contrary to Catholic faith and unity, such as apostasy, heresy, and schism. There are examples of it in the reconciliation of penitents during the first centuries, in the ecclesiastical legislation of the Middle Ages, and in the practice of the *Inquisition, which imposed abjuration on formal heretics as well as suspects. In modern times the term has usually been restricted to the public retractation imposed on Catholics who, having knowingly and publicly defected from the faith or communion of the Catholic Church, sought to be reconciled to her. From 1857 to 1967 some form of abjuration was imposed on those who were received into the RC Church from other (esp. Protestant) bodies. Abjuration is not mentioned in the 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici.

The Greek Church has also set forms of abjuration, esp. for *Manichaeans, *Jews, and Muslims, containing short descriptions of the errors renounced. There also exist numerous formulae for RCs seeking admission to the Greek Church, renouncing esp. the *Filioque and the Council of *Florence (1439), to which has been added more recently a special anathema against Papal *infallibility. During the last three centuries there have been many conversions from Protestantism to Orthodoxy, for which are required abjurations of the *Double Procession, and also of the denials of the *Real Presence, the Priesthood, the cult of the saints and images, and various Protestant tenets.

Abjuration, Oath of. An oath for renouncing the Stuart dynasty, to be sworn by everyone who took office, civil, military, or spiritual, was first proposed in 1690, but not made compulsory until 1702 by the Abjuration Act 1701. It was reimposed by the Security of the Sovereign Act 1714 and the Treason Act 1766. In 1778 it was imposed on RCs in England as a condition of the removal of various disabilities. Among the matters to be abjured were the claims of the Pretender, the temporal power of the Pope and his right to depose, and the tenets that heretics may lawfully be put to death and that faith need not be kept with them. Its imposition was finally abolished in 1858 and its place taken by a new form of the Oath of *Allegiance.

ablutions. (1) The washing of fingers and chalice by the celebrant after the Communion in the Mass. The ceremony became part of the Eucharistic rite in the 10th or 11th cent. Its performance varied; the chalice usually received only one ablution with wine, and the fingers were rinsed either with wine or with water or, later, with both. In the RC Church the rite was regulated in the *Missal of *Pius V, which prescribed a twofold ablution of the chalice first with wine, then with wine and water, the ablution of the fingers with wine and water being connected with the latter. Since 1969 it has been permissible to use one ablution, of water only, and the ablution now may be postponed until after the end of the Mass. In the *Mozarabic and Greek rites the ablutions are performed privately after the Mass; in the other E. rites, however, immediately after the Communion and before the concluding prayers. The development of the ceremony is a consequence of the belief in the Eucharistic Presence and an expression of reverence due to Christ present under the Sacred Species.

(2) In the RC Church the rinsing of the mouth after the reception of the Bl Sacrament with wine by the new priests in the Ordination Mass, which was customary until 1968, and a similar rinsing with water formerly common at the Communion of the Sick. The W. custom was probably connected with the medieval practice of giving the communicants a draught of unconsecrated wine immediately after Communion to cleanse the mouth. A similar custom exists in the E., where in many places the communicants receive unconsecrated wine after Communion at the Liturgy.

On (1), W. Lockton, The Treatment of the Remains at the Eucharist (1920).

On (2), P. Browe, SJ, 'Mittelalterliche Kommunionriten', JLW 15 (1941), pp. 23–66; '5, Die Ablution', pp. 48–57. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 510–20; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 411–19.

F. *Cabrol, OSB, and S. Pétridès in DACL 1 (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 103–11, s.v.

abortion. See CONTRACEPTION, PROCREATION, AND ABORTION, ETHICS OF.

Abraham (or Abram, Gen. 11: 26–17: 5), OT *Patriarch. His story is told in Gen. 11: 26–25: 18. Having journeyed from Ur of the Chaldeans, he settled in Haran, whence he set out for the land of Canaan, in response to a Divine command (Gen. 12: 1). Famine then drove him into Egypt. On his return, he delivered his nephew Lot from the captivity of Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, and was blessed by *Melchizedek, king of Salem (Gen. 14). Yahweh promised him a son by his wife Sarai (Sarah) and an innumerable posterity, confirming His promises by a covenant. After the birth of his son *Isaac, Abraham's faith was put to a severe test by a command to sacrifice his son (Gen. 22). When Abraham had shown his readiness even for this act of obedience, a ram was substituted before the sacrifice was actually offered, and Abraham was rewarded by the formal renewal of God's promises.

Scholarly opinion is divided about both the historicity and the date of the Abraham traditions. The older view, still held by some critics, is that Abraham lived *c.*1800 BC; others (e.g. T. L. Thompson) see the Abraham material as having its origins in the period of Israel's settlement in Palestine (*c.*1200 BC), whilst J. Van Seters argues that the tradition is essentially a literary creation of the age of the Exile (*c.*550 BC).

The Christian Church has always recognized in Abraham her spiritual ancestor on account of his faith, a conception worked out by St *Paul (Rom. 4: 11; Gal. 3: 7), St James (2: 21–3), and the author of Hebrews (11: 8–10). The Fathers, e.g. St *Clement of Rome, St *Ambrose, and St *Augustine, exalted his obedience in leaving his homeland. His willingness to sacrifice his son furnished the Fathers with a model of perfect obedience to the will of God, even in the severest trials. It came to prefigure the death of Christ, and many writers, e.g. *Tertullian, *Origen, St *Cyril of Alexandria, elaborated on the similarities. In the *Canon of the Mass and in the sequence '*Lauda Sion' the immolation of Isaac prefigures the Sacrifice of the Mass. There is a parallel Jewish Rabbinic tradition of lively speculation upon the so-called 'Binding' of Isaac. The story of Abraham has continued to be a rich source of theological reflection, figuring, e.g., in the work of S. *Kierkegaard.

The term 'Abraham's bosom' is of Rabbinic origin and is used by Christ in the parable of Dives and Lazarus (Lk. 16: 22). Since the time of St Augustine it has been understood to signify the place of repose where Abraham is.

Abraham has a major place in histories of Israel and in works on the Patriarchs (q.v.). A. Parrot, Abraham et son temps (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, 14; 1962); T. L. Thompson, The Historicity of the Patriarchal Narratives: The Quest for the Historical Abraham (Beihefte zur ZATW, 133; 1974); J. Van Seters, Abraham in History and Tradition (1975). A. Alt, Der Gott der Väter (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft von Alten und Neuen Testament, Dritte Folge, 12; 1929); Eng. tr. in Alt's Essays on Old Testament History and Religion (Oxford, 1966), pp. 1–77. R. E. Clements, Abraham and David: Genesis XV and its Meaning for Israelite Tradition (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 5; 1967). Abraham, Père des Croyants (Cahiers Sioniens, 5. 2; June 1951, with contributions by E. Tisserant, J. *Daniélou, SJ, and others); R. Martin-Achard, Actualité d'Abraham (Bibliothèque Théologique; Neuchâtel, 1969). See also comm. on Gen. cited s.v.

Abraham, Apocalypse of. An apocryphal writing, dating from perhaps as early as the 1st cent. AD. The opening chapters (1–8) recount *Abraham's conversion from idolatry. The rest of the book (9–32) describes a series of visions seen by Abraham in the heavens, showing the nature of sin and the Fall and its issue in God's destruction of the *Temple. The book ends (32) with a promise that God will deliver His chosen. The work in all probability goes back to a lost Greek or even Hebrew or Aramaic original, but the text survives only in a late Slavonic version. The earliest MS ('Codex Sylvester') dates from the 14th cent. In its present form the book shows clear traces of Christian influence, particularly in the later chapters, although the opening 'legendary' part of the book is based on Jewish tradition.

The Slavonic text has been pub. twice—by two Russian scholars, N. Tikhonravov and J. Sreznevsky (both at St Petersburg, 1863). A facsimile ed. was issued ibid., 1891. Ger. tr., with app. crit., by G. N. Bonwetsch (Leipzig, 1897). Eng. trs., with introd., by G. H. Box (London, 1918); R. Rubinkiewicz and H. G. Lunt in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 1 (1983), pp. 681–705; and by A. Pennington in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984), pp. 363–91.

Abraham, Testament of. An apocryphal writing, describing how *Abraham, unwilling to face death, is taken to heaven by the Archangel *Michael and has a vision of the two roads leading to hell and paradise and learns how most men choose the former. After praying for the forgiveness of sinners, he is brought back to earth and finally borne by the Angel of Death to paradise. The Testament exists in two Greek recensions (apparently its original language), as well as in Romanian, Arabic, Ethiopic, and Coptic versions. In the last three of these versions it is supplemented by 'Testaments' of Isaac and of Jacob. It was very popular in the E. Church from the 5th cent. onwards. It may have been written as early as the 2nd cent., but opinions have differed both as to its date and as to whether the author was a Jew or a Christian.

Gk. text ed. M. R. James, with extracts from the Arabic version ed. W. E. Barnes (Texts and Studies, 2, no. 2; Cambridge, 1892). Gk. text also ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by F. Schmidt (Texte und Studien zum Antiken Judentum, 11; Tübingen, 1986). Eng. tr. of the Gk. text by G. H. Box, with tr. of the Coptic version of the Testaments of Isaac and Jacob by S. Gaselee (London, 1927). Further Eng. tr. of the Gk. text by N. Turner in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984), pp. 393–421, with bibl. Fr. tr. of Gk. text and Oriental versions, with full introd. and bibl., by M. Delcor (Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha, 2; Leiden, 1973). G. E. W. Nickelsburg, Jun. (ed.), Studies on the Testament of Abraham (Society of Biblical Literature, Septuagint and Cognate Studies, 6 [1976]).

Abraham Ecchellensis (1600–64), *Maronite scholar. A native of Hekel or Ecchel on Mt. Lebanon, he studied at the Maronite College in Rome and taught Syriac and Arabic in Rome and Paris. In 1660 he became a scriptor in the *Vatican library. He published several important works on oriental languages, among them an edition of 84 spurious Arabic *Nicene Canons (1645) and Syriac and Arabic versions of 3 Macc. and of Ruth for the Paris *Polyglot.

J. Lamy in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 116–18; L. Petit in DHGE 1 (1912), cols. 169–71, both s.v.

Abrahams, Israel (1858–1925), Rabbinic scholar. Educated at University College, London, he was appointed reader in Talmudic and Rabbinic literature at Cambridge in 1902. He became prominent as a leader of 'Liberal Judaism'. In his later years he applied himself esp. to the study of Christian origins in their relation to their Rabbinic background, setting out his conclusions in two series of Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels (1917, 1924). From 1889 to 1907 he edited (with C. J. Goldsmid *Montefiore) the Jewish Quarterly Review.

G. A. Kohut (ed.), Jewish Studies in Memory of Israel Abrahams (New York, 1927), with select bibl. of Abrahams' works, pp. xix–xlvii; suppl. bibl. by S. Levy in Jewish Historical Society of England, Miscellanies, 3 (1937), pp. 41–6. H. Loewe, Israel Abrahams (1944).

Absolute Idealism. 'Idealism' is the name sometimes given to philosophical theories according to which reality is mental or spiritual (ideal from 'idea') rather than material or independent of mind. Absolute Idealism is a kind of Idealism chiefly associated with G. W. F. *Hegel, but it can also be found in varying degrees in writers such as J. G. *Fichte, F. W. J. von *Schelling, T. *Carlyle, S. T. *Coleridge, F. H. *Bradley, and B. *Bosanquet. It is called 'Absolute' in order to distinguish it from 'Subjective Idealism'. Subjective Idealism is typically understood as holding that the only reality is ideas in the human mind. Absolute Idealism, by contrast, says that there is significant reality outside the human mind. It came to exercise a strong influence on British speculative thought, including philosophical theology, in the decades immediately preceding World War I.

For its influence on British theology see C. C. J *Webb, A Study of Religious Thought in England from 1850 (1933).

absolution. The formal act of a bishop or priest pronouncing the forgiveness of sins by Christ to penitent sinners, in virtue of Christ's gift of the Holy Spirit to the Apostles empowering them to forgive or to retain sins (Jn. 20: 23). A formula of absolution is included in many liturgical acts of worship, but, acc. to the traditional Catholic belief, *mortal sins (in modern formularies 'grave sins') are normally absolved only in the Sacrament of *Penance. The medieval development of private confession, and in particular the devotional practice of frequent confession, led to a widespread tendency to seek formal absolution even for venial sins, though this was never officially required. The need for a formal absolution by an ordained minister is commonly denied among Protestants, who also generally do not ascribe any sacramental force to such an absolution.

Two methods of absolution have been, and still are, in use—the indicative and the precatory. By indicative is meant the use by the absolver of such formulae as 'I absolve thee', whereas in precatory methods of absolution the priest prays formally that God will absolve an individual or a congregation. In the E., the precatory form is always used, though in the Russian Church, and possibly elsewhere, the indicative is added. The RC Church uses the indicative (preceded by the precatory, but holding this insufficient if used alone) within the Sacrament of Penance, and the precatory for other liturgical purposes. The Anglican BCP provides the indicative form of absolution for individuals in the Office for the *Visitation of the Sick and the precatory form for use in e.g. the Communion Office. The American BCP (1979), however, provides for the use of either the indicative or the precatory form in its rite for the Reconciliation of a Penitent. The form of absolution in Morning and Evening Prayer in the BCP is usually held to be only declaratory, i.e. the pronouncement that God forgives those who repent.

A. Villien in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 120–3. See also bibl. under PENANCE.

absolution prayer, a prayer until recently found in the Divine Office after the Psalms and before the lessons of each *nocturn. The name has been derived from absolutio in the sense of completion, on the ground that the prayer ended a section of the office; but the prayer did not appear in its final form until the 13th cent., when absolutio was already a technical term, and further, one of the prayers was of a penitential character.

Absolutions of the Dead. The title given to the service in the RC Church formerly said after the *Requiem Mass in the presence of the body before it was taken from the church. It could also be said even though the body was not present. The title is derived from the occurrence of the word 'absolve' in two of the prayers. The service consisted of prayers for the departed soul, and the censing and aspersing of the body during the saying of the *Lord's Prayer. One of the concluding prayers is found in the earliest Gregorian MSS, but the service as a whole was medieval. An account of a funeral by St *Theodore of Tarsus, Abp. of Canterbury (d. 690), definitely excludes it.

In 1969 it was replaced by a final commendation. After a short address and silence, the body is sprinkled with water and censed. After responses a collect is said and a chant sung as the body is carried to the church door.

abstinence. A penitential practice, consisting in abstaining from the use of certain kinds of food. It is thus commonly distinguished from *fasting (q.v.), which means the refusal of all, or all but a strictly limited quantity of, food, irrespective of its kind. It is practised among most peoples in different forms and for various reasons, e.g. among Egyptians, Indians, Greeks, Arabs. The Jewish Law contained elaborate food prohibitions (Lev. 11), which, however, were abrogated by the New Dispensation, the only apparent exceptions being blood and things strangled (Acts 15). From early Christian times, however, other kinds of abstinence were practised, esp. among the hermits. Thus St *Antony and his followers abstained from all food save bread, salt, and water, and *Pachomius and the Egyptian monks followed a similar diet. It was carried to excess in several early heretical sects who taught dualistic doctrines, e.g. the *Manichees and various other *Gnostic bodies. In the W. more or less severe abstinence throughout the year is practised by most contemplative orders, such as the *Carthusians, *Carmelites, and some *Benedictine congregations. Both in E. and W. the Friday abstinence of all Christians in commemoration of the Passion was in use from early times. It is mentioned by *Clement of Alexandria and *Tertullian as an established custom, and was extended to Saturday in the W. at about the same time. The practice was attacked by *Jovinian in the 4th cent., and later by the *Reformers, who considered it to be contrary to the Gospel.

Among RCs abstinence from flesh-meat has traditionally been observed on all Fridays in the year (except such as coincided with *Feasts of Obligation), Wednesdays in Lent, and certain other occasions such as *Vigils and Rogation Days. By the Apostolic Constitution Paenitemini of 17 Feb. 1966, the penitential days were reduced to Fridays (except when Feasts of Obligation), *Ash Wednesday or the first day of Lent, and *Good Friday, and Episcopal Conferences were permitted to vary these days and to substitute for abstinence other forms of penance, particularly works of charity or piety; advantage of this concession was taken in many countries. The CIC (1983), cans. 1250 f. enjoins 'abstinence from meat, or from some other food as determined by the Episcopal Conference', on the same days, while still allowing Episcopal conferences to substitute other forms of penance (can. 1253). The law of abstinence is binding from the age of 14 (can. 1252). In the Greek and other E. Churches the practice of abstinence (ξηροφαγία, 'dry food') is far more rigid. It extends to all Wednesdays and Fridays of the year, all days of the Major (Lent) Fast including Sundays, and several other periods, bringing up the number of days of abstinence to about 150; and not only meat, but fish, eggs, milk, cheese, oil, and wine are also generally forbidden (fish is allowed on *Palm Sunday and 25 Mar., and oil and wine on Saturdays and Sundays in Lent, except *Holy Saturday, when no oil is permitted). In the C of E, though there is nothing formally enjoined in the matter of abstinence as distinct from fasting, the Friday abstinence has never been completely abandoned. Its wider observance in modern times has been due esp. to the *Oxford Movement. See also FASTS AND FASTING.

Arts. s.v. in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 261–77 (several authors). See also bibl. to FASTS AND FASTING.

Abuna (Eth. and Arab. abu-na, 'our father'). The Patriarch of the *Ethiopian Church.

Abyssinian Church. See ETHIOPIAN CHURCH.

Acacian schism. In the *Monophysite controversy, a temporary schism (482–519) between *Rome and the E. which arose out of the Emp. *Zeno's *Henoticon (q.v.). It began during the Patriarchate of Acacius (471–89) at *Constantinople. Despite the attempts of Flavitas (490) and Euphemius (490–6), Acacius' successors, to heal it, it continued till the accession of Justin (518).

On Acacius, see M. Jugie, AA, in DHGE 1 (1912), cols. 244–8, s.v. E. *Schwartz, Publizistische Sammlungen zum Acacianischen Schisma (Abh. (Bayr.), 1934, Heft 10). W. H. C. Frend, The Rise of the Monophysite Movement (Cambridge, 1972), pp. 143–254, passim.

Acacius of Caesarea (d. 365), *Arian theologian. A disciple of *Eusebius Pamphili and his successor in the see of *Caesarea (in Palestine) in 341, he was a representative of strict Arianism. Under the Emp. Constantius he was pronounced deposed by the Council of *Sardica (343) and became one of the principal representatives of the *Homoeans. He proposed a Homoean Creed at the Council of *Seleucia in 359 and drew up the acts (now lost) of the Homoean Synod of Constantinople in 360. Under *Jovian he signed the Creed of *Nicaea at Antioch in 363, but returned to Arianism under Valens. He was deposed in 365 by the *Semiarian Synod of Lampsacus. Among his works were 17 vols. on Eccles. and other treatises, which now exist only in fragments. His followers ('Acacians') were for a short time (357–61) a distinct and important theological party.

The main sources are *Jerome, De Vir. Ill. 98, and *Socrates, HE 2. 4, together with St Jerome's letters. Part of a polemical treatise against *Marcellus of Ancyra is preserved by *Epiphanius, Haer. 72. 6–10. Fragments on the Ep. to the *Romans ed. by K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (1933), pp. 53–6; further fragments ed. R. Devreesse, Les anciens commentateurs grecs de l'Octateuque et des Rois (ST 201; 1959), pp. 105–22. J.-M. Leroux, 'Acace, évêque de Césarée de Palestine, (341–365)', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 8 (1966), pp. 82–5.

Acarie, Mme (1566–1618), 'Mary of the Incarnation', one of the founders of the Reformed *Carmelites in France. Barbe Jeanne Avrillot was educated by the *Poor Clares at Longchamps, outside Paris; she wanted to enter the community, but, in obedience to her parents, in 1584

she married Pierre Acarie, who was a distant relation. They had six children and Mme Acarie was a devoted wife and mother. Their house (the hôtel Acarie) became a centre of charitable works and intense spirituality. In her life of prayer she experienced visions and *ecstasies, but her spiritual directors, *Benet of Canfield and the *Carthusian Richard Beaucousin, advised her to hold them at bay as inimical to a truly contemplative life. Reading F. de Ribera's 1601 translation of the Life of St *Teresa of Ávila, she felt called to introduce the Reformed Carmelites into France; she was helped by Mlle de Longueville and P. de *Bérulle (a relation of her husband), and the first house was founded in 1604. She also assisted Mme de Sainte-Beuve in bringing the *Ursulines to Paris and supported Bérulle in the foundation of the *Oratory in 1611. After her husband's death in 1613 she entered the Carmelite house in Amiens as a lay sister, taking the name 'Marie de l'Incarnation'. In 1616 she transferred to Pontoise. She died there in 1618, having spent some thirty years as a married woman and some four as a Carmelite. She was beatified in 1791. She was frequently called upon to give spiritual guidance, but only Les Vrays Exercises de la Bienheureuse Sœur Marie de l'Incarnation . . . Très propres à toutes Ames qui désirent ensuyvre sa bonne vie (1622) was posthumously published from her papers.

A. Duval, La Vie admirable de Sœur Marie de l'Incarnation (1621; repr. 1893). J.-B.-A. Boucher, Vie de la Bienheureuse Sœur Marie de l'Incarnation (1800); Bruno de J[ésus] M[arie], OCD, La Belle Acarie [1942], incl. text of her Exercises, pp. 727–50, and bibl. Other Lives by E. de Broglie ('Les Saints', 1903) and L. C. Sheppard (London, 1953). E. Dubois, 'The hôtel Acarie: a meeting place for European currents of spirituality in early seventeenth-century France', Durham University Journal, 71 (1979), pp. 187–96. Bremond, 2 (1916), pp. 193–262; Eng. tr., 2 (1930), pp. 145–94.

Acathistus (Gk. ἀκάθιστος, 'not sitting', because it was sung standing), a famous liturgical hymn in honour of the BVM, sung in the Orthodox Church on the Saturday of the fifth week of *Lent. It consists of 24 stanzas, alternately long and short, each beginning with one of the letters of the Greek alphabet. The first part of the text is based on the events of Christ's life, from the *Annunciation to His *Presentation in the Temple; the second praises the mystery of the Incarnation. Dating prob. from the early 6th cent., it may be the work of St *Romanos 'Melodus', although this attribution is disputed. It is possible that Patr. *Sergius of Constantinople appointed it to be sung in thanksgiving for the deliverance of his city from the Avars and Slavs in 626, and that Patr. *Germanus established a special feast, at which it was recited, in memory of the defeat of the Arabs before the capital in 717–18; but neither of these is likely to be the author. The attributions to George Pisides (early 6th cent.), George of Nicomedia (late 9th cent.), and Patr. *Photius are impossible.

E. Wellesz, The Akathistos Hymn (Monumenta Musicae Byzantinae Transcripta, 9; Copenhagen, 1957); G. G. Meersseman, OP, Der Hymnos Akathistos im Abendland (Spicilegium Friburgense, 2–3; 1958–60); C. A. Trypanis, Fourteen Early Byzantine Cantica (Wiener Byzantinische Studien, 5; 1968), pp. 17–39, incl. text. D. Attwater, The Akathistos Hymn: Translated from the original Greek. With historical and liturgical notes (1934). R. A. Fletcher, 'Three Early Byzantine Hymns and their Place in the Liturgy of the Church of Constantinople', BZ 51 (1958), pp. 53–65, esp. pp. 63–5.

accentus. The name given since the 16th cent. to *plainsong of the simple recitation type as sung by the officiant (celebrant, deacon, etc.). The more elaborate kind of chant, as found in antiphons or hymns, whether sung by choir or congregation, is termed concentus.

Acceptants. Those who 'accepted' the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713) in the *Jansenist controversy, as contrasted with the *Appellants who appealed against it.

Accession Service. The form of prayer for use on the anniversary of the accession of the reigning sovereign, printed at the end of the BCP. Such forms have been in use in England and Wales since 1576. The Order is put out by the Sovereign in Council. Strictly it has no other authority and is not part of the BCP, though can. 2 of the 1640 canons recognized the service. No service was issued for *Charles II's reign, as 30 Jan., the date of his de jure accession, was provided for by the commemoration of King *Charles the Martyr. Various revisions have been made from time to time. The last and most comprehensive, that of 1901, is the model of the service still in use. Here provision is made (1) for special forms of Morning and Evening Prayer (with proper Psalms, Lessons, etc.); (2) for a proper Collect, Epistle, and Gospel at the Eucharist; and (3) for a separate service, opening with the *Te Deum. A fresh Order in Council is issued at the beginning of every reign, and when modifications are required through other changes in the Royal Family. Since 1936, the first revision after the disestablishment of the Church in *Wales, the use of the service has been ordered only for churches in the provinces of *Canterbury and *York, and even there its use is now rare.

For the forms put out in 1576 and 1578, see W. K. Clay (ed.), Liturgies and Occasional Forms of Prayer set forth in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth (*Parker Soc., 1847), pp. 548–61. D. Maclean in PBD (1912), p. 2.

accident. In medieval philosophy, following *Aristotle, an entity whose essential nature it is to inhere in another entity as a subject (ens in alio). It is thus to be contrasted with a substance (ens per se).

The term has played an important part in Eucharistic doctrine since the *Schoolmen evolved the theory of the accidentia sine subjecto ('accidents without a subject') to elucidate the mystery of the Presence. The concept was used to explain how, after the changing of the substances of the bread and wine into those of the Body and Blood of Christ, the accidents of the former, e.g. quantity, colour, taste, etc., continued to exist and be perceptible by the senses. St *Thomas Aquinas, e.g., taught (Summa Theol. 3. q. 77) that after the consecration through miraculous Divine intervention the accident of quantity continued to exist without inhering in a substance and that in this accident the other accidents inhered in a natural manner. By the end of the 14th cent. the explanation in terms of accidents had come to be widely accepted, but J. *Wycliffe and J. *Huss, as well as M. *Luther and the *Reformers generally, rejected it. The Council of *Trent taught the continuance of the species of bread and wine after consecration, but without mention of accidents. The doctrine of the accidentia sine subjecto, though very generally accepted among RC theologians, has in fact never been formally defined. See also TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

P. Mielle in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 302–4; C. Fabro in EC 1 (1949), cols. 191 f., with bibl. Full discussion of accidents in Eucharistic theology by F. Jansen, SJ, in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1368–452, s.v. 'Eucharistiques (Accidents)', with bibl.

accidie (Gk. ἀκηδία, 'negligence', 'indifference'). In its general sense the word is used several times in the *Septuagint (e.g. Ps. 119: 28, Is. 61: 3), but later its meaning was modified to convey sadness, spiritual torpor, and sloth, as in *Hermas (Vis. 3. 11. 3). The conception was first fully analysed by *Evagrius Ponticus, and from then on the word became a technical term of Christian asceticism. It figures as one of the deadly sins in the lists of the spiritual writers of antiquity and the Middle Ages. The classical description of it, given by *Cassian (Instit. 10. 2), depicts it as a state of restlessness and inability either to work or pray. It is treated at length by St *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol. 2^a 2^{ae}, q. 35) and mentioned in the '*Ancren Riwle' and the writings of Richard *Rolle of Hampole. Accidie is generally regarded as affecting particularly monks and hermits, who are more liable to it than other persons owing to the outward monotony of their life. The term received a new lease of life in England through the influence of F. *Paget, who, in his 'Introductory Essay Concerning Accidie' in The Spirit of Discipline (1891), studied it in a number of ancient and modern authors as well as in its modern manifestations.

S. Wenzel, The Sin of Sloth: Acedia in Medieval Thought and Literature (Chapel Hill, NC [1967]). G. Bardy in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 166–9, s.v. 'Acedia', with extensive patristic refs.

accommodation. In theology, the adaptation of a text or teaching to altered circumstances.

(1) It is sometimes used to connote the giving to a text in Scripture a meaning not intended by the writer, e.g. St *Matthew's application of 'Out of Egypt have I called my son' (Hos. 11: 1; cf. Mt. 2: 15) to Christ where 'son' meant originally the nation of Israel, or the reference formerly in the Roman Mass of Pharaoh's words 'Ite ad Joseph' ('Go to Joseph', Gen. 41: 55) to the Lord's foster-father. This usage of the word is mainly found in RC writers.

(2) 'Accommodation' (Ger. Herablassung, lit. 'condescension'; also Akkommodation) was also used by liberal German theologians of the 18th cent. to expound the mode of Divine communication through the Bible. J. S. *Semler and other exegetes maintained that beside the timeless and unchangeable element in Scripture, there were passages in which the Divine revelation was accommodated to the human understanding by being clothed in transitory forms. Such accommodation was met with esp. in the teaching of Christ. His explicit words and implicit assumptions about, e.g., the authorship of particular parts of the OT, the Messianic character of certain prophecies, or the objective reality of demon-possession, were explained, not as the necessary limitations of His human knowledge consequent on the reality of the Incarnation, but as the deliberate adjustment of His words and actions to the ideas and beliefs of contemporary Judaism. Under the influence of the rationalistic tendencies of the *Enlightenment this form of exegesis often reduced the core of eternal truth to small proportions; e.g. the NT teaching on the *Atonement was explained as merely 'accommodation' to Jewish thought-forms and therefore without validity for later ages.

(3) The word is also used in a more general sense of the teaching by Christians of part only of the truth for the sake of prudence, or of the modification of the form of Christian teaching to secure its more ready acceptance. A notable instance of accommodation in this sense was the practice of the *Jesuit missionaries in China to use the word 't'ien' for God and to allow converts to continue in practices akin to ancestor-worship. Such accommodation was forbidden in 1715 by Clement XI and again in 1742 by *Benedict XIV. The method of 'reserve' advocated by I. Williams in No. 80 of Tracts for the Times, entitled On Reserve in Communicating Religious Knowledge, has certain affinities with this form of 'accommodation'; but here the chief motive for adjustment was the need for reverence in speaking of sacred subjects.

Aceldama (RV, Akeldama). 'The field of blood', a piece of land in the neighbourhood of *Jerusalem, so named (1) acc. to Mt. 27: 8, because it was bought with the price of the Lord's blood; but (2) acc. to Acts 1: 18 f., because it was the scene of *Judas Iscariot's tragic end.

Acoemetae (Gk. ἀκοίμηται, 'sleepless ones'). A celebrated body of Orthodox monks. They were founded *c.*400 by Abbot Alexander (*c.*350–*c.*430), who, after having established a monastery on the Euphrates, went to *Constantinople, where he established a religious house whose monks were to observe absolute poverty, do no manual work, exercise a vigorous apostolate by means of missions, and keep up perpetual psalmody in alternating choirs. These ideas, which were complete novelties in Byzantine monasticism, attracted a great number of monks from other convents. They provoked, however, such hostility from the Patr. *Nestorius and others that Alexander was driven from Constantinople and, after many difficulties, founded a monastery on these lines at Gomon in Bithynia. Under his successor it was transferred to the modern Tchiboukli, on the middle Bosphorus, where the monks were first given by the populace their name of 'Acoemetae', which they henceforth kept. The Acoemetae, many of whom were taken for other foundations, e.g. *Studios, became ardent defenders of orthodoxy against the *Monophysites, their most famous member being their abbot St Marcellus, who signed the condemnation of *Eutyches at Constantinople in 448. In their struggle against Eutychianism, however, the monks later fell into the Nestorian heresy, for which they were excommunicated by Pope John II in 534. There are few mentions of them after this period. At an uncertain date they transferred their monastery to Constantinople, where they are mentioned in the 12th cent. As early as the time of Marcellus they had modified the exaggerated poverty enjoined by Alexander, and later possessed one of the most famous monastic libraries in the East.

Greek Life of St Alexander, ed., with Lat. tr. and introd., by E. de Stoop in PO 6 (1911), pp. 641–705. [E.] Marin, Les Moines de Constantinople depuis la fondation de la ville jusqu'à la mort de Photius, 330–898 (1897), passim. J. Pargoire, AA, 'Un Mot sur les Acémètes' in ÉO 2 (1898), pp. 304–8 and 365–72. I. M. Phoundoules, Ἡ Εἰκοσιτετράωρος Ἀκοίμητος Δοξολογία (1963). E. Marin in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 304–8; J. Pargoire, AA, in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 307–21; S. Vailhé, AA, in DHGE 1 (1912), cols. 272–82, all s.v. 'Acémètes', with bibl.

acolyte. The first in rank of the two Lesser Ministries in the RC Church. Until 1972 acolytes formed one of the four Minor Orders. They were specially delegated to the service of the altar, assisting priest and deacon, and administering the Eucharist both inside and outside Mass. The earliest mention of acolytes in Rome dates from 251, and about this time they were subjected to the regional deacons, prob. six to each region. In the early Ordines Romani they have a multitude of duties, incl. that of carrying the Eucharist. Gradually the *subdeacons and acolytes absorbed most of the functions of the other Minor Orders at Mass and Baptism. Some acolytes also became officers or secretaries to the Pope. The office of acolyte is also found in Africa in the time of St *Cyprian but seldom elsewhere in the W. in the early centuries.

Since 1972 the ministry of acolyte may be conferred on lay men, who thereby acquire no clerical status. Where the needs of the Church require, and no ministers are available, lay people may carry out most of their liturgical functions. The regulations are laid down in CIC (1983), can. 230.

J. *Morin, Commentarius de Sacris Ecclesiae Ordinationibus, 2 (Paris, 1655), pp. 197 f., 236–9, and passim. F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (RQ, Suppl. Heft 7; 1897), pp. 48–54 and 154–61. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 348–56; F. [Philip] Oppenheim, OSB, in EC 1 (1949), cols. 198 f.

acosmism (Gk. ἀ, privative, and κόσμος, the 'ordered universe'). An extreme form of *pantheism (q.v.) which asserts that the totality of individual things is nothing but a manifestation of the Absolute and has no real being. It may be contrasted with those forms of pantheism which conceive of the Absolute as in some sense ingredient into individual things. The term was used by G. W. F. *Hegel, who apparently coined the word (Encyclopädie, § 50) to describe B. *Spinoza's system.

Acquaviva, Claudius. See AQUAVIVA, CLAUDIO.

act, human. In moral theology the term denotes the free and voluntary actions of a human being done with knowledge and attention. To such acts alone can moral praise or blame be accorded, since those which fall below this level are not full expressions of the will of man, as a being endowed with free will. An act can be made less than human by: (1) ignorance, insofar as this is not the fault of the person acting (see INVINCIBLE IGNORANCE), (2) force or constraint applied by an outside agent, (3) passion, insofar as its influence is independent of the will, (4) fear, if sufficient seriously to cloud the mind, or (5) habit, insofar as it destroys advertence to what one is doing.

Acta Apostolicae Sedis. The official gazette of the *Vatican, founded by *Pius X in the decree, 'Promulgandi Pontificias Constitutiones' (29 Sept. 1908). Publication began in Jan. 1909. About 12 issues appear each year.

Acta Sanctorum. The celebrated series of lives of the saints, arranged in the order of their feasts in the ecclesiastical year, which was begun by the *Bollandists, a small body of *Jesuit scholars, in the 17th cent. The plan was conceived by H. Rosweyde (d. 1629), who did not, however, see any of it completed. The first two vols. (Jan.) were published at Antwerp in 1643. By the date of the suppression of the order (1773), 50 vols. (to 7 Oct.) had been brought out. Three further vols. were edited by former Jesuits, *Premonstratensians, and others shortly afterwards, and in 1837 the work was resumed by the Society. In 1925 it reached 10 Nov., and in 1940 the introduction (or Propylaeum) to December was published.

New edn. of section Jan., vol. 1, to Oct., vol. 6, by J. Carnandet (Paris, 1863–8). M. D. Knowles, 'Great Historical Enterprises, 1. The Bollandists', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 5th ser. 5 (1958), pp. 147–66; repr. in his Great Historical Enterprises (1963), pp. 1–32. See also other works cited under BOLLANDISTS.

Acta Sanctorum Ordinis Sancti Benedicti. The history of the saints of the *Benedictine Order, of which J. *Mabillon published the first volume in 1668. It was completed in 1701.

Vols. 1–3 (pt. 1) repr. by the Benedictines of *Solesmes (Mâcon, 1935–9).

action (Lat. actio). A name once applied to the whole Mass either as a single sacrificial action or possibly as a contraction of the phrase gratiarum actio, i.e. 'thanksgiving', 'Eucharist'. Later it was applied in a more restricted sense to the *Canon of the Mass as the sacrificial action par excellence. The phrase survives in the Roman Missal in the heading of the *Communicantes prayer, 'Infra actionem'.

Action Française, French political movement. At the height of the Dreyfus affair in 1898, the teacher Henri Vaugeois and writer Maurice Pujo formed a Comité d'Action Française; it was made known to the public in a lecture by Vaugeois on 20 June and on 10 July 1899 appeared the first issue of L'Action Française, originally a fortnightly review. The Provençal intellectual, Charles Maurras, soon the leading figure, converted the movement to monarchism. Maurras blamed the internal and international weakness of France on the democracy of the Third Republic and argued that only a restoration of the monarchy could promote French glory abroad and ensure the right combination of authority and the autonomy of families, corporations, and regions at home. He was clerical rather than Catholic, and valued the Church as a principle of order and hierarchy rather than as a spiritual force. The movement flourished as the threat from Germany became greater. The Ligue de l'Action Française was set up in 1905. L'Action Française became a daily newspaper in 1908, edited by Léon Daudet, and was distributed by young hawkers, the Camelots du Roy, who also served as fighting squads. Support was always middle-class and strongest among the right-wing students of the Latin Quarter, who resented the *anticlericalism and pacificism of their professors and of certain republican politicians. During the 1914–18 war the Action Française was fiercely annexionist and after the war took a hard line against reconciliation with Germany. The movement was supported by integralist RCs but opposed by RCs of Le Sillon, the Association Catholique de la Jeunesse Française, and liberal bishops. In 1926 these opponents of the Action Française obtained its condemnation by Pope *Pius XI on the grounds of extreme nationalism and a cynical misappropriation of Catholic doctrine. Relations with the official royalist movement were equally strained, and in 1937 the royal Pretender, Henri, Comte de Paris, announced that only the House of France was qualified to define what the monarchy of the future would be. The Action Française responded late but vehemently to the threat of international Communism, and refused after 1936 to countenance a war with Nazi Germany that would lead to a triumph of Communism. In the period 1940–44 Maurras was isolated at Lyons between the government of Vichy and the collaborationists of Paris, but was tried for collaboration in 1945 and condemned to life imprisonment and national degradation. The last number of L'Action Française had appeared on 24 Aug. 1944. In 1951 Maurras was released; he died the following year, by which time the movement had disintegrated.

E. [J.] Weber, Action Française: Royalism and Reaction in Twentieth Century France (Stanford, Calif., 1962); E. R. Tannenbaum, The Action Française: Diehard Reactionaries in Twentieth-Century France (New York and London, 1962); L. Thomas, L'Action française devant l'Église (de Pie X à Pie XII) [1965]. E. Nolte, Der Faschismus in seiner Epoche (Munich, 1963), pp. 61–190; Eng. tr. (1965), pp. 29–141. S. M. Osgood, French Royalism since 1870 (2nd. edn., The Hague, 1970). C. Capitan Peter, Charles Maurras et l'idéologie d'Action française (1972); M. Sutton, Nationalism, Positivism and Catholicism: The Politics of Charles Maurras and the French Catholics 1890–1914 (Cambridge, 1982), passim; P. Boutang, Maurras: La destinée et l'œuvre [1984]. A. Dansette in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 97 f., s.v.

action sermon. Among Scottish *Presbyterians, the sermon preached before the administration of the Lord's Supper. J. *Calvin used the expression action de grâces for the thanksgiving which followed Communion, and from this use J. *Knox probably took it as a name for the whole service. The sermon has now become less important than the prayers preceding Communion, and is frequently omitted.

active life. As distinguished from the '*contemplative life', the 'active life' means (1) the cultivation of the Christian virtues and (2) a life devoted to Christian works, esp. works of fraternal charity, sometimes subdivided into *corporal works of mercy and such spiritual works as preaching. In sense (1) the active life is necessary for all Christians and is normally regarded as an essential preliminary to the contemplative life. Spiritual writers have disagreed about whether the active life in sense (2) is incumbent on all Christians in this world, at least sometimes, though most assert that some Christians are obliged to it by their state of life and vocation.

For bibl. see CONTEMPLATION.

Acton, John. See AYTON, JOHN.

Acton, John Emerich Edward Dalberg, first Baron Acton (1834–1902), historian. Born at Naples of émigré RC parents, he was educated at *Paris, Oscott (under N. *Wiseman), and Munich, where he formed a lifelong friendship with J. J. I. von *Döllinger. He was debarred from Cambridge by the unrepealed religious tests. From his early years an ardent liberal in politics, he became Whig MP for Carlow in 1859, and was thus brought into relations with W. E. *Gladstone, whom he much admired. He also became actively interested in the cause of religious liberty, taking over from J. H. Newman in 1859 the editorship of the RC Rambler (from 1862, Home and Foreign Review) in defence of liberal views. His own contributions reflected his immense range of knowledge, but the threat of a Papal veto owing to its anti-Ultramontane tendencies led him to suspend it in 1864. Henceforward he endeavoured to resist the movement towards Ultramontanism in the RC Church. He strongly opposed the Syllabus Errorum (1864), and in 1869 went to Rome to organize resistance to the definition of Papal Infallibility at the *Vatican Council, working in close conjunction with Döllinger when publishing in the Allgemeine Zeitung the famous series of letters under the signature '*Quirinus'. But he never formally broke with the RC Church, and in 1874 in some letters to The Times publicly explained his position on the basis of Gladstone's pamphlet on The Vatican Decrees. In his later years Acton's main energies were devoted to encouraging the study of modern history. He helped to found (1886), and often contributed to, the English Historical Review. In 1895 Lord Rosebery appointed him Regius Professor of Modern History at Cambridge in succession to Sir John *Seeley, where he delivered his famous inaugural lecture on the study of history (reprinted in Lectures on Modern History, ed. by J. N. *Figgis and R. V. Laurence, 1906). His last great work was to plan the Cambridge Modern History (12 vols., and index, 1901–11), for which he wrote the introductory chapter, though most of the work was not published till after his death. His posthumously published writings include Historical Essays and Studies (1907), The History of Freedom (1907), and Lectures on the French Revolution (1910), books partly based on studies which grew out of a long-projected, but never executed, 'History of Liberty'. A further collection of his writings was published under the title Essays on Church and State (1952).

Letters of Lord Acton to Mary, Daughter of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, ed. with introd. memoir (pp. xi–lxxvii) by H. Paul (1904); F. A. *Gasquet, OSB, Lord Acton and his Circle [1906]; J. N. Figgis and R. V. Laurence (eds.), Selections from the Correspondence of the First Lord Acton (1917); Ignaz von Döllinger and Lord Acton, Briefwechsel 1850–1890, ed. V. Conzemius (3 vols., Munich, 1963–71); The Correspondence of Lord Acton and Richard Simpson, ed. J. L. Altholz, D. McElrath, and J. C. Holland (3 vols., Cambridge, 1971–5). Acton's Journal, 22 Nov. 1869–24 Jan. 1870, ed. E. Campion (Sydney, 1975). D. McElrath, Lord Acton: The Decisive Decade 1864–1874. Essays and Documents (Bibliothèque de la RHE 51; 1970). D. Mathew, Acton (1946); id., Lord Acton and his Times (1968); G. Himmelfarb, Lord Acton: A Study in Conscience and Politics (1952). Studies by U. Noack (Frankfurt, 1935, 1936, and 1947). G. E. Fasnacht, Acton's Political Philosophy (1952); L. Kochan, Acton on History (1954); H. A. MacDougall, OMI, The Acton–Newman Relations (New York, 1962). [W.] O. Chadwick, 'Lord Acton at the First Vatican Council', JTS NS 28 (1977), pp. 465–97. H. Tulloch, Acton (Historians on Historians; 1988). Bibl. in W. A. Shaw, A Bibliography of the Historical Works of Dr Creighton, etc. (Royal Historical Society, 1903), pp. 3–63.

Acts of the Apostles. The fifth Book of the NT, written by St *Luke the author of the Third Gospel. It outlines the mission of the Church from Christ's Ascension and the gift of the Holy Spirit to St *Paul's visit to Rome c. AD 62. The identity of authorship between the Third Gospel and Acts is now virtually undisputed, and there are some grounds for holding that both are the work of Luke, the companion of Paul mentioned in Col. 4: 14, Philem. 24, and 2 Tim. 4: 11. This is definitely stated by Christian writers from the latter part of the 2nd cent. onwards, e.g. the *Muratorian Canon, St *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Tertullian. The chief objections to Lucan authorship are the inconsistencies between Acts and the Pauline Epistles, but these can be explained in part by their different aims. The accuracy of the author's information probably varies in different parts of the Book. There are errors (e.g. concerning *Theudas), but it would be unreasonable to expect modern attitudes to historical precision, and at some points where Acts coincides with profane history Luke has been supported by modern archaeological finds (e.g. by Sir William *Ramsay). In general the narrative is condensed and impressionistic, not exact in its details.

Scholars are far from unanimous on the question of date. Two different views were already held in antiquity. Acc. to the so-called *Anti-Marcionite 'Prologue of Luke' (at one time dated c.160–80), Acts was written in Achaia some time after the death of Paul. The more common early opinion dated the Book at the end of or shortly after the Apostle's first Roman captivity. *Eusebius based this view chiefly on 2 Tim. 4: 16 ff. It was followed by A. *Harnack, who considered it unlikely that Acts would have omitted any mention of Paul's martyrdom if it had already taken place. At the other extreme a few have put forward a 2nd-cent. date. Some have thought that parallels with *Josephus imply that the author had read his 'Antiquities' (93), but the majority would probably settle for the 80s. This is late enough to account for an idealized picture of the nascent Church, but prior to systematic *persecution by the Roman authorities.

The author will have used oral and perhaps written traditions; the apparent existence of doublets in the earlier chapters has been thought to support the latter hypothesis, and scholars such as Harnack once claimed success in separating these sources. Acc. to C. C. Torrey, Acts 1: 2–15: 35 is Luke's translation of a single Aramaic document emanating from *Jerusalem which was concerned to show the universal mission of Christianity. The so-called 'We-sections' (Acts 16: 10–17; 20: 5–15; 21: 1–18; 27: 1–28: 16, to which *Codex Bezae adds 11: 28) are still often believed to come from the author's own travel diary, thus revealing him as an eyewitness of many of the events he related, but many critics ascribe the use of the first person to one of the author's sources, or his own desire to achieve vividness in his narrative. In any case there are extensive sequences that supply detailed information, as well as others which give a more generalized account.

The text of Acts, which has come down to us in two recensions, presents a difficult critical problem. The shorter text is represented by most of the great uncial MSS, e.g. the *Codices Sinaiticus, Vaticanus, and Alexandrinus; the other, longer, text by the so-called '*Western text', esp. Codex Bezae. Several theories have been put forward to account for this divergence. Acc. to one view, represented e.g. by F. *Blass and T. *Zahn, Luke himself issued his work in two versions; acc. to another, which is much more widely held, the original text was expanded and smoothed over by some writer versed in tradition early in the 2nd cent.

The Book of Acts may be conveniently divided into six parts, tracing the progress of Christianity from Jerusalem to Rome. 1: 1–6: 7 describes the Jerusalem Church and the preaching of St *Peter; 6: 8–9: 31 the extension of the Church throughout Palestine and the preaching of St *Stephen; 9: 32–12: 24 the extension of the Church to *Antioch and the conversion of Cornelius; 12: 25–16: 5 Paul's first missionary journey and the Council of Jerusalem; 16: 6–19: 20 the conversion of Macedonia, Greece, and Asia; and 19: 21–28: 31 ends with Paul's journey to Rome as a prisoner and his witness to the Gospel there.

The Book emphasizes the Divine origin of Christianity, which is attested by the Apostles and their miracles and martyrdoms. In their discourses with the Jews they affirm that Jesus is the Messiah (2: 36; 4: 27; 9: 22, etc.), proclaimed as such by His Resurrection, of which they are the authorized witnesses (e.g. 1: 22; 3: 15), and foretold in the OT (2: 25–36; 13: 16–38). Salvation is offered through Him, but it is not so clearly associated with His death as it is by Paul. The most striking proofs of the Divine origin of the infant Church are the miraculous intervention of the Holy Spirit in her foundation (2: 1–4), the fervent charity of the first Christians (2: 44–7), the rapid propagation of Christianity, and the Divine help given to the Apostles, esp. to Peter and Paul (chs. 12 and 16). Belief in the Divine status of Christ is reflected, notably in the title 'Lord'. Sins are forgiven through *Baptism (2: 38), mention is made of the imposition of *hands (8: 15–17; 19: 6), which some have seen as foreshadowing *Confirmation, and all the faithful remain in fellowship in 'the breaking of bread' (ἡ κλάσις τοῦ ἄρτου, 2: 42; cf. 2: 46; 20: 7), the term used in Acts for the Eucharistic rite. Thus, acc. to Acts, the Church has her special rites from the beginning, by which Christianity is distinguished from Judaism. This distinction becomes noticeable esp. with the conversion of pagans (ch. 11) and through the decision of the Council of Jerusalem (ch. 15) to abrogate certain of the Mosaic observances. The infant Church seems to have been governed first only by the Apostles (2: 42; 4: 33), to whom the 'Seven' were added later (6: 1–6), as well as elders (πρεσβύτεροι, 14: 23; 15: 2, etc.) and bishops (ἐπίσκοποι, 20: 28), the latter two evidently not yet being distinguished.

The author may have had a number of aims: to defend Christianity against the charge of political subversion; to demonstrate the essential unity of the Church in its worldwide mission (and here he seems at least to have played down the dissensions which the Epp. show to have been serious), and perhaps to vindicate the part played by Paul. But his main aim can best be seen as to give a picture of what Christianity is, and how the Gospel spread from Jerusalem to Rome. This he does with the help of sermons and speeches, an emphasis on the main stages, and a selection of illuminating incidents. He has undoubtedly given a dramatic picture; a majority of scholars accept it as at least substantially reliable, however partial.

Modern comm. by A. *Loisy (Paris, 1920); E. Jacquier (Études Bibliques, 2nd edn., 1926); F. J. Foakes Jackson (Moff. Comm., 1931); F. F. Bruce (London, 1951; 3rd edn., Grand Rapids, Mich.,

and Leicester, 1990); E. Haenchen (KEK, 10th edn., 1956; 14th edn., 1965; Eng. tr., 1971); C. S. C. Williams (Black's NT Comm., 1957); H. Conzelmann (Hb. NT, 1963; 2nd edn., 1972; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, Pa. [1987]); R. P. C. Hanson (New Clarendon Bible, 1967); J. Munck, ed. W. F. Albright and C. S. Mann (Anchor Bible, 1967), and C. K. Barrett (ICC, 1994 ff.). M.-É. Boismard and A. Lamouille, Le Texte Occidental des Actes des Apôtres: Reconstitution et Réhabilitation (2 vols., 1984). A. Harnack, Die Apostelgeschichte (1908; Eng. tr., 1909), and other works; C. C. Torrey, The Composition and Date of Acts (Harvard Theological Studies, no. 1, 1916); F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. *Lake (eds.), The Beginnings of Christianity (5 vols., 1920–33); W. L. Knox, St Paul and the Church of Jerusalem (1925); H. J. *Cadbury, The Making of Luke–Acts (1927); A. C. Clark, The Acts of the Apostles (1933; on the text); W. L. Knox, The Acts of the Apostles (1948); M. *Dibelius, Aufsätze zur Apostelgeschichte (1951; Eng. tr., 1956); H. J. Cadbury, The Book of Acts in History (1955); E. Trocmé, Le 'Livre des Actes' et l'Histoire (1957); J. Dupont, OSB, Les Sources du Livre des Actes (1960; Eng. tr., 1964); id., Études sur les Actes des Apôtres (1967); J. C. O'Neill, The Theology of Acts in its Historical Setting (1961); C. K. Barrett, Luke the Historian in Recent Study (A. S. Peake Memorial Lecture, 1961); M. Wilcox, The Semitisms of Acts (Oxford, 1965); L. E. Keck and J. L. Martyn (eds.), Studies in Luke–Acts (1968); A. [A. T.] Ehrhardt, The Acts of the Apostles (Manchester, 1969); M. Hengel, Zur urchristlichen Geschichtsschreibung (1979; Eng. tr., Acts and the History of Earliest Christianity, 1979); P. F. Esler, Community and Gospel in Luke–Acts: The Social and Political Motivations of Lucan Theology (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 57; Cambridge, 1987); G. Lüdemann, Das frühe Christentum nach den Traditionen der Apostelgeschichte (1987; Eng. tr., Early Christianity according to the Traditions in Acts, 1989); R. C. Tannehill, The Narrative Unity of Luke Acts: A Literary Interpretation, 2 (Minneapolis [1990]). [W.] W. Gasque, A History of Criticism of the Acts of the Apostles (Beiträge zur Geschichte der biblischen Exegese, 17; 1975; repr. with addendum, Peabody, Mass. [1989]). See also works cited under LUKE, GOSPEL OF ST, and historical works on PAUL, ST, cited s.v., esp. those of J. Knox, G. Bornkamm, and R. Jewett.

Acts of the Martyrs. Of the numerous separate accounts of early Christian martyrdoms of varying authenticity, the most reliable are those that follow the official shorthand reports of the trials. Very few of these, however, have survived, perhaps the most perfect specimen of this type being the 'Acta Proconsularia' of St *Cyprian. A second category, the so-called 'Passiones', are the stories of martyrdoms written by Christian authors and based on eyewitness accounts. To this type belong the 'Martyrdoms' of St *Ignatius, of St *Polycarp, of the Martyrs of Lyons, the famous 'Passion of St *Perpetua and St Felicitas', the 'Passion of St *Irenaeus', and others. In all these the miraculous element is much restricted, a feature which did not appeal to the popular taste. In their later versions the sober account of the original was frequently embellished with miraculous and other apocryphal or legendary material, e.g. in the cases of St Perpetua, the *Scillitan Martyrs, and other authentic Acts. A third category belongs completely to the realm of legend, with probably no historical kernel whatever. Such are the Acts of St *Catherine of Alexandria and those of St *George.

*Eusebius of Caesarea was probably the first Christian author to produce a collection of Acts of Martyrs; his great work, the Συναγωγὴ τῶν Ἀρχαίων Μαρτυρίων, is unfortunately lost, but a smaller one on the Palestinian martyrs survives in Greek fragments and in a complete Syriac version. In the W. Church the Acts of the Martyrs were carefully collected and used in the Liturgy from early times, as is testified by St *Augustine.

The most comprehensive collection is contained in the Bollandist Acta Sanctorum. Another well-known set is that of T. *Ruinart, Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (1689). Convenient edn., with Eng. tr., by H. Musurillo, SJ (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1972). G. Lanata, Gli Atti dei Martiri come Documenti Processuali (Studi e Testi per un Corpus Iudiciorum, 1; Milan, 1973). J. den Boeft and J. Bremmer, 'Notiunculae Martyrologicae', VC 35 (1981), pp. 43–56; 36 (1982), pp. 383–402; 39 (1985), pp. 110–30. Critical studies appear in the Analecta Bollandiana and in the many writings of H. *Delehaye.

Acts of Sts Paul and Thecla. See PAUL AND THECLA, ACTS OF STS.

Acts of St Peter, of Pilate, of Thomas, etc. See PETER, ACTS OF; PILATE, ACTS OF; THOMAS, ACTS OF, etc.

Actual Grace. See GRACE.

Actual Sin. A sin, whether of commission or omission, which is the outcome of a free personal act of the individual will. In Christian theology it is contrasted with *Original Sin (q.v.). See also SIN.

Actus Purus (Lat., 'Pure Actuality'). The Scholastic term used (e.g. by St *Thomas Aquinas) as a way of characterizing the nature of God and distinguishing Him from His creatures. It derives from the *Aristotelian distinction between 'potentiality' and 'actuality', though it employs the distinction in a way that Aristotle does not. To call God Actus Purus is to say two things: that God is in no way changeable (that He has no 'potentiality' for change), and that the existence of God is not and could not be caused by anything (that God has no 'potential' non-existence). It is thus to say that God is eternally all that He could be, and that He is eternally uncreated. The distinction between potentiality and actuality is employed by Aquinas in the Quinque Viae* and elsewhere.

Adalbert of Bremen (*c.*1000–72), German Archbishop. He was the descendant of a noble Saxon family. In 1032 he became canon at Bremen, later provost of Halberstadt Cathedral, and in 1043 Abp. of Bremen-Hamburg. He was an energetic promoter of missionary activities, esp. in the Nordic countries, Scandinavia, Iceland, Greenland, and the Orkneys, and planned to become Patriarch of the North. In 1053 *Leo IX nominated him Papal Vicar and Legate of the Nordic nations. During the minority of *Henry IV he gradually gained considerable influence over the young King, who loaded him with rich counties and abbeys. In 1066 Henry was compelled to dismiss him from his court by the jealousy of enemies, who also invaded his archbishopric and robbed him of his possessions. In 1069 he was recalled by Henry and part of his property restored. His last years were darkened by the invasion of the pagan Wends, who destroyed Hamburg in 1071–2.

O. H. May, Regesten der Erzbischöfe von Bremen, 1, fasc. 1 (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission für Hannover, Oldenburg, Braunschweig, Schaumburg-Lippe und Bremen, 11; 1928), pp. 53–79. Contemporary account by Adam of Bremen (d. c. 1085) in his Gesta Hammaburgensis Ecclesiae Pontificum, 3 (ed. B. Schmeidler, MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum scholarum, 1917, pp. 142–226; Eng. tr. by F. J. Tschan, Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 53; 1959, pp. 114–85). G. Meyer von Knonau, Jahrbücher des deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich IV und Heinrich V, 2 (1894), pp. 121–47. C. Grünhagen, Adalbert, Erzbischof von Hamburg und die Idee eines nordischen Patriarchats (1854). E. N. Johnson, 'Adalbert of Hamburg-Bremen: A Politician of the Eleventh Century', Speculum, 9 (1934), pp. 147–79, with refs. to date. G. Misch, 'Studien zur Geschichte der Autobiographie III: Das Bild des Erzbischofs Adalbert in der Hamburgischen Kirchengeschichte des Domscholasters Adam von Bremen', Nachr. (Gött.), 1956, pp. 203–80. F. Knöpp, 'Adalbert, Erzbischof von Hamburg-Bremen 1043–1072', in id. (ed.), Die Reichsabtei Lorsch, 1 (Darmstadt, 1973), pp. 335–46. W. Seegrün in TRE 1 (1977), pp. 407–410.

Adam. Acc. to the biblical story, the first human being. 'Adam' is in fact a transliteration of one of the words for 'man' in Hebrew (אָדָם). In Genesis there are two accounts of the creation of humankind—1: 26–31, attributed to a priestly editor (*P), and 2: 5–7, attributed to the Yahwist (*J); the stories of the *Fall and subsequent history (Gen. 2: 15–4: 1 and 25) are, on a documentary hypothesis, all J material. Acc. to the P account, humans were created on the sixth day, after the animals (1: 26); were made in the image and likeness of God (1: 26 f.); commanded to multiply; and given dominion over the earth (1: 28–30). The J account, more anthropomorphic, assigns man's creation to the time when the earth was still void. It describes God's breathing into Adam's nostrils the breath of life (2: 7), the creation of *Eve from his rib (2: 21 f.; cf. 3: 20), and his work in the garden of Eden, with its Tree of Knowledge and forbidden fruit (2: 17). Ch. 3 narrates the Fall (q.v.), the curse laid on humanity, and the expulsion from Paradise. There is, however, now less general agreement among scholars over the analysis of the Pentateuch into documentary sources than there was in earlier decades (see PENTATEUCH). Various traditions about the story of Adam and Eve from the time of their expulsion from Paradise until their deaths are recorded in such apocryphal works as the Greek 'Apocalypse of Moses' and the Latin 'Life of Adam and Eve'.

Traditional theology has utilized the scriptural statements in its doctrine of man and his relation to God. As the father of the human race Adam has been held to have been endowed with great intellectual gifts, enabling him, e.g., to give names to all the animals (2: 19 f.). He was also held to possess infused knowledge (Ecclus. 17. 6 f.). The Councils of *Orange (529, can. 19) and of *Trent (sess. 5, cans. 1 and 2) defined that he was created in the state of sanctifying grace in conformity with the belief that Christ, the *Second Adam (Rom. 5: 14 and 1 Cor. 15: 45), restored mankind to the state of righteousness which had been lost by the first Adam. This state of grace has been held to consist with certain preternatural privileges, such as the absence of concupiscence and the possession of immortality and impassibility, which were bestowed on Adam in his original condition. It was through the Fall that these prerogatives were lost.

Acc. to Christian tradition, Christ delivered Adam from *limbo. The notion of *Tatian and the *Encratites that Adam had been damned was rejected by St *Irenaeus, who taught that Christ's victory over the old Serpent would not have been complete had He not delivered Adam from his power. Acc. to a Jewish tradition, taken up by St *Jerome and long accepted in the W., he was buried at Hebron. This supposition gradually gave way to another, first found in *Origen and widespread esp. in the E., which places his tomb on *Calvary, so that at the Crucifixion the Blood of the Second Adam was poured out over the head of the First. St *Augustine (In Ps. 95 [96], no. 15) found in the four letters of Adam's name allusion to the four points of the compass (Anatole, Dysis, Arctos, Mesembria) and hence a sign of his identity with fallen humanity scattered over the whole world.

The biblical account is discussed in comm. on Gen., cited s.v. Convenient Eng. tr. of the 'Life of Adam and Eve', with introd. and refs. to original text, in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984), pp. 141–67. A. Vitti, SJ, 'Christus-Adam: De Paulino hoc conceptu interpretando eiusque ab extraneis fontibus independentia vindicanda', Biblica, 7 (1926), pp. 121–45, 270–85, 384–401. J. *Daniélou, SJ, Sacramentum Futuri: Études sur les Origines de la Typologie Biblique (1950), pp. 3–52; Eng. tr. (1960), pp. 11–65. C. K. Barrett, From First Adam to Last: A Study in Pauline Theology (1962), pp. 1–21; R. Scroggs, The Last Adam: A Study in Pauline Anthropology (Oxford, 1966). J. Jeremias in TWNT 1 (1933; Eng. tr. 1964), pp. 141–3; G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), A Patristic Greek Lexicon (Oxford, 1968), pp. 26–9, s.v. Ἀδάμ. O. Betz and others in TRE 1 (1977), pp. 414–37, s.v. See also H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 509–19, s.v. 'Adam et Eve'. See also works cited s.v. ORIGINAL SIN.

Adam of Marsh (Adama de Marisco) (d. *c.*1258), English *Franciscan theologian. He was probably a native of Somerset, educated at *Oxford, and after being ordained priest received the living of *Wearmouth from his uncle, Richard, Bp. of *Durham. In 1232 or 1233 he entered the Franciscan Order at *Worcester and later was sent to Oxford. In 1245 he accompanied Robert *Grosseteste, his lifelong friend, to the Council of *Lyons. Despite the plans of the French to give him a chair at the university of *Paris, he returned to Oxford, where, from *c.*1247, he was regent of the Franciscan house of studies. Apart from his work as a scholar he exercised great influence in English political and social life. Together with Grosseteste and Simon de Montfort he defended the national liberties, and his advice was frequently sought by the most influential men of the country, among them Henry III and *Boniface, Abp. of *Canterbury. In 1256 both Henry and Boniface endeavoured to have him appointed to the see of *Ely, but the monks of Ely objected and obtained a Papal decision in their favour. Besides letters, he probably also wrote commentaries on Cant. and Heb., and he is perhaps the author of a treatise on the tides usually ascribed to Grosseteste. His learning, highly esteemed, e.g. by Roger *Bacon, gained him the title of 'Doctor Illustris'.

Letters ed. J. S. Brewer, Monumenta Franciscana, 1 (RS, 1858), pp. 77–489, with introd., pp. lxxvi–ci. The other principal source is the mid-13th-cent. Tractatus de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam of Thomas of Eccleston, OFM, esp. Collationes 3, 11, and 13 f., ed. A. C. Little (2nd edn., Manchester, 1951), pp. 17 f., 50, 71, and 84. Cuthbert [Hess], OSFC, The Romanticism of St Francis and other Studies (new edn., 1924), pp. 190–235. D. Douie, 'Adam "de Marisco", an English Franciscan', Durham University Journal, 32 (1940), pp. 81–97. G. Cantini, OFM, 'Adam de Marisco O.F.M. auctor spiritualis', Antonianum, 23 (1948), pp. 441–74. A. G. Little, 'The Franciscan School at Oxford in the Thirteenth Century', AFH 19 (1926), pp. 803–74, esp. pp. 831–7. R. C. Dales, 'Adam Marsh, Robert Grosseteste, and the Treatise on the Tides', Speculum, 52 (1977), pp. 900 f. C. H. Lawrence, 'The Letters of Adam Marsh and the Franciscan School at Oxford', JEH 42 (1991), pp. 218–38. M. *Creighton in DNB 1 (1855), p. 79, s.v.; BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 1225–6, s.v. 'Marsh, Adam'.

Adam of St-Victor (12th cent.), *sequence-writer and composer. The *Augustinian canon of the abbey of St-Victor in Paris (see VICTORINES) to whom some of the finest sequences have been attributed, was long thought to have been a Breton ('Brito'), who entered the abbey *c.*1130 and died between 1177 and 1192. He has recently been identified with the Adam who was *Precentor of the cathedral of *Notre-Dame by 1107 (hence called Adam Precentor), donated his prebend to the abbey of St-Victor in 1133, entered the abbey some time later, and died in 1146. While it is not possible to say with certainty which of the some 60 sequences surviving from 12th-cent. Paris are Adam's work, he prob. wrote a core of early texts including 'Zima vetus', 'Ecce dies celebris', and 'Mundi renovatio' (all for *Easter), 'Lux iocunda, lux insignis' (for *Whitsunday), 'Heri mundus' (for the feast of St *Stephen), and 'Prunus datum' (for that of St *Laurence), and some of their melodies as well; the famous 'Laudes crucis' (for the *Invention and *Exaltation of the Cross) may also be by him. It is likely that his influence permeated the whole corpus of Victorine sequences, which for the first time made extensive use of OT typology and developed a melodic tradition closely integrated with the text.

Collections of the sequences attributed to Adam ed. by L. Gautier (2 vols., Paris, 1858–9; 3rd edn., Paris, 1894; Eng. tr. of 1st edn. by D. S. Wrangham, 3 vols., 1881); by E. Misset and P. Aubry (Paris, 1900, incl. music); and by C. Blume, SJ, and H. M. Bannister (eds.), Liturgische Prosen des Übergangsstiles und der zweiten Epoche insbesondere die dem Adam von Sanct Victor zugeschriebenen (AHMA 54; 1915). E. Hegener, Studien zur "zweiten Sprache" in der religiösen Lyrik des zwölften Jahrhunderts: Adam von St Victor, Walter von Châtillon (Beihefte zum Mittellateinischen Jahrbuch, 6; Ratingen [1971]), esp. pp. 4–132. M. E. Fassler, 'Who was Adam of St. Victor? The Evidence of the Sequence Manuscripts', Journal of the American Musicological Society, 37 (1984), pp. 233–69. Id., Gothic Song: Victorine Sequences and Augustinian Reform in Twelfth-Century Paris (Cambridge, 1993). J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 2 (1965), pp. 106–20, with further refs. Raby, pp. 348–55, with further bibl. p. 482.

Adam, Karl (1876–1966), Catholic theologian. A native of Bavaria, Karl Adam was ordained to the priesthood in 1900. He spent several years in pastoral work and taught at the University of Munich before he was appointed professor first at Strasbourg in 1918 and then in 1919 at Tübingen, where he remained until 1949. At many points he anticipated the aims of the *Ecumenical Movement, combining a liberal and modern outlook with full Catholic orthodoxy, and he exercised great influence, esp. over a lay public, by his writings, of which the best known was Das Wesen des Katholizismus (1924; Eng. tr., 1929). His other books include Christus unser Bruder (1926; Eng. tr., 1931), Jesus Christus (1933; Eng. tr., 1934), Una Sancta in katholischer Sicht (1948; Eng. tr., 1954), and Der Christus des Glaubens (1954; Eng. tr., 1957).

Abhandlungen über Theologie und Kirche: Festgabe für Karl Adam, ed. M. Reding (Düsseldorf, 1952), with list of his works, pp. 319 f.; Vitae et Veritati: Festgabe für Karl Adam (ibid., 1956). H. Kreidler, Eine Theologie des Lebens: Grundzüge im theologischen Denken Karl Adams (Tübinger theologische Studien, 29; Mainz [1988]); R. A. Krieg, Karl Adam: Catholicism in German Culture (Notre Dame, Ind., 1992).

Adamantius. The name of the orthodox protagonist in the dialogue 'De recta in Deum fide', which dates from the early 4th cent. and is prob. a product of Asia Minor or Syria. It is commonly supposed that he was the author of the dialogue, but nothing further is known of him. If the note at the end of the Philocalia*, ch. 24, is genuine (the authenticity of the chapter has been seriously questioned), St *Basil the Great and St *Gregory Nazianzus wrongly identified him with *Origen. The dialogue, in five books, is a disputation first with two disciples of *Marcion, and then with followers of *Bardesanes and *Valentinus. At the end, Eutropius, a pagan arbitrator, gives the palm of victory to Adamantius. The work was translated into Latin by *Rufinus.

Ed. princeps by J. R. Wetstein (Basle, 1674), repr. in edns. of Origen (e.g. PG 11. 1711–1884). Rufinus' Lat. text, which survives only in a 12th-cent. MS at Schlettstadt, formerly at Hirschau, was first pub. by C. P. *Caspari, Kirchenhistorische Anecdota (Christiania, 1883), 1, pp. 1–129. Crit. edn., with Rufinus' Lat., by W. H. van de Sande Bakhuyzen (GCS, 1901). F. J. A. *Hort in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 39–41, s.v.

Adamites. A small Christian sect, first mentioned by St *Epiphanius (Haer. 52) and St *Augustine (Haer. 31), who aimed at returning to man's primitive innocence in Paradise by the practice of nudity. They are perhaps to be identified with a group of *Carpocratians, referred to by *Clement of Alexandria (Strom. 3. 2), who advocated community of wives and sexual promiscuity. In more recent times, small groups among the *Waldenses, Dutch *Anabaptists, and others, also calling themselves 'Adamites', have advocated similar doctrines and practices.

G. Bareille in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 391 f., s.v.

Adamnan, St. The older form of the name of Adomnán, St (q.v.).

Adamson, Patrick (1537–92), also 'Coustance' or 'Constance', Abp. of St Andrews. Educated at Perth Grammar School and St Andrews university, he was minister at Ceres from 1563 to 1566. He then went abroad for some years, living in France and for a time also at *Geneva, where he studied *Calvinist theology under T. *Beza. He was imprisoned in Paris for six months for describing the infant son of *Mary Queen of Scots as 'serenissimus princeps' of Scotland, England, France, and Ireland. After his return he published a catechism of his own compilation as well as a Latin version of the '*Scottish Confession' (1572). Appointed in 1576 Abp. of St Andrews in succession to John Douglas (1571–4), he now became involved in a long controversy with the *Presbyterian party. In 1583 some sermons preached before *James VI (I) led to his winning the royal favour and becoming Ambassador at *Elizabeth I's court later in the same year. During his stay in London he used his great powers of oratory to bring discredit on the Presbyterian party. Strongly supported by the King, he returned to Scotland in May 1584, but his disfavour with the *General Assembly continued to increase, and his Declaration of the King's Majesty's Intention and Meaning towards the late Acts of Parliament (1585) provoked much hostility. At the synod of Fife (April 1586), James Melville, the nephew of Andrew *Melville and professor of theology at St Andrews, made a fierce attack on his character and opinions and, though Adamson brought the matter before the King, the synod excommunicated him. Further charges were made on his character at the meeting of the General Assembly in 1587, and in the following year Adamson lost the King's favour. Adamson now sought the support of A. Melville and is credited with a Recantation of his earlier Declaration, though there are grounds for believing the recantation (pub. at Middelburg, 1598) to be spurious. His writings include Latin renderings of the Lamentations of Jeremiah and of the Book of Revelation (both 1590).

The most reliable authority is D. *Calderwood, History of the Kirk of Scotland (1678; crit. edn. from unpub. MSS by T. Thomson, Wodrow Society, esp. vols. 1–5, 1842–4). There is also a Life by T. Wilson appended to his edn. of Adamson's De Sacro Pastoris Munere (1619; sep. pagination). G. Donaldson, 'The Attitude of Whitgift and Bancroft to the Scottish Church', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 4th ser. 24 (1942), pp. 95–115, repr. in id., Scottish Church History (Edinburgh, 1985), pp. 164–77. D. G. Mullan, Episcopacy in Scotland: The History of an Idea, 1560–1638 (ibid. [1986]), pp. 54–73.

Addai. The traditional founder of the Church at *Edessa. In Syriac tradition he was one of the 72 (al. 70) disciples of Lk. 10: 1, and acc. to the 'Doctrine of Addai' (q.v.) he was sent by St *Thomas the Apostle to heal King *Abgar. In the account of the conversion of Edessa given by *Eusebius (HE 1. 12. 3) he is identified with *Thaddaeus.

See bibl. to foll. entry.

Addai, Doctrine of. A Syriac writing which describes how King *Abgar (q.v.) was brought into contact with Christ and *Addai was sent to *Edessa to convert him. It is preserved in toto only in a single St Petersburg MS and in an early Armenian version. In its present form it dates from the early 5th cent. and incorporates the more recent legend of the *Invention of the Cross by Protonice, described as the wife of the future Emp. Claudius (d. AD 54), and the older legend of Abgar's correspondence with Christ, already known to *Eusebius (HE 1. 13. 6–8). Though older scholars accepted the historicity of the narrative, more recent opinion supposes that it is either an entire fabrication, perhaps modelled on the conversion of King Izates of Adiabene (*c.*36–60) to Judaism (*Josephus, Ant. 20. 2. 3–4), or a reflection on the conversion of Abgar VIII (177–212).

The complete Syriac text, with Eng. tr., was pub. by G. Phillips, The Doctrine of Addai, the Apostle (1876); it was repr., with a new Eng. tr. by G. Howard (Chico, Calif., 1981). Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 591–6, and 4, p. 326. See also bibl. to ABGAR, LEGEND OF, and EDESSA.

Addai and Mari, Liturgy of. The Syriac Liturgy which is still the normal rite of the *Church of the East and the *Chaldeans. The rite prob. originated in *Edessa, perhaps going back to the 3rd cent. It is thus of great importance for the early history of the Liturgy. The earliest MS of the *Anaphora belongs to the 10th or 11th cent.; from it are absent certain additions found in all later witnesses. The most notable feature of the Anaphora, in its original form, is the address to Christ (not to God the Father). Furthermore, the Institution Narrative is absent from most MSS; it is disputed whether this is an original feature of the Anaphora or whether, e.g., it was cut out by Isho'yahb III in the 7th cent. The attribution to *Addai and Mari, the traditional founders of Christianity in Mesopotamia, appears not to be attested before the 11th cent.; earlier sources speak of the 'Anaphora of the Apostles'. It is closely related to the *Maronite Anaphora known (from the opening word) as the 'Sharrar', attributed variously to St *Peter or to the Twelve Apostles.

The editio princeps of the Syriac text is in Liturgia Sanctorum Apostolorum Adaei et Maris (Urmi, 1890–2). Modern edn., with Eng. tr. and comm., by A. Gelston (Oxford, 1992). Earlier Eng. tr. in Brightman, LEW, pp. 245–305. E. C. Ratcliff, 'The Original Form of the Anaphora of Addai and Mari: A Suggestion', JTS 30 (1929), pp. 23–32; G. *Dix, OSB, The Shape of the Liturgy (1945), esp. pp. 177–87; B. Botte, OSB, 'L'Anaphore Chaldéenne des Apôtres', OCP 15 (1949), pp. 259–76; W. F. Macomber, SJ, 'The Oldest Known Text of the Anaphora of the Apostles Addai and Mari', ibid. 32 (1966), pp. 335–71; id., 'The Maronite and Chaldean Versions of the Anaphora of the Apostles', ibid. 37 (1971), pp. 55–84; id., 'The Ancient Form of the Anaphora of the Apostles', in N. G. Garsoïan, T. F. Mathews, and R. W. Thomson (eds.), East of Byzantium: Syria and Armenia in the Formative Period (Washington, DC, 1982), pp. 73–88.

Adelard of Bath (early 12th cent.), English Scholastic philosopher. Few facts about his life survive, but he is known to have studied at Tours, prob. taught at Laon, and visited Salerno and Sicily and perhaps Asia Minor. He translated the 'Elements' of Euclid, and in his 'Quaestiones Naturales' defended Democritus' theory of atoms as well as the Aristotelian proof of God's existence from motion. In his principal work, 'De Eodem et Diverso' (between 1105 and 1116), written in epistolary form, Adelard developed a theory of the Liberal Arts and also attempted to reconcile the *Platonic and *Aristotelian doctrines of *universals, holding that in reality the universal and the particular were identical, and distinct only in our mode of apprehending them.

Adelard's 'De Eodem et Diverso', ed. H. Willner (BGPM 4, Heft 1; 1903); 'Quaestiones Naturales', ed. M. Müller (ibid. 31, Heft 2; 1934); tr. of Euclid's 'Elements', 1–8 and 10. 36–15. 2, ed. H. L. L. Busard (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 64; Toronto [1983]). F. J. P. Bliemetzrieder, Adelhard von Bath (Munich, 1935). C. H. Haskins, Studies in the History of Mediaeval Science (Cambridge, Mass., 1924), pp. 20–42. C. Burnett (ed.), Adelard of Bath: An English Scientist and Arabist of the Early Twelfth Century (Warburg Institute Surveys and Texts, 14: 1987). M. Clagett in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, ed. C. G. Gillispie and others, 1 (New York, 1970), pp. 61–4, with details of works, pub. and unpub.

Adeste Fideles. Anonymous Christmas hymn, probably written in the 17th or 18th cent., of French or German authorship. J. F. Wade (*c.*1711–86) has been suggested as the composer of its most popular tune, but was prob. only the copyist. It has been frequently translated, the best-known version being based on that by F. *Oakeley, 'O come, all ye faithful, joyful and triumphant'.

J. Stéphan, OSB, The 'Adeste Fideles': A Study on its Origin and Development (Buckfast Abbey, 1947; enlarged Fr. edn., 1949).

Adhemar de Monteil (d. 1098), Bp. of Le Puy. Of noble family and at one time a knight, he became Bp. of Le Puy some time between 1080 and 1087. In 1095 *Urban II summoned the Council of *Clermont from Le Puy and made Adhemar his representative on the First *Crusade (hujus itineris ac laboris ducem, vice nostra), during which Adhemar was closely associated with Raymond of Toulouse. He died on 1 August 1098, soon after the capture of Antioch; his death is usually regarded as a severe blow to any hopes of maintaining the unity of the Crusading leaders, and certainly decreased any likelihood of Papal control of the Franks in the E.

His career is discussed in J. H. and L. L. Hill, 'Contemporary accounts and later reputation of Adhemar, bishop of Puy', Medievalia et Humanistica, 9 (1955), pp. 30–38; J. A. Brundage, 'Adhemar of Puy: The Bishop and his Critics', Speculum, 34 (1959), pp. 201–12; and H. E. Mayer, 'Zur Beurteilung Adhémars von Le Puy', Deutsches Archiv, 16 (1960), pp. 547–52. See also works cited under CRUSADES.

Adherents. In the Church of *Scotland, baptized persons who, although non-communicants, are intimately connected with a congregation. If parishioners and seat-holders over 21 years of age, they have the right to be placed on the electoral register. This right is controlled by the *kirk session, to whose jurisdiction they are subject.

Adiaphorists (from Gk. ἀδιάφορα, 'things indifferent'). A party in German Protestantism which held that certain rites and actions were matters of indifference. The first controversy on the subject broke out in connection with the Leipzig Interim (1548). In this compromise between the theologians of *Wittenberg, esp. P. *Melanchthon, and the ecclesiastical and civil authorities of Saxony, the Wittenberg group declared certain Catholic practices such as *Confirmation and Extreme *Unction, the *Mass without *transubstantiation, and the veneration of *saints 'adiaphora', i.e. matters on which concessions might be made in the interest of peace without prejudice to Protestant doctrine. This policy was fiercely opposed by M. *Flacius Illyricus, who, in his De Veris et Falsis Adiaphoris (1549), stressed the dangers to integral *Lutheranism of these concessions. The controversy continued till after the Peace of *Augsburg (1555) and was brought to an end only by Article 10 of the Formula of *Concord (1577), which ruled that in times of persecution concessions were not to be made, but otherwise ceremonies not commanded or forbidden by Scripture might be altered acc. to the decisions of individual Churches. Similar problems were discussed by theologians in England in the 16th cent.

Another controversy on 'adiaphora' broke out in the latter half of the 17th cent. between the Pietistical followers of P. J. *Spener and A. H. *Francke, who declared all worldly pleasures such as theatres and dances to be sinful in themselves, and the orthodox Lutherans who held them to be indifferent and therefore permitted. A harmonizing of the two points of view was later given by F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, who, though denying the conception of matters of indifference, considered ordinary pleasures part of the whole of human life and therefore not only permissible but even demanded by duty.

F. H. R. Frank, Die Theologie der Concordienformel historisch-diplomatisch entwickelt und beleuchtet, 4 (1865), pp. 1–120. A. *Ritschl, Geschichte des Pietismus, 2 (1884), pp. 174–83. J. Gottschick in PRE (3rd edn.), 1 (1896), pp. 168–79, s.v. 'Adiaphora'; E. T. Horn in HERE 1 (1908), pp. 91–3, s.v. 'Adiaphorism'. See also bibl. to GNESIO-LUTHERANS.

ad Limina Apostolorum, i.e., lit., 'to the thresholds of the Apostles'. Pilgrimages ad Limina Apostolorum, sc. to the tombs of St *Peter and St *Paul in *Rome, usually undertaken in fulfilment of a vow, were very popular in the Middle Ages. In modern times the term is ordinarily used in a technical sense, denoting the visits which RC bishops are required to pay to Rome to venerate the tombs of the Apostles and to report on the state of their dioceses to the Pope. This custom originated in the decree of a Roman synod (743) which enjoined such visits on all bishops who had been ordained at Rome (can. 4). *Gregory VII extended this obligation to all metropolitans of the W., and from the 13th cent. it was imposed on all bishops consecrated by the Pope himself or by his special representative. Sixtus V, by the bull 'Romanus Pontifex' of 20 Dec. 1584, required the visit from all bishops every three to ten years, acc. to the distance of their dioceses. Since then the regulations have changed from time to time. The 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici (can. 400) requires that a diocesan bishop should normally go to Rome in person every five years to venerate the tombs of the Apostles Peter and Paul and to present himself to the Pope. If legitimate hindrances prevent the visit, a representative is to be appointed.

F. M. Cappello, De Visitatione Liminum (2 vols., Rome, 1912–13). J. J. Carroll, The Bishop's Quinquennial Report: A Historical Synopsis and a Commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, 259; 1956), with bibl. J. Cottier, 'Éléments nouveaux des normes de la visite "Ad limina" et leur valeur juridique respective, des décrétales au Concile de Trente', Ephemerides Iuris Canonici, 8 (1952), pp. 174–206.

Admission to Candidacy for Ordination of Deacons and Priests. In the RC Church, a rite introduced in 1972 when the two remaining *minor orders of *acolyte and *lector ceased to be a stage on the way to the priesthood. It takes place either during Mass or in the course of some other service involving 'the proclamation of God's word'. After the homily, the candidates, who have previously made their petition in writing to the diocesan bishop, are called and presented to the bishop. He examines them and prays for them. After further prayers of intercession the service concludes with two collects and the episcopal blessing.

Admission to Holy Communion Measure 1972. The BCP provided that no-one should be admitted to Holy Communion until confirmed or 'ready and desirous to be confirmed'. The 1972 Measure allows the General Synod of the C of E to provide for the admission of other baptized persons. These now include communicant members of other Churches which subscribe to the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, and who are in good standing in their own Church (Canon B 15A).

Admonition to Parliament, An (1572). A manifesto against all ecclesiastical dignitaries, demanding a non-episcopal constitution for the English Church. It attacked inter alia the use of wafer-bread at the Communion, then still current, reception of Communion kneeling, and the admission of Papists to Communion; it demanded a radical restructuring of the ecclesiastical courts to produce more effective discipline. Cast in the form of an open letter to Parliament, it was accompanied by a 'View of Popish Abuses yet remaining in the English Church'. Though issued anonymously from unknown presses, authorship of the two parts was correctly attributed to two London *Puritan clergymen, Thomas Wilcox and John *Field, who were both committed to Newgate on 7 July 1572. When the bishops commissioned replies to the Admonition, it was defended in a Second Admonition (?by Christopher Goodman, Nov. 1572), and more cogently in a Reply to an Answer made of Mr. Dr. Whitgift by T. *Cartwright (April 1573). Both the Admonition and the defences of it were suppressed by a royal proclamation on 11 June 1573, and Cartwright, on the issue of a warrant for his arrest, was compelled to leave the country. J. *Whitgift again answered Cartwright, who retaliated from exile abroad with two parts of a Second Reply in 1575 and 1577.

Text in Puritan Manifestoes, ed. W. H. *Frere and C. E. Douglas (CHS 72; 1907), pp. 5–19; Second Admonition, ibid., pp. 79–133. D. J. McGinn, Admonition Controversy (Rutgers University Studies in English, 5; New Brunswick, NJ 1949). P. Lake, Anglicans and Puritans? Presbyterianism and English Conformist Thought from Whitgift to Hooker (1988), esp. pp. 13–70.

Ado, Martyrology of. The *martyrology compiled between 853 and 860 by St Ado (*c.*800–75), then a *Benedictine monk, later Abp. of Vienne. Acc. to Ado his basis was an ancient Roman martyrology ('Martyrologium Romanum Parvum') which he had discovered at *Ravenna, but this work, which is full of blunders, was certainly spurious and may even have been fabricated by Ado himself. The highly convenient plan and arrangement of the compilation were the pattern for later martyrologies. It directly influenced the Martyrology of *Usuard and mediately the '*Roman Martyrology', and was thus the source of most of the merits and defects of its successors.

The Martyrology of Ado was edited by H. Rosweyde, SJ, at Antwerp in 1613 (repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 123. 139–436), and by D. Giorgi (Rome, 1745). Modern edn., with comm., by J. Dubois, OSB, and G. Renaud (Paris, 1984). H. *Quentin, Les Martyrologes historiques (1908), pp. 465–681.

Adomnán, St (*c.*624–704), also 'Adamnan', Abbot of *Iona. Of the same Irish royal lineage as St *Columba, he became a novice at the monastery of Iona, where he was elected abbot in 679. Visits to *Wearmouth in 686 and 688 led him to accept the Roman dating of *Easter, but according to *Bede he was unable to persuade the monks of Iona and its dependencies to adopt it. In 692 he went to Ireland, where he was more successful in furthering the Roman observance. He also proposed a law to protect non-combatants in war, first accepted at the Synod of Birr (697) and thereafter periodically enforced as the 'Law of Adomnán'. His 'Life of St Columba' (written 688–92, or perhaps later, *c.*700) is of great historical value for its information on monastic life. He also wrote 'De Locis Sanctis', an account of a visit to the Holy Land by Arculf, a bishop from Gaul; and there are some Latin canons in his name. He was venerated in Scotland and Ireland, where the modern form of his name is St Eunan. Feast day, 23 Sept.

Modern edns. of his 'Life of St Columba' by W. Reeves (Irish Archaeological and Celtic Society; Dublin, 1857) and, with Eng. tr., by A. O. and M. O. Anderson (London, 1961), and of his 'De Locis Sanctis' by L. Bieler (CCSL 175, 1965, pp. 175–234) and, with Eng. tr., by D. Meehan (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, 3; Dublin, 1958). The so-called 'Canones Adomnani' are ed., with Eng. tr., by L. Bieler, The Irish Penitentials (ibid. 5; 1963), pp. 176–81. The 'Law of Adomnán' is ed., with Eng. tr., by K. Meyer (Anecdota Oxoniensia, 4th ser., pt. 12; Oxford, 1905). The chief authority for his life is Bede, HE 5. 15–7 and 21; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 187–9. Irish Life (prob. 10th cent.) ed., with Eng. tr., by M. Herbert and P. Ó Riain (Irish Texts Society, 54; London, 1988); on this Life also M. Herbert, Iona, Kells, and Derry (Oxford, 1988), pp. 151–79. G. Brüning, 'Adamnans Vita Columbae und ihre Ableitungen', Zeitschrift für celtische Philologie, 11 (1917), pp. 213–304; D. A. Bullough, 'Columba, Adomnan and the Achievement of Iona', Scottish Historical Review, 43 (1964), pp. 111–30, and 44 (1965), pp. 17–33; J. M. Picard, 'The Purpose of Adomnán's Vita Columbae', Peritia, 1 (1982), pp. 160–77; M. Ní Dhonnchadha, 'The Guarantor List of Cáin Adomnáin, 697', ibid., pp. 178–215; A. P. Smyth, Warlords and Holy Men: Scotland AD 80–1000 (The New History of Scotland, 1; 1984), pp. 116–40.

Adonai (Heb. אָדוֹן, plur. of אֲדֹנָי, 'master', 'Lord'; the use of the plural prob. implies a 'sense of majesty'). Divine name, frequently used in the OT. The Jews also read it for the unutterable name of Yahweh, which, in the text of the Hebrew Bible, is usually pointed with the vowel signs proper to Adonai. The *Gnostics employed it as a name for one of their aeons.

In the Christian Liturgy the term is applied esp. to the Second Person of the Trinity in the great antiphon to the Magnificat for 18 Dec., 'O Adonai' (see O-ANTIPHONS).

G. H. *Dalman, Studien zur biblischen Theologie: Der Gottesname Adonaj und seine Geschichte (1889).

Adoptianism. (1) The heresy, originating in Spain in the 8th cent., acc. to which Christ, in His humanity, is not the true, but only the adoptive, Son of God. Its chief representatives were *Elipandus, Abp. of *Toledo, and *Felix, Bp. of Urgel. The heresy probably arose out of Elipandus' fight against the error of *Migetius, who seems to have held the bizarre doctrine that the Trinity consisted of three historical figures, David, Jesus, and St Paul, and who made no distinction between Christ's position as son of David and as Son of God. Elipandus drew a sharp distinction between the humanity of Christ ('of the seed of David') and His Divine Sonship, and maintained that the human Jesus was only the adoptive Son of God. Elipandus was supported by Felix of Urgel, who recanted, however, at a synod held at Ratisbon in 792. Having repeated his abjuration before the Pope, Felix returned to his diocese, but again fell into error and was obliged to flee. The Spanish bishops sided with Elipandus and tried to prove their views from Scripture and the Fathers. After they had communicated to the Pope a letter they had sent to *Charlemagne, the latter called the Council of *Frankfurt (794), where the bishops attacked the Spanish arguments in two documents. These, together with a third drawn up by *Hadrian I, were sent to Spain. A reply from Felix in favour of the heresy provoked *Alcuin's famous seven books 'Contra Felicem', and in 798 *Leo III called a synod at *Rome which anathematized Felix. In the same year, after a long dispute, he once more recanted. Elipandus, however, remained firm, and Alcuin wrote another treatise against him. The archbishop died soon afterwards and the heresy disappeared.

It was revived, however, in the 12th cent. in a modified form by *Abelard, *Gilbert de la Porrée, and others, who, through identifying the rational nature with the Person, arrived also at Adoptianist views. In later times several attempts were made, e.g. by *Duns Scotus, *Durandus, F. *Suárez, and others, to interpret in an orthodox sense the statement that Jesus as Man is the adopted Son of God, but these theories were all rejected as subversive of a sound Christology.

(2) Through the influence of A. *Harnack's Dogmengeschichte the term (usually spelt 'Adoptionism') has also been frequently applied to the heretical stream in early Greek theology which regarded Christ as a man gifted with Divine powers. This view, first represented by the *Ebionites, was later developed by the *Monarchians, e.g. *Theodotus and *Paul of Samosata. *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Nestorius, and the *Antiochene School in general also tend to what may be called, in a rather loose sense, an Adoptionist Christology.

On (1), see C. W. F. Walch, Historia Adoptianorum (Göttingen, 1755); Hefele and Leclercq, 3. 2 (1910), pp. 1001–60. É. Amann, 'L'Adoptianisme espagnol du VIII^e siècle', Rev. S.R. 16 (1936), pp. 281–317; R. de Abadal y de Vinyals, La Batalla del Adopcionismo en la Desintegración de la Iglesia Visigoda (Barcelona, 1949); W. Heil, 'Der Adoptianismus, Alkuin und Spanien', in Karl der Grosse: Lebenswerk und Nachleben, 2, ed. B. Bischoff (1965), pp. 95–155; id., Alkuinstudien, 1: Zur Chronologie und Bedeutung des Adoptianismusstreites (Düsseldorf, 1970); K. Schäferdiek, 'Der adoptianische Streit im Rahmen der spanischen Kirchengeschichte', ZKG 80 (1969), pp. 291–311; 81 (1970), pp. 1–16. Useful summary [in Eng.] by G. B. Blumenshine in his edn. of Alcuin's Liber Contra Haeresim Felicis (ST 285; 1980), pp. 9–24 ('The Adoptionist Heresy of the Eighth Century'). J. F. Rivera Recio, El adopcionismo en España (s. VIII) (Toledo, 1980). J. C. Cavadini, The Last Christology of the West: Adoptionism in Spain and Gaul, 785–820 (Philadelphia [1993]).

adoration. In strict terminology the expression, from the Lat. adoratio, is equivalent to the Greek theological term λατρεία, designating an act of worship due to God alone. If used more loosely, however, it also covers the Greek προσκύνησις which, in early times, was used for adoration of God as well as for veneration such as is paid to persons or objects of sacred character. In this second sense it was frequently used among E. peoples and also in the Bible, e.g. in the narrative of Joseph and his brethren (Gen. 43: 26), whereas in the first sense it is used, e.g., in the Second Commandment. The Lord inculcates that adoration (προσκύνησις) is due to God alone (Mt. 4: 10). He Himself is frequently adored (e.g. Jn. 9: 38), whereas, on the other hand, St *Peter refuses the adoration of Cornelius (Acts 10: 25 f.). The Divine prerogative of adoration was emphasized esp. by the early Christian martyrs, who refused to 'adore' the statues of the Emperor. It was claimed for the Son and the Holy Spirit, e.g. by *Origen and other early Fathers, a fact which suggests the equality of the Three Divine Persons, whereas it is denied to all creatures, not excepting the BVM. Until the 5th cent. Christians seem not to have distinguished between λατρεία and προσκύνησις. But the increasing veneration of images and the ensuing *Iconoclastic Controversy necessitated a stricter terminology. The Second Council of *Nicaea (787) reserved the term λατρεία to the worship of God alone (including God incarnate), whereas προσκύνησις might be applied also to the cult of creatures. After some controversy this distinction was accepted also in the W., and from the age of Scholasticism W. theologians term adoration of God '*latria', but veneration of creatures '*dulia' (Gk. δουλεία).

God is to be worshipped 'in spirit and in truth' (Jn. 4: 24) but this injunction is not normally understood to exclude bodily gestures of adoration, such as prostrations or the utterance of spoken prayers. In RC theology the Eucharistic sacrifice is often regarded as the principal act of adoration. The adoration paid to the Bl Sacrament depends on the doctrine of the Real Presence, among its most striking manifestations being the practices of the *Forty Hours and of Perpetual Adoration, cultivated by many religious congregations. Among Anglicans a service of Eucharistic devotion, sometimes resembling the RC *Benediction service, is also frequently termed 'Adoration'.

A. Molien in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 210–22, s.v., with bibl.

Adoro Te devote, or, more correctly, 'Adoro devote'. Eucharistic hymn, attributed by the MSS to St *Thomas Aquinas, though his authorship has been contested. It is a simple, but very personal and deeply felt, prayer to the Lord hidden under the sacramental species. Unlike St Thomas's other Eucharistic hymns, it was not written for the Office of *Corpus Christi. Until recently it was printed in the Roman *Missal and *Breviary among the 'Orationes pro Opportunitate Sacredotis Dicendae'. There are many English translations, the most famous of which, found in several slightly varying forms, is that by J. R. Woodford (1850), Bp. of *Ely, 'Thee we adore, O hidden Saviour'. That of G. M. *Hopkins, 'Godhead here in hiding, whom I do adore', is also widely used.

Crit. edn. of traditional text by C. M. Dreves (ed.), Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, 2 (AHMA 50; 1907), pp. 589–91. A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'La Tradition littéraire et textuelle de l'"Adoro te devote"', RTAM 1 (1929), pp. 21–40 and 149–76, with rev. text, pp. 159–61; repr. in Wilmart's Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots (1932), pp. 361–414 (ch. 12), with rev. text, pp. 393–5. This is now printed in the section of the *Rituale Romanum, De Sacra Communione et de Cultu Mysterii Eucharistici extra Missam (1973), pp. 61 f. F. J. E. Raby, 'The Date and Authorship of the Poem Adoro Te Devote', Speculum, 20 (1945), pp. 236–8; P.-M. Gy [OP], 'L'Office du Corpus Christi et la théologie des accidents eucharistiques', RSPT 66 (1982), pp. 81–6.

Adrian I, IV, VI. See HADRIAN I, IV, VI.

Advent (Lat. Adventus, 'coming', i.e. of Christ). The ecclesiastical season immediately before *Christmas. In W. Christendom Advent Sunday, i.e. the first day of Advent, is the Sunday nearest to St Andrew's Day (30 Nov.). Four Sundays in Advent thus always precede Christmas Day. In the E. Advent is a much longer season, beginning in the middle of Nov. Advent Sunday is traditionally the day on which the ecclesiastical year begins. The first clear references to the season in the W. come from the latter half of the 6th cent. In the *Gelasian Sacramentary Advent Collects, Epistles, and Gospels are provided for the five Sundays preceding Christmas and for the corresponding Wednesdays and Fridays. The Wednesday and Friday *propers of the Mass remained in England until the BCP of 1549.

Advent was formerly kept as *Lent, but with less strictness. In the W. fasting is no longer formally ordered, though festivites are discouraged and the solemn character of the season is marked by the liturgical use of purple (except on the Third Sunday, '*Gaudete', q.v., when rose-coloured vestments may be used) and, in the Roman Missal, by the omission of *Gloria in Excelsis at the Sunday Masses. The season is observed as a time of preparation not only for Christmas but also for the Second Coming of Christ as Judge at the Last Day. See also O-ANTIPHONS.

M. Jugie, AA, ' La Première Fête mariale en orient et occident, l'Avent primitif', ÉO 26 (1923), pp. 130–52; B. Botte, OSB, Les Origines de la Noël et de l'Épiphanie (Louvain, 1932), pp. 263–84; J. A. Jungmann, SJ, Gewordene Liturgie (1941), pp. 232–94 ('Advent und Voradvent'); A. Chavasse, 'L'Avent romain, du VI^e au VIII^e Siècle', EL 67 (1953), pp. 297–308; W. Croce, SJ, 'Die Adventsliturgie im Licht ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung', ZKT 76 (1954), pp. 257–96, 440–72. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 3223–30, s.v. 'Avent'; A. *Baumstark in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 112–25, s.v.; J. H. Crehan, SJ, in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 1 (1962), pp. 41–3, s.v., with bibl.

Adventists. Various Christian groups which hold in common that the Second Coming of Christ is to be expected immediately. As a denomination the Adventists date from 1831, when William Miller (1782–1849) first began to proclaim at Dresden, NY, the imminence of the Second Coming. On the basis of study of dates in the OT he came to fix the Second Coming in 1843–4. He made converts from many Christian bodies; pre-millennium conferences were held; and a paper called The Midnight Cry started. After the year had passed uneventfully, various later dates were suggested. Miller himself always maintained that the Coming was imminent, though in his later years he became less ready to pronounce dates. Differences of opinion as to the date of the Second Advent and also on the question of the immortality of the soul produced schisms. The 'Evangelical Adventists', who were the original body and retained a Catholic belief in the after-life, have died out. The chief bodies now are the 'Second Advent Christians' and the 'Seventh-day Adventists' (q.v.).

D. T. Taylor, The Reign of Christ on Earth (Boston, 1855; ed. H. L. Hastings, London, 1882). H. C. Sheldon, Studies in Recent Adventism (New York, 1915). E. S. Gaustad (ed.), The Rise of Adventism: Religion and Society in mid-nineteenth-century America (New York and London, 1974), with bibl. essay, pp. 207–317. See also bibl. to SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

Advertisements, book of. The book entitled Advertisements, partly for due Order in the public Administration of Common Prayers and using the Holy Sacraments, and partly for the Apparel of all Persons Ecclesiastical by virtue of the Queen's Majesty's Letters commanding the same, issued in Mar. 1556 by Abp. M. *Parker. Of 39 items in all, it ordered inter alia the use of the surplice (in place of the traditional Mass vestments) in the Eucharist and kneeling at the reception of Communion. It has long been disputed whether this book of Advertisements is to be understood as the 'other order' in the paragraph in the Act of *Uniformity of 1559 providing that the Ornaments (see *ORNAMENTS RUBRIC) in use in the second year of *Edward VI should be retained 'until other order shall therein be taken by the authority of the Queen's Majesty'. Though the 19th-cent. courts upheld that the Advertisements were covered by the Act of 1559, there are good grounds for questioning this opinion, one of the most cogent being the survival of the rubric in the BCP of 1662. See also VESTIARIAN CONTROVERSY.

Text in Gee and Hardy, no. 81 (pp. 467–75).

advocatus diaboli (Lat., 'devil's advocate'). A popular term for the '*promotor fidei' (q.v.).

advowson. The right of appointing a clergyman to a parish or other ecclesiastical benefice. Advowsons are of two kinds: (1) 'Collative', when they are held by the *Ordinary under whose jurisdiction the benefice is, normally the bishop of the diocese; and (2) 'Presentative', when they are held by some other person ('patron'), who presents the nominee for institution. In the latter case the patron, who may be clerical or lay, an individual or a corporation, does not possess the right of putting his candidate in spiritual or even legal possession of the office. He presents him to the bishop or other ecclesiastical superior for *institution and *induction (qq.v.), and the latter may for due cause reject the nominee. The right of advowson is historically the survival of an originally much more extensive control exercised by the feudal lord over churches on his estates.

In most RC countries advowson has died out, though it survives in a few places. In the C of E, where it still exists, its exercise is governed by English civil law, which since the time of the Constitutions of Clarendon (1164) has succeeded in maintaining control of this valuable right. Thus a bishop who without legal cause refuses to accept a patron's nominee can be compelled to do so by an action of Quare impedit in the civil courts. In the 14th cent. the Papal method of overriding these rights of private patronage by means of Provisions was fought by the State in the Statute of *Provisors (1351).

In English law an advowson is a property right which can pass by gift, by inheritance or (formerly) by sale. It was common for part only of the right to be sold, e.g. the right to the next presentation only, or the right to take turns at presenting. It was valuable mainly because it was a gift of income and position, but it also allowed the patron to influence the character of the ministry. A Measure of 1923 ended the sale but not the transfer of advowsons. It also ended the practice of patrons presenting themselves or their husbands to benefices.

Before 1986, an advowson could be exercised by any person, whether or not a Christian, except aliens, outlaws, lunatics (for whom the Lord Chancellor acted) and RCs (whose rights were exercised by the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, dividing the country between them for this purpose). The Patronage (Benefices) Measure 1986 introduced a new regime, replacing most of the old law. All rights of patronage must now be registered before they can be exercised, and no person can exercise a right of patronage unless he declares in writing that he is an 'actual communicant member' of the C of E or a Church in communion with it. Those who cannot make the declaration must appoint a qualified representative to act for them. Nominations must be made in consultation with the Bishop and representatives of the *Parochial Church Council, and must have their approval. If approval is refused, it can be reviewed by the Archbishop.

In the Church of *Scotland the rights of private patronage were resisted by a large party in the Kirk and were the chief cause of the secessions which eventually produced the *Free Church of Scotland (1843).

P. Thomas, Le Droit de Propriété des Laïques sur les Églises et le Patronage laïque au moyen âge (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, Sciences religieuses, 19; 1906). J. W. Gray, 'The Ius Praesentandi in England from the Constitutions of Clarendon to Bracton', EHR 67 (1952), pp. 481–509. P. Landau, Jus Patronatus: Studien zur Entwicklung des Patronats im Dekretalenrecht und der Kanonistik des 12. und 13. Jahrhunderts (Forschungen zur kirchlichen Rechtsgeschichte und zum Kirchenrecht, 12; 1975).

Aegidius, St. See GILES, ST.

Aegidius Romanus. See GILES OF ROME.

AEGM. See ANGLICAN EVANGELICAL GROUP MOVEMENT.

Aelfheah, St. See ALPHEGE, ST.

Aelfric (*c.*955–*c.*1020), 'the Grammarian', Abbot of Eynsham. His early training was at the *Benedictine abbey at *Winchester under *Ethelwold, who implanted in him the ideals of the monastic reform movement. In 987 he was transferred to the newly founded abbey at Cerne Abbas in Dorset and here issued two sets of homilies in English, dealing with the events of the liturgical year and with doctrinal and historical subjects. These homilies gained a revived notoriety at the time of the Reformation, as Aelfric not only used language which excluded the doctrine of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM but was also held to have maintained a view of the Eucharist incompatible with *transubstantiation. In his Eucharistic theology he was probably influenced by Ratramnus, though his unorthodoxy was apparently much exaggerated. The use of alliterative prose in some of these homilies was developed in a third series on the 'Lives of the Saints', where the arrangement is commonly printed as verse. In 1005 he was appointed the first Abbot of Eynsham in Oxfordshire. His writings of this period include an abridgement of the Regularis Concordia (addressed to his monks at Eynsham), a Latin Life of Ethelwold, and an English rendering of *Bede's De Temporibus. He was a dedicated pedagogue, and composed the earliest Latin grammar in any vernacular language; he also composed a Colloquy to serve as an introduction to Latin conversation for monastic *oblates. His greatest claim to fame was his provision of books with real literary merit for the rural clergy in their native language.

W. Skeat (ed.), Ælfric's Lives of the Saints (EETS, orig. ser. 76, 82, 94, and 114 bound in 2 vols.; 1881–1900); B. Thorpe (ed.), The Homilies of the Anglo-Saxon Church, containing the Homilies of Ælfric (2 vols., 1844–6, with Eng. tr.); M. Godden (ed.), Ælfric's Catholic Homilies: The Second Series Text (EETS, suppl. ser. 5; 1979); J. C. Pope (ed.), Homilies of Ælfric: A Supplementary Collection (ibid., orig. ser. 259–60; 1967–8). Facsimile of his 1st ser. of Catholic Homilies, in British Library MS Royal 7 C. XII, ed. by N. Eliason and P. [A. M.] Clemoes (Early English Manuscripts in Facsimile, 13; Copenhagen, 1966). Grammar and Glossary, ed. J. Zupitza (Sammlung englischer Denkmäler, 1; 1880; repr., with introd. by H. Gneuss, 1966); Exameron Anglice, ed. S. J. Crawford (Bibliothek der angelsächsischen Prosa, 10; 1921); Colloquy, ed. G. N. Garmonsway (London, 1939); De Temporibus, ed. H. Henel (EETS, orig. ser. 213; 1942); Life of Ethelwold, ed. M. Lapidge and M. Winterbottom as an appendix to their edn. of Wulfstan of Winchester's Life of Ethelwold (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1991), pp. 70–80, with useful discussion pp. cxlvi–clv; and abridgement of the Regularis Concordia, ed. H. Nocent, OSB, and others in Consuetudinum Saeculi X/XI/XII Monumenta non-Cluniacensia (Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, 7, pt. 3; Siegburg, 1984), pp. 149–85.

C. L. White, Ælfric: A new Study of his Life and Writings (Yale Studies in English, 2; 1898); M. M. Dubois, Ælfric, sermonnaire, docteur et grammairien (Paris, 1942), with full bibl. P. A. M. Clemoes, 'The Chronology of Ælfric's Works', in id. (ed.), The Anglo-Saxons: Studies in some Aspects of their History and Culture presented to Bruce Dickins (1959), pp. 212–47, with refs. J. Hurt, Ælfric (New York, [1972]). M. McC. Gatch, Preaching and Theology in Anglo-Saxon England: Ælfric and Wulfstan (Toronto, 1977). L. Grundy, Books and Grace: Ælfric's Theology (King's College London Medieval Studies, 6; 1991). L. M. Reinsma, Ælfric: An Annotated Bibliography (New York and London, 1987).

Aelia Capitolina. The new city which Hadrian built in *c.*130 on the site of *Jerusalem (destroyed AD 70). It was so named after the Emperor himself (Publius Aelius Hadrianus) and Jupiter Capitolinus. Statues to both Hadrian and Jupiter were erected in the area of the Temple. Its exact limits are unknown, but it probably extended as far as the present N. wall of Jerusalem and included the northern part of the western hill.

[L.] H. Vincent, OP and F. M. Abel, OP, Jérusalem, 2 (1914–1926), pp. 1–39, with map as pl. 1.

Aelred, St. See AILRED, ST.

Aeneas of Gaza (d. 518), Christian philosopher. He studied under Hierocles, the *Neoplatonist, at *Alexandria, and became a strong supporter of *Platonist and Neoplatonist doctrines. In his dialogue 'Theophrastus' he defended the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the body, though he rejected such tenets of Platonism as conflicted with orthodox Christian doctrine, e.g. the pre-existence of the soul and the eternity of the world. Twenty-five of his letters have also survived. With *Procopius of Gaza and *Zacharias Scholasticus, he made up the 'Gaza Triad'.

Gk. text of the 'Theophrastus' in A. *Gallandi, Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, 10 (1774), pp. 629–64, repr. J. P. Migne, PG 85. 865–1004; crit. edn. by M. E. Colonna (Naples, 1958). Letters ed. R. Hercher, Epistolographi Graeci (Paris, 1873), pp. 24–32; crit. edn. by L. M. Positano (Naples, 1950; 2nd edn., 1962). M. Wacht, Aeneas von Gaza als Apologet (Theophania, 21; Bonn, 1969), with bibl.

Aeneas Silvius Piccolomini. See PIUS II.

Aengus, St. See OENGUS, ST.

aequiprobabilism. See EQUIPROBABILISM.

aer (Gk. ἀήρ). A large veil, used in the E. Church to cover the chalice and paten during the Liturgy.

Aerius (4th cent.), presbyter of Pontus. He was at first an associate of *Eustathius (who in 355 became Bp. of Sebaste), with whose ascetic movement he was closely identified and by whom he was ordained; but later (*c.*360) the two quarrelled. Acc. to St *Epiphanius (Haer. 75), from whom our knowledge of him is mainly derived, he maintained that there was no distinction between the function and rank of bishops and priests; that the observance of *Easter was a Jewish superstition (1 Cor. 5: 7); that prescribed fasts were wrong; and that it was useless to pray and give alms for the dead. Hence his followers refused to fast even in *Holy Week, though they observed a purely voluntary fast on *Sundays. Aerius was also charged by Epiphanius with being an *Arian. His followers (Aerians) are mentioned by St *Philaster (Haer. 72) and by St *Augustine (De Haeresibus, 53), but appear to have died out soon after his death. Aerius has prob. received from modern controversialists (*Bellarmine; some 17th-cent. Anglicans) more attention than his importance merits.

V. Ermoni in DHGE 1 (1912), col. 663, and H. C. Brennecke in L.Th.K (3rd edn.), 1 (1993), cols. 185 f., s.v.

Aeterni Patris. The encyclical of *Leo XIII (4 Aug. 1879), commending to the Church the study of philosophy, and esp. of the works of St *Thomas Aquinas. It gave the impetus to the revival of Scholastic philosophy.

Text in Acta Leonis XIII (1887), pp. 88–108. Comm. by F. *Ehrle, SJ, orig. pub. in Stimmen aus Maria-Laach, 18 (1880), pp. 13–28, 292–317, 388–407, and 485–98, together with the text of the Encyclical, ed. F. Pelster, SJ (Sussidi Eruditi, 6; Rome, 1954). Atti del'VIII Congresso Tomistico Internazionale: L'Enciclica Aeterni Patris (Studi Tomistici, 10–12; Vatican City, 1981). V. B. Brezik, CSB (ed.), One Hundred Years of Thomism: Aeterni Patris and Afterwards, A Symposium (Houston, Tex., 1981), esp. pp. 7–27, with Eng. tr. of the Encyclical, pp. 173–97.

Aethelbert, Aethelburga, etc. See ETHELBERT, ETHELBURGA, etc.

Aetius (d. *c.*366). A Christian sophist who carried the principles of *Arianism to their farthest limits. His enemies, by a play on his name, surnamed him ἄθεος, 'the godless one'. Originally a craftsman of *Antioch, he travelled to *Alexandria, where he became a subtle dialectician and skilled in the philosophy of *Aristotle. Under the Emp. *Julian (361–3) he was ordained a bishop by the Arians without fixed see. He and his followers, also known as *Anomoeans, asserted that the Son, being begotten, was in essence unlike the Father, the Ingenerate. A short writing of his (Συνταγμάτιον περὶ ἀγεννήτου θεοῦ καὶ γεννητοῦ) is preserved by *Epiphanius (Haer. 76. 11) and in a few fragments elsewhere.

G. Bardy, 'L'Héritage littéraire d'Aétius', RHE 24 (1928), pp. 809–27; V. Grumel, 'Les Textes monothélites d'Aétius', EO 18 (1929), pp. 159–66; L. R. Wickham, 'The Syntagmation of Aetius the Anomean', JTS NS 19 (1968), pp. 532–69, incl. text and Eng. tr. E. Venables in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 51–3, s.v.

affective prayer. A kind of prayer in which the emphasis is on making aspirations of love towards God, rather than on formulating precise petitions or engaging in discursive reflection. It was taught particularly in the 16th and 17th cents., though its roots are much older.

affinity. In moral theology, relationship created by marriage. It arises from a valid marriage, whether consummated or not, and is held to form an impediment to subsequent marriage between the one party and certain blood relations of the other. The impediment is not extinguished by death. In the C of E the sphere of affinity is regulated by the 'Table of *Kindred and Affinity' (q.v.), originally drawn up in 1563 and in 1969 substantially revised (Canon B 31), which superseded the complicated rules of the medieval canonists. Marriages within the *prohibited degrees were voidable in civil law until 1835, when Lord *Lyndhurst's Marriage Act rendered them ipso facto void. In the 20th cent. a stream of legislation beginning with the *Deceased Wife's Sister's Marriage Act 1907 has legalized marriage within many of the formerly prohibited degrees, including notably union with a father- or mother-in-law, but a clergyman is not obliged to solemnise such a marriage if he chooses not to. Most of these provisions refer to marriages terminated by death, and not by divorce. The RC rulings on affinity, affecting marriage and other matters, will be found in CIC (1983), cans. 109, 492 § 3, 1092, 1298, and 1448 § 1. RC canon law no longer recognizes spiritual affinity, which arises between the *godparent and the baptized.

P. Dib in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 264–85, s.v. 'Affinité'; C. Henry in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 167–71, s.v.

affirmation. In English civil law, a solemn declaration in place of an oath made by those who have conscientious objection to being sworn, either because of their religious convictions or because they have no religious belief. In the 17th cent. *Quakers suffered severe persecution for refusing to be sworn. The *Toleration Act 1688 began the process of relief by allowing 'certain persons, dissenters from the Church of England', to make an affirmation instead of an Oath of *Allegiance, and in 1691 a similar concession was made in respect of the Oath of Supremacy in *Ireland. The position was regularized for the 'people called Quakers' by an Act of 1696 which expressly granted them the general right of making an affirmation in place of an oath. This permission was limited, however, to official oaths, and criminal proceedings were exempted. This last restriction was removed by two Acts of 1833, the Quakers and Moravians Act and the 'Separatists' Affirmations Act, and in 1838 the exemption was extended to include former adherents of those sects. In 1854 the Common Law Procedure Act allowed the right of affirmation to all who conscientiously objected to being sworn. This was not construed to include atheists, who were uniquely prevented from giving evidence altogether, because it was thought that without fear of divine sanction evidence could not be relied upon. The Evidence Further Amendment Act 1869 and the Evidence Act 1870 allowed atheists to give oral evidence on affirmation, and the Oaths Act 1888 provided for depositions by atheists.

In practice the right to affirm was little used except by Quakers, because the 1888 Act required unbelievers to make public profession of their atheism. Since its replacement by the Oaths Act 1978, this is no longer necessary, and affirmation, although not usual, is now more frequently heard. It is also permitted when an oath would be inconvenient, e.g. because the appropriate religious book is not available.

affusion (or, occasionally, infusion). The method of *Baptism now ordinarily practised in the W. Church whereby water is poured over the head of the candidate. It did not become general until the later Middle Ages, *immersion and *submersion being the usual methods in earlier times. The change was doubtless due to the wish to avoid possible dangers to the candidate's health. It was perhaps adopted from the first in cases where immersion was not easily possible, e.g. on the Day of *Pentecost (Acts 2: 41) or in the gaoler's house at Philippi (Acts 16: 33). In the BCP, modern Anglican liturgies, and the RC rite of 1969 it is a recognized alternative to immersion. See also ASPERSION.

Afraates. See APHRAHAT.

Africa, Christianity in. Apart from Egypt and the Mediterranean coast (Roman 'Africa', on which see the following entry), Christianity had by the 4th cent. penetrated to *Nubia, where it died out in the 16th cent., and to *Ethiopia, but it did not spread further south until the era of Portuguese expansion from the late 15th cent. In the 16th and 17th cents. Christianity penetrated most deeply into the *Congo kingdom. Its presence in Warri on the *Nigerian coast and Monomotapa (see ZIMBABWE) was more superficial. Otherwise it took root within the Portuguese colonies of *Angola and, to a lesser extent, *Mozambique. Angola retains the largest degree of continuity with a pre-19th-cent. Church. At the close of the 18th cent. Christianity remained restricted to a few coastal pockets.

A new Christian era began with the settlements of *Black Christians from Nova Scotia at Freetown in *Sierra Leone in 1787 and with a missionary advance inland from the Dutch and then British colony of Cape Town effectively beginning with the arrival there of J. T. *van der Kemp in 1799. New missionary societies (the *London Missionary Society, the *Church Missionary Society, the *Holy Ghost Fathers, the *White Fathers, etc.) began work in many parts of the continent as the 19th cent. advanced, while new missionary strategies were developed by planners such as H. *Venn the younger, Card. C.-M. A.-*Lavigerie, and Bl D. *Comboni. Early missionaries varied greatly. They included explorers and publicists such as D. *Livingstone, translators such as R. *Moffat, political activists such as J. *Philip, and African converts such as S. A. *Crowther. Apart from the extreme south and the Horn of Africa, the interior was hardly touched before the final quarter of the 19th cent. The missions founded in 1875 on Lake *Malawi (see LAWS, R.) and in 1877 by the CMS in Buganda (see UGANDA) mark a new beginning. In the following thirty years, coinciding with the political 'Scramble for Africa', missions were established almost everywhere and a vast process of Church growth got under way. The principal factors in conversion were the bush school, the *catechist, and the vernacular printed texts of Scripture, hymns, and the like. In many African languages almost nothing else has even now been printed.

In general missionary activity benefited from the new conditions created by colonial rule; nevertheless at times some missionaries voiced strong criticism of colonial abuses (see ZAIRE, ANGOLA, COLENSO, J., and PHILIP, J.). After 1920 there was an increasing alliance in the fields of education and medicine between the missions and more benevolent colonial governments. In the late colonial period, however, esp. in southern Africa, relations were more often strained (e.g. in Zimbabwe, Mozambique, *South Africa). Since political independence, Church–State relations have varied. While mostly co-operative, there have been considerable conflicts as in Uganda under I. Amin, in Zaire under President Mobutu, and in the *Sudan.

From the 1890s African Christians began in some countries, notably Nigeria and South Africa, to reject missionary control and some aspects of missionary teaching and to form independent Churches of their own. This movement at times took the form of a schism within, esp. *Methodist, *Baptist, *Congregational, and *Low Church Anglican missions, resulting in a Church not greatly different from that which had been left. At other times the new Church was a consequence of the preaching and healing activity of a 'prophet' such as W. W. *Harris or S. *Kimbangu. New Churches and movements went on being born and subdividing through every decade of the 20th cent., esp. in South Africa, Zimbabwe, *Kenya, Nigeria, Zaire, and *Ghana. While the character of these Churches (in all several thousand, of which many are exceedingly small) greatly varied, most were much concerned with *spiritual healing, including the acceptance of a traditional African interpretation of sickness in terms of spirit possession and *witchcraft.

Everywhere the mainline, formerly mission, Churches remain numerically far larger as a group than the 'independent' Churches. They mostly moved from white missionary to black indigenous leadership about the time of the political independence of the country concerned. Joseph Kiwanuka, consecrated RC Bp. of Masaka, Uganda, in 1939, was the first African diocesan bishop of the Latin rite in any mission Church in the 20th cent. It was another twenty years before such appointments became commonplace. In the latter part of the 20th cent. (roughly since the coming of independence to most of black Africa *c.*1960), the growth of all the Churches has been prodigious, with a membership of some 25 million in 1950 increasing to well over 150 million in 1990. By this time there were over 350 RC African bishops, and there were over 150 Anglican African bishops at the *Lambeth Conference of 1988. In many countries RCs are the largest Church; in some, incl. Zaire, they include a total majority of Christians. In Namibia *Lutherans form a majority. In other countries, notably South Africa, there are a large number of Churches and no one predominates. A recognizable African theology has developed since the 1960s concerned esp. with the relationship between Christianity and traditional religion and culture, but in southern Africa it has focused more on issues of politics and race. In the 1990s the African Churches remain the fastest growing but also structurally the least stable part of world Christianity.

C. P. Groves, The Planting of Christianity in Africa (4 vols., 1948–58); A. Hastings, The Church in Africa, 1450–1950 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1994) with bibl.; id., A History of African Christianity 1950–1975 (Cambridge, 1979). Four symposia are also wide-ranging: C. G. Baëta (ed.), Christianity in Tropical Africa: Studies presented . . . at the Seventh International African Seminar, University of Ghana, April 1965 (1968); T. O.

Ranger and J. Weller (eds.), Themes in the Christian History of Central Africa (1975); E. Fasholé-Luke and others (eds.), Christianity in Independent Africa (Ibadan and London, 1978); and G. Ruggieri (ed.), Église et Histoire de l'Église en Afrique (1990). For 19th-cent. mission history see also R. [A.] Oliver, The Missionary Factor in East Africa (1952; 2nd edn., 1965); R. M. Slade, English-Speaking Missions in the Congo Independent State (1878–1908) (Académie royale des Sciences coloniales, Classe des Sciences morales et politiques, Mémoires in-8°, NS 16, fasc. 2; Brussels, 1959); and J. F. A. Ajayi, Christian Missions in Nigeria 1841–1891 (1965). Other local studies include J. V. Taylor, The Growth of the Church in Buganda (1958); B. A. Pauw, Christianity and Xhosa Tradition: Belief and Ritual among Xhosa-speaking Christians (1975); and B. [G. M.] Sundkler, Bara Bukoba: Kyrka och miljö i Tanzania (Stockholm, 1974; Eng. tr., Bara Bukoba: Church and Community in Tanzania, 1980). Aspects of Christian life are treated by id., The Christian Ministry in Africa (1960); A. Shorter, WF, and E. Kataza, Missionaries to Yourselves: African Catechists Today (1972); and A. Hastings, Christian Marriage in Africa: Being a Report Commissioned by the Archbishops of Cape Town, Central Africa ... (1973).

On independent Churches and prophet movements, B. G. M. Sundkler, Bantu Prophets in South Africa (1948; 2nd edn., 1961); G. Shepperson and T. Price, Independent African: John Chilembwe and the Origins, Setting and Significance of the Nyasaland Native Rising of 1915 (Edinburgh, 1958); D. B. Barrett, Schism and Renewal in Africa: An Analysis of the Six Thousand Contemporary Religious Movements (Nairobi, etc., 1968); B. [G. M.] Sundkler, Zulu Zion and some Swazi Zionists (1976); H. W. Turner, Religious Innovation in Africa: Collected Essays on New Religious Movements (Boston, 1979); R. I. J. Hackett (ed.), New Religious Movements in Nigeria (Lewiston, NY [1987]); and H. W. Turner, Bibliography of New Religious Movements in Primal Societies, 1: Black Africa (Boston, 1977).

On African theology, J. S. Pobee, Toward an African Theology (Nashville, Tenn. [1979]); K. A. Dickson, Theology in Africa (1984); J. S. Mbiti, Bible and Theology in African Christianity (Nairobi, 1986); P. [W. E.] Frostin, Liberation Theology in Tanzania and South Africa: A First World Interpretation (Studia Theologica Lundiensia, 42; 1988); and A. Hastings, African Catholicism (1989).

Africa, the Church in Roman. How Christianity spread to Roman 'Africa' (i.e. roughly Tripoli, Tunisia, Algeria, and Morocco) is unknown. The earliest evidence is that of the '*Acts' of the *Scillitan martyrs (180); and the 'Passion' of St *Perpetua (203) and the works of *Tertullian (c.197–c.220) reveal a Church widespread and organized. While Roman Christians were still speaking Greek, the African Church was already using a Latin Bible and liturgy. By *Cyprian's time (c.250) there were fully 100 bishops under the primacy of Carthage. The Romanized towns and the coastal regions were the chief, but not the only, areas of evangelization; and, though sees were more frequent in Africa Proconsularis and Numidia, parts of Mauretania had been touched. *Persecution by the Emp. *Decius (250) weakened the Church, leading to controversy over the readmission of lapsed members and to the *Novatianist schism, which in turn produced controversy with Rome over rebaptism. But, led by Cyprian, the faithful recovered strength and withstood fresh persecution under the Emp. Valerian (258). At the end of the century Africa added *Arnobius and *Lactantius to the as yet short roll of Latin theologians.

The 4th cent. saw the partly theological, partly social struggle against *Donatism, arising out of *Diocletian's persecution; the writings of *Tyconius and *Optatus; and the rise of St *Augustine. Notable features of this period were the war against paganism, the growth of monasticism, African resistance to Papal claims, and the series of African Councils, the canons of which were incorporated into both Greek and Latin *canon law.

Such achievements were ended by the Vandal invaders (429), whose *Arian kings normally repressed Catholic Christianity, with intermittent toleration, as when Hilderic allowed an important council to assemble in 525. The chief writers of this later period were the historian *Victor Vitensis, the poet Dracontius, *Vigilius of Thapsus, and *Fulgentius of Ruspe. The reconquest (534) by *Justinian's general, Belisarius, restored orthodoxy, and some African theologians, notably *Facundus, were prominent in defence of the *Three Chapters; while monasticism became strong and canonists again active. Later still, *Gregory I (590–604) corresponded with African bishops, the Berber tribes were gradually converted, and, c.640, Africa strongly challenged *Monothelitism. But at the end of the 7th cent. the Arab conquest (Carthage fell in 698) reduced to a shadow the Church which had bred so many martyrs and thinkers. Its ruined shrines are now being uncovered.

C. Diehl, L'Afrique Byzantine: Histoire de la Domination Byzantine en Afrique (533–709) (1896); H. *Leclercq, OSB, L'Afrique chrétienne (2 vols., 1904); P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique Chrétienne (7 vols., 1901–23). E. Buonaiuti, Il cristianesimo nell'Africa romana (Bari, 1928). W. H. C. Frend, The Donatist Church: A Movement of Protest in Roman North Africa (Oxford, 1952; reissued, with extended bibl., 1985). C. Courtois, Les Vandales et l'Afrique (1955). J. P. Brisson, Autonomisme et Christianisme dans l'Afrique romaine de Septime Sévère à l'Invasion vandale (1958). F. Decret, L'Afrique Manichéenne (IV^e–V^e siècles) (2 vols., Études Augustiniennes, 1978). C. Lepelley, Les Cités de l'Afrique romaine au Bas-Empire (2 vols., ibid., 1979–81). N. Duval, Les Églises africaines à deux Absides (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et Rome, 218; 2 vols., 1971–3), and other works of this author. Y. Duval, Loca Sanctorum Africae: Le Culte des Martyrs en Afrique du IV^e au VII^e siècle (Collection de l'École française de Rome, 58; 2 vols., 1982). J. Christern, Das frühchristliche Pilgerheiligtum von Tebessa (Wiesbaden, 1976). J. Cuoq, L'Église d'Afrique du Nord du deuxième au douzième siècle [1984]. J. B. Ward Perkins and R. G. Goodchild, 'The Christian Antiquities of Tripolitania', Archaeologia, 95 (1953), pp. 1–82. H. Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 575–775, s.v. 'Afrique'; A. Schindler in TRE 1 (1977), cols. 640–700, s.v. 'Afrika, I', with copious bibl.; V. Saxer and P.-A. Février in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 61–74, s.v.; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), pp. 13–16.

African Missions, Society of (Societas Missionum ad Afros, SMA), RC society of priests and lay brothers, dedicated to the evangelization of Africa and people of African origin. The founder, Melchior de Marion Brésillac (1813–59), a French aristocrat from Languedoc, served first in *India as a priest of the Paris Foreign Missions Society. He was made Bp. of Coimbatore in 1846 but in 1855 resigned his see over missionary policy concerning the caste system and reluctance to train indigenous clergy. He founded the Society of African Missions at Lyons, in 1856, and went with the first missionaries to *Sierra Leone, where he died of fever in 1859. Leadership of the society until 1901 passed to Augustine Planque (1826–1907), whom *Pius IX confirmed as first Superior General. In the 1860s foundations were made in *Nigeria and Benin and missions were eventually established along the entire W. African coast from Liberia to the Niger River. In 1875 Planque founded the sisters' Congregation of Our Lady of the Apostles. The Society of African Missions spread throughout Europe and N. America, and, in addition to its W. African foundations, began missionary work in Egypt. In the *United States members of the Society work among Black and Hispanic Americans. New foundations have recently been made in Latin America, Asia, and *Poland.

J. M. Todd, African Mission: A historical study of the Society of African Missions ... [1962]. F. Gantly and E. Thorp, For this cause: The life of Melchior de Marion Brésillac, founder of the Society of African Missions (Rome, 1970). M. J. Bane, SMA, Catholic Pioneers in West Africa (1956), esp. pp. 127–93; E. M. Hogan, Catholic Missionaries and Liberia: A Study of Christian Enterprise in West Africa, 1842 1950 (Cork, 1981), passim. N. Douai, SMA, in DIP 6 (1988), cols. 1652–4, s.v. 'Società delle Missioni Africane'.

Africanus, Sextus Julius. See JULIUS AFRICANUS, SEXTUS.

Agabus, St, prophet. He is mentioned in Acts as foretelling the famine (AD 44–8) under Claudius (11: 28) and St Paul's imprisonment (21: 10). In the E. Church he is held to be one of the seventy disciples (Lk. 10: 1) and dignified as an Apostle. Feast day, in the E., 8 April; in the W., 13 Feb.

agape (ἀγάπη, 'love'). (1) For reasons unknown, the *Septuagint generally uses ἀγάπη and related words instead of the more normal Greek word ἔρως to cover 'love' in all its senses. In the NT the word acquires a special connotation because of the kind of love revealed in Christ, taken as an indication of an essential quality in God and as a model for human imitation. This made it possible for a contrast to be made in Christian usage between ἀγάπη, seen as a spiritual and unselfish love, and ἔρως, seen as a carnal passion; but *Origen (prologue to Comm. Cant.) and *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite (Divine Names, 4. 12) protested against this distinction on philological and theological grounds. In modern times a further distinction has been suggested, esp. by A. Nygren: the Christian doctrine of ἀγάπη is based on the selfless love which originates in God, whereas the pagan ἔρως, when used in a religious context, means the hunger of the creature reaching out in desire towards God. But the late Neoplatonist *Proclus explicitly has a doctrine of providential ἔρως on God's part, and some scholars, notably J. M. Rist and G. Quispel, have argued that this is not foreign to the earlier Platonist tradition. Ἀγάπη was normally translated into Latin by caritas; hence the original meaning of 'charity' in English. For the noun 'charity' is used in the AV, but most modern versions of the Bible prefer 'love', which has always been used for the cognate verbal form. See also LOVE.

(2) The term is applied also to the religious meal which seems to have been in use in the early Church in close relation to the Eucharist. The classic NT ref. is 1 Cor. 11: 17–34, where abuses which accompanied the common meals that preceded the Eucharist are condemned. The most important early documents held to attest the practice are St *Ignatius' reference to the Christian love-feasts in his letter to the Smyrnaeans (8) and esp. *Pliny's letter to Trajan (10. 96). The latter contains a description of two separate Christian meetings, the one an early morning assembly for prayer, traditionally regarded as a Eucharistic celebration, the other an ordinary meal, believed to be the Agape. St Hippolytus in the Apostolic Tradition (26) gives instructions about a liturgical meal which is differentiated from the Eucharist; this is often taken to be an Agape, though the word does not occur in the text. *Tertullian also seems to refer to the Agape in his Apology (39), though what he describes is not entirely clear. The connection of the Agape with the Eucharist had virtually ceased by the time of St *Cyprian; the Eucharist was then celebrated fasting in the morning, the Agape in the evening. It seems to have been more and more a charity supper and is described as such by St *Augustine (contra Faustum, 20. 20). It is still mentioned at the *Trullan Synod (692), but it soon fell into disuse generally, though there are signs of its longer persistence in the *Ethiopian Church. There has been some interest in reviving it in modern times, and the C of E Services and Prayers for Lent, Holy Week, Easter (1986) allows for an Agape within the Eucharist. Some scholars link the Agape with the custom of distributing the 'antidoron' or *'pain bénit' (q.v.).

(3) In the 18th cent. the Agape was introduced among various *Pietist communities, including the *Moravians (in 1727); it was brought to London by John *Wesley in 1738. 'Love feasts', as they were called, became an established feature of *Methodism until the mid-19th cent. In the C of E the Agape was revived in the parish of Hilgay in Norfolk in 1949 in an attempt to bring together separated Churches, esp. Anglicans and Methodists. The experiment was repeated overseas, beginning at Makerere College in *Uganda, as a means of reconciling diverse Christian traditions in a simple liturgical rite thought to stem from the early Church, but not confused with the Eucharist.

(1) A. Nygren, Den Kristna Kärlekstanken genom tiderna: Eros och Agape (2 vols., 1930–6; Eng. tr. (Agape and Eros), in 3 vols., 1932–9, pt. 1 by A. G. Hebert, SSM, and pt. 2, 2 vols., by P. S. Watson; new tr. by P. S. Watson, 1953); J. M. Rist, Eros and Psyche: Studies in Plato, Plotinus, and Origen (Phoenix, Suppl. Vol. 6; Toronto, 1964); G. Quispel, 'God is Eros', in W. R. Schoedel and R. L. Wilken (eds.), Early Christian Literature and the Classical Intellectual Tradition (Théologie Historique, 53 [1979]), pp. 189–205. See also bibl. to LOVE.

(2) Apart from 1 Cor. 11, the chief NT texts are Acts 2: 42, 46; Acts 6; Acts 20: 7, 11; 2 Pet. 2: 13; Jude 12. Cf. also Did. 9 and 10 (acc. to F. *Kattenbusch, T. *Zahn, G. *Dix, ref. here to Agape; acc. to P. *Batiffol, H. *Lietzmann, K. Völker ref. to Eucharist); Ignatius, Smyrn. 6. 8, 8. 2, and 12. 2, Trall. 2. 3, Magn. 1. 1, etc.; Epist. Apost.*, 15; *Clement Alex., Paedag. 2. 1. J. F. Keating, The Agape and the Eucharist in the Early Church (1901); P. Batiffol in DTC 1 (1901), cols. 551–6, s.v.; id., Études d'histoire et de théologie positive, 1 (3rd edn., 1904), pp. 283–325; H. Lietzmann, Messe und Herrenmahl (1926), pp. 197–210 and 230–8; Eng. tr. (Leiden, 1979), pp. 161–71 and 188–94; cf. pp. 271 f.; K. Völker, Mysterium und Agape: Die gemeinsamen Mahlzeiten in der alten Kirche (1926); J. M. Hanssens, SJ, 'L'Agape et l'Eucharistie', EL 41 (1927), pp. 525–48; 42 (1928), pp. 545–74; 43 (1929), pp. 177–98 and 520–9; A. Arnold, Der Ursprung des christlichen Abendmahls im Lichte der neuesten liturgiegeschichtlichen Forschung (1937); G. Dix, OSB, The Shape of the Liturgy (1944), pp. 82–102. B. Reicke, Diakonie, Festfreunde und Zelos in Verbindung mit der Altchristlichen Agapenfeier (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis, 1951, pt. 5; 1951). A. Hamman, Vie liturgique et Vie Sociale (Bibliothèque de Théologie [1968]), pp. 151–227 ('L'Agape et les repas de charité'). [B.] T. Lloyd, Celebrating the Agape Today

(Grove Worship Booklets, 97; 1986). See also H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 775–848 (holds that the Agape was a funeral meal). C. Bernas in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 193 f., s.v.; K. Richter in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 1 (1993), cols. 222 f., s.v.

(3) [G.] I. [F.] Thomson, An Experiment in Worship: The Revival of the Agape (1951). F. Baker, Methodism and the Love-Feast (1957).

Agapemone, Church of the. A small 19th-cent. English sect. It was founded by Henry James Prince (1811–99), who in 1840 was ordained as curate of Charlynch, nr. Bridgwater in Somerset. Together with his rector, Samuel Starky, he started a revivalist movement which soon resulted in illusions of the grossest kind. Both left the C of E and began a ministry of their own, asserting that they were the Holy Spirit personified, the Two Witnesses of Rev. 11, or *Elijah. In 1849 they opened the 'Agapemone' or 'Abode of Love' in the village of Spaxton (in Somerset), being amply supported by their followers, who believed Prince to be a Divine being. The morals of the sect caused great scandal and a trial in 1860 revealed the licentiousness of Prince and his followers. In the early 1890s the sect conducted a campaign in Clapton in NE London, calling themselves the 'Children of the Resurrection'. J. H. Smyth-Pigott, Prince's successor in the leadership, proclaimed himself to be Christ. The sect disappeared early in the 20th cent.

Material on the Agapemonites is to be found in Prince's own writings, e.g. A Hook in the Nose of Leviathan (1877) and The Man Christ Jesus (1886), as well as in those of his opponents, among which are J. G. Dick, A Word of Warning (1845), and O. Piers, The Door not Shut (1846).

agapetae (Gk. ἀγαπηταί, 'beloved'). Another name for *subintroductae.

Agapetus, St (d. 536), Pope from 535. He was a strong defender of orthodoxy. In 536 he visited *Constantinople where, in spite of Imperial opposition from *Justinian and Theodora, he deposed Anthimus the *Monophysite Patr. of Constantinople, and consecrated *Menas as his successor. He died soon afterwards, after a reign of ten months. Feast day, in the E., 17 April (day of death); in the W., 20 Sept.

Letters and other items in J. P. Migne, PL 66. 35–80. Jaffé, 1, pp. 113–15. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 287–9. H. I. Marrou, 'Autour de la bibliothèque du Pape Agapit', Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, 48 (1931), pp. 124–69. W. Ennslin, 'Papst Agapet I. und Kaiser Justinian I.', Hist. J. 77 (1958), pp. 459–66. J. P. Kirsch in DHGE 1 (1912), cols. 887–90, s.v.; J. Chapin in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 194 f., s.v.

Agatha, St. A virgin martyred at Catania in Sicily. In the 5th and succeeding cents. she was held in great veneration. Her name occurs in the *Canon of the Roman Mass and in the ancient *martyrologies; and two early churches were dedicated to her in Rome. The date of her death is quite uncertain, and the *acts of her martyrdom, which derive from the beginning of the 6th cent., are legendary. Besides being the patron saint of the city of Catania and of bell-founders, she is invoked against fire. Feast day, 5 Feb.

'Acta' in AASS, Feb. 1 (1658), pp. 598–602. S. Romeo, S. Agata, V. e M., e il suo culto (Catania, 1922). V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 14; Rome, 1938), pp. 169–73; F. di Capua, 'La concezione agonistica del martirio nei primi secoli del cristianesimo e l'introito della messa di S. Agata', EL 61 (1947), pp. 229–40. 'Studi su S. Agata e il suo Culto nella Ricorrenza del xvii Centenario del Martirio', Archivio Storico per la Sicilia Orientale, 4. 5 (1953 [for 1952]). On the early Roman church (mentioned by St *Gregory the Great, Dialog. 3. 30) dedicated to her, see C. Huelsenn, C. Cecchelli, and others, S. Agata dei Goti (Monografie sulle chiese di Roma, 1; 1924); G. N. Verrando, 'Note di Topografia Martiriale della Via Aurelia', Riv. A.C. 57 (1981), pp. 255–82, esp. pp. 275–82. J. P. Kirsch in CE 1 (1907), pp. 203 f., s.v.; P. Allard in DACL 1 (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 848–50, s.v., with further bibl.; H. Dörrie in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 179–84, s.v.

Agathangelos. The reputed author of a 'History of the Armenians' which gives an account of the life of St *Gregory the Illuminator (q.v.) and the conversion of *Armenia. Perhaps 'Agathangelos' is only a pseudonym of an Armenian Christian, proclaiming to his countrymen the 'good tidings' of their conversion. The writer asserts that he was a contemporary of St Gregory and wrote his life at the command of King Tiridates (*c.*238–314). A. von Gutschmid argued that the Armenian text dates from *c.*450, and that it made use of earlier sources. The Greek text is secondary to the Armenian.

Armenian text of the 'History of the Armenians' pub. at Constantinople, 1709; modern edn. at Tiflis, 1909; Eng. tr. of the part known as The Teaching of St Gregory [paragraphs 259–715 of the 'History'] by R. W. Thomson (Cambridge, Mass., 1970) and of the remainder of the 'History' by id. (Albany, NY, 1976). Greek text in AASS, Sept. 8 (1762), pp. 320–402; modern edn. by G. Lafontaine (Publications de l'Institut Orientaliste de Louvain, 7; 1973). A. von Gutschmid, 'Agathangelos', Zeitschrift der deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 31 (1877), pp. 1–60. G. Garitte, Documents pour l'Étude du Livre d'Agathange (ST 127; 1946), with additional texts. G. Winkler, 'Our present knowledge of the History of Agat 'angelos and its oriental versions', Revue des Études Arméniennes, NS 14 (1980), pp. 125–41.

Agathias (*c.*532–*c.*582), poet and historian. He practised as an advocate at *Constantinople. His Περὶ τῆς Ἰουστινιανοῦ Βασιλείας is our principal authority for the history of the years 552–8 of the reign of *Justinian. He also made a collection of contemporary epigrams (including several of his own) and wrote erotic myths in nine books of Δαφνιακά. It is doubtful if he was a Christian.

'History' first edited with notes and Lat. tr. by B. Vulcanius (Leiden, 1594), with 'Epigrammata Graeca' appended. Crit. edns. by B. G. Niebuhr (CSH Byz., 1828; repr. J. P. Migne, PG 88. 1269–1596) and R. Keydell (Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae, 2; Berlin, 1967), with introd. and bibl. Eng. tr. of Keydell's text by J. D. Frendo (ibid. 2a; 1975). A. [M.] Cameron, Agathias (Oxford, 1970).

Agatho (*c.*577–681), Pope from 678. He was a Sicilian by birth. In 680 he held a council at Rome against the *Monothelites, the doctrinal formula set forth at which was adopted at the Sixth Oecumenical Council of *Constantinople. He also took up the cause of St *Wilfrid of York in his dispute with *Theodore, Abp. of *Canterbury, and the King of Northumbria, and furthered the spread of the Roman Liturgy in England. Feast day, 10 Jan.

Jaffé, 1, pp. 238–40. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. cclvii and 350–8. L. Magi, La Sede Romana nella corrispondenza degli imperatori e patriarchi bizantini (VI–VII sec.) (Bibliothèque de la RHE 57; 1972), pp. 235–53. A. Vacant and H. Quentin, OSB, in DTC 1

(1903), cols. 559–63, s.v.; J. P. Kirsch in DHGE 1 (1912), cols. 916–18, s.v.; J. N. D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 77 f.

Agde, Council of (Concilium Agathense). A council held in 506 at Agde in the S. of France under the presidency of St *Caesarius of Arles. Its 47 genuine canons deal with such subjects as clerical celibacy, the canonical age for ordination, the relations of a bishop and his diocesan synod, church property, public peace, and the religious obligations of the faithful.

Hardouin, 2, cols. 995–1006; Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 2; 1908), pp. 973–1002. K. Schäferdiek, Die Kirche in den Reichen der Westgoten und Suewen bis zur Errichtung der westgotischen katholischen Staatskirche (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 39; 1967), pp. 55–67 and 243–5. C. Munier, Concilia Galliae A. 314–A. 506 (CCSL 148; 1963), pp. 189–228. Id. in DPAC 1 (1983), col. 78 f.; Eng. tr. in Encyclopaedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 17.

age, canonical. The age, fixed by *canon law, at which a person becomes capable of undertaking special duties, of enjoying special privileges, or of entering specified new states of life. The term is esp. used in connection with *ordination, for which in the C of E the canonical age for a deacon is 'twenty-three . . . unless he have a *faculty'; for a priest 'twenty-four . . . unless being over twenty-three he have a faculty'; and for a bishop at least thirty.

'Age of Reason'. (1) The traditional term for the age at which a child may be supposed to be capable of discerning right from wrong and therefore being responsible for his conduct. In RC moral theology this age is held to be reached at about 7 years, and current canon law (CIC (1983), can. 97 § 2) expressly states that on the completion of his 7th year a child is presumed to have the use of reason. The assumption of moral responsibility is commonly marked by the First Communion.

(2) A name sometimes applied to the 18th cent., when the prevailing tendency in philosophy and religion was rationalistic and opposed to all belief in the supernatural. W. *Cave described it as the saeculum rationalisticum.

Agenda (Lat., 'things to be performed'). (1) A term occasionally found in English 17th-cent. divines for matters of religious practice as opposed to those of belief (credenda).

(2) In certain primitive (particularly African) liturgies it is used of the central part of the *Mass, elsewhere called the *Canon, *Anaphora, etc. In the Council of *Carthage of 390 (can. 9), it is used of the Eucharist as a whole.

(3) Among German-speaking Protestants on the Continent, the term is in regular use for the prescribed forms of service.

aggiornamento (Ital., 'renewal'). A term closely connected with the pontificate of *John XXIII denoting a fresh presentation of the faith, together with a recognition of the wide natural rights of man and support of freedom of worship and the welfare state. In his opening speech at the Second *Vatican Council the Pope made it clear that, while a renewal of the method of the presentation of truth was required, a clear distinction had to be drawn between the unchangeable depositum fidei and the form of its enunciation.

Agios o Theos (Gk. ἅγιος ὁ θεός, 'Holy God'). An anthem, so named from its first words, which occurs in the E. liturgies. It has survived, in the original Greek, in the Roman *Good Friday Liturgy, where it has traditionally been sung during the *Veneration of the Cross. See also TRISAGION.

Agnellus of Pisa, Bl (*c.*1194–1236), founder of the English *Franciscan Province. According to tradition, he was received into the Order at Pisa, his native city, by St *Francis, who later sent him to *Paris to erect a convent. After his return to Italy, he was sent to England in 1224, and on 10 Sept. arrived at Dover with eight other friars, four of them English. Shortly afterwards he established friaries at *Canterbury, London, and *Oxford. He engaged R. *Grosseteste to teach at the Oxford friary, which rapidly became a centre of learning. He exercised considerable political influence in the conflict between Henry III and the Earl Marshal. He was a deacon until late in life when he received priest's orders at the wish of his province. He died in March 1236 at Oxford, where his remains were venerated until the Reformation. His cultus was confirmed by *Leo XIII in 1892. His feast used to be observed in some dioceses on 13 March; as this date invariably fell in Lent, the English Franciscans now celebrate his memory on 10 Sept., the date of the arrival of the first friars in England.

The principal authority is Thomas of Eccleston, Tractatus de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam, ed. A. G. Little (Collection d'Études et Documents, 7, Paris, 1909; 2nd edn., Manchester, 1951; in the 1909 edn. the relevant passages from the Chronicle of Lanercost and Bartholomew of Pisa's Liber Conformitatum are pr. in appendices). Eng. trs. of the Tractatus by Father Cuthbert, OSFC (London, 1903), E. G. Salter, The Coming of the Friars Minor to England & Germany (1926), pp. 3–126, and by L. Sherley Price (London, 1964). Father Gilbert, OSFC, B. Agnellus and the English Grey Friars (1937). Antoine de Sérent, OFM, in DHGE 1 (1912), cols. 907 f., s.v., with further refs.; BRUO 3 (1959), p. 1484, s.v. 'Pisa, Agnellus de'.

Agnellus, Andreas (*c.*800–*c.*845), historian of *Ravenna. He had the title of Abbot, but appears to have remained a secular priest. His principal writing, 'Liber Pontificalis Ecclesiae Ravennatis', is an elaborate account of the see, modelled on the '*Liber Pontificalis' of Rome, which traces the history from St *Apollinaris to his own age. It is full of historical errors, but also embodies valuable information about the buildings and customs of Ravenna, esp. in Agnellus' own time. The work was written largely to support the claims of Ravenna against *Rome. He has often been confused with St Agnellus, Abp. of Ravenna (*c.*556–*c.*566).

Editio princeps of the Liber Pontificalis Ecclesiae Ravennatis was pub. in 2 vols., Leipzig, 1708; crit. edn. by O. Holder-Egger in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Langobardicarum et Italicarum Saec. VI–IX (1878), pp. 265–391; also ed. A. Testi Rasponi in Rerum Italicarum Scriptores founded by L. A. *Muratori, 2nd edn. cont. by C. Carducci and V. Fiorini, 2. 3 (1924; only to ch. 104 (AD 606); no more pub.). G. Fasoli, 'Rileggendo il "Liber Pontificalis" di Agnello Ravennate', Settimane di Studio del Centro Italiano di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo, 17 (1970), pp. 457–95. P. Lamma in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 1 (1960), pp. 429 f., s.v. 'Agnello'.

Agnes, St. She has been venerated as a virgin in Rome since the 4th cent., but the early legends of her martyrdom vary considerably, and nothing certain can be deduced as to the date or manner of her death. A *basilica was built in *c.*350 on the Via Nomentana on the site of her remains. Her name occurs in the Roman *Canon of the Mass and in all *martyrologies both in E. and W., though on different days. In art she is represented with a lamb, no doubt on account of the similarity of 'agnus' with 'Agnes', and the archiepiscopal *pallium is made from the wool of two lambs, blessed each year in her basilica on her feast (21 Jan.). In the Roman Calendar a second feast used to be kept on the octave day, 28 Jan.

Lat. text of her Acta, ascribed to St *Ambrose, in AASS, Jan. 2 (1643), pp. 351–4; F. de' Cavalieri, S. Agnese nella tradizione e nella leggenda (RQ, suppl. 10; 1899), with Gk. texts, pp. 71–92; repr. in Scritti Agiografici, 1 (ST 221; 1962), pp. 293–354; with other arts. on St Agnes repr. ibid. 2 (ST 222; 1962), pp. 337–64. F. Jubaru, SJ, Sainte Agnès vierge et martyre de la voie Nomentane d'après de nouvelles recherches (1907), on which see F. de' Cavalieri, Hagiographica (ST 19; 1908), pp. 141–64. V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 14; 1938), pp. 173–7. A. J. Denomy, CSB (ed.), The Old French Lives of Saint Agnes and Other Vernacular Versions of the Middle Ages (Harvard Studies in Romance Languages, 13; 1938), with full introd., pp. 4–38, and hagiographical bibl., pp. 263–5. A. P. Frutaz, Il Complesso Monumentale di Sant'Agnese e di Santa Costanzia (1960), pp. 5–71, with Eng. summary, pp. 99–101. P. Allard and H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 915–65; A. P. Frutaz in EC 1 (1948), cols. 467–74, s.v. 'Agnese'; E. Josi and R. Aprili in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 1 (Rome, 1961), cols. 382–411, s.v. 'Agnese'; all with bibl.

Agnoetae (Gk. ἀγνοέω 'to be ignorant of'). A *Monophysite sect founded by Themistius, a deacon of *Alexandria (6th cent.; hence also 'Themistians'). On the basis of Mk. 13: 32, Jn. 11: 34, etc., they attributed ignorance to the human soul of Christ. Most Monophysites rejected their teaching. It was also attacked by Eulogius, Patr. of Alexandria, in 598–9, and declared heretical by Pope *Gregory I.

A. Grillmeier, SJ, Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 2/2 (1989), pp. 379–402; Eng. tr. (1995), pp. 362–84. P. *Schaff in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 62 f., s.v.; A. Vacant in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 586–96, s.v. 'Agnoètes', with patristic refs.

agnosticism. As most commonly understood, the view that we cannot really know whether there is a God or not. The invention of the word is generally ascribed to T. H. *Huxley, who is said to have coined it in 1869 on the basis of Acts 17: 23. Agnosticism is sometimes associated with those who stress the importance of faith (rather than philosophical speculation) in religion. More frequently, however, it is identified with religious scepticism, esp. of the kind influenced by such writers as D. *Hume and I. *Kant. In the later 19th cent. agnosticism was favoured by people of sceptical inclinations who wished to avoid professing dogmatic *atheism. In popular usage the term has come to be applied to all forms of scepticism.

H. *Spencer, First Principles (1862); L. Stephen, An Agnostic's Apology and other Essays (1893); J. Ward, Naturalism and Agnosticism (*Gifford Lectures for 1896–8; 2 vols., 1899; 2nd edn., 1903); R. Flint, Agnosticism (1903); R. A. Armstrong, Agnosticism and Theism in the Nineteenth Century (1905); J. [A.] Passmore, A Hundred Years of Philosophy (1957; 2nd edn., 1966), chs. 1–2; B. Lightman, The Origins of Agnosticism: Victorian Unbelief and the Limits of Knowledge [1987].

Agnus Dei. (1) The formula beginning with the words 'O Lamb of God' said or sung in the Latin liturgy shortly before the Communion. The scriptural basis is Jn. 1: 29 (itself derived from Is. 53: 7), but the repetition is first found in the Gloria in excelsis*, introduced at Rome for episcopal Masses by Pope Symmachus (498–514). Its independent use is ascribed by the Liber Pontificalis to *Sergius I (687–701), a Syrian, who ordered it to be sung at the time of the Fraction. Its origin may have been a practical protest by Sergius against can. 82 of the *Trullan Council (692) forbidding the representation of the Lord under the form of a lamb. Originally recited once only, by the beginning of the 11th cent. it was said three times, though the third 'have mercy upon us' was changed to 'grant us peace', perhaps as a preparation for the *Kiss of Peace, which then came immediately after it, or possibly, as *Innocent III says, because of the calamities afflicting the Church. By the regulations of the Ordo Missae of 1969 it again accompanies the Fraction and may be repeated any number of times. In the Middle Ages the Agnus, like the *Kyrie, was extensively interpolated. In *Requiems 'grant them rest' used to be substituted for the second part. It is now quite widely used in the C of E, where its legality was upheld by the *Lincoln Judgement; it is included in both Holy Communion rites in the ASB.

(2) A wax medallion bearing the figure of a lamb, blessed by the Pope in the first year of his pontificate and every 7th year afterwards. These objects of devotion are first heard of early in the 9th cent. at Rome, where the Archdeacon manufactured them on Holy Saturday from the remnants of the previous year's *paschal candle. They may represent a Christian substitute for a pagan charm. Agnus Dei's are also made of a mixture of wax and dust believed to be that of the bones of martyrs.

On (1), LP (Duchesne) 1, p. 376. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 965–9, s.v., and Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 413–22; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 332–40.

On (2), E. Mangenot in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 605–13, s.v., with bibl.; W. Henry in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 969–71, s.v.

Agobard (*c.*769–840), Abp. of Lyons. Appointed coadjutor to Leidrad of Lyons in 813, he succeeded to his see in 816. His support of Lothair in the latter's revolt against his father, the Emp. *Louis I, led to his deposition at the Council of Thionville (835), but he was reinstated four years later. He was a versatile scholar whose works were marked by much originality. He attacked the excessive veneration of images, trial by ordeal, belief in witchcraft, and the 'absurd opinion of the vulgar concerning hail and thunder' (that it was due to magic). His theological writings include a treatise against the *Adoptionist views of *Felix of Urgel. He may also have attacked the liturgical speculations of *Amalarius of Metz. However, the authenticity of the work in question is contested, as is that of various other treatises in which some scholars claim to detect the hand of *Florus of Lyons.

Works first pub. by P. Masson (Paris, 1605) and re-ed. by S. *Baluzius (2 vols. bound in 1, Paris, 1666), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 104. 159–352. Crit. edn. by L. Van Acker (CCCM 52; 1981). [A.] Bressolles, Saint Agobard: Évêque de Lyon (L'Église et l'État au moyen-âge, 9, 1949); [J.] A. Cabaniss, Agobard of Lyons (Syracuse, NY, 1953); E. Boshof, Erzbischof Agobard von Lyon (Kölner historische Abhandlungen, 17; 1969). Id. in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 101–3, s.v.

Agonizants (from Med. Lat. agonizo, 'to be at the point of death'), the fraternity, also known as 'Camillians', which was founded by St *Camillus de Lellis (q.v.) at Rome in 1586. In 1591 the Order was given a rule by Gregory XIV, and soon grew rapidly in riches and popularity. Its work has always been to minister to the sick and dying.

P. Sannazzaro, MI, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 912–24, s.v. 'Chierici Regolari Ministri degli Infermi'.

Agrapha (i.e. 'unwritten [sayings]'). A name given esp. to the sayings of Christ not contained in the four canonical Gospels. Some occur in various NT MSS (e.g. Lk. 6: 4 in the *Codex Bezae); one in Acts (20: 35); others are found in apocryphal Gospels, e.g. the 'Gospel acc. to the *Hebrews' and esp. the 'Gospel of *Thomas', and the writings of the Fathers.

A. Resch, Agrapha: Aussercanonische Evangelienfragmente (TU 5, Heft 4; 1889); id., Agrapha: Aussercanonische Schriftfragmente (ibid. 30, Hefte 3–4; 1906). J. H. *Ropes, Die Sprüche Jesu die in den kanonischen Evangelien nicht überliefert sind (ibid. 14, Heft 2; 1896). B. Jackson, Twenty-five Agrapha (1900; incl. Eng. tr.). J. Jeremias, Unbekannte Jesusworte (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 16; 1948; 3rd edn., 1963; Eng. tr., 1957, and 2nd edn., 1964). R. Dunkerley, Beyond the Gospels (Pelican Books, 1957). O. Hofius in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 76–9; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 88–91. J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 26–30. J. H. Ropes in HDB, extra vol. (1904), pp. 343–52, s.v.; L. Vaganay in Dict. Bibl. Suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 158–98, s.v.; O. Hofius in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 103–10, s.v.

Agreed Statement. See ANGLICAN–ROMAN CATHOLIC INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION.

Agricola, Johann (c.1494–1566), German Protestant reformer. A native of Eisleben, he studied theology under M. *Luther at *Wittenberg and in 1519 accompanied him to the *Leipzig Disputation. In 1523 he began to teach theology at Wittenberg. He moved to Eisleben in 1525. In 1527 his *Antinomist views brought him into conflict with P. *Melanchthon. In 1536 he returned to Wittenberg for discussions over the *Schmalkaldic Articles which he in due course signed. However, his Antinomist views involved him in another conflict in 1536, this time with Luther. He did not wish to separate himself from the Lutheran Church and was called in 1539 to the newly-founded Wittenberg Consistory. In 1540 he moved to Berlin and published a recantation which put an end to the controversy, at least officially. John II, Elector of Brandenburg, appointed him to the offices of *General Superintendent and court preacher which he filled until his death. He was associated in the preparation of the *Augsburg Interim of 1548 and supported the traditional Lutherans against the *Adiaphorists. The author of numerous treatises and exegetical works, he also published collections of German proverbs (1528, 1529, 1548).

Life by G. Kawerau (Berlin, 1881). J. Rogge, Johann Agricolas Lutherverständnis (Theologische Arbeiten, 14 [1960]). L. W. Spitz, The Religious Renaissance of the German Humanists (Cambridge, Mass., 1963), pp. 20–40. B. Kordes, M. Johann Agricola's aus Eisleben Schriften möglichst vollständig verzeichnet (Altona, 1817; repr., Leipzig, 1973). J. Rogge in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 110–18, s.v. with bibl.

Agrippa von Nettesheim, Heinrich Cornelius (1486–1535), scholar and adventurer. After studying in *Cologne and *Paris, in 1508 he fought in Spain, probably in the service of *Ferdinand V of Aragon. In 1509 he was at Dôle, lecturing on J. *Reuchlin's De Verbo Mirificio, and was attacked for teaching heresy. Around this time he wrote his De Nobilitate et Praecellentia Foeminei Sexus, a striking example of the Renaissance re-evaluation of the status of women. In 1510 he was in London, apparently on some secret mission, and while there studied St *Paul's Epistles with J. *Colet. From 1511 to 1517 he was in N. Italy. He attended the Council of Pisa and subsequently lectured on the *Hermetica at Pavia and Turin. About 1518 he was appointed advocate and orator of Metz. He took an interest in contemporary theological controversies, but his fierce criticism of abuses was qualified by protestations of loyalty to the Catholic Church. After spending the early 1520s in Germany and Switzerland, in 1524 he moved to France to become physician to Louis of Savoy. He soon fell into disgrace, and in 1529 went to the Low Countries to become historiographer to the Emp. *Charles V. His most important works were De Incertitudine et Vanitate Scientiarum et Artium (1530) and De Occulta Philosophia (1531). The De Occulta (composed c.1510) was an attempt to recover what he believed to have been an ancient tradition of secret magical wisdom which encompassed all branches of knowledge and was in harmony with, and ultimately derived from, Divine revelation. The De Incertitudine was a work of profound scepticism, or rather *fideism, which not only repudiated the esoteric tradition but strongly attacked *scholasticism, denied the power of reason to attain truth, and made revelation the only source of knowledge. The publication of these works, which were condemned by the universities of Paris, Louvain, and Cologne, cost him the Emperor's favour. But the dedication of De Occulta to *Hermann of Wied, the reforming Abp. of Cologne, earned him a place in his entourage from 1532. He probably stayed with Hermann until 1535, when he seems to have returned to France and died there.

Works (2 vols., Lyons, no date; repr. Lyons, 1600; repr., with introd. [in Eng.] by R. H. Popkin, Hildesheim and New York, 1970). Crit. edn. of De Nobilitate et Praecellentia Foeminei Sexus by R. Antonioli and others (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 243; 1990), with good bibl. Fr. tr. of De Occulta by J. Servier (3 vols., Paris, 1981–2). H. Morley, The Life of Henry Cornelius Agrippa von Nettesheim (2 vols., 1856); J. Orsier, Henri Cornélis Agrippa (1911); C. G. Nauert, Jun., Agrippa and the Crisis of Renaissance Thought (Illinois Studies in the Social Sciences, 55; 1965), with extensive bibl.

Ahikar legend. A story which occurs in various forms but in essence tells of a Grand Vizier of Sennacherib, Ahikar the Wise, against whom his adopted son, Nadan, plotted and received appropriate retribution. The legend was widely spread in the East. It is met with in the *Elephantine papyri and in Romanian, Slavonic, Armenian, Arabic, and Syriac literature. Since G. Hoffmann (1880) pointed out the identity of 'Achiacharus', *Tobit's nephew (Tob. 1: 21), with 'Ahikar', its influence on the Book of Tobit has been universally admitted.

F. C. *Conybeare, J. R. Harris, and A. S. Lewis, The Story of Ahikar from the Syriac, Arabic, Armenian, Ethiopic, Greek and Slavonic Versions (1898); R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 715–84; F. Nau, Histoire et sagesse d'Ahikar l'Assyrien (1909). J. M. Lindenberger, The Aramaic Proverbs of Ahiqar (Baltimore and London, 1983). Id. in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 (1985), pp. 479–507. R. Degen in Enzyklopädie des Märchens, ed. K. Ranke, 1 (1977), cols. 53–9, s.v. 'Achikar', with bibl.

Aidan, St (d. 651), Irish monk of *Iona and Bp. of *Lindisfarne. At the request of St *Oswald, King of Northumbria, he was sent from Iona to revive the missionary work of *Paulinus. Consecrated bishop in 635, he established his headquarters on the island of Lindisfarne, whence he made long journeys on the mainland, strengthening the Christian communities and founding new missionary outposts. The Christian practices taught by Aidan were those of the *Celtic Church. He carefully educated a group of twelve English boys to be future ecclesiastical leaders of their people, among them St *Chad. His asceticism and gentleness won rapid success for his mission, and his personal relations with Oswald (d. 642) and Oswald's successor, St *Oswine (d. 651), were close and intimate. Feast day, 31 Aug.

The principal authority is *Bede, HE 3. 3, 5 f., 14–17, 25; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 90 f., 95 f., and 108–11 passim, with further refs. A. C. Fryer, Aidan, the Apostle of the North [1884]. J. B. *Lightfoot, Leaders in the Northern Church (Sermons, 1890), pp. 39–54. W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1878), pp. 134–46 and 163 f.

Ailly, Pierre d'. See D'AILLY, PIERRE.

Ailred, St (1109–67), also 'Aelred', the 'Bernard of the North', Abbot of *Rievaulx. The son of a Saxon priest of *Hexham, he was for some years at the court of King David of Scotland, son of St *Margaret. He entered the *Cistercian house at Rievaulx *c.*1133, became Abbot of Revesby in 1143, and Abbot of Rievaulx in 1147. In 1142–3 Ailred, at the invitation of St *Bernard of Clairvaux, wrote his first important work, the 'Speculum Caritatis'. His extensive spiritual writings show marked similarity of interest and attitude with those of St Bernard and *William of St-Thierry. He shared the latter's concern with psychology, and his analysis of the nature of the 'affections' and of love is in many ways parallel to that of the continental Cistercians. His devotion was marked by a strong attachment to the suffering humanity of Christ; and his 'De Spiritali Amicitia', a rewriting of Cicero's 'De Amicitia', is the fullest medieval discussion of the theme of friendship. He also wrote a life of *Edward the Confessor. In recent times, ninety-five sermons in an anonymous collection of homilies in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris (nouv. acq. Lat. 294) and eighteen in a similar MS in the Municipal Library at Troyes (MS 868) have been attributed to Ailred. His biography was written by his pupil, Walter Daniel. Feast day, 12 Jan., also 3 Mar.

Collections of Ailred's 'Opera Ascetica' in B. Tissier, Bibliotheca Patrum Cisterciensium, 5 (Bono-Fonte, 1662), pp. 162–388; Opera Historica in R. Twysden, Historiae Anglicanae Scriptores Decem (London, 1652), cols. 337–422; both repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 195. 209–796. Modern edn. of the Opera Ascetica by A. Hoste, OSB, and C. H. Talbot (CCCM 1; 1971); Sermones inediti B. Aelredi Abbatis Rievallensis ed. C. H. Talbot (Series Scriptorum S. Ordinis Cisterciensis, 1; Rome, 1952). The sermons recently attributed to Ailred ed. G. Raciti, OCSO (CCCM 2A ff.; 1989 ff.). There are separate edns. of De Spiritali Amicitia, with Fr. tr. and notes, by J. Dubois (Bibliothèque de Spiritualité Médiévale, 1948); of Cum factus esset Jesus annorum duodecim by A. Hoste, OSB, with Fr. tr. by J. Dubois (SC 60; 1958); of De Institutione Inclusarum and Oratio Pastoralis, with Fr. tr. by C. Dumont, OCSO (ibid. 66; 1961); and of selected prayers, with introd. by A. Hoste, OSB, with Eng. tr. by Sr Rose of Lima (Steenbrugge, 1965). There are Eng. trs. of Ailred's Treatises [Cum factus esset Jesus annorum duodecim and De Institutione Inclusarum] and his Oratio Pastoralis (Cistercian Fathers Series, 2; 1971), De Spiritali Amicitia (ibid. 5; 1977), and De Anima (ibid. 22; 1981). F. M. Powicke (ed.), The Life of Ailred of Rievaulx by Walter Daniel (tr. and notes; 1950). A. Hallier, O.Cist.SO, Un Éducateur Monastique: Aelred de Rievaulx (1959; Eng. tr., Cistercian Studies Series, 2; 1969). A. Squire, OP, Aelred of Rievaulx: A Study (1969; rev. edn., Cistercian Studies Series, 50; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1981; also London, 1981). B. P. McGuire, Brother and Lover: Aelred of Rievaulx (New York, 1994). A. Hoste, OSB, Bibliotheca Aelrediana: A Survey of the Manuscripts, Old Catalogues, Editions and Studies concerning St Aelred of Rievaulx (Instrumenta Patristica, 2; Steenbrugge, 1962). Collectanea Cisterciensia, 29 (1967), pp. 3–99 [special issue to mark the 8th centenary of Ailred's death].

'Ain Karim. A village about 5 miles W. of *Jerusalem, in the hill country, traditionally regarded as the home of *Zacharias and *Elizabeth, the birthplace of St *John Baptist, and the scene of the *Visitation.

aisle (Fr. aile, 'wing'). Commonly any extension of the nave of a church made by the piercing of its side walls with a series of arches and the building on of an extension with a separate and lower roof, for the purpose of increased accommodation. Less frequently a similar extension of the chancel or transept. It is often, but quite wrongly, used of a gangway up the centre of the nave or elsewhere; and the corresponding expression 'centre aisle' is a contradiction in terms.

Akathistos. See ACATHISTUS.

Akhmîm fragment. See PETER, APOCALYPSE OF ST, and PETER, GOSPEL OF ST.

Akiba or Aqiba (*c.*50–132), Jewish Rabbi. Akiba ben Joseph was the most influential rabbi of his generation. As teacher of the renowned Rabbi Meir he prob. much influenced the *Mishnah. He actively supported the revolt of *Bar-Cochba, recognizing his claims as *Messiah. He was taken prisoner by the Romans and burnt alive. *Aquila's version of the OT was probably a product of the School of Akiba.

L. Finkelstein, Akiba: Saint and Martyr (New York, 1936). P. Benoit, OP, 'Rabbi Aqiba ben Joseph, sage et héros du Judaïsme', R. Bibl. 54 (1947), pp. 54–89, repr. in id., Exégèse et Théologie, 2 (1961), pp. 340–79. P. Lenhardt and P. von der Osten-Sacken, Rabbi Akiva: Texte und Interpretationen zum rabbinischen Judentum und Neuen Testament (Arbeiten zur neutestamentlichen Theologie und Zeitgeschichte, 1; 1987). H. Freedman and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 2 (Jerusalem, 1971), cols. 488–92, s.v. 'Akiva'.

Akoimetae. See ACOEMETAE.

Aksum. See AXUM.

Alacoque, St Margaret Mary. See MARGARET MARY ALACOQUE, ST.

Alan (or Alain) of Lille (d. 1203), poet, theologian, and preacher. He prob. studied and taught at Paris *c.*1150–*c.*1185. Later he moved to the S. of France, prob. to Montpellier, where he was engaged in combating the *Catharist heresy. Towards the end of his life he entered the abbey of *Cîteaux where he died.

He had a thorough training in the liberal arts before turning his attention to theology, and it is prob. that the De planctu naturae, a mixture of prose and verse, in which Nature personified plays the chief role, is an early work. His earliest theological work seems to be the incomplete Summa Quoniam homines and a number of unpublished quaestiones. Not much later are the Regulae caelestis iuris, in which an attempt is made to state theological truths in a series of rules or axioms, and the allegorical poem Anticlaudianus (1182–3). His subsequent works include a set of Distinctiones, a dictionary of biblical terms with literal and moral and allegorical interpretations, an Ars praedicandi*, to which was attached a set of 27 model sermons, and a Liber poenitentialis, the earliest of the medieval manuals for confessors. Alan is reckoned among the 'Porretani' or disciples of *Gilbert de la Porrée, but his work has a highly personal character, which is also reflected in his style; the width of his interests is celebrated in his epitaph: 'Qui duo [i.e. the Old and New Testaments], qui septem [the liberal arts], qui totum scibile scivit'. The 'Ars Fidei Catholicae', an attempt to confute non-Christians on rational grounds alone, which until recently was attributed to him, has been shown to be the work of Nicholas of Amiens.

Collections of his works by C. de Visch (Antwerp, 1654) and, with additions, in the Bibliotheca Scriptorum Ordinis Cisterciensis (ibid., 1654) and J. P. Migne, PL 210; but these are not all satisfactory, since some still remain unpub.; see M. T. d'Alverny, Alain de Lille: Textes inédits avec une introduction sur sa vie et ses œuvres (Études de Philosophie médiévale, 52; 1965), with bibl. De planctu naturae, ed. N. M. Häring in Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 19 (1978), pp. 797–879; Eng. tr. by J. J. Sheridan (Toronto, 1980). Summa Quoniam homines, ed. P. Glorieux in AHDLMA 20 (1954), pp. 113–364. De Virtutibus et Vitiis, ed. O. Lottin, OSB, Psychologie et Morale aux XII[e] et XIII[e] Siècles, 6 (Gembloux, 1960), pp. 27–92. Anticlaudianus, ed. R. Bossuat (Textes Philosophiques du Moyen Age, 1; 1955; Eng. tr. by J. J. Sheridan, Toronto, 1973). Liber poenitentialis: middle and short versions [this last is the work of a follower of Alan] ed. J. Longère in AHDLMA 32 (1965), pp. 169–242; long version ed. id. (Analecta Mediaevalia Namurcensia, 17–18; Louvain, 1965). For edns. of sermons and shorter poems, see M. T. d'Alverny, op. cit. M. Baumgartner, Die Philosophie des Alanus de Insulis (BGPM 2, Heft 4; 1896); G. Raynaud de Lage, Alain de Lille: Poète du XII[e] Siècle (Université de Montréal Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales, 1951). H. Roussel and F. Suard (eds.), Alain de Lille, Gautier de Châtillon, Jakemart Giélée et leurs temps (Actes du Colloque de Lille, octobre 1978) (Lille, 1980), pp. 27–169, incl. art. on attributions by M. T. d'Alverny; G. R. Evans, Alan of Lille: The Frontiers of Theology in the later Twelfth Century (1983). J. Ziolkowski, Alan of Lille's Grammar of Sex: The Meaning of Grammar to a Twelfth-Century Intellectual (Speculum Anniversary Monographs, 10; Cambridge, Mass., 1985). M. *Grabmann, Die Geschichte der scholastischen Methode, 2 (1911), pp. 452–76; Überweg, 2, pp. 245–7, with bibl. p. 706. J. M. Canivez in Dict. Sp. 1 (1927), cols. 270–2, s.v. 'Alain de Lille'; G. Silagi in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 155–60, s.v. 'Alanus ab Insulis'.

Alane, Alexander. See ALESIUS, ALEXANDER.

alapa. According to W. usage, the light blow formerly delivered by the bishop on the cheek (leviter in maxilla caedit) of those being confirmed. It was perhaps an imitation of the blow with the sword by which a young Teutonic warrior was dubbed a knight and, if so, symbolized the spiritual warfare lying ahead of the candidate. More prob. it is to be associated with the *Kiss of Peace.

Alaric (*c.*370?–410), Visigothic leader. Belonging to a noble family, until 395 he combined a prominent position in the Gothic world with high office in the military hierarchy of the E. Empire; he was a commander of Gothic Federate troops under the Emp. *Theodosius I. On the latter's death he sought a more important and regular position within the Empire, and, on being frustrated, turned to violence. From 395 to 410 he enjoyed intermittent periods when he was recognized as a Magister Militum of the Empire; these periods were interspersed with military action, in the course of which he increased the strength of his following. In 408 he turned the attention of his forces definitively to the W. and mounted his second invasion of Italy. Once again, however, no lasting settlement was reached and Alaric besieged Rome in 408 and 409 before sacking it on the third occasion in 410. He entered the city on 24 August 410. This event caused consternation throughout the Empire and prompted St *Augustine's City of God. Even the sack of Rome led to no settlement, and when Alaric died later in the same year his group had not found a permanent position in the Empire. Like all those Goths who had been influenced by *Ulphilas, Alaric was *homoean in belief and was thus denounced by Augustine as an *Arian.

The major sources for his career are Olympiodorus, *Zosimus (based on Olympiodorus), Claudian, *Orosius, and Jordanes. Good secondary accounts by T. *Mommsen, 'Stilicho und Alarich', Hermes, 38 (1903), pp. 101–15; J. [F.] Matthews, Western Aristocracies and Imperial Court, A.D. 364–425 (Oxford, 1975), pp. 270–306; P. J. Heather, Goths and Romans 332–489 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1991), pp. 193–224.

à Lasco, John. See LASKI, JOHN.

alb. A white linen garment, reaching from the neck to the ankles with tight-fitting sleeves and held in at the waist by a girdle, worn by the ministers at Mass. It is derived from the under-tunic common in the Roman and Greek world. It has been used in Christian worship from an early date, but it was not regarded as a specifically liturgical garment until long after the other Eucharistic vestments. Sometimes it is ornamented, near the hem, with strips of embroidery or other coloured material, known as 'apparels'. The alb was taken to symbolize purity, and it was customary for the celebrant to say 'Make me white . . .' when putting it on. Albs of silk and in colours have also sometimes been used.

Braun, LG pp. 57–92 (ch. 3). C. Calleweart, 'De Alba Liturgica', Collationes Brugenses, 25 (1925), pp. 370–4, repr. in his Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), no. 20, pp. 211–14.

Alban, St, the first British martyr (Protomartyr Anglorum). His martyrdom has traditionally been connected with the *Diocletianic persecution (c.305), but most modern scholars have accepted the reading preserved in a Turin MS (D.V. 3), according to which he suffered under Septimius Severus (c.209). According to all sources he was a pagan of Verulamium (now *St Albans in Herts) who was converted and baptized by a fugitive priest whom he sheltered. When the Emperor sent soldiers to search the house, Alban disguised himself in the priest's cloak, was arrested, and condemned to death. The priest, traditionally named Amphibalus from some confusion with the cloak (amphibalus), is said to have been stoned to death a few days later at Redbourn. St Alban is commemorated by *Venantius Fortunatus (c.580) in the line Albanum egregium fecunda Britannia profert. His shrine still stands in St Albans Abbey. He is not to be identified with the St Alban venerated at Cologne. Feast day, 22 June (dropped from the RC Calendar of 1969; now observed locally on 20 June); 17 June in the BCP (prob. by a misreading of xxii as xvii).

AASS, Jun. 4 (1707), pp. 146–70; W. Meyer, 'Die Legende des h. Albanus des Protomartyr Angliae in Texten vor Beda', Abh. (Gött.), NS 8, No. 1 (1904). Life in verse by John Lydgate (d. c.1450), ed. J. E. van der Westhuizen (Leiden, 1974). For various forms of the legend see Hardy, 1, pp. 3–30. W. Levison, 'St Alban and St Albans', Antiquity, 15 (1941), pp. 337–59. J. Morris, 'The Date of Saint Alban', Hertfordshire Archaeology, 1 (1968), pp. 1–8.

Alban, St, and St Sergius, Fellowship of. An organization, founded in 1928, which aims at promoting better understanding between Christians, and particularly between the Anglican and Orthodox Churches, by means of prayer, meetings, conferences, and the publication of the periodical Sobornost (from 1979 incorporating Eastern Churches Review). It maintains a permanent centre (now in Oxford) and has branches in various parts of England.

Journal of the Fellowship of S. Alban and S. Sergius. Quarterly (London, 1928–33, typewritten; 1934, printed); Sobornost (ibid., 1935 ff.). N. Zernov in R. Rouse and S. C. Neill (eds.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement, 1517–1948 (1954), pp. 662–4. N. and M. Zernov, The Fellowship of St Alban & St Sergius: A Historical Memoir (Oxford, 1979).

Albania, Christianity in. Christianity probably reached what is now Albania at an early date through traders from Epirus and Macedonia, but with the fall of the W. Empire in the 5th and 6th cents. its influence was largely destroyed. In the Dark Ages, the native Illyrians, who later became known as Albanians, were partly conquered by Slav invaders from the N. In the 9th cent. some of the Albanians were incorporated into the Bulgarian realm (thus adhering to Eastern *Orthodox Christianity), and in the 11th cent. fell under *Serbian sway. At the religious schism between E. and W. a section of Albanians transferred their religious allegiance from *Constantinople to Rome. In 1389 the medieval Serbian Empire, into which the Albanians were later incorporated, fell to the Turks, who overran the country. Nevertheless, for ninety years resistance was effectively made to the Turkish power, esp. under G. K. Skanderbeg (1403–68), a national leader who maintained an independent kingdom in Upper Albania from 1443 till his death. He also encouraged his followers to abandon Orthodoxy for Rome. Many remained faithful to Orthodoxy, however, and under centuries of Turkish rule the proportion of Orthodox to Latins increased. Although the Turks, who finally subjugated Albania in 1521, treated the Albanians as allies rather than subjects, imperial favour was dependent upon the profession of *Islam, and there was much apostasy. Local Turkish lords indulged for centuries in every kind of persecution. In 1913 Albania became independent and the Orthodox Albanian Church became autocephalous in 1922. Under Communist rule after the Second World War, all places of worship were closed. When the outward practice of religion was again allowed in 1991, there were no Orthodox bishops surviving and only a few priests. The *Oecumenical Patriarch appointed Anastasios Yannoulatos acting Exarch in 1991. The following year he became Abp. of Tirana and full Exarch. Other bishops have since been appointed.

W. Peacock, Albania: The Foundling State of Europe (1914). D. Attwater, The Christian Churches of the East, 2 (1961), pp. 119–21. P. R. Prifti, Socialist Albania since 1944 [1978], pp. 150–66 ('The Abolition of Religion'); P. Walters (ed.), World Christianity: Eastern Europe (Keston Book, 29; Eastbourne, 1988), pp. 237–46. M. Lacko in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 246 f., s.v.; G. Stadtmüller and B. Spuler in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 160–7, s.v. 'Albanien', with bibl.

Albert of Brandenburg (1490–1545), Cardinal Abp. and Elector of Mainz. He was successively a prebendary of Mainz (1509), Abp. of Magdeburg (1513), and Abp. of Mainz (1514). In 1518 he was created cardinal. Entrusted by *Leo X in 1517 with the publication in Saxony and Brandenburg of the Indulgence for *St Peter's in Rome, he secured the services of the notorious *Dominican, J. *Tetzel, to preach it. He was himself a man of liberal ideas and a friend of the humanists, notably of Ulrich von *Hutten, but he was never a supporter of M. *Luther's ideas. Having temporized somewhat during the *Peasants' War (1525), he threw in his lot with the German Catholic princes at the Dessau Meeting (1525). He was a resolute defender of the Papacy, though he tried to discourage extreme measures against the Protestants. In 1538 he took part in the Nuremberg Meeting which opposed the League of *Schmalkalden. In 1542 he became, through the influence of the *Jesuit Peter Faber, who resided in his diocese for a year, a warm admirer of the new Order, and in his last years worked strenuously on its behalf.

Crit. text of 9 primary documents by P. Fabisch and E. Iserloh, Dokumente zur Causa Lutheri (1517–1521), 1 (Corpus Catholicorum, 41; 1988), pp. 202–309. J. May, Der Kurfürst, Cardinal und Erzbischof Albrecht II von Mainz und Magdeburg (2 vols., 1865–75). F. Jürgensmeier (ed.), Erzbischof Albrecht von Brandenberg (1490–1545): Ein Kirchen- und Reichsfürst der Frühen Neuzeit (Beiträge zur Mainzer Kirchengeschichte, 3; Frankfurt am Main, 1991). F. Winkler, Das Gebetbuch des Kardinal Albrecht von Brandenburg (1962). F. Schrader, 'Kardinal Albrecht von Brandenburg, Erzbischof von Magdeburg, im Spannungsfeld zwischen alter und neuer Kirche', in R. Bäumer (ed.), Von Konstanz nach Trient . . .: Festgabe für August Franzen (Paderborn, etc., 1972), pp. 419–45. G. A. Benrath in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 184–7, s.v. 'Albrecht von Mainz'.

Albert of Prussia (1490–1568). The last Grand Master of the *Teutonic Order and first Hohenzollern Duke of Prussia. Albert von Brandenburg-Ansbach was drawn towards *Lutheranism by A. *Osiander at the Diet of Nuremberg in 1522, and, with M. *Luther's support, determined to make Prussia a hereditary Duchy. In 1525 he achieved this end, but was obliged to recognize the Polish King as suzerain. In the same year he married Dorothea of Denmark. He encouraged education, established schools in his duchy, and founded the university of Königsberg in 1544, where he appointed Osiander professor in 1549. After the quarrel between the latter and P. *Melanchthon over *justification by faith, a strict form of Lutheranism was established in his dominions.

E. M. Wermter (ed.), Kardinal Stanislaus Hosius Bischof von Ermland und Herzog Albrecht von Preussen: Ihr Briefwechsel über das Konzil von Trient (1560–62) (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 82; 1957). P. G. Thielen, Die Kultur am Hofe Herzog Albrechts von Preussen (1525–1568) (1953); W. Hubatsch, Albrecht von Brandenburg-Ansbach (Heidelberg, 1960); H. Freiwald, Markgraf Albrecht von Ansbach-Kulmbach und seine Landständische Politik als Deutschordens-Hochmeister und Herzog in Preussen während der Entscheidungsjahre 1521–1528 (1961); J. R. Fligge, Herzog Albrecht von Preussen und der Osiandrismus, 1522–1568 (Bonn diss., 1972). W. Hubatsch in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 188–93, s.v. 'Albrecht von Preussen', with extensive bibl.

Albert the Great, St. See ALBERTUS MAGNUS, ST.

Albertus Magnus, St (d. 1280, over 80 years old), theologian, philosopher, and scientist. Born of knightly stock at Lauingen on the Danube, near Ulm, he studied at Padua, where he entered the *Dominican Order, prob. in 1229. He returned almost immediately to *Cologne to study theology, and then became lecturer in the Dominican houses of Hildesheim, Freiberg (in Saxony), Ratisbon, and Strasbourg. From his earliest years he was keenly interested in natural science and went out of his way to observe curious natural phenomena. During his early years as a teacher he wrote his first theological work, the De Natura Boni. Between 1240 and 1244 he was sent to the university of *Paris and from 1245 to 1248 he held one of the Dominican chairs in theology; from 1246 he had St *Thomas Aquinas among his pupils. In 1248 he was sent back to Cologne to take charge of the new international Dominican house of studies. He composed a Summa de Creaturis (completed by 1246), a commentary on the Sentences of *Peter Lombard (completed in 1249), and a set of lectures on all the writings of *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite (completed in 1250). In Cologne he lectured on the new, complete translation of *Aristotle's Ethics and embarked, at the request of his students, on the huge project of making the complete Aristotelian corpus 'intelligible to the Latins', a work which occupied much of the rest of his life. In addition to his teaching and writing, he was often employed as arbitrator in ecclesiastical disputes. From 1254 to 1257 he was Provincial of Germany. In 1256 he visited the Papal court, prob. because Alexander IV wanted to consult him about an apparent growth of heterodox Aristotelianism in Paris; he conducted a disputation there against the doctrine of the non-individual nature of the intellect attributed to *Averroes, and was also incidentally present at the condemnation of William of St Amour (d. 1272), the leading Parisian enemy of the *mendicants. In 1260, at the Pope's insistence, he became Bp. of Ratisbon, where he quickly managed to set the spiritual and material affairs of the diocese in better order. In 1261 he went to the papal court to tender his resignation, which was accepted by Urban IV in 1262, though Albert remained in the Papal entourage until 1263, when he was sent back to Germany as Papal emissary to preach the crusade and perform a variety of other tasks. Between 1264 and 1267 he prob. lived in the Dominican house in Würzburg. In 1268 he was teaching in Strasbourg, and in 1269 or 1270 he returned to Cologne, where he was still teaching in 1277. In 1274 he assisted at the Second Council of *Lyons, and in 1277 he intervened to prevent the condemnation of Thomas Aquinas in Paris, though it is not certain that he went to Paris in person.

Albert taught at a time when many theologians were reacting against the various influences coming from the E., including Greek negative (or apophatic) theology and the new Aristotelianism mediated by Arab and Jewish commentators, and in particular against some of the philosophical tenets learned from Aristotle. Albert insisted that philosophical problems must be faced honestly and dealt with philosophically, and he defended unpopular theses on the incomprehensibility of God and the nature of human self-knowledge, for instance. He commented on almost the whole Aristotelian corpus, including the Liber de Causis, which he believed to be the crown of *peripatetic philosophy, though he did not accept its ascription to Aristotle. His own observations of natural phenomena allowed him to expand Aristotle's naturalia considerably. He also wrote on mathematics. His philosophical works won him considerable acclaim. He also wrote several biblical commentaries and, towards the end of his life, embarked on a Summa Theologiae.

Apart from his very profound influence on Thomas Aquinas, he initiated a more *Neoplatonist kind of speculation, which flourished among the German Dominicans, such as Ulrich of Strasbourg (d. 1277), Dietrich of Freiberg (d. after 1310), and Berthold of Moosburg (d. after 1361). In the 15th cent. an 'Albertist' school was recognized, esp. in Cologne, as distinct from the 'Thomists', and he remained influential, particularly among philosophers. His more popular fame, though, rested to some extent on works falsely ascribed to him, such as the De adhaerendo Deo (prob. the work of John of Kastl, d. after 1418) and a variety of works on magic and alchemy. There has been a revival of interest in his genuine writings in the 20th cent.

Albert was beatified in 1622 and canonized and declared a *Doctor of the Church by *Pius XI in 1931. In 1941 *Pius XII proclaimed him patron of natural scientists. Feast day, 15 Nov.

Works, ed. P. Jammy (21 vols., Lyons, 1651), A. Borgnet (38 vols., Paris, 1890–9), and by B. Geyer and others (Münster i. W., 1951 ff.). De Animalibus, ed. H. Stadler (BGPM 15–16; 1916–21); some of the sermons ed. J. B. Schneyer in RTAM 36 (1969), pp. 100–47, and by B. Geyer, Die Universitätspredigten des Albertus Magnus (Sb. (Bayr.), 1966, Heft 3); Quaestio Disputata de Prophetia, ed. J. P. Torrell, RSTP 65 (1981), pp. 5–53 and 197–232; part of the comm. on Euclid, ed. P. M. J. E. Tummers (Leiden Diss., 2 vols., Nijmegen, 1984). Eng. tr. of his comm. on Dionysius' Mystical Theology by S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, Albert & Thomas: Selected Writings (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1988), pp. 131–98, with important introd., pp. 1–129.

P. de Loë, OP, 'De Vita et Scriptis B. Alberti Magni', Anal. Boll. 19 (1900), pp. 257–84; 20 (1901), pp. 273–316; and 21 (1902), pp. 361–71. F. Pelster, SJ, Kritische Studien zum Leben

und zu den Schriften des Alberts des Grossen (Freiburg i. B., 1920); H. C. Scheeben, Albert der Grosse: Zur Chronologie seines Lebens (Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte des Dominikanerordens in Deutschland, 27; Vechta, 1931). G. Meersseman, OP, Introductio in Opera Omnia B. Alberti Magni (Bruges, 1931). E. *Gilson, 'L'Âme raisonnable chez Albert le Grand', AHDLMA 14 (1943), pp. 5–72. H. Ostlender (ed.), Studia Albertina: Festschrift für Bernhard Geyer zum 70. Geburtstage (BGPM Suppl. 4; 1952). A. Fries, CSSR, Die unter dem Namen des Albertus Magnus überlieferten Mariologischen Schriften (BGPM 17, Heft 4; 1954); id., Die Gedanken des heiligen Albertus Magnus über die Gottesmutter (Thomistische Studien, 7; 1958). F. Ruello, Les 'Noms Divins' et les 'Raisons' selon Saint Albert le Grand (Bibliothèque Thomiste, 25; 1963). P. Michaud-Quantin, La Psychologie de l'Activité chez Albert le Grand (ibid. 36; 1966). J. Schneider, Das Gute und die Liebe nach der Lehre Alberts des Grossen (Veröffentlichungen des Grabmann-Institutes, NS 3; 1967). F.-J. Nocke, Sakrament und personaler Vollzug bei Albertus Magnus (BGPM 41, Heft 4; 1967). L. Hödl, 'Albert der Grosse und die Wende der lateinischen Philosophie im 13. Jahrundert', in Virtus Politica: Festgabe zum 75. Geburtstag von Alfons Hugnagel (Stuttgart, 1974), pp. 251–75. Archives de Philosophie, 43 (1980), pp. 529–711 (special issue for the 7th centenary of Albert's death); F. J. Kovack and R. W. Shahan (eds.), Albert the Great: Commemorative Essays (Norman, Okla. [1980]); G. Meyer, OP, and A. Zimmermann (eds.), Albertus Magnus, Doctor Universalis, 1280/1980 (Walberger Studien, Philosophische Reihe, 6; Mainz, 1980); J. A. Weisheipl, OP (ed.), Albertus Magnus and the Sciences (Studies and Texts, 49; Toronto, 1980); RSTP 65 (1981), pp. 55–99 (special issue for the 7th centenary of Albert's death). P. Hossfeld, Albertus Magnus als Naturphilosoph und Naturwissenschaftler (Bonn, 1983). A. Fries, Der Doppeltraktat über die Eucharistie unter dem Namen des Albertus Magnus (BGPM NS 25; 1984). A. de Libera, Introduction à la Mystique Rhénane d'Albert le Grand à Maître Eckhart [1984], esp. pp. 37–56. B. Thomassen, Metaphysik als Lebensform: Untersuchungen zur Grundlegung der Metaphysik im Metaphysikkommentar Alberts des Grossen (BGPM NS, 27; 1985). E. Gilson, History of Christian Philosophy in the Middle Ages (1955), pp. 277–94 and 666–73. F. Van Steenberghen, La Philosophie au XIIIe siècle (2nd edn., Philosophes Médiévaux, 28; 1991), pp. 245–75. J. A. Weisheipl, OP, in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 254–8, s.v.

Albigenses. A medieval term for the inhabitants of parts of S. France, and hence applied to the heretics who were strong there in the late 12th and early 13th cents. These were a branch of the *Cathari (q.v.). The Albigenses were condemned by successive Councils, at Lombers in 1165 and at *Verona in 1184. *Innocent III promoted a series of preaching missions, but after the assassination of the Papal legate Peter of Castelnau in 1208, he authorized a *Crusade against them. The expedition led to a long period of warfare in S. France, in which the N. French forces, led by Simon de Montfort, were opposed, not only by those who sympathized with heresy, but by a great part of S. French society. The Treaty of Paris in 1229 prepared the way for the incorporation of Languedoc into the domain of the French monarchy and marked the victory of the Catholic forces. In 1233 a new procedure, the *Inquisition, began effective action against the heretics. By 1300, these survived only in a few remote outposts.

For their beliefs, see CATHARI.

The main sources are the records of the prosecutions. C. Douais (ed.), Les Sources de l'histoire de l'Inquisition dans le midi de la France (1881); id., Documents pour servir à l'histoire de l'Inquisition dans le Languedoc (2 vols., 'Société de l'Histoire de France', 1900); J. Duvernoy (ed.), Le Régistre d'Inquisition de Jacques Fournier, évêque de Pamiers (1318–1325) (Bibliothèque Méridionale, 2nd ser. 41; 3 vols., Toulouse, 1965). C. Thouzellier, Catharisme et Valdéisme en Languedoc à la Fin du XIIe et au Début du XIIIe Siècle (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de Paris, Série 'Recherches', 27; 1966; 2nd edn., 1969). E. Griffe, Les débuts de l'aventure cathare en Languedoc (1140–1190) (1969); id., Le Languedoc cathare de 1190 à 1210 (1971); id., Le Languedoc cathare au temps de la Croisade (1209–1229) (1973); id., Le Languedoc cathare et l'Inquisition (1229–1329) (1980). There has been much modern work on the Albigensian Crusades, and the results are presented in J. R. Strayer, The Albigensian Crusades (New York, 1971); W. L. Wakefield, Heresy, Crusade and Inquisition in Southern France 1100–1250 (1974); and J. [P. C.] Sumption, The Albigensian Crusade (1978). Account of life in a village where the Albigenses had strong support, based on the register of Jacques Fournier [later *Benedict XII], by E. Le Roy Ladurie, Les Paysans de Languedoc (1966; shorter version, 1969; Eng. tr., 1976; revised edn., Montaillou, village occitan de 1294 à 1324, 1975, revised edn., 1982; abbrev. Eng. tr., 1978). R. Manselli and Y. Dossat in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 1 (1980), cols. 302–7, s.v. 'Albigenser'. There is much valuable material in the annual Cahiers de Fanjeaux (Toulouse, 1966 ff.). See also works cited under CATHARI and INQUISITION.

Albright Brethren. See EVANGELICAL CHURCH.

Alcoran. See KORAN.

Alcuin (*c.*740–804), a major contributor to the *Carolingian Renaissance. A native of Northumberland, he was educated at the cathedral school of *York. Under Aelberht, Bishop (767–73) and Archbishop (773–78) of York, he visited Rome and the Frankish court and helped create a library at the cathedral, the contents of which are evoked in his poem 'On the Bishops, Kings, and Saints of York'. Following a meeting with *Charlemagne at Parma in 781 he was invited to join his court and the scholars already there. He was in England in 786 and again in 790–93, but, whether reluctantly or not, France was his normal country of residence until his death in 804. From 796 he was Abbot of St Martin's at Tours. A competent and versatile scholar, he appears to have had a particular talent for instruction, and both at the court and at Tours he played an important role in developing the resources of contemporary ecclesiastical culture. His extant literary production includes a quantity of biblical exegesis; a major work on the Trinity; three treatises directed against the *Adoptianism of Felix of Urgel, whom he opposed in person at the Council of Aachen in 799 or 800; moral and philosophical writings; 'Lives' of the saints *Willibrord, *Vedast, Richarius, and *Martin (the last of these in verse); manuals of grammar, rhetoric, dialectic, orthography, and mathematics; an abundant correspondence (mainly from the period after 793); and poems on a wide variety of subjects. As Abbot of St Martin's, Alcuin supervised the production of several pandects (or complete editions) of the Bible written in a fully developed 'Caroline minuscule'; his preference for the *Vulgate text probably contributed to its final acceptance in the W. At different times in his career he also revised the Roman *Lectionary and adapted the *Gregorian Sacramentary for use in Gaul by incorporating certain *Gelasian elements and adding a series of *votive and festal Masses of his own composition. (The supplement to the Sacramentary sent by Pope *Hadrian I to Charlemagne, known as the *'Hucusque', which was long attributed to Alcuin, is now thought to be the work of *Benedict of Aniane.) In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 20 May.

Works ed. by A. Quercetanus (Paris, 1617) and Frobenius Forster (2 vols., Ratisbon, 1777), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 100 and 101. Critical edns. of poems by E. Dümmler in MGH, Poetae Latini Medii Aevi, 1, pt. 1 (1880), of letters by id. in MGH, Epistolae, 4 (1895), pp. 1–493, of Liber contra haeresim Felicis by G. B. Blumenshine (ST 285; 1980), and of 'The Bishops, Kings, and Saints of York' by P. Godman (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1982), with Eng. tr. and valuable introd. Alcuin's votive Masses ed. by J. Deshusses, OSB, in Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, 14 (1972), pp. 7–41. Text of a book of private prayers, attributable to Alcuin or to a member of his circle, ed. A. *Wilmart, OSB, Precum Libelli Quattuor Aevi Karolini, 1 (Rome, 1940), pp. 9–30. Selections from his letters in Eng. tr. by S. Allot (York, 1974). There is an early Life of Alcuin written between 823 and 829, pr. among his works (J. P. Migne, PL 100, cols. 89–106) and critically ed. by W. Arndt in MGH, Scriptores, 15, pt. 1 (1887), pp. 182–97. E. Dümmler, 'Zur Lebensgeschichte Alchvins', NA 18 (1893), pp. 53–70. Modern biographies by C. J. B. Gaskoin (London, 1904), A. Kleinclausz (Annales de l'Université de Lyon, 3rd ser., fasc. 15; Paris, 1948), and E. S. Duckett (New York, 1951). M. Roger, L'Enseignement des lettres classiques d'Ausone à Alcuin (1905), pp. 313–402, 440–8. A. Wilmart, OSB, 'Le lectionnaire d'Alcuin', EL 51 (1937), pp. 136–97. W. Levison, England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Oxford, 1946), esp. pp. 148–73. B. Fischer, OSB, Die Alkuin Bibel (Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel, 1; Freiburg i. Br., 1957). G. Ellard, SJ, Master Alcuin, Liturgist (Chicago, 1956). L. Wallach, Alcuin and Charlemagne: Studies in Carolingian History and Literature (Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, 32; Ithaca, NY, 1959). B. Bischoff (ed.), Karl der Grosse: Lebenswerk und Nachleben, 2: Das geistige Leben (Düsseldorf, 1965). W. Heil, Alkuinstudien, 1: Zur Chronologie und Bedeutung des Adoptianismusstreites (Düsseldorf, 1970). J. Deshusses, OSB, 'Les anciens sacramentaires de Tours', R. Bén. 89 (1979), pp. 281–302, with refs. to other arts. by this scholar. J. Marenbon, From the Circle of Alcuin to the School of Auxerre: Logic, Theology and Philosophy in the Early Middle Ages (Cambridge, 1981), pp. 30–66. D. A. Bullough, 'Alcuin and the Kingdom of Heaven', in U.-R. Blumenthal (ed.), Carolingian Essays (Washington, DC [1983]), pp. 1–69; repr. in Bullough, Carolingian Renewal: Sources and Heritage (Manchester and New York, 1991), pp. 161–240. D. Schaller in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 1 (1978), cols. 241–53; W. Heil in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 266–76, both s.v. 'Alkuin', with bibl.

Alcuin Club. An Anglican society founded in 1897 'to encourage and assist in the practical study of ceremonial, and the arrangement of churches, their furniture and ornaments, in accordance with the rubrics of the BCP, strict obedience to which is the guiding principle of the Club'. In recent years its widening sympathies have been recognized by a modification of its expressed aims, which are now said to be the promotion of 'the study of Christian liturgy in general, and in particular the liturgies of the Anglican Communion'. It has issued several series of publications.

P. J. Jagger, The Alcuin Club and its Publications 1897–1987: An Annotated Bibliography (2nd edn. [1986]).

Aldhelm, St (d. 709), first Bp. of *Sherborne. The details of his life are uncertain as they derive from the two late (12th-cent.) writers Faricius of Abingdon and *William of Malmesbury. He was a near relation of Ine, King of Wessex. About 675 he became Abbot of *Malmesbury and in 705 Bp. of the new diocese of Sherborne, when the old see of Wessex was divided. He took a prominent part in the reforming movement initiated by Abp. *Theodore and the monk Hadrian, and founded some monasteries as well as several churches. According to William of Malmesbury, he built the small church at Bradford-on-Avon dedicated to St Lawrence; some work of Aldhelm's date may survive. Much of his Latin writing, composed in a flamboyant style studded with apparently learned words and drawing on an impressively wide range of authorities, survives to attest his learning. He was held in high repute as a poet, but none of his English poems has been preserved. Feast day, 25 May.

Works, with Vita by Faricius, ed. J. A. Giles (Oxford, 1844), repr. J. P. Migne, PL 89. 63–314. Modern edn. of Works by R. Ehwald in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 15 (1913–19). Facsimile of De Laudibus Virginitatis with Latin and Old English Glosses. MS 1650 of the Royal Library in Brussels, with introd. by G. van Langenhove (Rijksuniversiteit te Gent. Werken uitgegeven door de Faculteit van de Wijsbegeerte en Letteren. Extra Series: Facsimiles, 2; Brussels, 1941). Eng. tr. of his Prose Works by M. Lapidge and M. Herren (Ipswich and Cambridge, 1979), with introd.; and of his Poetic Works by M. Lapidge and J. L. Rosier (ibid., 1985), with introd. Life by William of Malmesbury, ed. N. E. S. A. Hamilton, Gesta Pontificum Anglorum, bk. 5 (RS, 1870), pp. 330–443. G. F. Browne, St Aldhelm (1903); W. B. Wildman, Life of St Ealdhelm (1905). M. Winterbottom, 'Aldhelm's Prose Style and its Origins', Anglo-Saxon England, 6 (1977), pp. 39–76; M. Lapidge, 'Aldhelm's Latin Poetry and Old English Verse', Comparative Literature, 31 (1979), pp. 209–31. See also A. S. Cook, Sources for the Biography of Aldhelm (Transactions of the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, 28; 1927).

Aldrich, Henry (1647–1710), Dean of *Christ Church. Educated at Westminster and at Christ Church, Oxford, he became Canon of Christ Church in 1682, and in 1689, as an opponent of the High Church party and as a supporter of the Revolution, was appointed to succeed the RC Dean, J. Massey. He was remarkable for his versatility. His Artis Logicae Compendium (1691; revised by H. L. *Mansel, 1849) remained a standard textbook until the end of the 19th cent. He was a skilful architect, and Peckwater Quadrangle and other buildings in Oxford are ascribed to him. He also composed several anthems largely based on Italian models.

W. G. Hiscock, Henry Aldrich of Christ Church 1648–1710 (privately pr., Oxford, 1960).

Aleander, Girolamo (1480–1542), humanist scholar. Educated at Venice and Padua, at the suggestion of *Erasmus in 1508 he went to seek his fortune in Paris, where he gave lectures on Greek. There he also graduated and in 1513 was chosen Rector of the University. The important part that he took in the history of the Reformation began with his appointment by *Leo X as one of the two Papal envoys commissioned to present M. *Luther with the bull '*Exsurge Domine', and to negotiate with the Emperor for support against him. In his Ash Wednesday sermon (13 Feb. 1521) at the Diet of *Worms, he vigorously denounced Luther and demanded his condemnation without trial. Unlike many at Rome, Aleander was never in doubt either as to the fact of Luther's popularity in Germany or as to the pressing need for disciplinary reform in the Church. In 1524 he was appointed Abp. of Brindisi and in 1538 a cardinal.

H. Omont, 'Journal Autobiographique du Cardinal Jérôme Aléandre (1480—1530): Notices des Manuscrits de Paris et Udine', Notices et Extraits des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale, 35 (1896), pp. 1–116, incl. text. T. Brieger, Aleander und Luther, 1521 (Gotha, 1884). W. Friedensburg (ed.), Legation Aleanders 1538 1539 (Nuntiaturberichte aus Deutschland, Abt. 1: 1533–1559, 3–4; 1893); G. Müller (ed.), Legation Lorenzo Campeggios [1530–32] und Nuntiatur Girolamo Aleandros [1531–2] (ibid., Ergänzbände 1–2; 1963–9); J. Hoyoux (ed.), Le Carnet de Voyage de Jérôme Aléandre en France et à Liège (1510–1516) (Bibliothèque de l'Institut Historique Belge de Rome, 18; 1969). J. Paquier, Jérôme Aléandre de sa naissance à la fin de son séjour à Brindes, 1480–1529 (1900). P. Kalkoff, Aleander gegen Luther (1908); id., 'Zur Charakteristik Aleanders', ZKG 43 (1924), pp. 209–19. F. Gaeta, Un Nunzio Pontificio a Venezia nel Cinquecento (Civiltà Veneziana, Saggi, 9; 1960). G. Alberigo in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 2 (1960), pp. 128–35; G. Müller in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 227–31, both s.v. 'Aleandro'. Further bibl. in Schottenloher, 1 (1933), pp. 11–13.

Alembert, J. le R. D'. See D'ALEMBERT, J. LE R.

aleph (א). The first letter of the Hebrew alphabet, numerically equivalent to one. Textual critics of the NT use it to denote the *Codex Sinaiticus.

Alesius, Alexander (1500–65), alternatively 'Aless' or 'Alane', Scottish *Lutheran divine. A native of Edinburgh, he studied at St Andrews, where he became a canon. Selected in 1527 to confute Patrick *Hamilton, who had become an adherent of Lutheran doctrines, he was himself won over by Hamilton's arguments and steadfastness at the stake (1528), and shortly after delivered a Latin sermon at St Andrews attacking the morals of the clergy for which he was imprisoned. In 1532 he escaped to Germany, where in 1533 he made the acquaintance of M. *Luther and P. *Melanchthon at *Wittenberg and signed the *Augsburg Confession. In the same year he wrote against a Scottish decree forbidding the laity to read the Bible and in 1534 he was excommunicated at Holyrood. In 1535 he brought a letter to England from Melanchthon to *Henry VIII. On his arrival he was warmly welcomed, esp. by T. *Cranmer, and T. *Cromwell, the new chancellor, made him a divinity lecturer at Cambridge. The opposition to his Protestantism, however, soon caused him to leave Cambridge and for a time he practised in London, as a physician, where at Cromwell's request he disputed with J. Stokesley, Bp. of London, on the number of the Sacraments. After the passing of the Act of *Six Articles (1539) he left again for Germany and in 1540 became professor of theology at Frankfurt-on-Oder. After various other academic offices and missions in the cause of the Reformation, he may have revisited England under *Edward VI, when he was employed by Cranmer to translate parts of the First BCP of 1549 into Latin (pub. Leipzig, 1551) for the information of M. *Bucer and *Peter Martyr. He was the author of many exegetical and controversial writings.

J. Thomasius, Orationes (Leipzig, 1683), Oratio 14, delivered at Leipzig on 20 Apr. 1661, pp. 300–22. G. Wiedermann, 'Alexander Alesius' Lectures on the Psalms at Cambridge, 1536', JEH 37 (1986), pp. 15–41. J. E. McGoldrick, Luther's Scottish Connection (Cranbury, NJ, etc. [1989]), pp. 58–60. A. W. Ward in DNB 1 (1885), pp. 254–9, s.v., with further refs.

Alexander, St (d. 328), Bp. of *Alexandria from 312. He was actively concerned in putting down the *Melitian and *Arian schisms. At a council of his clergy at Alexandria *c.*321 he excommunicated *Arius, one of his presbyters, who shortly before had begun to propagate his doctrines. He then got into touch with the leading theologian of the W., Bp. *Hosius of Córdoba, and, with the energetic support of his deacon *Athanasius (who was shortly afterwards to succeed him in his see), took a leading part at the Council of *Nicaea. Two of his Epistles survive (*Theodoret, HE 1. 4; *Socrates, HE 1. 6). Also ascribed to him is a 'Sermo de Anima et Corpore deque Passione Domini', which survives in Syriac, Coptic, and Georgian, as well as in two Gk. fragments. Feast day, in the W., 26 Feb.; in the Greek Church, 29 May; in the *Coptic Church, 22 April.

Collected edn. of his writings in J. P. Migne, PG 18. 523–608. Crit. edn. of Epp. in H. G. Opitz (ed.), Athanasius Werke, 3, Lief. 1–2 (1934–5), pp. 6–11, 19–31. G. Bardy, 'Saint Alexandre d'Alexandrie a-t-il connu la Thalie d'Arius?' in Rev. SR 6 (1926), pp. 527–32. W. Schneemelcher, 'Der Sermo "De Anima et corpore". Ein Werk Alexanders von Alexandrien?', in id. (ed.), Festschrift für Günther Dehn (Neukirchen, 1957), pp. 119–43. Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 34–41; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 269 and 602; CPG 2 (1974), pp. 1–4 (nos. 2000–21). C. Kannengiesser, SJ, in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 132 f., s.v. 'Alessandro di Alesandria'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 20.

Alexander II (d. 1073), Bp. Anselm I of Lucca (1056–73) and Pope from 1061. A native of Baggio, nr. Milan, he supported the *Patarenes. In order to dispose of him the Abp. of Milan sent him on a mission to the Emp. Henry III (1039–56). In 1056 he became Bp. of Lucca. Elected Pope in 1061 with the support of Hildebrand (later *Gregory VII), he was enthroned without the support of *Henry IV (1056–1106), who had an antipope (Honorius II) elected. Although the schism was not entirely ended until Honorius' death (1072), Alexander was generally recognized, except in Parma, after the Synod of Mantua of 1064. As Pope he tried to realize the ideals of the reforming party. He dispatched legates to Lombardy, France, Spain, and England and held four synods at Rome. He renewed the decrees against simony and enforcing clerical celibacy, adding a prohibition against attendance at the Mass of an incontinent priest, laid down regulations for the freedom of episcopal elections, and legislated on marriage. He took strong action to enforce these measures, summoning to Rome the Abps. of Mainz and Cologne and the Bp. of Bamberg, and deposing the Abp. of Milan for simony. He strengthened the influence of the Papacy by insisting on personal attendance at Rome before he would confer the *pallium, and he persuaded Philip I of France to accord the same significance to Papal decrees as to canons. His blessing was asked and given to William of Normandy's invasion of England (1066). The last important act of his pontificate was his excommunication of the advisers of Henry IV. His considerable stature as a Pope and as a moderate and diplomatic reformer has become more widely appreciated in modern times. He is not to be confounded with (St) *Anselm of Lucca (*c.*1035–1088, q.v.).

146 genuine and six doubtful letters or bulls printed in J. P. Migne, PL 146, 1279–1430. O. Delarc, Saint Grégoire VII et la réforme de l'Église au XIe siècle, 2 (1889), pp. 161–526. T. Schmidt, Alexander II. (1061–1073) und die römische Reformgruppe seiner Zeit (Päpste und Papsttum, 11; 1977). A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, 1 (SSL, fasc. 6; 1924), pp. 341–84; Mann, 6 (1925), pp. 261–369; A. Fliche in Fliche and Martin, 8 (1944), pp. 31–54. C. Violante in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 2 (1960), pp. 176–83, s.v. 'Alessandro II', with bibl.

Alexander III (d. 1181), Pope. Orlando ('Roland') Bandinelli first rose to prominence as a teacher, prob. at *Bologna. Papal chancellor under *Eugenius III, he exercised a strong influence on *Hadrian IV, whom he succeeded in 1159. An *antipope, Victor IV, was immediately set up and supported by the Emp. *Frederick I (Barbarossa). The schism lasted for 17 years and was ended only by the acceptance of Alexander by the Emperor at Venice in 1177. During the schism, Alexander lived mostly in France, where he was brought into close contact with Henry II of England in the affair of *Becket. The Pope as a subtle diplomatist was embarrassed by the impetuous Archbishop, but showed himself very firm in imposing penance upon Henry for Becket's murder. In 1179 he assembled and presided over the Third *Lateran Council, one of the most important measures of which was to vest the exclusive right of electing a Pope in a two-thirds majority of the cardinals. He strongly encouraged the scholastic revival of the 12th cent. It is, however, unlikely that he was the author of the commentary on the 'Decretum' of *Gratian or the 'Sententiae Rolandi' which were long attributed to him; they appear to be the work of a different Magister Rolandus. The city of Alessandria, founded in the plain of Lombardy at this time, was named after Alexander in gratitude for his support of the liberties of the Lombard Communes against Barbarossa.

Much of his Correspondence in J. P. Migne, PL 200; further letters and information on his part in the Becket controversy in J. C. Robertson and J. B. Sheppard (eds.), Materials for the History of Thomas Becket, 5–7 (RS 1881–5); see also Jaffé, 2, pp. 145–418. W. Holtzmann, 'Die Register Papst Alexander III. in den Händen der Kanonisten', Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, 30 (1940), pp. 13–87. The chief authority up to 1178 is the account by Card. Boso, his favourite Cardinal, in LP (Duchesne), 2, pp. 397–446; Eng. tr. by G. M. Ellis (Oxford, 1973), with introd. by P. Munz. H. Reuter, Geschichte Alexanders des Dritten und der Kirche seiner Zeit (3 vols., 1845; 2nd edn., Leipzig, 1860). M. Pacaut, Alexandre III: Étude sur la Conception du Pouvoir Pontifical dans sa Pensée et dans son Œuvre (1956). M. W. Baldwin, Alexander III and the Twelfth Century (Glen Rock, NJ, 1968). R. Somerville, Pope Alexander III and the Council of Tours (1163) [1977]. J. T. Noonan, 'Who was Rolandus?', in K. Pennington and R. Somerville (eds.), Law, Church, and Society: Essays in Honor of Stephan Kuttner (Philadelphia, 1977), pp. 21–48; R. Weigand, 'Magister Rolandus und Papst Alexander III.', Archiv für katholisches Kirchenrecht, 149 (1980), pp. 3–44; F. Liotta (ed.), Miscellanea Rolando Bandinelli, Papa Alessandro III (Siena, 1986). Mann, 10 (1925), pp. 1–238, with full refs. P. Brezzi in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 2 (1960), pp. 183–9, s.v. 'Alessandro III'; J. Ehlers in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 237–41, s.v.

Alexander V (*c.*1339–1410), Pope. Peter of Candia (Crete), also 'Peter Philarges', having become a *Franciscan, studied at Oxford and later was a Master of Theology at Paris (1381), where he lectured on the *Sentences. His academic career was brought to an end by preferment. He became Bp. successively of Piacenza (1386), Vicenza (1388), Novara (1389), Abp. of Milan (1402); and in 1409 at the Council of *Pisa he was unanimously elected to fill the Papal chair, presumed vacant, despite the two existing claimants. His strong character and extensive learning aroused great hopes; but he died after ten months. RC theologians still dispute whether he can claim a place in the true Papal succession. His importance in medieval thought has recently been increasingly recognized. His surviving 'Commentary on the Sentences' shows marked *nominalistic leanings.

M. Renières, Ἱστορικαὶ μελέται. Ὁ Ἕλλην πάπας Ἀλέξανδρος ε´ (Athens, 1881). F. *Ehrle, SJ, Der Sentenzenkommentar Peters von Candia des Pisaner Papstes Alexanders V (Franziskanische Studien, Beiheft 9; 1925). Pastor, 1 (1891), pp. 190 f. L. Salembier in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 772–4; A. Clerval in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 216–18; BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 345 f., s.v. 'Candia, Peter de'; A. Petrucci in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 2 (1960), pp. 193–6, s.v. 'Alessandro V, antipapa'.

Alexander VI (1431–1503), Pope from 1492. Rodrigo Borgia, a Spaniard by birth and nephew of Pope *Callistus III (1455–8), who created him a Cardinal in 1456, after studying at *Bologna, was appointed Chancellor of the Roman Church in 1457. He exercised considerable influence under Paul II (1464–71), and was largely responsible for the election of *Sixtus IV (1471). His own election having been secured largely through bribery, the course of his pontificate was determined almost solely by political and family considerations, esp. his favouritism of his son, Caesar. Among the most notable acts of his pontificate were the series dividing the New World between *Spain and *Portugal (1493–4), his prosecution and execution of G. *Savonarola in 1498, the *Jubilee which he organized in 1500, and the Crusade against the Moors (1499–1500). A man of immoral life, he was an astute politician and generous patron of artists, esp. D. Bramante, G. and A. Sangallo, and 'Pinturicchio'. Under him the Leonine city was largely replanned and the castle of Sant' Angelo rebuilt.

P. de Roo (ed.), Materials for a History of Pope Alexander VI, his Relatives and his Times (5 vols., Brussels, 1924). Eng. tr. of the account of his reign from the diary of his Master of Ceremonies, John Burchard (based on edn. of Diary by E. Celani, Città di Castello, 1906), by G. Parker, At the Court of the Borgia (Folio Society, 1963). V. Nemec, Papst Alexander VI (1879); A. Leonetti, Papa Alessandro VI (3 vols., with documents, 1880); J. Schnitzer, Der Tod Alexanders VI: Eine quellenkritische Untersuchung (1929); O. Ferrara, El Papa Borgia (1943; Eng. tr., New York, 1940, London, 1942). G. Soranzo, Studi Intorno a Papa Alessandro VI (Borgia) (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, NS 34; Milan [1950]). L. Weckman, Las Bulas Alejandrinas de 1493 y la Teoría Política del Papado Medieval (Mexico, 1949); M. Batllori, SJ, Alejandro VI y la Casa Real de Aragón 1492–1495 (Madrid, 1958). Pastor, 5 (1898), pp. 375–523, and 6 (1898), pp. 3–181. J. Paquier in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 724–7; P. Richard in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 218–29, both s.v.; G. B. Picotti in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 2 (1960), pp. 196–205, s.v. 'Alessandro VI', with bibl.; M. Batllori in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 290–2, s.v.

Alexander VII (1599–1667), Pope from 1655. Fabio Chigi was a native of Siena, where he studied philosophy, law, and theology. In 1626 he entered upon an ecclesiastical career at Rome. After being *Inquisitor of Malta, he became Papal *Nuncio at *Cologne in 1639. As such he followed the negotiations of the Peace of *Westphalia and protested against several of its clauses. After his return to Rome (1651), he was created Cardinal in 1652 and became Papal secretary of state. During the first year of his pontificate he showed himself an enemy of nepotism, but in 1656 he gave way to the pressure of his advisers, who feared a weakening of the Papal position through the absence of his family, and called his brother and nephews to Rome. As a theologian he was of strongly anti-Jansenist views, and, to make Jansenist subterfuges impossible, condemned in 1656 the five propositions drawn from Augustinus in the sense in which C. O. *Jansen had meant them. In this attitude he was supported by Louis XIV, though political troubles arose between the Pope and the King, owing to a dispute between the Papal entourage and the French ambassador. Louis thereupon seized *Avignon and Venaissin, and threatened to invade the States of the Church, and Alexander had to sign the humiliating peace of Pisa in 1664. Following the controversy on *Probabilism, he condemned, in 1665 and 1666, forty-five *Laxist propositions, though not the Probabilist system. He was a friend of the *Jesuits, esp. of Cardinal Sforza Pallavicini, the historian of the Council of *Trent, and he procured the readmission of the order to the republic of *Venice. He also did much for the embellishment and modernization of Rome.

His official correspondence as Apostolic Delegate in Malta, 1634–9, ed. V. Borg (ST 249; 1967); Correspondence on Jansenism while he was Papal Nuncio at Cologne, 1639–51, ed. A. Legrand and L. Ceyssens, OFM (Bibliothèque de l'Institut Historique Belge de Rome, 8; 1957); Letters and Diaries while he was Nuncio at the Congress of Westphalia (1640–51), ed. V. Kybal and G. Incisa della Rocchetta (Miscellanea della R. Deputazione Romana di Storia Patria, 14, 16, etc.; 1943 ff.). S. Pallavicini, SJ, Della vita di Alessandro VII (only to 1659; 2 vols., 1839–40). M. Albert, Nuntius Fabio Chigi und die Anfänge des Jansenismus 1639 1651 (RQ Suppl. 44; 1988). Pastor, 31 (1940), pp. 1–313. H. Hemmer and E. Deshayes in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 727–47, s.v.; P. Richard in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 229–44, s.v.; M. Rosa in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 2 (1960), pp. 205–15, s.v. 'Alessandro VII'; each with bibl.

Alexander VIII (1610–91), Pope from 1689. Pietro Ottoboni, the descendant of a noble Venetian family, studied at Padua, where he became a doctor of canon and civil law in 1627. Having been an auditor of the *Rota for 14 years, he was created Cardinal by *Innocent X in 1652, and subsequently became Bp. of Brescia. After his election to the Papacy in 1689, he effected a reconciliation with Louis XIV, who in 1690 gave back *Avignon and Venaissin, which he had taken from *Alexander VII. His most important doctrinal decisions were the condemnations of the Four *Gallican Propositions of 1682 and of 31 propositions of C. O. *Jansen, both in 1690. In the same year he also condemned the doctrine of *Philosophic Sin. Despite the condemnation of Gallicanism his relations with France remained satisfactory. During his short pontificate he helped his native city of *Venice against the Turks, and brought about several social improvements in the States of the Church by a diminution of taxes and an increase of cheap food imports. He also enriched the *Vatican Library by the purchase of the valuable MSS ('Reginenses') of Queen *Christina of Sweden.

S. Freiherr von Bischoffshausen, Papst Alexander VIII und der Wiener Hof, 1689–1691 (1900); C. Gérin, 'Le Pape Alexandre VIII et Louis XIV d'après des documents inédits', RQH, 22 (1877), pp. 135–210; E. Michaud, La Politique de compromis avec Rome en 1689: Le Pape Alexandre VIII et le Duc de Chaulnes d'après les correspondances diplomatiques inédites du Ministère des Affaires étrangères de France (1888); M. Dubruel, 'Le Pape Alexandre VIII et les affaires de France', RHE 15 (1914), pp. 282–302 and 495–514. Pastor, 32 (1940), pp. 525–60. H. Hemmer and X. Le Bachelet in DTC 1 (1905), cols. 747–63, s.v.; P. Richard in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 244–51, s.v.; A. Petrucci in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 2 (1960), pp. 215–18, s.v. 'Alessandro VIII'; each with bibl.

Alexander of Hales (c.1186–1245), the 'Doctor Irrefragabilis'. Born at Halesowen, West Midlands, he studied arts and theology at *Paris, and became a doctor c.1220–1. It was he who took the fateful step of using the Sentences of *Peter Lombard, instead of the Bible, as the basic text for his lectures on theology. His glosses on the Sentences have survived in more than one redaction, as well as collections of quaestiones. After the dispersion of Paris University in 1229 he was one of its representatives to Pope *Gregory IX. In 1231–2 he was in England and was made Archdeacon of *Coventry, but he soon returned to his chair in Paris. In 1236 he joined the *Franciscan Order; he was able to keep his chair, which was henceforth filled by a Franciscan. He is regarded as the founder of the Franciscan school of theology, but the 'Summa theologica' which goes under his name was only begun by him and was continued by William of Melitona and others. He also had some part in the composition of an 'Expositio in Regulam S. Francisci' (1242), popularly known as 'The Four Masters'.

Glossa in quatuor libros Sententiarum ed. by the Franciscans of Quaracchi (Bibliotheca Francescana Scholastica Medii Aevi, 12–15; 1951–7), with prolegomena in vol. 1, pp. 5*–130*. Quaestiones Disputatae 'Antequam Esset Frater', ed. idd. (ibid. 19–21; 1960). The Summa Theologica, which was first pub. at Venice in 1475 under the name of Thomas of Hales, also ed. idd. (4 vols., Quaracchi, 1924–48), with prolegomena by V. Doucet, OFM, in vol. 4, pp. xiii–cclxx. E. Gössmann, Metaphysik und Heilsgeschichte: Eine theologische Untersuchung der Summa Halensis (Mitteilungen des Grabmann-Instituts der Universität München, Sonderband, 1964). V. Marcolino, Das Alte Testament in der Heilsgeschichte: Untersuchungen zum dogmatischen Verständnis des Alten Testaments als heilsgeschichtliche Periode nach Alexander von Hales (BGPM NS 2; 1970). E. Bettoni, Il Problema della Conoscibilità di Dio nella Scuola Francescana (Il Pensiero medioevale, 1st ser. 1; Padua, 1950), pp. 1–106. B. Smalley, 'The Gospels in the Paris Schools in the late 12th and early 13th centuries. Peter the Chanter, Hugh of St. Cher, Alexander of Hales, John of La Rochelle', Franciscan Studies, 39 (1979), pp. 230–54; 40 (1980), pp. 298–369, esp. pp. 317–44. I. Herscher, OFM, 'A Bibliography of Alexander of Hales', ibid. 26 (1945), pp. 435–54. A. Emmen in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 296 f., s.v.

Alexander of Lycopolis (3rd cent.), writer against *Manichaeism. He was probably a pagan who became a Manichaean and later a Christian, though some modern scholars, notably L. S. Le N. *Tillemont and, more recently, A. Brinkmann, contend that he never embraced Christianity. Acc. to *Photius (Contra Manichaeos 1. 11) he became a bishop. His fame rests on his treatise against the Manichaeans, Πρὸς τὰς Μανιχαίου δόξας, in which he praises the simplicity and efficacy of the Christian philosophy and contrasts it with the illogical and contradictory doctrines of the Manichaeans. Though his style and thought are often obscure, the work is a primary source for the study of Manichaeism.

The treatise, first pub. by F. *Combefis in 1672, is repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 18. 411–48. Crit. edn. by A. Brinkmann (Teub., 1895). Eng. tr. by P. W. van der Horst and J. Mansfeld (Leiden, 1974). Fr. tr., with full comm. and introd., by A. Villey (Sources Gnostiques et Manichéennes, 2; 1985). M. *Dibelius in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 270 f., s.v.

Alexander, Michael Solomon (1799–1845), first Anglican Bp. in *Jerusalem. Born in Schönlanke in Posen, he was trained in strictly orthodox *Judaism. He came to England in 1820 and here was brought into personal contact with Christianity, was suspended from his duties as rabbi, and baptized in 1825. Upon his ordination in 1827 he joined the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews and served as a missionary in Danzig from 1827 to 1830. From 1830 to 1841 he had a mission in London, and from 1832 was also professor of Hebrew at *King's College. Here he took an active part in revising the Hebrew NT and also translated the BCP into Hebrew. On the establishment of the Anglican bishopric at Jerusalem, he was consecrated as first bishop of the see (1841), where his short term of service was successful alike among Arabs and Jews. See also JERUSALEM, ANGLICAN BISHOPRIC IN.

Autobiogr. account of his conversion appended to J. Hatchard, The Predictions and Promises of God Respecting Israel (sermon, 1825), pp. 37–40. J. F. A. De la Roi, Michael Solomon Alexander, der erste evangelische Bischof in Jerusalem (1897).

Alexandre, Noël (1639–1724), Church historian. He entered the *Dominican Order at Rouen in 1654; in 1655 he moved to Paris, where he spent most of the rest of his life and became one of the leading theologians. He wrote a number of theological works, including Theologia dogmatica et moralis (10 vols., 1694), but the most important of his writings is his Selecta Historiae Ecclesiasticae Capita (26 vols., 1676–86), a treatise of great erudition. The earlier volumes were praised by *Innocent XI in 1681 and 1682, but the *Gallican sympathies noticeable in his treatment of the conflict between the Empire and the Papacy led to the whole work being put on the *Index in 1684. Alexandre tried to make it unobjectionable in a revision published under the title Historia Ecclesiastica (1699), but this did not satisfy the authorities in Rome. Only two posthumous editions, annotated by C. Roncaglia (1734) and G. D. *Mansi (1749), were published with ecclesiastical approval. His initial opposition to '*Unigenitus' and support of the *Appellants in 1717 earned him a reputation of being a *Jansenist sympathizer, apparently unjustly, as he explicitly criticized Jansenism.

A. Hänggi, Der Kirchenhistoriker Natalis Alexander (1639–1724) (Studia Friburgensia, NS 11; 1955), with bibl. R. Coulon, OP, 'Jacobin, Gallican et "appelan". Le P. Noël Alexandre', RSPT 6 (1912), pp. 49–80, 279–331; A. Mercati, 'Intorno alla "Romanità" di Natale Alexandre Ord. Praed.', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 16 (1946), pp. 5–82. R. Coulon, OP, and A. Papillon, Scriptores Ordinis Praedicatorum (Paris, 1934), pp. 380–98. R. Coulon in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 280–7, s.v.

Alexandria. In size and importance, Alexandria in Egypt was the second city of the Roman Empire. It was a centre not only of Hellenism but also of Semitism, with the largest community of Jews in any single city of the ancient world (see PHILO, SEPTUAGINT); and it has therefore sometimes been found surprising that St *Paul never preached there. The foundation of the Church in Alexandria is traditionally ascribed to St *Mark, but we have no reliable knowledge of its early history. Gnostic teachers, such as *Basilides and *Heracleon, were active in the city in the mid-2nd cent., but its fame as a centre of Christian thought dates from the end of that century with the work of *Clement and *Origen. Its importance increased during the 4th and 5th cents., especially under its bishops *Athanasius and *Cyril. The Council of *Nicaea (325) assigned to Alexandria a place of honour second only to Rome, and superior to *Antioch, but its importance was diminished by the rise of *Constantinople, which was granted precedence over Alexandria by the Councils of *Constantinople (381) and *Chalcedon (451). The great majority of Christians in Egypt supported the *Monophysite schisms, and by the time Egypt passed under the Persians (616) and then under the Arabs (642), the Greek Orthodox Patriarchate of Alexandria had lost most of its influence. At the division between E. and W. Alexandria remained on the side of Constantinople. Besides the Greek Orthodox Patriarch, the head of the *Coptic Church also has the title 'Patriarch of Alexandria'; and since the 13th cent. there has been a Latin Patriarch of Alexandria, but he is purely titular.

See also following two entries and CODEX ALEXANDRINUS.

M. *Le Quien, Oriens Christianus, 2 (Paris, 1740), cols. 329–640. J. M. *Neale, A History of the Holy Eastern Church: The Patriarchate of Alexandria (2 vols., 1847). C. A. Papadopoulos, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἐκκλησίας Ἀλεξανδρείας (62–1934) (Alexandria, 1935). T. Orlandi, Storia della Chiesa di Alessandria (Coptic texts with Italian tr. and comm.; Milan, 1968 ff.). J. Faivre in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 289–369, s.v. 'Alexandrie'. W. Schubart and A. Calderini in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 271–83, s.v.

Alexandrian text. An early form of the Greek text of the NT, known also as the Egyptian, which B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort treated as a later scholarly recension and distinguished from their preferred *Neutral text—a distinction which is rarely now maintained. It is represented by *Codex Vaticanus (B), and in part by other uncials, e.g. ℵ, A, C, W, and by the citations of the early Alexandrian Fathers, *Origen and *Clement. The same type of text is displayed in 20th-cent. *papyrus discoveries from Egypt, esp. the *Bodmer papyri P75 and P66 and the *Chester Beatty papyrus P46, and their early date calls into question the theory of a later recension. The Alexandrian text has largely resisted stylistic improvement, harmonization and expansion (in contrast to the *Western and *Caesarean texts) and seems to be the result of careful transmission. This does not necessarily mean, however, that it is the earliest form of NT text; the scarcity of evidence other than from the preserving sands of Egypt may disguise a wider variation in the NT text of the 2nd cent.

C. M. Martini, SJ, Il Problema della Recensionalità del Codice B alla luce del papiro Bodmer XIV (Analecta Biblica, 26; 1966); id., 'Is there a late Alexandrian text of the Gospels?', New Testament Studies, 24 (1978), pp. 285–96; E. J. Epp, 'The Twentieth Century Interlude in New Testament Textual Criticism', Journal of Biblical Literature, 93 (1974), pp. 386–414; id., 'The Significance of the Papyri for Determining the Nature of the New Testament Text in the Second Century: A Dynamic View of Textual Transmission', in W. L. Petersen (ed.), Gospel Traditions in the Second Century: Origins, Recensions, Text, and Transmission (Notre Dame, Ind., and London [1989]), pp. 71–103; G. D. Fee, 'P75, P66 and Origen: The Myth of Early Textual Recension in Alexandria', in R. N. Longenecker and M. C. Tenney (eds.), New Dimensions in New Testament Study (Grand Rapids [1974]), pp. 19–45; the last three arts. are repr. in E. J. Epp and G. D. Fee, Studies in the Theory and Method of New Testament Textual Criticism (Grand Rapids, 1993), chs. 5, 13 and 14.

Alexandrian theology. This is a modern designation for a style of theology associated with the Church at *Alexandria and markedly influenced by the Platonic tradition. Its characteristic emphases on the reality of the spiritual world and the *allegorical exegesis of Scripture are clearly evidenced in the work of *Origen. The term is particularly used (in contrast to *Antiochene theology) to refer to forms and expressions of belief which laid special stress on the Divine nature of Christ and the unity of His person. Its primary exemplar is to be seen in St *Cyril and his opposition to *Nestorianism. A result of this stress was that even the orthodox among the Alexandrians (e.g. St Cyril) did not hesitate to say of the Incarnate Christ that 'God suffered', while the less orthodox, beginning with *Apollinarius (who, though not in fact an Alexandrian, can be seen as belonging to the same theological tradition), undermined the completeness of Christ's humanity, holding that His highest human faculties were simply replaced by the Divine Nature, so that He could neither be tempted nor suffer. *Monophysitism must be considered an extreme form of the Alexandrian school of thought, which, by verbal adherence to Cyril's language, taught that there was only one nature in Christ, a view which practically nullified His humanity; while *Monothelitism, in the 7th cent., carried on the same tradition in different terms by asserting the unity of Christ's Divine and Human Will.

See also CATECHETICAL SCHOOL OF ALEXANDRIA.

C. *Bigg, The Christian Platonists of Alexandria (*Bampton Lectures, 1886; ed. F. E. *Brightman, 1913); R. B. Tollinton, Alexandrine Teaching on the Universe (1932); E. Molland, The Conception of the Gospel in the Alexandrian Theology (Oslo, 1938); R. V. Sellers, Two Ancient Christologies (1940). P. Brezzi, La Gnosi cristiana di Alessandria et le antiche scuole cristiane [1950]. G. Bardy, 'Aux Origines de l'École d'Alexandrie' Rech. S.R. 27 (1937), pp. 65–90; id., 'Pour l'Histoire de l'École d'Alexandrie', Vivre et Penser [wartime title of R. Bibl.], 2 (1942), pp. 80–109. F. M. Young, 'A Reconsideration of Alexandrian Christology', JEH 22 (1971), pp. 103–14. J. Quasten, Patrology, 2 (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 1–118, esp. pp. 2–4, with bibl. W. R. *Inge in HERE 1 (1908), pp. 308–19, s.v. See also bibl. to ANTIOCHENE THEOLOGY and CATECHETICAL SCHOOL OF ALEXANDRIA.

Alford, Henry (1810–71), Dean of *Canterbury. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1829, and was elected fellow in 1834. In 1835 he became Vicar of Wymeswold, Leicestershire. From 1853 to 1857 he ministered to a large congregation at Quebec Chapel, Marylebone, and then became Dean of Canterbury, where he remained till his death. His most important work was an edition of the Greek NT (1849–61), in which he united freshness of treatment with wide learning. He also translated the Odyssey, wrote several well-known hymns (among them, 'Come, ye thankful people, come' and 'Ten thousand times ten thousand'), edited the writings of J. *Donne (1839), published some original verse, and was the first editor of the Contemporary Review.

Poetical Works, 2 vols., 1845. Life, Journal and Letters, ed. by F. Alford, his widow (1873). W. H. Fremantle in DNB 1 (1885), pp. 282–4, s.v.

Alfred the Great (849–99), King of Wessex from 871. He was born at Wantage. Apart from his defeat of the Danes, which contributed materially to the maintenance of Christianity in England, Alfred is chiefly memorable in Church history for the care with which he promoted ecclesiastical reform and the revival of learning. Himself a man of deep piety and considerable education, he gathered round him a band of scholars from England, Wales, and the Continent, and with their help translated a number of the most popular Latin works of the time. He himself was largely responsible for translating the 'Pastoral Care' of *Gregory the Great, the 'Consolation of Philosophy' of *Boethius, the 'Soliloquies' of St *Augustine, and the first 50 psalms of the Psalter; at his instigation Werferth, Bp. of *Worcester, translated the 'Dialogues' of Gregory the Great, and an anonymous translator produced an English version of the 'History' of *Orosius. He promoted the interests of the Church, founding monastic communities at Shaftesbury and Athelney; he also apparently made plans for one at *Winchester. He has been remembered for a thousand years as one who did his utmost for the education of his clergy and nobles, and, in his own life, as the pattern of a Christian king. Feast day, 26 Oct.

Crit. edns. of Alfred's versions of Gregory's Pastoral Care by H. Sweet (EETS 45 and 50; 1871–2), of Boethius' De Consolatione Philosophiae by W. J. Sedgefield (Oxford, 1899), of the 'Soliloquies' of St Augustine by W. Endter (Bibliothek der angelsächsischen Prosa, 11; Hamburg, 1922) and by T. A. Carnicelli (Cambridge, Mass., 1969), and of the first 50 Psalms by J. W. Bright and R. L. Ramsay, Liber Psalmorum: The West-Saxon Psalms (Boston and London, 1907). Werferth's tr. of Gregory's 'Dialogues' is ed. H. Hecht (Bibliothek der angelsächsischen Prosa, 5; 2 parts, Leipzig and Hamburg, 1900–7), and the anonymous tr. of the 'History' of Orosius by J. Bately (EETS suppl. ser. 6; 1980). The primary sources for Alfred's life are the contemporary biography by Asser (crit. edn. by W. H. Stevenson, Oxford, 1904; new impression, with art. on recent work by D. Whitelock, 1959) and the 'Anglo-Saxon Chronicle' for the years of his reign; Eng. tr. of these, with full comm. (and selected passages from Alfred's writings) by S. Keynes and M. Lapidge, Alfred the Great (Penguin Classics, 1983). C. Plummer, The Life and Times of Alfred the Great (Ford Lectures for 1901; Oxford, 1902); A. J. Frantzen, King Alfred (Boston [1986]); A. P. Smyth, King Alfred the Great (Oxford, 1995; cf. S. Keynes in JEH 47 (1996), pp. 529–51). On his reign, R. H. Hodgkin, A History of the Anglo-Saxons, 2 (Oxford, 1935), pp. 537–688; 3rd edn. (1952), pp. 537–695; F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (ibid., 1943), pp. 246–73; 3rd edn. (1971), pp. 248–76.

aliturgical days. Days on which the Eucharist may not be celebrated. In the Roman rite there are now only two such days, namely *Good Friday and *Holy Saturday; in the E. Church there are many more.

All Saints' Day. The feast, kept in the W. on 1 Nov., to celebrate all the Christian saints, known and unknown. Reference to such a feast occurs in St *Ephrem Syrus (d. 373), while in St *Chrysostom (d. 407) it is assigned to a definite day, namely the first Sunday after *Pentecost, that still observed in the E. This same day was apparently associated with the saints also at *Rome in the 6th cent.; but in the W. the feast did not become firmly established until the consecration of the Pantheon at Rome (dedicatio S. Mariae ad martyres) to Christian usage by Boniface IV on 13 May 609 or 610. From then on an annual commemoration of 'All Saints' was made on 13 May. Its observance on 1 Nov. appears to date from the time of Gregory III (d. 741), who dedicated on that day a chapel in the basilica of St Peter to 'All the Saints'. Gregory IV (d. 844) ordered its universal observance and *Sixtus IV (d. 1484) added the Octave (suppressed 1955). In the calendar in the ASB, the Octave Day (8 Nov.) is assigned to the 'Saints and Martyrs of England'.

Serm. of Chrysostom, Laudatio Sanctorum Omnium (J. P. Migne, PG 1. 705–12). L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, 1 (1932), pp. 606 f. G. Löw in EC 9 (1952), cols. 86–90, s.v. 'Ognissanti'; B. Luykx, O Praem., in LW 1 (1962), cols. 99–102, s.v. 'Allerheiligen', with further bibl.

All Souls' Day. The commemoration of the souls of the faithful departed on 2 Nov., the day following *All Saints' Day. (Until 1970, when 2 Nov. was a Sunday, All Souls' Day was 3 Nov.) Its observance became universal through the influence of *Odilo of Cluny, who in 998 commanded its annual celebration in the *Benedictine houses of his congregation. In 1915 *Benedict XV gave permission for priests to celebrate three Masses on All Souls' Day (a privilege confined to this day and *Christmas). The Mass contains the famous sequence, '*Dies Irae' (since 1969 no longer obligatory). In the C of E, the observance of All Souls' Day was dropped at the Reformation, but provision is made for it in the ASB and many other modern Anglican liturgies.

The 'Statutum Odilonis pro Defunctis' is printed in J. P. Migne, PL 142. 1037 f. The commemoration is first met with at Rome in the 14th cent. (Ordo Romanus* XIV (Mabillon), no. 101). For the Apostolic Constitution (10 Aug. 1915), permitting the three Masses on the day, see AAS 7 (1915), pp. 401–4. C. A. Kneller, SJ, 'Geschichte über die drei Messen am Allerseelentag', ZKT 42 (1918), pp. 74–113.

Allah. An Arabic word used as the name of God by all Muslims (and in some circumstances also by Arabic-speaking Christians). It has often been thought to be a combination of 'al (the definite article) and ilah ('god'). The Muslim use of the word may be interpreted to mean 'The Only God'. In Muslim belief, God has 99 further names, each of which is represented by a bead on their rosary, the hundredth and largest of them representing the name Allah itself.

Allamano, Bl Giuseppe (1851–1926), founder of the *Consolata Missionaries. Born at Castelnuova, at school he came under the guidance of St John *Bosco. After ordination in 1873 he joined the staff of the Turin seminary, where he had himself been trained, and in 1880 he was appointed guardian of the Sanctuario della Consolata, a Marian shrine in Turin. From 1882 he was involved in the spiritual direction of the diocesan clergy. On recovering from a severe illness in 1891, he vowed to found a missionary society for priests and laymen. He fulfilled this vow in 1901 and founded a missionary congregation for women in 1910. He directed both congregations until his death, sending missionaries to *Kenya, *Ethiopia, Tanzania, and *Mozambique. He was beatified in 1990.

L. Sales, IMC, Il Canonico Giuseppe Allamano, fondatore dei Missionari e delle Missionarie della Consolata (Turin, 1936); id., La Dottrina Spirituale de Servo di Dio Can. Giuseppe Allamo (2 vols., ibid., 1949; 2nd edn., 1 vol., 1963; Eng. tr., Rome [1982]). The Eng. tr. includes an introd. by C. Bona, IMC, which was reissued, with other material, as C. Bona, Fr. Joseph Allamano (London and Dublin [1986]). Popular Life by D. Agasso (Cinisello Balsamo, 1990; Eng. tr., Slough, 1991).

Allatius, Leo (1587 or 1588–1669), Greek RC theologian and historian. He was a native of Chios. In 1622 he supervised the transference of the valuable collection of Palatinate MSS from Heidelberg to the Vatican Library, of which he became custodian in 1661. A zealous advocate of reunion between the Orthodox and RC Churches, he wrote several works seeking to establish the unity in essential doctrine between them, the chief being his De ecclesiae occidentalis atque orientalis perpetua consensione libri III (Cologne, 1648). He also wrote extensively on *patristics.

MS Vita by S. Gradi, partly pr. in A. *Mai, NPB 6 (pt. 2; 1853), pp. v–xxviii. P. P. Argenti, The Religious Minorities of Chios (Cambridge, 1970), pp. 233–69. C. Jacono, Bibliografia di Leone Allacci (1588 1669) (Quaderni dell'Istituto di Filologia Greca della Università di Palermo, 2; 1962). G. Podskalsky, Griechische Theologie in der Zeit der Türkenherrschaft (1453 1821) (Munich, 1988), pp. 213–19. L. Bréhier in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 479–84, s.v.

Allegiance, Oath of. An ancient oath of fidelity and true allegiance to the Sovereign now prescribed by the Promissory Oaths Act 1868 s. 2. All holders of clerical office in England are required to take it, by Canon C 13 and the *Clerical Subscription Act 1865. The accompanying Oath of Supremacy, which acknowledged the Sovereign as Supreme Governor in matters spiritual or temporal, was abolished in 1868, but the principle of Royal Supremacy continues to be acknowledged by the C of E as a whole in Canon A 7.

allegory. In Christian exegesis, one of the traditional ways of interpreting Scripture in distinction to the literal or historical sense. The Greek word, ἀλληγορία, belongs to ancient literary theory and is defined as 'speaking one thing and signifying something other than what is said' (Heraclitus, Quaestiones Homericae); it was applied by the *Stoics and others to the interpretation of Homer. A form of allegorical interpretion of Scripture was practised in the Palestinian Rabbinic schools. From the earliest days Christians applied allegory to the OT in order to make it yield a Christian meaning. It can be seen as an extension of the argument from *prophecy. As certain specific prophecies in the OT were fulfilled in Christ, so the literal, historical events recorded in the OT were regarded as *types, having a deeper spiritual significance for Christians (e.g. the crossing of the Red Sea was fulfilled in Christian *Baptism). St *Paul used the term in Gal. 4: 24, 'which things contain an allegory' (ἅτινά ἐστιν ἀλληγορούμενα), to point to the relationship between the old Israel and the Church which is its fulfilment, but 2 Cor. 3, with its contrast between the letter and the Spirit, prob. had greater influence on the development of Christian allegory. In the later development of Christian exegesis pagan ideas about allegory played their part (as had already been the case with *Philo). *Origen is regarded as the great exponent of allegory, distinguishing a threefold literal, moral, and spiritual sense, corresponding to the human body, soul, and spirit, though in practice he usually worked with a twofold distinction between letter and spirit, history and deeper allegorical meaning, as is characteristic of the Fathers generally. Most of the Fathers were anxious to safeguard the literal, historic meaning of the biblical text; this concern was esp. characteristic of the school of *Antioch. Origen is often regarded as having failed in this respect. In the W. more systematic accounts of the senses of Scripture emerged, the most fundamental being the distinction of four senses, the literal, the allegorical (its doctrinal significance), the tropological or moral (its application to the individual Christian life), and the anagogical (lifting the mind to the goal of the Christian life). The Middle Ages witnessed both an elaboration of these interpretations which lost sight of the literal sense and a growing attempt to recover the literal, historical, original meaning (which involved recourse to the text in the original language).

The Renaissance and the Reformation brought a renewed mistrust of allegory. Although *Erasmus had a deep appreciation of its place in the patristic exegesis of Scripture, allegorical interpretation was, in theory at least, rejected by the Reformers as enabling human tradition to pervert the plain meaning of the Bible (they none the less used it in their sermons). With the *Enlightenment and the Romantics allegory in any context was rejected as artificial and arbitrary, in contrast to symbol. J. *Keble's Tract 89 contains a defence of patristic allegory, but it had little influence. In modern times there has been renewed appreciation of patristic allegory, often called typology (though that term is not ancient), by several scholars, notably J. *Daniélou and H. de *Lubac.

See also EXEGESIS.

J. Daniélou, SJ, Sacramentum Futuri: Études sur les origines de la typologie biblique (1950; Eng. tr., 1960); H. de Lubac, SJ, Histoire et Esprit: L'Intelligence de l'Écriture d'après Origène (Théologie, 16; 1950); id., Exégèse médiévale: Les quatre sens de l'écriture (ibid. 41; 2 vols. in 4 parts, 1959–64); B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1952; 3rd edn., 1983); R. M. Grant, The Letter and the Spirit (1957); J. Pépin, Mythe et allégorie: Les origines grecques et les contestations judéo-chrétiennes (1958; 2nd edn., Études Augustiniennes, 1976); R. P. C. Hanson, Allegory and Event: A Study of the Sources and Significance of Origen's Interpretation of Scripture (1959), pp. 9–129 ('The Sources of Christian Allegory'); D. E. Nineham (ed.), The Church's Use of the Bible, Past and Present (1963), esp. chs. by H. Chadwick, J. N. D. Kelly, and B. Smalley; R. P. C. Hanson, 'Biblical Exegesis in the Early Church', in Cambridge History of the Bible, 1, ed. P. R. Ackroyd and C. P. Evans (1970), pp. 412–53; M. F. Wiles, 'Origen as Biblical Scholar', ibid., pp. 454–89; G. W. H. Lampe, J. Leclercq, OSB, B. Smalley, and E. I. J. Rosenthal, 'The Exposition and Exegesis of Scripture', ibid. 2, ed. G. W. H. Lampe (1969), pp. 155–220 and 252–79; A. Louth, Discerning the Mystery (Oxford, 1983), pp. 96–131; id., 'The Oxford Movement, the Fathers and the Bible', Sobornost/Eastern Churches Review, 6, no. 1 (1984), pp. 30–45.

Alleluia (Heb. הַלְלוּיָהּ, 'Praise ye Yah'), liturgical expression of praise. It occurs in a number of Psalms, esp. in Pss. 111–17, where its position indicated that it was chanted as a kind of *antiphon by the choir of the *Levites. It is found elsewhere in the Bible only in Tobit (13: 18) and the Book of Rev. (19: 1, 3, 4, 6), in both places as the chant of the saints in heaven. It was taken over into the liturgy of the Church at an early date. In the W. it became the characteristic expression of joy and was therefore sung esp. in *Paschaltide, as is witnessed by St *Augustine (Serm. 252, De diebus paschalibus, 23. 9), but whether, as *Sozomen (Hist. Eccl. 7. 19) affirms, it was restricted at *Rome to *Easter Day or not, remains doubtful. The Roman usage was regulated by St *Gregory the Great, who ordered the Alleluia to be said at Mass and the Office throughout the year except in the penitential time between *Septuagesima and Easter. It was later omitted also in funeral offices. In the Greek Church, on the other hand, it remained a part of all offices, and its omission at certain times was made one of the grievances of the E. Church against the W. in the struggle which led to the schism of the 11th cent.

Acc. to the Roman rite the Alleluia is now sung at all Masses except in Lent; formerly it was omitted on some other penitential occasions as well. It is chanted before the Gospel and normally consists of a twofold Alleluia, a verse from Scripture, and another Alleluia. In Paschaltide Alleluias are inserted in many places both in the Mass and in the Divine Office. The name 'Alleluia Saturday' is sometimes applied to *Holy Saturday because, to mark the return of the Alleluia after its absence since the beginning of Lent, the celebrant solemnly intones it three times, each time at a higher pitch. In the E. Alleluias are also sung before the Gospel, and in many other places in the liturgical office; in contrast to the W., however, they are not regarded as festal, and occur with especial frequency during the Lenten services. In the *Ambrosian rite the form 'Hallelujah' was used until 1976.

On the orig. use of the word, cf. F. H. Woods in HDB 2 (1899), p. 287. T. Nöldeke, 'Hallelyua', Beihefte zur ZATW, 33 (1918), pp. 375–80. Jungmann, MS (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 540–57; Eng. tr. 1 [1950], pp. 422–36, with refs. A. G. Martimort, 'Origine et signification de l'Alleluia de la Messe Romaine', in R. Granfield and J. A. Jungmann (eds.), Kyriakon: Festschrift Johannes Quasten, 2 (1970), pp. 811–34; E. Jammers, Das Alleluia in der Gregorianischen Messe (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 55; 1973); A. Rose, 'L'usage et la signification de l'Alleluia en Orient et en Occident', in Gestes et Paroles dans les diverses familles liturgiques: Conférence Saint-Serge XXIV^e semaine d'études liturgiques (Bibliotheca Ephemerides Liturgicae, Subsidia, 14; 1978), pp. 205–33. T. Bailey, The Ambrosian Alleluias (Egham, Surrey, 1983). E. Wellesz, Eastern Elements in Western Chant: Studies in the Early History of Ecclesiastical Music (Monumenta Musicae Byzantinae, Subsidia, 2; Boston, 1947), esp. pp. 175–85; id., 'Gregory the Great's Letter on the Alleluia', Annales Musicologiques, 2 (1954), pp. 7–26. W. Apel, Gregorian Chant [1958], pp. 375–92. C. Thodberg, Der byzantinische Alleluiarionzyklus (Monumenta Musicae Byzantinae, Subsidia, 8; Copenhagen, 1966). K. Schlager and C. Thodberg in The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 1 (1980), pp. 269–76, s.v.

Alleluyatic Sequence. A name popularly given to the hymn 'Cantemus cuncti melodum' ('The strain upraise of joy and praise, Alleluia', EH, no. 494), on account of its frequent repetition of 'Alleluia'. It was written in the early 10th cent., and used before or at *Septuagesima for the 'farewell to Alleluia' since, acc. to traditional liturgical practice, the word Alleluia, as an expression of joy, was not used between Septuagesima and *Easter. The words are based on Ps. 147.

Crit. edn. of text by C. Blume, SJ, and H. Bannister (eds.), Thesauri Hymnologici Prosarium (AHMA 53; 1911), pp. 60–2. W. A. Shoults and J. Julian in J. Julian (ed.), Dictionary of Hymnology (2nd edn., 1907), pp. 203 f., s.v. 'Cantemus Cuncti Melodum Nunc'.

Allen, Roland (1868–1947), missionary and missionary theorist. The son of a clergyman, he was educated at St John's College, Oxford, and Leeds Clergy School. He was ordained priest in 1893 and joined the North China Mission of the *SPG in 1895. He left Peking in 1903 when his health broke. In 1904 he became Rector of Chalfont St Peter in Buckinghamshire, but resigned in 1907 because he would not baptize where there was no evidence of Christian commitment. For the rest of his life he wrote and canvassed industriously and combatively, being provided by the Survey Application Trust with a vehicle for his ideas. These centred on the local and indigenous character of the NT Church, reflecting apostolic trust in the Holy Spirit to provide new believers with everything needed for the Church's life and leadership, and expansion by 'the unexhorted and unorganized activity of individual members of the Church explaining to others the Gospel which they had found for themselves'. By contrast, he felt that modern missions imposed foreign direction, kept financial control, and established an alienated professional ministry. Allen's views gained attention from *Evangelicals, and more widely after his death. His best known works are Missionary Methods: St Paul's or ours? (1912, 2nd edn., 1927) and The Spontaneous Expansion of the Church and the Causes which Hinder it (1927).

Selected Writings ed. D. M. Paton as The Ministry of the Spirit (1960), with memoir by A. McLeish, pp. ix–xvi. D. M. Paton (ed.), Reform of the Ministry: A Study in the Work of Roland Allen (1968).

Allen, William (1532–94), Cardinal. He was a fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. In 1561 he left England for Louvain, returned in the next year, and was finally forced to leave the country in 1565. From that time he concentrated on the work of training RC mission priests for the conversion of England, believing that the majority of English people were still Catholic at heart, and that Protestantism was only a temporary phase of opinion. He founded colleges for this work at *Douai (1568), and Rome (1575–9), and encouraged the foundation at Valladolid (1589). From the press at Douai there issued a stream of RC propaganda, and the *Douai version of the Bible was produced under his inspiration. By supporting *Philip II's invasion of England in 1588, however, he incurred the serious hostility of many English RCs. Towards the end of his life, he was created a cardinal in 1587 and nominated Abp. of Malines in 1589. He ended his days at the *English College at Rome.

Modern repr. of his Brief History of the Glorious Martyrdom of Twelve Reverend Priests, Father Edmund Campion and his Companions, by J. H. Pollen, SJ (1908). The Letters and Memorials of William Cardinal Allen (1532–94), ed. with hist. introd. by T. F. Knox, Cong. Orat. (Records of the English Catholics under the Penal Laws, 2; 1882). 'Some Correspondence of Cardinal Allen, 1579–85, from the Jesuit Archives' contributed by P. Ryan, SJ, to the CRS, Miscellanea, 7 (CRS 9; 1911), pp. 12–105. Letters of William Allen and Richard Barret 1572–1598, ed. P. Renold (ibid. 58; 1967). Life by Bede Camm, OSB (1908). T. H. Clancy, Papist Pamphleteers: The Allen Persons Party and the Political Thought of the Counter Reformation in England 1572–1615 (Chicago, 1964). A. Pritchard, Catholic Loyalism in Elizabethan England (1979), pp. 11–36 ('Allen and Parsons: The Political Theory of Militant Catholicism'). A. F. Allison and D. M. Rogers, 'A Catalogue of Catholic Books in English . . .', Biographical Studies, 3 (1956), pp. 133 f. (nos. 5–13); idd., The Contemporary Printed Literature of the English Counter-Reformation, 1 (Aldershot, 1989), pp. 3–5 (nos. 6–18). T. Cooper in DNB 1 (1885) pp. 314–22, s.v.

Allestree, Richard (1619–81), Anglican divine. He was educated at *Christ Church, Oxford, where Richard Busby (afterwards Headmaster of Westminster) was his tutor. For a time he served in the royalist forces and throughout his life remained loyal in support of the Stuart cause. During the Commonwealth he assisted J. *Fell in continuing the C of E service in a private dwelling-house in Oxford. From 1663 to 1679 he was Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford and in 1665 he also became Provost of Eton. He is best remembered as the probable author of 'The *Whole Duty of Man'.

Collected edn. of The Works of the Learned and Pious Author of The Whole Duty of Man (2 parts, Oxford, 1684). Anon. Life by [J. Fell] prefixed to Forty Sermons (1684; no pagination); repr. separately, 1848. See also bibl. to WHOLE DUTY OF MAN.

Allies, Thomas William (1813–1903), theologian. From 1833 to 1841 he was a Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. In 1842 he became Vicar of Launton, near Bicester. He became closely associated with the leaders of the *Oxford Movement, esp. E. B. *Pusey; but having begun to doubt the Anglican position during travels abroad in 1845 and 1847 (described in his Journal in France [1848]), he joined the RC Church after the *Gorham Judgement. He was a man of wide learning, and in his later life a prominent apologist for Roman Catholicism both by lectures and writings. The latter include The See of St Peter (1850) and 8 vols. under the general title The Formation of Christendom (1865–96). From 1853 to 1890 he was secretary of the Catholic Poor Schools Committee, the RC equivalent of the *National Society and the British and Foreign Schools Society.

M. H. Allies (daughter), Thomas William Allies (1907; repr., with additional appendices, 1924). W. B. Owen in DNB, 1901–1911, 1, pp. 37 f.

Almachius, St. See TELEMACHUS, ST.

almery. An obsolete form of the word '*aumbry' (q.v.).

almoner. An officer who has the duty of dispensing alms. Very frequently he is in holy orders. The Lord High Almoner of the King of England, who has the disposing of the Sovereign's alms and on *Maundy Thursday, in the absence of the Sovereign, normally distributes the royal 'maundy', is usually a bishop. In France aumonier is used in a more general sense of 'chaplain'.

almuce, alternatively amice or amess. An item of ecclesiastical costume, usually a cape lined with fur, worn in certain religious orders. Its use can be traced back to the 12th cent. In more recent times it has been worn esp. by canons in *France, who carry their almuce as a mark of dignity over the left arm. The word 'amice' (Lat. almutia) in this sense is independent in derivation from that of the *amice (q.v.) worn at the Eucharist, though the two have often been confused.

Alogi. A group of heretics in Asia Minor (c. AD 170). They seem to have been strongly opposed to *Montanism and to have ascribed the Fourth Gospel and Revelation to *Cerinthus, but their exact doctrines are not easy to ascertain. Acc. to *Epiphanius (Haer. 51), they denied the divinity of the Holy Spirit and of the Logos. The word 'Alogi' (ἄλογοι) was coined for them by their opponents, who used it in the double sense of 'unreasonable' and 'disbelievers in the Logos'.

V. Rose, OP, 'Question johannine. Les Aloges asiatiques et les aloges romains', R. Bibl. 6 (1897), pp. 516–34. A. Bludau, Die ersten Gegner der Johannes-Schriften (Biblische Studien, 22, Hefte 1 and 2; 1925). S. G. Hall in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 290–95, s.v. 'Aloger', with further refs.

Aloysius Gonzaga, St (1568–91), patron of RC youth. Of noble descent, he was destined for a military career, and from 1577 to 1579 was at Florence as a page at the court of Francesco de' Medici, where he first began to feel a vocation to religion. After joining the suite of Mary of Austria in 1581, he followed her to Spain, but in 1584 he returned to Italy, where, in the face of great opposition, he entered the novitiate of the *Jesuits in 1585. He made his vows in 1587, and died, at the age of 23, a victim to his labours among the plague-stricken of Rome. He was canonized in 1726. Feast day, 21 June.

Opera Omnia, partim Italice, partim Latine (incomplete), ed. A. Heuser (Bibliotheca Mystica et Ascetica, 3; Cologne, etc., 1850). Works listed in Sommervogel, 3 (1892), cols. 1575–81, and 9 (1900), col. 420. Life by his contemporary and associate, V. Cepari, SJ (Rome, 1606; Lat. tr., Cologne, 1608; Eng. tr., Paris, 1627, repr. London, 1974); ed., with additional matter, by A. Schroeber, SJ (Einsiedeln, 1891; Eng. tr., 1891). The account in AASS, Jun. 4 (1707), pp. 847–1167, utilizes the process of beatification. C. C. Martindale, SJ, The Vocation of Aloysius Gonzaga (1927), with bibl. Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 39–54. W. V. Bangert, SJ, in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 332 f., s.v.

alpha and omega (A and Ω). The first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, used in the Christian Church to denote God's eternity and infinitude. In the NT they are found in Rev. 1: 8, 21: 6, and also in 22: 13 (of Christ). Their adoption is probably derived from the Heb. use of the word 'truth', אמת, the first and last letters of which are the first and last letters of the Heb. alphabet.

G. Kittel in TWNT 1 (1933; Eng. tr., 1964), pp. 1–3, s.v., with refs. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 1–25, s.v.

Alphege, St (954–1012), also Aelfheah, Abp. of *Canterbury. A monk of Deerhurst, or possibly of *Glastonbury, and then Abbot of Bath, he succeeded St *Ethelwold as Bp. of *Winchester in 984. In 1006 he was translated to Canterbury. He was murdered by the Danes during a drunken feast because he would not ransom himself at the expense of his poor tenants, and was therefore regarded as a martyr. Feast day, 19 Apr.

Life by Osbern, monk of Canterbury (d. *c.*1090), in [H. Wharton] Anglia Sacra, 2 (1691), pp. 122–42, with Osbern's account of translation of Alphege's relics from London to Canterbury (1023), pp. 143–7. E. A. Freeman, The History of the Norman Conquest, 1 (1867), pp. 387–9, with note on sources in 3rd edn. (1877), pp. 673–8; N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), esp. pp. 278–81 and 283–5.

Alphonsus Liguori, St (1696–1787), founder of the *Redemptorists and moral theologian. The son of a Neapolitan noble, Giuseppe dei Liguori, Alfonso Maria dei Liguori was born at Marianella near Naples. After taking the degree of Doctor of Laws at the age of 16, he practised with marked success at the bar for eight years; but in 1723 the loss, by an oversight, of an important suit in which a Neapolitan noble was suing the Grand Duke of Tuscany for £100,000 convinced him of the transitoriness of worldly glory and he withdrew from his profession. He received the tonsure, joined an association of mission preachers, was ordained priest in 1726, and became a successful evangelist in the country around Naples. In 1729 he took up residence in a missionary college in Naples where he made the close friendship of Tommaso Falcoia (1663–1743), of the congregation of the Pii Operarii, who had taken part in the foundation (1719) of a convent of nuns at Scala, near Amalfi, and was to exercise great influence on him. When in 1730 Falcoia became Bp. of Castellammare, the diocese in which Scala was situated, Alphonsus moved to Scala, in 1731 reorganized the nuns (the first house of 'Redemptoristines'), and then in 1732 founded the 'Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer' or 'Redemptorists' (q.v.) for men in a neighbouring hospice. Originally there were seven postulants under Alphonsus' guidance, who devoted themselves to pastoral work among the poor in the country districts. Falcoia was technically their director until his death (1743), when Alphonsus was formally elected Superior-General; but, owing to internal dissensions, growth was slow. In 1745 Alphonsus wrote the first of his many devotional and spiritual works. In 1749 *Benedict XIV approved the rule and institute for men and in 1750 the corresponding ones for women. In 1762 Alphonsus accepted with much reluctance the see of Sant'Agata dei Goti, in the province of Beneventum (he had declined the archbishopric of Palermo in 1747). Here, continuing to live an austere life, he was largely engaged in literary and missionary labours. In 1775 he resigned his see on the plea of ill-health and retired to Nocera. But he lived another twelve years, and became involved in much controversy arising from the affairs of his Order. His last years were clouded by severe spiritual trials and darkness.

Alphonsus sought to commend the Gospel to a sceptical age by gentle and direct methods. Spurning the florid oratory of his contemporaries, he preached simply and to the heart and believed that the rigorism of the contemporary confessional (largely under *Jansenist influences) repelled rather than won back the sinful. He set out these ideals in a system of *moral theology, first outlined in his Annotations to Hermann Busembaum (a much esteemed Jesuit casuist, 1600–68), published at Naples in 1748. This teaching he recast in his celebrated Theologia Moralis (2 vols., 1753 and 1755), of which seven further editions appeared before his death, as well as a number of compendiums, e.g. the Homo Apostolicus (1759). In the debate on how far it is allowable to follow any 'probable' opinion in matters of conduct, Alphonsus, in contradistinction to the Jesuits, developed the system known as *Equiprobabilism (q.v.).

His innumerable devotional writings include (Eng. titles) Visits to the Blessed Sacrament and the Blessed Virgin (1745), The Glories of Mary (1750), Novena of Christmas (1758), Novena of the Heart of Jesus (1758), The Great Means of Prayer (1759), The True Spouse of Jesus Christ (1760), and The Way of Salvation (1767). They became very popular and remained in general use down to the later 19th cent. There is no doubt that they fostered devotion; but their exuberance became a frequent target of criticism, esp. by Protestant writers.

Alphonsus was beatified in 1816, canonized in 1839, and declared a doctor ecclesiae* by *Pius IX in 1871. Feast day, 1 (formerly 2) Aug.

Opere Ascetiche (Rome, 1933 ff., with Introduzione Generale by O. Gregorio, G. Cacciatore, and D. Capione, 1960, incl. recent bibl.). His Letters ed. P. Kuntz, CSSR (3 vols., Rome, 1887). There are many eds. of his Theologia Moralis and his popular devotional works. The primary source is A. M. Tannoia, CSSR, Della vita ed istituto del venerabile Alfonso Maria Liguori (3 vols., 1798–1802; Eng. tr., 5 vols., 1848–9). This should be corrected in its details by the scholarly Life [in Germ.] by K. Dilgskron, CSSR (Regensburg and New York, 1887). R. Telleria, CSSR, San Alfonso Maria de Ligorio (2 vols., Madrid 1950–1); T. Rey-Mermet, CSSR, Le Saint du Siècle des Lumières: Alfonso de Liguori (1982; 2nd edn., 1987), and other works of this author; F. M. Jones, CSSR, Alphonsus de Liguori: The Saint of Bourbon Naples 1696–1787 [1992]. Writings associated with the bicentenary of Alphonsus' death include two special numbers of Studia Moralia, vol. 25 (Rome, 1987); J. Delumeau (ed.), Alphonse de Liguori, Pasteur et Docteur (Théologie Historique, 77 [1987]); and the acts of an international conference held 15–19 May 1988, P. Giannantonio (ed.), Alphonso M. de Liguori e la Società Civile del suo Tempo (Biblioteca dell' 'Archivium Romanicum', 1st ser., vol. 243; 2 vols., Florence, 1990). On Alphonsus' spiritual teaching, see Pourrat, 4, pp. 449–91. A. Palmieri in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 715–35, s.v., with extensive bibl. to date; G. Cacciatore in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 2 (1960), pp. 342–50, s.v., also with bibl.

Altaner, Berthold (1885–1964), patristic scholar. A native of Silesia, he was ordained in 1910 and began to teach Church history at Breslau in 1919. Ten years later he was appointed professor of patrology, ancient Church history, and Christian archaeology at Breslau. He was the first theologian to be deprived of his university position by the Nazis in 1933. He held a post at Breslau cathedral until expelled in 1945, when he fled to Bavaria. Until he retired in 1950 he was professor of patrology and the history of liturgy at Würzburg.

His early works deal with the history of the *Dominican Order: Venturino von Bergamo O. Pr. (1911), Der hl. Dominikus (1922), Die Dominikanermission des 13. Jahrhunderts (1924), and Die Briefe Jordans von Sachsen (1925). He is best known for his one-volume Patrologie: Leben, Schriften und Lehre der Kirchenväter (1938; Eng. tr. based on 5th German edn. of 1958 by H. C. Graef, 1960), which has become a standard textbook and work of reference. A rev. edn. by A. Stuiber was issued in 1966.

His Kleine patristische Schriften, ed. G. Glockmann (TU 83; 1967). B. Altaner, Verzeichnis meiner Veröffentlichungen 1907–1953 (Würzburg, 1953). List of his works to date in Hist. J. 77 (1958), pp. 576–600.

altar (Gk. θυσιαστήριον; Lat. altare, ara). The word was used of the Eucharistic table (if not already in Heb. 13: 10) in *Ignatius, *Tertullian, and *Cyprian, and this usage has been general in Catholic Christianity ever since. At the *Reformation, however, it gave rise to much controversy owing to the disputes concerning the doctrine of the *sacrifice of the Mass, of which the (stone) altar was taken as a natural symbol.

The earliest altars were doubtless of wood, being the tables in private houses normally used for domestic purposes, and *Optatus, *Augustine, and others mention wooden altars in the 4th and 5th cents. No doubt the custom of celebrating the Eucharist on the tombs of martyrs first caused stone altars to come into use. After the persecutions, bodies of martyrs were placed under altars; later, as the available relics grew smaller, they were enclosed in the altar and their presence was required for the consecration of all altars in RC Churches. The 1977 Ordo Dedicationis Ecclesiae et Altaris, however, lays down that relics are to be used in the dedication of altars only if they are of a size to suggest a complete human body, or at least the major part of it; they are then to be placed under the altar. For centuries there was only one altar in each Christian church, but the practice of celebrating private *Masses caused others to be added, the original altar being then known as the 'High Altar', and it became customary for each of these additional altars to be dedicated to some saint other than that to which the church itself was dedicated. In the E. Church, where private Masses are unknown, churches commonly have only one altar, though the E. regulation that the Eucharist must always be offered on a 'fasting altar' explains the occasional occurrence of two altars in the same church, to allow for two Masses on a single day. The Roman rite permits the celebration of Mass only on an altar blessed or consecrated by a bishop, except where a temporary altar is set up in a place where Mass is not customarily celebrated. In early times the altar seems to have been normally free-standing in the church, and the celebrant seems to have stood on the far side of the altar facing the congregation. Recently altars have been restored to this position in many places and the celebrant of the Eucharist has adopted a *westward position.

It was customary for altars to be covered with three cloths (which first appear in the 9th cent.) but since 1969 one is sufficient. Before the 10th cent. the cross and candlesticks were not placed on the altar, but the cross surmounted the *ciborium magnum which covered the altar, and the candles were held round during the Eucharist or suspended in candelabra from the ciborium (see foll. entry).

In the C of E, a deliberate change was made at the Reformation, from altars made of stone, fixed and immovable, to free-standing tables of wood, in order to emphasize the imagery of the Lord's Supper against the doctrine of the sacrifice of the Mass. The BCP uses the expression 'Holy Table' throughout, although versions before the Prayer Book of 1552 had retained the word 'altar'. Immovable stone altars survived, e.g. in *Westminster Abbey and Eton College, but they were exceptions to a rule which was recognized in a series of 19th-cent. cases as enforceable by law. The Holy Table Measure 1964 reversed these cases by permitting the Holy Table to be 'either movable or immovable' and 'of wood, stone or any other material suitable'; and in recent times the use of stone altars has become fairly common. In a case concerning St Stephen's, Walbrook (1987) an attempt was made to revive the old law by arguing that the proposed altar (a cylindrical piece of marble carved by Henry Moore, eight feet in diameter and weighing 10 tons) was not a 'table' as required by the 1969 *Canons (can. F 2). The *Court of Ecclesiastical Cases Reserved rejected this approach, defining a table as a 'horizontal surface raised above the ground' and, incidentally, authorizing a limited doctrine of Eucharistic sacrifice.

Comprehensive collection of material in J. Braun's two works (CA and AG). Rohault, 1, pp. 93–240, with pls. xxiii–lxxxix. E. *Bishop, Liturgica Historica (1918), no. 2, 'On the History of the Christian Altar', pp. 20–38. W. H. St J. Hope (ed.), English Altars from Illuminated Manuscripts (*Alcuin Club Collections, 1; 1899); P. *Dearmer, Fifty Pictures of Gothic Altars (ibid. 10; 1910). G. [F.] Webb, The Liturgical Altar (1933; 2nd edn., 1939); J. N. Comper, On the Christian Altar and the Buildings which contain it (1950); J. [B.] O'Connell, Church Building and Furnishing: The Church's Way. A Study in Liturgical Law (1955), pp. 127–214. Historical, doctrinal, and legal aspects in the C of E are authoritatively discussed in 'Re St Stephen's, Walbrook', Law Reports (1987) Family Division, pp. 146–98. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 3155–89, s.v. 'Autel', with bibl.; J. P. Kirsch and T. Klauser in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 334–54, s.v. 'Altar. III (christlich)'.

altar lights. The use of candles on the Christian altar seems to derive from the lighted candles which were carried in early times before the Pope as a mark of honour and at first placed on the floor behind the altar. The custom of placing them upon the altar is not definitely attested before c.1175, when two candles flanking an altar cross are mentioned as 'the present custom' of the Papal chapel. Subsequently mention is made of seven or more candles, acc. to the dignity of the feast, though one candle alone, to light the Missal, was also frequent. Since 1969 it has been permissible to put candles on the altar or on the floor around the altar, and the number is no longer specified in the RC Church. *Cranmer's Visitation Articles (1547) implied the permissibility of two altar lights. *Edward VI's 2nd *Injunction (1549) prohibited them, but they have now been widely restored in England. The *Lincoln Judgement (1890) recognized the legality in the C of E of two altar candles, provided they were not used ceremonially, and in 1951 the use of six candles was permitted by the Court of *Arches, although two 'must be regarded as the recognised and traditional use in the Church of England.'

D. R. Dendy, The Use of Lights in Christian Worship (1959). Braun, AG, 'Die Altarleuchter', pp. 492–530; E. *Bishop, Liturgica Historica (1918), pp. 301–13 ('Of Six Candles on the Altar: An Enquiry').

altar rails. Rails to protect the altar from profanation were widely introduced into English churches in the early years of *Elizabeth I, when the rood-screens and their protecting doors were removed. The *Puritans disliked them as implying that the altar was specially sacred, and in many cases they were taken out again. In his Archiepiscopal Visitation (1634), W. *Laud ordered altars which had been removed into the body of the church to be restored to the E. wall and required their protection by altar rails, at which the communicants were to receive the Sacrament; and many fine examples of altar rails date from this period. Their removal, however, was again ordered by Parliament in 1641, and they finally came back at the Restoration in 1660. In the RC Church altar rails prob. came into use in Italy in the 16th cent. Since 1970 they have not been legally required.

F. Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916), pp. 131–9.

Alternative Services. The Prayer Book (Alternative and Other Services) Measure 1965 provided that the Act of *Uniformity 1662, as amended, should temporarily cease to govern the worship of the C of E, and that other services could be sanctioned, initially by the *Church Assembly and subsequently by the General *Synod, for an experimental period. This was replaced by the Church of England (*Worship and Doctrine) Measure 1974, which repealed almost the whole of the Act of Uniformity. The new Measure came into force on 1 Sept. 1975 and allows the use of alternative services on a permanent basis to be authorized by the General Synod by Canon (see cans. B 1–5). These powers must be exercised so as to ensure that the forms of service contained in the BCP 'continue to be available for use in the Church of England'. Of the rites so authorized, Series I in general legalized the use of the Deposited Book of 1928. Series II gave effect to the work of the Liturgical Commission appointed by the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York in 1955, and Series III introduced modern English.

The Alternative Service Book (1980) was authorized by the General Synod in 1979 as a supplement to the BCP, for a period of ten years; this was later extended to the year 2000. It reflects modern study of liturgical origins, esp. in the Eucharist, and the revisions made by other religious bodies, notably the RC Church. The *Calendar includes many new names, moves some saints' days, and makes minor changes in the arrangement of the Seasons (see YEAR, LITURGICAL). Morning and Evening Prayer follow the pattern of the BCP, with a wide choice of *Canticles; provision is made for a shortened form of service. In the Eucharist two rites are given, both more traditional in structure than the BCP. Rite A has four alternative *Eucharistic Prayers, and throughout there are many options. The Initiation Services include a form of 'Thanksgiving for the Birth of a Child' (see CHURCHING OF WOMEN). *Baptism and *Confirmation may be administered in one service or separately. In Baptism the *sign of the cross, which may be made with blessed oil, is placed after the *renunciation, and a triple administration of the water is recommended. Confirmation is administered with the formula 'Confirm, O Lord, your servant N. with your Holy Spirit', and the candidate may be anointed. In the Marriage Service the traditional pattern is retained, though the changed status of women is recognized. In the Funeral Services prayer may be offered for the dead. In the *Ordinal, stress is laid on the distinction of *orders and the priest's power to consecrate and absolve; the assent of the people is required, and the formula of ordination is precatory, not imperative. Supplementary material issued after 1980 includes Lent, Holy Week, Easter: Services and Prayers (1986) and The Promise of His Glory: Services and Prayers for the Season from All Saints to Candlemas (1991).

See also BAPTISM, BURIAL SERVICES, CONFIRMATION, EVENSONG, LECTIONARY, MATTINS, and PSALTER, and for parallel developments in other Provinces, COMMON PRAYER, BOOK OF.

The Alternative Service Book 1980: A Commentary by the Liturgical Commission (1980).

Alumbrados (also Illuminati, i.e. 'enlightened'). The name given to loosely knit groups of spiritual persons in *Spain in the 16th cent. They led a retired life given to prayer and contemplation, and their practices were propagated esp. by the reformed *Franciscans, St *John of Ávila, and some members of the *Jesuit Order. Whether or not several of them were doctrinally unorthodox is uncertain; recent research has shown some of the accusations against them to have been ill founded. Some alumbrados, however, were spiritually unbalanced and exercised an unhealthy influence on those whom they excited by their pretended visions and revelations. They were severely treated by the *Inquisition, though many of their adherents were saintly people and some were later even canonized. In 1527 St *Ignatius Loyola, while a student at Salamanca, was charged with showing them sympathy.

A. Huerga, Historia de los Alumbrados (5 vols., 1978–94). A. Márquez, Los Alumbrados: Orígenes y filosofía (1525–1559) (1972; 2nd edn., 1980). M. Bataillon, Érasme et l'Espagne (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études Hispaniques, 21; 1937; rev. edn. by D. Devoto and C. Amiel, Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 250; 3 vols., Geneva, 1991), passim. A. Selke, El Santo Oficio de la Inquisición: Proceso de Fr. Francisco Ortiz (1529–1532) (1968); M. Ortega Costa, Proceso de la Inquisición contra María de Cazalla (1978); A. [A. H.] Hamilton, Proceso de Rodrigo de Bivar (1539) (1979); id., Heresy and Mysticism in Sixteenth-Century Spain: The Alumbrados (Cambridge, 1992). J. E. Longhurst, Luther's Ghost in Spain (1517–1546) (Lawrence, Kan., 1969).

Amalarius of Metz (c.780–850 [or 851]), liturgical scholar. A pupil and admirer of *Alcuin, he was a prominent figure in the *Carolingian Renaissance. It seems likely that he was Bp. of Trier from c.809 to 813, when he was sent on a mission to Constantinople. He then retired to Hornbach and devoted himself to writing. In 835 he was appointed to administer the see of Lyons after the deposition of its archbishop, *Agobard. His principal treatise, the 'De ecclesiasticis officiis' (in four books), which was partly an attempt to further the fusion of Roman and *Gallican ceremonial practices, exercised great influence in the Middle Ages and remains a fundamental source for the history of liturgy. Its explanations of ritual are sometimes very fanciful and artificial, and at the Synod of Quiercy in 838 some of its contents were pronounced heretical and he was removed from Lyons. Among his other surviving writings are a small treatise on the ceremonies of *Baptism and the 'Eclogae de officio missae', a description of the Roman Pontifical Mass. He compiled an *antiphonary which has not survived but can be partly reconstructed on the basis of references in another of his works. (The contention of J. *Sirmond and some older scholars that the Bp. of Trier was a different person of the same name seems to have been generally abandoned.)

His 'Regula Canonicorum et Sanctimonialium', 'Eclogae de Officio Missae', and 'Epistolae' in J. P. Migne, PL 105. 815–1340; crit. edns. of his 'Epistolae' by E. Duemmler in MGH, Epistolae, 5 (1899), pp. 240–724, of his 'Opera Liturgica Omnia' by J. M. Hanssens, SJ (ST 138–140; 1948–50), with introd. and bibl. J. Sirmond, SJ, 'De Duobus Amalariis' in Opera Varia, 4 (Paris, 1696), cols. 641–7. R. Mönchemeier, Amalar von Metz (Kirchengeschichtliche Studien, 1, Hefte 3–4; 1893); [J.] A. Cabaniss, Amalarius of Metz (Amsterdam, 1954). O. B. Hardison, Jun., Christian rite and Christian drama in the Middle Ages (Baltimore, 1965), pp. 35–79. R.-J. Hesbert, OSB, 'L'Antiphonaire d'Amalaire', EL 94 (1980), pp. 176–94. J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford, 1983), pp. 326–9.

Amalric (d. c.1207), scholastic philosopher. He was a native of Bène, near *Chartres, and taught at *Paris. In a series of *pantheistic treatises, which had many points of contact with those of *Erigena, he maintained (inter alia) that God was the one essence underlying all created beings (deum esse essentiam omnium creaturarum et esse omnium) and that those who remain in the love of God cannot sin. He founded a sect, the 'Amalricians', who further developed his teachings. His leading theses were expressly condemned by a synod at Paris in 1210 and again at the *Lateran Council of 1215. See also DAVID OF DINANT.

The principal sources are *Caesarius of Heisterbach, Dialogus Miraculorum (ed. J. Strange, Cologne, 1851, pp. 304–7) and Martin Oppaviensis, Chronicon Pontificum et Imperatorum (ed. L. Weiland in MGH, Scriptores, 22, 1872, p. 438). Eng. tr. of the former, and other primary material, in W. L. Wakefield and A. P. Evans, Heresies of the High Middle Ages (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 81; 1969), pp. 258–63. C. Baeumker (ed.), 'Contra Amaurianos. Ein anonymer wahrscheinlich dem Garnerius von Rochefort zugehöriger Traktat gegen die Amalrikaner aus dem Anfang des XIII. Jahrhunderts' in BGPM 24 (1926), Hefte 5–6. G. C. Capelle, Autour du décret de 1210, 3: Amaury de Bène: Étude sur son panthéisme formel (Bibliothèque Thomiste, 16; 1932). M. dal Pra, Amalrico di Bène (Storia universale della filosofia, 8; Milan, 1951). M. T. d'Alverny, 'Un Fragment du Procès des Amauriciens', AHDLMA 18 (1951), pp. 325–36. N. Cohn, Pursuit of the Millennium (rev. edn., 1970), pp. 152–6. G. Dickson, 'The Burning of the Amalricians', JEH 40 (1989), pp. 347–69.

Amana Society. A Christian sect, otherwise known as the Community of True Inspiration. It originated in Germany in 1714, under the influence of the writings of E. L. Grüber and J. F. Rock, who were deeply imbued with *Pietist views, but centred all their teaching in the doctrine of present-day inspiration. A large part of the body sailed for America in 1842. In 1855 they finally settled at Amana, Iowa, and were granted a formal constitution under the laws of the state in 1859. Their settlements were organized on a strictly communal basis, with minimum contact with the outside world, until economic difficulties during the Great Depression led to the conversion of the Amana Society into a modified joint stock corporation in 1932. As a co-operative, the Society runs farms, a woollen mill, and other industries. The Amana Church Society, which became a separate legal entity in 1932, had 535 adult members in 1994.

W. R. Perkins and B. L. Wick, History of the Amana Society, or Community of True Inspiration (State University of Iowa Publications. Historical Monograph, 1, 1891; repr., Westport, Conn., 1976); B. M. H. Shambaugh, Amana: The Community of True Inspiration (Iowa, 1908); id., Amana That Was and Amana That Is (Iowa, 1932). Id. in HERE 1 (1908), pp. 358–69, s.v.

Amandus, St (d. c.675), Merovingian Apostle of Flanders. Born near Nantes, in early manhood he made his way to Tours, and then to Bourges, where he lived an ascetic life under the direction of St Austregisilus, the Bishop. In 628, having been consecrated Bishop at the behest of Chlotar II without any fixed see, he began active missionary work in Flanders and Carinthia, and in 633 founded two monasteries at Ghent under the patronage of St *Peter (one of them taking the name of St Bavon, the benefactor). Later he founded a large monastery at Elnon, near Tournai, of which he was in his last years Abbot; afterwards it was known as St-Amand. He is said, but on very doubtful authority, to have been Bp. of Maastricht from 649 to 652. His 'Testamentum' survives, but otherwise the evidence for his life is not very trustworthy. Feast day, 6 Feb.

Testamentum ed. by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 5 (1910), pp. 483–5. One recension of the Vita Amandi, attributed to Amandus' disciple, Baudemundus, pr. in AASS, Feb. 1 (1658), pp. 848–72; another by B. Krusch, op. cit., pp. 428–49; the ascription to Baudemundus is denied by Krusch, who considers the life to be late 8th cent. (ibid., pp. 395–428). Further life by Milo, a monk of St Amand (c.845–55), ed. L. Traube, MGH, Poetae, 3 (1896), pp. 567–610; prose suppl. ed. B. Krusch, op. cit., pp. 450–85. L. Van der Essen, Étude critique et littéraire sur les Vitae des saints mérovingiens de l'ancienne Belgique (1907), pp. 336–49. E. de Moreau, SJ, Saint Amand (Museum Lessianum, Section Missiologique, 7; 1927), with bibl.; id., Saint Amand, le principal évangélisateur de la Belgique (Collection nationale, Brussels, 1942 [more popular]). Id., 'La Vita Amandi Prima et les Fondations monastiques de S. Amand', Anal. Boll. 67 (1949), pp. 447–64. A. Verhulst and G. Declercq, 'L'action et le souvenir de saint Amand en Europe centrale. À propos de la découverte d'une Vita Amandi antiqua', in M. Van Uytfanghe and R. Demeulenaere (eds.), Aevum inter Utrumque: Mélanges offerts à Gabriel Sanders (Instrumenta Patristica, 23; 1991), pp. 503–26.

Amarna Tablets. See TELL EL-AMARNA TABLETS.

Amaury. See AMALRIC.

ambo. A raised platform in a Christian *basilica, from which the Scriptures could be read to the people and litanies and other public parts of the liturgy conducted. Originally there was only one, but later two were built, one for the Epistle and one for the Gospel, on the S. and N. sides respectively. Several early examples survive, notably in Italy, but after the 14th cent. they were superseded by the *lectern and *pulpit. Recently there has been a tendency in some places to reintroduce them, and a Vatican Instruction of 1964 suggests the use of an ambo for reading the lessons and for preaching unless the pulpit is near the sanctuary.

Rohault, 3 (1883), pp. 1–72. D. Hickley, 'The Ambo in Early Liturgical Planning—a study with special reference to the Syrian Bema', Heythrop Journal, 7 (1966), pp. 407–27. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 1330–47, s.v. 'Ambon', with refs.

Ambrose, St (c.339–97), Bp. of Milan. He was born at Trier, the son of the Praetorian Prefect of Gaul. He followed a traditional administrative career, practising in the law-courts and in due course being appointed governor of Aemilia-Liguria, with his seat at Milan. On the death in 373 or 374 of *Auxentius, the Arian Bp. of Milan, the Catholic laity demanded that Ambrose should succeed him. Though brought up in a Christian family, he was not yet baptized, i.e. he was still a *catechumen. After initial resistance, he accepted the see, was baptized and ordained, and devoted himself to the study of theology, perhaps under the guidance of *Simplicianus. As a bishop he was famous as a preacher, and a zealous upholder of orthodoxy against *Arianism. To him was partly due the conversion of St *Augustine (386), who greatly revered him. Events brought him into close touch with successive W. Emperors, and in his dealings with them he asserted a remarkable degree of authority: he persuaded Gratian to refuse a hearing to those who objected to the removal of the Altar of Victory from the Senate House at Rome and threatened ecclesiastical sanctions against Valentinian II if he restored it; he insisted that *Theodosius should abandon any plan to restore the synagogue burnt down by Christians at Callinicum in 388 and excommunicated him for a massacre at *Thessalonica in 390. Equally, he maintained the independence of the Church against the civil power, refusing to cede a basilica to Valentinian II's Arian protégés in 386 and protesting against the action of the Gallic bishops in involving Maximus in the execution of Priscillian as a heretic in the same year. Apart from the De Sacramentis (q.v.), of which the Ambrosian authorship is now generally recognized, his most notable work is 'De Officiis Ministrorum', a treatise on Christian ethics, based on Cicero, with special reference to the clergy. The rest consist largely of the substance of sermons or instruction given to candidates for Baptism, on the faith and Sacraments. Knowledge of Greek enabled him to introduce much E. theology into the W. He also wrote on ascetical subjects, and did much to encourage monasticism and the cult of the martyrs (e.g. Sts *Gervasius and Protasius) in N. Italy. His Letters are of great historical value. He was the author of Latin *hymns (q.v.), and it was through his influence that hymns became an integral part of the liturgy of the W. church. At the beginning of this century some scholars (H. Brewer and A. E. Burn) attributed to him the so-called *Athanasian Creed.

With St *Jerome, St Augustine, and St *Gregory the Great, St Ambrose is one of the four traditional *Doctors of the Latin Church. Feast day, 7 Dec.; in the BCP calendar, 4 Apr.

Editio princeps of his Works, Venice, 1485. Benedictine edn. [F. du Frische and N. Le Nourry], 2 vols., Paris, 1686–90; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 14–17. Crit. edns. by C. Schenkl, M. Petschenig, and others. (CSEL, 1897 ff.) and M. Adriaen and others (CCSL, 1957 ff.); also of De Virginibus by E. Cazzaniga (Corpus Scriptorum Latinorum Paravianum; Turin, 1948), of De Virginitate by id. (ibid., 1952), and, with Fr. tr., of his hymns, by J. Fontaine and others (Patrimoines Christianisme, 1992). For edns. of the Life by *Paulinus, see q.v. F. H. Dudden, The Life and Times of St Ambrose (2 vols., Oxford, 1935). H. F. v. Campenhausen, Ambrosius von Mailand als Kirchenpolitiker (1929); J. R. Palanque, Saint Ambroise et l'empire romain (1933). Ambrosiana: Scritti di storia, archeologia ed arte pubblicati nel XVI centenario della nascita di Sant'Ambrogio, CCCXL–MCMXL (1942). P. Courcelle, Recherches sur les Confessions de Saint Augustin (1950), pp. 93–174, 211–21. R. H. *Connolly, The Explanatio Symboli ad Initiandos, A Work of Saint Ambrose (Texts and Studies, 10; 1952). A. Paredi, S. Ambrogio e la sua età (2nd edn., Milan [1960]). J. Pépin, Théologie cosmique et théologie chrétienne (Ambroise, Exam. 1. 1. 1–4) (Bibliothèque de Philosophie Contemporaine, 1964). E. Dassmann, Die Frömmigkeit des Kirchenvaters Ambrosius von Mailand (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, 29; 1965). P. Courcelle, Recherches sur saint Ambroise: 'Vies' anciennes, culture, iconographie (Études Augustiniennes, 1973); G. Madec, Saint Ambroise et la Philosophie (ibid., 1974); Y.-M. Duval (ed.), Ambroise de Milan (ibid., 1974); G. Lazzati (ed.), Ambrosius Episcopus: Atti del Congresso internazionale di studi ambrosiani nel xvi centenario della elevazione di sant'Ambrogio alla cattedra episcopale, Milano 2–7 decembre 1974 (Studia Patristica Mediolanensia, 6–7; 1976); N. B. McLynn, Ambrose of Milan: Church and Court in a Christian Capital (Berkeley, Calif., and London, 1994); D. H. Williams, Ambrose and the End of the Arian–Nicene Conflicts (Oxford Early Christian Studies, 1995); C. Markschies, Ambrosius von Mailand und die Trinitätstheologie (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 90; 1995). Cento anni di bibliografia ambrosiana (1874–1974), ed. P. F. Beatrice and others (Studia Patristica Mediolanensia, 11; 1981). Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 498–547; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 378–89 and 629–32. See also bibl. to DE SACRAMENTIS and ATHANASIAN CREED.

Ambrose, St, of Camaldoli. See TRAVERSARI, AMBROGIO.

Ambrose, Isaac (1604–64), *Puritan divine. The son of a Lancashire clergyman, he was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, and ordained priest before 1627. After serving cures in Derbyshire and N. Yorkshire, he became one of the King's four Preachers in Lancashire (from 1634) and resided at Garstang, near Preston. About 1640 he became Vicar of Preston. He adopted *Presbyterianism in 1641 and subsequently took a prominent part in the seventh Lancashire Classis, several times acting as Moderator. He was twice taken prisoner by the royal army. In 1650 he was still minister in Preston, but in 1654 he moved to Garstang. He served on the committee for the ejection of 'scandalous, ignorant and insufficient ministers and schoolmasters' in Lancashire. He was himself ejected in 1660.

He was a man of peaceful disposition, who spent a month each year in solitary meditation, prayer, and study. After an illness he determined to write a devotional description of what the Lord had done for his soul. Written in 1653, it was published in 1658 under the title, Looking unto Jesus, or the Soul's Eyeing of Jesus as Carrying on the Great Work of Man's Salvation. The work is marked by deep piety, combined with vividness and freshness of imagination. His other publications include Prima, Media, and Ultima, the First, Middle, and Last Things: in Three Treatises (1650); Redeeming the Time (1658); and War with Devils – Ministration of Angels (1661).

Complete Works ed., 3 parts, London, 1674–89; new edn., 2 vols., Manchester, 1799–1802. A. *Wood, Athenae Oxonienses (ed. P. Bliss), 3 (1817), cols. 659–61.

Ambrosian chant. The chant of Milan survives only in MSS of the 12th cent. and later, although its roots are clearly older. The earliest MS of importance, British Library Add. 34209, contains the Office and Mass, in a continuous sequence, of the pars hiemalis only; the rest of the year is supplied by other MSS, from which the modern editions of the Antiphonale Missarum and the Liber Vesperalis are for the most part derived.

The chant is characterized by its tendency to prolixity and modal freedom when compared with the *Gregorian. It is classified under four, rather than eight, modes (ignoring the distinction between authentic and plagal modes), and the psalm-tones, which lack the mediation, are grouped in four corresponding series with variable reciting-notes or tenors.

The chief primary sources are British Library Add. MS 34209, ed. by the Benedictines of *Solesmes (Paléographie Musicale, 5–7; 1896–1900), Antiphonale Missarum iuxta ritum S. E. Mediolanensis (Rome, 1935), and Liber Vesperalis iuxta ritum S. E. Mediolanensis (ibid., 1939). [H.] Huglo and others, Fonti e Paleografia del Canto Ambrosiano (Archivio Ambrosiano, 7; 1956). T. Bailey, The Ambrosian Alleluias (Egham, Surrey, 1983). R. Jesson in W. Apel, Gregorian Chant (1958), pp. 465–83.

Ambrosian rite. The rite used in the old archiepiscopal province of Milan and one of the very few non-Roman rites which survive in the RC Church in the W. Its name is derived from St *Ambrose, Bp. of Milan, but there is no definite evidence of connection with him. Although since his time the rite has contained the Roman *Canon of the Mass it differs widely from the Roman rite. Thus, for example, the *Offertory takes place before and not after the Creed (as in the Roman rite) and has always been accompanied by a procession (see VECCHIONI). In 1976 the Missal was revised in accordance with the principles of the Second *Vatican Council and the traditions of the rite. It was followed by a revised Breviary in 1983.

Three main theories of the origin of the rite have been put forward: (1) It is merely a development of the traditional Roman rite; (2) it is an older W. rite which has survived only at Milan; (3) it is an Oriental rite introduced at Milan by the Greek and Arian Bishop *Auxentius (or one of the other six Greek bishops who appear among the ten predecessors of St Ambrose) which, purged of heresy (it is suggested) by St Ambrose, became the parent of the whole family of *Gallican rites. This last theory (originated by L. *Duchesne) was widely held in the earlier years of the 20th cent., but the rite is now commonly regarded as of purely W. ancestry, though it has some E. features and importations from N. of the Alps.

The Ambrosian Missal was first ed. at Milan in 1475. That in use before 1976 appeared in 1902; crit. edn. by A. Ratti (*Pius XI) and M. Magistretti (Milan, 1913). Eng. tr. by E. G. C. F. Atchley (London, 1909). Corpus Ambrosiano-Liturgicum, ed. O. Heiming and J. Frei (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 49 (1 and 2), 51, 56; 1969–83). M. Magistretti (ed.), Beroldus, sive Ecclesiae Ambrosianae Mediolanensis Kalendarium et Ordines Saec. XII (Milan, 1894); id., Monumenta Veteris Liturgiae Ambrosianae (3 vols., ibid., 1897–1905) and other works. W. C. Bishop, The Mozarabic and Ambrosian Rites (*Alcuin Club Tracts, 15; 1924), pp. 98–134. A. Paredi, I prefazi ambrosiani (Pubbl. Univ. Catt. del Sacro Cuore, 4th ser. 25; Milan, 1937). P. Borelli, Il Rito Ambrosiano (Brescia, 1964), with bibl. L. Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889), ch. 3, pp. 81–99; Eng. tr. (1903), pp. 86–105. A. A. King, Liturgies of the Primatial Sees (1957), pp. 286–456. P. Lejay in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 1373–1442, s.v. 'Ambrosien (Rit)'; J. D. Crichton in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 1 (1962), pp. 67–9, s.v.; A. M. Triacca, SDB, in Nuovo Dizionario di Liturgia, ed. D. Sartore, CJS, and A. M. Triacca, SDB (1984), pp. 16–52, s.v., incl. extensive bibl.

Ambrosiana. The Ambrosian Library at Milan, founded *c.*1605 by Federico Borromeo (1564–1631), was one of the first large libraries to be open to the public without distinction. The books were originally protected from theft by the severest ecclesiastical penalties, the removal of a book being a sin from which only the Pope could absolve. Borromeo sent agents all over the world to collect MSS, and *c.*1803 it received many ancient MSS from the library at *Bobbio. *Pius XI (Achille Ratti) was Librarian from 1888 to 1912 (Prefect from 1907).

A. Martini and D. Bassi, Catalogus Codicum Graecorum Bibliothecae Ambrosianae (2 vols., Milan, 1906); A. Rivolta, Catalogo dei Codici pinelliani dell'Ambrosiana (1932). Mai, SR 5 (1841), pp. 24–50, 'De Nonnullis Codicibus Bibliothecae Ambrosianae'; E. Griffini, 'Lista dei manoscritti arabi nuovi fondo della Biblioteca Ambrosiana di Milan', Rivista degli Studi Orientali, 3 (1910), pp. 253–78. A. Saba, 'La biblioteca Ambrosiana', Aevum, 6 (1932), pp. 531–620.

Ambrosiaster. The name given (apparently first by the Benedictine editors of St *Ambrose) to the author of a set of Latin commentaries on the 13 Epp. of St Paul, ascribed in all the MSS but one, and by most medieval writers, to Ambrose. St *Augustine and certain Irish authorities quote that on Romans as by 'Sanctus Hilarius'. Their ascription to Ambrose, which was first questioned in modern times by F. *Torres in 1522, is now universally denied, and various persons have been suggested as their author, e.g. Isaac, an ex-Jew, who relapsed into Judaism, and opposed *Damasus in 374; 'Hilary the Deacon'; Hilary, a layman and Proconsul of Africa; and *Evagrius of Antioch. The commentaries are on the *Old Latin text of the Epistles and thus an important witness to the pre-Vulgate text. The writer avoids allegory, is practical, and has a good sense of history. Ambrosiaster is almost certainly also the author of 'Quaestiones Veteris et Novi Testamenti', wrongly ascribed to Augustine, and possibly of the 'Mosaicarum et Romanarum Legum Collectio'.

Comm. in J. P. Migne, PL 17. 45–508. Crit. edn. by H. I. Vogels (CSEL 81, 3 parts; 1966–9). 'Quaestiones', ed. A. *Souter (ibid. 50; 1908). A. Souter, A Study of Ambrosiaster (Texts and Studies, 7. 4; Cambridge, 1905); id., The Earliest Latin Commentaries on the Epistles of St Paul (1927). C. Martini, OFM, Ambrosiaster: De Auctore, Operibus, Theologia (Spicilegium Pontificii Athenaei Antoniani, 4; Rome, 1944). A. Pollastri, Ambrosiaster: Commento alla Lettera ai Romani. Aspetti Cristologici (L'Aquila, 1977). Further arts. by id. in Studi Storico Religiosi, 2 (1978), pp. 93–127 (Eng. summary, p. 238), and 4 (1980), pp. 313–27 (Eng. summary, p. 404). R. Hoven, 'Notes sur Érasme et les auteurs anciens', L'Antiquité Classique, 38 (1969), pp. 169–74, esp. pp. 172–4. CPL (ed. 3, 1995), pp. 58 f. (nos. 184–8). M. G. Mara in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 180–90, with bibl. G. Bardy in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 225–41, s.v.; A. Stuiber in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 356–62, s.v.

ambulatory. The 'walking-space' which arises when an apsidal sanctuary in certain churches of the Norman period is surrounded by continuous *aisles. The ambulatory is bounded on one side by the arches of the sanctuary, and on the other may give access to a series of chapels of a later date.

AMDG ('Ad Maiorem Dei Gloriam', 'To the greater glory of God'). The motto of the *Jesuits, but it also frequently appears elsewhere in Christian use.

Amen (Heb. אָמֵן; Gk. ἀμήν). A Hebrew word meaning 'verily'. It is used to express assent by Jews (Deut. 27: 15 ff.) and Christians (1 Cor. 14: 16) at the end of religious formulae, prayers, hymns, and creeds. Cf. the *Catechism of the BCP: 'and therefore I say, Amen, so be it'.

P. I. Cecchetti, 'L'"Amen" nella Bibbia e nella Liturgia', Bollettino Ceceliano, 37 (1942), pp. 87–93 and 109–15; repr. in id., Scritti (Lateranum, NS 33; 1967), pp. 171–86. H. Schlier in TWNT, 1 (1933), pp. 339–42 (Eng. tr., 1964, pp. 335–8), with further bibl., 10/2 (1979), pp. 973 f.; W. Bauer, Griechisch-deutsches Wörterbuch zu den Schriften des Neuen Testaments (6th edn. by K. and B. Aland, 1988), col. 89; Eng. tr. of 5th edn. (1979), pp. 45 f., both s.v. ἀμήν. F. *Cabrol in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 1554–73, s.v.

Americanism. A movement propagated esp. among American RCs in the last decade of the 19th cent. with a view to adapting as far as possible the external life of the Church to supposed modern cultural ideals; it also had repercussions in France. After the publication of the life of I. T. *Hecker in 1891, Americanism was associated with his teaching. Stress was laid on the value of the 'active' virtues (e.g. humanitarianism, eugenic reform, democracy), and the 'passive' attitudes such as humility and subjection to authority were depreciated. It was also urged that the Church should relax as far as possible the rigour of her requirements on converts, emphasize what was held in common by RCs and other Christians, and minimize points of difference. In an Apostolic Letter, 'Testem Benevolentiae' (22 Jan. 1899), addressed to Cardinal J. Gibbons, Abp. of Baltimore, *Leo XIII condemned it in moderate but quite definite terms; and in consequence it quickly disappeared.

'Testem Benevolentiae' in Acta Leonis XIII, 7 (1906), pp. 223–33. A. Houtin, L'Américanisme (Namur, 1904); T. T. McAvoy, CSC, The Great Crisis in American Catholic History 1895 1900 (Chicago, 1957), incl. Eng. tr. of 'Testem Benevolentiae', pp. 379–91, and bibl. J. T. Ellis, The Life of James Cardinal Gibbons, 2 (Milwaukee, 1952), pp. 1–80. M. M. Reher, 'Pope Leo XIII and "Americanism"', Theological Studies, 34 (1973), pp. 679–89. G. P. Fogarty, SJ, The Vatican and the Americanist Crisis: Denis J. O'Connell, American Agent in Rome, 1885 1903 (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificae, 36; Rome, 1974). T. T. McAvoy, CSC, in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 443 f., s.v. See also bibl. under HECKER.

Ames, William (1576–1633), *Calvinist moral theologian and controversialist. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, where his tutor was W. *Perkins, he became an extreme *Puritan, refusing to wear the surplice in his college chapel and in 1609 attacking card-playing in a sermon. Leaving Cambridge *c.*1610, he settled for a time at Colchester and then moved to Holland. Here he took a prominent part in the *Remonstrant controversies and became recognized by the Calvinists as one of their best theologians. In 1622 he became Professor of Theology at Franeker, where he attracted hearers from all parts of Protestant Europe. A few months before his death he gave up his professorship for reasons of health and took charge of the English congregation at Rotterdam. His most important work, De Conscientia, eius Jure et Casibus (1632), is one of the first Protestant treatises on *casuistry and was long held in high repute for its incisive decisions. Of his theological works, the principal was Medulla Theologiae (1st edn., 1627), a systematic exposition of Calvinist principles. Among his controversial writings were Bellarminus Enervatus (4 vols., 1628) and Animadversiones in Synodalia (1629).

His Latin Works were ed., with a Life, by M. Nethenus (5 vols., Amsterdam, 1658). K. Reuter, Wilhelm Amesius der führende Theologe der erwachenden reformierten Pietismus (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 4; Neukirchen [1940]). Eng. tr. by D. Horton of Nethenus' Life, a Dutch Life by H. Visscher (Haarlem, 1894), and Reuter (Cambridge, Mass. [1965]). K. L. Sprunger, The Learned Doctor William Ames [1972]. E. Rose, Cases of Conscience: Alternatives open to Recusants and Puritans under Elizabeth I and James I (Cambridge, 1975), pp. 194–200. R. T. Kendall, Calvin and English Calvinism to 1649 (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1979), pp. 151–64.

Amiatinus, Codex. See CODEX AMIATINUS.

amice (Lat. amictus). A linen cloth, square or oblong in shape, with strings attached. In the W. Church it may be worn round the neck by the priest when celebrating the Eucharist, and by other ministers who wear the *alb. Its original significance is obscure. Since the bishop conveyed the amice to the *subdeacon at his ordination with the admonition that it signified the castigatio vocis, it is natural to suppose that it was originally a sort of scarf to protect the throat. But in the prayers which until 1969 were said before Mass when the amice is being put on, it is referred to as galea salutis ('helmet of salvation'), from which it would be natural to deduce that it was originally a head-covering. This view is supported by the fact that certain religious orders still wear the amice in the form of a head-covering when approaching the altar for Mass, and during parts of the service. In some orders (e.g. the *Benedictine) the amice has the shape of a hood and is worn in such a way as to a form an outer covering for the hood of the religious habit. In the E. the amice as such is not used, but it is customary for some priests to use an ordinary handkerchief in the same way, as a practical method of preventing the vestments becoming stained by perspiration. See also ALMUCE.

Braun, LG, pp. 21–52. V. Ermoni in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 1597–9, s.v. 'Amict'.

Amidah. See EIGHTEEN BENEDICTIONS.

Amish (or Amish Mennonites), a conservative group in the USA and Canada which originated in a division among the *Swiss Brethren under the leadership of Jakob Ammann (*c.*1656–before 1730), an elder of Erlenbach (in the Canton of Berne), later of Markirch (Sainte-Marie-aux-Mines) in Alsace. Ammann and his group differed from other Swiss Brethren in their more frequent observance of the Lord's Supper, in their practices of washing each other's feet during the service and at all times shunning (Meidung) those who had been excommunicated, and in wearing 'plain' dress. They gained adherents in S. Germany and esp. in Alsace, as well as in Switzerland. Most of them migrated to N. America during the 18th and 19th cents.; the small numbers remaining in Europe returned to the parent body. In America they have undergone various divisions but most are members of the Old Order Amish Mennonite Church. In doctrine and Church order they differ little from the *Mennonites but they worship in each other's houses and retain the use of 'Pennsylvania Dutch' (German) in their services. Though they avoid publicity, they have attracted attention because of their traditional dress, their educational methods, their farming without modern machinery, and their high-quality craft work, esp. quilts made by the women. They practise forms of mutual aid based on personal and community sharing rather than on commercial insurance; their application for exemption from the taxes and benefits of state social security has been allowed in some states. They have communities in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Iowa, as well as elsewhere in the USA and in Ontario in Canada. In 1984 the number of their baptized members was estimated at 35,000.

J. A. Hostetler, Amish Society (Baltimore, 1963; 3rd edn., ibid. and London, 1980), with extensive bibl. Good entry in EB (15th edn.; 1974), Micropaedia, 1, p. 316, s.v. 'Amish Mennonites'.

Ammon, St (d. *c.*350), also Amun, Egyptian hermit. One of the most celebrated ascetics of the *Nitrian desert, he is mentioned by St *Athanasius in his Vita Antonii. On St *Antony's advice he sought to bring his monks together under his immediate supervision. Feast day, 4 Oct.

Other sources include *Palladius, Lausiac history, ch. 8, and the Historia Monachorum, ch. 29. Introd. by C. Byeus, SJ, to extract from Palladius in AASS, Oct. 2 (1768), pp. 413–21. I. G. Smith in DCB 1 (1877), p. 102, s.v.

Ammonas, St (d. before 396), Egyptian hermit. After 14 years living as a monk at *Scete, he became a disciple of St Antony of Egypt and succeeded him as leader of the monastery of Pispir after his death. Several of his sayings are preserved in the Apophthegmata Patrum (acc. to which he was consecrated bishop by St *Athanasius, but this assertion is prob. based on confusion with another Ammonas); the collection of 14 letters ascribed to him is also very prob. authentic. Feast day, 16 Jan.

Syr. tr. of his letters ed., with Lat. tr., by M. Kmosko, PO 10 (1915), pp. 555–616; Eng. tr. of this by D. J. Chitty and S. [P.] Brock (Fairacres Publications, 72; Oxford, 1979). Less authentic Gk. text and Syr. tr., with modern Fr. tr. and introd., ed. F. Nau, PO 11 (1915), pp. 391–504. For the complicated tradition of the versions of his works, see CPG 2 (1974), pp. 68–71 (nos. 2380–93). F. Klejna, SJ, 'Antonius und Ammonas. Eine Untersuchung über Herkunft und Eigenart der ältesten Mönchsbriefe', ZKT 62 (1938), pp. 309–48.

Ammonian Sections. See EUSEBIAN CANONS AND SECTIONS.

Ammonius Saccas (c. AD 175–242). The reputed founder of *Neoplatonism. An Alexandrian by birth, he was held in high repute as a teacher, and appears to have considerably influenced *Plotinus, who, on hearing a discourse of Ammonius, remarked, 'This is the man I was looking for' (τοῦτον ἐζήτουν). Acc. to *Porphyry (in *Eusebius, HE 6. 19), who also states (prob. wrongly) that Ammonius was a lapsed Christian, he had *Origen (but perhaps not the Christian Origen) among his pupils. He is said to have committed none of his teachings to writing. See also EUSEBIAN CANONS AND SECTIONS.

H. von Arnim, 'Quelle der Ueberlieferung über Ammonius Sakkas', Rheinisches Museum für Philologie, NS 42 (1887), pp. 276–85; E. Zeller, 'Ammonius Sakkas und Plotinus', Archiv für Geschichte der Philosophie, 7 (1894), pp. 295–312. W. Theiler, Forschungen zum Neuplatonismus (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, 10; 1966), pp. 1–45 ('Ammonios der Lehrer des Origenes'). E. R. Dodds, 'Numenius and Ammonius', in Les Sources de Plotin (Fondation Hardt pour l'étude de l'antiquité classique, Entretiens, 5; Vandœuvres and Geneva, 21–9 Aug. 1957 [1960]), pp. 3–61 (incl. discussion). A. H. Armstrong in id. (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medi- eval Philosophy (1967), pp. 196–8. H.-R. Schwyzer, Ammonios Sakkas, der Lehrer Plotins (Rheinisch-Westfälische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Vorträge G 260; Opladen, 1983). Überweg, 1, pp. 593–5, with further bibl. p. 188*. H. Dörrie in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 463–71, s.v. 'Ammonios Sakkos', with bibl.

Amos, Book of. Amos was the earliest of the canonical prophets of the OT. He is said (1: 1) to have prophesied 'in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel', i.e. between 760 and 750 BC. Acc. to 7: 14 f. he differentiated himself from the nebi'm or official prophets and claimed that his prophetic inspiration derived from a direct call from Yahweh received while he was exercising a secular calling as a shepherd (or, possibly, a sheep-farmer). The two principal themes of his message were that increasing affluence among the leaders of Israelite society had produced an unjust social order in which the poor were being exploited, and that in consequence Yahweh, the God of Israel, was about to put an end to Israel's special status by causing the nation's downfall. This national calamity would come about through a combination of natural disasters and of military defeat, perhaps at the hands of the rising Assyrian Empire. Amos shares with his hearers the expectation of a 'day of Yahweh' but reverses the popular expectation that this will be a day of triumph for the Israelites; instead, he says, it will be a day of darkness and despair. Amos thus stands at the beginning of the 'eschatological' tradition in OT prophecy, looking for a decisive and irreversible Divine intervention in human history. His oracles are also notable for their mature literary style, perhaps indebted to the '*Wisdom' tradition, and for their assumption that Yahweh is the God not only of Israel but of all nations, who avenges injustice and oppression wherever they are to be found and who has no favourites. Later prophets mitigated Amos's belief that the election of Israel had been annulled by Yahweh and restored faith in the covenant promises, but Amos's uncompromising commitment to ethical monotheism became the hallmark of prophetic teaching. The Book seems to have undergone a series of editings, and in the last of these (perhaps in the 6th or 5th cent. BC) an oracle of promise (9: 13–15) was added to give the Book an incongruous 'happy ending'.

Modern comm. by W. R. Harper (on Amos and Hosea, ICC, 1905, pp. 1–200), E. Hammershaimb (Copenhagen, 1946; 3rd edn., 1967; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1970); J. L. Mays (London, 1969); H. W. Wolff (on Joel and Amos, Dodekapropheton, 2; Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 14/2, Neukirchen, 1969, pp. 105–410; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1977], pp. 87–355); W. Rudolph (on Joel, Amos, Obad., and Jon., KAT 13/2, 1971, pp. 93–292); and J. A. Soggin (Brescia, 1982; Eng. tr., 1987). A. S. Kapelrud, Central Ideas in Amos (Oslo, 1956; repr., 1961). H. Reventlow, Das Amt des Propheten bei Amos (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 80; 1962); H. W. Wolff, Amos' geistige Heimat (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, 18; Neukirchen, 1964; Eng. tr., Philadephia [1973]). R. Martin-Achard, Amos: L'homme, le message, l'influence (Publications de la Faculté de Théologie de l'Université de Genève, 7 [1984]). E. Würthwein, 'Amos-Studien', ZATW 62 (1950), pp. 10–52; R. Smend, 'Das Nein des Amos', Evangelische Theologie, 23 (1963), pp. 404–23. J. Blenkinsopp, A History of Prophecy in Israel (1984), pp. 86–96.

amphibalum (or -us). (1) A *Gallican name for the *chasuble; (2) the birrus, a garment put on first and covering the head, and perhaps to be identified with the amictus or *amice. Acc. to tradition, St Amphibalus was the name of a martyr closely associated with St *Alban.

Amphilochius, St (*c.*340–95), Bp. of Iconium from 373. A cousin of *Gregory Nazianzus, he stood in close personal relations with all the *Cappadocian Fathers. He was present at a council of Iconium in 376 in which the full Divinity of the Holy Spirit was zealously defended, and was head of the Council of Side in 390 which excommunicated the *Messalians. Most of his surviving writings are in a fragmentary condition; but a few are complete, including some sermons and the Iambics for Seleucus, which contains a list of books of the Bible, of some importance for the history of the *Canon. Feast day, 23 Nov.

Writings and Life in J. P. Migne, PG 39. 9–130 (incomplete). Crit. edn. of his Iambi ad Seleucum (previously pr. among the works of Gregory of Nazianzus in PG 37. 1577–1600) by E. Oberg (Patristische Texte und Studien, 9; 1969). Opera ed. C. Datema (CCSG 3; 1978), with introd. and bibl. K. *Holl, Amphilochius von Ikonium in seinem Verhältnis zu den grossen Kappadoziern (Tübingen, 1904); G. Ficker, Amphilochiana, 1 (Leipzig, 1906, all pub.). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 230–42 (nos. 3230–54). J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 296–300; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 308 f. and 612 f., both with bibl.

Ampleforth Abbey, N. Yorks. In 1802 the community of English *Benedictine monks of St Lawrence's Priory (1608–1793), Dieulouard, Lorraine, settled at Ampleforth Lodge; this community claims continuity with the Benedictines of *Westminster Abbey, at least as these were restored under *Mary. Though the monastery was in exile for two centuries, many of the monks served on pastoral missions in England; these developed into parishes in the late 18th and 19th cents. Ampleforth College, the school founded in 1803, grew in size and academic quality, esp. after the foundation in 1897 of St Benet's Hall, Oxford, as a house of a study for the monks. The monastery became an abbey in 1899. In 1955 it founded a priory in the USA, at St Louis. During the abbacy of Basil *Hume (1963–76) it opened a retreat centre which has continued to flourish. Earlier members of the community include Gabriel Gifford (1554–1629), Abp. of *Reims and Primate of France, Augustine *Baker (1575–1641), and Alban Roe (1583–1642), one of the *Forty Martyrs of England and Wales canonized in 1970.

J. C. Almond, OSB, The History of Ampleforth Abbey from the foundation of St Lawrence's at Dieulouard to the present time (1903). J. McCann, OSB, and C. Cary-Elwes, OSB (eds.), Ampleforth and its Origins (1952).

ampulla. Lat., a globular vessel for holding liquid. The term is used of three classes of objects.

(1) Of certain bottle-shaped vessels, usually of glass, found at tombs in the *catacombs. Such have often been known as ampullae sanguinis from an identification, going back to the 17th cent., of the dark-red sediment frequently found in them with the blood of a martyr. But their date (4th cent. onwards), the proportion found in the graves of small children, the discovery of similar ampullae at Jewish catacombs, e.g. on the Via Labicana, together with the scientific analysis of their contents, have discredited this view. It would appear rather that they were used to preserve drops of the perfume poured on the bodies of the dead.

(2) Of certain coarsely made vases of baked clay often bearing the image or symbol of the saint, which were used to preserve oil from the lights burnt in martyria. A number sent by Pope *Gregory I from the tombs of Roman martyrs are preserved at the Cathedral at Monza. Those brought by pilgrims from the tomb of St *Menas in Egypt are esp. common.

(3) Of vessels to preserve the sacramental oils. They are referred to e.g. in St *Optatus of Milevis (Contra Donatistas 2. 19) and the *Gregorian Sacramentary. The most famous of such ampullae is the 'Sainte Ampoule' which, acc. to a legend in Flodoard (10th cent.), already mentioned by *Hincmar (d. 882), was brought by a dove at the prayers of St *Remigius for the Baptism of *Clovis. In the developed form of the legend, current from the 12th cent., the 'Sainte Ampoule' preserved at *Reims was miraculously replenished with *chrism for each coronation. It is known to have have been used for the coronation of French kings from 1131 (Louis VII) until the Revolution. Although it was broken in 1793, a fragment was preserved and used at the coronation of Charles X (1824). It appears to have been made of a metal similar to tin and engraved with a representation of the Adoration of the Magi and Shepherds. Similar legends of the miraculous origin of ampullae are found elsewhere in Europe. That among the English coronation regalia is in the unusual form of an eagle with outstretched wings. It dates from 1660 and was prob. copied from an earlier one, which, acc. to legend, was entrusted by the BVM to St Thomas *Becket.

The memorandum prepared by G. B. *De Rossi and circulated privately in 1862 was ed., with other docs., by A. Ferrua, SJ, Sulla Questione del Vaso de Sangue (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 18; 1944). O. M. Dalton, Catalogue of Christian Antiquities of the British Museum (1901), pp. 154–9; C. M. Kaufmann, Zur Ikonographie der Menas-Ampullen (1910); C. Cecchelli, 'Note iconografiche su alcune ampolle bobbiesi', Riv. A.C. 4 (1927), pp. 115–39. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 1722–78, s.v. 'Ampoules', and E. Josi in EC 1 (1949), cols. 1113–15, s.v. 'Ampolla'. On (3), Sir Francis Oppenheimer, The Legend of the Ste. Ampoule (1953); P. E. Schramm, Der König von Frankreich, 1 (1939; 2nd edn., 1960), pp. 145–50.

Amsdorf, Nikolaus von (1483–1565), *Lutheran theologian. A native of Torgau, he studied at Leipzig and Wittenberg, where he became lecturer in philosophy and theology in 1508. In 1517 he joined M. *Luther, whom he accompanied to the Disputation at *Leipzig in 1519 and to the Diet of *Worms in 1521. In 1524 he went to Magdeburg to lead the Protestant opposition against the Catholic clergy and to reform the services on Wittenberg lines. In 1528 and 1531 he did the same for Goslar. In 1534 he was responsible for Luther's renewed dispute with *Erasmus. He later quarrelled with P. *Melanchthon and M. *Bucer and alienated the Emperor during the Colloquy of *Ratisbon in 1541. In the same year he was appointed Bp. of Naumburg by the Elector of Saxony against the candidate of the Cathedral chapter and the wishes of the Emperor, but had to give up the appointment after the war of *Schmalkalden (1547) and went to Eisenach. He was a violent opponent of the Leipzig Interim, and, with *Flacius Illyricus, became a leader of the *Gnesio-Lutheran party opposed to the *Adiaphorists (q.v.). During the *Synergist controversy he maintained against G. *Major, J. Pfeffinger, and others not only the uselessness but the actual harmfulness of good works, but did not subscribe to the teaching of Flacius Illyricus on sin as the substance of natural man. His one-sided interpretation of Luther caused a split within the Lutheran party, and his teaching on the harmfulness of good works was criticized in the Formula of *Concord. He was the author of numerous theological treatises.

Ausgewählte Schriften, ed. O. Lerche (Gütersloh, 1938). Short Life by T. Pressel (Elberfeld, 1862). P. Brunner, Nikolaus von Amsdorf als Bischof von Naumburg (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, 179; 1961). O. H. Nebe, Reine Lehre: Zur Theologie des Niklas von Amsdorff (1935). R. Kolb, Nikolaus von Amsdorf (1483–1565): Popular Polemics in the Preservation of Luther's Legacy (Bibliotheca Humanistica & Reformatorica, 24; Nieuwkoop, 1978). J. Rogge in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 487–97, s.v. 'Amsdorff, Nikolaus von'.

Amsterdam Assembly (1948). The Assembly in the Concertgebouw, Amsterdam, from 22 Aug. to 4 Sept. which formally constituted the '*World Council of Churches' (q.v.). The Church leaders present included Marc Boegner, Pastor of Passy and President of the Protestant Federation of France; Erling Eidem, *Lutheran Abp. of Uppsala; Geoffrey *Fisher, Abp. of Canterbury; Germanos Strenopoulos, Abp. of Thyateira, under the *Oecumenical Patriarch; and J. R. *Mott (q.v.). The theme of the discussions was 'Man's Disorder and God's Design', under the four separate heads 'The Universal Church in God's Design' (by G. *Aulén, K. *Barth, G. *Florovsky, R. *Niebuhr, E. Schlink, O. Tomkins, W. A. Visser 't Hooft, etc.); 'The Church's Witness to God's Design' (by E. *Brunner, W. M. Horton, H. Kraemer, S. C. Neill, P. *Tillich, etc.); 'The Church and the Disorder of Society' (by Kathleen Bliss, E. Brunner, R. Niebuhr, J. H. *Oldham, etc.); and 'The Church and International Disorder' (by E. Brunner, J. F. Dulles, J. L. Hromadka, etc.).

The Official Report, with the 4 vols. under the separate titles named above, was issued in 1948–9. H. G. G. Herklots, Amsterdam, 1948 (1948; popular).

Amyraut, Moïse (1596–1644). French Protestant theologian. Born in Bourgueil, he first studied Law at the University of Poitiers, then (from *c.*1618) Theology at the Protestant Academy of Saumur, where he came under the influence of John *Cameron. In July 1626 he became a minister at Saumur and began lecturing in Theology at the Academy, a post he was to retain until his death while becoming Principal in 1641. In 1631 he was Saumur delegate to the Charenton Synod where he successfully pleaded that the French Protestants (*Huguenots) be granted certain rights, including the right to address the King without kneeling. In 1634 he published the Brief Traitté de la predestination which initiated the controversy over universal grace. Without espousing *Arminianism and while explicitly identifying his own teaching with that of J. *Calvin, Amyraut taught that the Son had been sent into the world to redeem all men provided they had faith. This doctrine was strongly criticized by Calvinist theologians in France (notably P. *du Moulin), Switzerland, and the Netherlands (notably Frederick Spanheim, 1600–49). In 1637 Amyraut was tried for heresy at the Protestant Synod of Alençon, but surprisingly escaped condemnation. As well as numerous treatises on grace, and sermons and biblical paraphrases in French, he wrote La Morale chrestienne (1652), the first important work of Calvinist ethics. Ecumenically minded, he also remained royalist during the rebellions of French nobility against the King ('La Fronde') in 1648–52.

There are no modern edns. of his works and most of his personal papers have not survived. A primary source is the account of the proceedings of the Charenton and Alençon synods issued first in Eng. tr. by J. Quick, Synodicon in Gallia reformata, 2 (London, 1692), pp. 255–422, and then in French by J. Aymon, Tous les synodes nationaux des églises réformées de France, 2 (The Hague, 1710), pp. 447–619. F. Laplanche, Orthodoxie et Prédiction: L'Œuvre d'Amyraut et la querelle de la grâce universelle (1965); B. G. Armstrong, Calvinism and the Amyraut Heresy: Protestant Scholasticism and Humanism in Seventeenth-Century France (Madison, Wis., and London, 1969). R. Nicole, Moyse Amyraut: A Bibliography with special reference to the controversy on Universal Grace (New York and London, 1981). J. Dedieu in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 1380 f., s.v.

Anabaptists ('re-baptizers', from Gk. ἀνά and βαπτίζω). The comprehensive designation of various closely related groups on the Continent who in the 16th cent. refused to allow their children to be baptized and reinstituted the baptism of believers. Their denial that infant baptism was true baptism led to the nickname. The main groups to be distinguished are: (1) Thomas *Müntzer (*c.*1489–1525) and the *Zwickau Prophets who appeared in *Wittenberg in 1521. Müntzer sympathized with the *Peasants' War (1525) and taught a doctrine of the *Inner Light similar to that later adopted by the *Quakers. (2) The *Swiss Brethren, who reintroduced believers' baptism as the basis of Church fellowship near Zurich in 1525; unlike Müntzer, they believed in non-resistance and rejected Christian participation in the magistracy. Their views quickly spread in the Swiss valleys, and into the Rhineland and SW Germany. To this group belonged Balthasar *Hubmaier (*c.*1485–1528) and, for a time, Hans Denck (1495?–1527). (3) Communities which found asylum in Moravia and, under the leadership of Jacob Hutter (d. 1536), established settlements based on the common ownership of property. After many sufferings and wanderings certain of their descendants, now known as Hutterites or Hutterian Brethren, are now to be found in Canada and the USA. (4) The South German Anabaptists, who shared the eschatological and spiritual interests of Hans Hut (d. 1527), but, esp. under the leadership of Pilgram Marpeck (d. 1556), moderated their views in line with those of the Swiss Brethren. Marpeck was an able writer and in many books entered into debate with the *Lutherans and C. *Schwenckfeld. (5) Melchiorites or Hoffmanites, that is, Anabaptists influenced by Melchior *Hoffmann (*c.*1500–*c.*1543), mainly in NW Germany and the Low Countries. Hoffmann taught an unorthodox Christology of a *docetic kind and held *apocalyptic views. (6) A group of Anabaptist refugees in Münster who in 1533–5 attempted to establish a Kingdom of the Saints under the leadership first of Jan Mattys (d. 1534) and then of Jan Bockelson (John of *Leiden, 1510–36). During the siege of the city a form of polygamy was introduced, and the grave excesses and fanaticism brought the whole of the left-wing movement into a disrepute which long continued. (7) The *Mennonites, shepherded and reorganized in the Netherlands and NW Germany by Menno Simons after the Münster episode. Their views were similar to those of the Swiss Brethren, with pacifism and non-resistance strongly emphasized. They later became in the Netherlands an influential community of rather liberal theological views and also spread to other Continental lands and to America.

Miguel *Servetus is sometimes classed among the Anabaptists, but he was not the organizer of Churches as were those listed above. Faustus *Socinus also rejected infant baptism, and Socinian influences are to be traced on some of the later Mennonites.

The Anabaptists were vigorously denounced by M. *Luther, H. *Zwingli, and J. *Calvin and severely persecuted by both Roman Catholics and Protestants. Those put to death probably ran into tens of thousands. Down to modern times they have suffered from hostile criticism; and Anabaptist hymnology and martyrology are only now receiving sympathetic and scholarly study.

There were Anabaptists in England as early as 1534, but throughout the 16th cent. Anabaptist views seem to have been mainly confined to refugees from the Low Countries. The early *Separatists and *Brownists, however, were probably influenced by them, and John *Smyth was certainly in close touch with the Mennonites. In the 17th and 18th cents. Baptists were often described as Anabaptists, but the name had then become one of abuse with evil associations and was largely repudiated.

Quellen zur Geschichte der Wiedertäufer [later Täufer] (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, vols. 13, 16, 20, 22–4, 26–7, 29–31, 34, 41, 50, 53–4 etc.; 1930 ff., incl. H. J. Hillerbrand, Bibliographie des Täufertums, 1520–1630 as vol. 10, 1962; also pub. in Eng., Elkhart, Ind., 1962). Id., A Bibliography of Anabaptism, 1520–1630: A Sequel—1962–1974 (Sixteenth Century Bibliography, 1; St Louis, 1975). Documenta Anabaptistica Neederlandica (Kerkhistorische Bijdragen, 6, parts 1 and 2, 10, 15 etc.; 1975 ff.). H. Fast (ed.), Der linke Flügel der Reformation: Glaubenszeugnisse der Täufer, Spiritualisten, Schwärmer und Antitrinitarier (Klassiker der Protestantismus, 4; Bremen, 1962). Eng. tr. of useful collection of extracts ed. G. H. Williams, Spiritual and Anabaptist Writers (Library of Christian Classics, 25; 1957); Eng. tr. of further docs. ed. W. R. Estep, Anabaptist Beginnings (1523–1533): A Source Book (Bibliotheca Humanistica & Reformatorica, 16; Nieuwkoop, 1976). The Writings of Pilgram Marpeck, ed., with Eng. tr., by W. Klassen and W. Klaassen (Classics of the Radical Reformation Series, 2; Scottdale, Pa., 1978). The Chronicle of the Hutterian Brethren, tr. and ed. by the Hutterian Brethren (2 vols., Rifton, NY, etc., 1987 ff.).

The standard work is G. H. Williams, The Radical Reformation (Philadelphia, 1957; London, 1962; 3rd edn., Sixteenth Century Essays & Studies, 15; Kirksville, Mo., 1992). There is another modern account by U. Gastaldi, Storia dell'Anabattismo (2 vols., Turin, 1972–81). W. R. Estep, The Anabaptist Story (Nashville, 1963; repr., with rev. bibl., Grand Rapids, 1975). F. H. Littell, The Anabaptist View of the Church ([American] Studies in Church History, 8; 1952; rev. as The Origins of Sectarian Protestantism, New York and London, 1964); R. Friedmann, Hutterite Studies, ed. H. S. Bender (Goshen, Ind., 1961); id., The Theology of Anabaptism: An Interpretation (posthumously pub.; Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History, 15; Scottdale, Pa., 1973); J. M. Stayer, Anabaptists and the Sword (Lawrence, Kan., 1972; 2nd edn., 1976). K. R. Davis, Anabaptism and Asceticism: A Study in Intellectual Origins (Scottdale, Pa., 1974). H.-J. Goertz, Die

Täufer: Geschichte und Deutung (Munich, 1980). V. Peters, All Things Common: The Hutterian Way of Life (Minneapolis, 1965); J. W. Bennett, Hutterian Brethren: The agricultural economy and social organization of a communal people (Stanford, Calif., 1967); C.-P. Clasen, Anabaptism: A Social History, 1525–1618. Switzerland, Austria, Moravia, South and Central Germany (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1972), and other works of this author. J. S. Oyer, Lutheran Reformers against Anabaptists: Luther, Melanchthon and Menius and the Anabaptists of Central Germany (The Hague, 1964). H. J. Hillerbrand, Die politische Ethik des Oberdeutschen Täufertums (Beihefte der Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, 7; 1962). R. Friedmann, Die Schriften der Huterischen Täufergemeinschaften: Gesamtkatalog ihrer Manuskriptbücher, ihrer Schreiber und ihrer Literatur 1529–1667 (Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philosophisch-historische Klasse, Denkschriften, 86; 1965). W. O. Packull, Mysticism and the Early South German-Austrian Anabaptist Movements 1525–1531 (Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History, 19; Scottdale, Pa., 1977). C. Krahn, Dutch Anabaptism: Origin, Spread, Life and Thought (1450–1600) (The Hague, 1968). I. B. Horst, The Radical Brethren: Anabaptism and the English Reformation to 1558 (Bibliotheca Humanistica & Reformatorica, 2; Nieuwkoop, 1972). E. A. Payne in The New Cambridge Modern History, 2, ed. G. R. Elton (1958), pp. 119–33. See also works cited under MENNONITES.

Anacletus, St (1st cent.), also 'Anencletus', Gk. ἀνέγκλητος i.e. 'blameless', early Bp. of *Rome. He is probably to be identified with 'Cletus' (so *Irenaeus, *Eusebius, *Optatus, Augustine), though the Liberian Catalogue and the Liber Pontificalis* distinguish them. He followed St *Linus (the successor to St *Peter) and preceded St *Clement of Rome (d. *c.*96). Nothing further is known of him, though tradition attributes the division of Rome into 25 parishes to him. The feast of St Cletus (with St Marcellinus, d. *c.*304) used to be kept on 26 Apr. (suppressed 1969).

Jaffé, 1, p. 1 f. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. lxix f. and 125. J. P. Kirsch in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 1407 f., s.v. 'Anaclet'; P. Goggi in EC 1 (1948), col. 1126, s.v. 'Anacleto'; J. N. D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), p. 7.

anakephalaiosis. See RECAPITULATION.

Analecta Bollandiana. A quarterly review which has been issued since 1882 by the *Bollandists. It is devoted to hagiographical studies and research and from time to time prints hitherto unpublished documents.

analogy (Gk. ἀναλογία, orig. a mathematical term denoting proportion, but already used in a more general sense by *Plato and *Aristotle). In common modern usage the word signifies a resemblance or similarity between objects of discourse. More technically, however, analogy is a linguistic and semantic phenomenon which occurs when one word bears different but related meanings so that its use on different occasions involves neither equivocation nor univocity. In cricket and zoology, 'bat' can mean something entirely different and its use is therefore equivocal. In 'Fido is a dog' and 'Rover is a dog', the word 'dog' means exactly the same thing and its use is univocal. When, however, we speak, for example, of a healthy diet and a healthy complexion, 'healthy' has a different but related meaning. Its use here may therefore be regarded as analogical. For this reason analogy has sometimes been confused with metaphor, though most writers on analogy have resisted the identification on the ground that an analogical statement is literally true while a metaphorical one is not.

In theological circles the general intelligibility of analogy has been cited as a help to understanding how one can significantly refer to God by means of words more usually used of creatures. The general idea here is that one can, for instance, truly and meaningfully say 'God is wise' and 'Solomon is wise' even though the wisdom of God is fundamentally incomprehensible. The advantage of this theory is held to be twofold. First, the use of analogy in talking about God allows us to employ arguments concerning Him which abide by common rules of logic and which proceed by means of terms for which there is already some (non-theological) meaning. Second, the recognition that our discourse about God can be analogical is a necessary corrective to *anthropomorphism or any tendency to imply that God is the same kind of thing as any nameable or describable creature.

The role of analogy in theology was much discussed by medieval writers, esp. St *Thomas Aquinas; his treatment of the subject, together with that of Thomas de Vio *Cajetan, proved very influential. In modern times the concept has again come into prominence: the RC philosopher Erich Przywara (1899–1972) made the analogy of being (analogia entis) central to his thought, whereas K. *Barth rejected the notion as an attempt to subjugate the Divine to human categories and propounded as an alternative the notion of analogia fidei (analogy of faith).

Crit. edn. of Cajetan, De Nominum Analogia (completed 1498, first pub. Venice, 1506) by P. N. Zammit, OP (Rome, 1934; rev. by P. H. Hering, OP, ibid., 1952; Eng. tr., Duquesne Studies, Philosophical Series, 4; Pittsburgh, 1953). T. L. Penido, OP, Le Rôle de l'analogie en théologie dogmatique (1931); E. L. Mascall, Existence and Analogy (1949); H. Lyttkens, The Analogy between God and the World: An Investigation of its Background and Interpretation of its Use by Thomas of Aquino (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis, 1953, 5; 1953); G. P. Klubertanz, SJ, St Thomas Aquinas on Analogy (Jesuit Studies; Chicago, 1960); R. M. McInerny, The Logic of Analogy: An Interpretation of St Thomas (The Hague, 1961); B. Montagnes, OP, La Doctrine de l'Analogie de l'Être d'après Saint Thomas d'Aquin (Philosophes Médiévaux, 6; 1963); B. Mondin, SX, The Principle of Analogy in Protestant and Catholic Theology (The Hague, 1963). H. G. Pöhlmann, Analogia entis oder Analogia fidei? Die Frage der Analogie bei Karl Barth (Forschungen zur systematischen und ökumenischen Theologie, 16; 1965). J. F. Ross, Portraying Analogy (Cambridge Studies in Philosophy, 1981).

Analogy of Religion, The (1736). A famous work of *apologetics by J. *Butler, the full title of which is The Analogy of Religion, Natural and Revealed, to the Constitution and Course of Nature. Written as an answer to certain forms of *Deism, it seeks to show both that Christianity is not unreasonable and that both Natural and Revealed Religion are positively reasonable. A characteristic strategy of the book is to argue that various objections to particular religious beliefs are not decisive since similar objections can be raised with respect to non-religious beliefs concerning nature. Butler also holds that truths about nature are an indication of the truth of religious beliefs, for which they serve to prepare us. To a large extent his case is pragmatic and relies on the notion that 'to us, probability is the very guide of life' (Introduction). We are right, he thinks, to act in accordance with the balance of probability; and this points to the truth of Natural and Revealed Religion whose propositions are of great practical importance and not just matters of theory to which we can afford to be indifferent.

The best modern edition is that of W. E. *Gladstone, The Works of Joseph Butler, 1 (Oxford, 1896), pp. 1–411. For other works, see bibl. to BUTLER, JOSEPH.

Anamnesis (Gk. ἀνάμνησις, 'memorial'). The word, which is used in the narrative of the Eucharist in the NT (1 Cor. 11: 24 f., Lk. 22: 19), is employed by liturgists for the commemoration of the Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension of Christ, which in most liturgies is included in the *Eucharistic Prayer after the Words of Institution.

O. Casel, OSB, 'Das Mysteriengedächtnis der Messliturgie im Lichte der Tradition', JLW 6 (1926), pp. 113–204. N. A. Dahl, 'Anamnesis. Mémoire et commémoration dans le christianisme primitif', Studia Theologica (Lund), 1 (1948), pp. 69–95. B. Botte, OSB, 'Problèmes de l'Anamnèse', JEH 5 (1954), pp. 16–24. D. Gregg, Anamnesis in the Eucharist (Grove Liturgical Study, 5; Bramcote, 1976 [from a Protestant perspective]). R. Cabié in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en Prière, new edn., 2 [1983], pp. 113–18 and 223–7; Eng. tr. (1986), pp. 96–100 and 207–11. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 1880–96.

Ananias and Sapphira. The man and his wife who, acc. to Acts 5: 1–11, held back part of their property when the Apostolic Church was experimenting with community of goods and, on being challenged in turn by St *Peter, suddenly fell dead.

Anaphora (Gk. ἀναφορά, lit. 'offering'). The central prayer in the Eucharistic liturgy. The traditional order of its parts is *Sursum Corda (usually introduced by some form of benediction), *Preface, *Sanctus, Memorial of the Incarnation, Words of *Institution, *Anamnesis, *Epiclesis, Intercession (missing in some cases), and *Doxology. Among the oldest known Anaphoras are those of the '*Apostolic Tradition' of *Hippolytus, the Liturgy of *Addai and Mari, and the Egyptian form of the Liturgy of St *Basil.

The word is also used in a wider sense to cover the whole liturgy from the *Great Entrance to the end (including the *Communion).

Anastasia, St (c.304), martyr. A curious liturgical interest attaches to this saint as, though originally unconnected with *Rome, she is mentioned in the Roman *Canon of the Mass and used to be commemorated in the Second Mass for *Christmas Day. She was apparently martyred at Sirmium in Pannonia, whence her relics were translated to *Constantinople by St *Gennadius (458–71) and interred in the church of the *Anastasis, founded by St *Gregory Nazianzen. Hence the cultus spread, probably through the agency of Byzantine officials, to the ancient church in Rome near the Circus Maximus known as the titulus Anastasiae (perhaps from the name of its founder) and the only church near the Imperial palace; the dedication was now understood of the Sirmian saint; and the Pope celebrated here the stational Mass of Dawn on Christmas Day. Acc. to later and quite untrustworthy legends, Anastasia was a Roman lady of noble birth, the wife of a pagan Publius and spiritual disciple of St *Chrysogonus, and was martyred on the island of Palmaria. Feast day in W. until 1969, 25 Dec.; in E. 22 Dec.

'Acta' discussed in H. *Delehaye, SJ, Étude sur le légendier romain (Subsidia Hagiographica, 23; 1936), pp. 151–71. V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 14; 1938), pp. 183–5. L. *Duchesne, 'Notes sur la topographie de Rome au moyen âge', no. 3, 'Sainte-Anastasie', Mélanges d'archéologie et d'histoire, 7 (1887), pp. 387–413; H. Grisar, SJ, 'S. Anastasia di Roma', Analecta Romana, 1 (1899), pp. 595–610; P. B. Whitehead, 'The Church of S. Anastasia in Rome', American Journal of Archaeology, 31 (1927), pp. 405–20; P. Devos, 'Sainte Anastasie la vierge et la source de sa passion', Anal. Boll. 80 (1962), pp. 33–47. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), pp. 461–4.

Anastasis (Gk. ἀνάστασις, 'resurrection'). From the first the word was used of the resurrection both of Christ Himself and of mankind in general. There were early churches dedicated to the Anastasis (of Christ) at *Jerusalem and *Constantinople; and it is possible (but see previous entry) that the present church of 'St Anastasia' at *Rome, at the foot of the Palatine Hill, originally had that dedication.

Anastasius I (d. 598), Patr. of *Antioch 559–70 and 593–598. Though a key figure in the dogmatic discussions of the second half of the 6th cent., he has not yet clearly emerged from the shadows cast by inadequate identification and publication of his works. A critic of *Justinian I's *aphthartodocetism, he was deposed by Justinian II and spent twenty-three years in exile, composing dogmatic treatises—against a tritheist, on the Trinity and the Incarnation, on the providence of God, and (incidentally) numerous problems of biblical interpretation. He prob. wrote as a neo-Chalcedonian (staunchly defending the orthodox creed of *Chalcedon, but attempting to close the gap with the *Monophysites). His works greatly influenced later authors, e.g. *Maximus the Confessor and *John of Damascus.

Collection of works attributed to him in J. P. Migne, PG 89. 1289–408. Crit. edns. by K.-H. Uthemann of his 'Dialogue with a Tritheist', Traditio, 37 (1981), pp. 73–108, and of his 'Philosophical Chapters', OCP 46 (1980), pp. 306–66. The edn. of his works by S. N. Sakkos (Thessalonica, 1976) needs to be used with caution; cf. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 313–19 (nos. 6944–69). G. Weiss, Studia Anastasiana I: Studien zum Leben, zu den Schriften und zur Theologie des Patriarchen Anastasius I. von Antiochien (559–598) (Miscellanea Byzantina Monacensia, 4; Munich, 1965). Krumbacher, pp. 59 f.; Beck (1959), pp. 380 f.

Anastasius, St (d. c.700) (Anastasius Sinaita), Abbot of the monastery of St Catherine on Mount *Sinai. A strong supporter of orthodoxy against all forms of heresy, he is believed to have attacked *Monophysitism at *Alexandria as early as 640, and it was against the same heresy that his most important treatise, the 'Hodegos' (Gk. Ὁδηγός, i.e. 'Guide'), was primarily directed. The 154 'Questions and Answers' included in editions of his writings are not in their present form his work, and the textual tradition of the popular 'Narrationes' attributed to him requires clarification. Feast in E., 21 April.

The fullest collection of his works is in J. P. Migne, PG 89. 35–1288; further works under the title 'Anastasiana' in J. B. *Pitra, Iuris Ecclesiastici Graecorum Historia et Monumenta, 2

(1868), pp. 238–94. 'Synopsis de haeresibus et synodis', also ed. K.-H. Uthemann, in Annuarium Historiae Conciliorum, 14 (1982), pp. 58–94. Crit. edn. of 'Hodegos' (entitled Viae Dux) by id. (CCSG 8; 1981) and of Homilies and Opuscula adversus Monotheletas by id. (ibid. 12; 1985); that of the genuine 'Questions and Answers' by M. Richard and J. A. Munitiz in preparation. J. B. Kumpfmüller, De Anastasio Sinaita (Würzburg, 1865). S. N. Sakkos, Περὶ Ἀναστασίων Σιναϊτῶν (Thessalonica, 1964; conclusions not generally accepted, but valuable for list of MSS). T. Spacil, SJ, 'La teologia di S. Anastasio Sinaita', Bessarione, 26 (1922), pp. 157–78, and 27 (1923), pp. 14–44. M. Richard, 'Anastase le Sinaïte, l'Hodegos et le Monothélisme', Revue des Études Byzantines, 16 (1958), pp. 29–42. CPG 3 (1979), nos. 7745–58 (pp. 453–62). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 524 f. and 661.

Anastasius Bibliothecarius (9th cent.), scholar. Apparently a native of Rome, he was educated by Greek monks with whom he retained close associations. In Aug. 855 he allowed the Imperial party to proclaim him antipope against Benedict III, but soon proved himself too rash and undisciplined for the office and was disowned by his supporters a month later. He was the best Greek scholar of his age in the W. *Nicholas I gave him the Abbacy of S. Maria in Trastevere, while later Popes made him their Librarian (hence 'Bibliothecarius') and rewarded him with important posts in the Chancery, where he tried to stem the threatening schism in the E. He attended the final session of the Eighth *Oecumenical Council (869) and later (871) translated its Acts into Latin. In 873 he translated the Acts of the Seventh Council (787). Among his other writings are a Chronographia Tripartita, based on earlier Byzantine historians, and several works on dogmatic theology.

'Epistolae sive Praefationes', ed. E. Perels and G. Laehr in MGH, Epistolae, 7 (1928), pp. 395–442. A. Lapôtre, De Anastasio Bibliothecario sedis apostolicae (Paris, 1885). E. Perels, Papst Nikolaus I und Anastasius Bibliothecarius (1920), esp. pp. 181–241. U. Westerbergh, Anastasius Bibliothecarius, Sermo Theodori Studitae de Sancto Bartholomeo apostolo: A Study (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis. Studia Latina Stockholmiensia, 9; 1963). P. Devos, SJ, 'Anastase le Bibliothécaire. Sa contribution à la correspondance pontificale. La date de sa mort', Byzantion, 32 (1962), pp. 97–115; id., 'Une Passion grecque inédite de S. Pierre d'Alexandrie et sa traduction par Anastase le Bibliothécaire', Anal. Boll. 83 (1965), pp. 157–87. C. Leonardi, 'Anastasio Bibliotecario e l'Ottavo Concilio Ecumenico' in Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 8 (1967), pp. 59–192. LP (Duchesne), 1, p. xxxv (on his reputed authorship of the Liber Pontificalis*). P. Devos, SJ, in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 480 f., s.v. 'Anastasius the Librarian'.

anathema (Gk. ἀνάθεμα, lit. 'suspended', 'set up above'). It is the equivalent of the Heb. word חֵרֶם, the root meaning of which is 'to cut off', 'curse', 'separate'. In the OT the term is used of votive offerings, e.g. Lev. 21: 5; but more often of things 'devoted to God', and hence 'under a ban' (e.g. in Deut. 7: 26), i.e. not for common use (cf. Lev. 27: 28 f.). Thus people, animals, cities, nations, and things could all become 'anathema', which frequently involved complete extermination (cf. Joshua 6, Deut. 7: 1 f., 1 Sam. 15). The practice was later alleviated, and after the Exile was normally confined to exclusion from the community and loss of goods. In this form it survived until the time of the Lord (e.g. Mt. 18: 17, Jn. 9: 22, though the term itself is not used in these and similar Gospel passages). St *Paul uses the word to denote separation from the Christian community inflicted for sins such as preaching a gospel other than his (Gal. 1: 8 f.) or for not loving the Lord (1 Cor. 16: 22).

In the post-Apostolic Church the earliest recorded instance of anathematizing offenders is at the Council of *Elvira (*c.*306). It soon became the regular procedure against heretics. In 431, St *Cyril of Alexandria issued his famous twelve anathematisms against *Nestorius. By the 5th cent., anathematization appears clearly distinguished from *excommunication. *Gratian tends to play down the distinction, but in C. 11 q. 3 c. 24 he identifies the latter as involving only exclusion from the sacraments and from worship, whereas the former means complete separation from the body of the faithful. This corresponds to the distinction made later by *Gregory IX between minor and major excommunication (Decretals, 5. 39. 59), and classical canonists thereafter identified anathema with major excommunication, though the former was sometimes reserved to the solemn ritual in which the bishop pronounced excommunication, surrounded by twelve priests carrying lighted candles, which were thrown to the ground when sentence had been uttered (Decretum, C. 11 q. 3 c. 106). *Pius IX's apostolic constitution, Apostolicae Sedis (12 Oct. 1869), suppressed the category of minor excommunication, and in the 1917 Codex Iuris Canonici* the only difference between excommunication and anathema was that the latter involved the solemn ritual which was still theoretically available in the *Pontifical. The 1983 Codex abolished even this distinction, so that the term 'anathema' no longer has any official application in the penal code.

W. C. van Unnik, 'Jesus: Anathema or Kyrios (I Cor. 12: 3)', in B. Lindars, SSF, and S. S. Smalley (eds.), Christ and Spirit in the New Testament: In honour of Charles Francis Digby Moule (Cambridge, 1973), pp. 113–26. J. Behm in TWNT 1 (1933), pp. 356 f.; Eng. tr., 1 (1964), pp. 354 f. L. Brun, Segen und Fluch im Urchristentum (Oslo, 1931). A. Vacant in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 1168–71; A. Amanieu in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 512–16; K. Hofmann in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 427–30, s.v.

Anatolius, St (d. *c.*282), Bp. of Laodicea. He was a native of *Alexandria, where he established a school of *Aristotelian philosophy and obtained a seat in the senate. During the siege of the Alexandrian suburb Brychion, in the revolt under the Prefect Aemilian (262), Anatolius devised a successful stratagem to relieve his fellow-Christians. Soon afterwards he was consecrated, apparently as coadjutor-bishop, by Theotecnus, Bp. of *Caesarea in Palestine, and in 268, on his way to the Synod at *Antioch to deal with *Paul of Samosata, made Bp. of Laodicea. Though a man of great learning and held in high repute by *Eusebius (HE 7. 32. 6–12) and St *Jerome (De Viris Ill. 73), his writings were few. They included a treatise on the date of Easter (Περὶ τοῦ Πάσχα), based on the 19-year cycle still used, from which Eusebius (loc. cit.) quotes a passage, and a work in 10 Books on the Elements of Arithmetic (Ἀριθμητικαὶ εἰσαγωγαί), though what were thought to be fragments of this work (J. P. *Migne, PG 10. 232–6) are prob. not genuine. It seems that the attribution to Anatolius of the 'Liber Anatoli de Ratione Paschali' (acc. to B. Krusch, compiled in England in the 6th cent.; acc. to C. H. *Turner, at *Iona between 580 and 600) is also mistaken. Feast day, 3 July.

The 'Liber Anatoli de Ratione Paschali' was first pub. by A. Bucher, SJ, De Doctrina Temporum Commentarius (Antwerp, 1634; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 10. 209–32). A new edn. was issued by B. Krusch, Studien zur christlichmittelalterlichen Chronologie: Der 84-jährige Osterzyklus und seine Quellen (1880). C. H. Turner, 'The Paschal Canon of "Anatolius of Laodicea"', EHR 10 (1895), pp. 699–710. V. Grumel, 'La date de l'équinoxe vernal dans le canon pascal d'Anatole de Laodicée', in Mélanges Eugène Tisserant, 2 (ST 232; 1964), pp. 217–40. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 199 f. (nos. 1620–4). See also works cited under PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES.

Anatolius (*c.*400–58), Patr. of *Constantinople. A native of *Alexandria, he was sent to Constantinople by St *Cyril. When *Flavian was deposed in 449, Anatolius was elected Bp. of Constantinople and consecrated by *Dioscorus. Pope *Leo I demanded that he should explicitly condemn *Eutyches and *Nestorius and endorse the *Tome of Leo; on the accession of the Emp. *Marcian and *Pulcheria (450), Anatolius agreed. He seems to have encouraged Marcian to summon the Council of *Chalcedon and took his place after the Papal legates. By agreeing to the condemnation of Dioscorus for uncanonical behaviour at the *Latrocinium, and not on account of his doctrine, he helped to convince the Illyrian and Egyptian bishops of the orthodoxy of the Tome of Leo, and he had some part in formulating the Definition of Chalcedon. Canon 28 of the Council, which confirmed the prerogatives of the see of Constantinople and ranked it second only to that of Rome, led to acrimony, while Leo also complained that Anatolius had exceeded his jurisdiction in consecrating Maximus Bp. of *Antioch. In general, however, they co-operated in pursuing an anti-*Monophysite policy. His coronation of the Emp. Leo I in 457 set the pattern of future Byzantine coronations.

V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fasc. 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 85–101 (nos. 111–42). The other main sources are the letters of Leo and the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon (cited s.vv.). The Life printed in AASS, Jul. 1 (1719), pp. 659–66, is of little historical value. M. Jugie, AA, in DHGE 2 (1914), cols. 1497–500, s.v. 'Anatole (9)'; T. Camelot, OP, in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 482 f., s.v.

anchorite (m.), anchoress (f.) (Gk. ἀναχωρέω, 'to withdraw'). A person who withdraws from the world to live a solitary life of silence, prayer, and mortification. Technically the term covers *coenobites as well as *hermits, but it is commonly restricted to the latter, i.e. persons who live entirely alone. The word, in distinction from 'hermit', is now used esp. of one who lives in strictly confined quarters (his 'cell'). In the early Church this way of life was at the will of the anchorite, who was free to leave his retirement if necessary, but later it was recognized and ordered acc. to rules by the Church, the bishop himself enclosing the anchorite, who was thenceforward confined within the walls of his cell. In the later Middle Ages an anchorite's cell was sometimes attached to parish churches.

R. M. Clay, The Hermits and Anchorites of England (1914), pp. 73–198 and 203–63; id., 'Further Studies on Medieval Recluses', Journal of the British Archaeological Association, 3rd ser. 16 (1953), pp. 74–86. F. D. S. Darwin, The English Mediaeval Recluse [1944].

Ancient of Days. A designation of Yahweh found in Dan. 7: 9, 13, and 22. The expression in the original Aramaic יוֹם הַכִּפֻּרִים means literally 'one aged in days' and apparently described the Deity under the figure of an old man.

Ancren(e) Riwle (or Ancrene Wisse), an early 13th-cent. 'Rule' or 'Guide for Anchoresses', written in a west Midlands dialect of English. It was originally composed for three well-born sisters, and later revised by the author for a larger group of recluses; the revised version refers to visits by *Dominican and *Franciscan friars, and so cannot have been written before the second quarter of the 13th cent. It is connected by style, preoccupations, and MS tradition with a number of other west Midlands prose works for women religious, the 'Katherine Group' and the 'Wooing Group'. The identity of the author is uncertain, but his work shows close links with the tradition of monastic legislation running from the *Augustinian canons to the Dominicans. The eight parts of the 'Rule' deal with: (1) the recluses' devotional routine; (2) the custody of the senses, and (3) of the thoughts; (4) temptation, (5) confession, and (6) penance; (7) the love of God; and (8) external regulations. The author emphasizes that the 'outer rule' of the first and final parts is no more than a handmaid to the 'lady' or 'inner rule'—the Divine commands governing the heart and conscience—to which he devotes the main body of his work; but he is less concerned with mystical experience than with general spiritual advice on the ascetic life and its problems. Most of his material is taken over from Latin sources, esp. the works of St *Augustine, St *Gregory I, and St *Bernard of Clairvaux; a significant minor source is *Ailred of Rievaulx's treatise De vita eremetica ad sororem. His style is clear, lively, and rhetorically accomplished, drawing on both Latin and native English prose traditions. During the later Middle Ages the 'Rule' was frequently copied, translated into Latin and French, and adapted for other communities both of men and of women; it retained its place in English devotional literature until the early 16th cent.

The EETS has pub. diplomatic texts of almost all the MSS, incl. the French and Latin versions. The text now usually accepted as standard is the author's rev. version, which survives only in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, MS 402; this is ed. by J. R. R. Tolkien (EETS orig. ser. 249; 1962), and tr. into modern Eng. by M. B. Salu, with introd. by G. Sitwell, OSB (Orchard Books, 1955; repr., Exeter, 1990) and by A. Savage and N. Watson, Anchoritic Spirituality (Classics of Western Spirituality, New York [1991]), pp. 41–207. There are good general introds. and notes in the crit. edns. by G. Shepherd, Ancrene Wisse: Parts Six and Seven (1959) (based on the Corpus MS) and R. W. Ackerman and R. Dahood, Ancrene Riwle: Introduction and Part I (Medieval and Renaissance Texts and Studies, 31; Binghamton, NY, 1984) (based on British Library MS Cleopatra C. VI, an early MS with corrections possibly by the author). Full discussion of date and authorship by E. J. Dobson, The Origins of Ancrene Wisse (Oxford, 1976). B. Millett, 'The Origins of Ancrene Wisse: New Answers, New Questions', Medium Ævum, 61 (1992), pp. 206–28. Detailed bibl. survey by R. Dahood, 'Ancrene Wisse, the Katherine Group and the Wohunge Group', in A. S. G. Edwards (ed.), Middle English Prose: A Critical Guide to Major Authors and Genres (New Brunswick, NJ, 1984), pp. 1–33.

Ancyra (also Angora, now Ankara). Among the important early Church synods held here were:

(1) 314. A council of from twelve to eighteen bishops from Asia Minor and Syria. It dealt with the question of the 'lapsi'. In its first nine canons ecclesiastical penalties were allotted acc. to the gravity and scandal of the lapse, but eventual reconciliation was granted to all. The remaining canons (10–25), which were concerned with various other offences, are of importance in the development of the *penitential system. Canon 13 has caused some controversy since it seems to favour ordination by presbyters.

(2) 358. A council of the *Semiarians under the presidency of *Basil of Ancyra, which rejected both extreme Arian teaching and also the Nicene *Homoousios ('of one substance'), and asserted that the Son was 'like in substance' to the Father.

On (1), Hardouin, 1 (1715), cols. 269–82; Mansi, 2 (1759), cols. 513–40. Canons, with Fr. tr. and introd., also pr. in Joannou, 1, pt. 2 (1962), pp. 54–73. Crit. edn. of Lat. texts in C. H. *Turner, EOMIA 2. 1 (1907). Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 1; 1907), pp. 298–326. R. B. Rackham, 'The Text of the Canons of Ancyra', Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, 3 (Oxford, 1891), pp. 139–216. C. H. Turner, 'Canon xiii of Ancyra', in C. *Gore, The Church and the Ministry (new edn., 1919), pp. 327–30. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 2 f. (nos. 8501 f.)

On (2), Hardouin, 1 (1715), cols. 707–10; Mansi, 3 (1759), cols. 265–90. Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 2; 1907), pp. 903–8. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 20 f. (no. 8579).

Andreae, Jakob (1528–90), *Lutheran theologian. Of humble origins, he owed most of his education to the patronage of Duke Ulrich of Württemberg. The next Duke appointed him Superintendent of the churches in the area of Göppingen in 1553, and in 1561 Professor of Theology and Chancellor of the University of *Tübingen. He worked to establish Lutheran forms of Church life and discipline both in Württemberg and elsewhere; he took part in various negotiations between the Lutherans and RCs in Germany and attended the Colloquy of *Poissy (1561) in France; above all he strove to secure harmony among the Lutheran Churches. He was one of the authors of the Formula of *Concord (q.v.) and travelled extensively in his efforts to secure its acceptance. He was bitterly attacked by the *Calvinists and his meeting with T. *Beza and others at Montbéliard in 1586 failed to produce any agreement.

His autobiography, written in Latin in 1562, ed., with Ger. tr., by H. Ehmer (Quellen und Forschungen zur württembergischen Kirchengeschichte, 10 [1991]). Short Life by M. Fittbogen (Leipzig, 1881). H. Gürsching, 'Jakob Andreae und seine Zeit', Blätter für württembergische Kirchengeschichte, 54 (1954), pp. 123–56; R. Müller-Streisand, 'Theologie und Kirchenpolitik bei Jakob Andreä bis zum Jahr 1568', ibid. 60–1 (1960–1), pp. 224–395, with bibl. R. Kolb, 'Jakob Andreae', in J. Raitt (ed.), Shapers of Religious Traditions in Germany, Switzerland, and Poland, 1560–1600 (1981), pp. 53–68. M. Brecht in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 672–80.

Andrew, St, *Apostle. He was the brother of St *Peter, with whom he appears in the Gospels (Mk. 1: 16–20, 29, etc.). Though not a member of the inner band of three (Peter, *James, and *John), several incidents concerning him are recorded (Jn. 1: 35–42, Mt. 4: 18–20, Jn. 6: 8 f., Mk. 13: 3 f., etc.). *Eusebius (HE 3. 1. 1) states that he later went to Scythia.The *Muratorian Fragment connects him with the writing of St John's Gospel. Acc. to a late and unreliable tradition he was crucified at Patras, in Achaia, in 60. The earliest evidence for the form of his cross taking the shape of an X (as it appears in the Union Jack) dates from the 10th cent. Feast day, 30 Nov. In the Anglican Communion, St Andrewstide is widely observed by intercessions for foreign missions. Since c.750 he has been regarded as the patron saint of Scotland. He is also the patron saint of Greece and Russia. See also following entry.

P. M. Peterson, Andrew, Brother of Simon Peter: His History and his Legends (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 1; 1958); F. Dvornik, The Idea of Apostolicity and the Legend of the Apostle Andrew (Cambridge, Mass., 1958), pp. 138–299. M. R. James in HDB 1 (1898), pp. 92 f., s.v. On St Andrew's connection with Scotland, W. F. Skene, Celtic Scotland, 1 (1876), pp. 296–99, with refs. to orig. sources. On iconography, R. Pillinger, Der Apostel Andreas: Ein Heilger von Ost und West im Bild der frühen Kirche (Sb. (Wien), 612; 1994). Cf. also foll. bibl.

Andrew, Acts of St. An apocryphal book dating probably from the late 2nd cent., and held in favour among the *Encratites. In its original form it no longer survives, but fragments are contained in various Greek MSS, parts survive in Coptic and Armenian translations, and *Gregory of Tours gives a long epitome of it. It depicts the apostle as imprisoned at Patras, and prosecuted for his advocacy of ascetic practices. The 'Martyrdom' of St Andrew, a variant text of part of the work, describes the Apostle's death by crucifixion, but without mention of the 'St Andrew's cross' (see previous entry).

Texts in R. A. Lipsius and M. Bonnet, Acta Apocrypha, 2. 1 (Leipzig, 1898), pp. 1–127. Crit. edn., with additional material, by J.-M. Prieur (CC, Series Apocryphorum, 5–6; 1989). Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 244–83, with introd. pp. 231–9. J. Flamion, Les Actes Apocryphes de l'Apôtre André (1911). Ger. tr., with introd. by J.-M. Prieur, in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 93–137; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 101–51. See also works cited in previous entry.

Andrew of Crete, St (c.660–740), theologian and hymn-writer. A native of Damascus, he became Abp. of Gortyna in Crete c.692. In 712 he acquiesced in a brief imposition of *Monothelitism. During the early stages of the *Iconoclastic controversy, he defended the veneration of icons. He wrote many hymns, notably a series of '*canons', of which form of composition he is said to have been the inventor. His most famous piece, the 'Great Canon' (ὁ μέγας κανών), contains no less than 250 strophes. A considerable number of his homilies have also survived. Feast day, in E., 4 July. (He is not to be confounded with St Andrew of Crete, 'the Colybite', d. 766; feast day, 20 Oct.)

Opera, with Lat. tr., ed. by F. Combefis, OP, Paris, 1644; repr. from A. *Gallandi in J. P. Migne, PG 97. 805–1444. Eng. trs. of the 'Great Canon' by D. J. Chitty (London, 1957) and by Sister Katherine and Sister Thekla (Newport Pagnell, 1974). S. Vailhé, AA, 'St André de Crète', ÉO 5 (1902), pp. 378–87. A. Heisenberg, 'Ein jambisches Gedicht des Andreas von Kreta', BZ 10 (1901), pp. 505–14. T. Nissen, 'Diatribe und Consolatio in einer christlichen Predigt des achten Jahrhunderts', Philologus, 92 (1937), pp. 177–98, with further note, pp. 382–5. P. Sanz, 'Ein Fragment eines neuen Kanon des Andreas von Kreta', Jahrbuch der Österreichischen Byzantinischen Gesellschaft, 4 (1955), pp. 1–11, incl. text. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 541–53 (nos. 8164–228), with further bibl.

Andrew of St-Victor (d. 1175), biblical exegete. Canon of St-Victor at Paris (see VICTORINES), he was first (c.1147)

Abbot of the Victorine abbey at Wigmore in Herefordshire. Difficulties arose with the monks and he went back to St-Victor after a few years, but between 1161 and 1163 he returned to Wigmore, where he died. He wrote commentaries on the *Octateuch, the Prophets, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes. Basing himself on the work of *Hugh of St-Victor and using Jewish sources, he concentrated on the literal sense of Scripture to an extent not found elsewhere in the Middle Ages.

Comm. on Ecclesiastes, ed. G. Calandra (Palermo, 1948); on Jonah, ed. A. Penna, Biblica, 36 (1955), pp. 305–31; on the *Heptateuch, ed. C. Lohr and R. Berndt (CCCM 53; 1986); on Prov. and Eccles., ed. R. Berndt (ibid. 53B; 1991); on Ez., ed. M. Signer (ibid. 53E; 1991); on Dan., ed. M. Zier (ibid. 53F; 1990); and on Sam. and Kgs., ed. F. A. van Liere (Groningen Diss., 1995). R. Berndt, André de Saint-Victor († 1175), exégète et théologien (Bibliotheca Victorina, 2; 1991). B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (3rd edn., Oxford, 1983), pp. xii and 112–95. W. McKane, Selected Christian Hebraists (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 42–75, with notes pp. 215–25 and bibl. pp. 248 f.

Andrewes, Lancelot (1555–1626), Bp. of *Winchester. Born in the parish of All Hallows, Barking, he was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1576 and Catechist in 1580. He was a devoted scholar, hard-working and accurate, who became the master of 15 languages. In 1589 he became Vicar of St Giles, Cripplegate, and in the same year, in succession to W. *Fulke, Master of Pembroke Hall. His incumbency at Cripplegate was attached to a prebend at *St Paul's, where his remarkable preaching abilities first attracted notice. *Elizabeth I offered him two bishoprics (*Salisbury, *Ely); but he declined both owing to conditions which involved the alienation of some of the revenues. In 1601 he became Dean of *Westminster. Under *James I (1603), who held Andrewes in high esteem, he rapidly rose. He became Bp. of *Chichester in 1605, of Ely in 1609, and of Winchester in 1619. In 1604 he attended the *Hampton Court Conference, which appointed him one of the translators of the *Authorized Version of the Bible; he was largely responsible for the Pentateuch and the historical Books. In the next years he became involved in the controversy over the Oath of Allegiance, imposed after the *Gunpowder Plot (1605). When St Robert *Bellarmine, under the pseudonym of 'Matthaeus Tortus' (his almoner), had attacked King James's Apology for the Oath (1608), Andrewes wrote a vigorous and able reply under the title Tortura Torti (1609). After a further attack on the King by Bellarmine, who now wrote in his own name, Andrewes issued a second work, Responsio ad Apologiam Cardinalis Bellarmini (1610). In 1613 he sat on the commission which investigated the Essex nullity suit where he was one of the seven members who voted for the divorce. In 1617 he accompanied James I to Scotland in an attempt to persuade the Scots to accept episcopacy. Later he was put on the commission on the irregularity of G. *Abbot, Abp. of *Canterbury, who had accidentally shot a gamekeeper while hunting (Oct. 1621). He died at Winchester House, *Southwark, prob. on 25 Sept. 1626, and was buried in the parish church which is now Southwark Cathedral. In different parts of the Anglican Communion a feast day is observed on 25 or 26 September, the divergence reflecting the uncertainty over the date of his death.

Theologically, Andrewes was one of the principal influences in the formation of a distinctive Anglican theology, which, in reaction from the rigidity of Puritanism, should be reasonable in outlook and Catholic in tone. Convinced that true theology must be built on sound learning, he cultivated the friendship of such divines as R. *Hooker and G. *Herbert, as well as of liberal scholars from abroad, e.g. I. *Casaubon and P. *du Moulin, and he opposed the *Lambeth Articles (1595), though at the time he was chaplain to Abp. J. *Whitgift. Probably his known aversion to Calvinism explains his absence from the Anglican delegation to the Synod of *Dort (1618). He held a high doctrine of the Eucharist, emphasizing that in the sacrament we receive the true body and blood of Christ and constantly using sacrificial language of the rite. He wanted the C of E to express its worship in an ordered ceremonial and in his own chapel used the mixed chalice, incense, and altar-lights.

But in his lifetime Andrewes's fame rested esp. on his preaching. He regularly preached at court on the greater Church feasts; and his 'Ninety-Six Sermons', first pub. in a collected edition by W. *Laud and J. Buckeridge in 1629, remain a classic of Anglican homiletic works. They are characterized by verbal conceits, a minute and (to modern feeling) overworked analysis of the text, and constant Greek and Latin quotations. His famous Preces Privatae is a collection of devotions, mainly in Greek, compiled for his personal use. Though there were various partial English translations from 1630 onwards, the first comprehensive edition was that issued (with Lat. tr. apparently based on Andrewes's own material) by J. Lamphire in 1675; this was the basis of the classic (and enlarged) English translation by F. E. *Brightman (1903). Andrewes's Patterne of Catechisticall Doctrine (1630; also posthumous) was based on lectures delivered at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge.

Works ed. J. P. Wilson and J. Bliss in LACT (11 vols., 1841–54). Modern selection of his sermons ed. G. M. Story (Oxford, 1967), with biog. introd. Brief Life by Henry Isaacson (1581–1654), Andrewes's pupil, amanuensis, and intimate friend (London, 1650 [1651]; new edn. by S. Isaacson, London, 1829; also incl. in works). Other Lives and studies by A. T. Russell (Cambridge, 1860), R. L. Ottley (London, 1894), M. F. Reidy, SJ (Chicago, 1955), P. A. Welsby (London, 1958), and N. Lossky (Paris, 1986; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1991). R. W. *Church, 'Lancelot Andrewes', in A. Barry (ed.), Masters of English Theology (1877), pp. 61–112. T. S. *Eliot, For Lancelot Andrewes: Essays on Style and Order (1928), ch. 1, pp. 13–32. J. H. Overton in DNB 1 (1885), pp. 401–5, s.v.

Anencletus, St. See ANACLETUS, ST.

angel (from Gk. ἄγγελος, 'messenger'). The belief in angels is amply attested in the Bible, both in the OT and in the NT. They are represented as an innumerable multitude (e.g. Gen. 32: 1 f., Dan. 7: 10) of beings intermediate between God and man. In the older books interest is chiefly confined to their mission (cf. Gen. 16: 7 ff.; Jgs. 6: 11 ff.), whereas in the later ones their nature is more clearly defined. In Isaiah's vision (Is. 6) and in Job they form the heavenly court and sing the praises of God, whose commands they obediently perform for nations (Dan. 10: 13 and 21, 12: 1) as well as for individuals, and even three proper names, *Michael (Dan. 10: 13),

*Gabriel (Dan. 8: 16), and *Raphael (Tob. 3: 17), are recorded. In *Philo and the Jewish apocryphal writings, esp. *Enoch, angelology is highly developed, and angels, being the constant intermediators between God and man, were also regarded as the promulgators of the Law, a view accepted by the NT writers (Acts 7: 53, Gal. 3: 19, Heb. 2: 2). The Lord Himself sanctioned the popular belief. Acc. to His teaching the angels are spiritual beings (Mt. 22: 30) who enjoy always the vision of God in heaven (Mt. 18: 10) and will accompany Him at His Second Coming (Mt. 16: 27). The NT authors represent Christ as surrounded by angels at the most important periods of His life. They announce His Incarnation (Mt. 1: 20, 24) and His Birth (Lk. 2: 9–15); they minister to Him in the desert (Mt. 4: 11), strengthen Him in His agony (Lk. 22: 43), would be ready to defend Him when He is captured (Mt. 26: 53), and are the first witnesses of His Resurrection (Mt. 28: 2–7; Jn. 20: 12 f.). In Rev. the role of angels is paramount; their worship in heaven is the prototype of the worship of the Church, and their ministry at the end of the world is the visionary development of the Lord's teaching. On the other hand, the dangers of an exaggerated cult paid to them by some heretical sects in the early days of Christianity are reflected in Col. (2: 18) and perhaps also in Heb., which lays special emphasis on the superiority of Christ to the angels (1: 4 ff.).

In the first cents., while the great Trinitarian and Christological doctrines were being worked out, interest in angels was largely confined to Jewish–Christian circles, where Christ was sometimes seen as a kind of angel. Otherwise, their existence was accepted by the Fathers as a truth of faith; their immaterial and spiritual nature, however, was not fully recognized until *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite and St *Gregory the Great. *Origen attributed to them an ethereal body, an opinion which seems to have been shared by St *Augustine. There was similar uncertainty on the subject of their present state. St *Ignatius of Antioch had affirmed that they must believe in the Blood of Christ in order to be saved (Smyrn. 6. 1), and Origen held the good angels to be no less capable of falling than the demons were of being saved. This teaching was rejected by most of the orthodox Fathers, though traces of it are to be found in *Didymus, *Cyril of Jerusalem, and others. Perhaps the greatest interest was taken in the question of the angelic orders, raised by the two enumerations in Eph. 1: 21 and Col 1: 16 respectively. By amalgamating both passages five different ranks were arrived at, to which were sometimes added 'Angels' (here understood as a separate species of beings) and '*Archangels' (so *Irenaeus), and also the *Seraphim of Is. 6: 2 and the *Cherubim of Ez. 1: 5; but their number and order were only fixed by Dionysius in his 'Celestial Hierarchies', where they are arranged in three hierarchies containing three choirs each, in the order of Seraphim, Cherubim, and Thrones; Dominations, Virtues, and Powers; Principalities, Archangels, and Angels. Of these only the last two choirs have an immediate mission to men.

In the Middle Ages Dionysius' speculative doctrine was taken over and developed by the *Schoolmen, and a treatise on angels became a part of the Commentaries on the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard from the 13th cent. onwards. The doctrines of St *Thomas Aquinas and *Duns Scotus were foreshadowed by St *Albert the Great and St *Bonaventure respectively. St Thomas and all the Schoolmen after him are at one on the point that angels are intelligences not destined to be united to a body, and thereby differ from the human soul. Acc. to St Thomas they are not composed of 'form' and 'matter', but are subsistent forms, each differing from the other and forming a species in himself. From their immateriality follows that they are by nature immortal and incorruptible; having neither extension nor dimensions they cannot be in a place, but can move and act on material beings by applying their power to the place in which they want to be. Duns Scotus, on the other hand, regards angels as composite beings consisting of form and matter, though the latter is not corporeal. There may be several angels in the same species, and several angels may occupy the same place. The angelic mode of knowledge had already been discussed by St Augustine (Civ. Dei, 11. 29), from whom St Thomas took over the distinction between scientia matutina and scientia vespertina, the former being supernatural knowledge which sees its objects in the Divine Word, and the latter natural, which knows individual things not, indeed, as man, through the senses, but through the intelligible species infused into the angelic intelligence at its creation. St Thomas held that its proper object was the immaterial, and its mode not discursive reasoning, but the intuitive perception of conclusions in their principles, a view contested by Duns Scotus, and later by F. *Suárez, who held that angels can reason. On the question of the Fall, St Thomas taught that the angelic will is such that one good or bad act fixes him irrevocably in good or evil, whereas Duns Scotus regarded a succession of acts as necessary. On several other points both schools of thought were in agreement. Thus most Scholastics taught that the angels were created at the same time as the material universe, that they were elevated to a state of grace in order to undergo a test followed either by supernatural beatitude or eternal damnation, and that the chief Divine mysteries, esp. the Incarnation, were then revealed to them. In the question of the hierarchy they all followed Dionysius more or less closely.

The teaching of post-medieval theologians runs on the lines of a Thomist–Scotist synthesis as developed by Suárez. The RC Church has made few pronouncements on the subject. While Catholic Christianity in general teaches the existence of angels, their perfect spirituality, and their creation before man, and enjoins a cult similar to that given to the saints, Protestants have tended to shrink from definition and speculation in the matter. See also GUARDIAN ANGELS.

F. Suárez, SJ, Summa Theologiae de Deo Rerum Omnium Creatore, pars secunda, 'De Angelis' (Lyons, 1620). J. Turmel, 'Histoire de l'angélologie des temps apostoliques à la fin du V^{e} siècle', Revue d'histoire et de littérature religieuses, 3 (1898), pp. 289–308, 407–34, 533–52; id., 'L'Angélologie depuis le faux Denys l'Aréopagite', ibid. 4 (1899), pp. 217–38, 289–309, 414–34, 537–62; J. *Daniélou, SJ, Les Anges et leur mission d'après les Pères de l'Église (Collection Irénikon, NS 5; 1952). M.-T. d'Alverny, 'Les Anges et les jours', Cahiers Archéologiques, 9 (1957), pp. 271–300. E. Peterson, Das Buch von den Engeln: Stellung und Bedeutung der heiligen Engel im Kultus (Leipzig, 1935; Eng. tr. 1964). J. Barbel, CSSR, Christos Angelos: Die Anschauung von Christus als Bote und Engel in der gelehrten und volkstümlichen Literatur des christlichen Altertums (Theophaneia, 3; Bonn, 1941). [A.] W. Carr, Angels and Principalities: The Background, meaning and development of the Pauline phrase hai archai kai hai exousiai (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 42; 1981). C. A. Patrides, Premises and Motifs in Renaissance Thought and Literature (Princeton, NJ [1982]), pp. 3–30 ('The Orders of the Angels'). G. Davidson, A Dictionary of Angels (New York and London [1967]). A. Vacant, G. Bareille, L. Petit, J. Parisot, J. Miskgian in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 1189–1272, s.v. 'Anges'; H. L. Pass in HERE 4 (1911), pp. 578–83, s.v. 'Demons and Spirits (Christian)'; J. Duhr in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 580–625, s.v. 'Anges'; J. Michl in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 109–200, s.v. 'Engel IV (christlich)', with bibl. cols. 256–8. For representation in art, also H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 2080–2161, s.v. 'Anges', with bibl.; J. Villette, L'Ange dans l'art d'Occident du XII^e au XVI^e siècle (1940), with bibl.; T. Klauser in RAC 5 (1962), cols. 258–322, s.v. 'Engel X (in der Kunst)'. Popular account (good on iconography) by P. L. Wilson, Angels [1980].

Angela of Foligno, Bl (*c.*1248–1309), Umbrian mystic. She came of a wealthy family and spent almost her whole life at Foligno. After the death of her husband she was converted to a life of austerity and prayer and later became a *Franciscan tertiary. She was the recipient of frequent visions, esp. relating to the Lord's Passion. The accounts of them, taken down from dictation by her confessor, Brother Arnold, and later circulated as 'Liber Visionum et Instructionum', reflect early Franciscan piety at its highest. Angela was beatified by Innocent XII in 1693. Feast day, 4 Jan.

Her 'Liber Visionum', pub. at Alcalá, 1502, ed. L. P. Rosello (Venice, *c.*1510); also Paris, 1598, and Cologne, 1601. Crit. edns. after the MS Assisi 342 by P. Doncœur, SJ, and M. Faloci Pulignani (Bibliothèque d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 2; Paris, 1925), with Fr. tr., ed. M. J. Ferré and L. Baudry (Paris, 1927), and by L. Thier, OFM, and A. Calufetti, OFM (Grottaferrata, 1985). Eng. tr. by M. G. Steegman, with preface by A. Thorold ('1909' [1908]). L. Leclève, Sainte Angèle de Foligno (1936). P. Lachance, OFM, The Spiritual Journey of the Blessed Angela of Foligno according to the Memorial of the Frater A. (Studia Antoniana, 29; Rome, 1984). C. Schmitt, OFM (ed.), Vita e Spiritualità della Beata Angela da Foligno: Atti del Convegno di Studi per il VII Centenario della Conversione della Beata Angela da Foligno (1285–1985), Foligno 11–14 dicembre 1985 (Perugia, 1987). H. Graef in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 501 f., s.v.

Angela Merici, St (1470/75–1540), foundress of the *Ursulines. She lived most of her mature life at Brescia. In her early years she was a Franciscan *tertiary. After devoting some years to the education of young girls and the care of sick women, she made a pilgrimage to Palestine in 1524–5 during which she was smitten with blindness for a time. As the result of visions she founded at Brescia in 1535 a religious community for women which she named after her patron, St Ursula. In 1537 she herself was elected superior. She was canonized in 1807. Feast day, 27 Jan.

The earliest biography, compiled by G. B. Nazari in 1568, is partially pr. as an appendix to G. Bertoletti, Storia di S. Angela Merici, 1474–1540 (Brescia, 1923). Later lives by O. Gondi, SJ (ibid., 1600) and C. Doneda (ibid., 1768). Ste Angèle Merici et l'ordre des Ursulines, par une religieuse du même ordre (2 vols., 1922); Sister M[ary] Monica, OSU, Angela Merici and her Teaching Idea, 1474–1540 (New York, 1927), with bibl.; T. Ledóchowska, OSU, Angèle Merici et la Compagnie de Sainte-Ursule (2 vols., Rome [1968]; Eng. tr., ibid. [1970]). More popular Life by P. Caraman (London, 1963).

Angelic Doctor, the. A title applied from medieval times to St *Thomas Aquinas in reference to 'the almost angelic quality of his intellect' (Motu Proprio, Doctoris Angelici, 29 June 1914). See also DOCTORS, SCHOLASTIC.

Angelic Hymn (Lat. hymnus angelicus). Another name for the Gloria in excelsis* (q.v.), the opening words of which were the hymn of the angelic host at *Bethlehem (Lk. 2: 14).

Angelico, Bl Fra (1395/1400–1455), Giovanni da Fiesole, painter. On the basis of the Life by Giorgio Vasari (1511–71), it was long held that he was born in 1387 and entered the *Dominican Order in 1407. It now seems that he was active in Florence as a painter in 1417, but still at that time a layman; he is first recorded as a friar at the Convent of San Domenico at Fiesole in 1423, and he remained there for some time after 1435, when some members of the community moved to Florence to found a new convent. During the 1430s he was also active in Cortona, where some of his greatest pictures still are. The first evidence of his presence at San Marco in Florence dates from 1441. His work here included the high altarpiece in the church and the frescoed decoration of the cells, cloisters, and corridors of the convent. Probably in 1445 he was summoned to Rome and is said to have been offered the archbishopric of Florence. Between 1446 and 1449 he painted four fresco cycles in chapels at the *Vatican. He became Prior of San Domenico, Fiesole, in 1450. He was beatified in 1982. Feast day in the Dominican Order, 18 February.

His great artistic contribution lay in his narrative power and use of brilliant colour; many of the most memorable images in Christian art were conceived by Fra Angelico. In the 19th cent. he was widely regarded as the supreme example of a mystical or spiritual artist. Modern critics tend to stress the innovative nature of his work and his place in the development of Renaissance art.

G. Vasari, Le vite de piu eccellenti architetti, pittori, et scultori Italiani (2 vols., Florence, 1550), 1, pp. 367–72; convenient Eng. tr. by G. Bull (Penguin Classics, 1965), pp. 199–207. Modern studies by F. Schottmüller (Klassiker der Kunst, 18; Stuttgart, 1911), J. Pope-Hennessy (London, 1952; 2nd edn., 1974), S. Orlandi, OP (Florence, 1964), C. Lloyd (Oxford and New York, 1979), and T. S. Centi, OP (Siena, 1984; argues in favour of traditional chronology). Beato Angelico: Miscellanea di Studi a cura della Postulazione Generale dei Domenicani (1984). L. Castelfranchi Vegas, L'Angelico e l'Umanismo (Milan, 1989); W. Hood, Fra Angelico at San Marco (New Haven, Conn., 1993).

Angels of the Churches. The seven angels of the Churches of *Ephesus, *Smyrna, *Pergamum, *Thyatira, *Sardis, *Philadelphia, and *Laodicea mentioned in Rev. 1–3. To whom or what is the reference is much disputed. If the angels are men they may be bishops occupying their sees; if heavenly beings, they are perhaps the spiritual protectors of the respective Churches.

W. M. *Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia (1904), pp. 69–72; C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in their Local Setting (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 11; Sheffield [1986]), pp. 32–34. See also comm. to Rev. cited s.v.

Angelus. In the W. Church, the devotion consisting in the repetition thrice daily (early morning, noon, and evening) of three *Ave Marias with *versicles and a *collect as a memorial of the Incarnation. A bell is rung three times for each Ave and nine times for the collect. The name comes from the first word of the opening versicle in the Latin. During *Paschaltide its place is taken by a devotion beginning with the verse, 'Regina coeli laetare, alleluia'. Its history is obscure. The use of a similar devotion, recited at night to a bell, was adopted in Germany in the 13th cent. The morning Angelus first appears in the 14th cent., while the earliest evidence for the midday Angelus is from the 15th cent. The devotion did not come into general use until the 17th cent. The evening Angelus bell is commonly known in Italy as the 'Ave Maria'.

H. Thurston, SJ, 'Our Popular Devotions', Sect. 5: 'The Angelus', Month, 98 (1901), pp. 483–99, 607–16; 99 (1902), pp. 61–73, 518–32; also 100 (1902), pp. 89 f. T. Esser, OP, 'Geschichte des englischen Grusses', Hist. J. 5 (1884), pp. 88–116; id., 'Das Ave-Maria-Läuten und der "Engel des Herrn" in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwickelung', ibid. 23 (1902), pp. 22–51, 247–69, 775–825. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 2; 1913), Appendix IV, 'Sur la salutation angélique prescrite par le canon 7 du Concile de Béziers en 1246', pp. 1734–59. U. Berlière in DTC 1 (pt. 1; 1903), cols. 1273–7, s.v. 'Angélique (Salutation)'; H. Thurston, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 1164 f., s.v. 'Ave Maria', both with bibl.

Angelus Silesius (1624–77) (Johannes Scheffler), mystical poet and controversialist. The son of a Lutheran Polish noble, he became (*c.*1649) court physician to the Duke of Oels, in Silesia. In 1653 he became a RC, and thenceforward devoted his time and energies to writing. In 1661 he was ordained priest. His chief fame lies in his mystical poems, published under the titles of Heilige Seelenlust (1657) and Cherubinischer Wandersmann (1675; 1st edn. with different title, 1657). The former interprets the spiritual life with the imagery of the Song of Solomon; the latter was written under the influence of a tradition of German mysticism that owes much to *Eckhart. He also began in 1663 a series of 55 controversial tracts in which he attacked various Christian sects. Some of these were collected in his Ecclesiologia (1677).

Edns. of his works by H. L. Held (3 vols., Munich, 1921; 2nd edn., 1924) and G. Ellinger (2 vols., Berlin [1924]). Cherubinischer Wandersmann, ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by E. Susini (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres et Sciences Humaines de Paris, Série 'Textes et Documents', 4–5; 1964). Selected passages tr. into Eng. by J. E. C. Flitch (London, 1932). G. Ellinger, Angelus Silesius: Ein Lebensbild (Breslau, 1927). J. Baruzi, Création religieuse et pensée contemplative (1951), pp. 99–239. E. O. Reichert, Johannes Scheffler als Streittheologe: Dargestellt an den konfessionspolemischen Traktaten der 'Ecclesiologia' (Studien zu Religion, Geschichte und Geisteswissenschaft, 4; 1969).

Anglican and Eastern Churches Association. A body founded in 1864, partly on the initiative of J. M. *Neale, to pray and work for the reunion of the Orthodox Church and the Anglican Communion. It was originally known as the 'Eastern Church Association', and in its present form it also embodies another organization, founded in 1906, the 'Anglican and Eastern Orthodox Churches Union'. During 1920–39 and 1950–4 it issued The Christian East, since 1955 The Eastern Churches News-Letter.

Anglican chant. The music of the Psalms, as widely used in the Anglican Communion. It consists of a tune in barred music, harmonized, in which the first part of each half-verse is sung on a reciting note, and the concluding words fitted to a tune in metrical rhythm. It developed out of the plainchant psalm-tones about the end of the 17th cent., harmony and more rigid time being introduced; and it became widely popular about the middle of the 19th, when parish churches began to copy the choral services of cathedrals. In the 20th cent. a movement began to adapt the Anglican chant to a less rigid time, in order to avoid distortion of the words, and various methods, such as rearrangements of verses, the use of speech-rhythm, etc., have been employed to this end. The Anglican chant is still very widely used, but there has been, since the middle of the 19th cent., a parallel revival of *plainsong.

C. H. Phillips, The Singing Church (1945), pp. 112 f. and 201–10. K. R. Long, The Music of the English Church (1972), esp. pp. 235 f. N. Timperley, The Music of the English Parish Church (2 vols., Cambridge, 1979), esp. 1, pp. 167–76. R. [S.] *Bridges in PBD (1912), pp. 171–81, s.vv. 'Chant, Anglican' and 'Chanting'; P. A. Scholes and C. Moore in D. Arnold (ed.), The New Oxford Companion to Music (1983), pp. 77–80, s.v.

Anglican Communion. The Church in communion with, and recognizing the leadership of, the see of *Canterbury, whether in Britain or abroad. It consists of the *Church of England (the only part still retaining state *establishment), the Church of *Ireland, the Church in *Wales, the *Scottish Episcopal Church, the *Episcopal Church in the USA, the Anglican Churches of *Australia, *Canada, Papua New Guinea, and the Southern Cone of America; the Anglican Church in Aotearoa, New Zealand and Polynesia; the Provinces of *Southern Africa, the *West Indies, *West Africa, Central Africa, *Uganda, *Kenya, Myanmar (*Burma), Tanzania, the Indian Ocean, Melanesia, *Sudan, *Nigeria, Burundi, Rwanda, *Zaire, *Korea, *Mexico, and South East Asia; the Nippon Sei Ko Kai (*Japan), the Church of Ceylon (*Sri Lanka), the Episcopal Church of *Brazil, the Episcopal Church in *Jerusalem and the Middle East, the *Philippine Episcopal Church, and various 'extra-provincial' dioceses under the jurisdiction of the Abp. of Canterbury or another Anglican Primate (or his see). The Lusitanian Church (*Portuguese Episcopal Church) and the Spanish Reformed Episcopal Church are also members of the Anglican Communion. The United Churches of *South India, *North India, *Pakistan, and Bangladesh are members of the Anglican Consultative Council, the *Lambeth Conference, and the Primates' Meeting. The Anglican Communion is in communion with them and with the Philippine Independent Church; the *Old Catholic Churches and the Mar Thoma Syrian Church of *Malabar are in communion with most Anglican Churches.

For the first 250 years after the *Reformation, the Anglican Communion, except for the Episcopal Church in Scotland (disestablished from the days of William III) consisted solely of the one (state) Church of England, Ireland, and Wales. Efforts to found sees in the colonies (dating from the time of W. *Laud) were hindered by supposed legal objections and real political ambiguities, and priests working there, who were for the most part state chaplains rather than missionaries, were placed under the jurisdiction of the Bp. of London. In 1784 the Scottish bishops accepted an invitation to consecrate S. *Seabury as the first bishop of the Church in the United States. After the Consecration of Bishops Abroad Act 1786 had made possible the consecration in England of bishops for sees in other parts of the world, two further American bishops were consecrated by the English Archbishops in 1787 and a fourth in 1790. With the episcopal succession secured, the Episcopal Church in the United States formed itself into an autonomous body in full communion with the see of Canterbury by the action of its first General Convention in 1789, when it also produced its own revision of the BCP.

Meanwhile in 1787 the first colonial bishop (C. Inglis, Bp. of Nova Scotia) was consecrated, with jurisdiction over British N. America, and new sees were shortly afterwards set up in this area. In 1814 T. F. *Middleton was consecrated first Bp. of Calcutta, a diocese which at its height extended over *India, Sri Lanka, the E. Indies, and New South Wales, but which was soon divided by the creation of the sees of Madras (1835) and of Bombay (1837), and by the appointment of W. G. Broughton as first Bp. of Australia in 1836. The diocese of New Zealand was set up in 1841, with G. A. *Selwyn as its first bishop. In the same year the Colonial Bishoprics' Council was formed, through the efforts of C. J. *Blomfield, Bp. of London, and a great increase in the number of overseas bishoprics followed. Provincial organization began in 1835, when the Bp. of Calcutta became Metropolitan of India. It was extended to Australia in 1847, to South Africa in 1853, to New Zealand in 1858, to Canada in 1860, and to the West Indies in 1883. During the same period diocesan councils and provincial synods developed, and towards the end of the 19th cent. the title of Abp. was assumed by some of the Metropolitans. In 1855 for the first time an Anglican (non US) bishop was consecrated outside the British Isles when F. T. McDougall was made Bp. of Labuan and Sarawak (Borneo) by D. *Wilson, Bp. of Calcutta. Gradually complete independence was secured by those dioceses with provincial organization, which in the second half of the 20th cent. was extended almost everywhere. Dioceses outside provincial organization, though free from state control, depend directly on the Abp. of Canterbury or another Anglican Primate (or his see), but few of these remain. In Britain the Church of Ireland was disestablished in 1869 and that of Wales in 1920. Overseas Churches within the British Empire have been similarly disestablished (e.g. most of those in the West Indies in the latter part of the 19th cent. and the Church of India in 1928). Outside the British Empire a few Anglican sees were founded, e.g. in *China and Japan (where English, Canadian, and American missionaries worked together), in Jerusalem, Iran, and Egypt, and in scattered places elsewhere, e.g. Madagascar. The British Anglican chaplaincies in the whole of Europe were under the care of the Bp. of London until 1842, when responsibility for the areas bordering the Mediterranean was vested in the newly-created diocese of Gibraltar. In 1980 the chaplaincies in northern and central Europe were joined with the diocese of Gibraltar to form the diocese of *Europe.

In addition to the office of the Abp. of Canterbury, the Anglican Communion has a network of support and communication in the Lambeth Conferences, the regular Primates' Meetings, and the Anglican Consultative Council. Anglican bishops meet periodically as a body at the Lambeth Conference, which was first called by Abp. C. T. *Longley in 1867. The Conference has no legislative power and does not make decisions which are binding on member Churches, but its reports and resolutions carry weight and indicate the opinions of the contemporary Anglican episcopate. In 1969 the Anglican Consultative Council, which includes clerical and lay as well as episcopal representatives from each Province or Church of the Anglican Communion, was established as an advisory body. The Primates have met regularly for consultation since 1979.

H. Lowther Clarke, Constitutional Church Government in the Dominions Beyond the Seas and in other Parts of the Anglican Communion (1924). J. W. C. Wand (ed.), The Anglican Communion: A Survey (1948). H. G. G. Herklots, Frontiers of the Church: The Making of the Anglican Communion (1961). J. Howe, Highways and Hedges: Anglicanism and the Universal Church (1985; 2nd edn., Anglicanism and the Universal Church: Highways and Hedges, Toronto, 1990). The Eucharistic rites of the various branches of the Anglican Communion are collected in B. [J.] Wigan (ed.), The Liturgy in English (1962); C. O. Buchanan (ed.), Modern Anglican Liturgies 1958–1968 (1968); id. (ed.), Further Anglican Liturgies 1968–1975 (1975); id. (ed.), Latest Anglican Liturgies 1976–1984 (1985). The Anglican Communion: A Guide issued by the Anglican Communion Office (1991). See also works cited under ANGLICANISM, CHURCH OF ENGLAND, and LAMBETH CONFERENCES. Current information is contained in the Official Yearbook of the Church of England and the official publications of individual Provinces and Churches.

Anglicanism. The word was coined in the 19th cent. from the much older 'Anglican', perhaps under the influence of the contemporary French term, Gallicanisme. It properly denotes the system of doctrine and practice of those Christians who are in communion with the see of *Canterbury but it has come to be used esp. in a more restricted sense of that system in so far as it claims to possess a religious and theological outlook distinguishable from that of other Christian communions, whether Catholic, Orthodox, or Protestant. The original formulation of Anglican principles is to be sought in the reign of *Elizabeth I rather than that of *Henry VIII or Edward VI, for it was under her that a via media between the opposing factions of Rome and Geneva (later called the 'Elizabethan Settlement') became a political necessity and Anglicanism as a doctrinal system took shape. Its formularies, including the Book of *Common Prayer, the *Ordinal, the *Thirty-Nine Articles, and the two Books of *Homilies became from Elizabeth's reign the basis of Anglican self-understanding, preaching, and doctrine. The Elizabethan BCP was the focus of controversies in the 17th cent., but, although the Book underwent subsequent revision, these alterations were of little theological significance.

After a period in which *Calvinist influences were dominant, the 17th cent. is often seen as the Golden Age of Anglicanism. In the lives and writings of L. *Andrewes, W. *Laud, H. *Thorndike, J. *Taylor, J. *Cosin, T. *Ken, and many others, often collectively known as the '*Caroline Divines', the C of E at once confirmed her rejection of the claims of Rome and refused to adopt the theological and ecclesiastical systems of the Continental reformers. Classical Anglicanism avoided the tendency to confessional systems and refused to recognize any form of *authority as absolute. The historic episcopate was preserved, even though many (e.g. R. *Hooker) did not regard it as of divine institution. The Church's right to adapt its ministry and even the form of its doctrine to changing circumstances was not denied, but the extent of legitimate change was held to be limited by appeal to Scripture as containing all things necessary to salvation. Truth was therefore to be sought from the joint testimony of Scripture and ecclesiastical authority, which in its turn was to be based on the tradition of the first four cents. The role of reason has always been affirmed in the Anglican tradition; it is reason itself that recognizes the authority of Scripture. As Jeremy Taylor put it, 'Scripture, tradition, councils, and fathers, are the evidence in question, but reason is the judge'.

At the Restoration of 1660 the dominant party belonged to the school of W. Laud (d. 1645) and other *High Churchmen who emphasized the continuity of the C of E with its Catholic roots. This influence was weakened by the secession of the *Nonjurors in 1690, but as writers they continued to play an important part in the defence of the Church against the secular learning of the European *Enlightenment. An initial reaction to such secular learning had come from the *Cambridge Platonists (1633–88) who sought to bypass both the doctrinal rigidities of *predestinarian Calvinism and what they felt to be a secular reaction to such over-confident and morally repugnant theology. Their emphasis on devotional religion and a conservative respect for the wisdom of the past that they feared was being undermined by mechanistic notions of nature and human society foreshadowed much that was to be characteristic of later Anglicanism. They found intellectual successors in W. *Law, J. *Butler, and D. *Waterland who answered the attacks of the *Deists and rationalists in the 18th cent., but their immediate heritage was a *latitudinarianism that gained strength in the early part of the 18th cent., with its emphasis on practical Christian living, morality, and a distrust of every kind of enthusiasm. The emergence of *Evangelicalism among Anglicans both in Britain and the USA in the later 18th cent. may be seen as in part a reaction against this trend. It did much for the spiritual life of the Church, but its appeal to the emotions and its emphasis on the primacy of Scripture and the importance of preaching sometimes went beyond the traditional ethos of Anglicanism, and the followers of J. *Wesley broke away from the C of E. Those who remained within it included such powerful laymen as W. *Wilberforce and those who were influenced by the preaching of C. *Simeon. Evangelicals still form a sizeable group within Anglicanism; their tendency is to emphasize its Reformation heritage rather than its Catholic elements.

The continuity of the High Church tradition within the C of E in the 18th cent. has recently been recognized; it is seen in the activities of J. *Potter, E. *Gibson, and S. *Johnson, as well as those, such as the *Hutchinsonians, who took part in the theological and philosophical controversies of the Enlightenment. Nevertheless, the beginning of the *Oxford Movement is traditionally dated in 1833. The Catholic Revival, as it is sometimes called, sought to restore to Anglicanism a proper sense of its roots and sacramental life as a part of the Catholic Church. It began as a scholarly movement among a group in Oxford centred round J. *Keble, E. B. *Pusey, and J. H. *Newman, who issued a series of Tracts for the Times (see TRACTARIANISM). By the end of the 19th cent., partly under the influence of *Ultramontanism, it had developed a strong, and often controversial, emphasis on Catholic ritual and outward symbols. However, by the mid-20th cent. many of the practices advocated by its leaders had been generally accepted, even though the influence of the *Anglo-Catholics began to wane thereafter.

Another influence on the theological framework of Anglicanism developed during the 19th cent. The latitudinarianism of the 17th cent. laid the foundations for the development of the *Broad Church or 'Liberal' theological movement of the mid-1800s, and the publication of Essays and Reviews (1860), though it incurred public condemnation at the time, assured within the bounds of Anglicanism a place for the new biblical and doctrinal criticism from Germany. Scholarship has traditionally held a high place in the Anglican tradition which is reflected in the appointment of scholarly bishops such as J. B. *Lightfoot and B. F. *Westcott. Anglican scholars have been in the forefront of historical and patristic studies. They have been free in every field to adopt radical or conservative traditions.

The principle of lex orandi lex credendi has traditionally been a distinctive feature of Anglicanism, and until 1948 *Lambeth Conferences held the BCP to be a bond in the Anglican Communion. In one language or another the Prayer Book (with comparatively minor revisions authorized in the second quarter of the 20th cent.) was used throughout the world. The second half of the 20th cent. has witnessed a period of liturgical experimentation in Anglican Churches and almost every Province has produced a different Prayer Book, so that there is now considerable diversity where there was general uniformity. A greater spirit of independence among Provinces in the Anglican Communion, together with the increasing proportion of Anglicans in non-English-speaking countries and cultures, contributes to the challenge of maintaining a unity of ethos in contemporary Anglicanism. The ordination of *women to the priesthood and episcopate in some Provinces and not in others has strained the bounds of comprehensiveness of Anglicanism and highlighted disputed questions of authority within that tradition. It has also called into question the central position of Anglicanism as a bridge in ecumenical discussions with other Churches, most notably the Orthodox. On the other hand, the traditional view that Anglicanism has no doctrines of its own but only those of the universal Church, has been challenged by S. W. Sykes and others; they argue that Anglican ecclesiology, with its vision of freedom and diversity within the limits imposed by Scripture, reason, and tradition, has a positive contribution to make to the ecumenical debate.

P. E. More and F. L. Cross, Anglicanism: The Thought and Practice of the Church of England illustrated from the Religious Literature of the Seventeenth Century (1935); G. R. Evans and J. R. Wright (eds.), The Anglican Tradition: A Handbook of Sources (1991). S. [C.] Neill, Anglicanism (Harmondsworth, 1958; 3rd edn., 1965); S. F. Bayne, An Anglican Turning Point: Documents and Interpretations (Austin, Tex., 1964); H. R. McAdoo, The Spirit of Anglicanism: A Survey of Anglican Theological Method in the Seventeenth Century (Hale Lectures, 1965); id., The Unity of Anglicanism (Wilton, Conn., 1983); W. J. Wolf (ed.), The Spirit of Anglicanism (ibid., 1979; London, 1982); S. W. Sykes, The Integrity of Anglicanism (1979); id. and J. Booty (eds.), The Study of Anglicanism (1988); S. W. Sykes (ed.), Authority in the Anglican Communion (1988); P. Avis, Anglicanism and the Christian Church (Edinburgh, 1989); W. L. Sachs, The Transformation of Anglicanism from State Church to Global Communion (Cambridge, 1993). The ethos and spirit of recent Anglicanism can be studied in the writings and biographies of modern Church leaders, e.g. of A. C. *Tait, E. W. *Benson, M. *Creighton, R. T. *Davidson, C. *Gore, C. G. *Lang, W. *Temple, H. H. *Henson, G. K. A. *Bell, G. F. *Fisher, and A. M. *Ramsey. See also works cited under ANGLICAN COMMUNION and CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Anglican Evangelical Group Movement. An association of the Anglican clergy and laity who held *Liberal Evangelical views. The movement originated in 1906 as a private body with the title of the 'Group Brotherhood', led by J. C. Wright (then Canon of Manchester), F. S. Guy Warman (then Vicar of Birkenhead, later Bp. of Manchester), and J. E. Watts-Ditchfield (then Vicar of St. James-the-less, Bethnal Green, later Bp. of Chelmsford), and arose from the desire of some of the younger Evangelicals to free Evangelicalism from what they regarded as an unduly conservative interpretation of Christianity, to welcome the help of science and criticism in the search for truth, and to infuse more dignity and beauty into worship. The 1923 annual conference at Coleshill, nr. Birmingham, decided to establish a public body under the title of 'Anglican Evangelical Group Movement' and to issue a public statement of its aims. Its members were pledged to study the social and economic implications of the Gospel, and to work for effective unity among all Christian people. Its activities included group study and the holding of retreats and conventions, esp. an annual conference which for many years from 1928 met at Cromer, for the deepening of spiritual life. Under the leadership of V. F. Storr (d. 1940) the movement saw the heyday of its influence from 1923 to 1939. Attempts to revive the movement after the end of the Second World War were not entirely successful and in 1967 it formally terminated its existence.

T. G. Rogers (ed.), Liberal Evangelicalism. By Members of the Church of England (1923). L. Hickin, 'Liberal Evangelicals in the Church of England', CQR 169 (1968), pp. 43–54.

Anglican–Methodist Conversations. In a Cambridge University sermon on 3 Sept. 1946, G. F. *Fisher, Abp. of Canterbury, suggested that a fresh start in the search for unity between the C of E and the Free Churches might be made if the latter would consider accepting episcopacy and coming into communion with the C of E. A conference of delegates appointed by the Archbishop and representatives of the Free Churches met and in 1950 issued a Report, Church Relations in England, which outlined a possible course of action but emphasized that it must be left to individual Churches to decide whether to pursue the matter. Of the Free Churches only the *Methodists decided to do so. In 1955 the Methodist Conference and the *Convocations of Canterbury and York decided to enter into conversations on the basis of the Church Relations in England Report and representatives on both sides were appointed. In 1958 an Interim Report was issued, mainly because those taking part in the Conversations felt that Dr Fisher's original proposal would be acceptable only if it were viewed as the first stage of a scheme to bring about constitutional reunion, and it was thought necessary to seek approval for this new aim. This was given by the Methodist Conference and the *Lambeth Conference in the summer of 1958 and by the Convocations in Jan. 1959. The Final Report was issued in 1963. This outlined a plan in two stages. Stage I was to be inaugurated by a Service of Reconciliation, which included a pledge to seek organic union and a rite of unification of the existing ministries of the two Churches. The service was to be followed by the consecration of the first Methodist bishops, in which Anglican bishops would take part, and thereafter all ordinations in the Methodist Church would be performed by bishops. In other matters the authority of the Methodist Conference was to remain unimpaired during Stage I, and no timetable was set for the achievement of Stage II. In 1965 outline proposals were approved by the Convocations and the Methodist Conference, and a new Anglican–Methodist Unity Commission was set up. In 1967 it issued an interim statement, Towards Reconciliation, and in 1968 the final report was published in two parts: Part I, The Ordinal, and Part II, The Scheme. The Ordinal contained a Preface on the doctrine of ministry, which had been drawn up in consultation with RC and Orthodox theologians, and represented a wide area of ecumenical agreement. More opposition was aroused by the Scheme, esp. the proposals for unifying the existing ministries in the Service of Reconciliation. It was agreed that the Convocations and the Methodist Conference should vote on the Scheme simultaneously on 8 July 1969 and that a 75 per cent majority should be required before it could be implemented. The Methodist Conference produced a 77 per cent vote in favour, the Convocations only a 69 per cent majority. The Standing Committee of the General *Synod (which came into being in 1970) set up a working party and the Synod gave provisional approval to the Scheme in July 1971, but when it came before the Synod for a final decision on 3 May 1972 it received just under 66 per cent approval and so lapsed. New talks were initiated in 1995.

Alternative proposals to the 1968 Scheme were put forward by C. O. Buchanan and others, Growing into Union: Proposals for a united Church in England (1970). J. M. Turner, Conflict and Reconciliation: Studies in Methodism and Ecumenism in England 1740–1982 (1985), pp. 194–214.

Anglican Ordinations. Until the subject was removed from the sphere of public discussion in the RC Church by *Leo XIII's bull '*Apostolicae Curae' (1896), there was diversity of opinion in that Communion on the *validity of the Orders of *bishop, *priest, and *deacon conferred by the Reformation *Ordinals of the C of E. The grounds on which their validity has been and is attacked fall into two classes: (1) Attacks on the actual historical continuity by the laying-on of hands. These usually assert either that Abp. M. *Parker was not himself consecrated or that his principal consecrator, W. *Barlow, had not been consecrated. Only rarely is either of these theses nowadays maintained by scholars; and even if the succession had been lost with Parker, it would have been restored with W. *Laud, from whom the present English episcopate derives, and who was consecrated by bishops, some of whom were in the undisputed Irish and Italian successions. (2) Attacks on the sufficiency of the Ordinal introduced under *Edward VI. These have been of two kinds:

(a) Assertions that the omission of the porrectio instrumentorum (see INSTRUMENTS, TRADITION OF THE) and other ceremonies renders the rite invalid. The recognition that such ceremonies were not in use in the early Church has led this objection to be abandoned. (b) The arguments of Leo XIII that the *intention of the Anglican Church as expressed in the rite is defective because there are no acts or words explicitly conferring the power for priests to offer sacrifice, and that the acts and words formerly used for this purpose were omitted by the Reformers. To this charge the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York replied in an Encyclical Letter, dated 29 Mar. 1897, in which they argued that the Anglican Church makes it clear that she intends to confer the Office instituted by Christ and all that it contains; they contended that the C of E teaches the doctrine of the *Eucharistic Sacrifice in terms at least as explicit as those of the *Canon of the Mass; and finally they pointed out that the words and acts required by the Pope are not found in the earliest Roman Ordinals, so that if their omission renders an Ordination invalid, the Orders of the Church of Rome are on no surer footing than those of the C of E. It has also been made a ground of complaint against the Edwardine Ordinal that the formulae for the Ordination of bishop and priest are the same, 'Accipe Spiritum Sanctum'; but to this objection it is replied that the intention to distinguish between the two is sufficiently expressed in the existence of two separate services, the contents of the services themselves, and the Preface to the Ordinal. In recent times the refusal of the RC Church to recognize the validity of Anglican Orders has been seen as a serious impediment in ecumenical relations; individual acts by modern Popes have sometimes been taken to indicate a softening of attitude, but there has been no change in the official position. See also the following entry.

The validity of Anglican Orders has been recognized by the *Old Catholics, and many parts of the Orthodox Church hold that they are as valid as those of the RC Church.

Besides the official documents mentioned, there were several important pamphlets issued by the Church Historical Society (SPCK) pub. *c.*1896. E. Denny and T. A. *Lacey, De Hierarchia Anglicana Dissertatio Apologetica (1895); T. A. Lacey, A Roman Diary and other Documents (1910); Viscount *Halifax, Leo XIII and Anglican Orders (1912); G. *Dix, The Question of Anglican Orders (1944); F. Clark, SJ, Anglican Orders and Defect of Intention (1956); id., Eucharistic Sacrifice and the Reformation (1960; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1967); J. J. Hughes, Absolutely Null and Utterly Void: The Papal Condemnation of Anglican Orders 1896 (1968); id., Stewards of the Lord (1970). R. W. Franklin (ed.), Anglican Orders: Essays on the Centenary of Apostolicae Curae, 1896–1966 (1966), incl. Eng. tr. of texts. C. Androutsos, The Validity of English Ordinations from an Orthodox Catholic Point of View (1909); C. Papadopoulos, The Validity of Anglican Ordinations (Eng. tr., 1931); E. R. Hardy (ed.), Orthodox Statements on Anglican Orders (New York, 1946). L. Marchal in DTC 11. 2 (1932), cols. 1154–1193, s.v. 'Ordinations anglicanes', with bibl.

Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission (ARCIC). A joint commission of the RC Church and the whole Anglican Communion. In 1966, when M. *Ramsey, Abp. of Canterbury, met Pope *Paul VI in Rome, in a Common Declaration they inaugurated a dialogue which, it was hoped, would lead to 'that unity in truth and faith for which Christ prayed'; such unity they explained as 'complete communion of faith and sacramental life'. A Joint Preparatory Commission was established, which after three meetings completed a Report at Malta in 1968, setting out the agenda for the full Commission.

The International Commission, which consisted of nine members from each side, held a series of residential meetings (known as 'Conversations') lasting about nine days, generally once a year, in different places, beginning in 1970. As a result of these meetings a series of 'Agreed Statements' was issued: on 'Eucharistic Doctrine' (Windsor, 1971); 'Ministry and Ordination' (Canterbury, 1973); and 'Authority in the Church' (Venice, 1976). 'Elucidations' (Salisbury, 1979) attempted to answer questions which had been raised concerning the first two documents. The Commission's 'Final Report' (Windsor, 1981; pub. 1982) included these four documents, adding an introduction on the Church, a second Agreed Statement on Authority, and a further 'Elucidation'. It was submitted to the two Churches for evaluation. The 1988 *Lambeth Conference resolved that the statements on the Eucharist and Ministry were 'consonant in substance with the faith of Anglicans', but, while welcoming the statement on Authority, called for further study of questions connected with Papal primacy. A preliminary and somewhat critical RC assessment was contained in the 'Observations' made by the Congregation for the *Doctrine of the Faith in 1982. The formal Response was made in 1991; while points of convergence and agreement were acknowledged, 'differences or ambiguities' were judged to remain.

Before this a new Commission (ARCIC II) was set up by Pope *John Paul II and Abp. R. Runcie after a meeting in Canterbury in 1982. This Commission, consisting at first of twenty-four members (the number was reduced later), issued Agreed Statements on 'Salvation and the Church' (Llandaff, 1986; pub. 1987) and 'The Church as Communion' (Dublin, 1990). The former document formulated an agreement over the doctrine of *justification by faith, which had been a central issue at the Reformation and is of particular concern to *Evangelicals in the Anglican Communion. The Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith made 'Observations' on it in 1988.

In its approach to the questions which divided the Anglican and RC Churches, the first Commission sought to avoid the conventional method of comparing parallel accounts of their views, which would necessarily emphasize the differences, and sought rather to formulate statements expressing 'substantial agreement' on the points under consideration. This was explained as agreement on essential matters, such that remaining points of difference could be resolved on the basis of the fundamentals held in common. The same policy was adopted by the second Commission. While this positive attitude has yielded a measure of accord which has surprised many in both Churches, some problems remain to be resolved. The study of the mutual recognition of ministries, made necessary by the RC condemnation of *Anglican Orders in 1896, was placed on the agenda of the second Commission by Pope John Paul II and Abp. Runcie, but has been complicated by the ordination of women as priests and bishops in some Provinces of the Anglican Communion. The two primates, meeting in Rome in 1989, acknowledged this new obstacle to reunion, but reaffirmed their respective Churches' commitment to the 'restoration of visible unity and full ecclesial communion'.

C. Hill and E. [J.] Yarnold, SJ (eds.), Anglicans and Roman Catholics: The Search for Unity (1994), incl. text of ARCIC I Final Report and official responses.

Anglo-Catholicism. The term 'Anglo-Catholic' has sometimes been applied to the C of E as a whole, signifying its claim to be part of the Catholic Church without being Roman Catholic, but it is more commonly used to distinguish that section or party within the Anglican Communion which stems from the *Tractarian Movement of the 1830s; indeed the term in its English form appears to date from 1838 (the Lat. Anglo-Catholicus is found in the 17th cent.). Anglo-Catholics hold a high doctrine of the Church and Sacraments; they attach great importance to the '*apostolic succession', that is, to an episcopal order derived from the apostles; to the historical continuity of the existing C of E with the Church of the earliest centuries; and to the Church's ultimate independence of the State.

The original Tractarians were concerned with basic doctrines of the Church. They revived *religious communities and various practices of personal discipline (such as the use of auricular *confession and *fasting), largely based on current RC models. They were not much concerned with ritual and ceremonial. But as the movement developed and moved into the parishes, Anglo-Catholics came to be regarded as preoccupied with the externals of worship and so were known as 'ritualists'. Disturbances occurred and legal actions were taken against them in both the ecclesiastical and civil courts. Nevertheless, despite the initial opposition of nearly all the bishops, and the attempts of Parliament to control *Public Worship, many of the practices originally regarded as Anglo-Catholic (such as the use of *candles or the wearing of *stoles) gradually spread throughout the C of E. The increased frequency of celebrations of the Eucharist owed much to their influence.

In its early days Anglo-Catholicism was conservative both theologically and politically, but in the latter part of the 19th cent. a division arose between those who sought to liberalize its theology by accepting the results of biblical criticism and those who resisted all concessions to modernity: Charles Gore and the authors of Lux Mundi (1889) were pioneers in this respect; they were opposed by E. B. *Pusey, H. P. *Liddon, and G. A. *Denison. At the same time Anglo-Catholics who had been influenced by F. D. *Maurice became active in promoting more or less radical and socialist organizations, such as the Guild of St Matthew and the Christian Social Union.

These divisions continued into the 20th cent. and were compounded by differences concerning the revision of the Book of Common Prayer. The movement seemed to reach its apogee after the First World War when five spectacular Anglo-Catholic Congresses were held in London and elsewhere between 1920 and 1933. Hopes were entertained of converting the whole Anglican Communion which had already been influenced in many (often unacknowledged) ways by the diffusion of Anglo-Catholic ideals. Anglo-Catholicism had already changed the face, though not the character, of Anglicanism. Meanwhile, in Essays Catholic and Critical (1926) a group of Anglo-Catholic scholars had made a notable attempt to reconcile the findings of modern scholarship with traditional doctrine. Since the 1930s Anglo-Catholics have been less conspicuous as an organized and identifiable party, though the movement has continued to have its adherents and periodically shows signs of revival (notably the Catholic Renewal Conferences at Loughborough in 1978 and 1983). In recent years groups of Anglo-Catholics, prob. by themselves a minority, but sometimes acting in conjunction with *Evangelicals, have opposed schemes for union with the *Free Churches; they have also opposed projects for the ordination of women. In face of this apparently negative attitude, 'Affirming Catholicism' (technically an educational charity) was founded in 1990, to provide a forum for the discussion of issues raised by the tension between scholarship and free enquiry on the one hand, and the Catholic tradition within Anglicanism on the other. In some countries where women have been ordained to the priesthood (and episcopate) small numbers of Anglo-Catholics have formed secession Churches (e.g. the 'Anglican Catholic Church' in the USA).

See also OXFORD MOVEMENT.

W. J. Sparrow Simpson, The History of the Anglo-Catholic Revival from 1845 (1932); N. P. *Williams and C. Harris (eds.), Northern Catholicism (1933); W. L. Knox and A. R. Vidler, The Development of Modern Catholicism (1933); [D.] G. Rowell, The Vision Glorious: Themes and Personalities of the Catholic Revival in Anglicanism (Oxford, 1983); W. S. F. Pickering, Anglo-Catholicism: A study in religious ambiguity (1989).

Anglo-Saxon Church. By this title is meant the Church in England from the end of the 6th cent. to the Norman Conquest (1066). During the 6th and 7th cents. England was being evangelized from two sides. In 597 the Roman mission of St *Augustine landed at Thanet in the south and sees were quickly set up at *Canterbury, London, *Rochester, and *York. In the north, the Irishman St *Aidan established himself at *Lindisfarne c.635. For a time the work of the missions was hindered by disputes over differences in such customs as the date of observing *Easter and the cutting of the *tonsure. But in 664 union between north and south was set in train after the Synod of *Whitby, and in 669 *Theodore of Tarsus arrived as Abp. of Canterbury and began his great work of reform and organization. Further important synods of the English bishops were held at *Hertford in 672 or 673 and at *Hatfield in 679, and many new dioceses were formed. In 787, at a synod presided over by two papal legates, *Lichfield was made an archbishopric, but the arrangement lasted for less than 16 years. The Danish invasions were a great blow to the Church, although the victory of *Alfred secured the nominal acceptance of Christianity by the invaders. In the 10th cent., reforms were initiated by St *Dunstan and St *Ethelwold and a closer connection with the Continent was established. At the Norman Conquest, most of the surviving Anglo-Saxon bishops were removed, but the most outstanding of them, St *Wulfstan, continued at *Worcester till his death in 1095.

Monasticism was very strong in the Anglo-Saxon Church, most of the work of evangelization being done by monks, and it is to this period that we may trace the origin of the English custom of having cathedrals with monastic chapters. Double monasteries of men and women, often under the rule of an abbess, were not uncommon during the period, but most of these did not survive the Viking incursions of the 9th cent. The connection between Church and State was particularly close. The conversion of a district usually began in the royal palace; bishoprics were conterminous with tribal areas; and it is very often difficult to decide whether a particular assembly was primarily ecclesiastical or secular. In some of these respects, however, the Anglo-Saxon Church did not differ from many Continental Churches of the time. Despite a popular belief to the contrary, relations between the Anglo-Saxon Church and the rest of W. Christendom seem to have been constant and good.

Eng. tr. of much primary material in D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke (eds.), Councils & Synods and other Documents Relating to the English Church, 1: A.D. 871–1204, pt. 1: 871–1066 (Oxford, 1981). W. *Bright, Chapters of Early English Church History (1873; 3rd edn., 1897); F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (1943; 3rd edn., 1971). M. Deanesly, The Pre-Conquest Church in England (1961); id., Sidelights on the Anglo-Saxon Church (1962); J. Godfrey, The Church in Anglo-Saxon England (1962); F. Barlow, The English Church 1000–1066: A Constitutional History (1963; 2nd edn., 1979); H. [M. R. E.] Mayr-Harting, The Coming of Christianity to Anglo-Saxon England (1972). C. Cubitt, Anglo-Saxon Church Councils c.650–c.850 [1995].

Angola, Christianity in. The *Portuguese colony of Angola, developing from the port of Luanda, dates from 1576. From 1596 it was placed within the newly established (RC) diocese of San Salvador, comprising the *Congo and Angola. The bishop's residence was soon moved from San Salvador, within the independent kingdom of the Congo, to Luanda in the Portuguese colony, but the official translation was delayed until 1716. The *Jesuits staffed a college in Luanda, but elsewhere missionary work was carried out mainly by Italian *Capuchins.

Conditions were unfavourable to the growth of the Church. The main reason for Luanda's existence was as a slave port for Brazil. The slave trade devastated African society here more than elsewhere in Africa and demoralized the Portuguese. Nevertheless the Church survived, with some local clergy, despite long periods when there was no bishop and despite Portuguese anticlerical laws from the late 18th cent. and the suppression of religious orders. Areas within Angola are the only part of sub-Saharan Africa in which there has been a continuous local Church since the 16th cent., though by the mid-19th cent. there were few priests.

In 1865 French *Holy Ghost Fathers accepted responsibility for the mission and the Church began to revive. In 1881 Antonio Barroso, an outstanding Portuguese missionary and later Bp. of Oporto, began work around San Salvador. Protestant activity began when the British *Baptist Missionary Society came to include the north of the country within its field (see ZAIRE). In the centre and south the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions began work in 1880 and the *Methodist Episcopal Church in 1884.

The anticlericalism which had characterized Portuguese governments for many years ended with that of A. de Salazar, whose Colonial Act of 1930 re-established a privileged position for RC missions. This was reinforced by the Concordat and Missionary Agreement between Portugal and the Vatican in 1940. Government policy was to regard Angola as a province of Portugal and the Protestant missions, staffed by British and American missionaries, were often attacked as an anti-Portuguese influence. The nationalist movements drew their leadership largely from the Protestant community. An African rising in the north of Angola in 1961 was countered by widespread Portuguese attacks on African suspects, esp. Protestants. The Independence of Angola in 1975 has been followed by almost continuous civil war in which Baptists and Methodists have often been linked with forces opposed to the government, while RCs have been more sympathetic to the Marxist government. About half the population belongs to the RC Church and under a quarter to Protestant denominations.

For the pre-18th-cent. Church the basic documents are pr. in A. Brásio, C.S.Sp. (ed.), Monumenta Missionária Africana: África Occidental (20 vols., Lisbon, 1952–88). Id., História et Missiologia: Inéditos e esparsos (Luanda, 1973). L. Jadin, 'Le Clergé séculier et les Capucins du Congo et d'Angola aux XVI^e et XVII^e siècles. Conflits de juridiction, 1700–1726', Bulletin de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, 36 (1964), pp. 185–483. D. Birmingham, Trade and Conflict in Angola: The Mbundu and their Neighbours under the Influence of the Portuguese 1483–1730 (Oxford, 1966). A. Hastings, The Church in Africa 1450–1950 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1994), passim (see index).

For the 19th-cent. RC revival the primary docs. include those relating to the mission of the Holy Ghost Fathers, ed. A Brásio, C.S.Sp., Angola (Spiritana Monumenta Historica, Series Africa, 1; 5 vols., Pittsburgh and Louvain, 1966–71), and a collection relating to the work of Barroso, also ed. A. Brásio, C.S.Sp., D. António Barroso, Missionário, Cientista, Missiólogo (1961). The background is described by J. Duffy, Portuguese Africa (1959), pp. 49–78 and passim. L. Addicott, Cry Angola! (Living Church Books, 1962). A. Hastings, op. cit.; id., A History of African Christianity 1950–1975 (Cambridge, 1979), passim.

Anima Christi (Lat., 'Soul of Christ'), the well-known prayer, beginning

Soul of Christ, sanctify me,
Body of Christ, save me, used esp. as a private Eucharistic devotion. From its use at the outset of the Spiritual Exercises* it has been traditionally ascribed to St *Ignatius Loyola ('Aspirationes S. Ignatii ad Sanctissimum Redemptorem'), but is really very much older. It appears to date from the early 14th cent. (not 12th cent., as L. Eisenhofer). *John XXII (d. 1334; probably not its author, despite G. M. Dreves) enriched it with indulgences. Early occurrences of it are in the British Library MS Harl. 1260, fol. 158 (AD 1370); a prayer-book of Card. Peter of Luxembourg (d. 1387), preserved at *Avignon; and on an inscription of Moorish workmanship on the gates of the Alcazar at Seville (*c.*1364).

H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Anima Christi', Month, 125 (1915), pp. 493–505; repr. in his Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, SJ (1953), ch. 3, pp. 38–53. D. Prideaux, OSB, 'A Note on the Prayer "Anima Christi" ', Laudate, 1 (1923), pp. 9–21. H. L. Pass, Anima Christi: A Little Treatise on the Spiritual Life (1934), esp. pp. 293–302. P. Schepens, 'Pour l'histoire de la prière Anima Christi', Nouvelle Revue théologique, 62 (1935), pp. 699–710. P. Leturia, SJ, 'Libros de Horas, Anima Christi y Ejercicios Espirituales de S. Ignacio', Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu, 17 (for 1948; 1949), pp. 3–50, esp. pp. 35–50. B. Fischer, 'Das Trierer Anima Christi. Der bisher unveröffentlichte älteste nichtlateinische Text des Anima Christi aus einer Hs. des frühen XIV. Jhts. in der Trierer Stadtbibliothek', Trierer Theologische Zeitschrift, 60 (1951), pp.

189–96. H. Thurston, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 670–2, s.v., with further bibl.

animism. The belief, widespread among primitive peoples, that certain material objects, e.g. trees and stones, are possessed by spirits which are the cause of their movements and characteristic qualities. Echoes of animism are found in the OT, e.g. *Jacob's treatment of the stone at Bethel as if it were Divine (Gen. 28: 22). Anti-Christian writers have sometimes held all worship of a personal god, particularly if connected with special holy places, to be a survival of primitive animism; while the Christian need not deny that in early times animistic ideas assisted, e.g., the growth of such beliefs as that in *immortality.

E. B. Tylor, Primitive Culture (2 vols., 1871), chs. 11–17. E. O. James, Prehistoric Religion: A Study in Primitive Archaeology (1957). E. E. Evans-Pritchard in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 1 (1962), pp. 98 f., s.v.; K. W. Bolle in M. Eliade (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Religion, 1 (1987), pp. 296–302, s.v. 'Animism and Animatism'. See also bibl. to ANTHROPOLOGY.

Anna Comnena (b. 1083; d. after 1148). The daughter of the Emp. Alexius I, Comnenus, and Irene, she was one of the earliest women historians and among the most outstanding writers of the Byzantine age. Having conspired unsuccessfully after her father's death to depose her brother, John, in the interests of her husband, Nicephorus Bryennius, she retired to a convent where she wrote a history of her father's reign, the 'Alexiad' (Ἀλεξιάς). This work, finished after 1148, is less a history than an apology or panegyric, being full of extravagant adulation and almost devoid of critical judgement. It is, however, of great interest as a representation of the Orthodox hostility to the W. Church and to the *Crusades as a menace to the E. Empire. She praises Alexius' persecution of the *Bogomil heretics which culminated in the execution of Basilius, their leader.

The best edns. of the Alexiad are those of A. Reifferscheid (2 vols., Teub., 1884) and (with Fr. tr.) B. Leib (3 vols., Paris, 1937–45, index by P. Gautier, 1976). Eng. trs. of the Alexiad by E. A. S. Dawes (London, 1928) and E. R. A. Sewter (Penguin Classics, 1969). G. Buckler, Anna Comnena (1929).

Annas. The Jewish *High Priest from AD 6 (or 7) to 15. In the latter year he was deposed by the procurator, Valerius Gratus, and succeeded by his son-in-law, *Caiaphas, though, as appears from Lk. 3: 2, Jn. 18: 13, and Acts 4: 6, he continued to have at least a share in his former office, and could even be referred to as High Priest—perhaps (because) strict Jews held him to be so. Acc. to Jn. 18: 13, Jesus, after His arrest, was first brought to Annas and had a preliminary trial in his palace before being sent on to Caiaphas. In Acts 4: 6 he takes a leading part in the trial of the Apostles at Jerusalem.

annates (Lat. annata, from annus, 'year'). The first year's revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice, paid to the Papal curia. These payments, later known as 'first-fruits', became general through the increase of direct Papal nomination to livings in the 13th cent. The actual term annata was at first applied to the tax paid upon minor benefices only, but in the 15th cent. it came to be used also of the servitia paid on bishoprics and the headships of monasteries. In 1532 the payment of annates from English archbishoprics and bishoprics to the Holy See was restrained, but the Act was passed conditionally, so that the King could use it as a threat against the Pope to gain his wishes over the royal 'divorce'. This failed, although it did result in the Pope's issuing the necessary instruments for the consecration of T. *Cranmer as Abp. of Canterbury; and *Henry VIII brought the Act into force by letters patent dated 9 July 1533. The Appointment of Bishops Act 1533 in 1534 confirmed the 1532 Act, and annates and tithes were annexed to the Crown in 1535 by the First Fruits and Tenths Act 1534. In 1704 they were assigned by the Crown to the Governors of *Queen Anne's Bounty for the augmentation of poor livings, and were abolished in 1926.

W. E. Lunt, Papal Revenues in the Middle Ages (New York, 2 vols., 1934), esp. 1. 93–9, and 2. 315–72, with full refs.; id., Financial Relations of the Papacy with England 1327–1534 (Cambridge, Mass., 1962), pp. 307–445, with bibl. refs. The Reformation legislation is pr. in J. R. Tanner, Constitutional Documents 1485–1603 (Cambridge, 2nd edn., 1930), pp. 25–39. J. P. Kirsch in CE 1 (1907), pp. 537 f.

Anne, St, Mother of the BVM. Her name (not found in the Bible) and the legend of her life occur already in the *Protevangelium of James (2nd cent.). A church was erected at *Constantinople in her honour by the Emp. *Justinian I (d. 565) and relics and pictures at *Rome (S. Maria Antiqua) date from the 8th cent. In the 10th cent. her feast was observed at Naples and it was widely current in the W. by 1350. Urban VI expressly ordered it for all England, to popularize the marriage of Richard II to Anne of Bohemia (Jan. 1382). By the end of the Middle Ages the cult had become extremely popular and was an object of special attack by M. *Luther and other Reformers. In 1584 it was ordered for the Universal Church, and Gregory XV even made it a *Feast of Obligation. The feast is now observed with esp. devotion in *Canada and also in Brittany (of which country she is Patroness). Feast day in the W., 26 July (with St *Joachim from 1969); in the E., 25 July.

The primary source is the Protevangelium Jacobi, 1–8. B. Kleinschmidt, OFM, Die heilige Anna, ihre Verehrung in Geschichte, Kunst und Volkstum (Forschungen zur Volkskunde, 1930). P. V. Charland, La Bonne Sainte, ou l'Histoire de la Dévotion à sainte Anne (Quebec, 1904), and other works of this author. M. V. Ronan, S. Anne: Her Cult and her Shrines (1927). K. Ashley and P. Sheingorn (eds.), Interpreting Cultural Symbols: Saint Anne in late Medieval Society (Athens, Ga., and London [1990]). A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'Sur les Fêtes de la Conception et de Ste Anne. Chants en l'honneur de Ste Anne dans un manuscrit français du XI^e Siècle', EL 42 (1928), pp. 258–68; repr. in id., Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du Moyen Age Latin (1932), pp. 46–55.

Anne (1665–1714), Queen of Great Britain and Ireland. The second daughter of *James II, she continued to be brought up as an Anglican even after her father had been received into the RC Church. In 1702 she succeeded her brother-in-law, William III, her brother, James, being excluded from the succession as a RC. Her political views varied during her reign, but in religious matters she remained consistently true to the *High Church tradition of her grandfather, *Charles I. Early in her reign (1704) she created '*Queen Anne's Bounty' for the clergy. By exercising her right to nominate bishops, she introduced a High Church and Tory element on the Bench, which at her accession was composed almost entirely of Whigs and *Latitudinarians out of sympathy with the predominantly High Church inferior clergy. She strongly supported the *Occasional Conformity Bill, first introduced into Parliament in 1702, to end the scandal of Dissenters' qualifying for public office by occasional communion in their parish churches; but the bill was not passed till the end of her reign, when there was a decided Tory majority in the Commons. In 1710 she was present at the trial of H. *Sacheverell, which achieved the discomfiture of the Whigs at the ensuing elections, and she was thought by the general public to be a strong supporter of the accused. The Tory ascendancy of 1711–14 was used for political measures against Dissent (such as the *Schism Act 1713), instead of constructive enactments, and it did not long survive the Queen's death. Though the power of the Latitudinarian party in the Church, dominant at her accession, was somewhat checked during her reign and the Caroline High Church tradition revived, the success of her policy was weakened by the effects of the secession of the *Nonjurors, as well as by the political incompetence of the Tory party, who alone gave it active support. In the next reign it was almost destroyed by the association of High Churchmanship with Jacobitism.

B. C. Brown (ed.), The Letters and Diplomatic Instructions of Queen Anne (1935). Anon., The Life of Her Late Majesty Queen Anne (2 vols., 1721). A. Boyer, The History of the Reign of Queen Anne (11 vols., 1703–13). The best modern study is that of E. Gregg, Queen Anne (1980). There is also much information in G. V. Bennett, The Tory Crisis in Church and State 1688 1730: The Career of Francis Atterbury, Bishop of Rochester (Oxford, 1975), pp. 3–182 passim.

Anne Boleyn (?1501–36), second Queen of *Henry VIII. A daughter of Sir Thomas Boleyn, she spent her youth at the Netherlands and French Courts, and came to the English Court in 1521. Her charm, intelligence, and strong personality won her many admirers; from 1526 these included Henry, who was tiring of Catherine of Aragon and beginning to think of divorce. Probably in 1527 they were informally betrothed, and by Aug. Henry opened negotiations with the Pope for a marriage annulment. These moved slowly, but Anne began living openly with Henry during 1531; when in 1532 the King determined to secure an end to his marriage with Catherine unilaterally, Anne was created Marchioness of Pembroke in her own right, and became pregnant towards the end of 1532. A secret marriage took place on 24 or 25 Jan. 1533, and, after Abp. T. *Cranmer had pronounced Henry's marriage to Catherine null in May, Anne was crowned Queen, despite widespread distaste. Though her first child was not the son Henry desired but the future *Elizabeth I (Sept. 1533), her position did not become dangerous until after a stillbirth in Jan. 1536. By then, Henry, increasingly intimidated by her forceful personality, had found a new love in Jane Seymour and began to listen to Anne's conservative enemies, who were joined by T. *Cromwell; during April Anne was accused of treacherous adultery, Cranmer declared her marriage to Henry null (the reasons given are not known), and on 19 May 1536 she was executed. Apart from her importance in precipitating the 'divorce' crisis, she played a major role during her brief reign in promoting reform and advancing reformers to positions of power in the Church.

Anne Boleyn figures in the primary sources for the reign of Henry VIII and the Reformation. The history in her defence by George Wyatt (d. 1624) is ed. by D. M. Loades, The Papers of George Wyatt (Camden 4th ser. 5; 1968), pp. 19–30; M. Dowling (ed.), 'William Latymer's Cronickille of Anne Bulleyne', Camden Miscellany, 30 (ibid. 39; 1990), pp. 23–65. Id., 'Anne Boleyn and Reform', JEH 35 (1984), pp. 30–46. E. W. Ives, Anne Boleyn (Oxford, 1986). See also bibl. to HENRY VIII.

Anne's Bounty, Queen. See QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY.

Annexed Book, the. A name given to the actual BCP annexed to the Act of *Uniformity of 1662, which prescribed the use throughout the realm of 'true and perfect copies' of it. The MS original was a fair copy made from the 'Convocation Book' (i.e. the text finally approved by Convocation in 1661), which was signed by the members of Convocation, and then presented to Parliament.

A Facsimile of the BCP signed by Convocation, Dec. 20th, 1661, and attached to the Act of Uniformity, 1662, was pub. in 1891.

annihilationism. See CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY.

Anno Domini (Lat., 'in the year of the Lord'). The current system of dating by 'AD', based on the traditional year of the birth of Christ, was devised by *Dionysius Exiguus (6th cent.). It is now commonly held that the actual birth was several years earlier, between 7 and 4 BC, since it is established that Herod the Great died (cf. Mt. 2: 19) in the latter year. Some authorities, however, have preferred the date AD 6, the date usually given to the great census under Quirinius (Lk. 2: 1 f.). See also CHRONOLOGY, BIBLICAL.

Annunciation of the BVM. The feast, observed on 25 Mar. ('Lady Day'), commemorates the announcement of the Incarnation by the angel *Gabriel to the Virgin and the conception of Christ in her womb (Lk. 1: 26–38). The date is usually taken to depend on that of Christ's nativity (25 Dec.), though a different tradition held that the dependence was the other way round, and associated the date of the Lord's conception with that of His crucifixion (see CHRISTMAS). In the E. there is evidence for the observance of the feast of the Annunciation in a sermon by Abraham of Ephesus preached prob. between 530 and 553 in either Constantinople or Ephesus, and in one of the hymns of *Romanos Melodus. In the W. the first authentic reference is in the *Gelasian Sacramentary. In the Acts of the Council *in Trullo (692) it is exempted from the ban on feasts in *Lent, while in Spain the observance was long kept on 18 Dec. to prevent its occurrence in Lent. By the 8th cent. its observance in the W. had become universal. In the BCP it is a '*red letter' day and in the Table of Proper Lessons is described as the 'Annunciation of Our Lady', the only place where the Book uses this title of the BVM. In the RC Church it is now called the 'Annunciation of the Lord', and in some modern Anglican rites (incl. the ASB) it is designated the 'Annunciation of Our Lord to the Blessed Virgin Mary'.

St *Bernard's famous Homilies 'Super Missus Est' are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 183. 55–88. The sermon by Abraham of Ephesus was ed. by M. Jugie, AA, 'Abraham d'Éphèse et ses écrits', BZ 22 (1913–4), pp. 37–59. S. Vailhé, AA, 'Origines de la fête de l'Annonciation', EO 9 (1906), pp. 138–45; M. Jugie, AA, 'La Première Fête mariale en Orient et en Occident: l'avent primitif', ibid. 26 (1923), pp. 130–52. I. Cecchetti, 'L'Annunciazione. Il racconto biblico e la festa liturgica', Bollettino Ceciliano, 38 (1943), pp. 46–8 and 98–114. R. A. Fletcher, 'Three Early Byzantine Hymns and their Place in the Liturgy of the Church of Constantinople', BZ 51 (1958), pp. 53–65. For works on the biblical narrative, see comm. to Lk.

anointing. A ceremonial action performed on persons and things to separate them from profane use and obtain on their behalf the infusion of Divine grace. The ceremonial use of oil is common to many religions, e.g. Hinduism, the worship of ancient Greece and Rome, and many primitive peoples. In the OT priests and kings are anointed to symbolize their sanctity and endowment with the Spirit of God; hence the future deliverer of Israel was designated the 'Messiah' or 'Anointed One', and this title was taken over by the Apostles and appears in the NT in its Greek form 'Christ' (Χριστός). In the NT anointing is used as a charismatic means of healing (e.g. Mk. 6: 13) and combined with prayer in Jas. 5: 14 (see UNCTION). The Church from early times made sacramental use of it in the rites of *Baptism, *Confirmation, and *Ordination (qq.v.), as well as in the consecration of churches, altars, bells, etc. The anointing of kings, which is first met with (in Visigothic Spain) in the 7th cent., was influenced immediately by the OT (see CORONATION RITE IN ENGLAND). See also CHRISM.

See bibl. to BAPTISM, CHRISM, CONFIRMATION, ORDERS AND ORDINATION, and UNCTION.

Anomoeans (from ἀνόμοιος, 'unlike' or 'dissimilar'). The 4th cent. exponents of a doctrine akin to *Arianism and in modern times frequently called 'Neo-Arians'. They held that the Son, being begotten, was in essence unlike (ἀνόμοιος) the Father, the Ingenerate or Unbegotten. Their leaders were *Aetius and *Eunomius; they were also known as 'Aetians' and '*Exoucontians'.

See bibl. to AETIUS and ARIANISM.

Anschar, St. See ANSKAR, ST.

Anselm, St (*c.*1033–1109), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was the son of a Lombard landowner and a native of Aosta. After several years of undisciplined life he crossed the Alps into *France in 1056 and in 1059 entered the monastic school at *Bec in Normandy, then directed by *Lanfranc of Pavia, his fellow-countryman. Here he was persuaded by Lanfranc and Maurilius, Abp. of Rouen, to take monastic vows (1060) and in 1063 he succeeded Lanfranc as prior. His devotion and remarkable intellectual abilities gained him a high reputation as a teacher and spiritual director. His earliest writings were prayers to various saints and letters mainly addressed to the Norman monks who followed Lanfranc to Canterbury in 1070. Then followed the Monologion and the Proslogion (1078–9) and a series of philosophical and theological works, De Veritate, De Libero Arbitrio and De Casu Diaboli, as well as an introduction to dialectic entitled De Grammatico. Meanwhile Abbot Herluin of Bec had died in 1078, and Anselm succeeded to the Abbacy of Bec. From now on he paid several visits to England, where he renewed his personal contact with Lanfranc and the former monks of Bec at Canterbury, and won the respect of *William I and many of the barons.

On Lanfranc's death (1089) the archbishopric of Canterbury was vacant until 1093, but in March of this year King William II, then gravely ill, was persuaded to appoint an archbishop. He nominated Anselm, who reluctantly consented, and he was consecrated in December 1093. Disputes had already broken out between him and the King over the lands and tenants of the archbishopric, and these disputes continued with increasing violence until 1097. They were further complicated by disputes over the recognition of Pope *Urban II, over the right of the Archbishop to hold a council, and finally over Anselm's wish to go to Rome for Papal advice. In the end, after a series of violent disputes which are fully described by Anselm's biographer, *Eadmer, the King allowed him to go and he reached Rome in April 1098.

During the previous five years of conflict Anselm had not been unproductive theologically. In 1095 he had completed his De Incarnatione Verbi which he had begun before he left Bec; and in 1098 in Italy he completed the greatest of his theological works, Cur Deus Homo*. In October 1098 he attended the Council of Bari and defended the *Double Procession against the Greeks with arguments later embodied in his De Processione Sancti Spiritus. At the Vatican Council of April 1099 he first learned of the Papal decrees against lay *investiture, and when the new King Henry I recalled him to England on William II's death (2 Aug. 1100) he insisted on observing these decrees without compromise. Consequently he refused to renew the homage he had paid to William II or to consecrate bishops whom Henry had invested. After more than two years of argument, in 1103 Anselm agreed to go to Rome again to try to get a Papal relaxation of the decrees on Henry's behalf. When this attempt failed he resigned himself to a further period of exile which lasted until 1107, when the Pope and King agreed to a compromise behind Anselm's back. In the last two years of his life Anselm held a council which enforced clerical *celibacy and he became increasingly engaged in the long-standing conflict with York over the primacy of Canterbury. He died on 21 April 1109.

Both as a philosopher and a theologian, Anselm has a foremost place among medieval thinkers. His was the most luminous and penetrating intellect between St *Augustine and St *Thomas Aquinas. He differed from most of his predecessors in preferring to defend the faith by intellectual reasoning instead of employing scriptural and patristic authorities. The object of his Monologion was to establish the being of God solely on rational grounds, though he claimed that everything in it was derived from, and could be supported by, the words of St Augustine. In the Proslogion this reasoning was given the more systematic form of the *ontological argument (q.v.). Anselm here maintained that if we mean by God (as he held that we do) 'that than which nothing greater can be thought' (id quo nihil maius cogitari possit), then we cannot think of this entity except as existing; for, if it did not exist, it would not be 'that than which nothing greater can be thought'. This argument, which seems to imply that the power to think of such a Being implies the existence of a Being consistent with the terms of the definition, was at once challenged by Gaunilo, a monk of Marmoutier, who retorted with an argument similar to that later used by I. *Kant. Anselm, however, held the argument relating to degrees of being was valid in this single case.

Like St Augustine, Anselm saw in faith the precondition of the right use of reason ('credo ut intelligam'); but it yet remains our duty, so far as we can, to exercise our minds in apprehending revealed truth. The whole of his theology is a working out of this programme. His Cur Deus Homo was the most considerable contribution to the theology of the *Atonement in the Middle Ages. It interpreted the doctrine in terms of the satisfaction which is needed to restore the universal harmony of the Creation dislocated by sin. He strongly repudiated the notion, current since *Origen and St *Gregory of Nyssa, that the devil had rights over fallen man which it was a leading purpose of the Cross to satisfy. He was also the author of many letters. Of these, the earlier ones (before 1093) are important for Anselm's spiritual and monastic teaching, and those written while he was Archbishop give the fullest surviving account of the ecclesiastical disputes of his pontificate.

Feast day, 21 April. It seems unlikely that he was ever formally canonized, despite several attempts from 1163 onwards, but his cult became firmly established in the later Middle Ages; in 1720 *Clement XI declared him a '*Doctor of the Church'.

The unsatisfactory edn. of Anselm's Works by the *Maurist, G. Gerberon, OSB (Paris, 1675) is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 158 and 159. Crit. edn. by F. S. Schmitt, OSB (begun Seckau, 1938; repr. and cont., 6 vols., Edinburgh, 1946–61). Eng. tr. of vols. 1–2 by J. Hopkins and H. Richardson (4 vols.: 1, London, Toronto, and New York, 1974; 2–4, Toronto and New York, 1976), with extensive bibl. Unfinished fragments and reports of Anselm's teaching pr. in Memorials of St Anselm, ed. R. W. Southern and F. S. Schmitt (Auctores Britannici Medii Aevi, 1; 1969). The principal sources for his life are the 'Historia Novorum' and the 'Vita Anselmi' by his chaplain, Eadmer, ed. M. Rule (Rolls Series, 81; 1884); 'Vita Anselmi' also ed., with Eng. tr., by R. W. Southern (London [1962]); Eng. tr. of 'Historia Novorum' by G. Bosanquet (ibid., 1964). Modern studies by R. W. *Church (London, 1870) and R. W. Southern, Saint Anselm and his Biographer: A study of monastic life and thought 1059–c.1130 (Birkbeck Lectures, 1959; Cambridge 1963); id., Saint Anselm: A Portrait in a Landscape (ibid., 1990); for a different view, see S. N. Vaughn, Anselm of Bec and Robert of Meulan (Los Angeles and London, 1987). M. J. Charlesworth, St Anselm's Proslogion (Oxford 1965), incl. text, Eng. tr., and an account of recent interpretations of Anselm's argument for the existence of God; there is an older and highly original interpretation by K. *Barth, Fides Quaerens Intellectum (Munich, 1931; 2nd edn., Zollikon, 1958; Eng. tr., 1960); on this question also R. [J.] Campbell, From Belief to Understanding: A Study of Anselm's Proslogion Argument on the Existence of God (Canberra, 1976). D. P. Henry, The De Grammatico of St Anselm (University of Notre Dame Publications in Medieval Studies, 18; Notre Dame, Ind., 1964), includes text and Eng. tr.; id., The Logic of Saint Anselm (Oxford, 1967); id., Commentary on De Grammatico: The Historical-Logical Dimensions of a Dialogue of St Anselm's (Synthese Historical Library, 8; Dordrecht and Boston [1974]). J. McIntyre, St Anselm and his Critics: A Re-interpretation of the Cur Deus Homo (Edinburgh, 1954). J. Hopkins, A Companion to the Study of St Anselm (Minneapolis, 1972). G. R. Evans, Anselm and Talking about God (Oxford, 1978); id., Anselm (1989). P. Gilbert, SJ, Dire l'Ineffable: Lecture du 'Monologion' de S. Anselme (1984). F. S. Schmitt in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 581–3, s.v. See also bibl. to CUR DEUS HOMO.

Anselm (Ansellus) of Laon (d. 1117), 'Laudunensis', theologian. It is not known where he studied. The statement usually made that he was educated at *Bec under St *Anselm lacks foundation. Towards the end of the 11th cent. he was teaching at the cathedral school at Laon, where he was joined by his brother Ralph (d. 1133). Anselm seems to have combined the chancellorship with being dean of the cathedral (1106–14) and archdeacon (1115–17). He was famous as a teacher of the liberal arts as well as of theology. His theological teaching was given in lectures on the Books of the Bible, in the course of which points of interest were discussed as they arose in elementary quaestio form with reference to the authority of the Fathers. After his death these were reworked and enlarged into systematic 'Summae', of which the two most important are the 'Sententiae divinae paginae' and the 'Sententiae Anselmi'. Anselm was traditionalist in his views and stuck close to the Fathers, but his methods were new. In his lectures on the Bible he discussed the substance of the text and so opened the way for systematic enquiry. He was an influential teacher, and among those who came to his school were *William of Champeaux, *Gilbert de la Porrée, and Peter *Abelard.

The corpus of Anselm's work is not yet settled, but it is certain that he arranged commentaries (Glossae) on the Psalter, the Pauline Epistles ('Pro altercatione'), and on the Gospel of St John, which were the foundation of the Glossa ordinaria*.

The edn. of works ascribed to him in J. P. Migne (PL 162. 1187–586) is unsatisfactory. The text of the two comm. is given in the edns. of *Nicholas of Lyra. The Enarrationes in Evangelium S. Matthaei is a work of the middle of the 12th cent., possibly by Geoffrey Babion (see D. van den Eynde, OFM, in RTAM 26 (1959), pp. 50–84). For his life see G. Lefèvre, De Anselmo Laudunensi Scholastico (Paris thesis; Évreux, 1895), and A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'Un commentaire des Psaumes restitué à Anselme de Laon', RTAM 8 (1936), pp. 325–44 [but this comm. is not his work]. For his work, O. Lottin, OSB, Psychologie et Morale aux XII^e et XIII^e Siècles, 5 (Gembloux, 1959), esp. pp. 9–183. F. P. Bliemetzrieder, Anselms von Laon Systematische Sentenzen (BGPM 18, Hefte 2–3; 1919); H. Weisweiler, SJ, Das Schrifttum der Schule Anselms von Laon und Wilhelms von Champeaux in deutschen Bibliotheken (ibid. 33, Hefte 1–2; 1936). B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (3rd edn., Oxford, 1983), pp. ix f. and 49–51. M. *Grabmann, Die Geschichte der scholastischen Methode, 2 (1911), pp. 136–68; A. M. Landgraf, Einführung in die Geschichte der theologischen Literatur der Frühscholastik unter dem Gesichtspunkte der Schulenbildung (Regensburg, 1948), pp. 55–60; rev. Fr. tr. (Montreal and Paris, 1973), pp. 67–74.

Anselm of Lucca, Pope (d. 1073). See ALEXANDER II.

Anselm of Lucca, St (c.1035–86). He is not to be confused with his uncle, Pope *Alexander II (q.v.; he was also Bp. Anselm I of Lucca, 1056–73), by whom he was nominated to the see of Lucca in 1073. After hesitation he accepted investiture from *Henry IV, but resigned his bishopric and retired to a monastery, prob. St-Gilles on the Rhône. In 1075, at the insistence of *Gregory VII, he resumed his see; he lived an austere life and sought to impose strict discipline on an unwilling chapter. Prob. late in 1080 partisans of Henry IV expelled him from Lucca. From that time he was Gregory's standing legate in Lombardy. He made a collection of canons (c.1083) and wrote a polemical treatise in support of Gregory against the anti-pope ('Contra Guibertum et Sequaces eius', 1085/6). Feast day, 18 Mar.

His Liber contra Guibertum, the capitula of his Collectio Canonum, and extracts from his Collectanea are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 149. 445–536; crit. edn. of his Liber contra Guibertum by E. Bernheim in MGH, Libelli de lite, 1 (1891), pp. 517–28; the unfinished edn. of the Collectio Canonum by F. Thaner (Innsbruck, 2 fascs., 1906–15; repr., Aalen, 1965) is unsatisfactory; it prints only bks. 1–10 and 11, caps. 1–15; bk. 13, ed. by E. Pásztor in Sant'Anselmo, Mantova e la Lotta per le Investiture: Atti del Convegno Internazionale di Studi (Mantova, 23–24–25 maggio 1986), ed. P. Golinelli (Bologna, 1987), pp. 405–21. The principal authority for his life is the Vita formerly attributed to Bardo, ed. R. Wilmans in MGH, Scriptores, 12 (1856), pp. 1–35. There is also a metrical Life by Rangerius, Bp. of Lucca, of 1096/9, ed. E. Sackur, G. Schwartz, and B. Schmeidler, ibid. 30 (pt. 2; 1934), pp. 1152–307. P. Fournier, 'Observations sur diverses Recensions de la Collection canonique d'Anselme de Lucques', Annales de l'Université de Grenoble, 13 (1901), pp. 427–58; id. and G. Le Bras, Histoire des Collections Canoniques en Occident, 2 (1932), pp. 25–37 and 192–203. A. Stickler, 'Il Potere Coattivo Materiale della Chiesa nella Riforma Gregoriana secondo Anselmo di Lucca', in G. B. Borino (ed.), Studi Gregoriani, 2 (1947), pp. 235–85; G. B. Borino, 'Il Monacato e l'Investitura di Anselmo Vescovo di Lucca', ibid. 5 (1956), pp. 361–74. E. Pásztor, 'Una fonte per la storia dell'età gregoriana: la "Vita Anselmi episcopi Lucensis"', Bulletino dell'Istituto Storico Italiano, 72 (1960), pp. 1–33; id., 'Motivi dell'ecclesiologia di Anselmo di Lucca. In margine a un sermone inedito', ibid. 77 (1965), pp. 45–104, incl. text. H. Fuhrmann, Einfluss und Verbreitung der pseudoisidorischen Fälschungen, 2 (Schriften der MGH, 24/2; 1973), pp. 509–522. P. Landau, 'Erweiterte Fassungen der Kanonessammlung des Anselm von Lucca aus dem 12. Jahrhundert', in Sant'Anselmo, op. cit., pp. 323–38. C. Violante in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 3 (1961), pp. 399–407, s.v. 'Anselmo da Baggio'; T. Kölzer in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 1 (1980), cols. 679 f., s.v. 'Anselm, 3'.

Anskar, St (801–65), or Ansgar, the 'Apostle of the North'. A native of Picardy, he became a monk at *Corbie. Thence he went to Corvey in Westphalia, and later to *Denmark, whose king had been recently converted. He established a school in Schleswig, but was soon expelled by the local heathen. He then went to *Sweden, where he built the first Christian church. About 832 he was appointed by Gregory IV Bp. of Hamburg and *c.*848 first Abp. of Bremen. In 854 he was in Denmark again, converted Erik, King of Jutland, and did much to mitigate the horrors of the slave trade. After his death the Scandinavian countries relapsed completely into paganism. In Germany he is also known as 'St Scharies'. Feast day, 3 Feb.

The principal authority is the Life attributed to Rimbert, his successor in the see of Bremen (crit. edn. by G. Waitz in Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, 1884; rev., with Ger. tr. and introd., by W. Trillmich in id. and R. Buchner (eds.), Quellen des 9. und 11. Jahrhunderts zur Geschichte der Hamburgischen Kirchen und des Reiches (1961), pp. 3–133; Eng. tr., with introd., notes and bibl., by C. H. Robinson, 1921). W. Levison, 'Die echte und die verfälschte Gestalt von Rimberts Vita Anskarii', Zeitschrift des Vereins für Hamburgische Geschichte, 23 (1919), pp. 89–146; repr. in Levison's Aus Rheinischer und Frankischer Frühzeit (Düsseldorf, 1948), pp. 567–609, with further art. repr. pp. 610–30. G. H. Kippel, Historische Forschungen und Darstellungen, 2: Lebensbeschreibung des Erzbischofs Ansgar (1845), with text of St Anskar's 'Pigmenta', pp. 230–50, and other important docs. in appendices. E. de Moreau, SJ, Saint Anschaire (Museum Lessianum, Section Missiologique, 12; 1930); P. Oppenheim, OSB, Der heilige Ansgar und die Anfänge des Christentums in den nordischen Ländern (1931). C. J. A. Oppermann, The English Missionaries in Sweden and Finland (1937), pp. 38–45, 162–4.

Anson By-law. The law allowing a child to be withdrawn from a primary school during any time allotted to religious observance or instruction if the parent so desires and if arrangement has been made for him to attend religious observance or instruction elsewhere. It was so named after Sir William Reynell Anson (1843–1914), who was Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Education when the Education Act of 1902 was passed. The Education Act of 1936 made the principles of this by-law everywhere applicable, and a similar provision was retained in the Education Reform Act 1988 (sect. 9).

ante-chapel. The W. end of certain medieval college chapels, which usually projects N. and S. of the choir, from which it is separated by a screen. It is structurally a truncated nave, added to give technical completeness to the building and thus avoid the architectural anomaly of a chancel in vacuo.

Ante-Communion. In the C of E the earlier portion of the service of Holy Communion down to and including the Prayer for the Church Militant, esp. when recited without the remainder of the service. The essential parts of the full rite (offering and consecration of the Bread and Wine and the Communion) being omitted, it is in no sense a real Eucharist. Analogies have been found for it elsewhere in the Mass of the *Presanctified and the '*Dry Mass', but liturgically the only real parallel is the 'Mass of the Catechumens' in the early Church.

Antelapsarianism. See SUPRALAPSARIANISM.

antependium. A vesture or *frontal, varying in colour acc. to the ecclesiastical season, which hangs in front of the altar.

anthem. The Anglicized form of the word *antiphon. It was used originally in connection with Psalmody, but in current English usage it is commonly applied to sacred vocal music usually set to scriptural words. In the BCP it has the meanings antiphon (as in the preface 'Concerning the Service of the Church'), *canticle (so applied to the Easter 'Anthems', e.g., and by implication to Ps. 95), and its usual modern sense. A rubric introduced into the BCP in 1662 provides for an anthem after the third collect at Morning and Evening Prayer 'in Quires and Places where they sing'. In many modern Anglican liturgies, 'a canticle, psalm, hymn or anthem' may be sung before the Gospel or at various other points in the Eucharist.

From the late 16th to the 19th cent. anthems were divided into 'full anthems' in which the whole choir sang throughout, and 'verse anthems' in which sections ('verses') for one or more solo voices were contrasted with those for the full choir.

E. A. Wienandt and R. H. Young, The Anthem in England and America (1970). E. H. Fellowes, English Cathedral Music from Edward VI to Edward VII (1941; rev. by J. A. Westrup, 1969); N. Temperley, The Music of the English Parish Church (2 vols., Cambridge, 1979), esp. 1, pp. 162–7. P. Le Huray and R. T. Daniel in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 1 (1980), pp. 454–63.

Anthony, St. See ANTONY, ST.

anthropology. In its more exact sense as used by theologians the study of man as contrasted, e.g., with that of God, or of angels, and more particularly the study 'of his creation, elevation to supernatural status, and his fall' (A. *Tanquerey). It enables the Christian apologist to exhibit the true nature and end of man, and his superior status to the animal creation, as against views which represent him as a purely biological species, or an economic unit, or a mass of psychological reflexes. This, the traditional meaning of the word, has been revived in theological discussion in the present century.

Esp. since the middle of the 19th cent., the word has been widely used for the science which studies the life and environment of primitive man, and in more recent times for the study of man in society. Social anthropology, as it is generally called, has profoundly affected modern man's understanding of himself, and theology has not escaped this influence.

(1) A collection of Patristic texts, in Eng. tr., is ed., with introd., by J. Patout Burns, Theological Anthropology (Sources of Early Christian Thought; Philadelphia [1981]). W. *Pannenberg, Anthropologie in theologische Perspektive (1983; Eng. tr., 1985). The subject is also treated in all manuals of dogmatic theology, incl. J. Feiner and others in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 2 (Einsiedeln [1967]), pp. 559–706.

(2) Modern introds., which discuss the development of the subject, incl. L. [P.] Mair, An Introduction to Social Anthropology (Oxford, 1965; 2nd edn., 1972), and E. [R.] Leach, Social Anthropology (New York and Oxford, 1982). An earlier view is represented by R. Munro in HERE 1 (1908), pp. 561–73, s.v.

anthropomorphism (Gk. ἄνθρωπος, 'man', and μορφή, 'form'). In theology the term signifies the attribution to God of human characteristics, feelings, and situations. Jews and Christians have regularly insisted that God is strictly incomparable and incomprehensible; so there has always been much criticism of anthropomorphism within the Judaeo-Christian tradition. Yet that tradition has also wanted to stress that God is somehow personal; so anthropomorphism may also be regarded an an integral part of Judaeo-Christianity. These facts have led to much discussion concerning the interpretation and propriety of various anthropomorphic statements about God. In this connection, discussion has often centred around the notion of *analogy.

anthroposophy. A system evolved by R. *Steiner (q.v.), based on the premiss that the human soul can, of its own power, contact the spiritual world. The concepts of reincarnation and karma are central to it. It acknowledges Christ as a cosmic being, but its understanding of Him is very different from that of orthodox Christianity; He is regarded as a 'Sun Being' ('Sonnenwesen') who became incarnate at the turning-point of man's spiritual evolution, bringing the impulses of the highest Divine love to earth. Anthroposophy has found adherents esp. among those in search of religious experience outside the normal channels of Church life. It was condemned by the RC Church in 1919.

G. Kaufmann, Fruits of Anthroposophy (1922); [L.] F. Edmunds, Anthroposophy: A Way of Life (Hartfield, E. Sussex, 1982); G. Ahern, Sun at Midnight: The Rudolf Steiner Movement and the Western Esoteric Tradition (Wellingborough, Northants, 1984). See also bibl. to STEINER, R.

Antiburgher. A member of the group in the Secession Church in Scotland which separated in 1747 from the '*Burgher' group because it refused to admit that an adherent of that Church could take the civil 'Burgess Oath'.

Antichrist. The prince of Christ's enemies. In the NT he is referred to by name only in 1 Jn. 2: 18, 22, 4: 3, and 2 Jn. 7 (where he is identified with those who deny the Incarnation). Many see him, however, in the strange beasts of Rev., sometimes thought to represent Rome, and in 'the man of sin' of 2 Thess. 2: 3–10, who will appear after a great apostasy before 'the day of the Lord' and sit in God's sanctuary, claiming to be God, but will be finally slain by Christ. Some have maintained that there was a Jewish Antichrist legend which was adopted and expanded by Christians; others have connected Antichrist not with a person but with an evil principle; yet others have seen in Antichrist a reference to some historical person—Caligula, *Simon Magus, or *Nero. The attempt of Caligula to set up his statue in the Temple at Jerusalem, the deification of the Emperor, and Emperor-worship, suggested strongly that Antichrist would come from imperial Rome; and the effect of the Neronian persecutions, particularly in view of Rev. 17: 8, 13: 3, and the uncertainty concerning Nero's grave, led men to expect Nero to return from the tomb. Acc. to *Jerome and *Augustine, many believed that St John the Divine was not dead but sleeping, waiting to testify against Nero redivivus as Antichrist. In the 4th cent. Antichrist was sometimes identified with the *Arian heresy, whilst *Cyril of Jerusalem states that he will be a magician who will take control of the Roman Empire, claim to be Christ, deceive the Jews by pretending to be the Son of David and rebuilding the Temple, and who, after persecuting the Christians, will be slain at the Second Advent by the Son of God (Cat. Lect. 15. 11–15). Since the Reformation, the identification of the Pope with Antichrist has often been made, esp. in the less-educated circles of Protestantism.

W. *Bousset, Der Antichrist (1895; Eng. tr., 1896). B. Rigaux, L'Antéchrist et l'Opposition au royaume messianique dans l'Ancien et le Nouveau Testament (Louvain, diss., Gembloux and Paris, 1932). G. C. Jenks, The Origins and Early Development of the Antichrist Myth (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 59; Berlin, 1991). R. K. Emmerson, Antichrist in the Middle Ages: A Study of Medieval Apocalypticism, Art, and Literature (Manchester, 1981). [J. E.] C. Hill, Antichrist in Seventeenth-Century England (Riddell Memorial Lectures, 1969; 1971). E. Lohmeyer in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 450–7, s.v., with bibl.

Anticlericalism. A liberal movement in politics and religion which affected many parts of Europe and Latin America in the 19th and 20th cents. It was directed against the RC Church as a State religion, claiming a monopoly of religious truth and wide political powers. The French Revolution, which established religious toleration for all religions and subjected the RC Church to the civil power, was a breakthrough for anticlericalism. The dechristianization movement of 1793–4 attacked the Catholic religion as such, but to be anticlerical and a Catholic believer was not as a rule a contradiction. After 1815 the RC Church in France and in Europe generally regained many (but not all) of its powers and privileges from governments, to serve as a bastion against revolution, and its identification with reactionary regimes and conservative social élites drove many liberals and democrats to anticlericalism. It was clear to them that to gain and retain power it would be necessary to curtail the political power of the Church, and in particular its control of education. Anticlericalism came in waves, notably after the revolutions of 1830 in *France and *Belgium, the triumphs of Liberals in *Portugal (1834) and *Spain (1836), in the Paris Commune of 1871, and the Spanish Republic of 1873. Subsequent outbursts followed the coming to power of French Republicans (1879) and Radicals (1902), of Belgian (1879) and Spanish (1885) Liberals, and the Portuguese Revolution of 1910. Anticlericalism was rife in *Mexico after the Revolution of 1910, but the formation of the independent Mexican State in 1821 had already (1833 and 1857) given rise to attacks on the RC Church, which in Latin America was regarded as an arm of Spanish colonialism. The movement towards national unification was thus a second force behind anticlericalism. The loyalty of Catholic clergy and laity to Rome was seen by state-builders as a challenge to the sovereign state. Italy, in particular, could not be fully unified until the temporal power of the Pope had been eliminated (1870). The Pope ordered the faithful to boycott the political life of the new state, confirming the anticlericalism of the Liberal parties which held power until 1921. Catholic populations incorporated into the periphery of the new German Empire were considered to be insufficiently loyal and were subjected to the anticlerical persecution of the *Kulturkampf in 1872–87. Limits to anticlericalism were often set by tactical considerations. To antagonize the religious feelings of electorates sometimes only increased the political threat to liberal regimes. Liberal and democratic movements tried to neutralize revolutionary socialists by harnessing them to an anticlerical front, but the menace of class war induced anticlericals and Catholic conservatives to rally in defence of private property. This was the case in Belgium in the 1880s and France and Spain in the 1890s. Faced by the emergence of Communism, the Papacy came to terms with the Italian Fascist state in 1929, the Third Reich in 1933, Vichy France in 1940, and General Franco's Spain in 1953. This accommodation did not, however, prevent the persecution of the Catholic Church in Germany by Hitler. The return of the liberal and democratic regimes in W. Europe after 1944 was marked by a certain resurgence of anticlericalism.

See also ASSOCIATIONS, LAW OF; CONCORDAT OF 1801; and articles on the countries concerned.

E. Faguet L'anticléricalisme (1906). P. A. Dykema and H. A. Oberman (eds.), Anticlericalism in Late Medieval and Early Modern Europe (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 51; Leiden etc., 1993). A. Mellor, Histoire de l'anticléricalisme français ([Tours] 1966); R. Rémond, L'Anticléricalisme en France de 1815 à nos jours (1976); P. Pierrard, L'Église et les ouvriers en France, 1840–1940 (1984); E. Lecanuet, L'Église de France sous la Troisième République (2 vols., 1907–10; rev. edn., 4 vols., 1930–1), passim; E. M. Acomb, The French Laic Laws 1879–1889: The First Anticlerical Campaign of the Third Republic (New York, 1941); M. O. Partin, Waldeck-Rousseau, Combes and the Church: The Politics of Anticlericalism 1899–1905 (Durham, NC, 1969). P. Vercauteren, 'La Place de Paul Janson dans la vie politique belge de 1877 à 1884', Res Publica, 11 (1969), pp. 383–404. A. C. Jemelo, Chiesa e Stato in Italia dal Risorgimento ad oggi (1955; Eng. tr., Church and State in Italy 1850–1950, Oxford, 1960). J. C. Ullman, The Tragic Week: A Study of Anticlericalism in Spain, 1875–1912 (Cambridge, Mass., 1968); J. M. Sánchez, Reform and Reaction: The politico-religious background of the Spanish Civil War (Chapel Hill, NC [1964]); J. Andrés Gallego, La Política religiosa en España 1889–1913 (1975). D. L. Wheeler, Republican Portugal: A Political History 1910–1926 (Madison, Wis., 1978), esp. pp. 67–72. J. L. Mecham, Church and State in Latin America (Chapel Hill, NC, rev. edn., 1966). J. S. Conway, The Nazi Persecution of the Churches, 1933–45 (1968).

Antididagma. The reply issued in 1544 by the cathedral chapter of *Cologne to the plan set out by Abp. *Hermann of Wied in his Consultatio to reform Catholic practice. It was a moderate restatement of traditional principles and apparently mainly the work of J. *Gropper. Its language exercised a certain influence on the BCP of 1549.

The work orig. appeared in Ger. early in 1544 with the title Christliche und katholische Gegenberichtung eines ehrwürdigen Domcapitals zu Köln wider das Buch der genannten Reformation. The Lat. version, which followed soon afterwards, has a long title beginning Antididagma, seu Christianae et Catholicae Religionis per . . . Canonicos Metropolitanae Ecclesiae Colonien: Propugnatio (Cologne, 1544; repr. Paris, 1549). F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite, 1 (1915), pp. xlviii f.

antidoron. See PAIN BÉNIT.

antilegomena (Gk. τὰ ἀντιλεγόμενα). The word is used by *Eusebius of Caesarea (HE 3. 25. 3 f.) of those scriptural books of which the claim to be considered a part of the NT canon was disputed. He subdivided them into: (1) those 'generally recognized' (γνώριμοι), viz. Jas., Jude, 2 Pet., 2 and 3 Jn.; and (2) the 'spurious' (νόθοι), viz. the 'Acts of St *Paul', the 'Shepherd of *Hermas' the 'Apoc. of St *Peter', the 'Ep. of *Barnabas', the '*Didache', and (perhaps) Rev.

Anti-Marcionite Prologues. The short introductory prologues, prefixed to the Gospels of Mk., Lk., and Jn. (that of Mt., if it ever existed, has been lost), which are contained in some 40 MSS of the Vulgate. They were written in Greek, but only that to Luke has survived in its original language. D. de Bruyne and A. *Harnack held that they were the earliest of the extant Gospel Prologues, dating from the latter half of the 2nd cent., and thus threw important light on the origins of the Gospels. They are now held to have been neither directed against *Marcion, nor written so early, nor even to be of the same date.

Text in A. *Huck, H. *Lietzmann, and F. L. Cross, A Synopsis of the First Three Gospels (Tübingen, 1936), p. viii; also ed., with full discussion, by J. Regul (Vetus Latina. Ergänzende Schriftenreihe aus der Geschichte der Lateinischen Bibel, 6; 1969), with bibl. In Eng. there is a good summary of the points at issue, with refs. to de Bruyne and Harnack and subsequent discussions, in E. Haenchen, The Acts of the Apostles (Eng. tr., Oxford, 1971), pp. 10–12.

antiminsion, also antimension (Gk. ἀντιμήνσιον, 'instead of a table'). In the E. Church, the portable altar, consisting of a cloth of silk or linen, decorated with representations of the Passion, and usually of the entombment of Christ, and containing relics. It was originally intended for use when there was no properly consecrated altar, but is now always used, even on consecrated altars, in the *manner of the W. corporal, with another corporal, the *eileton, underneath it. It is first met with at about the beginning of the 9th cent.

antinomianism. A general name for the view that Christians are by grace set free from the need of observing any moral law. It was attributed to St *Paul by his opponents (Rom. 3: 8) because of his disparagement of the Mosaic Law in favour of the Law of the New Covenant 'written in the heart'—an internal impulse towards good—and strenuously repudiated by him. The charge of antinomianism was plausibly made against many of the *Gnostic sects, e.g. the *Carpocratians, who held that, as matter was so sharply opposed to spirit, bodily actions were indifferent and therefore licentiousness was wholly admissible. At the Reformation, antinomian teaching was revived, e.g. by the *Anabaptists and J. *Agricola, as following from the *Lutheran doctrine of *justification by faith. In England some antinomian sects developed under the Commonwealth.

antinomy. In philosophy, one of a pair of mutually conflicting laws or sequences of thought ('thesis' and 'antithesis'), each of which possesses, or appears to possess, equal validity. In the Critique of Pure Reason (1781), I. *Kant elaborated four antinomies, the purpose of which was to show the inconsistencies to which the understanding is driven when it applies itself to philosophical speculation and thus to demonstrate the impossibility of theoretical metaphysics. Their subjects are: (1) the spatial and temporal limitations of the physical world; (2) the divisibility of substances; (3) causality and freedom; and (4) the relation of the First Cause to the world.

Antioch. In size and importance, Antioch in Syria was the third city of the Roman Empire. As appears from Acts, a Christian community existed there from almost the earliest days, and it was here that the disciples of Christ were first called 'Christians' (Acts 11: 26). Acc. to tradition, the first bishop of the city was St *Peter, and by the beginning of the 2nd cent. the Church had an organization, with the celebrated St *Ignatius as its bishop. By the 4th cent. the see ranked after Rome and Alexandria as the third patriarchial see of Christendom, reaching its greatest extent of jurisdiction at the end of that cent. Gradually, however, the rise in power of the see of *Constantinople, and to a less extent the erection of *Jerusalem into a patriarchate, reduced the importance of Antioch, and its influence also suffered later from the *Nestorian and *Monophysite schisms (the latter supported by the civil power of the Saracens). At the Schism of 1054, the patriarchate supported Constantinople, but in 1100 the Orthodox Patriarch of Antioch withdrew to Constantinople, and the Crusaders appointed a Latin Patriarch. From the 14th cent. the Latin patriarchate has been only titular. The Orthodox Patriarch now resides at Damascus, the most important city in Syria. Other patriarchs, *Uniat and Monophysite, take the title of Antioch, though these also do not reside there. A small Turkish township now exists on the site, where excavations were carried out by a Franco-American expedition in 1931–9. See also ANTIOCHENE THEOLOGY.

M. Lequien, Oriens Christianus*, 2 (Paris, 1740), cols. 669–1076, and 3 (ibid., 1740), cols. 1153–240. J. M. *Neale, A History of the Holy Eastern Church, 5, 'The Patriarchate of Antioch' (1873). E. S. Bouchier, A Short History of Antioch, 300 B.C.–A.D. 1268 (Oxford, 1921). R. Devreesse, Le Patriarcat d'Antioche depuis la paix de l'Église jusqu'à la conquête arabe (1945). C. A. Papadopoulos, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἐκκλησίας Ἀντιοχείας (Alexandria, 1951). A. J. Festugière, OP, Antioche païenne et chrétienne (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 194; 1959). V. Corwin, St Ignatius and Christianity in Antioch (Yale Publications in Religion, 1; 1960). G. Downey, A History of Antioch in Syria from Seleucus to the Arab Conquest (Princeton, NJ, 1961). J. H. W. G. Liebeschuetz, Antioch: City and Imperial Administration in the later Roman Empire (Oxford, 1972). D. S. Wallace-Hadrill, Christian Antioch: A Study of Early Christian Thought in the East (1982). C. Cahen, La Syrie du nord à l'époque des croisades et la principauté d'Antioche (1940). G. W. Elderkin, R. Stillwell, and others, Antioch-on-the-Orontes (Publications of the Committee for the Excavation of Antioch and its Vicinity; vols. 1–3 (Princeton, NJ, etc., 1934–41, on excavations of 1934–9); subsequent vols. on specific classes of find, 1948 ff.). D. Levi, Antioch Mosaic Pavements (2 vols., 1947). C. Karalevskij in DHGE 3 (1924), cols. 563–703, s.v. 'Antioche', with detailed bibl.; G. Downey and G. A. Maloney in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 623–7, s.v.

Antioch, Council of (341). The 'Dedication Council' (concilium in encaeniis), held on the occasion of the consecration of *Constantine's 'Golden Church' at *Antioch, was the first of the many 4th-cent. councils in which efforts were made to abandon strict *Nicene theology. It was attended by 97 bishops besides the Emp. Constantius himself. No less than four creeds were put forward, all of them defective from the standpoint of orthodoxy since they were intended not to supplement, but to replace, that of *Nicaea.

The 25 (mainly disciplinary) 'Canons of Antioch' preserved in many of the ancient collections, both Greek and Latin, were long thought to have been the work of this Council but are now generally held to belong to a Council held at Antioch in 330.

Hardouin, 1, cols. 589–610; Mansi, 2 (1759), cols. 1305–50. Canons, with Fr. tr. and introd., pr. in Joannou, 1, pt. 2 (1962), pp. 100–26; crit. edn. of Lat. texts in C. H. *Turner, EOMIA 2.2 (1913), pp. 215–320. Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 2; 1907), pp. 702–33. E. *Schwartz, 'Zur Geschichte des Athanasius, IX', Nachr. (Gött.), 1911, pp. 469–522, repr. in his Gesammelte Schriften, 3 (1959), pp. 265–334. W. Schneemelcher, 'Die Kirchweihsynode von Antiochien 341', in A. Lippold and N. Himmelmann (eds.), Bonner Festgabe Johannes Straub zum 65. Geburtstag (Beihefte der Bonner Jahrbücher, 39; 1977), pp. 319–46. H. [H.] Hess, The Canons of the Council of Sardica AD 343 (Oxford, 1958), pp. 145–50 (Appendix II; 'The Origin of the Canons of Antioch'). For the Creeds connected with the Council, see J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; 3rd edn., 1972), pp. 263–74; also G. Bardy, Recherches sur S. Lucien d'Antioche et son école (1936), pp. 85–132. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 15 f. (nos. 8556–9); cf. p. 11 (nos. 8535 f.).

Antiochene theology. This is a modern designation for a style of theology associated with the Church at *Antioch, contrasted with *Alexandrian theology. In scriptural exegesis it placed more emphasis on the literal and historical sense, though still stressing the importance of insight (θεωρία) into the deeper, spiritual meaning of the biblical text. Some earlier figures, such as *Paul of Samosata and *Lucian of Antioch, are loosely associated with this style of approach, but it is primarily exemplified by a tradition of theological teaching, developed largely in reaction to *Arianism in the 4th and 5th cents. Its most famous exponents are *Diodore of Tarsus, John *Chrysostom, *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Nestorius, and *Theodoret of Cyrrhus. In its Christological teaching, stress was laid on the humanity of Christ and the reality of His moral choices. To achieve this, and to preserve the impassibility of His Divine nature, the unity of His person was described in a looser way than in Alexandrian theology. It was primarily this difference, and the mutual suspicion to which it gave rise, that was the theological nub of the Nestorian controversy. The tradition was discredited after the Council of *Ephesus (431), and did not altogether recover its prestige when the opposing tendency, which produced *Apollinarianism and *Eutychianism, fell into disrepute.

D. S. Wallace-Hadrill, Christian Antioch: A Study of Early Christian Thought in the East (1982). F. Loofs, Paulus von Samosata (TU 44, Heft 5; 1924); R. V. Sellers, Two Ancient Christologies (1940), pp. 107–257. E. Boularand, 'Aux sources de la doctrine d'Arius. [II.] La théologie antiochienne', Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, 68 (1967), pp. 241–72. A. Vaccari, SJ, 'La "teoria" esegetica antiochena', Biblica, 15 (1934), pp. 94–101; J. Guillet, SJ, 'Les Exégèses d'Alexandrie et d'Antioche, conflit ou malentendu?', Rech. S.R. 34 (1947), pp. 257–302; R. M. Grant, A Short History of the Interpretation of the Bible (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 69–79; C. Schäublin, Untersuchungen zu Methode und Herkunft der Antiochenischen Exegese (Theophaneia, 23; Cologne and Bonn, 1974); B. de Margerie, SJ, Introduction à l'histoire de l'exégèse, 1 (1980), pp. 188–213. A. van Roey in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 627 f., s.v. 'Antioch, School of'.

Antiochus Epiphanes (d. 164 BC), King of Syria from 175 BC. (The epithet 'Epiphanes' means 'illustrious'.) His policy of attaining political unity by propagating Greek culture eventually met with violent resistance from the Jews. At first he succeeded in using as his pawns the high priests Jason and Menelaus, who had in turn bought the *high priesthood from him. In 169 BC he attacked *Jerusalem and despoiled the *Temple, and in 167 BC made a renewed and fiercer onslaught in a determination to exterminate Judaism. Jewish customs were forbidden under penalty of death, the Temple defiled and pagan cults instituted. This led to the *Maccabean revolt, after which Antiochus retired to Persia, where he died. His policy and actions are described in the Books of the Maccabees.

The chief biblical refs. are Dan. 11: 11–45; 1 Macc. 1: 10–64, 2 and 3, and 6: 1–16; and 2 Macc. 4: 7–9: 29. The other authorities include Livy (41. 20), Polybius (26. 1; 28. 18–20; 29. 24–7; 31. 9; etc.), and Diodorus Siculus (29. 32, 31. 16, and 34. 1), as well as *Josephus. H. L. Jansen, Die Politik Antiochos' des IV (Skrifter utgitt av det Norske Videnskaps-Akademi, 1; Oslo, 1942. Historisk-Filosofisk Klasse no. 3; 1943). O. Mørkholm, Antiochus IV of Syria (Classica et Mediaevalia, Dissertationes '8' [7]; Copenhagen, 1966). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 1 (Edinburgh, 1973), pp. 128 f., 146–8, and 150–5.

Antipas, Herod. See HEROD FAMILY.

antiphon (Gk. ἀντίφωνον, orig. 'something sung alternately by two choirs'). In the W. Church, sentences, usually from Scripture, recited before and after the *Psalms and *Canticles in the Divine Office. They vary with the season or feast, and are often intended to indicate the spirit in which the (invariable) Psalms and Canticles are sung. They are now recited completely before and after the Psalms or Canticles. The name is also applied to the Four Anthems of Our Lady, sung, according to the season, at the close of *Compline. In the E. Church the word is used in a different sense, and applied to the three anthems sung antiphonally in the early part of the Eucharistic Liturgy, and varying acc. to the feast or season. There are also antiphons at *Vespers and *Mattins, consisting of Psalms sung antiphonally, and at other offices and functions. Such antiphonal singing may be divided either between two choirs or else between a soloist and the choir, and may consist either of verses sung thus in alternation, or of a Psalm broken at intervals by a refrain. See also ANTHEM.

Antiphonal (also Antiphonary). Orig. the liturgical book in the W. Church containing all parts both of the Choir *Office and of the Mass which were sung by the choir antiphonally. It therefore included the Graduale. In later times the Office (Antiphonarium officii) and Mass (Antiphonarium missae) portions were separated, and in current usage the word is restricted to the former book. The official 'Vatican edition' of 1907 is now being revised. The second volume of the Antiphonale Romanum, Liber Hymnarius (Solesmes, 1983) contains the *invitatory antiphons, the Psalter, and some fifty *responsories.

antipope. A person set up as Bp. of Rome in opposition to the person already holding the see or held to be lawfully elected to it. There have been about thirty-five antipopes in the history of the Church.

A. *Mercati (Eng. tr.), 'The New List of the Popes', Mediaeval Studies, 9 (1947), pp. 71–80, incl. list of Popes and antipopes. A. Amanieu in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 598–622, s.v. 'Antipape'.

Antitrinitarianism. A term used to denote various professedly Christian systems which agree only in rejecting the Catholic doctrine of the *Trinity. Such were those of the *Ebionite Jewish Christians of the 1st cent., who thought that to recognize Christ as God would involve the abandonment of *Monotheism; the *Gnostic sects of the 2nd, who subordinated Christ to God as being merely a manifestation of the Father, instead of a coequal Person (see SUBORDINATIONISM); and the Monarchian *Modalists who refused to admit distinct Persons within the Trinity, regarding the Son and Holy Spirit as aspects of the Father's Being. The *Arian view of Christ's Person, which in all its forms fell short of conceding Him full divinity, is also antitrinitarian. In the Middle Ages several obscure pseudo-mystical and pantheistic sects held antitrinitarian views. For the better-known post-Reformation forms of Antitrinitarianism, see under SOCINUS and UNITARIANISM. Unitarianism is the most radical form in which it exists today.

Antonelli, Giacomo (1806–76), Cardinal Secretary of State. He never proceeded beyond the diaconate, to which he was ordained in 1840. After holding various offices under *Gregory XVI, he was created a *cardinal by *Pius IX on his accession (1847). In 1848 he arranged the flight of the Pope to Gaeta, where he was appointed Secretary of State. Returning to Rome in 1850, he influenced the Pope in favour of a reactionary and ultramontane policy, and virtually became the temporal ruler of Rome down to 1870, being nicknamed the 'Red Pope'. He opposed the convening of the First *Vatican Council, and while it was sitting advised the Pope to drop the *Infallibility question. After 1870 he was chiefly concerned with maintaining the claims of the Papacy in its struggle with the Risorgimento. A statesman rather than a prelate, he was loaded with praise by his friends, but regarded as unscrupulous by his enemies.

Il Carteggio Antonelli-Sacconi (1858–1860), ed. M. Gabriele (Istituto per la Storia del Risorgimento Italiano, Biblioteca Scientifica, 2nd ser. 41–2; 1962); Il Carteggio Antonelli-Barili 1859–1861, ed. C. Menegussi Rostagni (ibid. 65; 1973); Il Carteggio Antonelli-De Luca 1859–1861, ed. id. (ibid. 72; 1983). C. Falconi, Il Cardinale Antonelli: Vita e carriera del Richelieu italiano nella Chiesa di Pio IX (Milan, 1983). F. J. Coppa, Cardinal Giacomo Antonelli and Papal Politics in European Affairs (Albany, NY [1990]). P. Pirri, 'Il Cardinale Antonelli tra il mito e la storia', Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, 12 (1958), pp. 81–120. R. Aubert in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 3 (1961), pp. 484–93, s.v.

Antonians. Several communities claiming the patronage of, or descent from, St *Antony of Egypt.

(1) The original disciples of St Antony in the desert, with whom the present Antonians of the *Maronites [(3) below] in the Near East claim (but on insufficient historical evidence) continuity.

(2) A congregation founded by Gaston de Dauphiné in 1095, which spread through France, Spain, and Italy, and survived till the French Revolution. They were known as the 'Hospital Brothers of Saint Antony'.

(3) An order in the *Armenian Church, founded in the 17th cent. to maintain the connection with the RC Church. There are also Antonians among the Chaldean and Maronite *Uniats, and the monastery of Mount *Sinai among the Orthodox claims to follow the rule of St Antony.

(4) A congregation founded in Flanders in 1615.

The name was also taken by an antinomian sect founded in Switzerland in 1802 by a certain Anton Unternäher (1759–1824; hence the name) who pretended to be the redeemer of mankind.

On (1) and (3), Heimbucher, 1, pp. 67–76. E. El-Hayek in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 644–6; J. Gribomont, OSB, and others in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 687–98, both s.v.

On (2), V. Advielle, Histoire de l'Ordre Hospitalier de Saint Antoine le Viennois et ses Commanderies et Prieurés, 1 (1883); L. Maillet-Guy, La Commanderie de Saint-Antoine de Vienne en Dauphiné (Vienne [1925]), and other works of this author. Heimbucher, 1, pp. 423 f. I. Ruffino in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 134–41, s.v. 'Canonici Regolari di Sant'Agostino di Sant'Antonio', with bibl.

Antoninus, St (1389–1459), Abp. of Florence. He joined the *Dominican Order in 1404/5, under the influence of Bl John Dominic (c.1355–1419), and was one of the first members of his new foundation at Fiesole, which was intended to embody the Dominican reform, with its desire to return to the primitive observances and austerities of the Order. Antoninus quickly rose to prominence and was Prior successively in Cortona, Fiesole, Naples, Rome, and Florence. In 1432 he was appointed Vicar General for the Dominican reform in Tuscany. In 1436 he became the first Dominican Prior of the former *Sylvestrine monastery of San Marco, Florence, which had just been given to the Dominicans and which was to be splendidly restored and enlarged by the munificence of Cosimo de' Medici. In 1446 he was made Abp. of Florence by *Eugenius IV. The appointment is said to have been due to the advice of Fra *Angelico, but this is not certain. By his integrity Antoninus became the counsellor of popes and statesmen, and by his care for the sick and needy in times of plague and famine endeared himself to the people. As a writer he was distinguished for his 'Summa theologica moralis', several treatises on the Christian life, and a general history of the world. As an economist, he was among the first to adapt Catholic traditions to modern conditions, maintaining that money invested in business was true capital and that it was not therefore necessarily wrong to receive interest on it. Feast day, 10 May.

His works are listed in Kaeppeli, 1 (1970), pp. 80–100, with bibl. Summa Theologica (first pub. Venice, 1477–9), ed. P. *Ballerini (Verona, 1740). R. Morçay (ed.), Chroniques de Saint Antonin: Fragments originaux du titre xxii, 1378–1459 (1913). Life by Francesco di Castiglione, a member of Antoninus' household, pr. in AASS, Mai. 1 (1680), pp. 313–25, with almost contemporary additions by Leonard de Suburti, OP, pp. 326–34, and account, with extracts, of the Process of Canonization, pp. 335–51. R. Morçay, Saint Antonin archevêque de Florence, 1389–1459 (1914). J. B. Walker [OP], The 'Chronicles' of Saint Antoninus (Catholic University of America Studies in Medieval History, 6; 1933); W. T. Gaughan, Social Theories of Saint Antoninus from his Summa Theologica (Catholic University of America Studies in Sociology, 35; '1950' [1951]). S. Orlandi, OP, 'S. Antonino: La sua famiglia. Gli anni giovanili', Memorie Domenicane, 76 (1959), pp. 81–118; id., 'I primi cinque anni di episcopato', ibid., pp. 119–72; id., 'Il Convento di S. Domenico in Fiesole', ibid. 77 (1960), pp. 3–36 and 93–140; id., 'Gli ultimi otto anni di episcopato', ibid., pp. 169–248; also issued as S. Antonino (2 vols., Florence, 1959–60). U. Horst, OP, 'Papst, Bischöfe und Konzil nach Antonin von Florenz', RTAM 32 (1965), pp. 76–116. R. [A.] de Roover, San Bernardino of Siena and Sant'Antonino of Florence: Two Great Economic Thinkers of the Middle Ages (Kress Library of Business and Economics, 19; Boston, 1967). S. Orlandi, OP, Bibliografia Antoniniana: Descrizione dei manoscritti, della Vita e delle Opere di S. Antonino (Vatican City, 1961). J. B. Walker, OP, in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 646 f., s.v.

Antony, St, of Egypt (251?–356), hermit. About 269 Antony gave away his possessions, and devoted himself to a life of asceticism, and c.285 retired completely into the desert, to the 'Outer Mountain' at Pispir, where he is said to have fought with demons under the guise of wild beasts. The holiness and ordered discipline of his life, esp. compared with the more eccentric austerities of other solitaries, attracted a number of disciples; and c.305 he came out of his solitude to organize them into a community of hermits who lived under rule (an innovation) but with little common life comparable to that of the later religious orders. About 310 Antony retired again into solitude to his 'Inner Mountain' (still called Dêr Mar Antonios, near the Red Sea), but he later exercised his influence in support of the Nicene party in the *Arian controversy, in which he was closely associated with St *Athanasius. Towards the end of his life the numbers of those who turned to the solitary life of the desert increased and his authority grew correspondingly. The evidence for his life is the 'Vita Antonii', traditionally regarded as by Athanasius, though many scholars attribute it to an Athanasian milieu rather than to Athanasius himself. Feast day, 17 Jan.

The seven Epp. of Antony, mentioned by *Jerome (De vir. ill. 88) and surviving in toto only in a Lat. tr. pr. in J. P. Migne, PG

40. 977–1000, are prob. genuine; Georgian version with Coptic fragments, ed. G. Garitte (CSCO 148; 1955, with Lat. tr., ibid. 149; 1955); Eng. tr. by D. J. Chitty (Fairacres Publications, 50; Oxford, 1975); Fr. tr., with introd. by A. Louf, OCR (Spiritualité Orientale, 19; Bellefontaine, 1976). The collection of twenty Epp. printed PG 40. 999–1066, a working over of the earlier set through the Arabic, appears to contain nothing further authentic. A letter to Abbot Theodore and his monks 'On proper Repentance' (PG 40. 1065) seems to be genuine; but the twenty Sermons (40. 961–78) and the so-called 'Rule of St Antony' (40. 1065–79) are spurious. Crit. ed. of the 'Vita Antonii' (PG 26. 835–978) by G. J. M. Bartelink (SC 400; 1994). It survives also in a number of early versions; Lat. text ed. G. Garitte (Études de Philologie, d'Archéologie et d'Histoire anciennes publiées par l'Institut Historique Belge de Rome, 3; 1939); it is also ed. H. Hoppenbrouwers, OSB (Latinitas Christianorum Primaeva, 14; Nijmegen, 1960), and by G. J. M. Bartelink, with introd. by C. Mohrmann, and Ital. tr. (Vite dei Santi, 1 [Milan] 1974); Syriac text ed. R. Draguet (CSCO 417, with discussion and Fr. tr., 418; 1980). Modern Eng. trs. by R. T. Meyer (ACW 10; 1950) and R. C. Gregg (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1980). L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., La Vie de Saint Antoine (1950); B. Steidel, OSB (ed.), Antonius Magnus Eremita 356–1956: Studia ad Antiquum Monachismum Spectantia (Studia Anselmiana, 38; 1956). H. Dörries, 'Die Vita Antonii als Geschichtsquelle', Nachr. (Gött.), 1949, pp. 357–410, repr., with additional material, in Dörries, Wort und Stunde, 1 (Göttingen, 1966), pp. 145–224. S. Rubenson, The Letters of St Antony: Origenist Theology, Monastic Tradition and Making of a Saint (Bibliotheca Historico-Ecclesiastica Lundensis, 24; 1990). J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 39–45, 148–53; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 261 f., 276, 604, with further bibl. CPG, 2 (1974), pp. 60–3 (nos. 2330–50), and pp. 16 f. (no. 2101). G. Bardy in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 702–8, s.v.

Antony, St, of Padua (1188/95–1231), *Franciscan friar. Born in Lisbon, perhaps of noble family, he was educated at the cathedral school and when he was 15 joined the *Augustinian canons nearby. Two years later he was transferred to Coimbra. He was disappointed by the religious spirit of the house and deeply moved when the relics of some Franciscan missionaries killed in Morocco were brought to Coimbra in 1220. He obtained his release and received the Franciscan habit in the chapel of San Antonio at Olivares, near Coimbra, changing his name from Ferdinand to Antony. Late in 1220 he sailed to Morocco, but he was forced by illness to return to Europe. He attended the General Chapter at *Assisi in 1221, and was sent to the hermitage of San Paolo near Forlì. When he was called upon to preach at an ordination, his unexpected eloquence and learning were discovered. With the approval of St *Francis, he was appointed lector in theology to the Order, being the first to hold the post. He taught at *Bologna (1223–4), and then at Montpellier and Toulouse. He became Custodian at Limoges, prob. in 1226, and provincial of Bologna in 1227, but was released from office in 1230 to devote himself more fully to preaching. He was one of seven friars sent to the Pope by the General Chapter of 1230 to seek a clarification of the Franciscan Rule. He spent the rest of his life near Padua, where his relics have always been venerated. He was canonized in 1232 and declared a *Doctor of the Church in 1946. Feast day, 13 June.

St Antony's preaching gained a considerable reputation during his life; it was largely directed against the vices of usury and avarice; it also met with notable success among the heretics of France and N. Italy. Possibly during his life, and certainly after his death, he was widely regarded as a worker of miracles. His cultus, always popular, further developed in the late 19th cent., and he is now one of the most popular Christian saints. He is chiefly invoked for the return of lost property, possibly because of the incident related in the Chronica XXIV Generalium (no. 21) of the novice who ran away with a Psalter which St Antony was using and was forced by an alarming apparition to return it. He is also the patron of the poor, alms given to obtain his intercession being known since *c.*1870 as 'St Antony's Bread'; and he is believed to protect the pregnant and travellers. In early art he is usually depicted with a book or lily, symbolizing his knowledge of Scripture, or occasionally with an ass, which is supposed to have knelt before the Bl Sacrament upheld by St Antony; today he is usually represented holding the Holy Child.

Collections of his sermons were pub. at Paris in 1520 and 1521; collected edn. of his works by J. de la Haye (ed.), Sancti Francisci Assisiatis . . . nec non Sancti Antonii Paduani Opera Omnia (Paris, 1641), pp. 97–792; additional sermons ed. A. Pagus, OFM (Avignon, 1684). Crit. edn. of his Sermones Dominicales et Festivi by B. Costa, L. Frasson, J. Luisetto, and P. Marangon (3 vols., Padua, 1979), with introd. 'De Vita et Operibus', 1, pp. xiii–xlv, with refs. Eng. tr. of his Moral Concordances by J. M. *Neale (London, 1856). The most important source for his life is the Legenda Prima written shortly after his death; crit. edn., with later appendix, by L. de Kerval in Collection d'Études et de Documents, 5 (1904), pp. 1–157, with notes on other sources, pp. 237–71; also ed. G. Abate, OFM Conv., in Il Santo, 8 (1968), pp. 127–226, and V. Gamboso (Fonti Agiografiche Antoninane, 1; Padua, 1981). L. de Kerval, L'Évolution et le développement du merveilleux dans les légendes de S. Antoine de Padua (Opuscules de Critique Historique, 13–14; 1906). E. Gilliat-Smith, Saint Anthony of Padua according to his Contemporaries (1926); R. M. Huber, OFM, St Anthony of Padua, Doctor of the Church Universal (Milwaukee, 1948); S. Clasen, OFM, Antonius, Diener des Evangeliums und der Kirche (1959; Eng. tr., Chicago, 1961); S. Antonio di Padova fra storia e pietà: Colloquio interdisciplinare su 'il fenomeno antoniano' (Centro Studi Antoniani, 1; Padua, 1977); A. Poppi (ed.), Le Fonti et la Teologia dei Sermoni Antoniani: Atti del Congresso Internazionale di Studio sui 'Sermones' di S. Antonio di Padova (Padova, 5–10 ottobre 1981) (Il Santo, 22, fasc. 1–3; Padua, 1982). There are many excellent articles on St Antony in other volumes of Il Santo: Rivista Antoniana di Storia, Dottrina, Arte (1961 ff.). J. Toussaert, Antonius von Padua: Versuch einer kritischen Biographie (Cologne, 1967). S. Clasen, OFM, in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 595 f., with bibl.

apatheia (Gk. ἀπάθεια, 'impassibility' or 'passionlessness'), a term used in ascetical theology in the E. Church, often translated 'dispassion'. When applied to God, it is used in its literal sense, but from *Clement of Alexandria onwards it is also used as a technical term for human perfection, denoting mastery of the passions or serenity. Apatheia has *Stoic roots and is handled in the Greek tradition in a variety of ways. For *Evagrius, who popularized the word, it means the quelling of passions that disturb the soul, leading to a serenity that makes spiritual love possible; other writers are more positive, and *Diadochus of Photike even speaks of the 'fire of apatheia' (πῦρ ἀπαθείας: Cent. 17). Evagrius was attacked by St *Jerome, who, thinking that apatheia meant insensibility, rejected it (Ep. 133. 3). *Cassian used the phrase puritas cordis to represent the Evagrian apatheia, and the term never established itself in the W.

T. Rüther, Die sittliche Forderung der Apatheia in den beiden ersten christlichen Jahrhunderten und bei Klemens von Alexandrien (Freiburger Theologische Studien, 63; 1949). A. and C. Guillaumont in the introd. to their edn. of Evagrius, Practicos, 1 (SC 170; 1971), pp. 98–112. G. Bardy in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 727–46, s.v.

Apelles (2nd cent.), founder of a *Gnostic sect. Our slight knowledge of him comes mainly from fragments of his antagonist, Rhodo (in *Eusebius, HE 5. 13), and refs. in *Tertullian's De Praescriptione (30; 34). Originally a disciple of *Marcion at *Rome, he taught at *Alexandria and later returned to Rome, where he came under the influence of a visionary, Philumene, whose oracles he collected. He embodied his system in an extended work, Συλλογισμοί. He modified Marcion's dualism in an endeavour to defend a less *Docetic doctrine of the Person of Christ. Christ came down from the good God, who was not himself the creator of the world, however, and really lived and really suffered in a body miraculously formed out of the elements. Those who believed in Christ would gain salvation not by knowledge alone or by faith alone, but by good works. Tertullian wrote a book against him, now lost.

For sources see A. *Harnack, Marcion (TU, 45; 1921), pp. 213–30, and Appendix 7 (pp. 323*–39*). Useful discussion by J.-P. Mahé in his introd. to Tertullian, La Chair du Christ, 1 (SC 216; 1975), pp. 59–61 and 94–110. E. Junod, 'Les attitudes d'Apelles, disciple de Marcion, à l'égard de l'Ancien Testament', Augustinianum, 22 (1982), pp. 113–33. J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 272–4.

Aphrahat (early 4th cent.), the first of the *Syriac Church Fathers. He was an ascetic, evidently holding some important ecclesiastical office, and lived through the persecution of the Sasanid king, Shapur II (310–79). Our knowledge of him comes from 23 'Demonstrations' (inaccurately known as his 'Homilies'), the first 10 of which were completed in 337, the next 12 in 344, and the final one in 345. The first 22 are arranged on an acrostic plan, each beginning with a different letter of the alphabet, and give a survey of the Christian faith. The 23rd, in the nature of an appendix, is a short treatise 'On the berry' (Is. 65: 8). His writings show that he attached importance to asceticism, esp. celibacy, and that, at least in intention, he was orthodox in his theology. His works throw valuable light on early Christianity in Persia and on the text of the NT. He was known as 'the Persian Sage' and at an early date was confused with *Jacob of Nisibis, to whom the early Armenian translation of his works is attributed.

Syr. text of Homilies ed. by W. Wright (London, 1869) and, with Lat. tr., by J. Parisot, OSB (Patrologia Syriaca, Pars I, vols. 1–2; 1894–1907). Fr. tr., with introd. and notes, by M.-J. Pierre (SC 349 and 359; 1988–89); Eng. tr. of eight Homm. by J. Gwynn in NPNCF, 2nd ser., 13 (1898), pp. 345–412, and of nine (mainly different) Homm. and some fragments by J. Neusner, Aphrahat and Judaism (Studia Post-Biblica, 19; Leiden, 1971), pp. 19–119. I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Die Gottheit Christi bei Afrahat (Orientalia Christiana, 31, fasc. 1 (no. 87); 1933). E. J. Duncan, Baptism in the Demonstrations of Aphraates the Persian Sage (Catholic University of America Studies in Christian Antiquity, 8; 1945). T. Baarda, The Gospel Quotations of Aphrahat the Persian Sage, 1: Aphrahat's Text of the Fourth Gospel (Amsterdam diss., 2 vols., 1975). P. Bruns, Das Christusbild Aphrahats des persischen Weisen (Hereditas, 4; Bonn, 1990). Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 327–40; I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (2nd edn., Rome, 1965), pp. 46–51, with full bibl. I. Hausherr in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 746–52, s.v.; A. Vööbus, 'Nachträge zum Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum. Aphrahat', Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, 3 (1960), pp. 152–5, with bibl.

Aphthartodocetae. An extreme *Monophysite group, led by *Julian, Bp. of Halicarnassus, and hence known also as 'Julianists'. They taught that from the first moment of the incarnation the earthly body of Christ was in its nature incorruptible (ἄφθαρτος), impassible, and immortal, though this fact did not preclude Him from accepting suffering and death by a free act of His will. The doctrine was attacked (on grounds acceptable also to Catholic orthodoxy) by *Severus, the *Syrian Orthodox Patr. of Antioch, as incompatible with belief in the true humanity of Christ.

R. Draguet, Julien d'Halicarnasse et sa controverse avec Sévère (1924). M. Jugie, AA, 'Julien d'Halicarnasse et Sévère d'Antioche', ÉO 24 (1925), pp. 129–62 and 257–85; id., 'L'empereur Justinien a-t-il été aphthartodocète?', ibid. 31 (1932), pp. 399–402; id., Theologia Dogmatica Christianorum Orientalium ab Ecclesia Catholica Dissentium, 5 (Paris, 1935), pp. 432–7. A. Grillmeier, SJ, Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 2/2 (1989), pp. 83–116; Eng. tr. (1995), pp. 79–111.

Apiarius. A priest of the diocese of Sicca in proconsular Africa, who was deposed by his bishop for misconduct. The incident is important in connection with the growth of Papal jurisdiction. Apiarius appealed to Pope *Zosimus (417–18), who thereupon ordered him to be reinstated. In consequence a council held at *Carthage in May 419 forbade appeals beyond the sea. The Pope protested at this decree, and the case dragged on for some years. About 423 Apiarius was again excommunicated, and again appealed to Rome with the same result. The incident also led to a fresh examination of the authority attaching to the *Sardican Canons and thus indirectly had a decisive influence on the beginnings of the codification of *canon law.

C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Africae A. 345–A. 525 (CCSL 149; 1974), pp. 79–149. Hefele and Leclercq, 2, pp. 196–215 passim, with bibl. note p. 196. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), 2, pp. 1250–75 passim. A. Audollent in DHGE 3 (1924), cols. 951–4, s.v., with bibl.

Apocalypses. See ABRAHAM, APOCALYPSE OF; BARUCH, II; PETER, APOCALYPSE OF; REVELATION, BOOK OF.

Apocalyptic literature. The word 'apocalypse' (ἀποκάλυψις) means a 'revelation' or 'unveiling', so that an apocalyptic book claims to reveal things which are normally hidden and to unveil the future. The Jewish Apocalyptic books belong approximately to the period from 200 BC to AD 100 and deal with the end of the present world order and with the next world. Whereas the Israelite Prophets were primarily preachers, concerned with current problems of their own generation and nation, the Apocalyptists were pre-eminently writers, directing their attention towards the end of things and to the destiny of the world in general. The origins and growth of this literature reflect the history of Israel's conflicts with other nations and the conviction that trust in military power was useless. As the nation continued to be subjected to foreign domination, it despaired of ever attaining political supremacy, and the conclusion was drawn that God would eventually intervene, destroy Israel's enemies, and set up His Kingdom on earth. Some scholars have argued that the Apocalyptic literature, at least in part, represents the protest of visionaries excluded from power by the priestly group which controlled the *Temple after the *Exile.

Apocalyptic literature proper begins with the Book of *Daniel, probably written during the persecution of *Antiochus Epiphanes (175–164 BC) to comfort the Jews in their distress and to assure them of the approaching Divine intervention. However, the beginnings of Apocalyptic tendencies can be seen in the prophetic writings (e.g. Joel 2, Is. 65, Amos 5: 16–20, 9: 11–15, Is. 24–7, Zech. 9–14, Ezek. 38, 39), where there are frequent references to the approaching 'day of the Lord'. The Apocalyptic writings appear to be indebted also to certain elements of the '*Wisdom literature', and even to foreign influences, esp. those of Persian religion. They are almost always pseudonymous and written in the names of Israel's past heroes, a circumstance which is perhaps to be ascribed to the fact that, owing to the supremacy of the Law (which was regarded as containing the complete and final revelation of the Divine will), the only way to secure a hearing after the formation of the earliest form of the OT *Canon in about the 3rd cent. BC was to attribute these writings to some famous person of remote times.

Important Jewish Apocalyptic writings outside the OT are the First and Second Books of *Enoch, the Apocalypse of *Baruch, the Fourth Book of Ezra (2 *Esdras), the Assumption of *Moses, the Book of *Jubilees, the Ascension of *Isaiah, and the *Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs.

In the NT, the element of Apocalyptic appears in various places. The two most important Christian Apocalypses are Rev. and the (non-canonical) 'Apocalypse of *Peter'. Whatever interpretation the Lord Himself wished His disciples to put upon His apocalyptic utterances, it is clear that, at least in the earlier part of the Apostolic age, a speedy Second Coming of Christ was expected (see e.g. Mt. 24 and 25, Mk. 13, Lk. 21, 1 Thess. 4, 1 Cor. 15 for typical Apocalyptic passages). 2 Pet. and Rev. probably belong to a slightly later period, when severe persecution was troubling the Church.

Eng. trs. of most of the Jewish Apocalyptic writings not in the OT will be found in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament (2 vols., Oxford, 1913); J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha (2 vols., 1983–5); and H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984). H. H. Rowley, The Relevance of Apocalyptic: A Study of Jewish and Christian Apocalypses from Daniel to Revelation (1944); D. S. Russell, The Method and Message of Jewish Apocalyptic (1964); P. D. Hanson, The Dawn of Apocalyptic (Philadelphia [1975]); C. Rowland, The Open Heaven: A Study of Apocalyptic in Judaism and Early Christianity (1982). G. Lanczkowski and others in TRE 3 (1978), pp. 189–257, s.v. 'Apokalypten/Apocalypsen, I–IV', with extensive bibl.

Apocatastasis. The Greek name (ἀποκατάστασις) for the doctrine that ultimately all free moral creatures—angels, men, and devils—will share in the grace of salvation. It is to be found in *Clement of Alexandria, in *Origen and St *Gregory of Nyssa. It was strongly attacked by St *Augustine of Hippo and formally condemned in the first anathema against *Origenism, probably put out by the Council of Constantinople in AD 543. In more modern times the doctrine has been defended by certain *Anabaptists, *Moravians, *Christadelphians (modified in some of these by a form of *conditional immortality), and also by certain individual theologians, of whom perhaps the most important is F. D. E. *Schleiermacher. Such teaching is also known as *Universalism.

apocrisarius (from Gk. ἀποκρίνομαι 'to answer, make response'). An ecclesiastical deputy or other official of high rank.

(1) The envoys used by the Patriarchates as their diplomatic representatives in other Patriarchal cities or at Imperial courts. Apocrisarii were at first, from the 5th cent., sent on specific missions, but by the 9th cent. at any rate they had acquired the character of permanent legates. In recent years the *Oecumenical Patriarch has appointed an 'apocrisarius' to the Abp. of *Canterbury, and the Anglican chaplains in Athens, Belgrade, Bucharest, Istanbul, Moscow, and Sofia are 'apocrisarii' to their respective Archbishop or Patriarchs.

(2) The title was also used of the senior court chaplains of the Frankish courts, also known as 'archicapellani'.

Apocrypha, the (Gk. τὰ ἀπόκρυφα (plur.), 'the hidden [things]'). The biblical Books received by the early Church as part of the Gk. version of the OT, but not included in the Heb. Bible, being excluded by the non-Hellenistic Jews from their *canon. Their position in Christian usage has been somewhat ambiguous. In the *Vulgate and versions derived from it they are mostly part of the OT; but in the AV, RV, NEB, and other non-Roman modern versions, they either form a separate section between the OT and NT, or are omitted altogether. They comprise (in the order of the AV): 1 and 2 Esdras, Tobit, Judith, the Rest of Esther, the Wisdom of Solomon, Ecclesiasticus, Baruch with the Epistle of Jeremy, the Song of the three Holy Children, the History of Susanna, Bel and the Dragon, the Prayer of Manasses, and 1 and 2 Maccabees (qq.v.).

The Church received these writings from Hellenistic Judaism, esp. that of *Alexandria. In the *Septuagint (LXX), which incorporated all except 2 Esd., they were in no way differentiated from the other Books of the OT. The narrative Books (1 Esd., Tobit, Judith, 1 and 2 Macc.) are grouped in the principal MSS with the later historical Books 1 Chron.–Esth., the Wisdom Books (Wisd., Ecclus.) with Prov., etc., and Pr. of Man. is appended to the Psalter. The three items, Song of III Ch., Susanna, and Bel and Dragon (collectively known as 'the Additions to Daniel'), are here integral parts of the Book of Dan., being the parts of the Gk. text to which nothing corresponds in the Heb. Similarly the disjointed chapters (by no means a complete Book) appearing in the Eng. versions of the Apocrypha as 'the Rest of Esther' are here simply the portions of the Gk. text of Esth. not found in the Heb. Baruch and Ep. of Jer. are appended in LXX MSS to Jer., though not derived from the Heb. Book. Under the name of 'Esdras' (the Gk. form of Heb. 'Ezra') the LXX contains two Books: one (Ἔσδρας α´, i.e. '1 Ezra') corresponds to portions of (the Heb.) 2 Chron., Ezr., and Neh., but contains also a passage (1 Esd. 3: 1–5: 6.) not found there; the other (Ἔσδρας β´, i.e. '2 Ezra') is a faithful rendering of Ezr. and Neh. The latter therefore is regarded as the LXX version of these OT Books, while the former, which diverges from the Heb., appears among the Apocrypha as '1 Esdras'. The '2 Esdras' of the Apocrypha is a different work altogether. It is not extant in Gk. and found only in Lat. MSS; but it was doubtless translated from the Gk., and is, like the rest, of Jewish origin. This last is also known as the 'Ezra Apocalypse'.

In date of writing, the Books of the Apocrypha derive from the period 300 BC–AD 100 approx., and mostly from 200 BC–AD 70, i.e. before the definite separation of the Church from Judaism. In this period, though the *Canon of the Jewish Scriptures was closed as far as the 'Law' and the 'Prophets' were concerned, it was still possible for works which came to be known technically as 'Writings' to attain for the first time the status of Scripture, and some of the Canonical Books of the OT (e.g. Dan.) date from this period. Some of the Apocrypha, e.g. Ecclus. (cf. the Prologue to the Book), being written originally in Heb., might have gained canonical status, but did not; others (e.g. 2 Macc.), being written in Gk., were never current among Aramaic-speaking Jews. When the Heb. Canon of Scripture was settled (perhaps around AD 100), the Heb. text of the excluded Books ceased to be copied. Hence, with the exception of fragments recovered in modern times (e.g. considerable portions of Ecclus. discovered in an ancient *geniza), this has hence been lost. On the other hand, the Gk. survived because of its use by Christians, who at first received all the Books of the Septuagint equally as Scripture. Though no Book of the Apocrypha is quoted in the NT, *Clement of Rome and other early Fathers, notably *Clement of Alexandria and *Origen, cite them frequently. The considerable use made of them by Christians for apologetic purposes, e.g. of texts held to refer to such Christian doctrines as the Incarnation and the Eternal Generation of the *Wisdom (equated with the Word (*Logos), i.e. Son) of God (Wis. 7: 26), may have contributed to the Jewish rejection of the Books. In the later Gk. version of the Scriptures made by the Jew *Aquila (q.v.), the Heb. Canon was followed exactly.

Down to the 4th cent. the Church generally accepted all the Books of the Septuagint as canonical. Gk. and Lat. Fathers alike (e.g. *Irenaeus, *Tertullian, *Cyprian) cite both classes of Books without distinction. In the 4th cent., however, many Gk. Fathers (e.g. *Eusebius, *Athanasius, *Cyril of Jerusalem, *Epiphanius, *Gregory of Nazianzus) came to recognize a distinction between those canonical in Heb. and the rest, though the latter were still customarily cited as Scripture. St *Jerome, through his E. contacts and his Heb. studies, accepted this distinction, and introduced the term 'apocrypha' for the latter class, which he also described as the 'libri ecclesiastici' as distinguished from the 'libri canonici'. But with a few exceptions (e.g. *Hilary, *Rufinus), W. writers (esp. *Augustine) continued to consider all as equally canonical. In the E. Church opinion varied, and for some centuries the Books continued to be widely accepted; but at the Synod of *Jerusalem in 1672 it was decided that Tobit, Judith, Ecclus., and Wisd. (together with the full LXX text of Jer., Dan., and Est.) alone were to be regarded as canonical. Opinion in the W. also was not unanimous, some authorities considering certain books uncanonical; but, despite Jerome's distinction, all, including '2 Esdras' (see above), were commonly included in the Vulgate and cited as Scripture. (In the Vulgate, 'I, II Esdras' = Ezr. and Neh. (from the Heb.); 'III Esdras' = '1 Esdras' (i.e. Ἔσδρας α′ of the LXX); and 'IV Esdras' = '2 Esdras' (the Ezra Apocalypse).)

At the Reformation, Protestant leaders, ignoring the traditional acceptance of all the Books of the LXX in the early Church and desiring to return to biblical authority purged of medieval tradition, refused the status of inspired Scripture to those Books of the Vulg. not to be found in the Heb. Canon. M. *Luther, however, included the Apocrypha (except 1 and 2 Esd.) as an appendix to his translation of the Bible (1534), and in his preface allowed them to be 'useful and good to be read'. The Geneva translators (see BIBLE, ENGLISH VERSIONS) translated them, with a preface recognizing their value for 'knowledge of history and instruction of godly manners', and the C of E, in the *Thirty-Nine Articles (1562) (Art. VI), stated that 'the Church doth read [them] for example of life and instruction of manners; but yet doth it not apply them to establish any doctrine'. At the Council of *Trent (Sess. IV, 8 April 1548), the full canonicity of the Books was confirmed, with the exception of 1 and 2 (i.e. III and IV) Esdras and Pr. of Man., which were placed thenceforth in an appendix to the Vulgate, after the NT. This decision was confirmed for the RC Church by the First *Vatican Council (1870). In the C of E, in accordance with Art. VI, the Apocrypha, as a separate section between the OT and NT, were included as an integral part of the *Authorized Version of 1611. Under Puritan ascendancy, however, it was declared in the *Westminster Confession (1646–7) that the Apocrypha were not 'to be otherwise approved or made use of than other human writings'. The common attitude to them in Great Britain, maintained officially by the Church of *Scotland and favoured by Nonconformists, was of rejection or at least suspicion, and this, perhaps combined with Anglican apathy, and reinforced by the decision of the *British and Foreign Bible Society not to distribute Bibles containing them, led to their general omission from the editions commonly sold. In the BCP of 1662, portions of some of them were included in the Lectionary, and this was continued in the Lectionary of 1871 as far as Wisd., Ecclus., and Baruch were concerned. In the Revised Lectionary of 1922 portions of Pr. of Man., 1 and 2 Macc., and Tobit were also included. The ASB includes (optional) readings from Tobit, Wisd., Ecclus., Baruch, Song of III Ch., Susanna, and 1 and 2 Macc.

With the growth of a historical perspective in biblical studies in the 19th cent., and increased knowledge and interest in the Hellenistic and non-biblical background of the NT, the great value of the Apocrypha as historical sources came to be generally recognized, and there came also a new recognition of their religious value. Historically they are invaluable for the light which they throw on the period between the end of the OT historical narrative in Ezra-Neh. (*c.*400 BC) and the opening of the NT. They witness to the rise of the belief in eternal life and in the resurrection of the body, championed by the Pharisees in the NT period (cf. Mk. 12: 18–27, Acts 23: 6–9), and bear upon questions that were very much alive in the Apostolic Age (e.g. the Jewish Law, good works, sin and its origin in the *Fall, eschatology). Having been read as Scripture by the pre-Nicene Church and many post-Nicene Fathers, they have gained increasing respect in modern times even from those who do not hold them to be equally canonical with the rest of the OT.

Revision of AV Eng. tr., with crit. comm. ed. H. *Wace (Speaker's Commentary, 2 vols., 1888), with valuable 'General Introduction' by G. *Salmon, 1, pp. ix–xlvi; Eng. tr., with full introd., bibl., and notes, also in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (Oxford, 1913). RSV Apocrypha with comm. ed. by B. M. Metzger (New York, 1965). W. O. E. Oesterley, The Books of the Apocrypha: Their Origin, Teaching and Contents (1914); id., An Introduction to the Books of the Apocrypha (1935). E. J. Goodspeed, The Story of the Apocrypha (Chicago, 1939). B. M. Metzger, An Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York, 1957). L. H. Brockington, A Critical Introduction to the Apocrypha (1961). C. C. Torrey, The Apocryphal Literature: A Brief Introduction (New Haven, Conn., 1945; London, 1963). Eissfeldt, pp. 571–603, with bibl. R. T. Herford, Talmud and Apocrypha: A Comparative Study of the Jewish Ethical Teaching in the Rabbinical and non-Rabbinical Sources in the Early Centuries (1933). R. [T.] Beckwith, The Old Testament Canon of the New Testament Church (1985), pp. 338–433. R. H. Pfeiffer, History of New Testament Times with an Introduction to the Apocrypha (New York, 1949; London, 1954), pp. 233–522. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 180–5, 198–212, 216–32, 568–79; 3 (pt. 2; ibid., 1987), pp. 705–45. H.-P. Rüger in TRE 3 (1978), pp. 289–316, s.v. 'Apokryphen des Alten Testaments'. See also works cited under CANON OF SCRIPTURE and under individual books.

Apocryphal New Testament. A modern title for various early Christian books outside the *Canon of the NT which are similar in form or content to the corresponding canonical Scriptures. The epithet 'apocryphal' does not of itself convey the modern sense of fictitious invention.

GOSPELS. Many of these exist. It is possible that some may embody trustworthy traditions, but this applies only to the earliest, not much later than the Gospels recognized as canonical (e.g. the *Egerton Papyrus or perhaps the Coptic *Gospel of Thomas). A second group was clearly and unmistakably intended to support heretical, and esp. *Gnostic, views (e.g. the *Gospel of the Ebionites, the *Gospel of Philip; see also below). A third group set out to satisfy popular curiosity with tales about the childhood of Christ (the *Infancy Gospel of Thomas), His Passion (the *Gospel of Peter, the Gospel of Nicodemus [see PILATE, ACTS OF]), or His meetings with His disciples in the period between the Resurrection and the Ascension (the Dialogue of the Redeemer*, *Apocryphon of John, and the (orthodox) Testament of Our Lord in Galilee*). 'Revelation Gospels' of this last type were popular among the Gnostics, who extended the period from 40 days to 18 months. Another feature is that subordinate figures in the canonical narratives sometimes become the central characters, as with the BVM in the Protevangelium* or *Book of James, or Joseph in the History of Joseph the Carpenter. Most of these works lie between the 1st and 3rd cent., but some of their content was incorporated into works of later centuries.

ACTS. Of the Apocryphal Acts, the most important are those of Peter*, Paul*, John*, Andrew*, and Thomas*, all probably late 2nd cent. They are sometimes known collectively as the 'Leucian Acts', because all were ascribed by *Photius to one Leucius Charinus; but wide differences of style, matter, and doctrinal standpoint forbid the assumption of common authorship. Their subject-matter is partly made up of stories parallel to and perhaps inspired by the canonical Acts of the Apostles, partly credible oral traditions, partly evident romance. The Acts of Paul (from which the Acts of Paul and Thecla, which was current as a separate work, was later extracted) is not markedly heretical; but nearly all the others in varying degrees reflect current heretical influences.

EPISTLES AND OTHER WRITINGS. Of the non-canonical epistles the best known are those of Clement ('ep. 1') and Barnabas (qq.v.; c. AD 100), though these hardly rank as NT apocrypha in the normal sense. Among others are the spurious Epp. of St. Paul To the Corinthians and To the Laodiceans. There are also various apocryphal apocalypses besides the Revelation of St John, which itself long remained on the borders of the NT canon.

M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1924); J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (ibid., 1993); both give the principal texts in Eng. tr. C. *Tischendorf (ed.), Evangelia Apocrypha (Leipzig, 1853; 2nd edn., 1876). A. de Santos Otero (ed.), Los Evangelios Apócrifos (1956; 6th edn., 1988; convenient edn. of Gk. and Lat. texts, with Sp. tr.). R. A. *Lipsius and M. Bonnet, Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha (2 vols., Leipzig, 1891–1903). Ger. tr. by E. Hennecke, Neutestamentliche Apokryphen (1904; 5th edn. by W. Schneemelcher, 2 vols., 1987–9; Eng. tr., with tr. of texts from their original languages, 1991–2). M. R. James, Anecdota Apocrypha (Cambridge 'Texts and Studies'; 1893 and 1897). J. Hervieux, Ce que l'Évangile ne dit pas ([1958]; Eng. tr. as What are Apocryphal Gospels?, 1960). See also lit. under separate items.

Apodeipnon (Gk. ἀπόδειπνον, 'after supper'). In the E. Church, the late evening liturgical service which is the counterpart of *Compline in the W. There are two forms: the normal one, called 'small', and a much longer one, called 'great', which is used on weekdays in *Lent and as part of the all-night *Vigil on certain important feast days.

Apollinaris, St (date unknown), first Bp. of *Ravenna. The earliest mention of him is in a sermon of St Peter *Chrysologus (d. *c.*450), who styles him a martyr; but the principal authority is some (historically worthless) 7th-cent. acta which put him in the 1st cent. and make him a disciple of St *Peter at Antioch. His body was venerated in early times at Classe, near Ravenna, the supposed scene of his sufferings, later in the cathedral of Ravenna itself. His name still occurs in the canon of the *Ambrosian rite. Feast day, 23 July.

AASS, Jul. 5 (1727), pp. 328–85, incl. medieval accounts of the translation of his relics. F. Lanzoni, Le origini delle diocesi antiche d'Italia: Studio critico (ST 35; 1923), pp. 452–75 (on Ravenna, with bibl. refs.). E. Will, Saint Apollinaire de Ravenne (1936); G. Lucchesi, Note agiografiche sui primi vescovi di Ravenna (Faenza, 1941). H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'L'Hagiographie ancienne de Ravenne', Anal. Boll. 47 (1929), pp. 5–30.

Apollinaris, Sidonius. See SIDONIUS APOLLINARIS.

Apollinarius, Claudius (2nd cent.), Bp. of Hierapolis, early Christian *Apologist. His writings included a 'Defence of the Faith', presented to *Marcus Aurelius (prob. in 172), treatises 'Against the Pagans' (Πρὸς Ἕλληνας), on 'Truth' (Περὶ Ἀληθείας), and on *Easter (Περὶ τοῦ Πάσχα), and a work against the *Montanists. Apart from a few fragments, all his writings are lost. Feast day, 8 Jan.

The chief authority is *Eusebius, HE, 4. 27, and 5. 19. The fragments are collected in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, 1 (2nd edn., Oxford, 1846), pp. 155–74, and in J. C. T. Otto, Corpus Apologetarum Christianorum, 9 (1872), pp. 479–95.

Apollinarius and Apollinarianism. Apollinarius (or Apollinaris) ('the Younger', *c.*310–*c.*390) was the son of a grammarian of Beirut, also named Apollinarius ('the Elder'), in conjunction with whom he rewrote much of the Bible in classical forms when the Emp. *Julian (361–3) forbade Christians to use the pagan classics. A vigorous advocate of orthodoxy against the *Arians, he became Bp. of Laodicea *c.*360 and was a close friend of St *Athanasius (whom he had received on his return from exile in 346). His characteristic Christological teaching described below does not appear to have been the object of special criticism until towards the end of his career, but it was explicitly condemned by synods at Rome in 374–80 and by the Council of *Constantinople of 381. Apollinarius himself seceded from the Church *c.*375, and from 381 the State forbade Apollinarian public worship.

Of Apollinarius' extensive writings, most have been lost. Among his dogmatic works which survive under the false names of orthodox writers are: (1) a 'Detailed Confession of Faith' (ἡ κατὰ μέρος πίστις), attributed to St *Gregory Thaumaturgus; (2) three writings attributed to St Athanasius: a Profession of Faith addressed to the Emp. *Jovian, 'Quod unus sit Christus', and 'De Incarnatione Dei Verbi' (though in the case of the last two the ascription to Apollinarius rather than to a follower of his cannot be regarded as certain); and (3) three writings under the name of Pope *Julius (337–52). Another dogmatic work (Ἀπόδειξις) can be partially reconstructed from St *Gregory of Nyssa's attack on it in his 'Antirrheticus'. Fragments of his many Commentaries on the OT and NT, as well as of his apologetic works against *Porphyry (in 30 books) and the Emp. Julian, have also been preserved, largely in catenae. A Paraphrase of the Pss. in hexameters attributed to Apollinarius is spurious; it dates from the 5th–6th cent.

The fragmentary nature of the surviving sources makes the interpretation of Apollinarius' teaching a difficult task. He shared with St Athanasius the conviction that only the unchangeable Divine *Logos could be the saviour of man with his inherently changeable and fallible mind or soul. This led him to deny explicitly (in a way that St Athanasius did not) the presence of a human mind or soul in Christ. While this enabled him to stress the unity of Godhead and flesh in the person of Christ and to repudiate any conception of moral development in Christ's life, it carried the implication that Christ's manhood was not complete. It is that fact which is distinctive of Apollinarianism. The fundamental objection raised from the outset by Catholic orthodoxy is that if there is no complete manhood in Christ, He is not a perfect example for us, nor did He redeem the whole of human nature, but only its physical elements.

Texts in H. *Lietzmann, Apollinaris von Laodicea und seine Schule: Texte und Untersuchungen, 1 (Tübingen, 1904; all pub.); this supersedes the collection of texts in J. Dräseke, Apollinaris von Laodicea (TU 7, Hefte 3 and 4; 1892; conclusions generally rejected). Additional texts: K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (1933), pp. 57–82; H. de Riedmatten, OP, 'Les Fragments d'Apollinaire à l'"Eranistes"' in Das Konzil von Chalkedon: Geschichte und Gegenwart, ed. A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ, 1 (1951), pp. 203–12; id., 'La Correspondance entre Basile de Césarée et Apollinaire de Laodicée', JTS NS 7 (1956), pp. 199–210; 8 (1957), pp. 53–70; J. Reuss (ed.), Matthäus-Kommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (TU 61; 1957), pp. 1–54; id. (ed.), Johannes-Kommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (ibid. 89; 1966), pp. 3–64; R. Devreesse (ed.), Les Anciens Commentaires grecs de l'Octateuque et des Rois (ST 201; 1959), pp. 128–54; E. Mühlenberg, Psalmenkommentare aus der Katenenüberlieferung, 1 (Patristische Texte und Studien, 15; 1975), pp. 1–118. G. Voisin, L'Apollinarisme (1901); C. E. Raven, Apollinarianism (1923); G. L. Prestige, Fathers and Heretics (Bampton Lectures for 1940; 1940), Lect. 5, pp. 193–246; id., St Basil the Great and Apollinaris of Laodicea, ed. H. Chadwick (1956). H. de Riedmatten, OP, 'Some Neglected Aspects of Apollinarist Christology', Dominican Studies, 1 (1948), pp. 239–60; id., 'La Christologie d'Apollinaire de Laodicée', in K. Aland and F. L. Cross (eds.), Studia Patristica, 2 (TU 64; 1957), pp. 208–34. E. Mühlenberg, Apollinaris von Laodicea (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 23; 1969). T. F. Torrance, Theology in Reconciliation (1975), pp. 139–214 ('The Mind of Christ in Worship. The Problem of Apollinarianism in the Liturgy'). R. M. Hübner, Die Schrift des Apollinarius von Laodicea gegen Photin (Pseudo-Athanasius, Contra Sabellianos) und Basilius von Caesarea (Patristische Texte und Studien, 30; 1989). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 301–17 (nos. 3645–700). R. Aigrian in DHGE 3 (1924), cols. 962–82, s.v. On the Psalm Metaphrasis (ed. A. Ludwich, Teub., 1912) see J. Golega, Der Homerische Psalter: Studien über die dem Apolinarios von Laodikeia zugeschriebene Psalmenparaphrase (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, 6; 1960).

Apollonius of Tyana (d. *c.*98), Neopythagorean philosopher. His virtuous life and reforming religious tendencies were constantly exaggerated after his death, so that it became possible for anti-Christian writers to compose biographies of him consciously parallel with the Gospel life of Christ. The Life of him by Flavius Philostratus (*c.*220), though perhaps not inspired by this motive, furnished by its exaggeration and pretensions matter for anti-Christians in later times, and in particular for Hierocles, Governor of Bithynia *c.*303, who wrote a Life of Apollonius which called forth a refutation from *Eusebius of Caesarea. In modern times opponents of Christianity have occasionally used Philostratus to disparage the uniqueness of the Christian Gospel, but the alleged parallels are generally admitted to be unconvincing. A collection of letters, of doubtful authenticity, is ascribed to Apollonius.

There is a convenient edn. of Philostratus' Vita Apollonii in the Loeb Classical Library (2 vols., 1912, ed. F. C. Conybeare). Also Eng. tr., with valuable introd., by J. S. Phillimore (2 vols., 1912). Further Eng. tr. by C. P. Jones, ed. and abridged, with introd., by G. M. Bowersock (Penguin Classics, 1970). Crit. edn. of letters, with Eng. tr., by R. J. Penella (Mnemosyne, suppl. 56; Leiden, 1979). G. Petzke, Die Traditionen über Apollonius von Tyana und das Neue Testament (Leiden, 1969); E. Koskenniemi, Apollonios von Tyana in der neutestamentlichen Exegese (Tübingen [1994]). M. Dzielska, Apollonius of Tyana in Legend and History, Eng. tr. by P. Pieńkowski (Problemi e Ricerche di Storia Antica, 10; Rome, 1986). G. Anderson, Philostratus: Biography and Belles Lettres in the Third Century A.D. [1986], pp. 121–239. K. Gross in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 529–33, s.v., with bibl.

Apollos. A 'learned' Jew of Alexandria, 'mighty in the scriptures', and apparently already a Christian, though 'knowing only the baptism of John [the Baptist]' (Acts 18: 24–5). His Christian education was completed *c.*54 at *Ephesus by *Priscilla and Aquila. He then preached at Corinth, where some Christians wished to set him up as a rival to St Paul (Acts 18: 24, 1 Cor. 3: 4, etc.). Many, from M. *Luther onwards, have argued that he was the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

apologetics. The defence of Christian belief and of the Christian way against alternatives and against criticism. St *Paul in Athens 'argued in the synagogue with the Jews and the devout persons, and in the market place every day with those who chanced to be there' (Acts 17: 17 RSV; Acts goes on to provide an example of such argument in its account of Paul's words on the *Areopagus to the *Epicurean and *Stoic philosophers). The works of the 2nd-cent. *Apologists, whether against the Jews or pleading the case of Christianity before the Roman authorities, continue this tradition, as does St *Augustine's City of God, written to defend a faith accused by pagans of leading to the fall of Rome. St *Thomas Aquinas, too, in the Summa Contra Gentiles, sets himself the task 'of making known, as far as my limited power will allow, the truth that the Catholic faith professes, and of setting aside the errors that are opposed to it' (1. 2. 9). F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, in his Brief Outline on the Study of Theology (Eng. tr. of Kurze Darstellung des theologischen Studiums, 1811), distinguishes apologetics, 'which seeks to ward off hostility towards the [Christian] community' (§ 39), from polemics, which defends Christianity's essence against internal deviations.

Powerful objections to apologetics were raised by K. *Barth, who insisted that the Gospel's basis in revelation alone yielded no common ground for a defence of Christianity by natural reason. This view has been widely disputed by theologians, both Protestant (e.g. P. *Tillich and W. *Pannenberg) and RC (e.g. K. *Rahner and H. *Küng), for whom man's reason cannot be thought of as wholly corrupt and for whom the natural world, and especially human nature, themselves provide rationally defensible intimations of transcendence. For such theologians, Christianity, too, especially in its central Christological and eschatological emphases, itself yields a rationally defensible view and way of life.

A. Richardson, Christian Apologetics (1947); B. Ramm, Types of Apologetic Systems (Wheaton, Ill., 1953; rev. as Varieties of Christian Apologetics, Grand Rapids, Mich., 1961). B. Lindars, SSF, New Testament Apologetic: The Doctrinal Significance of the Old Testament Quotations (1961). W. Pannenberg, Basic Questions in Theology [Eng. tr. of articles pub. in various places], 3 (1973), pp. 99–115 (ch. 3, 'Speaking about God in the Face of Atheist Criticism', orig. Ger. pub. in 1969). B. [G.] Mitchell, The Justification of Religious Belief (1973). H. Küng, Christ sein (1974; Eng. tr., On being a Christian, 1977); id., Existiert Gott? (1978; Eng. tr., Does God Exist?, 1980). E. [F.] Osborn, The Beginning of Christian Philosophy (1981). T. W. Crafer in HERE 1 (1908), pp. 611–23; E. Kamlah, C. Andresen, H.-H. Schrey, and others in RGG (3rd edn.), 1 (1957), cols. 477–95; J.-B. Metz in Sacramentum Mundi, 1 (1968), pp. 66–70; L. W. Barnard, K. G. Steck, and H.-R. Müller-Schwefe in TRE 3 (1978), pp. 371–429, all s.v.

Apologia pro vita sua (1864). J. H. *Newman's 'history of [his] religious opinions' down to his reception into the RC Church, 9 Oct. 1845. It is a primary historical source for the *Oxford Movement, not least because of the letters and other historical documents which it contains. This moving and tragic work, one of the greatest autobiographies in the language, was provoked by a gibe of C. *Kingsley in Macmillan's Magazine for January 1864 (cited s.v. KINGSLEY). Early in Feb. 1864 Newman published in a pamphlet some correspondence with Kingsley and the publisher over the passage with the title Mr Kingsley and Dr Newman. Kingsley promptly issued a reply ('What, then does Dr Newman mean?'). The Apologia, Newman's answer, was orig. issued in weekly parts.

Many repr., e.g. in Everyman's Library (1912). Crit. edn., with introd. by Wilfrid Ward, London, 1913; reissued 1931; more elaborate crit. edn. by M. J. Svaglic (Oxford, 1967). C. H. Collette, Dr. Newman and his Religious Opinions (1866; anti-Roman critique). W. E. Houghton, The Art of Newman's Apologia (New Haven, Conn., 1945). V. F. Blehl, SJ, and F. X. Connolly (eds.), Newman's Apologia: A Classic Reconsidered (New York [1964]).

Apologists. The name esp. given to the Christian writers who (*c.*120–220) first addressed themselves to the task of making a reasoned defence and recommendation of their faith to outsiders. They include *Aristides, *Justin Martyr, *Tatian, *Athenagoras, *Theophilus, *Minucius Felix, and *Tertullian. They belonged to the period when Christianity was first making converts among the educated classes, and was also in conflict with the State over its very right to exist. Their object was to gain a fair hearing for Christianity, to dispel popular slanders and misunderstandings, and sometimes to show that Christians were loyal subjects, and to provide for this purpose some account of Christian belief and practice. They had to meet: (1) pagan philosophy and the general outlook which it influenced, and (2) the specifically Jewish objections. They devoted much attention to the application of OT prophecy to Christianity, and to the position of the divinity of Christ in relation to Monotheism, and esp. in connection with the latter doctrine elaborated the teaching on the *Logos and won for it a permanent place in Christian theology. Except for Tertullian, they were not primarily theologians. Their method was to exhibit Christianity to emperors and to the public as politically harmless and morally and culturally superior to paganism.

Collected crit. edn. of texts by J. C. T. Otto, Corpus Apologetarum (9 vols., Jena, 1847–72; 3rd edn. of vols. 1–5 [Justin], 1876–81); more recent text (except Theophilus) in E. J. Goodspeed, Die ältesten Apologeten (1914). E. J. Goodspeed, Index Apologeticus (Leipzig, 1912; vocabulary). J. Geffcken, Zwei griechische Apologeten (1907; Aristides and Athenagoras); A. Puech, Les Apologistes grecs du deuxième siècle de notre ère (1912); M. Pellegrino, Studi su l'antica apologetica (1947). N. Zeegers-Vander Vorst, Les Citations des Poètes Grecs chez les Apologistes Chrétiens du II^e Siècle (Université de Louvain, Recueil de Travaux d'Histoire et de Philologie, 4th ser. 47; 1972). H. B. Timothy, The Early Christian Apologists and Greek philosophy exemplified by Irenaeus, Tertullian and Clement of Alexandria (Assen, 1973). R. M. Grant, Greek Apologists of the Second Century (Philadelphia, 1988). V. A. Spence Little, The Christology of the Apologists (1934). A. L. Williams, Adversus Judaeos: A Bird's-Eye View of Christian Apologiae until the Renaissance (Cambridge, 1935), esp. book 1. See also standard Patrologies and bibls. under separate Apologists.

Apolysis (Gk. ἀπόλυσις, 'dismissal'). The concluding blessing in the E. rites, said by the priest at the end of the Liturgy and of the offices.

apolytikion (Gk. ἀπολυτίκιον). In the E. rites, the principal *troparion of the day, celebrating the particular feast or saint commemorated in the calendar. It is sung at the end of Vespers (hence its name, 'dismissal hymn'), and is repeated in *Orthros, the Liturgy and almost all the other offices.

apophatic theology (Gk. ἀποφατικὴ θεολογία), or negative theology, a way of approaching God by denying that any of our concepts can properly be affirmed of Him. The term is first used by *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite in contrast with cataphatic or affirmative theology and symbolic theology (Myst. 3). In apophatic theology the soul rejects all ideas or images of God and enters the 'darkness that is beyond understanding', where it is 'wholly united with the Ineffable' (ibid.). The roots of apophatic theology can be traced back a long way, to the ban on *images in parts of the OT, and to a similar rejection of *anthropomorphism by the Greek philosopher Xenophanes, developed by Parmenides and *Plato into a tradition which characterizes the Divine in largely negative terms. This tradition was taken up by the *Gnostics, philosophers such as *Philo and Numenius, by *Plotinus and other *Neoplatonists, and by the Christian Fathers, esp. St *Gregory of Nyssa. Apophatic theology can be seen as an assertion of the inadequacy of human understanding in matters Divine, and therefore a corrective within theology, forming part of the way of *analogy (q.v.), an approach perhaps more characteristic of the W. Church. In the E., on the other hand, apophatic theology is regarded as fundamental. Here it is seen as an affirmation that God cannot be an object of knowledge at all; this doctrine is given classic expression in the teaching of St *Gregory Palamas that God's essence is unknowable, while He makes Himself known to us through His energies.

See also GOD.

E. Norden, Agnostos Theos: Untersuchungen zur Formengeschichte religiöser Rede (1913); A.-J. Festugière, OP, La Révélation d'Hermès Trismégiste, 4: Le Dieu inconnu et la Gnose (1954). J. Hochstaffl, Negative Theologie: Ein Versuch zur Vermittlung des patristischen Begriffs (Munich, 1976), with bibl. D. Turner, The Darkness of God: Negativity in Christian Mysticism (Cambridge, 1995). V. *Lossky, Essai sur la Théologie mystique de l'Église d'Orient (1944; Eng. tr., 1957); P. Evdokimov, La Connaissance de Dieu selon la tradition orientale (Lyons, 1967). J. Pieper, Philosophia negativa: Zwei Versuche über Thomas von Aquin (Munich, 1953; Eng. tr., with other material, The Silence of St Thomas, 1957).

Apophthegm. A designation used by R. *Bultmann and other *Form Critics for those items in the Gospels which M. *Dibelius describes as '*Paradigms'. The term had been used previously for stories of a similar type in secular Greek literature.

Apophthegmata Patrum (Gk. ἀποφθέγματα, terse, pointed sayings). Collections of sayings of, or brief stories about, Egyptian monks, commonly known in English as 'Sayings of the Desert Fathers'. They are mainly arranged either alphabetically acc. to the speakers or subjects of the stories, or systematically by subject-matter. The material dates from the 4th–5th cents., a large proportion being ascribed to one Poemen, who lived well into the 5th cent. The surviving collections in their present form date from the late 5th to early 6th cent. In addition to the Greek, there are collections in Latin, Syriac, Armenian, Coptic, Georgian, and Ethiopic. Direct and unsophisticated, they vividly convey the spirit of the early desert spirituality.

The most widely diffused collection is the alphabetically arranged one first pr. by J. B. *Cotelier, Ecclesiae Graecae Monumenta, 1 (1677), pp. 338–712, repr. J. P. Migne, PG 65. 71–440; Eng. tr. by B. Ward, SLG, The Sayings of the Desert Fathers (1975); reliable Fr. tr. by L. Regnault, OSB, Les Sentences des Pères du Désert (Solesmes [1981]). Other collections and a Lat. version pub. by H. Rosweyde, SJ, as bk. 7 of his Vitae Patrum (1617; this and other texts repr. in PL 73 and 74). Coptic version in Sahidic dialect ed., with Fr. tr., by M. Chaîne (Cairo, 1960). Ethiopic version ed., with Lat. tr., by V. Arras (CSCO 238–9, Scriptores Aethiopici, 45–46; 1963). Eng. tr. of Syriac version by E. A. W. Budge, Wit and Wisdom of the Christian Fathers of Egypt (1934). W. *Bousset, Apophthegmata: Studien zur Geschichte des ältesten Mönchtums (ed. T. Hermann and G. Krüger, 1923). J.-C. Guy, SJ, Recherches sur la Tradition grecque des Apophthegmata Patrum (Subsidia Hagiographica, 36; 1962). L. Regnault, OSB, 'Aux Origines des Collections d'Apophthegmes', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 18.2 (Kalamazoo, Mich., and Louvain, 1989), pp. 61–74. G. [E.] Gould, The Desert Fathers on Monastic Community (Oxford Early Christian Studies, 1993). CPG 3 (1979), pp. 84–95 (nos. 5558–95).

apostasy. In the discipline of the early Church the term was used of the abandonment of Christianity, which was, with murder and fornication, one of the three sins at first accounted unpardonable, if committed by a baptized person, and later pardonable only after public penance. Until recently the word was used in the RC Church in three senses: (1) total defection from the Christian faith; (2) public defection from the RC Church; (3) desertion by a professed religious who had taken perpetual vows. The 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici* (can. 751), however, defines apostasy as the total renunciation of the Christian faith.

On apostasy in the early Church, see bibl. s.v. LAPSI. On modern RC legislation, J. A. Coriden in id. and others (eds.), The Code of Canon Law: A Text and Commentary (1985), pp. 547 f.

aposticha (Gk. ἀπόστιχα). In the E. Church, brief liturgical hymns or *stichera attached to verses from the Psalter. They occur at the end of *Vespers, and (except on feast days) of *Orthros.

apostil. See POSTIL.

Apostle (Gk. ἀπόστολος). (1) A title given in the early Church to some of its leaders (1 Cor. 12: 28), esp. missionaries, and at Heb. 3: 1 to Christ Himself. The origin and precise significance of the term is disputed, but some reference to being sent (Gk. ἀποστέλλω, 'I send') is certain. St *Paul claimed the title for himself (Rom. 1: 1, Gal. 1: 1, etc.) on the basis of a commission from the Risen Christ, and used it of others (e.g. Rom. 16: 7), incl. St *James the Lord's Brother (Gal. 1: 19). It is used, most frequently by St *Luke, of the twelve disciples whose names are recorded in Mk. 3: 14–19, Mt. 10: 2–4, Lk. 6: 13–16, the slight variations perhaps indicating uncertainty rather than fluctuating membership of the group or different names for the same person. The later restriction of the title to the twelve (cf. Rev. 21: 14) was apparently unknown to Paul (cf. 1 Cor. 15: 5 with 15: 7), or at least resisted by him. It was popularized by Luke, who sees the election of St *Matthias (Acts 1: 15–26) as the reconstitution of an apostolic twelve after the defection and death of *Judas Iscariot. In modern usage the term is sometimes applied to the leader of the first Christian mission to a country, e.g. to St *Patrick, the 'Apostle of Ireland', Sts. *Cyril and Methodius, the 'Apostles of the Slavs', and many others. Where the traditional beliefs of the operation of grace and authority in the Church are maintained, it is through the twelve apostles that this grace and authority are held to descend from Christ, and from them to their lawfully appointed successors (see APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION, EPISCOPACY). Acc. to later tradition, all twelve apostles, except St *John, were also martyrs.

(2) A name given to the Epistle read in the E. Liturgy. It is always a portion of an epistle of one of the apostles or is taken from the Acts, and never, as in W. rites on occasion, an extract from the OT. The word is also used for the book which contains these readings set out as appointed.

(3) An official in the *Catholic Apostolic Church.

On (1) J. B. *Lightfoot, St Paul's Epistle to the Galatians (1865), pp. 89–97 ('On the Name and Office of Apostle'). K. *Lake in The Beginnings of Christianity, pt. 1, ed. F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. Lake, 5 (1933), pp. 37–59: note 6 ('The Twelve and the Apostles'). K. H. Rengstorf in TWNT, 1 (1933), pp. 406–48 (Eng. tr., 1 (1964), pp. 407–47), s.v. ἀπόστολος. G. Saas, Apostelamt und Kirche: Eine theologisch-exegetische Untersuchung des paulinischen Apostelbegriffs (1939); K. E. *Kirk (ed.), The Apostolic Ministry: Essays on the History and the Doctrine of Episcopacy (1946); A. Fridrichsen, The Apostle and his Message (Uppsala, 1947); H. von Campenhausen, 'Der urchristliche Apostelbegriff', Studia Theologica (Lund), 1 (1948), pp. 96–130; W. Schmithals, Das kirchliche Apostelamt: Eine historische Untersuchung (Göttingen, 1961; Eng. tr., Nashville, 1969; London, 1971); G. Klein, Die zwölf Apostel: Ursprung und Gehalt einer Idee (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 77; Göttingen, 1961); E. Klostermann, Das Christliche Apostolat (Innsbruck, etc., 1962); C. Burchard, Der dreizehnte Zeuge (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 103; Göttingen, 1970). J. A. Kirk, 'Apostleship since Rengstorf: Towards a synthesis', New Testament Studies, 21 (1975), pp. 249–64. W. A. Bienert, 'Das Apostelbild in der altchristlichen Überlieferung' in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 6–28 (Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 5–27), with recent bibl.

Apostle of England. St *Augustine of *Canterbury (q.v.).

Apostle of the Gentiles. St *Paul. The title does not occur in the NT; but cf. Gal. 2: 7.

Apostle of Rome. Title of St *Philip Neri (q.v.).

Apostles' Creed. A statement of faith used only in the W. Church. Like other ancient *Creeds, it falls into three sections, concerned with God, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit, corresponding to the three Baptismal questions of the primitive Church. Terse in expression, it is less overtly theological than E. Creeds, but it includes such distinctive articles as the *Descent into Hell and the *Communion of Saints. Though its affirmations can be supported by NT evidence, the formula itself is not of apostolic origin. Its title is first found *c.*390 (Ep. 42. 5 of St *Ambrose), by which time the legend of its joint composition by the twelve Apostles was already current. Its present form, first quoted by St *Pirminius (early 8th cent.), is an elaboration of the shorter *Old Roman Creed (q.v.), which had itself evolved from earlier, simpler texts based on the Lord's threefold baptismal command (Mt. 28: 19). This developed form seems to have had a Hispano-Gallic origin, was given a monopoly in his dominions by *Charlemagne, and was eventually accepted at Rome, where the Old Roman Creed or similar forms had survived for centuries. By the early Middle Ages it was everywhere employed at Baptism in the W., and between the 7th and 9th cents. secured a place in the daily offices. The BCP prescribes its use at Baptism (in an interrogative form) and daily at *Mattins and *Evensong, except on the thirteen days in the year on which the *Athanasian Creed is to be said in its place at Mattins. Its use at Mattins and Evensong is retained in most modern Anglican liturgies. In the 20th cent. it has been increasingly treated in discussions about Church union as a binding formulary of faith.

J. *Pearson, An Exposition of the Creed (1659). J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; 3rd edn., 1972), esp. pp. 368–434. H. B. *Swete, The Apostles' Creed: Its relation to primitive Christianity (1894). F. *Kattenbusch, Das apostolische Symbol (2 vols., 1894–1900). T. *Zahn, Das apostolische Symbolum (1893; Eng. tr., 1899); A. *Harnack, 'Apostolisches Symbolum', PRE (3rd edn.), 1 (1897), pp. 741–55 (Eng. tr. as sep. work, The Apostles' Creed, 1901); E. Vacandard, 'Les Origines du symbole des apôtres', RQH 67 (1899), pp. 329–77; H. *Lietzmann, 'Die Anfänge des Glaubensbekennmisses', in Festgabe . . . A. Harnack (1921), pp. 226–42. P. Feine, Die Gestalt des apostolischen Glaubensbekenntnisses in der Zeit des Neuen Testaments (1925). K. *Barth, Credo: Die Hauptprobleme der Dogmatik dargestellt im Anschluss an das Apostolische Glaubensbekenntnis (1935; Eng. tr., 1936). E. *Brunner, Ich glaube an den lebendigen Gott (1945; Eng. tr., 1961). O. S. Barr, From the Apostles' Faith to the Apostles' Creed (New York, 1964). H. de *Lubac, SJ, La Foi chrétienne: Essai sur la structure du Symbole des Apôtres (1969). J. de Ghellinck, SJ, Patristique et moyen-âge, 1: Les Recherches sur les origines du symbole des apôtres (1946; 2nd edn., 1949), fundamental with full summary of modern literature. See also bibl. to OLD ROMAN CREED.

Apostles, The Doctrine of the Twelve. See DIDACHE.

Apostles, The Epistle of the. See TESTAMENT OF OUR LORD IN GALILEE.

Apostleship of Prayer. A RC pious association under the guidance of the *Jesuit Order, with special devotion to the *Sacred Heart of Jesus. There are three degrees of membership, acc. to the rule of devotion undertaken. It was founded at Vals, France, in 1844 by F. X. Gautrelet, and in 1879 received from the Pope formal statutes, which were revised in 1896.

Apostolic Age. A modern title in use esp. among biblical scholars for the first period in the history of the Christian Church, approximately falling within the lifetime of the *Apostles (q.v.). Great importance is attached, esp. by Protestants, to the practices and beliefs of the Church during this period.

Apostolic Canons. A series of eighty-five canons attributed to the Apostles. They form the concluding chapter (8. 47) of the '*Apostolic Constitutions', the author of which (*c.*350–80) probably compiled them himself. Most of them deal with the ordination, the official responsibilities, and the moral conduct of the clergy, though a few are concerned with the duties of Christians in general. The last canon gives a list of scriptural Books which includes the Apostolic Constitutions itself. Twenty of the set are based on canons of *Antioch (?341). The first 50 were translated into Latin in the 6th cent. by *Dionysius Exiguus, and thus became part of the early canon law of the W. Church, while the *Trullan Council (692), though it condemned the 'Apostolic Constitutions' as a whole, secured their formal recognition in the E.

F. X. Funk, Didascalia et Constitutiones Apostolorum (1905), 1, pp. 564–93; also, with Fr. tr., in Joannou, 1, pt. 2 (1962), pp. 1–53. Eng. tr. in ANCL 17 (1870), pt. 2, pp. 257–69. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 231–3 (no. 1740).

Apostolic Church Order. An early Christian document, containing regulations on ecclesiastical practice and moral discipline. It is so named because its contents are ascribed to the various apostles, who speak at a reputed council at which Mary and Martha are present. It is thought to have been composed in Egypt c. AD 300. The document was evidently the work of an eccentric compiler, as it treats 'Peter' and 'Cephas' as different persons and deals with *readers as though they ranked between *presbyters and *deacons. It contains a text of the Two Ways parallel to, or based on, that in the '*Didache'. It was originally written in Greek, but it survives also in Latin (in a *Verona codex, lv [53]) and in Syriac, Coptic, Arabic, and Ethiopic versions (in the *Sinodos).

The Gk. text was first ed. by J. W. Bickell, Geschichte des Kirchenrechts (1843), pp. 107–32; also in T. Schermann (ed.), Die allgemeine Kirchenordnung: Frühchristliche Liturgien und kirchliche Überlieferung, 1 (Paderborn, 1914), pp. 12–34. Fragments of Lat. tr. ed. E. Tidner, Didascaliae Apostolorum Canonum Ecclesiasticorum Traditionis Apostolicae Versiones Latinae (TU 75; 1963), pp. 107–13. Arabic and Ethiopic texts ed., with Eng. tr., together with Eng. tr. of Coptic text by G. Horner, The Statutes of the Apostles or Canones Ecclesiastici (1904). A. *Harnack, Die Quellen der sogenannten Apostolischen Kirchenordnung (TU 2, Heft 5; 1886; Eng. tr., 1895 [despite misleading title]). E. Hennecke, 'Zur Apostolischen Kirchenordnung' in ZNTW 20 (1921), pp. 241–8; cf. H. *Lietzmann, ibid., pp. 254–6. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 229–31 (no. 1739). J. Quasten, Patrology, 2 (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 119 f.

Apostolic Constitutions. A collection of ecclesiastical law dating from *c.*350–80, and almost certainly of Syrian provenance. The full title is 'Ordinances of the Holy Apostles through Clement'. The *Trullan Synod (692) believed that the *Arian tendency of the work was due to the influence of interpolators, but C. H. *Turner demonstrated the Arian intention of the original text. Of its eight books 1 to 6 are based on the '*Didascalia'; 7. 1–32 on the '*Didache'; 7. 33–49 is liturgical material apparently derived from Jewish blessings; 8. 1–2 may be connected with the work 'Concerning Spiritual Gifts' listed on the base of the statue associated with St *Hippolytus; 8. 3–46 is loosely based on Hippolytus' '*Apostolic Tradition' and contains an elaborate version of the Antiochene Liturgy; while 8. 47 is the '*Apostolic Canons'. Various attempts have been made to identify the compiler. J. *Ussher (1644) believed the same hand was responsible for the Long Recension of the Letters of St *Ignatius of Antioch; D. Hagedorn argued that the author of both works was *Julian, an Arian author of a commentary on Job. Despite the wealth of liturgical material contained in the work (there are three accounts of Baptism and one of the Eucharist), it cannot be uncritically accepted as evidence for the usage of the later 4th cent.

Ed. princeps by F. *Torres, Venice, 1563, repr. by J. B. *Cotelier in Patres Apostolici, 1 (1672), with new Lat. tr.; a later edn. of Cotelier's text was repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 1. 555–1156. Crit. edns. by F. X. Funk (Paderborn, 1905) and M. Metzger (SC 320, 329, and 336; 1985–7), with full introd. and bibl. Liturgy in bk. 8 also pr. in Brightman, LEW, pp. 3–30, with introd. pp. xvii–xlvii. Eng. tr. by J. Donaldson in ANCL 17 (1870), pt. 2. Eng. tr. of liturgical portions, with notes, by W. J. Grisbrooke (Grove Liturgical Study, 61; 1990). F. X. Funk, Die apostolischen Konstitutionen (1891), and later works. C. H. Turner, 'Notes on the Apostolic Constitutions', JTS 16 (1915), pp. 54–61 and 523–38; and 31 (1930), pp. 128–41; D. Hagedorn, Die Hiobkommentar des Arianers Julian (Patristische Texte und Studien, 14; 1973). D. A. Fiensy, Prayers Alleged to be Jewish: An Examination of the Constitutiones Apostolorum (Brown Judaic Studies, 65; Chico, Calif. [1985]). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 220 f. (no. 1730).

Apostolic Delegate. A person appointed by the Pope to keep the *Vatican informed of ecclesiastical matters in the territory which the *Holy See has assigned to him. He is not a diplomatic official, his status being purely ecclesiastical. The Vatican appointed an Apostolic Delegate to Great Britain for the first time in 1938 in the person of Mgr. William Godfrey (1889–1963).

Apostolic Fathers. The title given since the later 17th cent. to those Fathers of the age immediately succeeding the NT period whose works in whole or in part have survived. They are *Clement of Rome, *Ignatius, *Hermas, *Polycarp, and *Papias, and the authors of the 'Ep. of *Barnabas', of the 'Ep. to *Diognetus', of '2 Clement', and of the '*Didache'. In modern printed editions the 'Martyrdoms' of Clement, Ignatius, and Polycarp are sometimes included with them. Some of these writings hovered for a time on the edge of the NT canon, Herm. and Barn., e.g., being found in the *Codex Sinaiticus and 1 Clem. in the *Codex Alexandrinus.

J. B. *Cotelier, SS. Patrum qui Temporibus Apostolicis floruerunt . . . Opera (Paris, 1672). J. P. Migne, PG 1–2. Collected modern edns. by O. Gebhardt, A. *Harnack, and T. *Zahn (3 vols., Leipzig, 1875–7; ed. minor, ibid., 1877); by J. B. *Lightfoot (5 vols., 1885–90, fine edn. of Clement, Ignatius, and Polycarp only, with full comm. and notes; edn. of texts, with Eng. tr., in one vol., 1891); by F. X. Funk (2 vols., Tübingen, 1878–81); by K. *Lake (Loeb, 2 vols., 1917–19, with Eng. tr.); rev. of Funk's edn. by K. Bihlmeyer (vol. 1 only (incl. all except Hermas), Tübingen, 1924; 2nd edn., by W. Schneemelcher, 1956, 3rd edn., 1970). Eng. trs. also by J. A. Kleist (ACW 6; 1948), E. J. Goodspeed (New York, 1950) and M. Staniforth (Harmondsworth, 1968; 2nd edn. by A. Louth, 1987), and, with comm., ed. R. M. Grant (6 vols.: 1–3, New York and London, 4–6, Camden, NJ, and London; 1964–8). For edns. and trs. of individual Fathers, see the sep. entries. For vocabulary, H. Kraft, Clavis Patrum Apostolorum: Catalogus Vocum in Libris Patrum qui dicuntur Apostolici non raro occurrentium (Munich, 1963). The New Testament in the Apostolic Fathers (ed. Oxford Society of Hist. Theology, 1905). T. F. Torrance, The Doctrine of Grace in the Apostolic Fathers (1948). J. Lawson, A Theological and Historical Introduction to the Apostolic Fathers (1961). L. W. Barnard, Studies in the Apostolic Fathers and their Background (Oxford [1966]). A. P. O'Hagan, Material Re-Creation in the Apostolic Fathers (TU 100; 1968); J. Liebaert, Les Enseignements moraux des Pères Apostoliques [1970]; T. H. C. van Eijk, La résurrection des morts chez les Pères Apostoliques (Théologie historique, 25 [1974]). S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, The Apostolic Fathers (Outstanding Christian Thinkers, 1989). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 1–3 (no. 1000) for further bibl.

Apostolic King. A title traditionally borne by the King of Hungary. It is supposed to have been conferred on the first King, *Stephen I (d. 1038), by Pope *Sylvester II on account of his apostolic zeal. He was also known as 'His Apostolic Majesty'.

Apostolic See. The see of Rome, so called from its traditional association with the two apostles, St *Peter and St *Paul.

apostolic succession. The method whereby the ministry of the Christian Church is held to be derived from the apostles by a continuous succession. It has usually been associated with an assertion that the succession has been maintained by a series of bishops. These bishops have been regarded as succeeding the apostles because: (1) they perform the functions of the apostles; (2) their commission goes back to the apostles; (3) they succeed one another in the same sees, the derivation of which may be traced back to the communion of the apostles; and (4) by some writers because through their consecration to the episcopal office they inherit from the apostles the transmission of the Holy Spirit which empowers them for the performance of their work. The fact of the succession of the ministry from the apostles, and of the apostles from Christ, was strongly emphasized by *Clement of Rome before the end of the 1st cent.; and the necessity for it has been very widely taught within the historic Church. The fact of continuity in the succession has occasionally been disputed; and the necessity has been denied by most Protestant writers, and asserted only with qualifications by some other theologians.

Doubts about the continuity of the apostolic succession were among the reasons which led to the condemnation of *Anglican Orders (q.v.) by the see of Rome in 1896; in more recent years the maintenance of the 'historic episcopate' has been among the major issues in schemes for *reunion involving Anglican and other bodies. The 1982 statement on '*Baptism, Eucharist and Ministry', issued by the *Faith and Order Commission of the *World Council of Churches, was disposed to accept 'episcopal succession as a sign of the apostolicity of the life of the whole Church'. See also ANGLICAN–METHODIST CONVERSATIONS, and SOUTH INDIA, CHURCH OF.

A. W. Haddan, Apostolical Succession in the Church of England (1869); C. *Gore, The Ministry of the Christian Church (1889; ed. C.H. Turner, 1919); A. C. *Headlam in The Prayer Book Dictionary (1912 and 1925); C. H. Turner in Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry, ed. H. B. *Swete (1918; 2nd edn., 1921); K. E. *Kirk (ed.), The Apostolic Ministry (1946); A. Ehrhardt, The Apostolic Succession in the First Two Centuries of the Church (1953). E. Benz, Bischofsamt und apostolische Sukzession im deutschen Protestantismus (1953). W. Telfer, The Office of a Bishop (1962), pp. 107–20.

Apostolic Tradition, The (Gk. ἡ ἀποστολικὴ παράδοσις). The document formerly known as the '*Egyptian Church Order', now generally held to be the work of St *Hippolytus. The treatise is apparently referred to in the words ἀποστολικὴ παράδοσις which occur in the list of writings attributed to Hippolytus on the statue preserved in the *Vatican Library. It contains a detailed description of rites and practices which are alleged to be traditional, though it cannot be assumed that they correspond in every particular with the Roman usage of the early 3rd cent. The document includes rites of *Ordination and *Baptism, and a *Eucharistic Prayer; this last was used as the basis of the second Eucharistic prayer in the 1970 Roman Missal. Apart from fragments, the original Greek text is lost. The most important translation is the Latin, preserved in part in a palimpsest at *Verona (lv [53]), in which it is combined with versions of the '*Didascalia Apostolorum' and the '*Apostolic Church Order'. There are also oriental versions (*Coptic, Arabic made from the Coptic, and *Ethiopic made from the Arabic) incorporated into the '*Sinodus Alexandrina'. Use was made of it in a number of other works (such as the 'Apostolic Constitutions', bk. 8, the Testamentum Domini, and the 'Canons of *Hippolytus') which have survived in a variety of E. languages. The Verona text was first published by E. Hauler in 1900, but the credit for establishing its Hippolytean authorship belongs to R. H. *Connolly, and, in a less degree, to E. *Schwartz.

There are critical reconstructions of the text by G. *Dix, OSB (London, 1937, incl. Eng. tr.; repr. with preface by H. Chadwick, 1968) and, most authoritatively, by B. Botte, OSB (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 39; 1963). Simplified text by B. Botte, OSB (SC 11 bis, 1968; repr. with some revisions, 1984). Other Eng. trs. by B. S. Eaton (Cambridge, 1934) and G. J. Cuming (Grove Liturgical Study, 8; 1976). Lat. text ed. E. Hauler, Didascaliae Apostolorum Fragmenta Veronensia Latina (Leipzig, 1900), pp. 101–21, and E. Tidner, Didascaliae Apostolorum, Canonum Ecclesiasticorum, Traditionis Apostolicae Versiones Latinae (TU 75; 1963), pp. 117–50; Coptic ed., with Ger. tr., by W. Till and J. Leipoldt (TU 58; 1954); Arabic edn., with Fr. tr., by J. and A. Périer, 'Les "127 canons des Apôtres" ', PO 8 (1912), pp. 590–622; Ethiopic (the first version to be pub. when an incomplete text, with Lat. tr., was pr. by J. Ludolf, Ad suam Historiam Aethiopicam . . . Commentarius (Frankfurt a. Main, 1691), pp. 328–8), ed. G. Horner, The Statutes of the Apostles (1904), pp. 10–48, with Eng. tr., pp. 138–86; also, with Ger. tr., by H. Duensing (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, 32; 1946). E. Schwartz, Über die Pseudoapostolischen Kirchenordnungen (Strasbourg, 1910); R. H. Connolly, The So-called Egyptian Church Order and Derived Documents (Texts and Studies, 8.4; Cambridge, 1916). J. M. Hanssens, SJ, La Liturgie d'Hippolyte: Ses documents, son titulaire, ses origines et son caractère (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 155; 1959); id., La liturgie d'Hippolyte: Documents et Etudes (Rome 1970). J. Magne, Tradition Apostolique sur les Charismes et Diatexeis des saints Apôtres (Origines Chrétiennes, 1; 1975 [argues against Hippolytean authorship]). G. J. Cuming (ed.), Essays on Hippolytus (Grove Liturgical Study, 15; 1978). E. Mazza, 'Omelie pasquali e Birkat ha-mazon: Fonti dell'Anafora di Ippolito?', EL 97 (1983), pp. 409–81. A. Faivre, Naissance d'une hiérarchie: Les premières étapes du cursus clérical (Théologie historique, 40 [1977]), esp. pp. 47–67; id., 'La documentation canonico-liturgique de l'église ancienne', Rev. S.R. 54 (1980), pp. 204–19 and 273–97, esp. pp. 279–86. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 226–8 (no. 1737).

Apostolicae Curae. Pope *Leo XIII's Bull, issued on 13 Sept. 1896, in which Anglican Orders were condemned as invalid through defect of both form and intention. A 'Responsio' was issued in 1897 by the Abps. of Canterbury and York. For the history of the question see ANGLICAN ORDINATIONS.

The text is in Leonis Papae XIII Allocutiones, Epistolae, Constitutiones, 6 (1900), pp. 198–210. Bettenson (2nd edn.), pp. 385–6. See also works cited under ANGLICAN ORDINATIONS.

Apostolici (Lat.), 'Apostolics'. Among the several sects and religious bodies to whom this title has been applied, either by themselves or by others are:

(1) Some *Gnostic communities of the 2nd–4th cents. They are described by *Epiphanius (Haer. 61).

(2) An ascetic body which flourished in the 12th cent. around Cologne and at Périgueux in France. They rejected marriage, oaths, and the use of flesh-meat, and attacked many Catholic doctrines. St *Bernard of Clairvaux preached against them.

(3) A sect begun at Parma in 1260 by one Gerard Segarelli. It drew its inspiration from the *Franciscan teaching on poverty. It was condemned at Rome in 1286 and again in 1291, and in 1300 Segarelli was burnt to death at Parma. Shortly afterwards the sect was revived under Fra Dolcino, who expounded apocalyptic doctrines derived from *Joachim of Fiore. In 1307 he too was burnt at the stake.

(4) The name has also been assumed by certain Protestant groups, e.g. some *Anabaptist sects.

Apostolicity. One of the four marks of the Church set forth in the *Nicene Creed ([Credo] in unam sanctam catholicam et apostolicam ecclesiam). On a Catholic view, the word means identifiable with the Church of the Apostles by succession (see APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION) and continuity of doctrine, to which RCs would add by communion with the 'see of Peter'. By Protestants it is generally understood to mean 'primitive', in contrast with real or supposed corruptions of post-apostolic times. (See also NOTES OF THE CHURCH.)

Apostolicum. A name given, esp. on the Continent, to the *Apostles' Creed.

apotheosis (Gk. ἀποθέωσις from θεός, 'god'), the assimilation of a man to a god. Greeks and Romans made no firm distinction between gods and men, and at latest from the reign of Alexander (356–323 BC) cults were rendered to rulers both before and after their death, as if to gods, though it does not appear that they were normally credited with supernatural powers; A. D. Nock held that the cults indicated homage rather than worship. The subjects of Rome commonly honoured the reigning emperor in this way, though no emperor was officially recognized as a god at Rome before death. The Christians' refusal to take part in the cult has sometimes been seen as a reason for their persecution by the government, but implausibly, since participation was not legally obligatory on any subject. Deified emperors were termed 'divi'; the same title was used by Christian emperors down to *Theodosius I, who claimed only to rule by the grace of God. The use of the same term to denote saints has sometimes been thought to support the theory that the pagan practice of apotheosis can be connected with the origins of Christian *canonization, but the saints were certainly not reckoned to be more than human. Rarely in Gnosticism, and once in *Gregory Thaumaturgus, the word ἀποθέωσις is used in the sense of 'union with God'; but this idea of 'divinization' through religious union, though common in E. Christian mysticism and theology, is much more generally described as θέωσις or θεοποίησις. See also DEIFICATION.

M. P. Nilsson, Geschichte der Griechischen Religion, 2 (Handbuch der Altertumswissenschaft, 5/2; 1950), pp. 125–75 and 366–76 (3rd edn., 1974, pp. 132–85 and 384–95); K. Latte, Römische Religionsgeschichte (ibid. 5/4; 1960), ch. 12. L. Cerfaux and J. Tondriau, Un concurrent du Christianisme: Le Culte des Souverains dans la Civilisation Gréco-Romaine (Bibliothèque de Théologie, 3rd ser. 5; 1957). F. Taeger, Charisma: Studien zur Geschichte des antiken Herrscherkultes (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1957–60). A. D. Nock in C. Anc. H. 10 (1934), ch. 15, esp. pp. 481–503; id., 'Deification and Julian', Journal of Roman Studies, 47 (1957), pp. 115–23, repr. in his Essays on Religion and the Ancient World, ed. Z. Stewart (2 vols., Oxford, 1972), no. 49; cf. also nos. 6, 11, 40, and 45. J. H. W. G. Liebeschuetz, Continuity and Change in Roman Religion (Oxford, 1979), pp. 64–90, 235–43, and 289.

Apparitions of the BVM, the. The eighteen manifestations of the BVM to St *Bernadette (q.v.) in the grotto near *Lourdes between 11 Feb. and 16 July 1858. They are commemorated in the RC Church on 11 Feb. by a feast which was of universal observance from 1907 to 1969.

apparitor. An officer appointed by an ecclesiastical judge to execute the orders and decrees of his court, and to summon persons to appear before it (hence the name). They were also anciently called 'summoners' or 'sumners'. Their number and privileges were restricted by a *Canon (138) of 1604. They continue to be appointed, and usually carry the mace before the *chancellor.

R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, 2 (2nd edn. by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), pp. 951–4.

appeals. Applications from a lower to a higher judicial authority, a term commonly used in connection with the ecclesiastical courts. Appeals by clergy and laity to authorities higher than their diocesans were based upon Roman civil law and regulated by several councils from *Nicaea (325) to *Trent (1545–63). During the Middle Ages appeal to the Papal *Curia from the English ecclesiastical courts occasioned intermittent friction between Church and State. From the time of Henry II, the Kings of England attempted to limit appeals to Rome, until in 1534 *Henry VIII abolished them, substituting the Court of *Delegates as final arbiter in ecclesiastical causes. Appeals are now governed by the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963 (q.v.).

appearance. A word once popular in philosophy through the use made of it by F. H. *Bradley in his Appearance and Reality (1893). Acc. to Bradley, the only reality is an absolute all-inclusive experience ('the richer for every discord'), and everything other than this, including morality and religion, is convicted on analysis of contradiction and hence assigned to the realm of 'appearance'. In a somewhat different sense, the word is also used of those elements in our knowledge which we obtain through our senses. It is this meaning which is found in the *Platonist emphasis on the need for 'saving the appearances' (σώζειν τὰ φαινόμενα, *Proclus, Hyp. 5. 10), i.e. for securing that the facts of sense-observation have their due place in any rationalized theory or system about the world.

Appellants. (1) The 31 RC secular priests, headed by William Bishop (*c.*1553–1624), titular Bp. of *Chalcedon from 1623, who appealed to Rome in 1598–9 for the cancellation of G. *Blackwell's appointment as *archpriest and superior of the mission on the ground that his pro-*Jesuit policy was damaging the RC cause in England. Since Card. W. *Allen's death (1594), the English RCs had become divided into an extreme party, mostly Jesuits, under R. *Parsons, who wished to destroy *Elizabeth I's government, and the remainder who were politically loyal; and Blackwell's appointment in 1598 had brought matters to a head. The original Appeal was a failure. But, as Blackwell persevered in his policy, the seculars made further Appeals in 1601 and 1602, the third time with the support of the French ambassador. Blackwell was reprimanded, his connection with the Jesuits severed, and several Appellant priests put on the controlling council. On his return, Bishop drew up a 'Protestation of Allegiance' to Elizabeth (31 Jan. 1603) in which he and 12 other priests formally repudiated the use of political means for the conversion of England. The immediate controversy came to an end when in 1608 Blackwell himself took the Oath of Allegiance to *James I, but tensions between regulars and seculars continued.

(2) The name given to those of *Jansenist and *Gallican sentiments who rejected the condemnation by '*Unigenitus' (1713) of 101 propositions extracted from P. *Quesnel's Reflexions morales. In March 1717 four bishops solemnly appealed against the Papal Bull to the next General Council; in the following months they were joined by eight other bishops, incl. Card. L. A. *de Noailles, Abp. of Paris, by the *Sorbonne and other universities, and by a significant number of clergy. In Sept. 1718 *Clement XI in his brief 'Pastoralis Officii' formally condemned and excommunicated them and from 1720 the French court concurred in attacking them. With the support of the Parlements they were able to keep up some resistance and played a part in the expulsion of the *Jesuits from France.

On (1) T. G. Law (ed.), The Archpriest Controversy: Documents relating to the Dissensions of the Roman Catholic Clergy, 1597–1602 (Camden Society, NS 66 and 68; 1896–8); narrative by John Bennett (written in 1621) and other 17th-cent. papers in Miscellanea, 12 (CRS 22; 1921), pp. 132–86. A. Pritchard, Catholic Loyalism in Elizabethan England (1979), pp. 120–201.

On (2) J. Carreyre, Le Jansénisme durant la régence (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 2–4; 1929–33). D. [K.] Van Kley, The Jansenists and the Expulsion of the Jesuits from France 1757–1765 (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1975). See also works on JANSENISM, cited s.v.

Appian Way (Lat. Via Appia). The famous road constructed by the censor Appius Claudius Caecus in 312 BC from *Rome to the S. of Italy. It was orig. carried as far as Capua, but later taken through to Brindisi. After disembarking at Puteoli, St *Paul travelled on the Appian Way on his first journey to Rome, being met (Acts 28: 15) by groups of Christian disciples at 'Appii Forum' (43 miles) and Three Taverns (33 miles from Rome).

Owing to the construction of the Via Appia Nuova, for the first few miles out of Rome the old road remains much as it was in ancient times. It is still flanked by many monuments, mostly tombs. The Christian sanctuaries and remains along it include the '*Domine quo vadis?' chapel (q.v.); the *catacombs of St *Callistus (the burying-place of most of the Popes in the 3rd cent.) and of Praetextatus; and the basilica of St *Sebastian (near the reputed resting-place of the remains of St *Peter and St Paul during the persecution of Valerian, 258).

appropriation. The practice common in the Middle Ages of permanently annexing to a monastery, Dean and Chapter, college or other spiritual body the *tithes and profits of a parish. It was then usually necessary to endow and appoint a *vicar or substitute to perform the parochial duties, and this was made law by the Appropriation of Benefices Acts in 1391 and 1402 (15 Ric. II c. 6, 4 Hen. IV c. 12). However, monasteries with benefices for their table (ad mensam monachorum) or with a dispensation because the house was poor or the church was close, were permitted instead to license a curate, often one of their number, who had no endowment and could be recalled at any time. See also IMPROPRIATION.

R. Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, 1 (9th edn. rev. by R. *Phillimore, 1842), pp. 65–92, s.v.; and 2, pp. 55–55c, s.v. 'Curate'.

apron. The 'apron' which is part of the traditional distinctive dress of Anglican bishops, deans, and archdeacons is really a shortened form of the *cassock, extending to the knees; it is now seldom worn. Formerly this dress was widely worn on the Continent, but in the 19th cent. its use was very much restricted by *Pius IX.

apse. A semicircular or polygonal E. end to a chancel. This was a universal feature of the primitive *basilican type of church architecture, adapted from the model of Roman public buildings. The altar stood on the chord of the apse, with the seats of the bishop and presbyters in the curved space behind. It was introduced into England by St *Augustine's mission, but the Celtic square-ended chancel continued to prevail. The Norman builders again favoured the apse, but in later building there was a general reversion to the indigenous square end, only a few examples of apsidal sanctuaries still remaining, e.g. at *Norwich Cathedral. See also BASILICA.

APUC ('Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom'). A society formed in 1857 in F. G. *Lee's rooms to further the cause of reunion, esp. between the C of E and Rome. Its members were required to say daily the prayer for the unity of the Church in the Latin Missal. It owed its foundation chiefly to A. L. M. Phillipps *de Lisle, a leading RC layman, who had earlier (*c.*1838) established a 'Society for Prayers for the Conversion of England'; and it included Anglicans (among them A. P. *Forbes) and also some Orthodox. After 1864, when it was condemned by the *Holy Office RCs were compelled to withdraw from it. It was finally disbanded in 1921.

Members of the Association used two organs, The Union Newspaper (1857–62) and The Union Review (1862–75). B. [C.] and M. Pawley, Rome and Canterbury through Four Centuries (1974), pp. 187–97 (rev. edn. 1981, pp. 170–79). E. B. Stuart, 'Unjustly Condemned?: Roman Catholic Involvement in the APUC 1857–64', JEH 41 (1990), pp. 44–63. H. R. T. Brandreth, Dr. Lee of Lambeth: A Chapter in Parenthesis in the History of the Oxford Movement (1951), pp. 76–117.

Aquarians (Lat. Aquarii, from aqua, 'water'). A name given by *Philaster (Haer. 77) and *Augustine (Haer. 64) to a sect or sects which, for ascetic or other reasons, used water instead of wine in the Eucharist. They were sometimes known as 'Hydroparastatae' (Gk. Ὑδροπαραστάται, 'those who offer water').

P. Lebeau, SJ, Le Vin nouveau du Royaume (1966), pp. 142–84 ('La contestation aquarienne'). P. *Batiffol in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 2648–54, s.v. See also other works cited under WINE.

Aquaviva, Claudio (1534–1615), fifth General of the *Jesuits. The youngest son of the Duke of Atri, he studied law at Perugia and entered the Jesuit novitiate in 1567. Ordained in 1574, he became Provincial of Naples in 1576 and of Rome in 1579 and was elected General in 1581. His qualities of leadership helped to bring about the Society's consolidation, both in respect of its internal structures and its characteristic approaches to ministry. Under his rule its membership increased from *c.*5,000 to *c.*13,000. The famous 'Ratio Studiorum', outlining Jesuit teaching procedures, was completed, as well as a set of authoritative guidelines (or 'Directory') for the use of the Spiritual Exercises. Important norms regarding the spiritual life and training of Jesuits became established in the Society's law, and Aquaviva wrote two seminal letters addressed to all Jesuits on prayer (1599 and 1612). He also overcame a number of attempts to amend the Society's form of government. These were instigated by Spanish Jesuits, with the support on different occasions of *Philip II, the *Inquisition, and Popes *Sixtus V and *Clement VIII. The settlement which he achieved was decisive for the subsequent history of the Jesuits.

As General, Aquaviva had to govern and support various individuals and groups of Jesuits who encountered severe difficulties, including temporary exile from *France and *Venice and persecutions in England and *Japan. Jesuits were also involved in fierce theological controversies, notably Luis de *Molina on grace and free will and St Robert *Bellarmine over the temporal power of the Pope.

Works listed in Sommervogel, 1 (1890), cols. 480–91; 8 (1898), cols. 1669 f.; Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 129 f. A. Astráin, SJ, Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en la asistencia de España, vols. 3 (1910), pt. 2, and 4 (1913). W. V. Bangert, SJ, A History of the Society of Jesus (St Louis, 1972; 2nd edn., 1986), esp. pp. 97–107 and 110–13. J. de Guibert, SJ, La Spiritualité de la Compagnie de Jésus (posthumous; Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 4; Rome, 1953), pp. 219–37; Eng. tr. (Chicago, 1964), pp. 230–47. B. Schneider, SJ, 'Der Konflikt zwischen Claudius Aquaviva und Paul Hoffaeus', Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu, 26 (1957), pp. 3–56; 27 (1958), pp. 279–306. M. Rosa in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 1 (1960), pp. 168–78; B. Schneider, SJ, in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 89 f., both s.v. 'Acquaviva'; I. Iparraguirre, SJ, and M. de Certeau, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 979–94, s.v. 'Jésuites'.

Aquila, St. See PRISCILLA, ST.

Aquila, Version of. Greek version of the OT. It was the work of Aquila, a native of Sinope in Pontus, who lived under Hadrian (117–38). Acc. to St *Epiphanius (Mens. et Pond. 14), he was a relative of the Emperor and was converted to Christianity during a stay in *Jerusalem, but, having refused to give up his astrological studies, he was excommunicated and became a proselyte to Judaism. Having become a disciple of the *Rabbis, from whom he learned Hebrew and the rabbinical method of exegesis, he used this knowledge to make a revision of the *Septuagint, bringing it into line with the official Hebrew text. It was soon adopted by Greek-speaking Jews in preference to the LXX, which was used by the Christians. His translation, which was finished probably *c.*140, was extremely literal, attempting to reproduce individual Hebrew words and phrases exactly. This procedure frequently obscured the sense; but the fidelity of Aquila's version to the Hebrew original was admitted by the Fathers most competent to judge, such as *Origen and *Jerome.

Surviving fragments of Aquila's version ed. F. *Field in Origenis Hexaplorum quae supersunt (2 vols., Oxford, 1871–5); more recently discovered passages ed. G. *Mercati, Un palimpsesto ambrosiano de salmi esapli (Turin, 1896), and F. C. *Burkitt, Fragments of the Book of Kings according to the Translation of Aquila (1897, with pref. by C. Taylor; texts from the Cairo Geniza). D. Barthélemy, OP, Les Devanciers d'Aquila: Première publication intégrale du Texte des Fragments du Dodécaprophéton trouvés dans le désert de Juda (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 10; Leiden, 1963), with introd. M. Abrahams, Aquila's Greek Versions of the Hebrew Bible (1919); A. E. Silverstone, Aquila and Onkelos (Publications of the University of Manchester. Semitic Languages Series, no. 1, 1931; claims to identify Aquila with Onkelos). L. L. Grabbe, 'Aquila's Translation and Rabbinic Exegesis', Journal of Jewish Studies, 33 (1982), pp. 527–36. J. Reider, An Index to Aquila: Greek–Hebrew, Hebrew–Greek, Latin–Hebrew with the Syriac and Armenian Evidence, completed and rev. by N. Turner (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 12; 1966). H. B. *Swete, An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900), pp. 31–42; S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968), pp. 76–83. E. *Schürer, A History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 493–9. See also bibl. to HEXAPLA.

Aquileia, a village on the Adriatic coast which was an important city during the later Roman Empire, and long the seat of a W. Patriarchate. Acc. to a 5th-cent. legend it was evangelized by St *Mark, but in fact the beginnings of the Church cannot be traced beyond the 3rd cent. In 381 its bishop, Valerian, appears as Metropolitan of the Churches in the area, holding a synod of bishops directed against *Arianism, over which St *Ambrose presided. Under Valerian and his successor, *Chromatius, it was a centre of learning, and *Jerome (Chron. s.a. 374), who spent some years there, refers to the 'clerici' of Aquileia as a 'choir of the blessed' (chorus beatorum). In 452 the city was sacked by *Attila, but not destroyed. In the 6th cent. the bishops assumed the title of patriarch. During the dispute over the *Three Chapters (553) the patriarch withstood *Justinian and the Pope and was declared schismatic. Owing to the attacks of the Lombards in 568 the patriarch took refuge in Grado, which is now joined to the mainland by a causeway but was then an island in the lagoon; from the early 7th cent. there were two rival patriarchs, one at Grado ('new' Aquileia) which was eventually transferred to Venice in 1451, and one ('old' Aquileia) at Cormons (later Cividale). The territory of the latter was greatly enlarged N. of the Alps in the reign of *Charlemagne under the Patriarch *Paulinus. It survived with diminished territory, and came in 1420 under Venetian and in 1509 under Austrian domination. It was suppressed in 1751. The present basilica was reconstructed by the Patriarch Poppo (1019–42) on the site of one of the early 4th cent. Its floor, which was revealed by excavation in 1909, is covered with early 4th-cent. mosaics which are among the most remarkable survivals of early Christian art. There has been much speculation by scholars about the rite of Aquileia, but owing to the loss of early material nothing certain is known. The surviving books show only certain local uses.

J. B. M. de Rubeis, Monumenta Ecclesiae Aquileiensis commentario historico-chronologico-critico illustrata ('Argentinae' [either Venice or Verona], 1740). P. F. Kehr, Italia Pontificia, 7 (pt. 1; Berlin, 1923), pp. 8–71; (pt. 2; 1925), pp. 27–72. P. Paschini, Storia del Friuli (3 vols., 1934–6; 2nd edn., 2 vols., 1953–4). La basilica di Aquileia (ed. Comitato per le cerimonie celebrative del IX^e centenario della basilica; Bologna, 1933). G. Brusin, Aquileia e Grado: Guida storico-artistica (25th edn., Padua, 1964). Mostra di Codici Liturgici Aquileiesi (Udine, 1968). G. Cuscito, Cristianesimo antico ad Aquileia e in Istria (Fonti e Studi per la Storia della Venezia Giulia, 2nd ser. 3; 1977). Recent discoveries and theories are recorded in the journal Aquileia Nostra: Bolletino dell'Associazione Nazionale per Aquileia (Milan, 1930 ff.) and in the occasional pubs. Antichità Altoadriatiche (Udine, 1972 ff.), of which vol. 11 is S. Piussi, Bibliografia Aquileiese (1978), with index to other vols. in the series. P. L. Zovatto in Reallexikon zur Byzantinischen Kunst, ed. K. Wessel, 1 (1966), pp. 293–306; H. Schmidinger in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 1 (1980), cols. 827 f., both s.v.

Aquinas, St Thomas. See THOMAS AQUINAS, ST.

Arabic Versions of the Bible. There are conflicting traditions about the earliest attempts to translate substantial portions of the Bible into Arabic, but it is clear that it was only after the *Koran had made Arabic into a literary language and the conquests of *Islam had turned large parts of Christian Syria and Egypt into Arabic-speaking areas that the need for translations of Scripture into Arabic was felt. By the 9th cent. there were a number of Arabic versions of the NT, in some cases made directly from the Greek, in others through the *Syriac and *Coptic (*Bohairic) versions; the oldest surviving MS (Vaticanus arabicus 13, dated 8th or possibly early 9th cent.) is a translation from the Syriac *Peshitta. This MS originally also contained the Psalter. Fragments of an Arabic translation of the Psalter (in Greek letters, hence obviously intended for *Melchites) are dated in the 8th cent. Subsequent translations of Books of the OT were made from Greek, Syriac, and Hebrew (notably the version of Saadia ben Joseph ha-Gaon, d. 942). The Arabic OT text printed in the Paris *Polyglot reflects this variety; Saadia's version is used for the Pentateuch, but in other Books the Arabic was translated from Greek or Syriac. In the 13th cent. two revisions of the Arabic NT were sponsored by the Patriarchate of *Alexandria; the latter of these, the so-called 'Alexandrian Vulgate', is that followed in modern printed editions.

The earliest text to be pr. was Psalms, incl. in the Polyglot Psalter pub. at Genoa in 1516. The NT was ed. by T. Erpenius at Leiden in 1616. Crit. edn. of the Gospels by P. A. de *Lagarde (Leipzig, 1864), with valuable introd. B. Violet, 'Ein zweisprächiges Psalmenfragment aus Damascus', Orientalistische Literatur-Zeitung, 4 (1901), cols. 384–403, 425–41, 475–88. This fragment and selected other texts, with glossary, ed. P. [E.] Kahle, Die arabischen Bibelübersetzungen (Leipzig, 1904). I. Guidi, 'Le traduzioni degli evangelii in arabo e in etiopico', Atti della R. Accademia dei Lincei, 4th ser., Classe di Scienze Morali, Storiche et Filologiche, 4. 1 (1888), pp. 5–37. B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 257–68. S. H. Griffith, 'The Gospel in Arabic: An Inquiry into its Appearance in the First Abbasid Century', OC 69 (1985), pp. 126–67. G. Graf, Geschichte der christlichen arabischen Literatur, 1 (ST 118; 1944), pp. 85–185. G. Mink and S. P. Brock in TRE 6 (1980), pp. 207–11, s.v. 'Bibelübersetzungen'. For literature on the Arabic version of the Diatessaron, see DIATESSARON.

Aramaic. The Semitic language which was the vernacular in Palestine in the time of Christ, and which He Himself almost certainly used. It had long been spoken by the Aramaeans in N. Syria and in Mesopotamia, and came to be used increasingly throughout the Levant for commercial and diplomatic transactions (cf. 2 Kgs. 18: 26). In later OT times it more and more ousted Hebrew as the language of Palestine. A few sections of the OT itself (Ezra 4: 8–6: 18, 7: 12–26; Dan. 2: 4–7: 28; Jer. 10: 11) are written in Aramaic and by NT times Hebrew was cultivated mainly by the learned. To satisfy the needs of the people, the Hebrew Scriptures were issued in the form of Aramaic paraphrases, known as the *Targums. *Syriac (q.v.) and Mandaic are both dialects of Aramaic, each with its own script. In the NT there are many places where the Greek reflects the Aramaic modes of thought or background of the writers, and occasionally Aramaic words are preserved, e.g. Mk. 5: 41, 7: 34, 15: 34. It is very unlikely, however, that any parts of the NT are direct translations from Aramaic (as scholars such as C. F. *Burney and C. C. Torrey claimed). See also CHALDEE.

C. Brockelmann, Grundriss der vergleichenden Grammatik der semitischen Sprachen (2 vols., 1908–13); F. Rosenthal, Die aramaistische Forschung seit Theodor Nöldekes Veröffentlichungen (1939); id., A Grammar of Biblical Aramaic (Porta Linguarum Orientalium, NS 5; 1961); id. (ed.), An Aramaic Handbook (2 parts in 4; ibid. 10; 1967). H. Bauer and P. Leander, Grammatik des Biblisch-Aramäischen (1927). M. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts (Oxford, 1946; 3rd edn., 1967). W. B. Stevenson, Grammar of Palestinian Jewish Aramaic (1924; 2nd edn., 1962); G. *Dalman, Grammatik des jüdisch-palästinischen Aramäisch (1894; 2nd edn., rev., 1905); id., Die Worte Jesu (1898; 2nd edn., 1930). F. Schulthess and E. Littmann, Grammatik des christlich-palästinischen Aramäisch (1924). E. Y. Kutscher, Hebrew and Aramaic Studies (Jerusalem, 1977), pp. 90–155; J. C. Greenfield, 'Aramaic and its Dialects', in H. H. Paper (ed.), Jewish Languages . . . : Proceedings of Regional Conferences of the Association for Jewish Studies held at the University of Michigan and New York University in March April 1975 (Cambridge, Mass., 1978), pp. 29–43; id., 'The Language of Palestine, 200 B.C.E.–200 C.E.', ibid., pp. 143–54. J. A. Fitzmyer, SJ, A Wandering Aramean (Society of Biblical Literature, Monograph Series, 25; 1979). A. Dupont-Sommer, Les Araméens (1949). For full bibl. H. J. W. Drijvers in J. H. Hospers (ed.), A Basic Bibliography for the Study of the Semitic Languages, 1 (Leiden, 1973), pp. 283–335. R. Degen and H. P. Rüger in TRE 3 (1978), pp. 599–610, s.v. 'Aramäisch, I–II'.

Arator (6th cent.), Christian Latin poet. Born (perhaps *c.*490) in Liguria, he received his early education in Milan, where he was befriended by *Ennodius, and subsequently studied the classics in *Ravenna. He went as imperial ambassador to Dalmatia in 526 and was ultimately comes privatarum under the Emp. Athalaric. He left the imperial service to become a subdeacon in Rome, where he enjoyed a close association with Pope *Vigilius (537–55). At Rome he completed his major work, the De actibus apostolorum, a hexametrical version of the Book of Acts, which was read publicly in the church of San Pietro in Vincoli at *Rome in 544. The poem is not simply a metrical paraphrase, in the manner of *Juvencus, but an exegetical elaboration of the symbolic meaning in the biblical narrative. Although the poem is difficult, it was widely studied in the early Middle Ages, being eclipsed as a curriculum text only in the 12th cent. The date of his death is unknown.

Works (repr. from 1769 edn.) in J. P. Migne, PL 68. 63–252; crit. edn. by A. P. McKinlay (CSEL 72; 1951). Id., Arator: The Codices (Mediaeval Academy of America, publication 43; Cambridge, Mass., 1942); G. R. Wieland, The Latin Glosses on Arator and Prudentius in Cambridge University Library MS Gg. 5. 35 (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 61; Toronto, 1983). R. Hillier, Arator on the Acts of the Apostles (Oxford Early Christian Studies, 1993). Manitius, 1, pp. 162–7. K. Thraede, 'Arator', Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, 4 (1961), pp. 187–96.

Arbuthnott, Missal of. A Scottish MS missal dated 1491, now in the Paisley Museum. It survives complete, on 244 leaves. It corresponds closely with the typical edition of 1498 of the *Sarum Missal, with differences chiefly in the *Propers for Saints. It also contains some *Sequences not found in the English pre-Reformation uses. As the only surviving specimen of the medieval Scottish use, the MS is of considerable interest.

Ed. G. H. *Forbes, Liber Ecclesie Beati Terrenani de Arbuthnott (Burntisland, 1864).

archaeology, Christian. In ancient Greek writers the word ἀρχαιολογία (lit. 'discourse on things ancient') meant antiquarian lore, as distinct from the narrative history of persons and events. Its Latin equivalent, antiquitates, yielded the English word 'antiquities' which long served to define a branch of historical inquiry that concerned itself with materials and records of all kinds, in so far as they could be used to illustrate the condition of earlier societies. The classic English example of this type of research, in the field of ecclesiastical history, is J. *Bingham's Antiquities of the Christian Church (1708–22), 'being an essay upon the ancient usages and customs of the primitive Church' based mainly on literary evidence. The specialized use of the word 'archaeologia' or its vernacular equivalent to mean a science of the monuments (as opposed to the documents) of antiquity does not appear to have gained currency until the early 19th cent. The expression 'Christian archaeology' was popularized by G. B. *de Rossi's Bullettino di Archeologia Cristiana, first published in 1863. As traditionally defined, Christian archaeology is a historical science of the monuments of early Christianity, the function of which is 'to make known as fully as possible the thought and religious life of Christian antiquity' (G. P. Kirsch). In this context, 'Christian antiquity' is usually taken to mean the first six cents. of the Christian era.

Although evidence of an interest in early Christian monuments (esp. those of *Rome and the Holy Land) can be found in all periods from the 4th cent. onwards, the beginnings of Christian archaeology may be associated with the first exploration of the Roman *catacombs in the late 16th and early 17th cent., the results of which appear most clearly in A. *Bosio's Roma sotterranea (1632). Much of this early work is characterized by a spirit of *Counter-Reformation apologetic, it then being widely believed that archaeological evidence could demonstrate the primitive origins of Catholic observances (e.g. the cult of *relics). Rome, and the catacombs in particular, continued to provide the main focus of Christian archaeology throughout the following two and a half cents., a state of affairs that is reflected in the foundation of the Pontificia Commissione di Archeologia Sacra under Pope *Pius IX in 1852 (to be followed by the creation of the Pontificio Istituto di Archeologia Cristiana in 1925) and in the magisterial works of G. B. de Rossi. The latter, whose Roma sotterranea cristiana began to appear in 1864, is generally credited with establishing Christian archaeology as a modern scientific discipline. His work was carried on by J. Wilpert (1857–1944), who assembled major corpora of Roman frescoes, mosaics, and early Christian *sarcophagi. See also ROME, CHURCHES OF, and ST PETER'S, ROME.

The history of Christian archaeology since the beginning of the 20th cent. has been marked by three major developments, each of which may be seen as freeing the science from earlier constraints. (1) The attention of researchers has been drawn increasingly to areas of early Christian civilization outside Rome; nowadays the sphere of Christian archaeology encompasses the whole of the ancient Mediterranean world, as well as a number of adjacent regions that were either touched by early Christianity or whose native traditions help account for particular features of Christian material culture. (2) The erosion of long-standing prejudices against the intellectual and artistic achievements of the period now known as 'late antiquity' (2nd–7th cent. AD) has led to a new interest, shared by secular and ecclesiastical historians alike, in the relationship between early Christianity and classical culture. (3) Partly as a result of the two preceding developments, the traditional link between Christian archaeology and historical theology has been considerably weakened, to the extent that some scholars now question the viability of a specifically 'Christian' archaeology, while others favour the concept of a combined 'late antique, early Christian and early medieval archaeology' (P. Testini). A further trend, particularly noticeable in Britain in recent years, has been towards the excavation and scientific study of Christian sites of the medieval period.

The techniques of Christian archaeology (survey, excavation, recording, dating, interpretation, and reconstruction) are essentially the same as those employed in other fields of archaeological science. The main classes of early Christian monuments are *cemeteries, buildings (chiefly churches, *baptisteries, and *monasteries but also, on occasion, private houses; see DURA EUROPOS), sculpture, paintings, mosaic, textiles, liturgical apparatus, together with such objects as glass, *lamps, medals, and *rings. Epigraphy, the study of inscriptions, is a special branch of Christian archaeology. Where buildings and artefacts are studied for their aesthetic qualities, they form the subject-matter of a history of Christian architecture and art, an important part of which is concerned with the pedigree of representational themes (*iconography).

While the correct interpretation of the material finds made by Christian archaeologists regularly depends on a thorough understanding of the relevant literary evidence (including that of papyri; see PAPYROLOGY), archaeological research also provides much information on the early history of the Church that could never be obtained from the literary record alone. This is particularly so with regard to the lives of members of the lower orders of Christian society and the ordinary routine of Christian observance. In view of the improbability of any major future increase in our literary documentation, it is indeed likely that 'for the year-to-year growth of his subject the Church historian will continue to look to the archaeologist' (W. H. C. Frend).

G. P. Kirsch, 'L'Archeologia cristiana, suo carattere proprio e suo metodo scientifico. Prolusione per l'inaugurazione del Pont. Istituto di Archeologia Cristiana', Rivista di Archeologia Cristiana, 4 (1927), pp. 49–57; G. Ferretto, Note Storico-Bibliografiche di Archeologia Cristiana (Vatican City, 1942); P. Testini, Archeologia Cristiana: Nozioni generali dalle origini alla fine del sec. VI [1958]; R. Krautheimer, Early Christian and Byzantine Architecture (Pelican History of Art, 1965); A. Grabar, Le premier art chrétien (200–395) ([1966]; Eng. tr. 1967); C. Andresen, Einführung in die Christliche Archäologie (Die Kirche in ihrer Geschichte, 1.B. 1; Göttingen, 1971); K. Weitzmann (ed.), Age of Spirituality: Late Antique and Early Christian Art, Third to Seventh Century. Catalogue of the exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, November 19, 1977, through February 12, 1978 (New York [1979]); W. Rodwell, The Archaeology of the English Church (1981); [A.] C. Thomas, Christianity in Roman Britain to AD 500 (1981); P. Testini, 'L'"Archaeologia Cristiana". Quale disciplina oggi?', in Atti del V Congresso Nazionale di Archeologia Cristiana . . . 22–29 settembre 1979, 1 (1982), pp. 17–35; F. W. Deichmann, Einführung in die Christliche Archäologie (Darmstadt, 1983); W. Wischmeyer, 'Perspektiven frühchristlicher Kunst für die Geschichte der Kirche', RQ 79 (1984), pp. 145–62; H. R. Seeliger, 'Christliche Archäologie oder spätantike Kunstgeschichte? Aktuelle Grundlagenfragen aus der Sicht der Kirchengeschichte', Rivista di Archeologia Cristiana, 61 (1985), pp. 167–87; W. H. C. Frend, 'Archaeology and patristic studies', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 18, pt. 1 (Kalamazoo, Mich., 1985), pp. 9–21; The Archaeology of Early Christianity: A History (1996). W. Smith and S. Cheetham, Dictionary of Christian Antiquities (2 vols., 1875–80); F. *Cabrol, OSB, and H. *Leclercq, OSB, Dictionnaire d'archéologie chrétienne et de liturgie (15 vols., 1907–53); A. Baudrillart and others (eds.), Dictionnaire d'histoire et de géographie ecclésiastiques (1912 ff.); T. Klauser and others (eds.), Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum (1950 ff.). The progress of Christian archaeology may be followed in periodicals such as Römische Quartalschrift (1887 ff.), Revista di Archeologia Cristiana (1924 ff.), Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum (1958 ff.) and in the pub. proceedings of the Congresso Internazionale di Archeologia Cristiana (since the 3rd Congress, of 1932, pub. in the series Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 1934 ff.). J. Quasten in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 761–8.

archangel (Gk. ἀρχάγγελος, 'chief angel'). In the NT the word occurs only twice, at Jude v. 9, where *Michael is referred to as 'the archangel', and at 1 Thess. 4: 16 ('the voice of the archangel'). In Christian tradition *Gabriel and *Raphael are also commonly reckoned with Michael among the archangels. Acc. to traditional angelology, as expounded by *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, the archangels belong to the third and lowest hierarchy of the angelic beings. See also ANGEL.

archbishop (Gk. ἀρχιεπίσκοπος). In the 4th and 5th cents. the title was applied to the *patriarchs and holders of other outstanding sees. Later its use was extended to *metropolitans (or *primates) having jurisdiction over an ecclesiastical province. In the Latin Church it has now almost become a title of honour for a bishop of a distinguished see.

A. S. Popek, The Rights and Obligations of Metropolitans (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, 260; 1947). See also bibl. to BISHOP.

archdeacon. A cleric having a defined administrative authority delegated to him by the bishop in the whole or part of the diocese. The territory assigned to him is known as an archdeaconry and gives him a territorial title, e.g. 'Archdeacon of Lindsey'. In the C of E and other Churches of the Anglican Communion an archdeacon is styled 'Venerable'. The duties of archdeacons vary widely but they usually include a general disciplinary supervision of the clergy of their archdeaconry and a more particular care over the temporal administration of its ecclesiastical property. Thus they usually *induct parish priests to new benefices and admit *churchwardens to their offices. The Anglican *Ordinal presupposes that among their functions is the examination and presentation of candidates for *Ordination. By the 1969 *Canons (can. C 22) they are required to hold annual visitations within their archdeaconry. Originally, as the name implies, an archdeacon was merely the chief of the *deacons who assisted diocesan bishops in their work. They were in deacon's orders and gradually acquired what was almost a right of succession to the episcopal throne. The transition from this to the present position of archdeacons was accomplished by the 9th cent. but the steps by which it came about are not clear. In England since 1662 an archdeacon must be in priest's orders, and since 1840 must have been so for six years.

J. *Bingham, Origines Ecclesiasticae, Bk. 2, ch. 21 (1708), pp. 287–301. A. Gréa, 'Essai historique sur les archidiacres', Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, 12 (1851), pp. 39–67 and 215–47; F. X. Glasschröder, 'Zur Geschichte des Archidiakonates', in S. Ehses (ed.), Festschrift zum elfhundertjährigen Jubiläum des Deutschen Campo in Rom (1897), pp 139–49. A. H. Thompson, 'Diocesan Organization in the Middle Ages. Archdeacons and Rural Deans', Proceedings of the British Academy, 29 (1943), pp. 153–94, esp. pp. 153–84. R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, 1 (2nd edn. by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), esp. pp. 194–207 (see also index); Halsbury's Laws of England (4th edn.), 14 (1975), pp. 240–4 (paras. 496–502). R. Peters, Oculus Episcopi: Administration in the Archdeaconry of St Albans 1580–1625 (Manchester, 1963). J. Addy, The Archdeacon and Ecclesiastical Discipline in Yorkshire 1598–1714: The Clergy and the Churchwardens (St Anthony's Hall Publications, 24; York, 1963). J. P. Kirsch in CE 1 (1907), pp. 693 f., s.v. E. W. Watson in DECH, pp. 18–21, s.v. A. Amanieu in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 948–1004, s.v. 'Archidiacre', with extensive bibl.; P. Palazzini in EC 4 (1950), cols. 1538–44, s.v. 'Diacono e Arcidiacono', pt. 4.

archdiocese. A diocese of which the holder is ex officio *archbishop, e.g. *Canterbury. The word is used esp. of RC archdioceses, e.g. *Westminister.

Arches Court of Canterbury. The Court of the province of *Canterbury which formerly met in *Bow Church ('S. Maria de Arcubus'). Originally it was presided over by the Archbishop's *Official Principal, but the office is now combined with that of the 'Dean of the Arches' (the judge of the Archbishop's 'Court of Peculiars' which sat in the same church). Since the reorganization of ecclesiastical courts by the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963, it now has no original jurisdiction, but hears appeals from the diocesan *Consistory Courts within the province of Canterbury in cases not involving doctrine, ritual, or ceremonial. Formerly an appeal from this Court lay only to the Pope; in 1534, by the Act for the Submission of the Clergy and the Restraint of Appeals, this was transferred to the King in Chancery. There is now no appeal except in causes of *faculty, which are heard by the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Very few medieval records of the Court are known; those from the *Restoration to 1914, with a few exceptions, are catalogued in M. D. Slatter, Lists of the Records of the Court of Arches deposited for Temporary Safe Keeping in the Bodleian Library in 1941 (1951; not pub. but widely circulated). For the later records, see also J. Houston, Index of Cases in the Records of the Court of Arches at Lambeth Palace Library, 1660–1913 (Index Library, 85; 1972). I. J. Churchill, Canterbury Administration (2 vols., 1933), 1, pp. 424–69, and 2, App. 1, pp. 186–210. M. D. Slatter, 'The Records of the Court of Arches', JEH 4 (1953), pp. 139–53; M. Barber, 'Records of the Court of Arches in Lambeth Palace Library', Ecclesiastical Law Journal, 3 (1995) pp. 10–19. See also bibl. to DEAN OF THE ARCHES.

archimandrite (Gk. ἀρχιμανδρίτης, 'the ruler of a mandra or fold'). This title, which has been in use in the E. Church from the 4th cent., was used originally in two senses: (1) a monastic superior, equivalent to the Greek term '*hegumenos' and to the W. term '*abbot'; (2) the superior of a group of several monasteries. Thus in 6th-cent. Palestine there were two archimandrites of this type, one charged with the supervision of all the *coenobitic houses, and the other with that of the hermits. In the Orthodox Church today it is used most frequently as a title of honour for an unmarried priest, who need not necessarily be the head of a community.

J. Pargoire in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 2739–61, s.v.

archpriest. An ecclesiastic in priest's orders who occupies a position of pre-eminence among other priests. From the early 5th cent. the title was applied to the senior presbyter of a city, either by years or appointment, who performed many of the bishop's liturgical and governmental functions in his absence or during a vacancy. In later times, while the *archdeacon had become responsible for the governmental work of the bishop, the archpriest continued to perform the bishop's sacerdotal duties in his absence. Though there is some doubt as to which was originally superior, by the 13th cent. the archdeacon had vindicated his position. Gradually, except at *Rome, most of the work of both these officials during a vacancy was taken over by the *Vicar General. In some Continental cathedrals the archpriest survives as a capitular dignitary.

As Christianity spread in the 4th cent. from the cities to the countryside, the title was also given, esp. in Gaul, to the cleric who presided over the groups of parishes which united for the principal Sunday Mass and other functions previously performed by the bishop. In this sense the word is first found in the Second Council of Tours (576). With the formation of separate parishes the importance of the archpriest declined, and most of his duties were taken over by the rural dean. Acc. to the 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici (can. 553) the modern *dean (or vicar forane) is now sometimes called an archpriest. The title was also given to the superior appointed by the Pope to govern the secular priests sent to England from foreign seminaries between 1598 and 1621 (see following entry).

In the Orthodox Church the title is still one of honour, which may or may not carry any specific function; it is borne by senior married priests and is the highest rank they can attain.

A. Amanieu in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 1004–26, s.v. 'Archiprêtre', with extensive bibl.

Archpriest Controversy. The dispute between the pro-*Jesuit and anti-Jesuit RC clergy in England which followed the death of Card. W. *Allen in 1594. For details, see APPELLANTS (1) and BLACKWELL, G.

arcosolium. An arched burial niche of the Roman period, built or excavated either above or below ground. The word is used esp. of those dug from c. AD 250 in the walls of galleries and cubicula in the catacombs. Bodies were placed in one or more loculi cut into the niche, or, esp. in Sicily, in a receding series of floor graves. They were also sometimes placed on or under a stone slab (mensa) which divided the niche horizontally. In some cases a stone *sarcophagus (solium) was used; and, in the more elaborate arcosolia, esp. those of popes and *martyrs, the mensae sometimes served as altars. Arcosolia often have rich decorations and interesting painting, although many have been damaged by later burials.

G. B. *de Rossi, La Roma sotterranea cristiana, esp. 3 (1877), pp. 418–20 and 490–3. J. M. C. Toynbee Death and Burial in the Roman World [1971], pp. 134 f., 138, 188–90, 200, 209–12, 237, and 242–4. J. Stevenson, The Catacombs [1978], pp. 18 f., 27, 66, 80, 131 f., and 140 f. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 2774–87, s.v., with full refs.

area bishop. In the C of E, a common, but unofficial, designation of a *suffragan bishop to whom certain powers have been legally delegated by the diocesan bishop when a diocese has been divided into areas under the Dioceses Measure 1978.

Areopagite, the. The mystical writer, *Dionysius (6) (? 5th cent.), so named from a wrong identification with the Dionysius who was converted by St *Paul's speech on the *Areopagus (Acts 17: 34).

Areopagus (Gk., Ἄρειος πάγος, 'Mars' Hill'), a spur jutting out and separated by a short saddle from the western end of the Acropolis, Athens, prob. so called from a myth that Mars had here cleared himself of the murder of Halirrhothius, the son of Neptune. The name Areopagus was also applied to an oligarchical council which, from very early times, met on the hill. Its functions appear to have been mainly judicial (esp. trials for homicide), though at times it endeavoured to exert political influence. Under the Roman Empire it seems to have been increasingly concerned with religious matters. It is not entirely clear whether, when St *Paul was brought to the Areopagus to explain his 'new teaching' (Acts 17: 19), it was before the official court or whether the place was merely chosen as convenient for a meeting. The language of Acts suggests the latter view, though a marginal note in some MSS indicates the other alternative, which was that adopted by St *Chrysostom. Traces of ancient stone seats on the Areopagus are still visible.

B. Keil, Beiträge zur Geschichte des Areopags (Ber. (Sächs.), 71. 8; 1920). W. S. Ferguson, 'Researches in Athenian and Delian Documents III', Klio, 9 (1909), pp. 304–40, remarks on the Council, pp. 325–30. W. M. *Ramsay, St Paul the Traveller and Roman Citizen (1895), pp. 243–9, with note p. 260; B. Gärtner, The Areopagus Speech and Natural Revelation (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, 21; 1955), with extensive bibl.; T. D. Barnes, 'An Apostle on Trial', JTS NS 20 (1969), pp. 407–19; C. J. Hemer, 'Paul at Athens: a topographical note', New Testament Studies, 20 (1973–4), pp. 341–50. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 3040–6, s.v. 'Athènes' (§ 2). See also comm. to Acts, cited s.v.

Argentina, Christianity in. Argentina, originally a Spanish colony, obtained its complete independence in 1816 after the revolution of 1810. The first missionaries, who arrived in 1539, were *Franciscans, followed by the *Jesuits some 40 years later. The RC Church claims a membership of 25 million—over 90 per cent of the population—organized in 54 dioceses and 12 provinces. The State religion has always been RC (until 1994 the president of the republic had to be of that faith), but there is complete religious toleration. Mass attendance is unusually small for Latin America and there is a grave shortage of priests. There is a large body of strongly *anticlerical feeling in the country. The Protestant Churches, who began missionary work in the 19th cent., constitute just under 3 per cent of the population. Of these the *Pentecostals form the largest group, though they are less numerous than elsewhere in Latin America. The *Lutheran Church has 100,000 members, mainly immigrants from Germany and Scandinavia, while the *Baptist Churches have strong connections with the Southern Baptist Convention of the USA. The *Presbyterian and *Methodist Churches are small. There are two Anglican dioceses, with about 15,000 members, in the Province of the Southern Cone of America (created in 1983).

There is much relevant material (up to 1852) in V. F. López, Historia de la República Argentina (10 vols., Buenos Aires, 1883–93; new edn., 1911), and P. Denis, La République Argentine (1920; Eng. tr., 1922), passim. R. Levene, Lecciones de historia argentina (11th edn., 2 vols., Buenos Aires, 1928), esp. ch. 14 (Eng. tr., The Inter-American Historical Series, 1; Chapel Hill, NC, 1937, pp. 148–56). J. C. Zuretti, Historia eclesiástica argentina (Buenos Aires, 1945); id., Nueva historia eclesiástica argentina, del Concilio de Trento al Vaticano II (ibid., 1972). E. Amato, La Iglesia en Argentina (Estudios Socio-Religiosos Latino-Americanos, 5(2); Brussels, Bogatá, and Buenos Aires, 1965). J. L. Mecham, Church and State in Latin America: A History of Politico-Ecclesiastical Relations (Chapel Hill, NC, 1934), pp. 275–303; 2nd edn. (1966), pp. 225–51. E. F. Every, The Anglican Church in South America (1915), pp. 17–40. T. [R.] Beeson and J. Pearce, A Vision of Hope: The Churches and Change in Latin America (1984), pp. 100–22, esp. pp. 117–22. G. Furlong in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 779–85, s.v.

Arianism. The principal heresy which denied the full Divinity of Jesus Christ, so called after its author, *Arius (q.v.).

Arius appears to have held that the Son of God was not eternal but created before the ages by the Father from nothing as an instrument for the creation of the world; He was therefore not God by nature, but a creature, and so susceptible of change, even though different from all other creatures in being the one direct creation of God; His dignity as Son of God was bestowed on Him by the Father on account of his foreseen abiding righteousness. The Arian movement included many who were sympathetic to the approach of Arius, without themselves agreeing with every aspect of his teaching. Earlier scholars tended to see this teaching as an adulteration of Christian faith by essentially pagan philosophical concerns. More recent writers have argued that a major objective of the Arians was to distinguish the Divinity of the Father from that of the Son in order to express the *Incarnation of Christ in a way which did not ascribe the limitations of the Incarnate Son to the full Divinity which they attributed uniquely to the Father.

The teaching of Arius, though condemned by his bishop *Alexander at a synod at *Alexandria (*c.*320), continued to spread and to agitate the masses, until the Emp. *Constantine, anxious for the peace of the newly unified Empire, called a General Council at *Nicaea, which met in 325. There the opponents of Arianism, largely under the spiritual leadership of St *Athanasius, then a deacon at Alexandria, defined the Catholic faith in the coeternity and coequality of the Father and the Son, using the famous term '*homoousios' to express their consubstantiality, while Arius and some bishops who supported him, among them *Eusebius of Nicomedia, were banished. Constantine, at first an ardent promoter of the Nicene settlement, soon began to waver. In 328 the influential Eusebius of Nicomedia and the other exiled bishops were permitted to return and at once began to intrigue against the Nicene party. *Eustathius of Antioch was deposed and banished in 330, and Athanasius, since 328 Bp. of Alexandria, had to go into exile to Trier in 336. Arius himself was to be recognized as orthodox and to be received back into the Church in the same year, when his sudden death prevented his reinstatement.

After the death of Constantine (337), Athanasius and some other Nicene bishops returned to their dioceses. But the new Emperor of the E., Constantius, soon openly embraced Arianism, the extent of his support being restrained only by his fear of his brother Constans, the ruler of the W., who protected the Catholics. In 339 Athanasius was again deprived of his see and fled to Rome, where his orthodoxy was recognized by a Council held in 341. In the same year a Council was held at *Antioch by the bishops of the E. Four different statements of faith are associated with this Council. Their general tenor is to repudiate the teaching of Arius, while also avoiding any use of the term 'homoousios'. To restore peace to the Empire another Council was convoked by both Emperors at *Sardica in 343, which, however, the Eusebian bishops left for fear of being defeated. At Sardica Athanasius was again recognized as the rightful Bp. of Alexandria and several Arian bishops were deposed.

A short period of peace followed after Athanasius had returned to Alexandria in 346, but with the death of Constans in 350, which left Constantius sole ruler, new persecutions began for the Catholics. Not only was Athanasius exiled once more, but so also were many W. bishops, including Pope *Liberius and St *Hilary of Poitiers. In the course of the ensuing debates, three major groups emerged. The extreme party, usually called '*Anomoeans' (from ἀνόμοιος, 'dissimilar') and known in modern times also as 'Neo-Arians', pressed the differences between the Father and Son; the middle party, called '*Homoeans' (from ὅμοιος, 'similar'), aimed at avoiding dogmatic precision as far as possible by affirming that the Son is similar to the Father 'acc. to the Scriptures'; while a third group, the '*Semi-Arians' (q.v.), favoured the term 'homoiousios' as expressing both the similarity and the distinction between the first Two Persons of the Trinity. These different views were laid down in further formulas of faith. Among them a Homoean formula, drawn up at a Council of *Sirmium (357), was accepted by a double Council of E. and W. bishops who met at Seleucia and *Ariminum respectively in 359. It was of this year that St *Jerome wrote his well-known comment; 'The whole world groaned and marvelled to find itself Arian' (Dial. adv. Lucif. 19; PL 23. 172C).

This crowning victory of Arianism was the turning-point of its history, since it frightened the Semi-Arians into the ranks of orthodoxy. With the death of Constantius (361) it lost its chief supporter; Athanasius returned to Alexandria and, in 362, held a Council at which a more conciliatory approach helped to reunite a wide spectrum of the opponents of Arianism. In the W. Arius had little direct influence. But a more straightforwardly biblical form of *subordinationism was a powerful force there (esp. in Illyria) until the time of the Emp. Valentian. In the E. the triumph of orthodoxy was retarded by the Emp. Valens. Athanasius had died in 373; but the brilliant theological expositions of the Nicene faith by the three Cappadocians, St *Basil, St *Gregory of Nazianzus, and St *Gregory of Nyssa, prepared the way for the final victory of orthodoxy under the Emp. *Theodosius at the Council of *Constantinople in 381. After being driven from the Empire, Arianism retained a foothold among the Teutonic tribes, esp. through *Ulphilas' *Gothic Bible and liturgy, which prevented their rapid assimilation with their Catholic subjects when they occupied the greater part of the W. Empire and caused persecution of Catholics in N. Africa and Spain. The conversion of the Franks to Catholicism (496) was the prelude to the gradual disappearance of Arianism from the religious creed of the Teutonic tribes.

The subject of necessity fills a central place in all the Church histories of the 4th cent. H. M. Gwatkin, Studies of Arianism (1882; 2nd edn., 1900); id., The Arian Controversy (1889). M. Simonetti, Studi sull'Arianesimo (Verba Seniorum, NS 5 [1965]); M. Meslin, Les Ariens d'Occident, 335–430 (Patristica Sorbonensia, 8; 1967). É. Boularand, L'Hérésie d'Arius et la 'Foi' de Nicée (1972 ff.). T. A. Kopecek, A History of Neo-Arianism (Patristic Monograph Series, 8; 2 vols., Philadelphia, 1979). R. Lorenz, Arius judaizans? Untersuchungen zur dogmengeschichtlichen Einordnung des Arius (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 31 [1979]). R. C. Gregg and D. E. Groh, Early Arianism: A View of Salvation (1981). R. C. Gregg (ed.), Arianism: Historical and Theological Reassessments (Patristic Monograph Series, 11; 1985). R. [D.] Williams, Arius: Heresy and Tradition (1987). R. P. C. Hanson, The Search for the Christian Doctrine of God: The Arian Controversy 318–381 (Edinburgh, 1988). H. C. Brennecke, Studien zur Geschichte der Homöer: Der Osten bis zum Ende der homöischen Reichskirche (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 73 [1988]). M. R. Barnes and D. H. Williams (eds.), Arianism after Arius (Edinburgh, 1993). M. F. Wiles, Archetypal Heresy: Arianism through the Centuries (Oxford, 1996). G. Bardy, Recherches sur S. Lucien d'Antioche et son école (1936). J. Gummerus, Die homöusianische Partei bis zum Tode des Konstantius (1900). A. Grillmeier, SJ, 'Die theologische und sprachliche Vorbereitung der christologischen Formel von Chalkedon', in id. and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, 1 (Würzburg, 1951), pp. 5–202; rev. Eng. tr. as Christ in Christian Tradition: From the Apostolic Age to Chalcedon (1965; 2nd edn., 1975). M. Wiles, 'In defence of Arius', JTS NS 13 (1962), pp. 339–47; G. C. Stead, 'The Platonism of Arius', ibid. 15 (1964), pp. 16–31. A. M. Ritter in TRE 3 (1978), pp. 692–719, s.v., with bibl.; M. Simonetti in DPAC, 1 (1983), cols. 337–45, s.v. 'Ario-Arianesimo'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), pp. 76–8. See also works cited under ATHANASIUS, ST, and HOMOOUSION.

Aridity or dryness. The term is used to refer either generally to a lack of conscious fervour and delight in the Christian life as a whole, or more specifically to a lack of fervour and delight in prayer and other spiritual exercises. Such a condition may be due either to a deliberate turning away from God or to factors outside a person's control. In the latter case, all spiritual writers agree that it provides an occasion to recall humbly one's own weakness and to appreciate that the service of God does not depend on felt consolations. Regular Christian practices should not be abandoned just because of a feeling of aridity. Different authorities assess the significance of aridity diversely: those who regard conscious joy in the Lord as a normal and desirable feature of the Christian life recommend various active ways of trying to escape from aridity, whereas others regard the lack of sensible devotion as a sign of God's purification of the soul and the readiness to do without consolations as a sign of spiritual maturity; other authorities treat the presence or absence of conscious fervour as a matter of complete indifference, with no effect on the practice of the Christian life.

The subject is treated in books on the spiritual life; see bibl. to PRAYER. R. Daeschler, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 845–55, s.v. 'Aridité'.

Ariel. A name used of *Jerusalem in Is. 29: 1. The most probable interpretation appears to be 'altar-hearth' (cf. Ezek. 43: 15 f.).

S. Feigin, 'The Meaning of Ariel', Journal of Biblical Literature, 39 (1920), pp. 131–7; W. F. Albright, 'The Babylonian Temple-Tower and the Altar of Burnt Offering', ibid., pp. 137–42; H. G. May, 'Ephod and Ariel', American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, 56 (1939), pp. 44–69, esp. pp. 52–69. See also comm. on ISAIAH and EZEKIEL.

Ariminum and Seleucia, Synods of. Two synods to which the Emp. Constantius summoned the bishops of the W. and E. respectively in 359 in an attempt to settle the *Arian dispute. That at Ariminum (Rimini) was much the larger of the two assemblies, and the great majority of its adherents were orthodox. The Arian minority, however, included a group of skilled diplomats, among them *Valens and *Ursacius, who succeeded in undoing the effect of the anti-Arian decision of the Council when it reached the Emperor. In consequence, under imperial pressure, the orthodox bishops at Ariminum, who had not dispersed, were induced to recant later in the year, and in the interest of peace to subscribe an Arianizing Creed, drawn up at Nice in Thrace.

At Seleucia, under the leadership of the *Anomoeans, Acacius and Eudoxius, the Creed of Nice was also accepted.

It was these and similar events that led St *Jerome to remark of the year 359 that 'the whole world groaned and marvelled to find itself Arian' ('ingemuit totus orbis et se Arianum esse miratus est', Dial. adv. Lucif. 19, PL 23. 172C).

Hardouin, 1 (1715), cols. 711–26; Mansi, 3 (1759), cols. 293–310 and 315–26. Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (2; 1907), pp. 929–55. Y.-M. Duval, 'La "manœuvre frauduleuse" de Rimini. A la recherche du Liber aduersus Vrsacium et Valentem', in Hilaire et son temps: Acts du Colloque de Poitiers 29 septembre—3 octobre 1968 (Études Augustiniennes, 1969), pp. 51–103. G. Bardy in Fliche and Martin, 3 (1936), pp. 161–9. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 21–4 (nos. 8582–90).

Aristeas, Letter of. A Jewish pseudepigraphic letter written in Greek which claims to have been written by one Aristeas, an official at the court of Ptolemy Philadelphus (285–247 BC). It contains a legend describing how the *Septuagint came to be miraculously written. Its composition has been variously dated between 200 BC and AD 33.

Crit. edns. of Gk. text by P. Wendland (Teub., Leipzig, 1900), H. St J. Thackeray in H. B. *Swete, An Introduction to the Old Testament in Greek (1900), pp. 499–574, and, with Fr. tr., by A. Pelletier, SJ (SC 89; 1962). Eng. trs. by H. St J. Thackeray (London, 1917) and M. Hadas (New York, 1951). H. G. Meecham, The Letter of Aristeas: A Linguistic Study with special reference to the Greek Bible (Manchester, 1935; with repr. of Thackeray's text). S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968), pp. 29–58; E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 677–87, with bibl. K. Müller in TRE 3 (1978), pp. 719–25, s.v. 'Aristeasbrief', with bibl.

Aristides (2nd cent.) of Athens, Christian philosopher and Apologist. Until recent times our only knowledge of him came from brief references in *Eusebius and St *Jerome. In 1878, however, part of his 'Apology' in an *Armenian translation was published at *Venice by the *Mechitarists; and, in spite of the incredulity of E. *Renan and others, its authenticity was established. In 1891 a Syriac translation of the whole work, discovered in 1889 on Mt *Sinai, was edited by J. R. *Harris; and, in an appendix, J. A. *Robinson gave reasons for believing that the original Greek, somewhat modified and expanded, was to be found in the apology for Christianity in the 'Lives of *Barlaam and Josaphat'. Acc. to Eusebius, Aristides delivered his Apology to the Emp. Hadrian at the same time as another Apologist, *Quadratus, that is, in 124. J. R. Harris, however, argued that these Apologies were in fact both addressed to Antoninus Pius (d. 161) early in his reign.

Aristides sought to defend the existence and eternity of God, and to show that Christians had a fuller understanding of His nature than either the barbarians, the Greeks, or the Jews, and that they alone live acc. to His precepts. Like *Justin and *Tatian, he retained the status and garb of a philosopher after his conversion. A sermon on Lk. 23: 43 has been ascribed to him, prob. wrongly.

Eusebius, HE 4. 3. 3, and Chron. ad a. 2140; Jerome, De vir. illustr. 20. Crit. edn. of Gk. text by J. Geffcken, Zwei griechische Apologeten (1907), pp. 1–96; other attempts at reconstruction of Gk. text by R. Seeberg (Erlangen, 1893); Syr. text ed. J. R. Harris, 'The Apology of Aristides on Behalf of the Christians', with appendix with Gk. text ed. J. A. Robinson, in Camb. Texts and Studies, 1 (1) (1891); Arm. frag. in G. B. *Pitra, Analecta Sacra, 4 (1883), pp. 6–10 and 282–6. A papyrus frag. of the Gk. text has also been pub. with Eng. tr. by H. J. M. Milne in JTS 25 (1924), pp. 73–7. Eng. tr. by D. M. Kay in ANCL. Additional vol. (1897), pp. 259–79. Ital. tr. of the Syriac, with full introd., by C. Vona (Lateranum, NS 16; 1950). W. C. van Unnik, 'Die Gotteslehre bei Aristides und in gnostischen Schriften', Theologische Zeitschrift, 17 (1961), pp. 166–74. Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 187–202; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 64 f.; J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 191–5. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 26–8 (nos. 1062–7), with bibl.

Aristion (1st cent.). Acc to *Papias, as reported by *Eusebius (HE 3. 39. 4), he was a primary authority, with the Presbyter *John, for the traditions about the Lord. He is certainly to be distinguished from *Aristo of Pella, whom Eusebius (4. 6. 3) cites as an authority for the *Bar Cochba revolt, though the two are identified by St *Maximus Confessor. In an *Armenian MS dated 986, [Mk.] 16: 9–20 (the concluding twelve verses of the Gospel in most texts) is attributed to 'the Presbyter Ariston'. But F. C. *Conybeare's theory that the MS preserves a genuine tradition which recognized Papias' Aristion as their real author has received little following.

F. C. Conybeare, 'Aristion the Author of the Last Twelve Verses of Mark', The Expositor, 4th ser. 8 (1893), pp. 241–54; id., 'On the Last Twelve Verses of St Mark's Gospel', ibid. 5th ser. 2 (1895), pp. 401–21; J. *Chapman, OSB, 'Aristion, author of the Ep. to the Hebrews', R. Bén. 22 (1905), pp. 50–64. Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 448 f. B. W. Bacon in DCG 1 (1906), pp. 114–18, and E. Peterson in EC 1 (1949), cols. 1908 f.

Aristo of Pella (*c.*140), early Christian *Apologist. His work has perished, but *Origen, in Contra Celsum (4. 52) mentions, without giving the author's name, a 'Disputation between Jason and Papiscus concerning Christ'; this work is attributed to Aristo by John of Scythopolis (in his Paraphrase on *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, ascribed to St Maximus the Confessor: PG 4. 421B). Jason, a baptized Jew, converts his fellow-Jew, Papiscus, by proving the fulfilment of the Messianic prophecies in Christ. Origen defends its allegorical interpretation of the OT against the mockeries of Celsus. Acc. to *Eusebius (HE 4. 6. 3), Aristo wrote an account of the destruction of *Jerusalem under Hadrian (135).

Fragments of the 'Disputation' quoted in the works of St *Jerome and Origen were pr. by H. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, 1 (2nd edn., Oxford, 1846), pp. 91–109; repr. (from 1st edn.) in J. P. Migne, PG 5. 1277–86; also ed. J. C. T. Otto, Corpus Apologetarum, 9 (Jena, 1872), pp. 349–63. CPG 1 (1983), p. 43 (no. 1101). Bardenhewer, 1 (2nd edn., 1913), pp. 202–6; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 62 and 554. E. Peterson in EC 1 (1949), cols. 1911 f., s.v.

Aristobulus, St. In Rom. 16: 10 St *Paul sent greeting to the 'household of Aristobulus' (τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοβούλου). Nothing further is known of this Aristobulus, unless he be the grandson of *Herod the Great and friend of the Emp. Claudius of this name. It is possible that he came to be considered a Christian merely because of his mention in the NT. Acc. to a Spanish tradition, he made his way to Britain in the second year of the reign of *Nero and finally became Bp. of Britonia (modern Mondoñedo) in Spain. Feast day, 30 or 31 Oct.

He has sometimes been identified with an Aristobulus who, acc. to the Gk. menologies, was one of the 70 disciples (Lk. 10: 1) and brother of St *Barnabas and whose daughter married St *Peter. This Aristobulus was believed to have been consecrated bishop by St Paul and to have organized a Church in Britain; but the story is without credible authority. He was apparently the Aristobulus, 'the disciple of the Apostles', named in the Roman *Martyrology. Feast day, 15 or 16 March.

Extr. on Aristobulus from Gk. Menology in AASS, Mart. 1 (1668), p. 869; cf. also ibid. 2 (1668), pp. 374–6, R. Aigrain in DHGE 4 (1930), col. 194, s.v.

Aristobulus of Paneas (3rd–2nd cent, BC), Jewish philosopher of *Alexandria who most prob. taught some time between 180 and 145 BC. His Commentary on the Law, fragments of which are preserved by *Eusebius (Praep. Ev. 8. 10 and 13. 12 and HE 7. 32. 17), seeks to prove that the OT was the source of much Greek philosophy and by an elaborate system of allegorical interpretation to reconcile philosophical conceptions with the Jewish creed. His citation of a *Peripatetic source (in Eus., Praep. Ev. 13. 12. 10) led *Clement of Alexandria and Eusebius to assign him to that school, but it is clear that he was also influenced by *Plato and the Pythagoreans. The eclectic character of the work has suggested doubts about its authorship, but the ascription to Aristobulus is now generally accepted. By the early Christian Fathers Aristobulus was regarded as the founder of Jewish philosophy in Alexandria.

N. Walter, Der Thoraausleger Aristobulos: Untersuchungen zu seinen Fragmenten und zu pseudepigraphischen Resten der jüdisch-hellenistischen Literatur (TU 86; 1964). E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 579–87, with bibl.

Aristotle (384–322 BC), Greek philosopher. He was the son of Nicomachus, the court physician to Amyntas II of Macedonia, and born at Stagirus (later Stagira) on the peninsula of Chalcidice. In 367 he went to Athens, where he became a member of the scientific group gathered round *Plato. After Plato's death (347), when Speusippus became head of the Academy, Aristotle left for Asia Minor, where he spent three years with his friend and former fellow-student Hermeias, who had risen to be tyrant of the cities of Assos and Atarneus in the Troad. Here he married Pythias, Hermeias' niece, and *c.*344 removed with his wife to Mitylene in Lesbos. After Hermeias' assassination by the Persians (343), Aristotle joined the Macedonian court, and became tutor to the crown prince, afterwards Alexander the Great, then a boy of 13; of his relations with Alexander there is very little contemporary evidence. When Alexander became king (336), Aristotle returned to Athens, where the headship of Plato's Academy happened to be vacant on Speusippus' death. Aristotle, however, was not elected, the choice falling on Xenocrates of Chalcedon. Though he never wholly severed his connection with the Academy, he opened a rival school at the Lyceum (335), to which he attracted some of the Academy's most distinguished members. Here he devoted himself for the next 12 years to lecturing, organizing the school, fostering scientific research and collecting a large library, the model for those of *Alexandria and *Pergamum. In contrast to the Academy, where the emphasis was on mathematics, Aristotle presented a wide-ranging programme of studies, including the natural sciences. From the circumstance that the instruction was given in a covered portico ('peripatos'), his school obtained the name of 'Peripatetic'. On the death of Alexander (323), the strong anti-Macedonian agitation forced Aristotle to leave Athens, whence he withdrew with his disciples to Chalcis, where he died in the following year.

Aristotle, like Plato, appears to have made regular use of the dialogue in his earliest years; but lacking Plato's imaginative gifts he probably never found the form congenial. Apart from fragments in later writers, his dialogues have been wholly lost. The works on which his reputation rests are apparently texts based on his lecture notes and memoranda which he had prepared for his pupils. Among the chief are the two famous editions of the Ethics—the Nicomachean Ethics, issued by his son Nicomachus, and the Eudemian Ethics, possibly a recasting by his pupil Eudemus, a mathematician; the Physics, of which the earlier books deal with the science of nature in general, the later ones with motion; the Metaphysics on the science of Being (the title, given to it because it followed the Physics in the Aristotelian corpus, first appears in Nicolaus of Damascus); the celebrated writings on logic (the Categories, De Interpretatione, the Prior and Posterior Analytics, the Topics, De Sophisticis Elenchis) collectively known as the Organon; and a large number of writings on natural science (among others De Caelo, De Generatione et Corruptione, De Anima, De Partibus Animalium); the Politics; the Rhetoric; and the Poetics. In 1890 a lost treatise on the Constitution of Athens (not before 329–328) was found among the Egyptian papyri (1st cent. AD); it was published in 1891 by F. G. Kenyon and is preserved in the British Library.

Though a disciple of *Plato, his philosophical position was very different. Whereas Plato deduced a world of 'ideas', entities which he conceived as arranged in a hierarchy, at the head of which was the 'Idea of the Good', and as alone having reality, Aristotle asserted that an idea exists only as expressed in the individual object. Thus he maintained that, far from there being an idea 'tree' possessing existence in its own right, it is the union of the 'form' tree with 'matter' which makes the real individual tree. This view required a theory of causation to account for the conjunction of form and matter, and Aristotle was thus led to postulate a 'First Cause', though he did not hold this supreme cause to be personal in the Christian sense. In explaining his doctrine he analysed the four senses in which the word 'cause' may be used. A cause, he affirmed, might be 'formal', 'material', 'final', or 'efficient'. The 'material cause' is the matter upon which the form (or in the case of change, the new form) is imposed; the 'formal cause' is the form which in conjunction with matter makes the new object a distinct entity; the 'final cause' is the end which, in processes of growth or change, determines the course of the development; and the 'efficient cause' is the motive agent which produces the event. God is the world's prime mover (πρῶτον κινοῦν), eternally inspiring it to imitate his perfection (κινεῖ ὡς ἐρώμενον).

The science of 'Logic' was Aristotle's creation, and for many centuries his treatment of it was accepted as definitive, to the neglect of important developments made by the Stoics; but since the latter part of the 19th cent., esp. under the influence of G. Frege and Bertrand Russell, the scope of logic has been greatly widened. Aristotle treats of concepts, judgements and propositions, the syllogism, demonstration, the problematic syllogism, and fallacies.

His works on Physics have formed the basis of all subsequent study of the subject. His 'Ethics' has also had an enormous influence. His moral ideal was happiness in accordance with virtue, virtue being the highest value, though natural advantages could also contribute to happiness. In practical terms he saw virtue as a mean between two extremes—courage, e.g., being a mean between cowardice and foolhardiness.

In the early centuries of the Christian Church, Aristotle's philosophy was regarded with suspicion, largely because his teachings were thought to lead to a materialistic view of the world. This attitude was further encouraged by the high repute in which Plato, conceived as the diametrically opposed philosopher to Aristotle, was held by the Christian Fathers. *Boethius (6th cent.), however, vigorously expounded Aristotelian doctrines. In the W., knowledge of Aristotle began in the 9th cent. with the slow recovery of his logical writings (completed only *c.*1130), progressed during the 12th cent. to the translation of his scientific writings, and culminated in the reception of the *Ethics c.*1200 and of the Politics in the mid-13th cent. A number of scientific texts were transmitted indirectly via Arabic translations, with Arabic commentaries. Hence they were theologically suspect. Even when such great Christian philosophers as St *Albertus Magnus and St *Thomas Aquinas built up their systems on an avowedly Aristotelian basis, that suspicion was never entirely dissipated. The thinkers of the Renaissance (and their eminent precursor, Nicholas of Cusa) gave Platonism a new lease of life. In 1879 the encyclical Aeterni Patris of *Leo XIII commended Thomistic Aristotelianism in terms that made it for the first time the highroad of philosophical orthodoxy in the modern RC Church.

TEXT: Editio princeps, by Aldine Press, 5 vols. fol., Venice, 1495–8. The best collected edn. (from which citations are normally given) is that of the Prussian Academy, ed. I. Bekker (5 vols., Berlin, 1831–70; fragments ed. V. Rose, scholia ed. C. A. Brandis, index ed. H. Bonitz). Many items also in OCT. Gk. texts of single works ed. with modern comm. incl.: Ethics, ed. J. Burnet (London, 1900); also (comm. only) by H. H. Joachim, ed. D. A. Rees (Oxford, 1951). Politics, ed. W. L. Newman (4 vols., Oxford, 1887–1902). Poetics, ed. S. H. Butcher (London, 1895; 4th edn., 1907, frequently repr.); also by D. W. Lucas, with comm. (Oxford, 1968). And all by [W.] D. Ross, pub. Oxford: Prior and Posterior Analytics (1949); Physics (1936); De Anima (1961); Metaphysics (2 vols., 1924; corrected repr., 1953). The ancient Gk. comms., of various dates between the 1st cent. and the 12th cent. AD were pub. by the Berlin Academy under the editorship of H. Diels, M. Hayduck, and others (23 vols., 1882–1909); 'Supplementum Aristotelicum' ed. S. P. Lambros and others (3 vols., Berlin, 1885–1903). On the medieval versions of Aristotle, see G. Lacombe and L. Minio-Paluello, Aristoteles Latinus, in 'Corpus Philosophorum Medii Aevi Academiarum Consociatarum Auspiciis et Consilio Editum' (Codicum descriptio, pars prior, Rome, 1939; pars posterior, Cambridge, 1955; with supplement by L. Minio-Paluello, Bruges and Paris, 1961). The comms. themselves are also being pub. under the title Aristoteles Latinus in the same series originally under the general editorship of L. Minio-Paluello (Rome, 1951, and Bruges and Paris, 1953 ff.). A. Jourdain, Recherches sur l'âge et l'origine des traductions d'Aristote (1819). M. *Grabmann, Forschungen über die lateinischen Aristoteles-Übersetzungen des XIII. Jahrhunderts (BGPM 17, Hefte 5–6; 1916). Collected arts. by L. Minio-Paluello repr. as Opuscula: The Latin Aristotle (Amsterdam, 1972). B. G. Dod and G. H. Lohr, 'Aristotle in the Middle Ages', in N. Kretzmann and others (eds.), The Cambridge History of Later Medieval Philosophy (1982), pp. 43–98.

TRANSLATIONS: Complete works, ed. J. A. Smith and W. D. Ross (12 vols., Oxford, 1908–52; revised ed. by J. Barnes, 2 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1984). Selections: R. McKeon (ed.), The Basic Works of Aristotle (New York, 1941); J. R. Bambrough, The Philosophy of Aristotle (New York, 1963). Loeb series includes Ethics (both versions), Politics, Poetics, On the Heavens, Metaphysics, var. dates. The Clarendon Aristotle ser. of selected works with valuable comm. includes Categories and De Interpretatione, by J. L. Ackrill (1963); Physics 1 and 2, by W. Charlton (1970); 3 and 4, by E. Hussey (1983); De Generatione et Corruptione, by C. F. J. Williams (1982); De Anima 1 in part, 2 and 3, by D. W. Hamlyn (1968); Metaphysics Books Γ, Δ, and E, by C. Kirwan (1971; 2nd edn., 1993); Books M and N, by J. Annas (1976); and Z and H by D. Bostock (1994). Other trs. of Nicomachean Ethics by [W.] D. Ross (repr. from vol. 9 of the Works, World Classics, 1954; rev. edn., 1980) and by J. A. K. Thomson (London, 1953; Penguin Classics, 1955; rev. edn., 1976), of Politics by E. Barker (Oxford, 1946; shorter edn. 1948).

STUDIES: Good introductions include W. D. Ross, Aristotle (London, 1923; 5th edn., 1949); D. J. Allan, The Philosophy of Aristotle (1952; 2nd edn., 1970); M. Grene, A Portrait of Aristotle (1963); G. E. R. Lloyd, Aristotle: The Growth and Structure of his Thought (Cambridge, 1968); J. L. Ackrill, Aristotle the Philosopher (Oxford, 1981). Authoritative full-scale surveys: I. Düring, Aristoteles: Darstellung und Interpretation seines Denkens (Heidelberg, 1966); W. K. C. Guthrie, A History of Greek Philosophy, 6 (Cambridge, 1981); F. Ueberweg, Die Philosophie der Antike, 3, ed. H. Flashar (Basle, 1983), pp. 177–457. See also J. Barnes and others, Aristotle: A Bibliography (Study Aids, 7; Oxford, 1977). On Aristotle's development the basic work is W. Jaeger, Aristoteles: Grundlegung einer Geschichte seiner Entwicklung (1923; Eng. tr., 1934, rev. 1948). For criticism, see W. D. Ross, 'The Development of Aristotle's Thought', Proceedings of the British Academy, 43 (1957), pp. 63–78, and G. E. L. Owen, 'The Platonism of Aristotle', ibid. 50 (1965), pp. 125–50.

Ethics: P. Aubenque, La Prudence chez Aristote (1963; 2nd edn., 1976); W. R. F. Hardie, Aristotle's Ethical Theory (1968; 2nd edn., 1980); A. Kenny, The Aristotelian Ethics: A Study of the Relationship between the Eudemian and Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle (Oxford, 1978).

Politics: E. Barker, The Political Thought of Plato and Aristotle (1906; repr., New York, 1959), pp. 208–524; R. G. Mulgan, Aristotle's Political Theory (Oxford, 1977).

Logic: E. Kapp, Greek Foundations of Traditional Logic (New York, 1942); J. Łukasiewicz, Aristotle's Syllogistic from the Standpoint of Modern Formal Logic (Oxford, 1951; 2nd edn., 1957); W. [C.] and M. Kneale, The Development of Logic (ibid., 1962) pp. 23–112.

Philosophy of Mind: O. Hamelin, La théorie de l'intellect d'après Aristote et ses commentateurs (Bibliothèque d'histoire de philosophie, 1953); G. E. R. Lloyd and G. E. L. Owen, Aristotle on Mind and the Senses (Cambridge, 1978).

Natural Philosophy: A. Mansion, Introduction à la Physique Aristotélicienne (Louvain, 1913; 2nd edn., 1946); F. [R. H.] Solmsen, Aristotle's System of the Physical World (Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, 33; New York, 1960); S. [J.] Waterlow, Nature, Change and Agency in Aristotle's Physics (Oxford, 1982).

Metaphysics: P. Aubenque, Le problème de l'être chez Aristote (Bibliothèque de philosophie contemporaine, 1962; 3rd edn., 1972); J. Owens, CSSR, The Doctrine of Being in the Aristotelian 'Metaphysics' (Toronto, 1951; 3rd edn., 1978); J. Barnes and others, Articles on Aristotle, 3 (1979); M. L. Gill, Aristotle on Substance: The Paradox of Unity (Princeton, NJ, 1989).

Theology: H. von Arnim, Die Entstehung der Gotteslehre des Aristoteles (Sb. (Wien), 212, Abh. 5; 1931); W. K. C. Guthrie, 'The Development of Aristotle's Theology', Classical Quarterly, 27

(1933), pp. 162–71; F.-P. Hager (ed.), Metaphysik und Theologie des Aristoteles (Darmstadt, 1969); G. Patzig, 'Theology and Ontology in Aristotle's Metaphysics' [Eng. tr. of a lecture pub. in Kant-Studien, 52 (1960/1), pp. 185–205], in J. Barnes, op. cit., pp. 33–49.

Later Influence: J. L. Stocks, Aristotelianism (1925; introductory); F. Wehrli in F. Ueberweg, op. cit., pp. 461–597 (detailed). R. Sorabji (ed.), Aristotle Transformed: The Ancient Commentators and their Influence (1990).

J. Barnes (ed.), The Cambridge Companion to Aristotle (1995). G. B. Kerferd in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 1 (New York and London, 1967), pp. 151–62, with bibl.; O. Gigon, H. Dörrie, and others in TRE 3 (1978), pp. 726–96, s.v. 'Aristoteles/Aristotelismus'; M. Nussbaum in OCD (3rd edn., 1996), pp. 165–9, s.v.

Arius (d. 336), heresiarch. There is much divergence between the authorities for his life. He was prob. born in Libya, between *c.*260 and 280, and was a pupil of *Lucian of Antioch; if *Sozomen (HE 1. 15) can be trusted, he was ordained deacon by St *Peter, Bp. of *Alexandria (d. 311), who later excommunicated him as a member of the *Melitian sect. Under Achillas (312–13), Peter's successor, he was ordained priest and put in charge of Baucalis, one of the principal churches at Alexandria. Here he seems to have met with marked success as a preacher and been revered for his asceticism. Under the next bishop, St *Alexander, he came forward prob. *c.*319 (not 323, as E. *Schwartz) as a champion of subordinationist teaching about the Person of Christ. The controversy quickly spread, Arius seeking support among other disciples of Lucian, notably *Eusebius of Nicomedia, while a synod at Alexandria under Alexander proceeded to excommunicate him. Shortly after his arrival in the E. (Sept. 324), the Emp. *Constantine sent *Hosius to Alexandria to attempt a settlement; but the mission failed. Accordingly an *Oecumenical Council was convened (orig. to Ancyra), met at *Nicaea in the early summer of 325, and, largely through the influence of St *Athanasius, condemned Arius. Arius spent the next few years in banishment in Illyria, but, owing to the Court influence of Eusebius of Nicomedia, he was recalled from exile prob. *c.*334. He returned to Alexandria, where Athanasius was ordered to receive him back into communion, but refused. He died suddenly in the streets of Constantinople in 336.

Arius seems to have written little. He embodied his doctrine in a verse composition, known as the Thalia (Θάλεια, 'Banquet'), of which fragments survive, and in popular songs, now lost. There also exist a letter seeking support from Eusebius of Nicomedia (ap. *Theodoret, HE 1. 5 [PG 82. 909–12]) and a statement of belief in a letter to Alexander (Athanasius, De Synodis, 16). See also ARIANISM.

The chief sources for his life are the writings of Athanasius, supplemented by *Epiphanius (Haer. 69) and the Church historians, *Rufinus, *Socrates, *Sozomen, *Philostorgius. See also bibl. to ARIANISM.

Ark. (1) The Ark of *Noah, which the Patriarch was bidden to build of gopher wood to preserve life during the *Flood, is described in Gen. 6. It was borne on the waters and finally rested on the 'Mountains of Ararat' (Gen. 8: 4), and was the means by which Noah and his family ('eight persons' acc. to 1 Pet. 3: 20) and representatives of all living creatures were saved from the catastrophe. Critics are widely agreed that the Hebrew narrative has been influenced by Babylonian versions of the flood story which describe the building of a comparable vessel. The Babylonian historian Berossus (*c.*300 BC) claimed that remains of the ark were extant in his day and used for making amulets and bracelets. See also GILGAMESH, EPICS OF.

(2) The Ark of the Covenant, the most sacred religious symbol of the Hebrew people and believed to represent the Presence of God. It was in form a rectangular box or chest made of acacia or shittim wood, overlaid with gold inside and out. Its length was two and a half cubits, and its height and breadth one and a half cubits (i.e. *c.*45 × 27 × 27 inches). On top of the Ark was a gold plate or *mercy-seat (q.v.). It was surmounted, acc. to the account in Ex. 25: 18–21, by two *cherubim, and was carried on gold poles which passed through gold rings on the sides.

Acc. to the traditional accounts the Ark was carried by the Israelites from the time of the *Exodus (prob. 13th cent. BC) into the land of Canaan, and, until the *Temple was built, was kept in the holy tent or *tabernacle. For a brief period it was in the hands of Israel's enemy, the Philistines (1 Sam. 4–6). It was considered to be of such sanctity that for an unauthorized person to touch it, even accidentally, was sacrilege, punishable by death (cf. e.g. 2 Sam. 6: 6). When it was permanently lodged within the Temple of *Solomon its home was the 'Holy of Holies', which the High Priest alone entered once a year. The Ark seems at one time to have contained only the Tables of the Law (1 Kgs. 8: 9), but several traditions exist (e.g. Heb. 9: 4) of other things which were kept inside it. The Ark was apparently captured when *Jerusalem fell to the Babylonians *c.*586 BC, and nothing is certainly known of its later history. See also SYNAGOGUE.

Both the Ark of Noah and the Ark of the Covenant have been symbolically interpreted by the Christian Fathers and theologians. Acc. to *Tertullian, St *Jerome, and others, the Ark of Noah typifies the Church, which, like it, is the only means of salvation, containing saints and sinners symbolized by the pure and impure animals, and being tossed about by tempests but never submerged. The Ark of the Covenant, on the other hand, is a symbol of the Lord. Acc. to St *Thomas Aquinas the gold with which it is overlaid signifies His wisdom and charity; the golden vase it contains represents His soul, Aaron's rod His priestly dignity, and the Tables of the Law His office as law-giver. St *Bonaventure saw in it a figure of the Eucharist; acc. to a sermon attributed to St *Ambrose it symbolizes the BVM, in whom was enclosed the heir of the Law as the Law itself was contained in the Ark of the Covenant. In this sense the symbolism is applied in the Litany of *Loreto, where the BVM is called 'Foederis Arca'. This imagery is very common in E. hymnography.

(1) A. Parrot, Déluge et Arche de Noé (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, 1 [1953], esp. pp. 39–51; Eng. tr. (1955), pp. 54–67. E. Ullendorff, 'The Construction of Noah's Ark', Vetus Testamentum, 4 (1954), pp. 95 f. See also comm. on Gen.

(2) M. *Dibelius, Die Lade Jahwes (1906). W. R. Arnold, Ephod and Ark (Harvard Theological Studies, 3; 1917). H. Gressmann, Die Lade Jahwes und das Allerheiligste des salomonischen Tempels (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten Testament, 26; 1920). K. *Budde, 'Ephod und Lade', ZATW 39 (1921), pp. 1–42. O. Eissfeldt, 'Lade und Stierbild', ibid. 58 (1940–1), pp. 190–215. J. Morgenstern, 'The Ark, the Ephod, and the "Tent of Meeting" ', pt. 1, Hebrew Union College Annual, 17 (1942–3), pp. 153–266, esp. pp. 153–7, 229–66, with refs. to earlier works of this author. E. Nielsen, 'Some Reflections on the History of the Ark', Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 7 (1960), pp. 61–74, with refs. P. D. Miller and J. J. M. Roberts, The Hand of the Lord: A Reassessment of the 'Ark Narrative' of 1 Samuel (Johns Hopkins Near Eastern Studies [1977]). R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 127–33, with bibl. pp. 439 f.; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 297–302, with bibl. p. 540. H. Lesêtre in Dict. Bibl. 1 (1895), cols. 912–23, s.v. 'Arche d'alliance'.

H. Hurter, SJ, 'De Arca Noe, Ecclesiae Typo, Patrum Sententiae' in Opuscula Patrum Selecta, 3 (Innsbruck, 1868), pp. 217–33. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 2709–32, s.v. 'Arche [de Noé]', with refs. H. Lesêtre, op. cit., col. 923. See also bibl. to FLOOD and NOAH.

Arles (Lat. Arelate), Synods of. At least 15 Councils were held at Arles between 314 and 1275. Among the more important were:

(1) 314. Summoned by *Constantine to deal with the *Donatist schism. It passed 22 canons dealing with abuses resulting from the persecutions.

(2) 353. An *Arianizing Council.

[(2a). The 25 canons of the so-called 'Second Council of Arles' of the 5th cent. appear to be a private collection of canons based on those of earlier councils held elsewhere and not to have ever received conciliar authority.]

(3) 813. Canons passed concerning preaching and the education of the clergy.

(4) 1234. Canons passed against the *Albigensians.

(5) 1263 (earlier authorities, 1260). Condemned the doctrines of *Joachim of Fiore.

(1) Hardouin, 1 (1715), cols. 259–70; Mansi, 2 (1759), cols. 463–512. Crit. edns. of Canons in Turner, EOMIA 1. 2. 2 (1939), pp. 372–416, and C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 314–A. 506 (CCSL 148; 1963), pp. 3–24, repr., with Fr. tr. and introd. by J. Gaudemet, Conciles Gaulois du IV^e Siècle (SC 241; 1977), pp. 35–63. Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (1; 1907), pp. 275–98. F. X. Funk, 'Die Zeit der ersten Synode von Arles', Th. Q. 72 (1890), pp. 296–304, repr. in id., Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, 1 (1897), pp. 352–8; L. *Duchesne, 'La Date du concile d'Arles', Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, 10 (1890), pp. 640–4. H. Schrörs, 'Drei Aktenstücke in Betreff des Konzils von Arles', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, 42, Kan. Abt., 11 (1921), pp. 429–39.

(2) Hardouin, 1 (1715), cols. 697 f.; Mansi, 3 (1759), cols. 231 f.; C. Munier, op. cit., p. 30; J. Gaudemet, op. cit., pp. 81–83. Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (2; 1907), pp. 869–72.

(3) Hardouin, 4 (1714), cols. 1001–6; Mansi, 14 (1769), cols. 55–64. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (2; 1910), pp. 1135 f.

(4) Hardouin, 7 (1714), cols. 235–40; Mansi, 23 (1779), cols. 335–42. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (2; 1913), pp. 1560 f.

(5) Hardouin, 7 (1714), cols. 509–16; Mansi, 23 (1779), cols. 1001–12. Hefele and Leclercq, 6 (1; 1914), pp. 113–17.

Armada, Spanish. This great fleet was intended by *Philip II of Spain for the invasion of England in the interests of Roman Catholicism and to avenge English attacks upon Spanish trade. Its defeat after a week's fighting in the English Channel (20–7 July 1588) was hailed as a 'great deliverance' by countless Anglican preachers.

Armagh (Ard Macha, 'Height of Macha', a legendary queen). Archiepiscopal see in the North of *Ireland. Acc. to tradition it was founded by St *Patrick, and from the 7th cent. it was the most powerful Church in Ireland. The succession of *coarbs of St Patrick, who controlled the Church and its resources, is known from the Annals of Ulster. Reforms were carried through in the face of much opposition under St Cellach (or Celsus, 1105–29) and St *Malachy (1134–6). The English conquest of Ireland, with government centred on *Dublin, diminished Armagh's independence, though most of the archbishops continued to be Irish. Abp. Richard *FitzRalph (1347–60) was a scholar of international reputation. Under *Henry VIII, Abp. George Cromer (1522–43) refused to recognize the royal supremacy and opposed the reforming measures. His successor, George Dowdall (d. 1558), took the Oath of Supremacy and hence was not recognized by Paul III, but he too was a zealous supporter of the old faith. Under *Edward VI he left the country, and in 1552 the first Protestant bishop, Hugh Goodacre (d. 1553), was appointed. Henceforward there was both a Protestant and a RC succession, though for many generations bishops of the latter lived in exile or destitution, St Oliver *Plunkett (1669–81) suffering martyrdom. Among the Protestant archbishops were J. *Ussher, the famous scholar (1624–56), and Richard Robinson, first Baron Rokeby (1765–94), to whose munificence Armagh owes the archbishop's palace, a library, and other public institutions. Towards the end of the 18th cent. the Catholic archbishops resumed their normal way of life. A new RC cathedral, dedicated to St Patrick, was built (1840–1904), and many religious Orders and Congregations were established in the diocese. The present Anglican cathedral of St Patrick is on a fortified hill, acc. to tradition given to Patrick by King Daire. It was mainly rebuilt in the 18th cent., but followed in general plan the original 13th-cent. structure.

From the Middle Ages the archbishops of Armagh's claim to the primacy was contested by the archbishops of Dublin, both Catholic and Protestant. The long literary feud, which followed the conflict between Oliver Plunkett and Peter Talbot, Abp. of Dublin, in 1670, culminated in the learned work of Hugh MacMahon, Jus Primatiale Armacanum (1728). See also following entry.

J. Stuart, Historical Memoirs of the City of Armagh (Newry, 1819; ed. A. Coleman, OP, Dublin, 1900). R. King, A Memoir Introductory to the Early History of the Primacy of Armagh (2nd edn., Armagh, 1854). J. B. Leslie, Armagh Clergy and Parishes (Dundalk, 1911; suppl. to 1947, ibid., 1948). A. Gwynn, SJ, The Medieval Province of Armagh 1470–1545 (ibid., 1946). A. Coleman, OP, in CE 1 (1907), pp. 729–33, with bibl. See also works cited in bibl. to IRELAND, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Armagh, Book of (Lat. Liber Ardmachanus). A celebrated 9th cent. vellum codex containing a miscellaneous collection of documents, partly in Latin, partly in Irish. These include a complete non-*Vulgate text of the Latin NT, in the order Gospels, Pauline Epp. (with prefaces by *Pelagius and the Ep. to the *Laodiceans), Catholic Epp., Rev., and Acts. It is preceded by a collection of documents relating to St *Patrick, of the first importance for the history of the Irish Church. After the NT is a copy of the Life of St *Martin of Tours by *Sulpicius Severus.

The MS was written in 807–8, by the master-scribe Ferdomnach and one or two assistants, at the request of Torbach (d. 808), *coarb of St Patrick. The MS was regarded as part of the coarb's insignia and was treated as a relic of St Patrick, and was used for the swearing of oaths until after the Middle Ages. In the 17th cent. it passed from its hereditary keepers into private hands and is now in the library of Trinity College, Dublin (MS 52). It is referred to by biblical scholars as the 'Codex Dubliniensis'.

Complete text ed. with introd. and appendices by J. Gwynn (Dublin, 1913). Collotype facsimile of the Patrician documents, with introd. by E. Gwynn (ibid., 1937). The Patrician texts also ed., with introd. and Eng. tr., by L. Bieler (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, 10; 1979). R. Sharpe, 'Palaeographical considerations in the study of the Patrician documents in the Book of Armagh', Scriptorium, 36 (1982), pp. 3–28.

Armenia, Christianity in. The Armenians were the first nation to embrace Christianity officially. They were converted by *Gregory the Illuminator, who was consecrated bishop by the Metropolitan of Caesarea in Cappadocia in 314, and who baptized their king Tiridates III (or IV) (reigned 298–?330). Gregory established the patriarchal see at Ashitishat in Taron, and for a time the office of *Catholicos (or Primate) was hereditary in his family. About 390 Armenia became divided between the Byzantine and Persian empires. At that time Etchmiadzin, near Mount Ararat, became the patriarchal see. The monarchy in the W. (Byzantine) part of Armenia soon disappeared, and that in the E. part under Persian suzerainty was suppressed in 428. Since then the Armenians have been subject to Persians, Arabs, Turks, and Russians, and their unity has consisted in the bond of race, language, culture, literature, and religion.

In 374 (after the death of St *Nerses) the Armenians repudiated their dependence on the Church of Caesarea. In the early part of the 5th cent. St *Isaac the Great (Catholicos *c.*389–*c.*438) and St *Mesrob greatly strengthened the Church by the invention of a national script, and the Bible and Liturgy were translated into Armenian. Owing to the wars in which they were involved, the Armenians were not represented at the Council of *Chalcedon, but in 555 the Armenian Church definitively repudiated that Council and has since been reputed *Monophysite. The decision seems to have been partly motivated by fear of domination by Constantinople, and the Armenians never entered into full communion with the other *Oriental Orthodox Churches.

The next 700 years was a period of persecution from Persians and Arabs, though there was an independent kingdom of the Bagratids in Armenia from the end of the 9th to the middle of the 11th cent., and the medieval kingdom of Cilicia, or Little Armenia, was an independent entity from the end of the 12th cent. to 1375. The Armenians of Little Armenia accepted union with Rome at the Council of Sis in 1307 and this was confirmed at the Council of *Florence (1438–9). The Armenians of Greater Armenia, however, did not accept papal authority, and, though they were represented at the Council of Florence, which issued the famous instruction 'Pro Armenis' on the Sacraments, the union there achieved had little practical result and in protest they re-established a line of independent patriarchs at Etchmiadzin in 1441.

In modern times the Armenians have suffered serious persecution, esp. at the hands of the Turks in 1915, and the Russians often endeavoured to suppress Armenian traditions. There are thought to be some 5 million Armenians (mainly in the Republic of Armenia, countries of the former Soviet Union, and N. America); the majority profess allegiance to the Armenian Church, and something over 100,000 are in communion with Rome. The non-Roman Armenians are sometimes distinguished as 'Gregorian Armenians'. Their church is organized as two Catholicates, with individual congregations choosing their allegiance on the basis of authority and jurisdiction, and not on any difference of faith or ritual. The Catholicos of Etchmiadzin has wide acceptance throughout the Armenian world; the Catholicos of Sis, who is resident in Antelias (a suburb of Beirut) gained support from Armenians opposed to the communist regime in Armenia. Under them there are two classes of priests—the 'vardapets' or doctors, who are unmarried, and the parish priests, who, unless monks, must be married before ordination to the diaconate. The monks are not a distinct class and bishops are usually chosen from among the vardapets.

Their dogmas are similar to those of the Orthodox Church, and their Liturgy is substantially that of St *Basil, in classical Armenian. The chief vestment is the chasuble (shurjar), shaped like a cope. For the Eucharist, they use unleavened bread in the form of a large Latin host, and do not mix water with the wine (see MIXED CHALICE). They give Communion in both kinds by intinction. They follow the Julian Calendar. They are unique among non-Protestant Christians in not observing *Christmas as a separate feast. Instead, they celebrate the Nativity of the Lord as part of the *Epiphany, from 5 to 13 January. They make the sign of the Cross after the manner of the Latins.

S. Weber, Die katholische Kirche in Armenien: Ihre Begründung und Entwicklung vor der Trennung (1903); M. Ormanian, L'Église arménienne: Son histoire, sa doctrine, son régime, sa discipline, sa liturgie, son présent (1910; Eng. tr., 1912; rev. edn., 1954; Eng. tr., 1955). L. Arpee, A History of Armenian Christianity from the Beginning to Our Own Time (New York, 1946). Crit. edn. of the Narratio de Rebus Armeniae, a fundamental doc. for the early history of the Armenian Church, with comm., by G. Garitte (CSCO 132, Subsidia, 4; 1952). J. Mécérian, SJ, Histoire et Institutions de l'Église Arménienne (Recherches publiées sous la direction des l'Institut de Lettres Orientales de Beyrouth, 30 [1965]). K. Sarkissian, The Council of Chalcedon and the Armenian Church (1965). F. Tournebize, Histoire politique et religieuse de l'Arménie. 1: Depuis les origines des Arméniens jusqu'à la mort de leur dernier roi (l'an 1393) (1910; all pub.). H. F. B. Lynch, Armenia: Travels and Studies (2 vols., 1901). F. Heyer (ed.), Die Kirche Armeniens: Eine Volkskirche zwischen Ost und West (Die Kirchen der Welt, 18; Stuttgart, 1978). F. C. *Conybeare and A. J. Maclean (eds. and trs.), Rituale Armenorum (1905); A. A. King, The Rites of Eastern Christendom (Rome, 1948), ch. 10, pp. 521–646. G. Winkler, Das armenische Initiationsrituale: Entwicklungsgeschichtliche und liturgievergleichende Untersuchung der Quellen des 3. bis 10. Jahrunderts (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 217; 1982). J. Muyldermans, 'Le Costume liturgique arménien: Étude historique', Le Muséon, 39 (1925), pp. 253–324. A. *Fortescue, The Lesser Eastern Churches (1913), pp. 383–445; D. Attwater, The Dissident Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wis. [1937]), pp. 293–308, rev. as The Christian Churches of the East, 1 ([Leominster] 1961; London, 1963), pp. 173–87. K. Sarkissian, A Brief Introduction to Armenian Christian Literature (1960); S. Der Nersessian, L'Art Arménien ([1977]; Eng. tr. 1978), esp. pp. 21–80 (of both French and English), on Christian churches and artefacts. G. Amadouni in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 879–99, s.v. 'Armeno, monachesimo'; W. Hage and B. Spuler in TRE 4 (1979), pp. 40–63, s.v. 'Armenien'.

Armenian Version of NT. The Gospels, Acts, and Pauline Epp. were translated into Armenian in the early 5th cent., probably from an *Old Syriac version. Traditionally this translation has been ascribed to Sts *Mesrob and *Isaac the Great. After the Council of *Ephesus (431), two Armenians returned from *Constantinople with 'correct' copies of the Greek Bible (i.e. with MSS of the *Lucianic text) and proceeded to bring the then existing Armenian text into conformity. In one Armenian MS the concluding 12 verses of Mk. (16: 9–20) are attributed to 'the presbyter Ariston' (see ARISTION).

Editio princeps of whole Armenian Bible, Amsterdam, 1666; first crit. edn. by J. Zohrab, Venice, 1805, photographically repr., Delmar, NY, 1984, with introd. (in Eng.) by C. [E.] Cox, pp. x–xxvi. NT pub. separately Amsterdam, 1668; ed. J. Zohrab, Venice, 1789. Book of Rev. ed. F. C. *Conybeare (Text and Translation Society, 3, 1907, pp. 1–163). F. Macler, Le Texte arménien de l'Évangile d'après Matthieu et Marc (Annales du Musée Guimet. Bibliothèque d'Études, 28; 1919). S. Lyonnet, SJ, Les Origines de la Version arménienne et le Diatessaron (Biblica et Orientalia, 13; 1950). B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 153–81. F. C. Conybeare in HDB 1 (1900), pp. 153 f.

armill. One of the *Coronation regalia. Although the word means 'bracelet', it was applied to a garment resembling a *stole, both in the '*Liber Regalis' and in the English Coronation rite from 1661 to 1937. It was held to signify the quasi-priestly character of the anointed king. In former times it was crossed over the breast, and was so found on the body of Edward I, when his tomb was opened in 1774. The *Lambeth MS of *Charles I's Coronation ordered the words 'Receive the Bracelets of Sincerity and Wisdom' to be said by the prelate who placed the armill on the king. Later it was placed on the king's shoulders by the Dean of *Westminster, as one of the 'garments of salvation'. It is perhaps identical with the Greek λῶρος, a long jewelled scarf worn by the Byzantine emperors. At the Coronation of Queen Elizabeth II (1953) the use of armills in the form of bracelets was restored, the stole royal being given immediately afterwards.

P. E. Schramm, Herrschaftszeichen und Staatssymbolik (Schriften der Monumenta Germaniae Historica, 13), 2 (1955), pp. 538–53 ('Baugen-armillae: Zur Geschichte der königlichen Armspangen'), with further refs. in 3 (1956), p. 1102, and Nachträge (1978), pp. 31–3. E. C. Ratcliff, The Coronation Service of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II (1953), pp. 31 f.

Arminianism. Jacobus Arminius (Jakob Hermansz or Harmensz), the celebrated Dutch Reformed theologian (1560–1609), was the son of Hermand Jacobszoon, a cutler of Oudewater in S. Holland. He was schooled at Utrecht and later studied for a time at Marburg. On hearing that most of his relatives had been massacred by the Spaniards, he returned to the Netherlands and took refuge at Rotterdam. Here his evident theological abilities won him influential friends and support. He continued his theological studies at *Leiden (1576–81), at Geneva under T. *Beza, and (for a short time) at Basle, as well as at Padua and Rome. On his return to the Netherlands in 1587 he received a call to minister at Amsterdam and was ordained there in the following year. Studies in the Ep. to the Romans having led him to doubt the Calvinistic doctrine of predestination, he was accused of *Pelagianism and disloyalty to the Confessions of his Church. After an unsuccessful attempt of J. Uitenbogaert to mediate, his opposition to Calvinistic doctrines became more pronounced. An extensive correspondence with Francis Junius, professor at Leiden, and an attempted refutation (not published till after Arminius' death) of W. *Perkins's treatise on predestination led him to work out his doctrines with greater precision. He also found himself increasingly drawn into the political struggle in the Netherlands, as his views on the absolute authority of the State brought him the support of J. van Oldenbarnevelt against the military ideals of Prince Maurice of Orange. Appointed professor at Leiden in 1603, he was at once drawn into a conflict with the zealous Calvinist F. *Gomar, who had taught at Leiden since 1594, but after a disputation at The Hague in the presence of Oldenbarnevelt on 6 May 1603, Arminius successfully cleared himself of the charges of Pelagianism and *Socinianism, and obtained possession of his chair. He now found himself at one of the chief centres of learning in Europe, with J. J. *Scaliger as his colleague, and provided with wide opportunities for furthering his beliefs. For the rest of his life, though his temper remained conciliatory and he was steadily supported by the curators of the university, he was engaged in controversy. He made it one of his chief ends to obtain the revision of the two chief Calvinistic documents of the Dutch Church, the *Belgic Confession and the *Heidelberg Catechism. But though negotiations for a National Synod for this purpose were unsuccessful he commanded widespread respect, and from 1608 H. *Grotius threw in his lot with him. The disputes continued down to the time of his death.

As a system of faith, Arminian doctrines, formally set forth in the *Remonstrance (q.v.) of 1610, were a theological reaction against the deterministic logic of Calvinism. The Arminians insisted that the Divine sovereignty was compatible with a real human free will; that Jesus Christ died for all and not only for the elect; and that both the *Supralapsarian and *Sublapsarian views of *predestination were unbiblical. At first the opposition to Arminianism was led by F. Gomar. The struggle was long and bitter. Suspected of favouring the pro-Spanish party in politics, the Arminians were attacked by Prince Maurice of Orange. After their condemnation at the Synod of *Dort (1618–19), many were banished and others persecuted. By 1630 a less rigid policy had been adopted, but it was not until 1795 that the Remonstrants were admitted to full toleration.

As representatives of a more liberal school of theology than the strict Calvinists, the Arminians exercised considerable influence on the formation of modern Dutch and European Protestant theology. In England the anti-Calvinistic trend in 17th-cent. theology, and esp. in the Laudian revival, was widely termed 'Arminian' by its opponents, though it is doubtful if here the direct influence of Arminius' teaching was at all considerable. In the *Methodist movement J. *Wesley held an Arminian position, as contrasted with G. *Whitefield's Calvinist teaching, thus giving rise to the division in theological outlook between *Wesleyan and *Calvinistic Methodists which has persisted down to modern times. On the Continent the reputation of Arminianism sank very low in the 18th cent., owing to the association which grew up between it and Socinianism. More recently the tension between the Arminian and Calvinist trends in theology had been less acute, until the theological revival of Calvinism under the influence of K. *Barth.

J. Arminius' Theological Works, ed. Leiden, 1629 (repr. Frankfurt, 1631, 1635). Eng. tr. by J. and W. Nichols (3 vols., London, 1825–75; repr., with introd. by C. Bangs, Grand Rapids, 1986). Lives by C. Brandt (Amsterdam, 1724; Eng. tr., 1854) and J. H. Maronier (ibid., 1905). A. W. Harrison, The Beginnings of Arminianism to the Synod of Dort (1926); id., Arminianism (1937). R. L. Colie, Light and Englightenment: A Study of the Cambridge Platonists and the Dutch Arminians (Cambridge, 1957), esp. pp. 1–21. C. Bangs, Arminius: A Study in the Dutch Reformation (New York, 1971). E. More, 'John Goodwin and the Origins of the New Arminianism', Journal of British Studies, 22, pt. 1 (1982), pp. 50–70. J. M. Atkins, 'Calvinist Bishops, Church Unity, and the Rise of Arminianism', Albion, 18 (1986), pp. 411–27. N. Tyacke, Anti-Calvinists: The Rise of English Arminianism c.1590–1640 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1987); H. [R.] Trevor-Roper, Catholics, Anglicans and Puritans (1987), pp. 40–119 ('Laudianism and Political Power'); P. White, Predestination, Policy and Polemic: Conflict and Consensus in the English Church from the Reformation to the Civil War (Cambridge, 1992).

Arnauld, Antoine (1612–94), 'the Great Arnauld', French theologian and philosopher. He was the twentieth son of a bourgeois family, born in Paris, who, after the death of his father in 1619, came increasingly under the influence of his mother and of his sister, Angélique (see foll. entry). In 1633 he entered the *Sorbonne, where the subject of his bachelor's thesis was the doctrine of *grace. For some years he was a prominent figure in the intellectual society of Paris, but, after receiving the subdiaconate in 1638, he began to enter into association with *Port-Royal and *Saint-Cyran. He was priested in 1641 and the following day retired to Port-Royal. In 1643 he published De la fréquente communion, which with its stress on the need for thorough preparation for Communion and its emphasis on the right interior dispositions did much to propagate *Jansenist principles among a wide public. The book provoked a storm from the *Jesuits which necessitated Arnauld's withdrawal from public life. In the next year he published (anon.) his Apologie de M. Jansenius, a semi-official manifesto of the Jansenist theological position and Arnauld now became the acknowledged leader of the Jansenists, writing extensively on their behalf. The publication of two outspoken Lettres . . . à un duc et pair, directed against the Jesuit method in the confessional, provoked an attack from the Sorbonne. The support of the *Dominicans and also of B. *Pascal, who sought to justify Arnauld in the first of his Lettres provinciales, failed to save him, and he was censured by the Sorbonne in Jan. 1656 and in Feb. 1656 solemnly degraded; and until the 'Peace of the Church' of 1668 he remained in retirement. In 1669 he was received by Louis XIV, restored to his position as a Doctor of the Sorbonne and treated as a popular hero. With P. *Nicole (q.v.) he then began a major treatise against the *Calvinists, La Perpétuité de la foi catholique touchant l'Eucharistie (1669–74). When the Jansenist controversy began to revive in 1679, Arnauld left France for the Netherlands, where he was joined by P. *Quesnel; and here he continued to write untiringly, until his death, against N. *Malebranche, on *Gallicanism, and on various biblical subjects. If he was less radical than Jansen in his teaching on the all-embracing power of grace, it was to him more than to anyone else that Jansenist principles owed their diffusion.

Arnauld was the author of over 320 works. Many of his letters are in MS in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. Œuvres de Messire Antoine Arnauld (43 vols., Lausanne, 1775–83; with Life in vol. 43). Modern edn. by P. Clair and F. Girbal of La Logique ou l'Art de Penser by Arnauld and P. Nicole (Paris, 1965). Eng. tr. of the Leibniz–Arnauld Correspondence by H. T. Mason (Manchester, 1967). P. Quesnel, Histoire abrégée de la vie et des ouvrages de M. Arnauld (Cologne, 1695). É. Jacques, Les années d'exil de Antoine Arnauld (1679–1694) (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 63; 1976). A. R. Ndiaye, La Philosophie d'Antoine Arnauld (Bibliothèque d'Histoire de la Philosophie, 1991). J. Carreyre, PSS, in DHGE 4 (1930), cols. 447–85, s.v. and with bibl.

Arnauld, Jacqueline Marie Angélique (1591–1661), 'Mère Angélique', Abbess of *Port-Royal. She was the sister of Antoine *Arnauld (see preceding entry), and christened Jacqueline, but at her confirmation took the name of Angélique by which she is commonly known. Born at Paris, she was procured succession at the age of 7 to the abbacy of Port-Royal, and after residence in the *Benedictine convents of St-Antoine, Paris, and at Maubuisson, she became Abbess of Port-Royal in 1602. At first she shared without protest in the very relaxed (but not immoral) discipline of the house, until in 1608 she was converted by a sermon from a visiting *Capuchin friar. She promptly introduced drastic reforms (community of goods, enclosure, regular office, uniformity of dress, abstinence, and silence) and also laid great emphasis on the inner discipline of the spirit. In 1618 she carried through similar reforms at Maubuisson. In 1619 she fell in with St *Francis de Sales and wished to join the *Visitation nuns, but, permission being refused, she returned to Port-Royal in 1623. The community now increased rapidly in numbers and came to include Angélique's four sisters and their mother, and in 1625 Angélique moved it to a larger house in the Faubourg Saint-Jacques in Paris. A proposal of Sébastien Zamet, Bp. of Langres (Bp. 1615–55), to amalgamate the community with the reformed Benedictine house of Tard, nr. Dijon, led to serious differences, and in 1630 Angélique was forced to resign as Abbess. After her sister Agnes succeeded to this office in 1636, Angélique again exercised (indirect) power. She came under the influence of *Saint-Cyran, under whom the community became an enthusiastic upholder of *Jansenist principles and practice, and Angélique herself for long periods abstained from Communion. From 1642 to 1654 she was again Abbess. She died shortly after the signing of the Formulary of 1661. See also PORT-ROYAL.

Her spiritual doctrines, based on papers written by herself or under her immediate inspiration, may be studied in Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire de Port-Royal et à la vie de la Révérende Mère Marie-Angélique . . . Arnauld (3 vols., Utrecht, 1742–4), Entretiens ou conférences de la Révérende Mère Angélique Arnauld (3 vols., ibid., 1757), and other collections. Modern edn. of her autobiography up to 1638 ed. L. Cognet, Relation écrite par la Mère Angélique Arnauld sur Port-Royal (1949). A. Gazier, Jeanne de Chantal et Angélique Arnauld d'après leur correspondance, 1620–1641 (Paris, 1915). L. Cognet, La Mère Angélique et Saint François de Sales 1618–1626 (1951), and other works of this author. P. Bugnion-Secrétan, La Mère Angelique Arnauld 1591–1661 d'après ses écrits (1991).

Arndt, Ernst Moritz (1769–1860), German patriot and poet. A native of Schoritz in the island of Rügen and of a strict Protestant family, he studied at Greifswald (1791) and Jena (1793), where he came under the influence of the *Aufklärung and of the Critical Philosophy (esp. J. G. *Fichte). Philosophical doubts led him to give up his intention of becoming a pastor in 1797. In 1800 he became lecturer in history at Greifswald university. His work, Vom Geist der Zeit (1806), directed against Napoleon, endangered his freedom and he fled to Sweden. During the wars from 1812 onwards he exercised a great influence by his patriotic publications. In 1818 he was appointed professor of history at the newly founded university of Bonn. In 1819 appeared a fourth part of Vom Geist der Zeit, in which he attacked the reactionary policy of the German princes. Suspension from his professorship followed in 1820, and for the next 20 years Arndt devoted himself to literary work. In 1840 he was reinstalled in his office by Frederick William IV.

Despite his change-over from theology to history Arndt always retained his religious interests. After a period of doubt, during which he tried to combine *Lutheranism with the contemporary German Idealistic philosophy, he began, in 1817, to occupy himself more with the Bible and the Reformation, and, under the influence of friends, esp. F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, he adopted a more definitely Christian attitude. To this period belong his hymns to Christ, among them his popular 'Ich weiss, an wen ich glaube'. His hopes of a union between Protestants and Catholics in a German National Church were disappointed through the growing influence of *Ultramontanism, and in his later years he became one of the sturdiest representatives of German Protestantism, his most important work on the subject being Über den gegenwärtigen Stand des Protestantismus (1844).

Works ed. H. Rösch and others (14 vols., Leipzig and Magdeburg, 1892–1909). Lives by W. Baur (2nd edn., Hamburg, 1863), E. Langenberg (Bonn, 1865), E. Muesebeck (vol. 1, Gotha, 1914; all pub.), and P. Breitenkamp (Berlin, 1939). R. Wolfram, Ernst Moritz Arndt und Schweden (1933). A. G. Pundt, Arndt and the National Awakening in Germany (Columbia University thesis; New York, 1935). R. Fahrner, Arndt: Geistiges und politisches Verhalten (1937). U. E. W. Willers, Ernst Moritz Arndt och hans Svenska Förbindelser: Studier i svensk-pommersk Historiografi och svensk Opinionsbildning (1945), with portrait and bibl. G. Ott, Ernst Moritz Arndt: Religion, Christentum und Kirche in der Entwicklung des deutschen Publizisten und Patrioten (Düsseldorf, 1966). K. H. Schäfer, Ernst Moritz Arndt als politischer Publizist (Veröffentlichungen des Stadtarchivs Bonn, 13; 1974). Id. and J. Schawe, Ernst Moritz Arndt: Ein bibliographes Handbuch 1769–1969 (ibid. 8; 1971).

Arndt, Johann (1555–1621), *Lutheran theologian and mystical writer. A devoted follower of P. *Melanchthon, he studied at Helmstedt (1576) and *Wittenberg (1577) and later at Strasbourg and Basle. In 1583 he was made pastor of Badeborn, but aroused *Calvinist hostility by his uncompromising Lutheranism. In 1590 he was compelled to move to Quedlinburg and in 1599 to Brunswick. He is chiefly remembered for his Vier Bücher vom wahren Christentum (1606), in which, in contrast to the prevalent forensic view of the Atonement, he dwelt on the work of Christ in the heart of man. Arndt was much venerated by the German *Pietists.

Works ed. by J. J. Rambach (8 vols., Leipzig, 1734–6). Eng. tr. of parts of Vier Bücher vom wahren Christentum as True Christianity by P. Erb (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1979), with introd. W. Koepp, Johann Arndt: Eine Untersuchung über die Mystik im Luthertum (1912), with bibl. F. J. Winter, Johann Arndt, der Verfasser des 'Wahren Christentums' (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, 101–2, 1911); E. Weber, Johann Arndts Vier Bücher vom Wahren Christentum als Beitrag zur protestantischen Irenik des 17. Jahrhunderts (Schriften des Instituts für Wissenschaftliche Irenik der Johann Wolfgang Goethe Universität, Frankfurt am Main, 2; Marburg, 1969). C. Braw, Bücher im Staube: Die Theologie Johann Arndts in ihrem Verhältnis zur Mystik (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 39; Leiden, 1985). M. Schmidt in TRE 4 (1979), pp. 121–9, s.v.

Arnobius (3rd–4th cent.). A Christian apologist who flourished in the time of *Diocletian (284–305). Acc. to *Jerome, he was a rhetorician at Sicca in proconsular Africa, converted to Christianity by a dream. In his 'Adversus Nationes', a treatise full of curious learning, he defended the consonance of the Christian religion with the best pagan philosophy. *Lactantius was his pupil.

Editio princeps of the Adversus Nationes by Faustus Sabaeus [Brixianus] at Rome, 1543. J. P. Migne, PL 5. 349–1372. Crit. edns. by A. Reifferscheid (CSEL 4; 1875), C. Marchesi (Turin, 1934; 2nd edn., 1953), and H. Le Bonniec (Collection des Universités de France, 1982 ff.). Eng. trs. by A. H. Bryce and H. Campbell (ANCL 19; 1871) and G. E. McCracken (ACW 7–8; 1949). F. Gabarrou, Arnobe, son œuvre (1921); id., Le Latin d'Arnobe (1921); E. Rapisarda, Arnobio (1946); P. Krafft, Beiträge zur Wirkungsgeschichte des älteren Arnobius (Klassisch-Philologische Studien, 32; 1966); M. B. Simmons, Arnobius of Sicca (Oxford Early Christian Studies, 1995). P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, 3 (1905), pp. 241–86. L. Berkowitz, Index Arnobianus (Hildesheim, 1967). J. Quasten, Patrology, 2 (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 383–92. P. Siniscalco in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 377–9, s.v.; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 82, with further bibl.

Arnobius Junior (5th cent.). He was a monk, possibly of African origin, who has left an account of a debate held *c.*450 between himself and an Egyptian *Monophysite ('Conflictus cum Serapione'). He also wrote allegorizing 'Commentaries' on the Pss., some notes on the Gospels, and a 'Liber ad Gregoriam', a letter to an aristocratic lady of Rome. G. *Morin ascribed to him the '*Praedestinatus' (q.v.), but this attribution is problematic.

Editio princeps of his Commentaries by *Erasmus (Basle, 1522), of his 'Expositiunculae in Evangelium' by G. Cognatus [i.e. Cousin] (Basle, 1543). Complete text of the latter pr. by G. Morin, OSB, in Anecdota Maredsolana, 3 (pt. 3; Maredsous and Oxford, 1903), pp. 129–51. Collected edn. in J. P. Migne, PL 53. 237–692, and suppl. 3 (1963), 213–56. Crit. edn. of his Opera by K.-D. Daur (CCLS, 25 and 25A; 1990–2). C. Pifarré, Arnobio el Joven y la Cristología del 'Conflictus' (Scripta et Documenta, 35; Montserrat, 1988). B. Studer in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 567–9, with further bibl. P. de Labriolle in DHGE 4 (1930), cols. 547–9.

Arnold of Brescia (d. 1155), reformer. Almost certainly a native of Brescia, Arnold studied in France before returning to Italy and becoming a *canon regular. His preaching against the worldliness of the Church led him to take a leading part in the conflict between the bishop and reformers in Brescia. As a result, in *c.*1139, he was forced to return to France. He became a supporter of Peter *Abelard, and at the Council of *Sens (1140), St *Bernard of Clairvaux secured his condemnation along with Abelard, on the grounds that he taught the same errors. Arnold later (1146/7) made his way to Rome. After a brief reconciliation with the Church, he gave his support to the Roman senate in its rejection of the temporal dominion of the popes; he was excommunicated by *Eugenius III on 15 July 1148. After the accession of the Emp. *Frederick Barbarossa, who made a treaty with the Pope on 16 Oct. 1152, the senate lost control of Rome. Arnold was captured by Barbarossa and condemned to death. He was handed over to the Prefect of the now subdued city and hanged; the ashes of his body were thrown into the Tiber. While *John of Salisbury showed respect for his austerity and quickness of mind, *Otto of Freising, less sympathetic, attributed to Arnold 'unsound' teaching on infant baptism and the Eucharist. It is probable that he discouraged his followers from receiving the sacraments from priests guilty of *simony; and told them to confess to one another rather than to such priests. It seems, however, that like other reformers at the time, he was mainly concerned to revive the ideal of apostolic poverty. He developed this into an assault (readily adopted by political rebels) on the possession of worldly goods and the exercise of secular authority by the Church.

The primary sources are the Gesta Friderici of Otto of Freising, the letters of Bernard of Clairvaux and the Historia Pontificalis of John of Salisbury; on the last, see text of R. L. Poole (Oxford, 1927), pp. lviii–lxx. W. v. Giesebrecht, 'Ueber Arnold von Brescia', Sb. (Bayr.), 3 (1873), pp. 122–54; K. Hampe, 'Zur Geschichte Arnolds von Brescia', Historische Zeitschrift, 130 (1924), pp. 58–69; G. W. Greenaway, Arnold of Brescia (1931), with discussion of sources, pp. 205–10, and of modern studies, pp. 211–17. A. Frugoni, Arnaldo da Brescia nelle fonti del secolo XII (Istituto storico Italiano per il medio evo. Studi storici, 8–9; 1954). H. Grundmann, Bibliographie zur Ketzergeschichte des Mittelalters (1900–1966) (Sussidi Eruditi, 20; Rome, 1967), pp. 22 f. (nos. 101–13). A. Frugoni in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 4 (1962), pp. 247–50; R. Manselli in TRE 4 (1979), pp. 129–33, both s.v.

Arnold, Gottfried (1666–1714), German Protestant theologian and devotional writer. A native of Annaberg in Saxony, he studied theology at *Wittenberg from 1685 to 1689, when, following the advice of P. J. *Spener, he accepted a position as private tutor at Dresden. Under Spener's influence he experienced a conversion. In 1693 he went to Quedlinburg, where he wrote his first important work, Die erste Liebe (1696), an enthusiastic account of the life of the first Christians, founded on his *patristic studies and especially the work of W. *Cave. The book earned him a call to Giessen as professor of Church history in 1697, a post which he resigned in the following year because he found it too distracting. He returned to Quedlinburg, where he wrote his principal work, the Unparteiische Kirchen- und Ketzer-Historie (1699–1700). Though not as impartial as its title claims, it is important esp. as a history of Protestant mysticism and for its use of many out-of-the-way documents on the movement. The opposition of the official Lutheran Church led him to form close connections with representatives of a more personal spirituality such as J. G. *Gichtel. His Geheimnis der göttlichen Sophia (1700) abounds in strange speculations on the androgynous nature of the first man, lost by the Fall, and recovered through Christ. After his marriage in 1701 he devoted himself increasingly to pastoral work. In 1704 he became inspector and pastor at Werben, and in 1707 at Perleberg. His writings of this later period are devotional and less eccentric, among the most popular being his Historia et Descriptio Theologiae Mysticae (Frankfurt, 1702; Ger. tr., 1703), Geistliche Gestalt eines evangelischen Lehrers (1704), and Wahre Abbildung des inwendigen Christentums (1709). He is also well known as an author of hymns, and he published translations of M. *Molinos and Mme *Guyon, and edited the works of *Angelus Silesius.

Modern edn. of his Geistliche Lieder by R. C. Ehmann (Stuttgart, 1856; with Life, pp. 1–43). Selected writings reproduced in facsimile, with introd, in vol. 1 by W. Nigg (Stuttgart and Bad Cannstatt, 1963 ff.). F. Dibelius, Gottfried Arnold: Sein Leben und seine Bedeutung für Kirche und Theologie (1873); E. Seeberg, Gottfried Arnold: Die Wissenschaft und die Mystik seiner Zeit (1923); H. Dörries, Geist und Geschichte bei Gottfried Arnold (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, 51; 1963); T. Stählin, Gottfried Arnolds geistliche Dichtung: Glaube und Mystik (Veröffentlichungen der Evangelischen Gesellschaft für Liturgieforschung, 15; 1966). J. Büchsel, Gottfried Arnold: Sein Verständnis von Kirche und Wiedergeburt (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Pietismus, 8; 1970). P. C. Erb, Pietists, Protestants, and Mysticism: The Use of Late Medieval Spiritual Texts in the Work of Gottfried Arnold (1666–1714) (Pietist and Wesleyan Studies, 2; Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1989). M. Schmidt in TRE 4 (1979), pp. 136–40, s.v.

Arnold, Matthew (1822–88), poet and literary critic. He was the eldest son of T. *Arnold (q.v.). Born at Laleham, Surrey, he was educated at *Winchester, Rugby, and Balliol College, *Oxford, where he won the Newdigate Prize with his poem Cromwell (1843). In 1845 he was elected a Fellow of Oriel College; from 1847 to 1851 he was private secretary to Lord Lansdowne; and from 1851 to 1883 a Government Inspector of Schools. From 1857 to 1867 he was also Professor of Poetry at Oxford. In 1853 he published his Poems (including 'Sohrab and Rustum' and 'The Scholar Gipsy'); in 1855 his Poems (Second Series). 'Thyrsis' and 'Rugby Chapel' both first appeared in New Poems (1867). His prose writings include On Translating Homer (1861), Essays in Criticism (1865; 2nd ser., 1888), and Culture and Anarchy (1869). For his religious views, St Paul and Protestantism (1870), Literature and Dogma (1873), God and the Bible (1875), and Last Essays on Church and Religion (1877) are of particular interest.

Matthew Arnold made it his mission to condemn the boorishness of the English, finding in 'culture' the cure for contemporary ills and a potent help towards the formation of human character. Religion, he held, was to be concerned with conduct and not with speculation about the nature of things. The power behind the universe is a moral one, and with it a moral tendency which resides in man is in sympathy. These truths Arnold held to be manifested in the OT belief that righteousness, which God approves, exalts a nation; but he deplored the superstitious *bibliolatry, alien from the scientific spirit of the age, which interpreted with literalness such poetic images as the hope of the *Messiah. The religion of Jesus had shown advance by laying stress on personal rather than national conduct, and had suffused morality with emotion and, therefore, with happiness.

Collected Works, 15 vols., London, 1903–4 (with bibl. by T. B. Smart). Prose Works also ed. R. H. Super (11 vols., Ann Arbor, Mich., 1960–77). Modern edns. of his Poems by C. B. Tinker and H. F. Lowry (London, 1950) and K. Allott (ibid., 1965). Letters, 1848–1888, ed. G. W. E. Russell (2 vols., 1895); Letters to Arthur Hugh Clough, ed. H. F. Lowry (1932). Note-Books, ed. H. F. Lowry, K. Young, and W. H. Dunn (1952). Studies by G. Saintsbury ('Modern English Writers', 1899), H. W. Paul ('English Men of Letters', 1902), W. H. Dawson (New York and London, 1904), G. W. E. Russell ('Literary Lives', 1904), Hugh Kingsmill (pseud., 1928), L. Trilling (New York, 1939), E. K. Chambers (Oxford, 1947), D. G. James (ibid., 1961), H. C. Duffin (London, 1962), W. D. Anderson (Ann Arbor, Mich., 1965), A. D. Culler (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1966), G. R. Strange (Princeton, NJ, 1967), D. Bush (London, 1971), and ed. K. Allott (ibid., 1975). Life by P. Honan (London, 1981). C. B. Tinker and H. F. Lowry, The Poetry of Matthew Arnold: A Commentary (1940). W. Robbins, The Ethical Idealism of Matthew Arnold: A Study of the Nature and Sources of his Moral and Religious Ideas (1959). R. apRoberts, Arnold and God (Berkeley, Calif., and London, 1983); J. C. Livingston, Matthew Arnold and Christianity (Columbia, SC [1986]). R. Garnett in DNB, Suppl. 1 (1901), pp. 70–5, s.v.

Arnold, Thomas (1795–1842), Headmaster of Rugby. A widely-read classical scholar, he was a Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, from 1815 to 1819, where he was a contemporary of John *Keble and R. D. *Hampden. In 1828 he was appointed Headmaster of Rugby. Here he aimed at fostering a system of education based on a carefully laid foundation of religious training. He made it his goal to educate the sons of middle-class parents, who began to flock into the public schools towards the close of his lifetime, into a high sense of duty, of public service, and of the importance of personal character. He believed in the essential unity of the secular and religious, of Church and State, and in the universal priesthood of the laity. His influence on the young men of his generation was considerable; he was one of the founders of the *Broad Church movement, and his liberalism, both theological and political, found sympathetic echoes in later Victorian thought. He objected to the *Tractarians on the ground of their ecclesiasticism, and vigorously attacked them in an article entitled 'Dr Hampden and the Oxford Malignants' in the Edinburgh Review of 1836. In 1841 he was appointed Regius Professor of Modern History at Oxford, but died while still in his prime in the following year. His ecclesiastical ideals were epitomized in his Principles of Church Reform (1833). He also issued works on classical subjects and some volumes of sermons.

Miscellaneous Works collected and ed. by A. P. *Stanley (London, 1845). Id., The Life and Correspondence of Thomas Arnold (2 vols., 1844). Other studies by E. J. Worboise (London, 1859), J. J. Findlay (ed.; Cambridge, 1897), R. J. Campbell (London, 1927), A. Whitridge (ibid., 1928), N. Wymer (ibid., 1953), T. W. Bamford (ibid., 1960), and E. L. Williamson, Jun. (University, Ala., 1964). M. McCrum, Thomas Arnold, Headmaster: A Reassessment (Oxford, 1989). T. Walrond in DNB 2 (1885), pp. 113–17, s.v.

Arnulf, St (*c.*580–*c.*640), also Arnoul, Bp. of Metz. A member of a noble Frankish family whose lands were concentrated around Metz and Verdun, he rapidly rose to high position in the court of Theodebert II, King of Austrasia (595–612). Renouncing his desire for a solitary life, he became domesticus to Theodebert and then took an active part in securing the accession of Clothar II in 613. He was consecrated Bp. of Metz *c.*614, and from 623 assisted Clothar's son, Dagobert, in the government of his kingdom in the Ardennes. He took part in the Councils of Clichy (*c.*626–7) and of *Reims (*c.*627), and was eventually allowed to resign his see. He joined his friend Romaric in retirement in a deserted place near Remiremont in the Vosges, where he spent the rest of his life in meditation and prayer. Before he was consecrated bishop he had been married to the daughter of the Count of Boulogne. One of his sons, Clodulf, was his third successor in the see of Metz; by the marriage of the other, Ansegisel, with Begga, daughter of Pepin II, Mayor of the Palace of Austrasia, he became an ancestor of the Carolingian kings of France. The liturgical cult of Arnulf was established by the late 8th cent. Feast day, 18 July or 16 Aug.

The principal authority is an anonymous contemporary Lat. Life pr. in AASS, Jul. 4 (1735), pp. 435–40; a further Life, mainly dependent on it, dating from the reign of Louis II (846–79) and attributed to Umno, ibid., pp. 440–5; crit. edn. of the former by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 2 (1888), pp. 426–46. J. Depoin, 'Grandes Figures monacales des temps mérovingiens: Saint Arnoul de Metz. Études de critique historique', Revue Mabillon, 11 (1921), pp. 245–58; 12 (1922), pp. 13–25, 105–18. E. Hlawitschka, 'Die Vorfahren Karls des Grossen', in W. Braunfels (ed.), Karl der Grosse, 1 (Düsseldorf, 1965), pp. 50–82, esp. pp. 51–8 and 73; O. G. Oexle, 'Die Karolinger und die Stadt des heiligen Arnulf', Frühmittelalterliche Studien, 1 (1967), pp. 250–364, esp. pp. 270–9 and 345–61 (on the cult).

ars praedicandi (Lat., 'the art of preaching'). The medieval artes praedicandi provided instruction in the composition of sermons either as an adjunct to a collection of sermons or as a manual which circulated with other aids for the preacher. Although this literature reflects the teaching of earlier Church writers such as St *Augustine, St *Gregory, St *Isidore, or *Rabanus Maurus, and is influenced by the rhetorical principles of Cicero, Quintilian, and the Rhetorica ad Herennium, it did not assume its distinctive form until the 12th cent. Guibert of Nogent's (d. 1124) Quo Ordine Sermo Fieri Debeat is an early witness to a systematic study of sermon composition. The sermon collections of *Honorius 'of Autun', Maurice of Sully (d. 1196) and *Peter the Chanter also contain material of this kind, but the first major example is *Alan of Lille's Ars Praedicandi. Alan deals with preaching as public instruction in morals and faith, addressed to those who seek to be informed, drawing on reason and authority, and besides general advice supplies an anthology of source material.

Over 300 artes praedicandi have survived from the 13th to the 16th cent. Some are intended for mendicant missioners or priests with a care of souls; others are designed for preachers of the highly structured thematic sermon to learned congregations. *Humbert of Romans in his De Eruditione Praedicatorum displays a concern with the adaptation of preaching to different congregations. Robert of Basevorn, Forma Praedicandi (1322) and Thomas Waleys, OP, De Modo Componendi Sermones (*c.*1340), are representative of manuals for thematic preaching, with sections on the choice of theme and protheme, the technique of division and subdivision, the use of confirmatory authorities and development (dilatatio) of the divisions, as well as advice on delivery.

Description of the artes, with indications of the MSS, are given by T. M. Charland, OP, Artes Praedicandi (Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales d'Ottawa, 7; 1936); and H. Caplan, Mediaeval Artes Praedicandi: A Hand-List (Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, 24; 1934); id., Mediaeval Artes Praedicandi: A Supplementary Hand-List (ibid. 25; 1936). Pr. edns. are listed by H. Caplan and H. H. King, 'Latin Tractates on Preaching: A Book-List', HTR 42 (1949), pp. 185–206; S. Gallick, 'Artes praedicandi: Early Printed Editions', Mediaeval Studies, 39 (1977), pp. 477–89. Edns. of texts mentioned: Guibert of Nogent, Quo Ordine Sermo Fieri Debeat, in J. P. Migne, PL 156. 21–32; Alan of Lille, Ars Praedicandi, ibid. 210. 109–98; Eng. tr. by G. R. Evans (Cistercian Fathers Series, 23; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1981); Humbert of Romans, De Eruditione Praedicatorum, lib. 1, in his Opera de Vita Regulari, ed. J. J. Berthier, OP, 2 (Rome, 1889; repr. Turin, 1956), pp. 373–484; Eng. tr., ed. W. M. Conlon (Westminster, Md., 1951); lib. 2, partial edn., Bibliotheca Maxima Veterum Patrum, 25 (Lyons, 1677), pp. 456–567; Robert of Basevorn, Forma Praedicandi, ed. Charland, op. cit., pp. 233–323; Eng. tr. by L. Krul, OSB, in J. J. Murphy (ed.), Three Medieval Rhetorical Arts (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1971), pp. 109–215; Thomas Waleys, OP, De Modo Componendi Sermones, ed. Charland, op. cit., pp. 327–403. Study by J. Longère, La prédication médiévale (1983), pp. 195–202. M. G. Briscoe in J. R. Strayer (ed.), Dictionary of the Middle Ages, 1 (1982), pp. 555–58, s.v.

Artemon (also Artemas) (3rd cent.),*Adoptionist heretic. He is mentioned twice by *Eusebius, who says that *Paul of Samosata revived his heresy (HE 5. 28 and 7. 30. 16 f.). Eusebius asserts that the '*Little Labyrinth' was directed against Artemon's teaching, though the passages he quotes concern only the heresy of *Theodotus the Cobbler and his namesake; there is no other evidence about the teaching of Artemon. If the 'Little Labyrinth' was directed against Artemon, it would appear that he taught in Rome, perhaps before 235. However, the letter of the synod which condemned Paul of Samosata in 268, quoted by Eusebius, names 'Artemas' as the father of Paul's heresy, and implies that he was then still alive (ibid. 7. 30. 16 f.). Later writers who mention Artemon appear to derive their information from Eusebius.

*Epiphanius, Haer. 65. 1. 4; *Theodoret, Haer. Fab. 2. 4; and *Photius, Biblioth. 48. R. H. *Connolly, OSB, 'Eusebius H.E. v. 28', JTS 49 (1948), pp. 73–9. P. Salmon in DCB 1 (1877), p. 174, s.v.

Articles. See FORTY-TWO ARTICLES; IRISH ARTICLES; LAMBETH ARTICLES; ORGANIC ARTICLES; SIX ARTICLES; TEN ARTICLES; THIRTEEN ARTICLES; THIRTY-NINE ARTICLES; TWELVE ARTICLES.

artophorion (Gk. ἀρτοφόριον). In the E. Church, the *tabernacle on the altar in which the Blessed Sacrament is reserved; also the small portable ones used for taking Communion to the sick.

Arundel, Thomas (1353–1414), Abp. of *Canterbury. A prominent politician and twice Chancellor under Richard II (1386–9 and 1391–6), he was consecrated Bp. of *Ely in 1374, and translated to *York in 1388 and to Canterbury in 1396. In 1397 he was impeached in parliament and banished. At the request of Richard II, Pope Boniface IX deprived him of the see of Canterbury by translating him to St Andrews (which did not recognize the authority of Boniface). Restored to Canterbury in 1399, he was three times Chancellor under Henry IV, and remained in possession of his see until his death. He was a prominent opponent of the *Lollards, holding a provincial council against them at *Oxford in 1408, seeking out Lollard writings, and showing himself active in the persecution carried out against them; his Constitutions, drafted in 1407 and issued in 1409, were intended to ensure orthodoxy in the English Church.

M. [E.] Aston, Thomas Arundel: A Study of Church Life in the Reign of Richard II (Oxford, 1967). K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity [1953], pp. 150–5 and 161–5. R. G. Davies, 'Thomas Arundel as Archbishop of Canterbury, 1396–1414', JEH 24 (1973), pp. 9–21. J. Gairdner in DNB 2 (1885), pp. 137–41, s.v.; BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 51–3.

Asaph, St (late 6th cent.), Welsh saint. Jocelin of Furness (12th cent.) refers to a little book on the life of St Asaph in which he is said to have been a disciple of St *Kentigern, when the latter was in exile at Llanelwy (later called *St Asaph, q.v.) in Wales. When Kentigern returned to Scotland, Asaph succeeded him as head of the monastery of Llanelwy, and became the first Welsh bishop of the see. Nothing more is definitely known of him. Names from the OT were popular in early Wales; Asaph doubtless took his name from the Asaph to whom are attributed Pss. 50 and 73–83.

Jocelin's 'Life of Kentigern', chs. 25 and 31; conveniently pr. by A. P. *Forbes, Lives of S. Ninian and S. Kentigern (Historians of Scotland, 5; 1874), pp. 204–6 and 215–16, with Eng. tr., pp. 78–81 and 90–2. S. Baring-Gould and J. Fisher, The Lives of the British Saints, 1 (1907), pp. 177–85; A. W. Wade-Evans, Welsh Christian Origins (Oxford, 1934), pp. 191–4.

Asbury, Francis (1745–1816). One of the two first *Methodist bishops in America. Sent to America by J. *Wesley in 1771, he was very soon given supervision of all Methodist work in the country. When the American Methodists became a separate organization in 1784, he and Thomas *Coke became joint superintendents. His journal from 1771 has much valuable historical matter. He travelled widely throughout the newly independent American States and continued the work of organization and administration until his death.

Modern edn. of his Journal and Letters by E. T. Clark and others (3 vols., London and Nashville, 1958). Lives by J. Lewis (London, 1927), H. Asbury (New York, 1927), W. L. Duren (ibid., 1928), and La V. C. Rudolph (Nashville, 1966). F. Baker, From Wesley to Asbury (Durham, NC, 1976), esp. pp. 105–41.

Ascension of Christ. The statement in the Creeds that Christ 'ascended into heaven' is based mainly on Acts 1: 1–9 where, after 40 days of appearances, the Risen Lord speaks to the Apostles about the coming of the *Holy Spirit and the Church's mission, and is then taken up in a cloud. The reference to the Apostles' return to Jerusalem from the Mount of *Olives (Acts 1: 12) gave rise to the tradition that this is where it took place. Lk. 24: 50–3 by contrast seems to imply that this withdrawal of Christ into Heaven occurred at *Bethany on the evening of the day of the Resurrection. Behind St *Luke's narrative stands the universal conviction of the early Church that God had vindicated Jesus after His crucifixion, and the expression of this mystery in the biblical language of exaltation, heavenly session, and resurrection (see RESURRECTION OF CHRIST). The language of exaltation and ascension is developed most profoundly in the Fourth Gospel where it balances that of *Incarnation. Its roots may be found in early Judaism (e.g. Dan. 7: 13; cf. Jn. 6: 62) and legends of the Assumption of *Moses and the Ascension of *Elijah, *Enoch, *Isaiah, etc. The idea is present in other parts of the NT: Eph. 4: 8–10, Heb. 4: 14, 6: 20, 7: 26, 8: 1, 1 Pet. 3: 22, 1 Tim. 3: 16.

For Christians the Ascension marks the solemn close of the post-Resurrection appearances and signifies the rule of Christ in the present (cf. 1 Cor. 15: 25). It is associated through Ps. 110: 1 with the idea of heavenly session at God's right hand (cf. Mk. 12: 36 and parallels, 14: 62 and parallels, 16: 19; Acts 2: 33, Rom. 8: 34, Col. 3: 1, Eph. 1: 20, Heb. 1: 3 and 13, 8: 1, 10: 12 f., 12: 2). Doctrinally it implies Christ's humanity being taken into Heaven and its hold on the Christian imagination is evidenced by the importance of the motif in Christian *iconography.

Ascension Day is one of the chief feasts of the Christian year. It is kept on the sixth Thursday, i.e. the 40th day, after *Easter. There is widespread testimony (e.g. in *Chrysostom, *Egeria, and *Socrates) to its celebration from the later years of the 4th cent. In early times its observance was frequently, if not always, marked by a procession, apparently to commemorate Christ's journey to the Mount of Olives. Acc. to W. usage, the *Paschal Candle, lighted during more important services in Eastertide, was until 1970 extinguished after the Gospel at Mass on Ascension Day. In the BCP Proper Psalms (8, 15, 21; 24, 47, 108) are appointed for the day itself and a Proper Preface for use throughout the *octave. Modern Anglican liturgies make similar provision, in some cases following the 1970 Missale Romanum in directing that the Preface for the Ascension be used until the Saturday before *Whitsunday.

V. Larrañaga, SJ, La Ascensión del Señor en el Nuevo Testamento (2 vols., 1943; earlier Fr. tr., Rome, 1938). J. G. Davies, He Ascended into Heaven: A Study in the History of Doctrine (Bampton Lectures, 1958; 1958), with bibl. R. Cabié, La Pentecôte: L'Évolution de la Cinquantaine pascale au cours des cinq premiers siècles [1965], pp. 185–97. G. Lohfink, Die Himmelfahrt Jesu: Untersuchungen zu den Himmelfahrts- und Erhöhungstexten bei Lukas (Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, 26; 1971). N. Gkioles, Ἡ Ἀνάληψις τοῦ Χριστοῦ βάσει τῶν μνημειῶν τῆς α′ χιλιετηρίδος (Βιβλιοθήκη Σοφίας Ν. Σαριπόλου, 41; Athens, 1981). B. K. Donne, Christ Ascended: A Study in the Significance of the Ascension of Jesus Christ in the New Testament (Exeter, 1983).

Ascension of Isaiah. See ISAIAH, ASCENSION OF.

Ascent of Mount Carmel, The. The title of a famous treatise by St *John of the Cross (q.v.).

ascetical theology. See SPIRITUALITY and PURGATIVE, ILLUMINATIVE, AND UNITIVE WAYS.

asceticism. The term is derived from Gk. ἄσκησις ('exercise', 'training') already applied by the Greek philosophers to moral training, often with the connotation of voluntary abstention from certain pleasures; it denotes (1) practices employed to combat vices and develop virtues and (2) the renunciation of various facets of customary social life and comfort or the adoption of painful conditions for religious reasons. It is found in one form or another in many of the world's religions, esp. those of the Indian subcontinent. In the NT the word occurs only once—as a verb, ἀσκεῖν, 'to strive'—at Acts 24: 16. In 1 Cor. 9: 25 the Christian life is compared to the games in which 'every man that striveth ... is temperate in all things'. But the idea, present already in the OT, esp. in the *Wisdom books, is prominent throughout the NT. It is summed up in the Lord's call to His disciples: 'If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me' (Mk. 8: 34), with its emphasis on the two sides of Christian asceticism, the negative one of self-denial and the positive one of the following of Christ. This invitation to practice self-abnegation is frequently reiterated, mostly in very strong terms (Mt. 10: 38 f., Jn. 12: 25), being shown to involve constant watchfulness (Mt. 24: 42, 25: 13, etc.) and fasting (Mt. 6: 16–18; Mk. 2: 18–20) and, in many cases, renunciation of all earthly possessions (Mt. 19: 21, Mk. 10: 28, Lk. 9: 57–62) and perpetual chastity (Mt. 19: 12). St *Paul counsels the same ideal, repeatedly inculcating the necessity of keeping up the struggle against the inclinations of the 'old man' (e.g. Rom. 8: 13 and 1 Cor. 9: 26 f.).

In the early Christian centuries many ascetic practices seem to have become fairly widespread, the chief of them being renunciation of marriage, home, and property; some ascetics practised extreme forms of fasting and self-deprivation. In the popular mind there seems to have been an association between the abandonment of human comforts and the acquisition of miraculous powers. *Clement of Alexandria and *Origen appear to have been the first Fathers to study the theoretical foundations of asceticism. Taking over from the *Stoics the idea of ascetic action as a purification of the soul from its passions, they see in it a necessary means for loving God more perfectly and for attaining to contemplation. Origen also stresses its value as preparation for martyrdom. The Desert Fathers from the late 3rd cent. and the subsequent monastic tradition increasingly tended to favour a more temperate external asceticism and laid more stress on interior abnegation and the cultivation of the virtues. The monks came to be regarded as the leading representatives of asceticism and it is from them that the most influential ascetic treatises come, such as the 'Conferences' of *Cassian and of *Dorotheus.

With the growing devotion to the humanity of Christ, esp. to His Passion, in the Middle Ages asceticism underwent a certain modification in that it became increasingly inspired by the desire for conformation to the sufferings of the Redeemer. This desire, often coupled with a strongly penitential attitude and a rather pessimistic view of human life, led to the adoption of rather more violent forms of asceticism, such as flagellation and the wearing of hair shirts and chains. This devotional, penitential asceticism was popularized esp. by the *Mendicant orders, whose members produced many treatises on the ascetic life. Early in the 15th cent. the '*Imitation of Christ' developed a new doctrine of the inner life on the basis of an exacting asceticism.

At the close of the Middle Ages there appeared a twofold reaction against the late medieval ascetic ideal. On the one hand a variety of movements, some of them inspired by the humanism of the Renaissance, stressed the interior life and called into question the value of external ascetic practices; on the other hand the Protestant Reformers, with their insistence on *justification by faith, denied the propriety of many conventional works of penance, though they did allow a certain value to some works of self-discipline, such as fasting, provided these were not seen as in any way contributing to justification. Despite these challenges the ascetical ideal, upheld by the Council of *Trent, continued to find its champions in such austere saints as *Peter of Alcántara, *John of the Cross, and later in the *Curé d'Ars, as well as in new *congregations and reformed branches of old orders such as the *Passionists or the *Trappists. At the same time a more exclusively interior and hidden asceticism of complete renunciation of the will found expression in other modern Institutes, e.g. the *Jesuits and the *Visitation Nuns. Among the *Puritans asceticism, in the negative sense of abstinence from particular pleasures or recreations, was widely upheld and practised. In a more positive sense it also found an important place in *Methodism and esp. among the *Tractarian divines and their successors. It led to the wide revival of religious communities in England in the 19th cent. An exaggerated asceticism has been the mark of some sects, e.g. of the *Montanists, *Gnostics, and *Manichaeans of the patristic period, and of the medieval *Cathari and *Waldenses, where it was usually combined with dualistic tendencies in theology.

Acc. to its classical Christian exponents asceticism is a necessary means of fighting the concupiscence of the flesh, of the eyes, and the pride of life, mentioned in 1 Jn. 2: 16. It is also of great value as an imitation of the sacrificial life of Christ and as a means of expiation of one's own sins and those of others, in virtue of the doctrine of the Mystical Body. It springs from the love of God and aims at overcoming all the obstacles to this love in the soul. It is thus not an end in itself but essentially a preparation for the life of union with God, since, in its positive aspect, it seeks to foster the interior tendencies that serve to develop the life of charity.

M. J. Rouët de Journel, SJ, and J. Dutilleul, SJ (eds.), Enchiridion Asceticum (Freiburg i.B., 1930; mainly patristic); H. Koch, Quellen zur Geschichte der Askese und des Mönchtums in der alten Kirche (1933). O. Zöckler, Kritische Geschichte der Askese (1863; 2nd edn. as Askese und Mönchtum, 2 vols., 1897). H. Strathmann, Geschichte der frühchristlichen Askese bis zur Entstehung des Mönchtums (1914). M. Viller, SJ, and K. *Rahner, SJ, Aszese und Mystik in der Väterzeit (1939). P. Nagel, Die Motivierung der Askese in der Alten Kirche und der Ursprung des Mönchtums (TU 95; 1966). B. Lohse, Askese und Mönchtum in der Antike und in der alten Kirche (Religion und Kultur der alten Mittelmeerwelt in Parallelforschungen, 1; 1969). W. J. Sheils (ed.), Monks, Hermits and the Ascetic Tradition (Studies in Church History, 22; Oxford, 1985). S. Elm, 'Virgins of God': The Making of Asceticism in Late Antiquity (Oxford Classical Monographs, 1994). V. L. Wimbush and R. Valantasis (eds.), Asceticism (New York and Oxford, 1995). A. Vööbus, History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient (CSCO 184, 197, and 500; Subsidia, 14, 17, and 81; Louvain, 1958–88). M. Black, 'The Tradition of Hasidaean-Essene Asceticism: its origins and its influence', in Aspects du Judéo-Christianisme: Colloque de Strasbourg 23–25 avril 1964 (Travaux du Centre d'Études supérieures spécialisé d'Histoire des Religions de Strasbourg, 1965), pp. 19–33; G. Quispel, 'L'Évangile selon Thomas et les origines de l'ascèse chrétienne', ibid., pp. 35–52. R. Murray, SJ, 'The Features of the Earliest Christian Asceticism', in P. Brooks (ed.), Christian Spirituality: Essays in Honour of Gordon Rupp (1975), pp. 66–77. L. Gougaud, OSB, Dévotions et pratiques ascétiques du moyen âge (Collection 'Pax', 21; 1925; Eng. tr., 1927). J. de Ghellinck, SJ, Patristique et Moyen Age, 3 (1948), pp. 185–244 (Étude 5: Un Programme de lectures spirituelles dans les écrits des pères). O. Zöckler in HERE 2 (1907), pp. 73–80, s.v. 'Asceticism (Christian)'; J. de Guibert, SJ, and others in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 936–1010, s.v. 'Ascèse, Ascétisme'. See also works cited under SPIRITUALITY.

aseity (Lat. aseitas, from [ens] a se, 'being from itself'). The quality in virtue of which a being exists of and from itself alone. Acc. to Christian teaching, it is realized solely in God and distinguishes Him from all created beings, whose existence, as it issues ultimately from Him, is derivative from something outside itself (ens ab alio).

Ash Wednesday. The first day of *Lent, six and a half weeks before *Easter. Down to the 7th cent., Lent began with *Quadragesima Sunday, as it still does in the *Ambrosian Rite. The four extra days were added later to secure the exact number of 40 week-days for the fast. At one time public penitents at Rome were ceremonially admitted to begin their penance on this day; and when this discipline fell into disuse, between the 8th and 10th cents., the general penance of the whole congregation took its place. This was symbolized by the imposition of ashes, in token of mourning and penitence, upon the heads of clergy and people, a rite still ordered for Ash Wednesday in the Roman Missal. In the BCP of 1549 and in subsequent editions the *Commination Service is prescribed for this day. In the American Books of 1929 and 1979 Ash Wednesday is mentioned as a special fast-day (with *Good Friday), and in the Scottish Book of 1929 it is named (together with the six days before Easter) a 'Greater Fast'. In the RC Church Ash Wednesday and Good Friday are now the only days on which fasting is prescribed universally.

H. Thurston, SJ, Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 84–99. K. W. Stevenson, Worship: Wonderful and Sacred Mystery (Washington, DC [1992]), pp. 159–87 ('Origins and Development of Ash Wednesday'). F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 2 (1910), cols. 3037–44, s.v. 'Cendres', with bibl.

Asherah. A Hebrew feminine proper name, used in the OT of a *Canaanite goddess (1 Kgs. 15: 13, 2 Kgs. 21: 7 [RV]) and of the sacred pole erected as her symbol (1 Kgs. 16: 33, 2 Kgs. 13: 6 [RV]). (The AV consistently renders the word 'grove'; cf. LXX ἄλσος, Vulg. lucus.) The poles were set up near the Canaanite altars, which in early times were often built under green trees. The Israelites adopted them, along with other appurtenances of the religion which they found in existence when they settled in Canaan, but their destruction was ordered in the Hebrew legislation (Deut. 7: 5, 12: 3).

J. Day, 'Asherah in the Hebrew Bible and Northwest Semitic Literature', Journal of Biblical Literature, 105 (1986), pp. 385–408. W. A. Maier, 'Ašerah: Extrabiblical Evidence (Harvard Semitic Monographs, 37; Atlanta, 1986). S. M. Olyan, Asherah and the Cult of Yahweh in Israel (Society of Biblical Literature, Monograph Series, 34; Atlanta, 1988). T. S. Frymer in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 3 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 703–5, s.v., with bibl.

Aske, Robert (d. 1537), leader of the '*Pilgrimage of Grace' (q.v.). Descended from an old Yorkshire family, he became an attorney and Fellow of Gray's Inn. On 13 Oct. 1536 he put himself at the head of the 'Pilgrimage' when rebellion broke out in Yorkshire. After treating on equal terms with the royal leaders sent to suppress the rising and obtaining a safe-conduct to *Henry VIII, he returned northwards early in 1537 with a promise that the grievances would be redressed. A fresh outbreak provided a pretext for a change in the outwardly conciliatory attitude of the King, and by May 1537 Aske had been seized and found himself a prisoner in the Tower of London. He was charged and condemned at Westminster for high treason, taken back to the North, and in July 1537 hanged in chains at *York.

Aske's own account of his capture in Lincs, his examination, and other related documents preserved in the Public Record Office are ed. by M. Bateson in EHR 5 (1890), pp. 330–45 and 550–73. J. *Gairdner in DNB 2 (1885), pp. 189 f., s.v. See also bibl. to PILGRIMAGE OF GRACE.

Askew (or Ayscough), Anne (1521–46), Protestant martyr. Of Lincolnshire descent, she separated from Thomas Kyme, her husband, a religious conservative, and in 1545 was arrested on account of her Eucharistic beliefs. Both Bp. E. *Bonner and Bp. S. *Gardiner examined her in a vain effort to make her recant; in an equally fruitless attempt to obtain incriminating information on leading Protestants at Court, she was subsequently illegally tortured by two Privy Councillors, Sir Richard Rich and the Lord Chancellor, Thomas Lord Wriothesley, apparently in person. She was burnt at *Smithfield on 16 July 1546. For the facts, the chief authority is two tracts by J. *Bale.

The tracts are J. Bale, The First Examination of the worthy Servant of God, Mistress Anne Askew (Marburg, 1546); id., The Latter Examination of Anne Askew (ibid., 1547); cf. also The Account of the Sufferings of Anne Askew ... written by herself (London, 1849). Charles Wriothesley, A Chronicle of England during the Reigns of the Tudors, ed. by W. D. Hamilton, 1 (Camden Society, 2nd ser. 11; 1875), pp. 155, 167–9. J. *Foxe, Acts and Monuments, ed. G. Townsend, 5 (1846), pp. 537–50.

Asperges. In the W. Church the ceremony of sprinkling *holy water over the altar and people after the entrance rite at Mass on Sundays. During the ceremony a chant from Ps. 51, 'Asperges me, Domine, hyssopo' ('Cleanse me, Lord') etc., has traditionally been sung, except in *Eastertide, when it was replaced by '*Vidi aquam'. Since 1970 alternative anthems have been provided and other suitable chants may be used. The ceremony certainly goes back to the 9th cent., when it was referred to by *Hincmar of Reims in his 'Epistola synodica'; it may now be omitted. The sprinkler used for the purpose is known as the 'aspergillum', 'aspersorium', or 'goupillon'.

L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, 1 (1932), pp. 476–80. C. Goeb, OSB, 'The Asperges', Orate Fratres, 2 (1927–8), pp. 338–42.

aspersion. The method of baptism whereby the candidate is merely sprinkled with the baptismal water. It is a variant of *affusion (in which the water is actually poured on the candidate), and is held to be permissible only in exceptional circumstances.

aspirant. One who aspires to a vocation to the *religious life.

Assemani (Syriac = 'Simon'). The family name of four famous *Maronite Orientalists of the 18th cent.

(1) Joseph Simonius (1687–1768). He was a native of Tripoli in Syria, who entered the Maronite College at Rome in 1703. After being ordained priest he obtained a post at the *Vatican Library and was sent to collect MSS in the E. by Clement XI in 1715, and again in 1735. In 1736 he attended the first National Maronite Council, where he used his influence to bring his countrymen into closer connection with Rome. Shortly afterwards he was nominated Abp. of Tyre and Prefect of the Vatican Library. His principal work, the Bibliotheca Orientalis (4 vols., 1719–28), is a collection of *Syriac documents, esp. on the history of the Churches of Syria, Chaldaea, and Egypt, by which Syriac literature was introduced into the W., and which, for great parts, has not been superseded. He also edited the works of St *Ephraem Syrus, Opera Ephraemi (6 vols., 1732–46), with Latin and Greek translations, and this is still the only complete edition. Among his other works are the unfinished Kalendaria Ecclesiae Universae (6 vols., 1755), designed as a collection of texts, inscriptions, etc., on all the saints of the world, Italicae Historiae Scriptores (4 vols., 1751–53), and the Bibliotheca Juris Orientalis Canonici et Civilis (5 vols., 1762–6).

(2) Stephen Evodius (1707–82), nephew of the former. He also studied at the Maronite College in Rome, was appointed missionary of the *Propaganda and travelled in Syria, Mesopotamia, and Egypt as well as in Europe, esp. in England. He assisted his uncle in cataloguing the MSS of the Vatican Library. At the suggestion of *Benedict XIV he edited Bibliothecae Mediceae-Laurentianae et Palatinae Codicum MSS Orientalium Catalogus (2 vols., 1742), Acta Sanctorum Martyrum Orientalium et Occidentalium (2 vols., 1748), and Bibliothecae Apostolicae Vaticanae Codicum MSS Catalogus.

(3) Joseph Aloysius (1710–82). His precise relationship to Joseph Simonius is not clear. He was professor of Syriac, later of Liturgy, at the Sapienza in Rome and edited Codex Liturgicus Ecclesiae Universae (13 vols., 1749–66), a valuable collection for the study of the E. liturgies; Commentarius Criticus de Ecclesiis (1766); and Commentaria de Catholicis seu Patriarchis Chaldaeorum et Nestorianorum (1775).

(4) Simon (1752–1821). He was a grand-nephew of Joseph Simonius. After studying at Rome, he went to Syria as a missionary. In 1785 he became professor of Oriental languages at the seminary of Padua, and in 1807 at Padua university. He published several works on Arabic subjects, among them an 'Essay on the Origin, Cult, Literature, and Customs of the Arabs before Mohammed' (1787) and the 'Catalogue of the Naniana Library' (2 vols., 1787–92), both in Italian, containing important MS extracts and essays on Arabic literature, coins, etc.

(1) J. Notain Daraunis (ed.), Series Chronologica Patriarcharum Antiochiae per Josephum Simonium Assemanum ... (1881), pp. 1–11. J. Debs, Kitâb tarîkh Sûriya, pt. 4, vol. 8 (Beirut, 1905), pp. 553–68. G. Levi Della Vida, Ricerche sulla formazione del più antico fondo dei manoscritti orientali della Biblioteca Vaticana (ST 92; 1939), passim. P. Mahfoud, Joseph Simon Assimani et la Célébration du Concile libanais maronite de 1736. Traduction française des mémoires d'un témoin avec introduction et notes (Corona Lateranensis, 5; 1965). G. Levi Della Vida in Dizionario Biographico degli Italiani, 4 (1962), pp. 437–40, s.v.

(2) J. Debs, op. cit., pp. 568–70. G. Levi Della Vida, Ricerche, passim.

(3 and 4) J. Debs, op. cit., pp. 570 f.

L. Petit, AA, in DACL 1 (1907), cols. 2973–80, s.vv.; P. Stair in EC 1 (1949), cols. 159–61, s.vv., both with bibl.

Assemblies of God. The name taken by many autonomous but normally loosely-associated national groupings of individual *Pentecostal Churches virtually forming a denomination within the Pentecostal movement. It was first taken by the earliest national organization of white Pentecostal Churches in the USA formed from independent assemblies in 1914. The importance of the Assemblies of God in comparison with other Pentecostal Churches varies in different countries. Their structure is generally Presbyterian in character, combining the autonomy of the local assembly with district and national councils. They commonly insist on *glossolalia ('tongues') as initial evidence of '*baptism in the Holy Spirit'. Extensive missions, among Christians and non-Christians, have been undertaken, particularly by the American Assemblies of God.

See works cited in bibl. to PENTECOSTALISM.

Assemblies of the French Clergy (Assemblées du Clergé de France). The quinquennial meetings of deputies of the French clergy which were an established institution in France from the end of the 16th cent. to the French Revolution. They were composed of elected representatives (half bishops, half other beneficed clergy) from the 16 provinces. Their functions were primarily to apportion the heavy financial burden laid on the clergy by the king, but increasingly they came to discuss ecclesiastical matters. The 'extraordinary' Assembly of 1682 incurred the disapproval of *Innocent XI by approving and adopting, at the behest of Louis XIV, the *Gallican Articles. An elaborate and successful technique of procedure enabled the Assemblies to exercise considerable financial influence.

Collection des Procès-verbaux des Assemblées-générales du Clergé de France, depuis l'année 1560, jusqu'à présent (10 vols., 1767–80). L. Serbat, Les Assemblées du Clergé de France: Origines, Organisation, Développement 1561–1615 (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, 154; 1906). P. Blet, SJ, Le Clergé de France et la Monarchie: Étude sur les Assemblées Générales du Clergé de 1615 à 1666 (Analecta Gregoriana, 106–7; 1959); id., Les Assemblées du Clergé et Louis XIV de 1670 à 1693 (ibid., 189; 1972). N. Ravitch, Sword and Mitre: Government and Episcopate in France and England in the Age of Aristocracy (The Hague and Paris, 1966), pp. 154–94 passim; R. [E.] Mousnier, Les Institutions de la France sous la Monarchie Absolue, 1 (1974), pp. 282–99; Eng. tr. (Chicago and London, 1979), pp. 358–82. M. Peronnet, 'Naissance d'une institution: les assemblées du clergé', in A. Stegmann (ed.), Pouvoir et institution en Europe au XVIème siècle: Vingt-septième Colloque International d'Études Humanistes, Tours (De Pétrarque à Descartes, 51; 1987), pp. 249–61. M. Marion in DHGE 4 (1930), cols. 1103–14, s.v. 'Assemblées du Clergé'.

Assent, Declaration of. A formal declaration of assent to the *Thirty-Nine Articles, the Book of *Common Prayer, and the *Ordinal (described as 'the historic formularies' of the C of E) which is legally required of all bishops, clergy, deaconesses, readers, registrars, chancellors, and lay workers of the C of E as a condition of taking office. The current form of the Declaration is prescribed by canon C 15 (1975). It is worded as a declaration of 'belief in the faith which is revealed in the Holy Scriptures and set forth in the catholic creeds and to which the historic formularies of the C of E bear witness'. The 1969 canon (amended in 1975) replaces the form of 1865, which was itself significantly looser than canon 36 of 1604 demanding 'that he acknowledgeth all and every the articles . . . being in number nine and thirty'. The Declaration also contains an undertaking only to use authorized forms of service.

Asses, Feast of (Lat. Festum asinorum). A religious celebration formerly observed at *Christmas (or in some cases on 14 Jan.) in certain French towns (e.g. Rouen, Beauvais), at which the prophecy of Balaam's ass (Num. 22) or alternatively the Flight of the Holy Family into Egypt (Mt. 2: 13–15) was dramatically represented.

T. J. Crowley in CE 1 (1907), pp. 798 f., s.v., with refs.

Assisi. The city in the Umbrian Hills, famous as the birthplace of St *Francis. At one end of the town is the huge three-storeyed *basilica of San Francesco (1228–53, with the remains of the saint) and at the other, the much smaller one wherein is the body of St *Clare. A further basilica, Sta Maria degli Angeli, below in the plain, shelters the little chapel known as the *Portiuncula, where the Franciscan Order originated. Other famous shrines in the neighbourhood are 'San Damiano', the 11th-cent. chapel and the 13th-cent. convent in which St Clare lived, and the 'Eremo delle Carceri' in the rocks above the city.

Mrs R. [C.] Goff, Assisi of St. Francis (1908); A. Fortini, Assisi nel Medio Evo: Leggende, Avventure, Battaglie (1940); T. Desbonnets, OFM, Assise: Sur les pas de saint François. Guide spirituel [1971]; Società Internazionale di Studi Francescani, Assisi al tempo di san Francesco: Atti del V Convegno Internazionale, Assisi 13 16 ottobre 1977 (Assisi, 1978); L. Temperini, TOR, Assisi romana e medioevale: Profilo storico-archeologico (1985).

Assizes of Jerusalem. The series of law-books which state the customary law of the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem and were compiled by various authors (notably John of Ibelin) at various dates from 1197 onwards. Their ultimate source was the feudal customs of W. Europe at the time of the First *Crusade; the Livre au Roi (compiled 1197–1205) best represents the customs of the 12th-cent. kingdom, in which the monarchy had been relatively strong, but the remaining texts describe the institutions of its 13th cent. successor, and reflect the interests of the nobility.

Standard edn. of the text pub. by le Comte Beugnot ('Recueil des historiens des croisades', 2 vols., Paris, 1841–3). F. Monnier, 'Godfrey de Bouillon et les assises de Jérusalem', Séances et travaux de l'Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques, 100 (1873), pp. 73–105, 663–94, and 101, NS 1 (1874), pp. 444–93; M. Grandclaude, Étude critique sur les livres des assises de Jérusalem (1923). M. Greilsammer, 'Structure and Aims of the Livre au Roi', in B. Z. Kedar and others (eds.), Outremer: Studies in the History of the Crusading Kingdom of Jerusalem, presented to Joshua Prawer (Jerusalem, 1982), pp. 218–26.

Associations, Law of. The law promulgated by the French government on 1 July 1901 which enlarged trade-union rights but also required religious congregations which should have requested authorization under a decree of 1804, but had not done so, to regularize their position. (The term 'congrégations' was used by French civil laywers to cover monastic orders as well as *congregations as defined in canon law.) A parliamentary commission insisted that the right to authorize congregations be given to the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate, instead of to the Council of State, as the government proposed. The Radical government which came to power after the elections of 1902 applied the law with particular severity. Congregations which had not requested authorization were closed forthwith. Male congregations which had requested authorization were grouped by the government into three categories of teaching, preaching, and commercial (only the *Cistercians), and three bills rejecting their requests were passed by the Assembly in March 1903. A bill rejecting the request of female congregations, except those engaged in charitable work, was passed in June 1903. A law of 7 July 1904 banned all congregations from teaching, including those which had been authorized, exempting only their overseas missions.

Text of law in Journal officiel for 2 July 1901, pp. 4025–7; of bills rejecting authorization in Journal officiel, Débats parlementaires, Chambre, of 13 Mar. 1903, p. 1117; 25 Mar. 1903, p. 1281; 27 Mar. 1903, p. 1337; 6 June 1903, p. 1849; of law of 7 July 1904 in Journal officiel, 8 July 1904, pp. 4129–30. Texts of the laws of 1 July 1901 and 7 July 1904 also in A. Debidour, L'Église catholique et l'État sous la troisième République (1870–1906), 2 (1909), pp. 540–7. M. O. Partin, Waldeck-Rousseau, Combes, and the Church: The politics of anti-clericalism, 1899–1905 (Durham, NC, 1969).

Assumption of the BVM. The belief that the BVM, having completed her earthly life, was in body and soul assumed into heavenly glory ('Immaculatam Deiparam semper Virginem Mariam, expleto terrestris vitae cursu, fuisse corpore et anima ad caelestem gloriam assumptam'; definition Munificentissimus Deus* of 1950).

It is now generally agreed that the belief was unknown in the earliest ages of the Church. St *Ambrose (Exposit. Evan. sec. Luc. 2. 35; PL 15. 1574) and St *Epiphanius (Haer. 79. 11; PG 42. 716) were apparently still ignorant of it. It is first met with in certain NT apocrypha dating from the later 4th cent. onwards, some of them *Gnostic in sympathy. These texts, which bear such titles as 'The Passing Away of Mary' and 'The Obsequies of Mary', survive in Greek, Latin, Syriac, Coptic, Arabic, and Ethiopic and are assigned in the MSS to various authors, e.g. to St *John the Evangelist and St *Melito of Sardis. They record the death of the BVM at *Jerusalem amid varying miraculous circumstances, in some cases alleging that her body was assumed on the way to the burial, in others that it was raised after three days. The date of the Virgin's death is variously assigned, e.g. to three or fifty years after the Ascension. It appears that one such work was condemned in the Decretum Gelasianum, though the condemnation may have been directed against its Gnostic teachings rather than specifically against the doctrine of the corporal assumption. A homily attributed in most MSS to Timothy of Jerusalem (prob. 4th–5th cent.) may imply the alternative belief that the BVM was assumed in body and soul during her natural life.

The doctrine of the corporal assumption was first formulated in orthodox circles in the W. by St *Gregory of Tours (d. 594), who accepted as historical the account attributed in MSS to Melito. In the E. a passage in *Dionysius the Ps.-Areopagite's Concerning the Divine Names (5th–6th cent.) was taken by *Andrew of Crete (d. 740) to mean that *Dionysius (the presumed disciple of St *Paul) had witnessed the assumption, while the writings of St *Germanus of Constantinople and other 7th-cent. authors testify to the acceptance of the doctrine by this period. In the next cent. St *John Damascene related that at the Council of *Chalcedon, *Juvenal, Bp. of Jerusalem, had told the Emp. Marcian and his wife *Pulcheria, who wished to possess the body of the BVM, that her death had been witnessed by all the Apostles, but that when her tomb was later opened, it was found empty. This account, which claimed the authority of Dionysius, presented the doctrine as ancient Catholic tradition; it was of particular influence in the W. because of its inclusion from the 16th cent. in the Roman Breviary among the lessons for the feast of the Octave of the Assumption.

Feasts celebrating the death of the BVM were observed in Palestine during the 5th cent., possibly at *Antioch in the 4th cent. The Greek Church was, however, divided as to the date between 18 Jan. (associating it with the *Epiphany) and 15 Aug. (prob. connecting it with the dedication of some church in her honour), until the Emp. Maurice (582–603) ordered that the latter date should be observed. In Rome, unless the Mass for the BVM given under 15 Aug. in the *Gelasian Sacramentary (which does not mention any corporal assumption) be original, it appears that one general feast in honour of Our Lady was observed until the last years of the 7th cent., that is, on 1 Jan. The Byzantine feasts of the BVM, incl. that of the Assumption, seem to have been introduced in the time of Pope *Sergius I (687–701). From Rome they spread to the countries of the Gallican rite, where a feast of Our Lady had previously been kept on 18 Jan. (the other E. date); and by the end of the 8th cent. the feast of the Assumption was universally observed in the W. on 15 Aug. In 847 Pope *Leo IV ordered that the octave be kept and in 863 *Nicholas I made the feast equal to those of *Easter, *Christmas, and *Whitsunday. In the C of E the feast disappeared from the BCP in 1549, and has not been officially restored. It has been retained, however, in the Oxford University Calendar, and is now observed in many places. In a number of Provinces of the Anglican Communion 15 August is kept as the principal feast of the BVM, though without reference to the Assumption.

The doctrine was prob. first upheld on grounds of deductive theology in an 8th- or 9th-cent. letter attributed to St *Augustine (PL 40. 1141–8) and was later defended by St *Albertus Magnus, St *Thomas Aquinas, and St *Bonaventure. *Benedict XIV declared it a probable opinion. In answer to repeated demands to the Popes from 1870 onwards, on 1 Nov. 1950 Pope *Pius XII in Munificentissimus Deus defined the doctrine and provided a new Mass for the Feast. The Mass was further changed in 1969. In the E. Church belief in the corporal assumption of the BVM is general, though prob. in terms less precise than those of the Roman definition. It is there known as the Koimesis (lit. 'falling asleep').

O. Faller, SJ, De Priorum Saeculorum Silentio circa Assumptionem B. Mariae Virginis (Analecta Gregoriana, 36, Sectio A, n. 5; 1946). J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 691–723, incl. Eng. tr. of main texts with refs. to original edns. F. Cavallera, 'A propos d'une enquête patristique sur l'Assomption', Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, 27 (1926), pp. 97–116. Sermons by *Jacob of Sarug and James, Bp. of Birta, ed. A. *Baumstark, 'Zwei syrische Dichtungen auf das

Entschlafen der allerseligsten Jungfrau', Oriens Christianus, 5 (1905), pp. 82–125. B. *Capelle, OSB, 'La Fête de l'Assomption dans l'histoire liturgique', Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, 3 (1926), pp. 33–45; id., 'La Fête de la Vierge à Jérusalem au V^e siècle', Le Muséon, 56 (1943), pp. 1–33; id., 'La Messe gallicane de l'Assomption, son rayonnement, ses sources', in Miscellanea Liturgica in Honorem L. Cunibert Mohlberg, 1 (1948), pp. 33–59; V. Grumel, 'Le Mois de Marie des Byzantins', ÉO 35 (1932), pp. 257–69; A. Raes, SJ, 'Aux origines de la fête de l'Assomption', OCP 12 (1946), pp. 262–74. LP (Duchesne), 1 (1886), p. 376. A. Wenger, AA, L'Assomption de la T. S. Vierge dans la tradition byzantine du VI^e au X^e siècle: Études et documents (Archives de l'Orient Chrétien, 6; 1955), with extensive refs. C. Piana, OFM, Assumptio Beatae Virginis Mariae apud Scriptores saec. XIII (1942). M. Jugie, AA, La Mort et l'assomption de la Sainte Vierge: Étude historico-doctrinale (ST 114; 1944), with refs. G. Hentrich and R. G. de Moos (eds.), Petitiones de Assumptione Corporea B.V. Mariae in Caelum Definienda ad Sanctam Sedem Delatae (2 vols., Rome, 1942). V. Bennett and R. Winch, The Assumption of Our Lady and Catholic Theology (1950). F. *Heiler (ed.), Das neue Mariendogma im Lichte der Geschichte und im Urteil der Oekumene (Oekumenische Einheit, 1951, Heft 2; Munich, 1951). H. S. Box in E. L. Mascall and H. S. Box (eds.), The Blessed Virgin Mary (1963), pp. 89–102. S. C. Mimouni, Dormition et Assomption de Marie: Histoire des Traditions Anciennes (Théologie Historique, 98 [1995]. H. F. Davis in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 1 (1962), pp. 170–9, s.v. See also bibl. to MUNIFICENTISSIMUS DEUS.

Assumption of Moses, The. See MOSES, THE ASSUMPTION OF.

Assumptionists (Augustinians of the Assumption). A religious congregation, founded at Nîmes in 1845 for the active religious life, and approved in 1864 by *Pius IX. Its members follow a modification of the *Augustinian rule. They have spread to many parts of the world, esp. since 1900, when their congregations in France were dispersed by State decree. Their work includes the care of asylums and schools, the dissemination of literature, and missionary work in many parts of the world. Several ancillary orders and confraternities have been formed to support their work. Their house at *Constantinople has esp. fostered the study of the theology and institutions of the E. Church, notably through its review, Échos d'Orient (1897 ff.), and a group of notable scholars (L. Petit, E. Bouvy, F. Cayré, M. Jugie, S. Salaville, and R. Janin).

J. Monval, Les Assomptionnistes (1939). Heimbucher, 2, pp. 384–6. M. Lombard in DHGE 1 (1930), cols. 1136–42, s.v.; R. Touveneraud, AA, in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 381–7, s.v. 'Agostiniani dell'Assunzione'.

Assyrian Christians. A name adopted in modern times by members of the *Church of the East (q.v.) who, in their search for an ethnic identity, claim descent from the ancient Assyrians. The Patriarch is now officially styled 'Catholicos Patriarch of the Assyrian Church of the East'. In the 19th cent. A. H. Layard, the excavator of Nineveh, first suggested that the local *Syriac Christian communities in the region were descended from the ancient Assyrians, and the idea was later popularized by W. A. Wigram, a member of the Abp. of *Canterbury's Mission to the Church of the East (1885–1915). More recently, as a result of large-scale emigration of Christians from the Middle East to the USA, Europe, and elsewhere, the term 'Assyrian' has also sometimes been adopted by members of the *Syrian Orthodox Church abroad, thus often becoming a source of friction and confusion.

W. A. Wigram, The Assyrians and their Neighbours (1929); J.-M. Fiey, OP, '"Assyriens" ou Araméens?', L'Orient Syrien, 10 (1965), pp. 141–60; J. Joseph, The Nestorians and their Muslim Neighbours (Princeton Oriental Studies, 20; 1961), pp. 11–18. G. Yonan, Assyrer heute (Reihe Pogrom, 59; Hamburg, 1978). See also works cited under CHURCH OF THE EAST.

asteriscus (Gk. ἀστερίσκος, from ἀστήρ, 'a star'). In the Byzantine rites, a utensil consisting of two metal strips crossed and bent and placed over the bread during the Liturgy to keep it from contact with the veil that covers it. It is removed at the *Sanctus.

Asterius (d. after 341), the 'Sophist', *Arian theologian. He was a pupil of *Lucian of Antioch and was present at the Council of *Antioch of 341. Fragments are preserved by St *Athanasius (from Asterius' 'Syntagmation') and by *Marcellus of Ancyra. Homilies on the Pss. ascribed to him have been recovered in modern times and edited by M. Richard and E. Skard, though some scholars think that these are the work of a different Asterius. If genuine, they throw important light on the early interests and methods of the Arian school.

His writings are listed by St *Jerome, De Vir. Ill. 94. Fragments ed., with Germ. tr. and comm., by M. Vinzent (Supplements to VC, 20; 1993). Asterii Sophistae commentariorum in Psalmos quae supersunt: Accedunt aliquot homiliae anonymae, ed. M. Richard (Symbolae Osloenses. Fasc. Supplet. 16; 1956; Index by E. Skard, ibid. 17; 1962). G. Bardy, 'Astérius le Sophiste', RHE 22 (1926), pp. 221–72; id., Recherches sur S. Lucien d'Antioche et son école (1936), pp. 316–57; E. Skard, 'Asterios von Amaseia und Asterios der Sophist', Symbolae Osloenses, 20 (1940), pp. 86–132; cf. ibid. 25 (1947), pp. 80–82, and ibid. 27 (1949), pp. 54–69. H. auf der Maur, Die Osterhomilien des Asterios Sophistes als Quelle für die Geschichte der Osterfeier (Trierer Theologische Studien, 19; Trier, 1967), with bibl. M. F. Wiles and R. C. Gregg, 'Asterius: A New Chapter in the History of Arianism?', in R. C. Gregg (ed.), Arianism: Historical and Theological Reassessments (Patristic Monograph Series, 11; Philadelphia, 1985), pp. 111–51. W. Kinzig, In Search of Asterius (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 47; Göttingen, 1990; argues that the homilies are by an Asterius who lived in the late 4th or early 5th cent.). W. Speyer in RAC, Suppl.-Lief. 4 (1986), cols. 626–39, s.v.

astrology. The study of the supposed influence of the stars upon human fortunes. In modern usage the term is confined to 'judicial astrology', i.e. the 'science' which professes to forecast the fortunes of a man, e.g. from the positions of the stars at the moment of his birth. Astrology was much practised in the ancient world, but the influence of Christian teaching, as illustrated in St *Augustine, De Civ. Dei, 5. 1–8, suppressed it in the Empire, until in the 13th cent. it re-entered the W. through Jewish and Arabic scholars, who for centuries had studied it in the E. The 16th cent. was the period when its influence was most powerful in Europe, among Catholics and Protestants alike. The scepticism of the 18th cent., with the growth of scientific knowledge, greatly reduced its popularity; and in England its credit was much shaken by a satirical pamphlet by J. *Swift, called Prediction for the Year 1708. In the 20th century the growth of unbelief and superstition has encouraged the revival of astrology in certain quarters.

Astruc, Jean (1684–1766), physician and Pentateuchal critic. The son of a Protestant pastor, he was converted at an early age to Catholicism. In 1730 he became physician to Louis XV and in the following year professor at the Collège de France. From 1743 he was attached to the Faculty of Medicine at Paris. In 1753 he published anonymously his celebrated work Conjectures sur les Mémoires originaux dont il paroît que Moyse s'est servi pour composer le Livre de la Genèse, in which he maintained that in its present form the Book of Genesis was a piecing together of earlier documents. He based this view on the varying use of '*Elohim' and '*Yahweh' for the Divine name, and on the duplication of narratives. He did not dispute that it was *Moses who brought the documents together. Astruc also wrote a Dissertation sur l'immortalité et sur l'immatérialité de l'âme (1755).

A. Lods, Jean Astruc et la critique biblique au XVIII^e siècle (1924). J. de Savignac, 'L'Œuvre et la personnalité de Jean Astruc', Nouvelle Clio, 5 (1953), pp. 138–47. E. Böhmer in PRE (3rd edn.), 2 (1897), pp. 162–70, s.v. Astruc's many medical publications do not call for mention here.

asylum, right of. See SANCTUARY.

Athanasian Creed. A profession of faith widely used in W. Christendom, and also known from its opening words as the 'Quicunque Vult'. It differs from the *Apostles' and *Nicene Creeds in form, as well as in embodying *anathemas, and is not a recognized standard of faith in the E., though it has appeared (without the *Filioque clause) in the Greek *Horologion since c.1780 and in Russian service books from the 17th cent. Of the Protestant bodies, some (notably the *Lutherans) retain it as a statement of faith; the old *Breviary ordered its recitation at *Prime on most Sundays; and in the Anglican BCP (where it is printed immediately before the Litany) it replaces the Apostles' Creed at Morning Prayer on thirteen holy days, chosen apparently as being at roughly equal intervals apart.

The attribution to St *Athanasius has been generally abandoned since the researches of G. J. *Voss (1642), chiefly on the ground that the Creed contains doctrinal expressions which arose only in later controversies. Not only is there no early authority for ascribing it to him, but it was evidently composed in Latin, not in Greek, and till modern times it has circulated solely in the W. Most recent scholars incline to the view that it originated in S. Gaul, prob. in the region of *Lérins, although earlier this century the thesis of H. Brewer, SJ, that it was the work of St *Ambrose, enjoyed considerable vogue. A Gallic origin is confirmed by the fact that the creed first appears in a sermon of St *Caesarius of Arles and by the remarkable correspondences between it and the Excerpta of St *Vincent of Lérins. The date of the Creed is equally disputed. It used to be held that the terminology employed pointed to a time when the controversy over *Apollinarianism was acute and before the outbreak of the *Nestorian and *Eutychian heresies; a date between 381 and 428 was generally accepted. More recently J. N. D. Kelly has argued that the Christological heresy attacked was not Apollinarianism but Nestorianism, and that therefore the Creed was composed after 428.

Its subject-matter falls into two halves, which expound respectively the doctrines of the Trinity and of the Incarnation. To the latter is added a list of the important events of the Lord's redeeming work in a form resembling that of the Apostles' Creed. The creed is prefaced and concluded with the assertion that belief in the truths it asserts is necessary to salvation.

Since 1867 many efforts have been made in the C of E to have it removed from the service, or truncated, especial objection being made to the 'damnatory clauses' (vv. 2 and 42), but conservative opinion has generally held that, even if it may be considered desirable in the abstract that certain expressions should be explained or retranslated, any alteration would give the impression that something of the traditional faith was being surrendered. The BCP version, however, is in places inaccurate and misleading, partly because of mistranslation, and partly because the Reformers based their rendering on an inaccurate text. In the Anglican Churches outside England its use in worship has for some time been considerably restricted or abandoned, and even in England it is now rarely used. It does not occur in the ASB.

A. E. Burn, The Athanasian Creed and its Early Commentaries (Texts and Studies, 4, no. 1; Cambridge, 1896). G. D. W. Ommanney, A Critical Dissertation on the Athanasian Creed (1897). The standard work now is J. N. D. Kelly, The Athanasian Creed (The Paddock Lectures for 1962–3; 1964). H. Brewer, SJ, Das sogenannte Athanasianische Glaubensbekenntnis ein Werk des hl. Ambrosius (1909). G. *Morin, OSB, 'A propos du Quicumque. Extraits d'homélies de S. Césaire d'Arles sous le nom de S. Athanase', R. Bén. 28 (1911), pp. 417–24. J. Stiglmayr, SJ, 'Das Quicunque und Fulgentius von Ruspe', ZKT 49 (1925), pp. 341–57 [Ath. Creed, work of Fulgentius]. A. E. Burn, 'The Authorship of the Quicumque Vult', JTS 27 (1925–6), pp. 19–28. G. Morin, OSB, 'L'Origine du symbole d'Athanase: témoignage inédit de S. Césaire d'Arles', R. Bén. 44 (1932), pp. 207–19. N. M. Haring, SAC, 'Commentaries on the Pseudo-Athanasian Creed', Mediaeval Studies, 34 (1972), pp. 208–52. F. *Loofs in PRE (3rd edn.), 2 (1897), pp. 177–94.

Athanasius, St (c.296–373), Bp. of *Alexandria. He seems to have been born and brought up in Alexandria. He received a good classical education before becoming deacon and secretary to the bishop of the diocese, *Alexander, whom he attended at the Council of *Nicaea (325) and succeeded in 328. By his refusal to compromise with *Arianism he incurred the enmity of the powerful Arianizing party in the reigns of *Constantine and Constantius. His use of violence and intimidation also contributed to the strength of the opposition to him and was the specific ground for his deposition at the Council of Tyre in 335 and his exile to Trier in 336; he returned on the death of Constantine in 337; but in 339 he was forced to flee to *Rome, where he established close contacts with the W. Church, which continued throughout his life to support him. He was restored in 346 by the influence of Constans, the W. Emperor, against the will of Constantius, who in 356 again drove him from the see. He remained in hiding near Alexandria till the accession of *Julian (361). He returned to the city in Feb. 362, but Julian exiled him again later in the year. On Julian's death (363) he was able to come back in 364, and, after yet another brief exile (365–6), helped for the rest of his life to build up the new Nicene party by whose support orthodoxy triumphed over Arianism at the Council of *Constantinople in 381. He died at Alexandria on 2–3 May 373.

His most famous work is the De Incarnatione, the second of two closely linked treatises. In it he expounds how God the Word (*Logos), by His union with manhood, restored to fallen man the image of God in which he had been created (Gen. 1: 27), and by His death and resurrection met and overcame death, the consequence of sin. Many scholars date the work before *c.*318, when Athanasius was still in his twenties, but others place it 15–20 years later. As bishop he was the greatest and most consistent theological opponent of Arianism. From 339 to 359 he wrote a series of works in defence of the faith proclaimed at Nicaea—that is, the true deity of God the Son. From about 361 onwards he especially sought the reconciliation of the large Semiarian party to the Nicene term homoousios ('of one substance'), which they were reluctant to accept. The Council of Alexandria (362), under his direction, greatly furthered this end, by clearing up misunderstandings of the terms ὑπόστασις (translated 'person') and οὐσία ('substance'). He also argued for the deity of the Holy Spirit in his Epistles to Serapion. As the friend of the monks *Serapion and *Pachomius, and closely linked with (perhaps the biographer of) *Antony, he aided the ascetic movement in Egypt and he was the first to introduce knowledge of monasticism to the W. His resolute character as well as his theology was the outstanding obstacle of the triumph of Arianism in the E. Feast day, 2 May. See also MELITIAN SCHISM (1).

Ed. princeps of Gk. text 'ex officina Commeliniana', 2 vols., Heidelberg, 1600–1. All earlier edns. superseded by the Maurist text, ed. B. *Montfaucon, 3 vols., Paris, 1698; repr., with additions, by N. A. Giustiniani, Bp. of Padua, 4 vols., Padua, 1777; with further additions in J. P. Migne, PG 25–28. Crit. text ed. H. G. Opitz, W. Schneemelcher, and M. Tetz for the Berlin Academy, in progress, Berlin, 1934 ff. Sep. edns. of De Incarnatione by A. *Robertson (London, 1882; 2nd edn., 1893), F. L. Cross (ibid., 1939), R. W. Thomson (with Contra Gentes, Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1971; incl. Eng. tr.), and C. Kannengiesser (SC 199, 1973; with Fr. tr.); Contra Gentes also ed. P. T. Camelot, OP (SC 18 bis, 1977); of Orations against Arians by W. *Bright (Oxford, 1873) and Historical Writings by id. (ibid., 1881); of the Apologies by J. M. Szymusiak, SJ (SC 56, 1958; with Fr. tr.; 2nd edn., 1987); and of Five Homilies, Expositio fidei and Sermo Maior by H. Nordberg (Societas Scientiarum Fennica. Commentationes Humanarum Litterarum, 30/2; Helsinki, 1962). New text of Comm. on Pss. ed. G. M. Vian (Studia Ephemerides 'Augustinianum', 14; Rome 1978). Syriac text of Festal Epp. ed. W. *Cureton (London, 1848); Coptic text ed. L. T. Lefort (CSCO 150, with Lat. tr. 151; 1955). Syriac texts of other works, with Eng. tr., ed. as Athanasiana Syriaca by R. W. Thomson (ibid. 257–8, 272–3, 324–5, and 386–7; 1965–77). On the text H. G. Opitz, Untersuchungen zur Überlieferung der Schriften des Athanasius (1935; indispensable); M. Tetz, 'Zur Edition der dogmatischen Schriften des Athanasius von Alexandrien', ZKG 67 (1955–6), pp. 1–28. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 12–60 (nos. 2090–309). Eng. trs. of 'Select Treatises [against] the Arians' by J. H. *Newman (LF, 2 vols., 1842–4; 2nd edn., much rev., 1881); A. Robertson in NPNCF (1892). Fr. tr. of Epp. to Serapion, with introd. and notes, by J. Lebon (SC 15, 1947); Eng. tr. by C. R. B. Shapland (London, 1951).

There is no contemporary Life. Important is the 'Vita Acephala' pub. 1738 by F. S. *Maffei (q.v.); modern edn., with Fr. tr. and full introd., by A. Martin (SC 317, 1985). Fundamental is series of papers by E. *Schwartz in Nachr. (Gött.) ('Zur Geschichte des Athanasius', various dates, 1904–11); collected and repr. in his Gesammelte Schriften, 3 (1959). H. M. Gwatkin, Studies of Arianism (1882; 2nd edn., 1900), passim. F. L. Cross, The Study of St Athanasius (1945; lecture). M. Richard, 'Saint Athanase et la psychologie du Christ selon les Ariens', Mélanges de Science Religieuse, 4 (1947), pp. 5–54. E. P. Meijering, Orthodoxy and Platonism in Athanasius: Synthesis or Antithesis? (Leiden, 1968). J. Roldanus, Le Christ et l'Homme dans la Théologie d'Athanase d'Alexandrie (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 4; ibid., 1968). P. Merendino, OSB, Paschale Sacramentum: Eine Untersuchung über die Osterkatechese des hl. Athanasius von Alexandrien in ihrer Beziehung zu den frühchristlichen exegetisch-theologischen Überlieferungen (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 42; 1965). C. Kannengiesser, SJ (ed.), Politique et théologie chez Athanase d'Alexandrie: Actes du Colloque de Chantilly 23–25 septembre 1973 (Théologie historique, 27 [1974]); id., Athanase d'Alexandrie, évêque et écrivain: Une lecture des traités Contre les Ariens (ibid. 70 [1983]). K. M. Girardet, Kaisergericht und Bischofsgericht: Studien zu den Anfängen des Donatistenstreites (313–315) und zum Prozess des Athanasius von Alexandrien (328–346) (Antiquitas, 1. Abhandlungen zur alten Geschichte, 21; 1975), esp. pp. 43–162. T. D. Barnes, Athanasius and Constantius (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1993). G. Mueller, Lexicon Athanasianum (Berlin, 1952). F. M. Young, From Nicaea to Chalcedon: A Guide to the Literature and its Background (1983), pp. 65–83, with bibl. pp. 339–41 and 362–7. Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 271–9 and 603 f. G. C. Stead in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 423–32, s.v. 'Atanasio'; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), pp. 93–5, s.v. with further bibl. For material on his Life of St Antony, see s.v. ANTONY, ST.

Athanasius (the Athonite), St (*c.*920–1003). A native of Trebizond, he became a monk in Bithynia, but migrated thence to Mount *Athos, where he established (961) the first of its famous monasteries (the *Lavra). His foundation, though resisted by the eremites already settled on Athos, prospered through the support of the Emperors Nicephorus Phocas and John Tzimisces (969–76). He became Abbot-General (πρῶτος) of all the communities on the Mount, of which 58, including Iveron, Vatopedi, and Esphigmenou, were in being by his death. Feast day, 5 July. (He is not to be confused with the Athanasius mentioned in the Roman Martyrology for this date, a 5th cent. deacon of *Jerusalem.)

His Typicon and Testament are pr. in P. Meyer, Die Haupturkunden für die Geschichte der Athosklöster (1894), pp. 102–22 and 123–30 respectively. Early Gk. Life by a monk named Athanasius, ed. J. Pomialovsky (St Petersburg, 1895); further Gk. life, based on an earlier text, ed. L. Petit, AA, Anal. Boll. 25 (1906), pp. 5–89, with Fr. tr. by Hiéromoine Pierre in Irénikon, 8 (1931), pp. 457–99, 667–89; 9 (1932), pp. 71–95 and 240–64; also pub. separately, Chevetogne, 1963. Both lives ed. J. Noret (CCSG 9; 1982), with introd. and bibl. Id., 'La Vie la plus ancienne de saint Athanase l'Athonite confrontée aux écrits laissés par le saint', Anal. Boll. 100 (1982), pp. 545–66. J. Leroy, OSB, 'S. Athanase l'Athonite et la Règle de S. Benoît', Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 29 (1953), pp. 108–22. See also bibl. to ATHOS, MT.

atheism (from Gk. ἄθεος, 'without God'). The word was originally used in Greece of all those who, whether they believed in God or not, disbelieved in the official gods of the State. Of such men Socrates was the classic instance. In the Roman Empire the term was applied in a similar sense by the pagans to Christians, but sometimes Christians, like St *Polycarp, would turn the term against their persecutors.

Until the expression '*agnosticism' came into general use in the 19th cent., the term 'atheist' was used, at least popularly, to describe also those who thought of the existence of God as an unprovable thesis. Of such there are three chief divisions: philosophical agnostics, materialists, and *pantheists. Any of these may be atheists in the strict sense of the word, but none need be. The philosophical agnostic normally says that the evidence is not sufficient to compel us either to assert or to deny the existence of God; but it is only if he adds further that the assertion of God's existence is meaningless, and not merely rash, that he is strictly to be called an atheist. The materialist, similarly, is strictly to be called an atheist only if he asserts that nothing can exist outside a closed system of matter; but often he will not say more than that for practical purposes it is necessary to treat the material world as a closed system. The pantheist view, also, has taken many forms; but it does not become truly atheistic until it makes its immanent divinity into such a limited being that he is no longer recognizable as God in any ordinary sense of the word.

Modern atheism is usually seen by its adherents as a way of safeguarding an affirmation of human freedom and creativity, and man's ability to control his own destiny; the dialectical materialism of Marxism is a case in point, but the same concerns can be detected in secular *existentialism which is usually atheistic and in the philosophy of M. *Heidegger. Under the influence of the Marxist philosopher E. Bloch, 'atheism' is sometimes paradoxically regarded by modern Christian theologians (e.g. J. *Moltmann) as a legitimate element of Christian theology; it is seen as a means of avoiding the danger of positing God as one entity among others, an infinite Being encroaching on finite beings (a concept termed 'ontotheology' by Heidegger).

F. A. Lange, Geschichte des Materialismus und Kritik seiner Bedeutung in der Gegenwart (1866; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1877–81). A. B. Drachmann, Atheism in Pagan Antiquity (1922). H. de *Lubac, SJ, Le Drame de l'Humanisme athée (1945; Eng. tr., 1949). C. Fabro, Introduzione all'ateismo moderno (1964; Eng. tr., God in Exile, Westminster, Md., 1968). E. Bloch, Atheismus im Christentum: Zur Religion des Exodus und des Reiches (Frankfurt am Main, 1968). J. Moltmann, Der gekreuzigte Gott (1972; 2nd edn., 1973), pp. 205–14; Eng. tr., The Crucified God (1974), pp. 219–27. P. Masterson, Atheism and Alienation: A Study of the Philosophical Sources of Contemporary Atheism (Dublin, 1971; Harmondsworth, 1973). M. J. Buckley, SJ, At the Origins of Modern Atheism (New Haven, Conn., and London [1987]).

On the pagan attacks on the early Christians as 'atheists', see A. *Harnack, Der Vorwurf des Atheismus in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (TU 13/1; 1905). For a modern philosophical defence of atheism, see J. L. Mackie, The Miracle of Theism: Arguments for and against the Existence of God (Oxford, 1982). C. B. Upton in HERE 2 (1909), pp. 173–83; J. Murray, SJ, in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 1 (1962), pp. 182–9, s.v., with bibl.

Athelstan (c.894–939), King of England from 927. The eldest son of King Edward the Elder, he was recognized as king of the Mercians on his father's death in 924, and soon afterwards came to be recognized as king of the West Saxons as well; he extended his rule over the Northumbrians in 927, and thereby became the first king of all England. Renowned as a collector of *relics, and as a generous benefactor of the Church, he was also reputed to be a man of justice and learning. During his reign many contacts were established with rulers and ecclesiastics on the Continent; and both St *Dunstan and St *Ethelwold began their careers at his court. In many respects the origins of the 10th-cent. monastic reform movement in England can be traced back to this period.

An important source of information is *William of Malmesbury, De gestis regum Anglorum, ed. W. *Stubbs, 1 (RS; 1887), pp. 141–52; on William's account see M. Lapidge, 'Some Latin Poems as Evidence for the Reign of Athelstan', Anglo-Saxon England, 9 (1981), pp. 61–98. J. A. *Robinson, The Times of Saint Dunstan (Ford Lectures, 1922; Oxford, 1923), pp. 25–80, remains invaluable. M. Wood, 'The Making of King Aethelstan's Empire: an English Charlemagne?', in [C.] P. Wormald (ed.), Ideal and Reality in Frankish and Anglo-Saxon Society: Studies Presented to J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1983), pp. 250–72; S. [D.] Keynes, 'King Athelstan's Books', in M. Lapidge and H. Gneuss (eds.), Learning and Literature in Anglo-Saxon England: Studies Presented to Peter Clemoes on the Occasion of his Sixty-Fifth Birthday (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 143–201.

Athenagoras (2nd cent.), Christian *Apologist. He is described in the earliest MS of his works as 'the Christian Philosopher of *Athens'. His 'Apology' or 'Supplication', addressed c.177 to *Marcus Aurelius and his son Commodus, sought to rebut current calumnies against the Christians: *atheism (chs. 4–30), Thyestian banquets, and Oedipean incest (chs. 31–6). A treatise 'On the Resurrection of the Dead' has traditionally been ascribed to him, but the attribution has been challenged. In this work the author endeavours to refute objections (chs. 1–10) and then to defend the doctrine positively. As a writer Athenagoras was one of the ablest of the Apologists, lucid in style and forceful in argument. He was the first to elaborate a philosophical defence of the Christian doctrine of God as Three in One. He upheld the indissolubility of marriage, even by death.

The Gk. text is preserved in the 'Arethas Codex' (Par. gr. 451), written in AD 914, on which all the other MSS depend. Ed. princeps by H. *Stephanus (Paris, 1557). Later edns. by P. *Maran (Paris, 1742; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 6. 887–1024), E. *Schwartz in TU 4.2 (1891), P. Ubaldi and M. Pellegrino (Corona Patrum Salesiana, Serie Greca 14; Turin, 1947), M. Marcovich (Patristische Texte und Studien, 31; 1990), B. Pouderon (SC 379; 1992, with Fr. tr.) and, with Eng. tr., by W. R. Schoedel (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1972). Earlier Eng. tr. by J. H. Crehan, SJ (ACW 23; 1956). H. A. Lucks, The Philosophy of Athenagoras: Its Sources and Value (Catholic University of America Philosophical Studies, 32; 1936). L. W. Barnard, Athenagoras: A Study in Second Century Christian Apologetic (Théologie historique, 18 [1972]). B. Pouderon, Athénagore d'Athènes: Philosophe Chrétien (ibid. 82 [1989]). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 28 f. (nos. 1070 f.). J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 229–36, with good bibl. See also works cited under APOLOGISTS.

Athenagoras (1886–1972), Patr. of *Constantinople. Born at Vasilikon near Ioánnina in N. Greece, he studied at Constantinople in the Theological School at Halki (1903–10). In 1922 he became Metropolitan of Corfu and in 1930 Greek Abp. of N. and S. America, where he brought to an end a schism dividing the Greek Church in the USA and thoroughly reorganized the archdiocese. In 1948 he became *Oecumenical Patriarch. During his tenure of this office he did much to counteract attempts by the Patriarchate of Moscow to assume leadership in the Orthodox world. In his work as Patriarch he was inspired by two major aims: (1) closer co-operation between the *autocephalous Churches of the Orthodox communion: on his initiative the 'Panorthodox Conferences' met in Rhodes in 1961 and the years following; (2) better understanding between divided Christians: here his most striking achievements were his meeting with Pope *Paul VI at *Jerusalem in 1964, and the revocation of the *anathemas between Rome and Constantinople in 1965.

Studies by B. Ohse (Göttingen [1968]), ed. J. E. Anastasios (Ioánnina, 1975), and A. J. Delicostopoulos (Athens, 1988). Towards the Healing of Schism: The Sees of Rome and Constantinople. Public statements and correspondence between the Holy See and the Ecumenical Patriarchate, 1958–1984, ed. and tr. E. J. Stormon, SJ (Ecumenical Documents 3; New York [1987]), pp. 25–249 passim.

Athens. By the 1st cent. AD Athens had become a provincial city of the Roman Empire, important only for its schools of philosophy, to which upper-class Romans went as to a university. Its first known Christian connection was the visit (c. AD 50) of St *Paul on his second missionary journey (Acts 17: 15–18: 1). His sermon to the *Epicureans and *Stoics, as given in Acts 17: 22–31, took the form of an academic discourse and the preacher evidently did not meet with his usual success. Among his few converts was St *Dionysius the Areopagite (q.v.: 17: 34). Apart from this passage, the NT has no other references to Christianity at Athens, except the passing mention in 1 Thess. 3: 1.

The earliest evidence for a Christian community comes from the middle of the 2nd cent. Acc. to *Melito of Sardis (*Eusebius, HE 4. 26. 10), Antoninus Pius (138–61) endeavoured to check the unofficial, and possibly riotous, persecution of Christians in Athens and elsewhere. At or about this time Publius, Bp. of Athens, was martyred and the Church almost extinguished; but it was revived under his successor, Quadratus. Athens appears to have been one of the earliest centres of a philosophical interpretation of Christianity and was the home of the *Apologists, *Quadratus (perhaps to be distinguished from the Bishop just mentioned), *Aristides, and *Athenagoras.

In the next centuries the history of the city was uneventful. The philosophical schools continued and the city was twice visited by *Origen, who is said to have combated an outbreak of heresy there. St *Basil and St *Gregory of Nazianzus both studied at Athens. In 529 *Justinian closed its schools as exponents of surviving paganism, and shortly afterwards the Parthenon and other temples were converted into churches. In the Byzantine period many churches and monasteries were built. After the Latin Conquest in 1204 (Fourth *Crusade) the Parthenon became the cathedral of a W. bishop using the Latin rite, while a Greek bishop and the Greek rite were allowed to continue in the lower town for the native population. When the city fell to the Turks (1456), its conquerors turned the Parthenon into a mosque, expelling all W. influence but tolerating, as elsewhere, the Greek Church. They remained in possession of the Acropolis until 1833 when the Kingdom of Greece was set up and the Orthodox Church of Greece became *autocephalous with Athens as the metropolitical see.

M. *Le Quien, Oriens Christianus, 2 (Paris, 1740), cols. 169–178, 3 (1740), cols. 837–44. A. Mommsen, Athenae Christianae (Leipzig, 1868). F. *Gregorovius, Geschichte der Stadt Athen im Mittelalter von der Zeit Justinians bis zur türkischen Eroberung (2 vols., 1889). A. Frantz, 'From Paganism to Christianity in the Temples of Athens', Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 19 (1965), pp. 185–205. K. M. Setton, 'Athens in the Later Twelfth Century', Speculum, 19 (1944), pp. 179–209, repr. in id., Athens in the Middle Ages (1975), no. 3. N. T. Philadelpheus, Ἱστορία τῶν Ἀθηνῶν ἐπὶ Τουρκοκρατίας ἀπὸ τοῦ 1400 μέχρι τοῦ 1800 (2 vols., Athens, 1902). I. T. Hill, The Ancient City of Athens: Its Topography and Monuments (1953). D. Sicilianos, Old and New Athens (rev. Eng. tr., 1960: orig. Greek in 3 vols., 1953–5). J. Travlos, Pictorial Dictionary of Ancient Athens (1971), and other works of this author. R. Janin, AA, Les Églises et les Monastères des Grands Centres Byzantins (1975), pp. 298–340. V. Laurent, AA, 'La Liste épiscopale de la métropole d'Athènes', in Mémorial Louis Petit (Bucarest, 1948), pp. 272–91. R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 5 (1931), cols. 15–42, s.v.

Athon, John. See AYTON, JOHN.

Athos, Mount, 'the Holy Mountain'. The peninsula which projects into the Aegean Sea from the coast of Macedonia and terminates in Mount Athos has long been entirely the property of monasteries of the E. Orthodox Church. The first monastic settlement of which there is reliable evidence is the foundation of the monastery of the '*Lavra' by St *Athanasius the Athonite in 961. There are now 20 virtually independent monasteries on the peninsula. Such matters as are of common concern to the whole mountain are legislated for by a council, made up of one representative from each monastery, and an executive committee of four members. The monasteries contain many valuable MSS and works of art. The peninsula, cut off from the mainland by forest, forms a natural monastic enclosure, from which women are excluded.

R. Curzon, Visits to Monasteries in the Levant (1849), pt. 4, pp. 327–449. A. Riley, Athos, or the Mountain of the Monks (1887); P. Meyer, Die Haupturkunden für die Geschichte der Athosklöster (1894). G. Smurnakes, Τὸ Ἅγιον Ὄρος (Athens, 1903); R. M. Dawkins, The Monks of Athos (1936). P. Sherrard, Athos: The Mountain of Silence (1960). Le Millénaire du Mont Athos 963–1963: Études et mélanges (2 vols., Chevetogne [1963–4]), with bibl. E. Amand de Mendieta, Mount Athos: The Garden of the Panaghia (Berliner Byzantinische Arbeiten, 46; 1972). P. Sherrard, Athos: The Holy Mountain (1982). R. F. Taft, SJ, 'Mount Athos: A Late Chapter in the History of the Byzantine Rite', Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 42 (1988), pp. 179–94, with other arts. pp. 157–78. G. Millet (ed.), Monuments de l'Athos, 1: Les Peintures (Monuments de l'art byzantin, 5; 1927). Archives de l'Athos (Paris, 1937 ff.). Catalogues of MSS include S. P. Lambros, Catalogue of the Greek Manuscripts on Mount Athos (2 vols., Cambridge, 1895–1900) and those of S. Eustratiades and Arcadios (MSS of the Monastery of Vatopedi; Harvard Theological Studies, Cambridge, Mass., 11; 1924) and Spyridon and S. Eustratiades (MSS of the Lavra; ibid. 12; 1925). G. A. Maloney in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 1008–10, s.v.

Atonement (i.e. 'at-one-ment'). In Christian theology, man's reconciliation with God through the sacrificial death of Christ.

The need for such reconciliation is implicit in the OT conception of God's absolute righteousness, to which nothing impure or sinful can approach. Its achievement is here represented as dependent on an act of God Himself, whether by the Divine appointment of the sacrificial system through which uncleanness, both ritual and moral, may be purged by the shedding of blood (cf. Heb. 9: 22), or, in a Prophetic view, by the future Divine gift of a new covenant to replace the old covenant which sinful Israel has broken (Jer. 31: 31), or, in certain passages of the Book of Is., by the action of a Divinely sent *Servant of the Lord who was 'wounded for our transgressions' and 'bare the sin of many' (Is. 53: 5, 12). But the Prophets also insisted that without repentance the offering of sacrifice for sins was futile (Is. 1: 10–17, Hos. 6: 6). In the post-exilic period, atoning value was attributed to the death of martyrs (2 Macc. 7: 38; 4 Macc. 6: 28, 17: 22).

As recorded in the NT, Christ, like *John the Baptist, began His ministry with a call to universal repentance for sin (Mk. 1: 4, 15). While He proclaimed the uselessness of blood-sacrifices considered as a substitute for repentance (Mt. 9: 13), He spoke also of giving His life 'a ransom for many' (Mk. 10: 45) and at the institution of the *Eucharist declared the shedding of His blood to constitute 'the new covenant' (Lk. 22: 20, 1 Cor. 11: 25) and to be 'unto remission of sins' (Mt. 26: 28). He also applied to Himself the words of Is. 53 relating to the Suffering Servant (Lk. 22: 37). In St *John's Gospel Christ is set forth as 'the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world' (Jn. 1: 29) and His death shown in a sacrificial light by being placed in juxtaposition to the sacrifice of the *Paschal Lamb at the *Passover (Jn. 19: 14, 36). Hence in the earliest Christian preaching His death was already proclaimed to be 'for our sins' (1 Cor. 15: 3) and His work expounded on the basis of Is. 53 (Acts 8: 32–5).

For the elaboration of the doctrine, the Church owed a unique debt to St *Paul. Christ's death and resurrection were the means by which we are redeemed from the effects of Law and its transgression, namely sin, from God's condemnation, and from death. By Baptism the Christian mystically shares in Christ's death and His victory over it (that is the resurrection), and acquires, by God's free gift, a new status of sonship or justification; and peace was made between God and man 'through the blood of His cross' (Col. 1: 20). Hence the death of Christ was an expiation (ἱλαστήριον, Rom. 3: 25). Elsewhere in the NT, the believer is said to be redeemed 'with precious blood' (1 Pet. 1: 18 f.), and the author of Hebrews makes constant use of sacrificial language in the same connection (cf. esp. ch. 9).

The Fathers took up and developed the doctrine of the NT, but posed new questions. For *Origen the death of Christ was the ransom paid to Satan, who had acquired rights over man by the Fall, but was deceived into thinking he could hold the sinless Christ. This view was accepted with various modifications by many of the Latin Fathers, among them St *Hilary of Poitiers, St *Augustine, and St *Leo, and among the Greeks by St *Gregory of Nyssa (though it was rejected by St *Gregory of Nazianzus). But while maintaining that the devil had rights over sinful man, the exponents of this doctrine also commonly stressed that in trying to exercise them on the sinless Christ he abused them, and was thus himself conquered by the power of the resurrection. Another view is that God the Son, by taking our nature upon Him, has effected a change in human nature as such. It is typified in such a saying as St *Athanasius' 'He became man that we might be made divine' (De Inc. 54). The general patristic teaching is that Christ is our representative, not our substitute; and that the effect of His sufferings, His perfect obedience, and His resurrection extends to the whole of humanity and beyond.

In the 11th–12th cents. with St *Anselm's Cur Deus Homo the emphasis shifted. The role of Satan gave way to the idea of satisfaction. Sin, being an infinite offence against God, required a satisfaction equally infinite. As no finite being, man or angel, could offer such satisfaction, it was necessary that an infinite being, i.e. God Himself, should take the place of man and, by His death, make complete satisfaction to Divine Justice. Hence the death of Christ was not a ransom paid to the devil but a debt paid to the Father. P. *Abelard, on the other hand, sought the explanation in terms of love. Christ's atoning death was effective primarily as the final proof of a love for man which evoked a response of love in the sinner. This break with tradition, too radical to meet with much acceptance, was violently criticized by St *Bernard. The later Scholastic teaching set out from Anselm. *Thomas Aquinas, while accepting Anselm's satisfactional view as a correct account of what took place, denied that the method of satisfaction was imperative. However 'convenient' the method, it had no intrinsic necessity, because God might have redeemed us without exacting full satisfaction. In the circumstances, however, the satisfaction was not only adequate but superabundant, for whereas the offence against God, being perpetrated by a finite being, was only morally infinite, the satisfaction, being the work of a divine Person, was objectively, as well as morally, infinite. This teaching, which became the current opinion among Catholic theologians, was challenged by the *Scotists and *Nominalists, who held that the Atonement was adequate, not because of its own intrinsic value, but because of its 'extrinsic acceptance' by God.

The Reformers, though leaving the core of the traditional doctrine intact, developed it in a different direction. M. *Luther rejected the Scholastic satisfaction theory and taught that Christ, in bearing by voluntary substitution the punishment due to man, was reckoned by God a sinner in his place. J. *Calvin went even further in teaching that the Saviour 'bore in His soul the tortures of a condemned and ruined man'. In reaction against the exaggerations of this 'penal theory' arose the doctrine, first defended by the Socinians, which denied the objective efficacy of the Cross and looked upon the death of Christ as primarily an example to His followers. Notable modern exponents of this view in England were B. *Jowett and H. *Rashdall. More recently there has been a return to traditional views. G. *Aulén (Christus Victor, 1931) defended the traditional theme of Christ's victory as the 'classic idea' of redemption, but he has been criticized for not coming to grips with mythological language. *Demythologized interpretations draw on *existentialist and sociological concepts of alienation as descriptive of humanity's fallen state. Christ, by His resistance to demonic false absolutes, opens the way to liberation and right relationship with God. In contrast, *Barthian theology has renewed stress on the objectivity of the Atonement, with the Cross at the centre of the Christian Creed. It should be added finally that there has never been any official formulation in orthodox Christianity of the mystery of the Lord's redemptive work and that there is every likelihood that a variety of emphases and interpretations will continue.

For the history of the doctrine, see J. Rivière, Le Dogme de la Rédemption: Essai d'Étude Historique (1905; Eng. tr., 1909); id., Le Dogme de la Rédemption: Études Critiques et Documents (1931); R. S. Franks, The History of the Doctrine of the Work of Christ (2 vols., 1918); H. Rashdall, The Idea of Atonement in Christian Theology (1919); L. W. Grensted, A Short History of the Doctrine of the Atonement (1920); H. E. W. Turner, The Patristic Doctrine of Redemption: A Study of the Development of the Doctrine in the First Five Centuries (1952); R. E. Weingart, The Logic of Divine Love: A Critical Analysis of the Soteriology of Peter Abailard (Oxford, 1970), pp. 120–84; A. C. Clifford, Atonement and Justification: English Evangelical Theology 1640–1790. An Evaluation (ibid., 1990).

For the NT teaching, see V. Taylor, Jesus and His Sacrifice: A Study of the Passion-Sayings in the Gospels (1937); id., The Atonement in New Testament Teaching (1940); id., Forgiveness and Reconciliation: A Study in New Testament Theology (1941); id., The Cross of Christ (1956); L. Morris, The Apostolic Preaching of the Cross (1955); M. Hengel, The Atonement: A Study of the Origins of the Doctrine in the New Testament (1981; expanded Eng. tr. of an art. in the Internationale katholische Zeitschrift, 9 (1980), pp. 1–25 and 135–47).

For systematic presentations, see J. McLeod Campbell, The Nature of the Atonement (1856); R. W. *Dale, The Atonement (1885); R. C. *Moberly, Atonement and Personality (1901; worked out on the basis of Vicarious Penitence); P. T. Forsyth, The Work of Christ (1910); J. Rivière, Le Dogme de la Rédemption: Étude théologique (1914); J. *Denney, The Christian Doctrine of Reconciliation (1917; posthumous); The Atonement: Papers from the Summer School of Catholic Studies held at Cambridge, July 31–Aug. 9, 1926 (1928); E. *Brunner, Der Mittler (1927; Eng. tr., The Mediator, 1934); id., Das Gebot und die Ordnungen (1932; Eng. tr., The Divine Imperative, 1937); L. S. Thornton, CR, The Doctrine of the Atonement (1937); L. Hodgson, The Doctrine of the Atonement (Hale Lectures, 1950; 1951). K. Barth, Die kirchliche Dogmatik, 4: Die Lehre von der Versöhnung (3 parts in 4 vols., 1953–9; Eng. tr., 1956–62), passim; S. Lyonnet, SJ, De Peccato et Redemptione (Theologia Biblica Novi Testamenti; Rome, 2 vols. pub. to date, 1957–60; Eng. tr., with other material, in id. and L. Sabourin, SJ, Sin, Redemption, and Sacrifice: A Biblical and Patristic Study, Analecta Biblica, 48; 1970); P. *Tillich, Systematic Theology, 2 (Chicago, 1957; repr. London, 1978), pp. 165–80 (London, 1957, pp. 191–208); R. S. Paul, The Atonement and the Sacraments: The Relation of the Atonement to the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper (Nashville, 1960; London, 1961); W. *Pannenberg, Grundzüge der Christologie (1964), pp. 251–88 (Eng. tr., Jesus—God and Man (1968), pp. 245–80); F. W. Dillistone, The Christian Understanding of Atonement (1968); F. M. Young, Sacrifice and the Death of Christ (1975); C. E. Gunton, The Actuality of Atonement: A Study of Metaphor, Rationality and the Christian Tradition (Edinburgh, 1988); P. S. Fiddes, Past Event and Present Salvation: The Christian Idea of Atonement (1989); T. [S. M.] Williams, 'The Atonement', in R. [C.] Morgan (ed.), The Religion of the Incarnation: Anglican Essays in Commemoration of Lux Mundi (Bristol, 1989), pp. 99–118; R. [G.] Swinburne, Responsibility and Atonement (Oxford, 1989), esp. pp. 148–62.

Atonement, Day of. The annual Jewish fast day (יוֹם הַכִּפֻּרִים, ἡμέρα ἐξιλασμοῦ) which falls on the 10th day of the 7th month (Tishri), i.e. roughly in Oct. It is commonly called 'Yom Kippur'. Its observance is regulated by Lev. 16: 23, 27–32, and Num. 29: 7–11, all prob. dating from the period of the *Exile or later. Its purpose is the cleansing of sanctuary, priesthood, and people from sin and the re-establishment of good relations between God and His chosen ones. It is the only fast which the Mosaic Law provides. Much of the ritual ordered in the OT has necessarily lapsed, e.g. the entry of the priest into the Holy of Holies in the *Temple, the offering of incense before the *Mercy Seat and its sprinkling with blood, and the scapegoat for *Azazel dispatched to the wilderness. The basis of present observance is to be found in the Tractate 'Yoma' of the *Mishnah, wholly devoted to the subject. The Day is still observed by strict abstinence from food, and many Jews who rarely attend public worship on other occasions attend the synagogue. The imagery of the Day of Atonement deeply influenced the NT author of the Ep. to the Heb., who saw in Christ the Great High Priest whose Atonement on the Cross abolished the need for the annual repetition of the observance.

Convenient collection of texts, in Eng. tr., S. Y. Agnon, Days of Awe (New York, 1948, repr. 1965), pp. 183–279. S. Landersdorfer, Studien zum biblischen Versöhnungstag (1924). I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (1913), pp. 149–54. J. Morgenstern, 'Two Prophecies from the Fourth Century B.C. and the Evolution of Yom Kippur', Hebrew Union College Annual 24 (1952–3), pp. 1–74. R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 415–20, with bibl. pp. 459 f.; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 507–10, with bibl. p. 552. M. D. Herr and J. Milgrom in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 5 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1376–87, s.v. 'Day of Atonement'. See also comm. on Lev. and Num.

atrium. The main court of the Roman house. From an early date the word was used of the forecourt attached to Christian churches, which usually consisted of a colonnaded quadrangle with a fountain in the middle. It was connected with the interior of the church by a *narthex or portico, which ran the length of one side, and by which from c. the 6th cent. it was replaced as the main way of approach from without. An atrium with porticoes attached to the church erected by St *Paulinus at Tyre is described by *Eusebius (Hist. Eccl. 10. 4. 39).

Atterbury, Francis (1662–1732), Bp. of *Rochester. He was a Tory High Churchman. After some years of academic controversy at Christ Church, Oxford, he became Lecturer of St Bride's London, chaplain to William III and Mary, and preacher at Bridewell Hospital. In his (anonymous) Letter of a Convocation Man (1697) and his Rights and Privileges of an English Convocation Stated and Vindicated (1700), he became the champion of *Convocation against the Crown and of the inferior clergy against the bishops. In 1701 he became Archdeacon of Totnes, in 1704 Dean of Carlisle, in 1711 Dean of Christ Church, and in 1713 Bp. of Rochester and Dean of *Westminster. In 1723 he was deprived of all his offices and banished from the country for alleged complicity in a Jacobite plot, and he died in exile. He was regarded as the best preacher of his day.

His Memoirs and Correspondence were edited by F. Williams (2 vols., 1869). Studies by H. C. Beeching (London, 1909) and G. V. Bennett (Oxford, 1975). J. H. Overton in DNB 2 (1885), pp. 233–8.

Atticus (d. 425), Patr. of *Constantinople from 406. A native of Sebaste in *Armenia, he was brought up in the *Pneumatomachian heresy, but was converted to orthodoxy in Constantinople. Here he became the bitter opponent of St John *Chrysostom. As Patriarch, however, he realized that the quarrel with Rome about the condemnation of Chrysostom weakened the prestige of his see; he re-established communion with Rome, and, to the vexation of St *Cyril of Alexandria, he restored Chrysostom's name to the *diptychs. He asserted the right to consecrate bishops in provinces near Constantinople and won support from the Emp. *Theodosius II for his jurisdiction in Illyricum and Asia Minor. *Apiarius and *Pelagian refugees in Constantinople brought him into direct contact with the Churches of N. Africa. In 419 he sent to Carthage a copy of the *Nicene canons with a covering letter. At the request of *Aurelius, Bp. of Carthage, he repelled Pelagians, but pained St *Augustine by failing to write to him as well as to Aurelius and by expressing anxieties about the *Manichaean attitude to sex attributed by the Pelagians to Augustine. Augustine wrote to protest, *c.*420–1. A letter 'on Virginity' to the Empress *Pulcheria and her two sisters, known to *Gennadius of Marseilles, has not survived, but there are extant fragments of a letter on Christology to an otherwise unknown Eupsychius, appealed to by both sides in the controversy for and against the *Chalcedonian definition. In the E. Church Atticus is venerated as a saint; feast days, 8 Jan. and 11 Oct.

V. Grumel, AA, Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 27–36 (nos. 34a–48a). Lat. text of his recension of the Nicene canons in Turner, EOMIA 1 (1939), pp. 104–42, with his covering letter, pp. 611–3; this letter also in C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Africae A. 345–A. 525 (CCSL 149; 1974), p. 163. Syriac text of the letter to Eupsychius, ed., with Fr. tr., by M. Brière, Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, 29 (1933–4), pp. 378–424; further Gk. and Syriac fragments ed. M. Geerard and A. Van Roey in Corona Gratiarum: Miscellanea Patristica, Historica et Liturgica Eligio Dekkers ... Oblata, 1 (Instrumenta Patristica, 10; 1975), pp. 69–81. Sermon on the BVM in Syriac, ed., with Lat. tr., by J. Lebon, Le Muséon, 46 (1933), pp. 167–202, and, with Fr. tr., by M. Brière, Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, 29 (1933–4), pp. 160–86. Augustine's letter to Atticus, ep. 6, ed. J. Divjak (CSEL 88, 1981, pp. 32–38). The principal authorities for his Life are *Socrates, HE 7. 2, *Sozomen, HE 8. 27, and *Palladius, Dialogus de Vita S. Johannis Chrysostomi, 9–11. Life from various sources printed in AASS, Jan. 1 (1643), pp. 473–82; also ibid., Aug. 1 (1753), pp. 32 f. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 105–7 (nos. 5650–7).

Attila (d. 453), King of the Huns from *c.*433. Attila united all the Hun tribes, prob. for the first time in their history, completing the process with the murder of his brother Bleda (*c.*445), with whom he had previously shared power. The united Huns dominated the surrounding tribes, so that Attila was able to gather a still larger military force. Using as a pretext the charge that the Bp. of Margus on the Danube had been plundering the tombs of Hun princes, he launched a series of attacks on the Roman Empire in the 440s. After devastating the East, he invaded Gaul in 451, but was defeated on the Catalaunian Plains near Troyes. The story that he spared the town at the request of its bishop, *Lupus, is prob. unhistorical. In 452 he turned to Italy, ravaging its northern cities; unreliable sources say that he was persuaded to leave *Rome in peace by Pope *Leo I. He died after a drinking bout on his wedding night. Christian sources know him as the 'Scourge of God'—a minister of divine vengeance—while Teutonic legends represent him as hospitable and magnanimous.

The main sources are Jordanes, Getica, esp. sections 34–49 passim (ed. T. Mommsen, MGH, Auctores Antiqui, 5, pt. 1; 1882, pp. 104–25; Eng. tr. by C. C. Mierow, Princeton, NJ, and London, 1915, pp. 101–125); and fragments of Priscus (ed. and tr. by R. C. Blockley, The Fragmentary Classicising Historians of the Later Roman Empire, 2, ARCA Classical and Medieval Texts, Papers and Monographs 10, Liverpool, 1983, pp. 222–377, esp. pp. 234–69 and 274–321). E. A. Thompson, A History of Attila and the Huns (Oxford, 1948); J. O. Maenchen-Helfen, The World of the Huns, ed. M. Knight (Berkeley, Calif., and London, 1973), passim.

Atto (*c.*885–961), Bp. of Vercelli from 924. He was a canonist and theologian remarkable for his great erudition in an unlearned age. His writings included a long commentary on the Pauline Epistles (dependent on *Augustine, *Jerome, *Claudius of Turin, and others) and a collection of ecclesiastical canons. Some of his letters and sermons have also survived.

Works ed. C. Buronzo del Signore (2 vols., Vercelli, 1768), repr. J. P. Migne, PL 134. 9–916. Modern edn. of the 'Polypticum', an incisive critique of affairs in N. Italy in his day, attributed to Atto (though the authorship remains contested), with Ger. tr. by G. Goetz (Abh. (Sächs.), 37, Heft 2; 1922). S. F. Wemple, Atto of Vercelli: Church State and Christian Society in Tenth Century Italy (Temi e Testi, 27; Rome, 1979). C. Frova, 'Il "Polittico" attribuito ad Attone vescovo di Vercelli (924–960 ca.): tra storia e grammatica', Bullettino dell'Istituto Storico Italiano per il medio evo e Archivio Muratoriano, 90 (1982/3), pp. 1–75. A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, 1 (SSL 6; 1924), pp. 61–74.

attrition. The sorrow for sin which proceeds from fear of punishment or a sense of the ugliness of sin. It is contrasted with *contrition (q.v.), which is held to proceed from the love of God. Its value was denied by M. *Luther and upheld by the Council of *Trent. Acc. to St *Thomas Aquinas and most medieval scholastics and moral theologians, attrition is a sufficient disposition for forgiveness within the sacrament of penance. Some theologians, such as *Peter Lombard, however, insisted on the need for perfect contrition. In 1667 *Alexander VII terminated this dispute by declaring that either opinion could be held without heresy.

J. Périnelle, OP, L'Attrition d'après le Concile de Trente et d'après Saint Thomas d'Aquin (Bibliothèque Thomiste, 10; 1927); H. Dondaine, OP, L'Attrition suffisante (ibid. 25; 1943). J. McDonald in Catholic Dictionary of Theology, 1 (1962), pp. 206–9, with further bibl.

Aubigné, J. H. M. d'. See MERLE D'AUBIGNÉ, J. H.

Auburn Declaration (1837). A statement issued in 1837 in which the principal doctrines of the American *Presbyterians of the 'New School' were set forth. It was compiled by the Revd Baxter Dickinson (d. 1876) in reply to the charges made by the 'Old School' against the 'New School' to the effect that they had departed from the traditional *Calvinist teaching as embodied in the *Westminster standards. The statement, which was accepted in Aug. 1837 at Auburn, New York State, was made the theological basis on which the 'New School' was organized as a separate body. In 1868 the Declaration was admitted by the General Assembly of the 'Old School' to contain 'all fundamentals of the Calvinistic Creed' and thus paved the way for the reunion of 1870. Its 16 propositions are concerned rather to rebut a number of imputed soteriological and anthropological errors than to frame a set of positive beliefs.

The text is in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom (1877), vol. 3, pp. 777–80.

Auctorem Fidei. The bull of *Pius VI, dated 28 Aug. 1794, which condemned 85 articles of the Synod of *Pistoia (1786).

Text in A. Barbèri and R. Segreti (eds.), Bullarii Romani Continuatio, 9 (Rome, 1845), pp. 395–418; the greater part, incl. the propositions condemned, is repr. Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 711–51 (nos. 2600–2700). See also bibl. to PISTOIA, SYNOD OF, and PIUS VI.

Audiani. A 4th-cent. rigorist sect founded in Syria by Audius, a layman or perhaps a deacon, which separated from the Church on the ground that the clergy were too secularized. They were also accused of holding an *anthropomorphic view of the Godhead. Banished by *Constantine to Scythia, they there carried on missionary activity among the Goths.

The principal authorities are *Epiphanius, Haer. 70, and *Theodoret, HE 4. 10. L. E. Islein, 'Audios und die Audianer', Jahrbücher für protestantische Theologie, 16 (1890), pp. 298–305. H. C. Puech in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 910–15, s.v. 'Audianer', with refs.

Audience, Court of. Formerly an ecclesiastical court of the province of *Canterbury. Originally the Archbishop exercised his legatine jurisdiction in person, but later was assisted by assessors ('Auditors'), who were gradually reduced to one. Later still, this remaining Auditor sat at *St Paul's as judge of the court. In 1536 an attempt was made to abolish the court; but it survived until the next century, when it was superseded by the Court of *Arches, which had the same jurisdiction.

M. *Parker, De Antiquitate Britannicae Ecclesiae (1605), pp. 30–3. W. S. Holdsworth, A History of English Law, 1 (1903), pp. 371 f. I. J. Churchill, Canterbury Administration, 1 (1933), pp. 470–99, with refs.

audiences, pontifical. Receptions given by the Pope to visitors to Rome and to officials having business with the Holy See. They are for the most part private, but the general public are received in large numbers three or four times a week.

audientes (Lat., 'hearers'). In the early Church, those belonging to the first state of the *catechumenate. When they definitely desired to commit themselves to immediate pre-baptismal instruction, they were admitted to the higher order of '*competentes'.

Audoin, St. See OUEN, ST.

Audry, St. See ETHELDREDA, ST.

Aufer a nobis. In the Roman Mass the collect for purity formerly said by the celebrant at the end of the *Preparation as he went up to the altar. The text is first found in the *Leonine Sacramentary as the collect in the fourth of a collection of Masses headed 'In Natale Episcoporum'. The use of the collect was dropped in the Ordo Missae of 1969.

Jungmann (1952), 1, esp. pp. 378 f. and 401 f.; Eng. tr., 1, pp. 291–3 and 308 f.

Aufklärung (Ger., 'Enlightenment'). The term is applied in a technical sense to a movement of thought which appeared in an esp. clear-cut form in 18th-cent. Germany and is connected with the names of H. S. *Reimarus, G. E. *Lessing, and J. G. *Herder. Set within the world-wide tendency to Rationalism, characteristic of the period, the 'Aufklärung' combines opposition to all supernatural religion and belief in the all-sufficiency of human reason with an ardent desire to promote the happiness of men in this life. One of its chief ideals was religious toleration, represented by Lessing's Nathan der Weise and the policy of Frederick the Great. Most of its representatives preserved the belief in God, freedom, and immortality as consonant with reason, but rejected the Christian dogma and were hostile to Catholicism as well as to Protestant orthodoxy, which they regarded as powers of spiritual darkness depriving humanity of the use of its rational faculties. Their fundamental belief in the goodness of human nature, which blinded them to the fact of sin, produced an easy optimism and absolute faith in the progress and perfectibility of human society once the principles of enlightened reason had been recognized. The spirit of the 'Aufklärung' penetrated deeply into German Protestantism, where it disintegrated faith in the authority of the Bible and encouraged biblical criticism on the one hand and an emotional '*Pietism' on the other. In German Catholicism it had its exponents among the educated laity and the higher clergy, being favoured by the policy of *Joseph II. It directed itself esp. against the religious orders, the celibacy of the clergy, devotion to the saints, and such popular expressions of piety as pilgrimages and the veneration of relics.

See also ENLIGHTENMENT.

Augsburg, Confession of (1530). The *Lutheran confession of faith, mainly the work of P. *Melanchthon, which, after receiving M. *Luther's approval, was presented at Augsburg to the Emp. *Charles V on 25 June 1530. To make the Lutheran position as inoffensive as possible to the Catholic party, its language was studiously moderate. In form it is divided (apart from an introductory preface) into two parts. The first epitomizes in 21 articles the essential Lutheran doctrines. Of these the 20th, which expounds the Lutheran doctrines on faith and good works, is the most elaborate. The second half reviews the abuses for which remedy is demanded, among them communion in one kind, clerical celibacy, private masses, monastic vows, and compulsory confession. After receiving it, the Emperor transmitted it to a body of RC theologians which included J. *Eck, J. *Faber, and J. *Cochlaeus and their reply, designated the 'Confutatio pontificia', was read on 3 Aug. Melanchthon answered this with an 'Apology for the Confession', which the Emperor refused to receive.

The Confession was, from the first, an authoritative Lutheran document, and in the spring of 1531 (with a few slight changes) the editio princeps was published. In the ensuing years it was issued in a number of forms which varied somewhat in doctrine. In 1580, when the 'Book of *Concord' was drawn up, an endeavour was made to revert to the text presented to the Diet in 1530, and this 1580 text, the so-called 'Invariata', though it differs in over 450 places (mostly of no significance) from that of the Diet, remains the chief standard of faith in the Lutheran Churches. The considerably revised text issued by Melanchthon in 1540 (the 'Variata') is accepted by the Reformed (i.e. Calvinist) Churches in certain parts of Germany.

Crit. eds. of text (Ger. and Lat.) by H. Bornkamm in Die Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutheranischen Kirche, herausgegeben im Gedenkjahr der Augsburgischen Konfession 1930 (10th edn., Göttingen, 1986), pp. 31–137, with 'Apology', pp. 139–404. Lat. text also in Kidd, pp. 259–89 (no. 116); Eng. tr. in T. G. Tappert (ed.), The Book of Concord (Philadelphia [1959]), pp. 23–96, with 'Apology', pp. 97–285. Crit. edn. of the 'Confutatio', with introd. and bibl., by H. Immenkötter (Corpus Catholicorum, 33; Münster, 1979). W. Gussmann, Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte des Augsburgischen Glaubensbekenntnisses (2 vols., 1911). H. Bornkamm, Der authentische lateinische Text der Confessio Augustana (1530) (Sb. (Heid.), 1956, Abh. 2). W. Maurer, Historischer Kommentar zur Confessio Augustana (2 vols., 1976–8; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1986]). V. Pfnür, Einig in der Rechtfertigungslehre? Die Rechtfertigungslehre der Confessio Augustana (1530) und die Stellungnahme der katholischen Kontroverstheologie zwischen 1530 und 1533 (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Europäische Geschichte Mainz, 60; 1970). H. Fries and others, Confessio Augustana: Hindernis oder Hilfe? (Regensburg, 1979). E. Iserloh (ed.), Confessio Augustana und Confutatio: Der Augsburger Reichstag 1530 und die Einheit der Kirche. Internationales Symposion der Gesellschaft zur Herausgabe des Corpus Catholicorum in Augsburg vom 3.–7. September 1979 (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 118; 1980). J. A. Burgess (ed.), The Role of the Augsburg Confession: Catholic and Lutheran Views (Philadelphia [1980]). B. Lohse, H. Immenkötter, and A. Sperl in TRE 4 (1979), pp. 616–39, s.v. 'Augsburger Bekenntnis, Confutatio und Apologie', with bibl.

Augsburg, Interim of. The doctrinal formula accepted as the provisional basis of religious settlement between Catholics and Protestants in 1548. After a joint commission of both groups, appointed by *Charles V in Feb. 1548, had failed to reach agreement, the Emperor had a formula prepared by J. *Pflug, Bp. of Naumburg, M. Helding, suffragan Bp. of Mainz, and J. *Agricola. This doctrinal compromise in 26 articles was designed as a provisional basis till the Council of *Trent made a final settlement. The chief points yielded to the Protestants were clerical marriage and communion in both kinds. After being secretly circulated, it was accepted at the Diet of Augsburg, 30 June 1548, and rigidly executed in parts of S. Germany. In the more Protestant parts of Germany, where the Augsburg Interim failed to obtain assent, a less Catholic edict, the so-called 'Leipzig Interim', put forth by the Elector Maurice in Dec. 1548, was adopted.

Ger. and Lat. text of the Augsburg Interim ed., with introd. and bibl., by J. Melhhausen (Texte zur Geschichte der evangelischen Theologie, 3; Neukirchen, 1970). Lat. text of ch. 26: 'De caeremoniis et usu Sacramentorum' also in Kidd, no. 148, pp. 359–62.

Augsburg, Peace of (1555). The settlement of religious affairs in the German Empire between Ferdinand I and the Electors at Augsburg on 25 Sept. 1555. It recognized the existence of both Catholicism and Lutheranism (but not Calvinism) in Germany, providing that in each land subjects should follow the religion of their ruler (cuius regio eius religio). Those not content with this settlement were permitted, after selling their property, to migrate to other lands. In the Imperial cities, both religions, if already established, were to continue. The official standard of Lutheran faith was the '*Augsburg Confession' of 1530 or any of its later recensions. Though Lutheranism then secured official recognition it was a victory for territorialism, not toleration. All property in the hands of Protestants at the time of the Passau Treaty (1552) was to be confirmed to them. This 'Peace' remained the basis of the ecclesiastical settlement in the Empire until the Edict of Restitution (1629) and the Treaty of *Westphalia of 1648.

Crit. edn. of text in A. Druffel, Beiträge zur Reichsgeschichte 1553–1555 (rev. edn. by K. Brandi; Briefe und Akten zur Geschichte des sechzehnten Jahrhunderts, 4; 1896). Eng. tr. of the main clauses is repr. in Kidd, pp. 363 f. (no. 149), and Bettenson (2nd edn., 1963), pp. 301 f. C. W. Spieker, Geschichte des Augsburger Religionsfriedens von 26 September 1555 (Schleiz, 1854). G. Wolf, Der Augsburger Religionsfriede (Stuttgart, 1890). Further bibl. in Schottenloher, 4 (1938), pp. 34 f. (nos. 34481–503). G. Pfeiffer in TRE 4 (1979), pp. 639–45, s.v. 'Augsburger Religionsfriede'.

Augusteum. The building erected at *Wittenberg in 1564–83 on the site of the *Augustinian monastery at which M. *Luther in his early life had taught. It at first served University purposes, but after many vicissitudes in the 18th cent. eventually became a Lutheran theological seminary.

Augustine, St, of Canterbury (d. between 604 and 609), missionary to Kent and first Abp. of *Canterbury. The prior of St Andrew's monastery at Rome, he was in 596 dispatched by St *Gregory the Great, then Pope, to refound the Church in England. He wished to turn back while in Gaul, but, encouraged by letters from Gregory, he finally landed in Kent in the spring of 597. He was favourably received and given every opportunity for his work, and after a few months Christianity was formally adopted by *Ethelbert, King of Kent, whose wife Bertha had been a Christian before marriage. Augustine's capacity for organization seems to have been limited, for he wrote to ask for Gregory's instruction on the smallest points. About 603, with Ethelbert's assistance, he tried to reach an agreement with representatives of the ancient *Celtic Church, which still survived in Britain and was at variance with Rome on questions of discipline and practice; but the attempt was a failure. In 604 he sent *Justus to preach west of the Medway, with the title of Bp. of *Rochester, and *Mellitus to work, as Bp. of London, among the East Saxons. His final (recorded) act was to consecrate Laurence to be his successor at Canterbury, some time between 604 and 609. Feast day, 26 May; in the RC Church since 1969, 27 May.

The principal authority is *Bede, HE 1. 23–2. 3; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), esp. pp. 31–48. Life by Goscelin in AASS, Mai. 6 (1688), pp. 375–95. Docs. of primary importance for his mission and episcopate in A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs (eds.), Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland (1871), pp. 3–60. A. J. Mason (ed.), The Mission of St Augustine to England according to the Original Documents (1897). M. Deanesly, Augustine of Canterbury (1964). N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), esp. pp. 3–14 and 87–93. On the controversy over the genuineness of the correspondence of Pope Gregory I with Augustine and others, preserved in Bede, HE 1. 23–32, see P. Meyvaert, 'Bede's text of the Libellus Responsionum of Gregory the Great to Augustine of Canterbury', in P. Clemoes and K. Hughes (eds.), England Before the Conquest: Studies in primary sources presented to Dorothy Whitelock (Cambridge, 1971), pp. 15–33, with refs. to earlier lit. F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (Oxford History of England, 2, 1943), pp. 103–12; 3rd edn. (1971), pp. 102–13. M. *Creighton in DNB 2 (1885), pp. 255–7.

Augustine, St, of Hippo (354–430), Bp. of Hippo Regius (modern Annaba, on the coast of Algeria) and '*Doctor of the Church'. Aurelius Augustinus was born at Thagaste (modern Souk-Ahras, in Algeria), to a pagan father Patricius, a member of the town council, and his Christian wife (St *Monica), through whom he was made a *catechumen in infancy. Augustine's home culture was Latin, and teachers at Thagaste, nearby Madauros, and Carthage gave him a mastery of Latin literature and rhetoric, with some knowledge of Greek. In adolescence he lost his faith, and at the age of 17 he took a concubine with whom he lived for 15 years; she bore him a son, Adeodatus (d. 389). In 373, when he was 18, Augustine read Cicero's (lost) Hortensius. This reawakened his religious aspirations, but disillusionment with the *Old Latin Bible's style and content led him away from his mother's faith to *Manichaeism. The Manichees retained his loose adherence for a decade, as he passed through successive teaching posts at Carthage, Rome, and Milan. Here, for reasons of secular ambition, he painfully abandoned the liaison with the mother of his son and was betrothed to a 12-year-old heiress found by Monica. This turmoil coincided with a religious crisis to which various factors contributed: loss of belief in Mani's mythology, the positive influence of St *Ambrose's sermons (which he attended initially for their rhetorical power but increasingly for their content), attachment to a group of enthusiastic students of *Plotinus and *Porphyry, and asthmatic attacks which forced him to retire from his Milan professorship when he was 32. In July 386 in a garden in Milan he came to a decision to abandon secular hopes, his career in rhetoric, and marriage. On Easter Eve 387 he was baptized by Ambrose. He moved to Rome and, having buried Monica at Ostia, returned to Africa in the late summer of 388. At Thagaste he and a group of friends established an ascetic lay community. In 391, when visiting Hippo Regius, Augustine was seized by the people and against his will ordained priest by the aged Bp. Valerius. Probably in the summer of 395 be became coadjutor bishop and was in sole charge after Valerius' death soon afterwards. He himself died on 28 Aug. 430, when the Vandals were besieging Hippo.

Augustine's consecration as bishop was controversial, not least on account of his Manichaean past. During his priesthood he produced tracts against the Manichees and in the three years after he became bishop he wrote the deeply anti-Manichaean Confessions* (q.v.). Against Mani he used *Neoplatonist arguments to counter belief in an ultimate power of darkness too strong for the good Light to eliminate; he defended the canonical OT (rejected by Mani), and he upheld the use of wine in both natural and sacramental contexts as well as the admission of married Christians to full Church membership by Baptism. Crucial to Augustine's rebuttal of Mani is the vindication of religious authority both in the biblical canon and in the worldwide Church: 'I would not have believed the gospel unless the universal Church had constrained me to do so' (C. Ep. Fund. 5. 6). Augustine nevertheless remained influenced by Mani's contention that unregenerate humanity lacks free will to perform any good action, and the proposition that sexuality exercises a downward pull on the soul (common to Mani and the Platonists) was important to Augustine both in his ascetic ideals and in his articulation of the doctrine of '*original sin'.

Augustine's opposition to *Donatism helped him to win the confidence of the Catholic community. He wrote a popular, versified narrative of the schism's origin and invited Donatist bishops to public debate on the central issue of unity versus holiness. He persuaded the primate, *Aurelian, Bp. of Carthage, to call episcopal councils to achieve a common front, and he sought to induce his colleagues to recognize the sacraments conferred by Donatists, including *Orders. To this end he developed the distinction between *validity (q.v.) and efficacy: even though valid, Baptism or Ordination does not benefit the recipient until brought within the fold. This conciliatory sacramental theology was assisted by the doctrine of *predestination: 'Many who seem to be without are within, and many who seem to be within are without.' Augustine initially opposed the use of coercion against the Donatists, but from 405 Imperial government pressure was increasingly successful in reconciling Donatists to Catholicism, and by the time of the conference at Carthage in May 411, he accepted its legitimacy within certain limitations.

In Confessions, 10. 29 (40) Augustine prayed 'You have commanded continence. Grant what you command and command what you will'. In 405 this was quoted at Rome by a bishop condoning Christians of unregenerate sexual life; it caused outrage to *Pelagius, a respected spiritual director. He felt that Augustine's doctrine destroyed human responsibility; if God gives a moral command one cannot say that its keeping is inherently impossible, and while the assistance of grace is necessary, the agent of a moral action has a part to play. Against this, in a vast body of anti-Pelagian writings, Augustine argued that without grace there could be no faith, no act of good will; the catastrophic consequences of Adam's *fall have made humanity corrupt and selfish, locked into a sinful social tradition: therefore the grace needed is more than external instruction and example and has to be the love of God poured into the passive heart by which humanity is enabled to do right because it is then enjoyable. Nevertheless, though Baptism is the sacrament of remission of sins both actual and 'original' (i.e. corporately transmitted from Adam), no believer attains perfection, being tied down by the body's desires. The sexual instinct is never without some flaw of egotism, even if procreative marriage makes good use of it. Even the virtuous actions of good pagans are flawed. That salvation is wholly by grace is the logic of predestination: by an eternal decree antecedent to merit God has shown His mercy in choosing a substantial minority of souls who are granted the gift of perseverance. Augustine sometimes thought it possible that God's decree not only brought the elect to salvation but also consigned the reprobate to hell; more often in his later works he preferred to say that God allowed but did not decree the latter.

During the years of the Pelagian controversy, Augustine was also engaged in writing a massive vindication of Christianity against pagan critics who held that the abandonment of the old gods was responsible for the sack of Rome in 410. The 22 books of The City of God appeared in instalments (416–22). The old Republic had been sordid and its religion trivial, and its gods had not delivered the human happiness and order they promised. Augustine then discussed the State under a Christian emperor. He disapproved of torture and capital punishment, though conceding that judges had to punish criminals to protect society; slavery was a symptom of humanity's fallen estate, and in a violent world the Church was called to represent forgiveness and humanity. But the city of God is an otherworldly society towards which one can struggle now by restraining injustice, but which is realized beyond this life. The two 'cities', earthly and heavenly, are distinct.

Augustine's ethic is ascetic. The corruption of society is seen in lust for dehumanizing or degrading entertainments (gladiators killing in the amphitheatre, eroticism in the theatre); in inhuman torture and capital punishment; in war for aggression rather than for self-defence, which he thought 'just' provided also that its end was to achieve fraternal peace with the enemy; in the selfish quest for power, honour, wealth, and sex, though all four could also be used for positive social ends. The root cause of injustice and wrong is the treatment of means as ends and ends as means. We enjoy what we ought only to use and vice versa. The morality of an individual action depends on its intention in the situation, and the one moral absolute is the '*Golden Rule'. The purpose of the conjugal act is procreation, but its use for mutual delight is pardonable. The foundation of Christian marriage is consent, mutual fidelity, and recognition that in God's sight it is indissoluble. The problems of sexuality lie in its involuntary and irrational impulses, from which Adam and Eve in paradise were free.

Between 399 and 419 Augustine wrote On the Trinity in 15 books. The central theme is that there is nothing irrational in the notion of being one and three, since being, knowing, and willing are all constitutive of human personality. There are, however, difficulties in using this analogy to understand the relationship of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, one God yet distinct in their mutual relations. An ascending series of triads culminates in the unity of thought, speech, and will, and in the interpenetration of knowing and loving. Perhaps the Holy Spirit is the bond of love between the Father and the Son. Jn. 20: 22 suggests that the coming forth of the Spirit is from the Father through the Son, and to join the Son with the Father averts an *Arianizing understanding of the Trinity as an unequal Triad. Augustine's speculation, later taken as formal theology, laid the foundation for the *Filioque.

The heart of Augustine's religion is seen in his Tractates on St John's Gospel, his Sermons, esp. on the Psalms, and his Rule for monks and nuns (see following entry). These express not only his spirituality, the yearning (desiderium) for God which for him is the hallmark of authentic faith, but also his profound sense of the ecclesial community, the body which with Christ as its head is the totus Christus. No scandal is bad enough to make anyone right to leave it. Exegesis of Scripture became increasingly important to Augustine. His treatise De Doctrina Christiana sought both to place biblical study in relation to secular culture and to articulate principles of interpretation so that one can discern what is literal and what allegorical. His Harmony of the Evangelists answers pagan criticism that the inconsistencies of the Gospels invalidate their authority. Other tracts include De cura pro mortuis, arguing that prayer for the faithful departed is right, but that whether they are buried in any particular place is a matter of indifference; two treatises on lying, which is held to be wrong if intended to deceive and always dangerously likely to diminish respect for the truth; De bono conjugali, implicitly rebutting St *Jerome's negative evaluation of marriage and sex; and Enchiridion, a handbook of his theology. There are also numerous letters, recently increased by the discoveries of J. Divjak. Near the end of his life he composed a review of his writings (Retractationes), partly correcting and partly defending himself. This work, together with the catalogue of his library made by *Possidius, his biographer, gives the chronology and order of his writings, most of which have survived.

Augustine's influence on the course of subsequent theology has been immense. It moulded that of the W. Church in the early Middle Ages, and even the reaction against Augustinianism with the gradual rediscovery of *Aristotle by the 13th cent. was less complete than has often been supposed. The Reformers appealed to elements of Augustine's teaching in their attack on the *Schoolmen, and later the *Jansenists invoked his authority. It is still one of the most potent elements in W. religious thought. Feast day, 28 Aug.

See also CONFESSIONS OF ST AUGUSTINE, DONATISM, MANI AND MANICHAEISM, and PELAGIANISM.

ST AUGUSTINE'S WRITINGS: Earliest are his Dialogues (no doubt an idealization of the actual conversations in which he took part at Cassiciacum), which include Contra Academicos, De Beata Vita, De Ordine, Soliloquia, and De Immortalitate Animae (all AD 386–7; J. P. Migne, PL 32). Among his anti-Manichaean writings are Acta contra Fortunatum Manichaeum (392), Contra Faustum Manichaeum (33 Bks., 397–8), and Contra Secundinum Manichaeum (399), all in PL 42; among his works against the Donatists, Psalmus contra Partem Donati (394), Contra Epistolam Parmeniani (400), De Baptismo contra Donatistas (400–1), and Breviculus Collationis cum Donatistis (411–12), all in PL 43; among those against the Pelagians, De Peccatorum Meritis et Remissione (411–12), De Spiritu et Littera (412), De Natura et Gratia (413–15), De Gestis Pelagii (417), Contra Julianum (6 Bks., 421), all in PL 44; among those against the *Semipelagians, De Gratia et Libero Arbitrio (426–7), De Correptione et Gratia (426–7), De Praedestinatione Sanctorum (428–9), and De Dono Perseverantiae (428–9), in PL 44 and 45. He also wrote a short general treatise, De Haeresibus (428; PL 42. 21–50). Of his biblical writings the chief are De Genesi ad Litteram (12 Bks., 401–14; PL 34), De Consensu Evangelistarum (4 Bks., 400; PL 34), Tractatus CXXIV in Joannis Evangelium (414–416/17) and Tractatus X in Ep. Joannis (415–16, both perhaps begun 407–8; PL 35), and Enarrationes in Psalmos (392–420; PL 36–37). His chief dogmatic works include De Diversis Quaestionibus ad Simplicianum (396; PL 40), De Trinitate (15 Bks., 399–419; PL 42), Enchiridion ad Laurentium (421–3; PL 41. 229–90), and De Civitate Dei (22 Bks., 416–22; PL 41). The Confessions are in PL 32. 583–656. Augustine also wrote many important letters, nearly all on dogmatic subjects, of which some 250 survive. To his large collection of Sermons many additions have been made in recent times, esp. through the researches of G. *Morin, OSB, C. Lambot, OSB, and A. *Wilmart, OSB. At the end of his life Augustine reviewed his several works in his Retractationes (426; PL 32. 659–868). For the catalogue of his works by Possidius, see s.v.; also CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 97–153 (nos. 250–386).

COLLECTED EDITIONS: First collected edn. of his Works by J. Amerbach (9 vols. Basle, 1506). Other imp. early edns. by *Erasmus (10 vols. Basle, 1528–9) and the 'Theologi Lovanienses' (11 vols., Antwerp, 1577). All previous edns. were superseded by that of the *Maurists (J. Blampin, P. *Coustant, and others; 11 vols., Paris, 1679–1700, with valuable index in vol. 11); repr.

frequently, incl. J. P. Migne, PL 32–47 (unfortunately with varying pagination in the several Migne reprints); on the Maurist edn. see J. de Ghellinck, SJ, Patristique et Moyen Age, 3 (1948), pp. 339–484 (Étude 8: Une Édition patristique célèbre). Since 1887 crit. edn. of individual works in the CSEL (some items, however, not up to the usual standard of this series); also in CCSL 27–57, 1954 ff., and, with Fr. tr., under the auspices of the Augustinians of Paris, Bibliothèque Augustinienne, 1936 ff.

Eng. trs. in the *Library of the Fathers by M. Dods, by P. *Schaff in 'Nicene and Post Nicene Christian Fathers' (8 vols., 1887–92) and by various contributors in 'Fathers of the Church' (1948 ff.) and in 'Ancient Christian Writers' (1949 ff).

LIVES: Contemporary Life by his friend and disciple, Possidius, Bp. of Calama (q.v.). Classic Life in edn. Ben. (repr. PL 32. 65–578). Le N. *Tillemont, Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire Ecclés., 13 (2nd edn., 1710). Modern Lives by G. Bardy (Montpellier, 1940), G. [I.] Bonner (1963; repr., Norwich, 1986), P. [R. L.] Brown (London, 1967), A. Mandouze (Paris, 1968) and J. J. O'Donnell (Boston, Mass. [1985]).

STUDIES ON HIS EARLY CHRISTIAN PERIOD: P. Alfaric, L'Évolution intellectuelle de S. Augustin. 1: Du manichéisme au néoplationisme (all pub., 1918); C. Boyer, SJ, Christianisme et néoplatonisme dans la formation de Saint Augustin (1921); J. Nörregaard, Augustins Bekehrung (Tübingen, 1923); A. Pincherle, La formazione teologica di Sant'Agostino [1947]; P. Courcelle, Recherches sur les 'Confessions' de S. Augustin (1950; 2nd edn., 1968); M. Testard, S. Augustin et Cicéron (2 vols., 1958); R. Holte, Béatitude et sagesse (1962); O. du Roy, L'Intelligence de la foi en la Trinité selon Saint Augustin (1966); R. J. O'Connell, Saint Augustine's Early Theory of Man (Cambridge, Mass., 1968). E. Feldmann, Der Einfluss des Hortensius und des Manichäismus auf das Denken des jungen Augustinus von 373 (Dissertation, 2 vols., Münster, 1975).

EDITIONS AND MONOGRAPHS ON INDIVIDUAL TREATISES: These include (1) De Civitate Dei: Ed. princeps, Subiaco, 1467. Ed. J. E. C. Welldon (2 vols., London, 1924). Eng. tr. by H. Bettenson (Harmondsworth, 1972). J. N. *Figgis, The Political Aspects of St Augustine's 'City of God' (1921); J. H. S. Burleigh, The City of God: A study of St Augustine's Philosophy (1949); R. H. Barrow, Introduction to St Augustine 'The City of God' (1950); H. I. Marrou, L'Ambivalence du Temps de l'Histoire chez Saint Augustin (1950); F. G. Maier, Augustin und das antike Rom (Tübinger Beiträge zur Altertumswissenschaft, 39; 1955); A. Wachtel, Beiträge zur Geschichtstheologie des Aurelius Augustinus (Bonner historische Forschungen, 17; 1960); J. C. Guy, SJ, Unité et structure logique de la 'Cité de Dieu' de saint Augustin (1961); P. R. L. Brown, 'Saint Augustine', in B. Smalley (ed.), Trends in Medieval Political Thought (Oxford, 1965), pp. 1–21; U. Duchrow, Christenheit und Weltverantwortung (Forschungen und Berichte der Evangelischen Studiengemeinschaft, 25; Stuttgart, 1970; 2nd edn., 1983); G. Corcoran, St Augustine on Slavery (Studia Ephemeridis 'Augustinianum', 22; Rome, 1985); J. van Oort, Jerusalem and Babylon (Supplements to VC, 14; 1991).

(2) Sermons: C. Morin, OSB (ed.), Sermones post Maurinos reperti (Miscellanea Agostiniana, 1; Rome 1930); C. Lambot, OSB (ed.), Sermones selecti (Stromata patristica et mediaevalia, 1; Utrecht and Brussels, 1950); F. Dolbeau, 'Nouveaux sermons de saint Augustin pour la conversion des païens et des donatistes', Revue des Études Augustiniennes, 37 (1991), pp. 37–77 and 261–306. C. Mohrmann, Die altchristliche Sondersprache in den Sermones des hl. Augustin (Latinitas Christianorum primaeva, 3; 1932). M. Pontet, L'Exégèse de S. Augustin prédicateur (Théologie, 7; 1945); B. Blumenkranz, Die Judenpredigt Augustins (Basler Beiträge zur Geschichtswissenschaft, 25; 1946); A. M. La Bonnardière, Recherches de chronologie augustinienne (1965). P. P. Verbraken, OSB, Études critiques sur les sermones authentiques de saint Augustin (Instrumenta Patristica, 12; 1976).

(3) Epistles: Excellent edn. by A. Goldbacher in CSEL 34 (1), 1895; 34 (2), 1898; 44, 1904; 57, 1911. Further letters ed. J. Divjak (ibid. 88, 1981; rev. edn., with Fr. tr., as Œuvres de Saint Augustin, 46B; Bibliothèque Augustinienne, 1987); cf. H. Chadwick, 'New Letters of St Augustine', JTS NS 34 (1983), pp. 425–52. Eng. tr. of new letters by R. B. Eno, SS (Fathers of the Church, 81; 1989).

ON HIS PLACE IN THE HISTORY OF WESTERN CIVILIZATION: cf. E. *Troeltsch, Augustin, die christliche Antike und das Mittelalter im Anschluss an die Schrift, De Civitate Dei (1915); E. Przywara, SJ (ed.), Augustinus: Die Gestalt als Gefüge (Leipzig, 1934), introd. repr. separately as Augustinisch: Ur-Haltung des Geistes (Kriterien, 17; Einsiedeln [1970]); H. I. Marrou, St Augustin et la fin de la culture antique (1938); id., Saint Augustin et l'Augustinisme (1955; Eng. tr., 1957); H. Hagendahl, Augustine and the Latin Classics (Studia Graeca et Latina Gothoburgensia, 20; 2 vols., 1967).

ON HIS THEOLOGY AND OUTLOOK: O. Rottmanner, Der Augustinismus (1892); K. *Adam, Die Eucharistielehre des hl. Augustin (1908); J. Mausbach, Die Ethik des hl. Augustinus (2 vols., 1909); T. A. *Lacey, Nature, Miracle and Sin: A Study of St Augustine's Conception of the Natural Order (1916); P. *Batiffol, Le Catholicisme de S. Augustin (2 vols., 1920); E. *Gilson, Introduction à l'étude de saint Augustin (Études de philosophie médiévale, 11; 1929; 2nd edn., 1943; Eng. tr., New York, 1960; London, 1961); A Monument to St Augustine (by various authors, London, 1930); J. Burnaby, Amor Dei: A Study of the Religion of St Augustine (1938; repr., Norwich, 1991); F. van der Meer, Augustinus de Zielzorger (1947; Eng. tr., 1961); T. J. van Bavel, OESA, Recherches sur la Christologie de saint Augustin (Paradosis, 10; Fribourg, Switzerland, 1954); J. Ratzinger, Volk und Haus Gottes in Augustins Lehre von der Kirche (Münchener Theologische Studien, 2. Systematische Abteilung, 7; 1954); G. Nygren, Das Prädestinationsproblem in der Theologie Augustins (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 5; 1956); H. A. Deane, The Political and Social Ideas of St Augustine (New York and London 1963); R. A. Markus, Saeculum: History and Society in the Theology of St Augustine (Cambridge, 1970); E. TeSelle, Augustine the Theologian (1970); J. Pépin, Saint Augustin et la dialectique (Saint Augustine Lecture, 1972; Villanova, Pa., 1976). W. Wieland, Offenbarung bei Augustinus (Tübinger theologische Studien, 12; 1978); O. [M. T.] O'Donovan, The Problem of Self-Love in St Augustine (New Haven, Conn., and London [1980]); K. Flasch, Augustin: Einführung in sein Denken (Stuttgart, 1980); G. O'Daly, Augustine's Philosophy of Mind (1987); C. Kirwan, Augustine (London and New York, 1989); G. Madec, AA, La Patrie et la Voie: Le Christ dans la vie et la pensée de S. Augustin (1989); J. M. Rist, Augustine: Ancient thought baptised (Cambridge, 1994). Introd. by H. Chadwick, Augustine (Past Masters; Oxford, 1986). C. Mayer (ed.), Augustinus-Lexikon (Basle and Stuttgart, 1986 ff.).

C. Andresen, Bibliographia Augustiniana (Darmstadt, 1962; 2nd edn., 1973); T. van Bavel, OESA, Répertoire Bibliographique de Saint Augustin 1950–1960 (Instrumenta Patristica, 3; The Hague, 1963); T. L. Miethe, Augustinian Bibliography, 1970–1980 (Westport, Conn., and London, 1982). Current literature is noted in Revue des études augustiniennes (1955 ff.).

Of the arts. in all dictionaries and encyclopaedic works, one of the fullest is that by E. Portalié, DTC 1 (1903), cols. 2268–472, with bibl.; separate Eng. tr. by R. J. Bastian, SJ, A Guide to the Thought of St Augustine (1960).

Augustine of Hippo, Rule of St. A title applied to various monastic texts whose precise relationship has long been a matter of dispute. Despite various permutations in different MSS, there appear to be three main texts: (1) the Ordo Monasterii (Regulations for a Monastery, or System), (2) the Praeceptum (Precept), and (3) St *Augustine's Epistula 211, paragraphs 5–16, which is closely parallel to the Praeceptum, but addressed to women, whereas the Praeceptum is addressed to men. While Augustine's interest in monasticism is clear both from the Confessions and *Possidius' Life, the absence of any reference to a separate Rule in the Retractationes has cast doubts upon his authorship of some of the documents. *Erasmus suggested that the Rule was first written for women and adapted for men. In modern times Luc Verheijen has proposed an ingenious solution, that at Hippo Augustine founded two monasteries, one for priests for whom the Praeceptum was composed; the other for brothers who were to follow his Ordo; this idea has not won universal acceptance.

After monastic life in N. Africa died out, the Rule was little used until it was adopted at the end of the 11th cent. by the *Augustinian Canons. At a time when the Papacy was insisting that newly founded religious orders should take existing rules, the Rule of St Augustine, with its sanity and adaptability, was accepted by the *Dominicans, the *Augustinian Hermits or Friars, and the *Servites; it was later adopted by the *Ursuline and *Visitation nuns.

Crit. edn. of all the Latin texts, with full discussion, by L. Verheijen, OSA, Le Règle de saint Augustin (Études Augustiniennes, 2 vols., 1967). Lat. text of Ordo Monasterii, Praeceptum, and Augustine's Ep. 211 are repr., with Eng. tr., and full discussion, in G. [P.] Lawless, OSA, Augustine of Hippo and his Monastic Rule (Oxford, 1987). Further Eng. tr. of the Praeceptum by R. Canning, OSA, with comm. by T. J. van Bavel, OSA (London, 1984). A. Zumkeller, OSA, Das Mönchtum des heiligen Augustinus (Cassiciacum, 11; 1950; 2nd edn., 1968; Eng. tr., New York, 1986). Agatha Mary [Crabb], SPB, The Rule of St Augustine: An Essay in Understanding (Villanova, Pa., 1992).

Augustinian Canons. (They were also known as Austin, or Black, or Regular Canons). Though the ideal of the *Canons Regular had been foreshadowed by various attempts in the early Church to establish a full common life for houses of clerks (notably that by St *Augustine of Hippo), as a family of religious in the W. Church they date from the first years of the movement later known as the Gregorian Reform.

Their origin is to be found in certain communities of clerks in N. Italy and the S. of France, who in the middle decades of the 11th cent. sought to live the common life of poverty, celibacy, and obedience, in accordance with what they believed to be the example of the early Christians. Their way of life received official approval at *Lateran synods in 1059 and 1063 and in the following cent. was widely adopted in W. Europe. By the opening decades of the 12th cent., members of these communities had come to be known as 'regular canons' (canonici regulares) and had generally adopted the Rule of St Augustine (which half a cent. before was almost unknown to them; see previous entry). From now on a regular canon is almost synonymous with an Augustinian canon, i.e. one who follows the Rule of St Augustine. From the early 12th cent., a number of independent Augustinian congregations were established, of which some of the more influential, e.g. the *Victorines and the *Premonstratensians, were much influenced by *Cistercian customs. In subsequent times Augustinian canons suffered considerably from the disorders and changes of the later Middle Ages and the disturbances of the *Reformation, and many houses were suppressed and replaced by other orders, esp. the *clerks regular. But certain of the older congregations still survive in the RC Church, notably the 'Canons Regular of the Lateran' (CRL), whom Pope *Alexander II (1061–73) instituted in his cathedral church.

Of clerical origin, the Augustinian canons were liable to episcopal visitation and able to undertake parochial responsibilities, though this was a privilege of which they did not always make extensive use in the Middle Ages. The flexibility of their rule enabled regular canons to follow various vocations, active and contemplative. They had a notable connection with hospitals; in London St Bartholomew's and St Thomas's Hospitals were formerly both Augustinian houses.

E. Amort, Vetus Disciplina Canonicorum Regularium et Secularium ex Documentis magna parte hucusque ineditis a Temporibus Apostolicis usque ad Saeculum xvii critice et moraliter expensa (2 vols., Venice, 1747). La vita comune del clero nei secoli XI e XII (Miscellanea del Centro di Studi Medioevali, 3; Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del S. Cuore, 3rd ser. 2; 2 vols., Milan, 1962); C. D. Fonseca, Medioevo Canonicale (ibid. 12; 1970). H. E. Salter (ed.), Chapters of the Augustinian Canons (Canterbury and York Society, 29; 1922). J. C. Dickinson, The Origins of the Austin Canons and their Introduction into England (CHS, 1950). N. Widloecher, La Congregazione dei Canonici Regolari Lateranensi: Periodo di Formazione (1402 1483) (Gubbio, 1929). C. Dereine, SJ, 'Vie commune, règle de Saint Augustin et chanoines réguliers au XI^e siècle', RHE 41 (1946), pp. 365–406. C. W. Bynum, Jesus as Mother: Studies in the Spirituality of the High Middle Ages (Publications of the Center for Medieval and Renaissance Studies, UCLA, 16; Berkeley, Calif., etc. [1982]), pp. 22–58. J. C. Dickinson in NCE 3 (1967), pp. 62–4, s.v. 'Canons Regular of St Augustine'; C. Egger, CRL, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 46–63, s.v. 'Canonici Regolari', with bibl.

Augustinian Hermits or Friars. A religious order living according to the Rule of St *Augustine of Hippo. In 1244 *Innocent IV directed the Tuscan hermits to accept this Rule, which had already been adopted by the Zanbonini in 1225 and the Brettini in 1228; in 1256 Pope Alexander IV united these three congregations (and certain others who seceded soon afterwards) to form the Friars Hermit from whom the present-day order descends. It was formerly thought that they then also received the Dominican 'Constitutions', but there is no evidence for this theory. The hermits had settled in remote places; while the friars did not abandon these settlements, they soon tended to concentrate their work in towns, and became widely established in W. Europe. The later Middle Ages saw the rise of certain local reformed congregations, such as that of Saxony (1419–1560), to which M. *Luther belonged. The friars suffered considerably from the effects of the *Reformation and the secularizations of later times, but they still survive, notably in Europe, N. and S. America, and in the *Philippines. They undertake extensive pastoral, educational, and missionary work. The 'Augustinian *Recollects' (q.v.) and the 'Discalced Augustinians', who were of Silician origin and founded in 1593, are reformed congregations.

L. Empoli, OESA (ed.), Bullarium Ordinis Eremitarum S. Augustini, in quo plures Constitutiones Apostolicae ... ab Innocentio Tertio usque ad Urbanum Octavum ad eundem Ordinem spectantes collectae sunt (Rome, 1628). B. [A. L.] van Luijk, OSA (ed.), Bullarium Ordinis Eremitarum S. Augustini: Periodus formationis 1187 1256 (Cassiciacum, 18; Würzburg, 1964). I. Arambury Cendoya, OSA (ed.), Las primitivas constituciones de los Agustinos (Ratisbonenses del año 1290) (Valladolid, 1966). Henry of Friemar [c. 1243–1340], 'Treatise on the Origin and Development of the Order of the Hermit Friars and its true and real title', ed. R. Arbesmann, OSA, Augustiniana, 6 (1956), pp. 37–145. Jordan of Saxony [*c.*1299–*c.*1370 or 1380], Liber Vitasfratrum, ed. id. and W. Hümpfner, OSA (Cassiciacum, 1; New York, 1943). An official history of the Order is being pub.: D. Gutiérrez [Moran], OSA, Los Agustinos en la edad media 1256–1356 (Rome, 1980; Eng. tr., Villanova, Pa., 1984); id., Los Agustinos en la edad media 1357–1517 (1977; Eng. tr., 1983); Los Agustinos desde el protestantismo hasta la restauración católica 1518–1648 (1971; Eng. tr., 1979); J. J. Gavigan, The Augustinians from the French Revolution to the Present (1989). B. A. L. van Luijk, OSA, L'Ordine Agostiniano e la riforma monastica dal Cinquecento alla vigilia della Rivoluzione Francese (Heverlee and Louvain, 1973). M. Elm, 'Italienische Eremitengemeinschaften des 12. und 13. Jahrhunderts. Studien zur Vorgeschichte des Augustiner-Eremitenordens', L'Eremitismo in Occidente nei Secoli XI e XII: Atti della seconda Settimana internazionale di studio Mendola, 30 agosto–6 settembre 1962 (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, Miscellanea del Centro di Studi Medioevali, 4; 1965), pp. 491–559. F. Roth, OSA, 'Cardinal Richard Annibaldi, first Protector of the Augustinian Order, 1243–1276', Augustiniana, 2 (1952), pp. 26–60, 108–49, 230–47; 3 (1953), pp. 21–34, 283–313; 4 (1954), pp. 5–24. Id., The English Austin Friars 1249–1538 (Cassiciacum, 6–7; New York, 1961–6). A. Gwynn, SJ, The English Austin Friars in the Time of Wyclif (1940). D. A. Perini, OESA, Bibliographia Augustiniana, cum notis biographicis: Scriptores Itali (4 pts. [1929]–1937). E. Gindele and others, Bibliographie zur Geschichte und Theologie des Augustiner-Eremitenordens bis zum Beginn der Reformation (Spätmittelalter und Reformation. Texte und Untersuchungen, 1; 1977). M. T. Disdier, AA, in DHGE 5 (1930), cols. 499–595, s.v. 'Augustin (1er Ordre dit de Saint) (Érémites)', with full bibl.; B. Rano [Gundin], OSA, in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 278–381, s.v. 'Agostiniani'; separate Eng. tr., The Order of Saint Augustine (Rome, 1975). A. Zumkeller, OSA, in TRE 4 (1979), pp. 728–39, s.v. 'Augustiner-Eremiten', with bibl.

Augustinians of the Assumption. See ASSUMPTIONISTS.

Augustinus. The title of the treatise by C. O. *Jansen (d. 1638) on grace and human nature, as presented in the works of St *Augustine. Based upon his anti-*Pelagian writings, and embodying many of the conclusions of M. *Baius, it was directed against the neo-scholastic theologians. It was published in 1640 and became the accepted exposition of the dogmatic principles of *Jansenism.

After the 'privilège' necessary for publication had been granted on 13 Feb. 1640, the work appeared at Louvain in Aug. of the same year (repr., Paris, 1641, and Rouen, 1643). N. [J.] Abercrombie, The Origins of Jansenism (Oxford, 1936), esp. pp. 125–58. J. Carreyre in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 330–448, s.v. 'Jansénisme', gives full analysis. See also other items cited s.v. JANSENISM, esp. arts. by L. Ceyssens, OFM.

Aulén, Gustaf (1879–1977), Bp. of Strängnäs. He was appointed professor of systematic theology of the University of *Lund in 1913. From 1933 to 1952 he was Bp. of Strängnäs. With A. Nygren (1890–1978), he was a leader of the Motivsforschung school, which sought to see the essential Christian truth behind a doctrine rather than to stress the actual form in which it is presented. The main works of his early period are Den allmänneliga kristna tron ('The Faith of the Christian Church', 1923; Eng. tr. 1948), Den kristna gudsbilden ('The Christian Idea of God', 1927), and his Olaus *Petri Lectures for 1930, published as Den kristna försoningstanken ('The Christian Idea of the Atonement'), of which an abridged version in English was produced by A. G. Hebert under the title of Christus Victor (1931). In these lectures Aulén defended a modified version of the 'ransom to the devil' theory of the *Atonement. After his retirement he continued to write on many topics. Though he did not change his theological position in its essentials, his later writings laid more stress on the elements of coherence and continuity in doctrine, and on the historical trustworthiness of the Gospel record. These later writings include Reformation och katolicitet ('Reformation and Catholicity', 1959; Eng. tr. 1961), Jesus i nutida historisk forskning ('Jesus in Contemporary Research', 1973; Eng. tr. 1976), and his autobiography, Från mina nittiosex år (1975).

Scripta Minora Regiae Societatis Humaniorum Litterarum Lundensis, 1978–1979: In memoriam Gustavi Aulén (1979), incl. list of his works by K. Gierow and P. Ekström [separate pagination].

aumbry (also ambry). A small recess in the wall of a church or sacristy in which, in medieval times, sacred vessels, books, and sometimes, but not usually, the reserved Sacrament might be kept. Its use for the last-named purpose was formerly forbidden by the RC Church, but it has long been common in the Anglican Communion.

G. *Dix, A Detection of Aumbries (1942); E. Maffei, La Réservation eucharistique jusqu'à la Renaissance (1942); S. J. P. van Dijk, OFM, and J. H. Walker, The Myth of the Aumbry (1957; critique of G. Dix).

Aurelius, St (d. *c.*430), Bp. of *Carthage from *c.*391. He presided over a long series of ecclesiastical councils, mostly at Carthage. Some of the letters addressed to him by St *Augustine (Aug., epp. 22, 41, 60, 174), who held him in high honour, survive. Feast day, 20 July.

AASS, Oct. 11 (1864), pp. 852–60. A. Mandouze, Prosopographie Chrétienne du Bas-Empire, 1: Prosopographie de l'Afrique Chrétienne (303–533) (1982), pp. 105–27. A. Audollent in DHGE 5 (1930), cols. 726–38, s.v., with bibl.

aureole (Lat. aureolus, 'golden'). In sacred pictures, the background of gold, typifying glory, which often surrounds the figure, as distinct from the 'nimbus' (or halo), which covers only the head.

auricular confession. Confession 'to the ear' [Lat. ad auriculam, sc. of a priest], i.e. the confession of sins to God in the presence of a priest authorized to forgive them in His name. See also PENANCE.

Ausculta fili (Lat., 'Listen, my son'). The opening words (1) of the Rule of St *Benedict and (2) of *Boniface VIII's bull of 5 Dec. 1301 to Philip the Fair of France.

Ausonius (*c.*310–*c.*395), Roman poet. Decimus Magnus Ausonius was a native of Burdigala (Bordeaux), where he established a school of rhetoric. About 365 he became tutor to the future Emp. Gratian, who in 379 raised him to the consulship. To judge by a few of his poems, he made at least some profession of Christianity in his mature years, though the letters (in verse) which he addressed to his former pupil, *Paulinus of Nola, to dissuade him from his project of giving up his wealth to the poor and becoming a monk, reveal little of the Christian ascetic ideal. Of his 'Epigrams', three—the 'Versus paschales pro Augusto', the 'Oratio Matutina', and the 'Oratio versibus rhopalicis'—are ostensibly the work of an orthodox Christian. Of his many secular poems, perhaps the most successful was his 'Mosella', a poem describing the region of the Moselle and the city of Trier.

Ed. princeps, Venice, 1472. Crit. edns. by C. Schenkl (MGH, Auct. Ant. 5. 2; 1883), R. Peiper (Teub., 1886), S. Prete (ibid., 1978; cf. M. D. Reeve in Gnomon, 52 (1980), pp. 444–51), R. H. P. Green (Oxford, 1991, with introd., comm., and extensive bibl.), and, with Eng. tr., by H. G. E. White (Loeb, 2 vols., 1919–21). J. Fontaine, 'Unité et diversité du mélange des genres et des tons chez quelques écrivains latins de la fin du IV^e siècle: Ausone, Ambroise, Ammien', in M. Fuhrmann (ed.), Christianisme et Formes littéraires de l'Antiquité tardive en Occident (Fondation Hardt Entretiens sur l'Antiquité classique, 23; 1977), pp. 425–82, repr. in id., Études sur la poesie latine tardive d'Ausone à Prudence (1980), pp. 25–82. N. K. Chadwick, Poetry and Letters in Early Christian Gaul (1955), pp. 47–62 (ch. 2: 'Ausonius and his circle'). J. [F.] Matthews, Western Aristocracies and the Imperial Court A.D. 364–425 (Oxford, 1975), pp. 51–5, 69–87, and 150–3. Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 436–40; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 406 f. and 634 f.

Austin. An older English form of '*Augustine'.

Australia, Christianity in. When the British Government founded a convict colony in New South Wales in 1788, the C of E was given land for schools and churches and in many ways enjoyed official status. In 1836 W. G. Broughton (1788–1853), Archdeacon of New South Wales since 1829, was consecrated the first Anglican bishop. However, almost from the beginning of the settlement, there were adherents of other denominations, and in the interests of maintaining social order and morality the colonial government generally encouraged their worship and from the 1820s paid their clergy. The large number of RC convicts were served, first by convict priests, then by official chaplains, and, after 1833, by missionary priests who included W. B. *Ullathorne and J. B. Polding (1794–1877), a scholarly monk from *Downside sent to Australia as the first RC bishop in 1835. The *London Missionary Society supported *Congregational preachers in and around Sydney from 1798. The first *Methodist minister, S. Leigh (1785–1852), arrived in 1815. The *Presbyterians, mostly Scottish free settlers, from 1823 were ministered to by the fiery preacher and politician, J. D. Lang (1799–1878), and during the 1830s *Baptists began work in Sydney. In 1836 South Australia was established as a separate colony to encourage the free settlement of dissenters, amongst whom were *Lutheran refugees from Prussia who helped to build up the region's wine industry. Denominational conflict was endemic as each group resisted the others' religious teaching and social advancement. The claims of the C of E to the status of an established Church exacerbated the Irish nationalism of many RCs and the opposition of Presbyterians. All denominations were suspicious of any real or imagined attempt by each other to gain special status.

Various denominational missions to the Aboriginal people were established, including that of Spanish *Benedictine monks in W. Australia in 1846, but few Aborigines were baptized. Their religion is unwritten, closely tied to the land and to tribal life, and not easily related to W. Christian notions of sin and salvation. However, as tribal life and traditional religion disintegrated, Aborigines were gradually drawn into Christianity.

During the 19th cent., esp. after the gold rushes of the 1850s, the spread of secular views led to the withdrawal of state aid to religion. During the 1870s state school systems were established to provide 'free, compulsory and secular' education, though the RC Church maintained its own schools and all the major Churches kept a small number of élite grammar schools and university colleges. After 1880 evangelical piety underwent a decline in both urban and rural areas, esp. in the Congregational Church, though attendant moralistic attitudes ('wowserism') survived as a social force. In the same period the social work of the *Salvation Army enabled it to establish a presence in areas of urban poverty. By the early 20th cent. most denominations had a majority of Australian-born clergy. They established theological colleges and attempted to tackle the problems presented by the vast inland distances: Anglican Bush Brothers, notably the Brotherhood of the Good Shepherd (1903–72), ministered to the outback by horse, car, and aeroplane, and in 1912 the Presbyterian Church founded the Australian Inland Mission, which later began a 'flying doctor' service. Many Australian denominations also undertook missionary work in the *South Pacific, *India, *Korea, and East Africa.

In the 1914–18 war the allied cause was supported by Church leaders in what was regarded as a war in defence of civilization and Christianity, though there was anti-British feeling amongst some Irish RCs, and Abp. D. Mannix (Abp. of Melbourne, 1917–63) strongly opposed conscription. After 1918 there was a gradual change of emphasis from denominational issues to the wider problems and social concerns of Australian society. Councils of Churches were established in the various states, where they pursued matters of public morality and social need—though rarely theological questions. The economic depression of the 1930s further stimulated the Churches to become more directly involved in social and political affairs. From 1940 the RC bishops issued an annual Social Justice Statement and a committee of the General Synod of the C of E set up the Christian Social Order Movement (1943–51).

After 1945, there were changes. Denominational traditions became more consciously Australian, and in 1981 the C of E became the Anglican Church in Australia. In 1977 the Methodist Church, most Congregationalists, and a majority of Presbyterians joined to form the Uniting Church in Australia. Migration brought large numbers of European RCs, esp. from Italy. There also now exist substantial Greek, Russian, and other national Orthodox communities which have maintained strong cultural identities with an Australian flavour and which have an active laity. Since the 1960s denominational conflict has lessened and been generally replaced by much practical co-operation. In 1977 an interdenominational Australian Hymn Book was published. This is widely used outside Australia under the title With One Voice.

The diminishing antagonism between the denominations has been balanced by an increase of conflict within them. During the 1950s RCs were divided over the active involvement of anti-communist religious groups in the affairs of trade unions and politics. Since the 1960s there have been strong debates within each denomination over questions of personal morality and social problems, esp. poverty, and the appropriate political role of Christians. Amongst Anglicans the question of the ordination of *women to the priesthood has been divisive, with the problem being compounded by the virtual autonomy of each diocese. The first women priests were ordained in 1992.

During the 1980s some Australian Christians campaigned for Aboriginal welfare and land rights. Aboriginal and white writers and artists have fostered an understanding of Aboriginal spirituality as another element in Australian Christianity.

At the 1991 census 27 per cent of Australians described themselves as RC, 24 per cent as Anglican, 8 per cent Uniting Church, 4 per cent (continuing) Presbyterian, and 3 per cent Orthodox. The *Pentecostal Churches and similar charismatic groups, many with strong American influence, are growing rapidly.

R. A. Giles, The Constitutional History of the Australian Church (1929); [J. T.] R. Border, Church and State in Australia 1788–1872: A Constitutional Study of the Church of England in Australia (1962). D. [L.] Hilliard, Godliness and Good Order: A History of the Anglican Church in South Australia (Netley, SA, 1986); R. A. F. Webb, Brothers in the Sun: A History of the Bush Brotherhood Movement in the Outback of Australia (Adelaide, 1978); S. Judd and K. [J.] Cable, Sydney Anglicans: A History of the Diocese (Sydney, 1987). P. F. Moran, History of the Catholic Church in Australasia (Sydney [1895]); P. [J.] O'Farrell, The Catholic Church in Australia. A Short History: 1788–1967 (Melbourne, 1968; London, 1969; 3rd edn., entitled The Catholic Church and Community, Sydney, 1985); E. Campion, Australian Catholics (Ringwood, Victoria, 1978); R. Fogarty, FMS, Catholic Education in Australia 1806–1950 (2 vols., Carlton, Victoria, 1959); T. [C.] Truman, Catholic Action and Politics (Melbourne, 1959; rev. edn., London, 1960). A. D. Hunt, This Side of Heaven: A History of Methodism in South Australia (Adelaide, 1985). M. Owen (ed.), Witness of Faith: Historic Documents of the Uniting Church in Australia (Melbourne, 1984). J. Barrett, That Better Country: The Religious Aspect of Life in Eastern Australia, 1835–1850 (Carlton, Victoria, and London, 1966); H. R. Jackson, Churches and People in Australia and New Zealand, 1860–1930 (Sydney, 1987); W. Phillips, Defending 'A Christian Country': Churchmen and Society in New South Wales in the 1880s and After (Brisbane, 1981); J. S. Gregory, Church and State: Changing Government Policies towards Religion in Australia (Melbourne, 1973); M. C. Hogan, The Sectarian Strand: Religion in Australian History (Ringwood, Victoria, 1987); T. W. Swain and D. B. Rose, (eds.), Aboriginal Australians and Christian Missions: Ethnographic and Historical Studies (Bedford Park, SA, 1988); H. Mol, The Faith of Australians (Studies in Society, 25; Sydney and London, 1985); I. Gillman (ed.), Many Faiths, One Nation: A Guide to the Major Faiths and Denominations in Australia (Sydney [1988]). Information on prominent religious figures is to be found in Australian Dictionary of Biography (Carlton, Victoria, and London, 1966 ff.).

authority. The power or right to persuade individuals or groups to obey precepts or recommendations. In the State, the coercive power of the government can ensure compliance, and in the period when the Church was identified with organized society, Church authority was enforced with temporal penalties. In the Christian community authority operates on the ground of an appeal to individual *conscience, with the understanding that deviation from what is acceptable to the community, in faith or morals, may entail exclusion or spiritual censure. An individual accepts authority without necessarily discerning the grounds of a ruling, because he acknowledges that private reason is seldom fully informed, may be led by unconscious egocentricity into defending an opinion for reasons other than its evident truth, and may be insensitive to the experience and wisdom of other believers. Obedience enters into the primary act of believing which submits to divine *grace and *revelation.

For Christians the ultimate authority is God, revealed in Jesus Christ and His redeeming work, experienced and interpreted by the community of His disciples. The NT writings presuppose the authority of Jesus and also of the Christian community's interpretation both of His teaching and of the OT as fulfilled in Him. For this community the Jesus of history is the Christ of faith, immanent in His Church by the Holy Spirit, but also the Church's judge and Lord. Error in the earliest traditions behind the Gospels becomes problematic for authority only if it is held that the Apostles completely misunderstood Him.

Within the Church an exclusive stress on authority in belief has sometimes failed to leave room for rational understanding of the faith. Apart from this central issue, there are four main polarities on the role of authority in Christian thought: (1) between the individual and the community, where the deeper the sense of human sin and blindness, the stronger the dependence on Church and Bible; (2) between charismatic, immediate prophetic inspiration and a mediated or transmitted authority, in which the pastor's commission to minister word and sacrament depends on the juridical *validity of the *Orders of the person who ordained him; (3) between Scripture and the interpreting consensus of the community if and when the natural sense of Scripture asks for correction in the life and tradition of the community—a tension which can lead to the divorce of biblical study from faith; (4) between the guiding hand of the clergy and the general consent of the laity—a polarity which becomes sharp if the clergy are regarded as a radically separate order independent of lay people whose role is to be receptive and passive, but no less sharp if the laity, in affirming the priestliness of the total body of believers, fails to acknowledge a special mandate in the pastorate entrusted with a commission to minister *absolution and *blessing and to safeguard the celebration of the sacraments. Related to this last issue is the historic W. tension between the collective or collegial voice of the episcopate as a whole and the primatial independence of the Roman see. For the RC Church this was decided in favour of the Pope, as independent of the collective mind of the bishops, at the first *Vatican Council (1870); at the second Vatican Council this was partially balanced by the decree 'Lumen Gentium' (1964), which enshrined the principle of *collegiality, recognizing the bishops' shared responsibility. As yet this conception does not seem to have greatly influenced RC practice or thinking. Whereas Orthodox and Anglicans think of major Councils as decision-making bodies, for RCs they are expressions of Christian opinion to advise the Pope who gives the authoritative ruling. Connected with this polarity is the question whether teaching authority needs to be linked with power in the form of centralized bureaucratic control or universal jurisdiction.

Church authority has been enforced in the past by temporal penalties, but it is now generally imposed, as in primitive times before the conversion of the Roman Empire, by spiritual censures alone, esp. that of *excommunication.

See also ANGLICAN–ROMAN CATHOLIC INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION, CONCILIAR MOVEMENT, INFALLIBILITY, and OECUMENICAL COUNCILS.

J. *Martineau, The Seat of Authority in Religion (1890); A. *Sabatier, Les Religions d'autorité et la religion de l'esprit (1903; Eng. tr., 1904); P. T. *Forsyth, The Principle of Authority in Relation to Certainty, Sanctity and Society ([1913]; 2nd edn., 1952); A. E. J. Rawlinson, Authority and Freedom (1924); T. A. *Lacey, Authority in the Church: A Study of Principles (1928); H. von Campenhausen, Kirchliches Amt und geistliche Vollmacht in der ersten drei Jahrhunderten (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 14; 1953; Eng. tr., 1969); J. M. Todd (ed.), Problems of Authority (1962); N. [L. A.] Lash, Voices of Authority (1976); G. Philips, Primauté et Collégialité: Le dossier . . . sur la Nota Explicativa Praevia (Lumen Gentium, Chap. III), ed. J. Grootaers (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 72; 1986); G. R. Evans, Problems of Authority in the Reformation Debates (Cambridge, 1992). See also bibl. to BIBLE (section on Authority and Inspiration); also CHURCH.

Authorized Version of the Bible. At the *Hampton Court Conference (1604) Dr John *Rainolds (or Reynolds, 1549–1607), the *Puritan President of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, suggested that there should be a new translation of the Bible. R. *Bancroft, Bp. of London, having reluctantly concurred, *James I ordered that the work should be begun, and a strong body of revisers was formed, including the professors of Hebrew and Greek at Oxford and Cambridge and other leading scholars, over fifty in all, who sat in six groups, two at Oxford, two at Cambridge, and two at Westminister. Their instructions were to take the *Bishops' Bible as their basis, to consult all earlier versions, esp. the *Reims NT (see DOUAI) and the *Geneva Bible, to retain the old ecclesiastical terms (such as 'Church' for 'Congregation' and 'Baptism' for 'Washing'), and to exclude all marginal notes, unless required to explain some Hebrew or Greek word. Each group worked separately at first, with a special portion of the Bible assigned to it. They then sent their work to all the others for criticism, and final settlement was made at a general meeting of the chief members of each group, learned men from outside being called in to discuss cases of special difficulty. William *Tyndale's influence through various versions down to the Bishops' Bible fixed the general tone of the translation, which is also indebted to the 'Wycliffe' versions. The work, begun in 1607, took two years and nine months to prepare for the press, and was paid for at 30*s.* each man per week, and by preferment. The final MS (now lost) was bought by Robert Barker (d. 1645), the King's Printer, for £3,500, which included the copyright. It was seen through the press by Dr Miles Smith (d. 1624) and Bp. T. Bilson (1547–1616), and first appeared in large folio volumes, including the *Apocrypha, printed in black letter, with headings and chapter-summaries in Roman type, at 25*s.* in sheets, 30*s.* bound, in 1611. The 'Preface of the translators', probably by Dr Miles Smith, explains that it is a revision, not a new translation, and that the revisers, who had the original Hebrew and Greek texts before them, steered a course between the Puritan and Roman versions. On the title-page are the words 'Appointed to be read in Churches', but it has never otherwise been officially 'authorized'. It immediately superseded the Bishops' Bible, and won favour by its intrinsic merits rather than by official backing. Modern editions often omit the Preface and the Apocrypha, and the current text differs considerably in orthography from the first edition of 1611. In the USA it is commonly known as the 'King James Version'.

F. H. [A.] *Scrivener, The Cambridge Paragraph Bible (1873), introd., pp. ix–cix; largely repr. with revisions, id., The Authorized Edition of the English Bible, 1611: Its Subsequent Reprints and Modern Representatives (1884). B. F. *Westcott, A General View of the History of the English Bible (3rd edn. by W. A. Wright, 1905), pp. 107–21 and 255–78; A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911), pp. 37–76, with docs. pp. 331–77. J. Isaacs in H. Wheeler Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940), pp. 196–227. D. Norton, A history of the Bible as literature, 1 (Cambridge, 1993), esp. pp. 144–61, 174–6, and 211–15. R. C. *Trench, On the Authorized Version of the New Testament in Connection with some Recent Proposals for Revision (1858). Darlow and Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, 1 (1968), pp. 130–3, with refs. See further bibl. s.v. BIBLE (ENGLISH VERSIONS).

auto de fe (Sp., 'the delivering of sentence in matters of faith'). The public ceremony of the Spanish *Inquisition at which, after a Procession, Mass, and Sermon, sentences were read and executed. Heretics were clad in the ceremonial *sanbenito (if unrepentant, grotesquely embroidered), with yellow mitre. Those sentenced to death were handed over to the secular power with a formal exhortation to mercy, though by *Innocent IV's bull 'Ad Extirpanda' (1252) execution had to follow within five days, and, until the last case at Seville in 1781, this was carried out by *burning at the stake.

auto sacramental (Sp. auto, 'ordinance'). A form of entertainment formerly common in Spain, analogous to the English *morality plays. These plays date from well into the medieval times, but the classical period was the 15th–16th cents., when the chief writers were J. de la Enzina, G. Vicente, and, best known of all, Pedro Calderón (1600–81). By this period the autos were always associated with the feast of *Corpus Christi, and in their later development took the form of allegorical treatments of the mystery of the Eucharist. They were preceded by a procession of the Host through the streets of the town to a space outside the house of some dignitary, where the performance was given. The procession and whole performance were at the public expense, and their magnificence was limited only by the resources of the city or town producing the play, which were strained to the utmost. Many of the plays are of considerable artistic merit, and they had a wide popularity. They were officially prohibited in 1765 by King Charles III, but for many years after this date they continued to be shown in the remoter districts.

E. González Pedroso (ed.), Autos sacramentales desde su origen hasta fines del siglo XVII (Biblioteca de Autores Españoles [58]; 1865), with introd. pp. vii–lxi. H. A. Rennert, The Spanish Stage in the Time of Lope de Vega (New York, 1909), esp. pp. 297–333. A. A. Parker, 'Notes on the Religious Drama in Medieval Spain and the Origins of the "Auto Sacramental"', Modern Language Review, 30 (1935), pp. 170–82. Id., The Allegorical Drama of Calderón: An Introduction to the Autos Sacramentales (1943), with refs. N. D. Shergold, A History of the Spanish Stage from Medieval Times until the End of the Seventeenth Century (Oxford, 1967), esp. pp. 85–112 and 415–504, with extensive bibl.

autocephalous (Gk. αὐτοκέφαλος, lit. 'himself the head'). A term used in the early Church to describe bishops who were under no superior authority and thus independent both of *Patriarch and *Metropolitan. Such were the bishops of *Cyprus, the bishops of *Armenia and Iberia down to the time of *Photius, and probably the British bishops before 597. The bishops of *Ravenna may also have had such autonomy for a time. In another sense, the word was used of E. bishops who were directly dependent on the Patriarch, without intermediate reference to a Metropolitan, as well as of priests belonging to patriarchal dioceses. Its principal later and current use, however, is for the modern national Churches that make up the E. Orthodox Church which, though normally in communion with *Constantinople, are governed by their own national synods. In the same connection it is used of the independent monastery on Mount *Sinai.

Autpert, Ambrose (d. 784), abbot. A native of Provence, he went to Italy as a young man and became a monk of St Vincent, near Capua, *c.*740. He was elected abbot in 777, but left the monastery in 778 in circumstances which are unclear. He was summoned to Rome by *Hadrian I in 784, but died on the way there.

His main work is a commentary on Rev. which became a standard text in the Middle Ages. This made a clean break with eschatological speculation and refused to admit any references to actual times or places; rather it depicted a vision of the Church universal, transcending time and space. It is remarkable for its stress on preaching: the spread of preaching is a continuing miracle and proof of Christ's presence in the Church when other miracles ceased. Autpert is said to have written commentaries on Lev., the Song of Songs, and Psalms, but no trace of these has been found. His other genuine works include a book 'De Conflictu vitiorum et virtutum', a Life of the founders of his monastery, and sermons.

Editio princeps of his comm. on Rev. by G. Hittorp (Cologne, 1536). Crit. edn. of his works by R. Weber, OSB (CCCM 27, 27A and 27B; 1975–9). J. Winandy, OSB, Ambroise Autpert, moine et théologien [1953].

Auxentius (d. 373 or 374), Arian Bp. of Milan. A Cappadocian by birth, he was ordained *c.*343 by Gregory, the intruded Bp. of *Alexandria, and soon became the most prominent supporter of *Arianism in the W. Though apparently ignorant of Latin, he was appointed to the see of Milan by Constantius in 355. Despite condemnation for heresy, acc. to St *Athanasius at the Council of *Ariminum (359), and certainly at Paris (360), he continued to hold his bishopric. Neither the approaches of St *Hilary of Poitiers to the Emp. Valentinian on the subject in 364–365 nor Athanasius' attack on him in 369 nor his condemnation by a synod held at Rome in 372 dislodged him, and he continued in his see till his death; he was a beneficiary of Valentinian's policy of doctrinal neutrality. He was succeeded by the orthodox St *Ambrose. The theory that he was responsible for the introduction of oriental elements in the *Ambrosian rite is no longer accepted.

Our knowledge of Auxentius derives from scattered refs. in Athanasius, St *Basil, Hilary of Poitiers, and St *Eusebius of Vercelli. M. Meslin, Les Ariens d'Occident 335–430 (Patristica Sorbonensia, 8; 1967), esp. pp. 41–4 and 291–4. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome ... (311–400) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), pp. 249–65 passim and 731–6.

Auxiliary Saints (Lat. auxilium, 'assistance'). A group of 14 saints, also known as the Fourteen Holy Helpers, venerated for the supposed efficacy of their prayers on behalf of human necessities. They are: Sts *George (23 Apr.), *Blaise (3 Feb.), *Erasmus (2 June), *Pantaleon (27 July), *Vitus (15 June), *Christopher (25 July), *Denys (9 Oct.), Cyriacus (8 Aug.), Acacius (8 May), *Eustace (20 Sept.), *Giles (1 Sept.), *Margaret (20 July), *Barbara (4 Dec.), *Catherine of Alexandria (25 Nov.). These are the traditional dates of their festivals, many of which have now been suppressed in the W.

Avancini, Nikola (1611–86), *Jesuit ascetic writer and theologian. A native of Bretz, near *Trent, he entered the Society of Jesus in 1627 and held teaching appointments at Trieste (1634), Laibach (1635) and Vienna (1641). He became successively rector of the Colleges of Passau (1664), Vienna (1666), and Graz (1672). In 1675 he was appointed Visitor of Bohemia, in 1676 Provincial of the Austrian Province, and in 1682 Assistant for the German Provinces. He had just been nominated temporary Vicar-General of the Order at his death. He wrote extensively on philosophy and theology, esp. during the earlier years of his life. His Vita et Doctrina Jesu Christi ex Quattuor Evangelistis Collecta (Vienna, 1665), a collection of terse and pithy daily meditations, deservedly established itself as a classic. It has been translated into most modern European languages and is still widely used, esp. by the clergy. He was also a notable dramatist. His other published works include Poesis Lyrica (1659) and Orationes (3 vols., 1656–60).

There is a modern Eng. tr. (somewhat adapted) of Avancini's Vita et Doctrina Jesu Christi by K. D. Mackenzie (London, 1937). Works listed in Sommervogel, 1 (1890), cols. 668–80, and 8 (1898), cols. 1711 f.; Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 182 f. E. Lamalle, SJ, in DHGE 5 (1931), cols. 991 f., s.v. with bibl.

Ave Maria. See HAIL MARY.

Ave Maris Stella. One of the most popular Marian hymns, dating at least from the 9th cent. It is contained in the 9th-cent. Codex Sangallensis 95 and has been attributed to various authors, one of the most probable assignations being that to *Paul the Deacon. The rhythmical hymn is a prayer of great simplicity and beauty for the maternal intercession of the BVM. In the Roman breviary it is one of the hymns for the Second Vespers of the Common of Feasts of the BVM. It has frequently been paraphrased and translated, perhaps the best-known version being that by E. *Caswall, 'Hail Thou Star of Ocean'.

Crit. text, with notes, in C. Blume, SJ (ed.), Die Hymnen des Thesaurus Hymnologicus H. A. Daniels und andere Hymnen-Ausgaben (AHMA 51, 1908), pp. 140–2. H. Lausberg, Der Hymnus 'Ave maris stella' (Abhandlungen der Rheinisch-Westfälischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, 61; 1976), with refs. A dal Zotto, 'Ricerche sull'auctore del l'"Ave Maris Stella"', Aevum, 25 (1951), pp. 494–503; S. de Ibero, OFM Cap., J. Garcia Garcia, E. R. Panyagua, CM, 'Estudio del "Ave Maris Stella"', Helmantica, 8 (1957), pp. 421–75. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der Lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 219 f., with further refs.

Ave Verum Corpus. Short anonymous Eucharistic hymn, probably dating from the 14th cent., beginning 'Ave verum corpus, natum Ex Maria Virgine' ('Hail true body, Born of the Virgin Mary'). It was sung, esp. in Italy, France, and Germany, after the *Preface or during the *Consecration at Mass, and is still frequently chanted, e.g. at *Benediction (settings by W. A. Mozart, W. *Byrd, and others).

Crit. text in C. Blume, SJ, and H. M. Bannister (eds.), Liturgische Prosen des Übergangsstiles und der zweiten Epoche insbesondere die dem Adam von Sanct Victor zugeschriebenen (AHMA 54; 1915), no. 167, pp. 257 f. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der Lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 2 (1965), pp. 298 f.

Avempace (d. 1139, at an early age), Muslim Andalusian philosopher. The name by which he is known in W. Christendom is a Latinized form of Abu Bakr Muhammad ibn Yahya ibn Bajjah. He taught that the 'ascent of the soul' was less a matter of moral and spiritual purification than a progressive stripping of all materiality until the soul achieves fusion with the 'active intellect' which is an emanation of the Godhead (see AVICENNA). The Arabic text of his most important work, Tadbir al-mutawahhid ('Rule of the Solitary'), survives complete only in a *Bodleian MS (Pococke 206); it was also known from Hebrew translations. He wrote other works on a variety of subjects.

The 'Rule of the Solitary', ed., with Eng. tr., by D. M. Dunlop, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland (1945), pp. 61–81; also ed., with Sp. tr. and full introd. by M. Asín Palacios (Madrid and Granada, 1946). D. M. Dunlop in Encyclopaedia of Islam, 2nd edn., 3 (1971), pp. 728 f., s.v. 'Ibn Bādjdja', with extensive bibl.

Averroism. Averroes (Ibn Rushd, 1126–98) was from an important Muslim family of Córdoba, where he studied the Muslim sciences of law and theology, as well as the non-Muslim sciences of medicine, mathematics, and philosophy. Having gained the favour of the ruler, Abū Ya'qūb Yūsuf (1163–84), he became quāḍī at Seville and Córdoba, and in 1182, chief physician to the caliph at Marrakesh. After 1195 he was in disgrace for a time, when the government adopted a policy of hostility to the non-Islamic sciences, but he was recalled to the court in Marrakesh shortly before his death. His chief claim to fame rests on his Commentaries on *Aristotle, for which he was known in the Middle Ages as 'The Commentator'. Though generally a faithful interpreter of the philosopher, whom he venerated as the greatest genius of all times, his Aristotelianism, like that of most Arabic philosophers, is tinged with *Neoplatonist ideas. Acc. to him God, the Prime Mover, is entirely separated from the world, in which He exercises no Providence, while the celestial spheres are intelligences, emanating from God in a descending series until they reach man. He taught, further, the eternity and potentiality of matter and the unity of the human intellect ('monopsychism'), i.e. the doctrine that only one intellect exists for the whole human race in which every individual participates, to the exclusion of personal immortality. He consequently interpreted the *Koran allegorically, though retaining the literal interpretation as the only one suitable for the common people.

The theories of Averroes became known in Catholic Europe *c.*1230. At first the danger to the Catholic faith was not recognized. Both Roger *Bacon and, in his earlier work, *Albert the Great misunderstood the doctrine of Averroes on the intellect. There is no certain evidence before 1256 that the bearing of the views of Averroes on the personal immortality of man was understood. In that year Pope Alexander IV commanded Albert the Great, then at the Papal court, to examine the question. Albert did this in his De Unitate Intellectus contra Averroem. A year earlier, in Paris the Faculty of Arts had prescribed the study of Aristotle's Metaphysics and of his works on natural science. As a result, within a decade, there were members of the Faculty who were teaching doctrines of Aristotle and his commentators which were destructive of the Christian faith. Their leader was *Siger of Brabant. A reaction to their teaching is clearly seen in the later works of St *Bonaventure, and also in the De Unitate Intellectus contra Averroistas which St *Thomas Aquinas, who had returned to Paris in 1269, directed chiefly against Siger. In the year of its publication (1270) Stephen Tempier, Bp. of Paris, condemned a series of 13 errors, dealing with the eternity of the world, the denial of the universal providence of God, the unity of the human intellect, and the denial of free will. In 1277 he issued a more comprehensive list of errors. In the preamble he accused Siger and his followers of saying that 'things are true according to philosophy but not according to the Catholic faith, as though there were two contradictory truths'. This is the doctrine known as that of the double truth. After 1277 Averroism could no longer be taught in the University of Paris, but it infiltrated again in the 14th cent., when it was proclaimed e.g. by John of Jandun. It survived in Italy, esp. at Padua, until the time of the Renaissance.

Lat. tr. of Averroes' comm. on Aristotle in the Works of Aristotle, 11 vols. Venice, 1550–52, repr. several times during the 16th cent. Modern edn. of comm. and other works surviving in Arabic, Hebrew, and Latin, under the aegis of the Mediaeval Academy of America (Pubs. 54, 59, 62, 65, 71, 78–80, and 96; Cambridge, Mass., 1949–86; cf. H. A. Wolfson, 'Revised Plan for the Publication of a Corpus Commentariorum Averrois in Aristotelem', Speculum, 38 (1963), pp. 88–104), and then of the International Union of Academies (Averrois Opera, Madrid, 1983 ff.). Eng. trs. of his treatises Tahafut al-Tahafut (The Incoherence of the Incoherence) by S. van den Bergh (2 vols., London, 1954); of 'On the Harmony of Religion and Philosophy' by G. F. Hournai (ibid., 1961); of his comm. on *Plato's Republic by R. Lerner (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1974); of his 'Epistle on the Possibility of Conjunction with the Active Intellect' by K. P. Bland (New York, 1982), and of his comm. on Aristotle's Metaphysics, Book Lām, by C. Genequand (Leiden, 1984).

E. *Renan, Averroès et l'averroïsme (1852). L. Gauthier, La Théorie d'Ibn Rochd (Averroès) sur les Rapports de la Religion et de la Philosophie (Paris, 1909); M. *Grabmann, Der lateinische Averroismus des 13. Jahrhunderts und seine Stellung zur christlichen Weltanschauung (Sb. (Bayr.), 1931, Heft 2). R. de Vaux, OP, 'La Première Entrée d'Averroës chez les Latins', Revue des Sciences Philosophiques et Théologiques, 22 (1933), pp. 193–245; D. Salmon, OP, 'Note sur la première influence d'Averroès', Revue Néoscolastique de Philosophie, 60 (1937), pp. 203–12. B. Nardi, Saggi sull'aristotelismo padovano dal secolo XIV al XVI (Florence, 1958), passim; F. van Steenberghen, 'Une Légende tenace: la théorie de la double vérité', Académie royale de Belgique, Bulletin de la Classe des Lettres et des Sciences morales et politiques, 5th ser. 56 (1970), pp. 179–96. Multiple Averroès: Actes du Colloque International organisé à l'occasion du 850ᵉ anniversaire de la naissance d'Averroès, Paris, 20–23 septembre 1976, ed. J. Jolivet (1978); Convegno internazionale l'Averroismo in Italia (Roma, 18–20 Aprile 1977) (Accademia nazionale dei Lincei, Atti dei Convegni Lincei, 40; 1979). B. S. Kogan, Averroes and the Metaphysics of Causation (Albany, NY [1985]). O. [N. H.] Leaman, Averroes and his Philosophy (Oxford, 1988). Further bibl. in W. Totok, Handbuch der Geschichte der Philosophie, 2 (Frankfurt am Main, 1973), pp. 277–83, 455–7, and 586 f. G. C. Anawati, Bibliographie d'Averroès (Algiers, 1978).

M.-M. Gorce, OP, in DHGE 5 (1931), cols. 1032–92, s.v.; R. Arnaldez in Encyclopaedia of Islam (2nd edn.), 3 (1971), pp. 909–20, s.v. 'Ibn Rushd'; id. and A. Z. Iskandar in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 12 (1975), pp. 1–9, s.v. 'Rushd'; J. Hjärpe and others in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 51–61, s.v.

Avesta. The sacred books of the *Zoroastrians or Parsis, which set forth the theology and religious system of the ancient Iranians. The title used by earlier modern scholars, 'Zend-Avesta', rests on a misunderstanding. The work, which was based on much older matter, was put together under Shapur II (309–79), when it reached substantially its present outline. Considerable additions were made after the Arab Conquest of Iran (637–51) and a very great deal has been lost since. The main subjects dealt with are the ritual, hymns, liturgy, and law of the Parsis, and it is divided into five sections. The comparatively short portion known as the Gathas (versified sermons), written in a slightly different dialect, appears to be the oldest part of the work and perhaps goes back to Zoroaster himself. Knowledge of the work was first brought to the W. by a French scholar, Anquetil du Perron, who journeyed to India in 1754 with the express purpose of procuring the text, and after many difficulties returned with a copy for publication in 1771.

The standard edn. is that of K. F. Geldner (8 fascs., Stuttgart, 1885–96). Eng. tr. in The Sacred Books of the East (ed. F. *Max Müller), 4, 23, 31, by J. Darmesteter and L. H. Mills. J. Kellens in E. Yarshater (ed.), Encyclopedia Iranica, 3 (London and New York, 1989), pp. 35–44, s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under ZOROASTRIANISM.

Avicebron or Avicebrol (*c.*1020–*c.*1060), the Latin name of the Spanish Jewish philosopher Solomon Ibn Gabirol. Medieval Christian writers wrongly supposed him to have been an Arab Muslim. His system contained both *Aristotelian and *Neoplatonist elements; against his view that the distinction between matter and form applied in the non-material as well as in the material sphere, St *Thomas Aquinas directed his Opusculum 15, 'De substantiis separatis'. His principal work was the Fons Vitae, written in Arabic, of which the Latin translation became very popular in the Middle Ages. He also wrote poems and hymns.

The Arabic original of the Fons Vitae has been lost; extracts surviving in medieval Heb. tr. were rediscovered and ed., with Fr. tr. and important introd. on his life and works, by S. Munk, Mélanges de philosophie juive et arabe (1859); 12th-cent. Lat. tr. ed., with introd., by C. Baeumker (BGPM, 1, Hefte 2–4; 1892–5); abridged Eng. tr. of vol. 3 by H. E. Wedeck (New York, 1962; London, 1963). Arabic text of 'The Improvement of Moral Qualities', ed., with Eng. tr. and introd., by S. S. Wise (Columbia University Oriental Studies, New York, 1901). Modern edn. of his poems, written in Heb., by H. N. Bialik and J. H. Ravnitzki (3 vols., Berlin and Tel-Aviv, 1924–32). J. M. Millás Vallicrosa, Selomó ibn Gabirol como poeta y filósofo (Biblioteca Hebraico-española, 1; 1945); E. Bertola, Salomon ibn Gabirol (Avicebron): Vita, opere e pensiero (1953); F. Brunner, Platonisme et aristotélisme: La Critique d'ibn Gabirol par Saint Thomas d'Aquin (1965); J. Schlanger, La Philosophie de Salomon ibn Gabirol (Études sur le judaisme médiéval, 3; Leiden, 1968). I. Husik, A History of Mediaeval Jewish Philosophy (New York, 1916), pp. 59–79. M.-M. Gorce, OP, in DHGE 5 (1931), cols. 1104–7, s.v., with bibl.

Avicenna (980–1037), Muslim philosopher, who also acted as the court physician to a number of Iranian princes. His full name was Abu 'Ali al Husain ibn 'Abdallah ibn Sina. His teaching exercised a great influence on the earlier *Schoolmen. His philosophy was in the main *Aristotelian, but it was also much influenced by *Neoplatonism. He held that there was a hierarchy of emanations from the Godhead which mediate between God and man. Of these the most important is the 'active intellect', which Avicenna conceived as an entity in a Platonic world of ideas. The 'passive intellect', which is his name for the individual mind, can acquire ideas only by contact with the active, and is thus secondary. He distinguished, in the usual Aristotelian fashion, between necessary and contingent being, holding that God was necessary and the universe contingent; but between the two he set the world of ideas, which he held to be necessary, not of itself, but because God has made it so. He was the author of *c.*100 treatises, including a Canon of Medicine, which long enjoyed a great reputation, and a vast philosophical Summa called Al-Shifa or 'Sanatio'.

His works, which were written mainly in Arabic, were known to the Middle Ages in Heb. and (esp.) Lat. trs. (the latter often made from the Heb.). Collections of his works were pub. in Lat. tr. at Venice, 1495, 1508, and 1546. Crit. edn. of medieval Lat. tr. by S. Van Riet and others, Avicenna Latinus (Louvain and Leiden, 1968 ff.), with introds. by G. Verbeke. Modern Fr. trs. from the Arabic of Bks. 1–5 of the section on Metaphysics in Al-Shifa, with introd. and notes, by G. C. Anawati (Études Musulmanes, 21; 1978) and of his Instructions and Remarks by A.-M. Goichon (Collection d'Œuvres Arabes de L'Unesco, 1951). Eng. tr. from the Persian of the section on Metaphysics in Dānish Nāma-i 'alā'ī (The Book of Scientific Knowledge) by P. Morewedge (Persian Heritage Series, 13; 1973). His autobiography was ed., with Eng. tr., by W. E. Gohlman (Studies in Islamic Philosophy and Science; Albany, NY, 1974).

S. M. Afnan, Avicenna: His Life and Works (1958). A.-M. Goichon, La Distinction de l'essence et de l'existence d'après Ibn Sinā (Avicenne) (1937); id., La Philosophie d'Avicenne et son Influence en Europe médiévale (1944; 2nd edn., 1951); L. Gardet, La Pensée religieuse d'Avicenne (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, 41; 1951), with refs. to recent edns. of his religious works. E. *Gilson, 'Avicenne et le point de départ de Duns Scot', AHDLMA 2 (1927), pp. 89–149; id., 'Les Sources gréco-arabes de l'augustinisme avicennisant', ibid. 4 (1930), pp. 5–158. E. R. Harvey, The Inward Wits: Psychological Theory in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance (Warburg Institute Surveys, 6; 1975). H. Corbin, Avicenne et le récit visionnaire (Commission des monuments nationaux de l'Iran. Collection du millénaire d'Avicenne, 25; 2 vols, Teheran, 1952–5; Eng. tr., '1960' [1961]). J. R. Michot, La Destinée de l'homme selon Avicenne (Académie Royale de Belgique, Classe de lettres, Fonds René Draguet, 5; 1986). D. Gutas, Avicenna and the Aristotelian Tradition (Islamic Philosophy and Theology, Texts and Studies, 4; Leiden, etc., 1988). O. C. Gruner, A Treatise on the Canon of Avicenna (incorporating a translation of the first Book; 1930). E. Gilson, History of Christian Philosophy in the Middle Ages (1955), pp. 187–216; M. Fakhry, A History of Islamic Philosophy (New York and London, 1970), pp. 147–83; (2nd edn., 1983), pp. 128–62. Full bibl. in W. Totok, Handbuch der Geschichte der Philosophie, 2 (Frankfurt am Main, 1973), pp. 264–72. M.-M. Gorce, OP, in DHGE 5 (1931), cols. 1107–19, s.v.; A.-M. Goichon in Encyclopaedia of Islam (2nd edn.), 3 (1971), pp. 941–7, s.v. 'Ibn Sīnā'; G. C. Anawati and A. Z. Iskandar in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 15 (supp. 1; 1978), pp. 494–501, s.v. 'Sīnā', all with extensive bibl.

Avignon. Acc. to tradition, its first bishop was St Rufus, a disciple of St *Paul. It was in the 12th cent. a centre of the *Albigenses, and for this reason its defences were dismantled by Louis VIII in 1226. From 1309 till 1377 it was the residence ('*Babylonian Captivity') of the Popes, though it did not become Papal property until 1348, when *Clement VI bought it from Joanna, the Queen of Naples. After the Papal court had returned to Rome, two *antipopes, Clement VII and Benedict XIII, lived in Avignon, the latter being finally expelled in 1408.

T. Okey, The Story of Avignon ('Medieval Towns Series', 1911). E. Duprat, Les Origines de l'église d'Avignon: Des Origines à 879 (1909). J. Girard and P. Pansier, La Cour temporelle d'Avignon aux XIV^e et XVI^e siècles (Recherches Historiques et Documents sur Avignon, le Comtat-Venaissin et la Principauté d'Orange, 1; 1909). G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon, 1305–1378 (1912; Eng. tr. of 1949 edn., 1963; 10th edn. [1965]); Y. Renouard, La Papauté à Avignon (1954; Eng. tr., 1970). B. Guillemain, La Cour Pontificale d'Avignon (1309–1327): Étude d'une société (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 201; 1962). H. Labande, Les Palais des papes et les monuments d'Avignon au XIV^e siècle (2 vols., Marseilles, 1925). H. Hoberg (ed.), Die Inventare des päpstlichen Schatzes in Avignon 1314–1376 (ST 111; 1944). J. Girard in DHGE 5 (1931), cols. 1121–53, s.v.; A.-M. Hayez and J. Verger in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 1 (1980), cols. 1301–4, s.v.

Avitus, St (d. *c.*518), Bp. of Vienne from *c.*490. Alcimus Ecdidius Avitus was born in Auvergne of a Roman senatorial family. Succeeding to the see of Vienne in Gaul on the death of his father, Hesychius (490), he exercised an enduring influence on the ecclesiastical life of Burgundy and won the *Arian King Sigismund to the acceptance of Catholic orthodoxy. He was also a strong advocate of the movement for the closer ecclesiastical union of Gaul with Rome. His reputation for learning greatly impressed King *Clovis, then still a pagan. Among his surviving works are a poem De Spiritalis Historiae Gestis (in five books, also called De Mosaicae Historiae Gestis), another De Consolatoria Castitatis Laude (or De Virginitate), a treatise Contra Eutychianum, three complete homilies (and fragments of many others), and some 90 letters. Feast day, 5 Feb.

Works ed. J. *Sirmond, SJ (Paris, 1643), repr. (via A. *Gallandi) in J. P. Migne, PL 59. 191–398. Rev. text by R. Peiper in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 6 (pt. 2; 1883); sections not incl. in PL are repr. in A. Hamman, OFM (ed.), PL, Suppl. 3, cols. 798–830. Bks. 1–3 of De Spiritalis Historiae Gestis ed. D. J. Nodes (Toronto Medieval Latin Texts, 16 [1985]). H. Goelzer, Le Latin de S. Avit (1909); M. Burckhardt, Die Briefsammlung des Bischofs Avitus von Vienne (1938). M. Reydellet, La Royauté dans la littérature latine de Sidoine à Isidore de Séville (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 243; 1981), pp. 87–137. M. Simonetti, 'Letteratura antimonofisita d'Occidente', Augustinianum, 18 (1978), pp. 487–532, esp. pp. 522–31. S. Isetta, 'Rassegna de Studi Avitani (1857–1982)', Bollettino di Studi Latini, 13 (1983), pp. 59–73. J.-R. Palanque in DHGE 5 (1931), cols. 1205–8, s.v. 'Avit (15)'.

Avrillon, Jean Baptiste Élie (1652–1729), French theologian and spiritual writer. He made his profession as a *Minim in 1671. Among his writings were Réflexions théologiques, morales et affectives sur les attributs de Dieu (1705) and manuals for the observance of *Lent and *Advent. E. B. *Pusey published in 1844 adapted English versions of A Guide for passing Advent holily, and A Guide for passing Lent holily, and, in 1845, of The Year of Affections.

Pourrat, 4 (1928), pp. 333–6; J. de Guibert in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 1185 f.

Axum (or Aksum) in N. *Ethiopia, capital of a kingdom flourishing from the 2nd to the 7th cent. Despite claims of a 4th-cent. evangelization by St *Frumentius, it was not until the beginning of the 6th cent. that it emerged as a major Christian power under King Caleb. After the disappearance of the kingdom, the Churches of Axum retained their prestige throughout Ethiopia until the present century.

J. T. Bent, The Sacred City of the Ethiopians: Being a record of Travel and Research in Abyssinia in 1893 (1893, new edn., 1896), esp. pp. 152–97 and 238–85. Deutsche Aksum-Expedition, herausgegeben von der Generalverwaltung der königlichen Museen zu Berlin (by E. Littmann and others; 4 vols. 1913). Y. M. Kobishchanov, Axum (Eng. tr. of Russian, Moscow, 1966, by L. T. Kapitanov [1979]).

Ayliffe, John (1676–1732), English jurist. He was educated at Winchester and at New College, Oxford. His strong Whig sympathies brought him into conflict with the dominant Jacobitism of Oxford, and his Ancient and Present State of the University of Oxford (2 vols., 1714) led to expulsion from the university and loss of his degrees. In 1726 he published his Parergon Iuris Canonici Anglicani (2nd edn., 1734), arranged alphabetically, which remains a treatise of high authority. In 1734 his New Pandect of the Civil Law (vol. 1, on Roman law; all pub.) appeared posthumously.

S. Gibson, 'A Neglected Oxford Historian', in Oxford Essays in Medieval History Presented to Herbert Edward Salter (1934), no. 11, pp. 234–41. G. P. Macdonell in DNB 2 (1885), pp. 279–81, s.v.

Ayscough. See ASKEW, A.

Ayton, John (d. before 1350), English canonist. His name occurs in several forms, among them 'Acton' (so in DNB), 'Athone', 'Achedune'. He was a pupil of Abp. J. *Stratford and became a canon of *Lincoln. He wrote a commentary on the 'Constitutions' of the Papal legates Otto and Ottobon, which was printed in the 1496 and later editions of W. *Lyndwood's Provinciale.

Besides the prefaces to the various edns. of Lyndwood, see also F. W. *Maitland, Roman Canon Law in the Church of England (1898), pp. 6–14, 55, and 76. S. L. Lee in DNB 1 (1885), p. 67; BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 11–12; BRUC, p. 2, all s.v. 'Acton, John'.

Azazel (Heb., עֲזָאזֵל). The mysterious figure, dwelling in the desert, to whom the 'scapegoat' of the sin-offering was dispatched as part of the ritual of the Day of *Atonement (Lev. 16: 1–28). Originally perhaps a desert-demon or goat-deity was intended. In 1 Enoch 6, 8 and 10. 4–8 he is a leader of the fallen angels, a Prometheus-like instructor of mankind in crafts, and the author of all sin. In later Jewish, *Gnostic and *Islamic traditions, he is a leader of demons.

T. K. *Cheyne, 'The date and origin of the ritual of the "Scapegoat"', ZATW 15 (1895), pp. 153–6; G. R. *Driver, 'Three Technical Terms in the Pentateuch', Journal of Semitic Studies, 1 (1956), pp. 97–105, esp. pp. 97 f. M. H. Segal, 'The Religion of Israel before Sinai', JQR 53 (1962–3), pp. 226–56, esp. pp. 248–51. J. G. Frazer, The Golden Bough, 6, 'The Scapegoat' (1913), p. 210, n. 4. S. Ahituv in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 3 (Jerusalem, 1971), cols. 1000–1002, s.v. with further refs. See also comm. on Lev.

Azymites (also Lat. Infermentarii). The name given to the W. Church by the E. at the time of the Schism of 1054, with reference to their use of unleavened bread (τὰ ἄζυμα) in the Liturgy, which, on the E. view, invalidated the rite. See also BREAD, LEAVENED AND UNLEAVENED.

B

Baal (Heb. בַּעַל, Gk. Βάαλ or Βαάλ). The word, which means literally 'lord' or 'owner', e.g. of a house (Ex. 22: 7, [EVV 22: 8], Jgs. 19: 22), was used esp. of the Semitic deities who were held to produce agricultural and animal fertility. The discoveries at *Ras Shamra (ancient Ugarit) in Syria from 1929 onwards furnished fresh evidence concerning Baal-worship in pre-Israelite Canaan. The older view that there was a supreme deity, Baal, to be identified with the sun god, rests on insufficient evidence. The debased rites which arose in connection with Baal-worship caused it to be vigorously attacked by the Hebrew prophets, who constantly found themselves compelled to resist attempts to fuse the worship of Yahweh with that of the local Baalim. The '*high places' at which the cultus was centred were finally destroyed through the efforts of such men as *Elijah and King Josiah. It was the abhorrence of Baal-worship that in later times led the Jews to read the word 'Bosheth' ('shame') as a substitute wherever Baal occurred in the sacred text; cf. the appearance of two forms of the same name, 'Eshbaal' (1 Chr. 9: 39) and 'Ishbosheth' (2 Sam. 2: 8). See also BEL.

Primary texts transliterated, with Eng. tr., in G. R. *Driver, Canaanite Myths and Legends, 2nd edn. by J. C. L. Gibson (Edinburgh, 1977), pp. 37–81, with introd. pp. 2–19. W. R. *Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites (3rd edn. by S. A. *Cook, 1927), passim. A. S. Kapelrud, Baal in the Ras Shamra Texts (Copenhagen, 1952). J. Gray, The Legacy of Canaan: The Ras Shamra Texts and their Relevance to the Old Testament (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 5; 2nd edn., 1965), esp. 163–9. F. Nötscher, T. Klauser, H. Bacht, SJ, A. *Baumstark, and O. Eissfeldt in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 1063–113, s.v., with extensive refs.; J. Gray in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, 1 (1962), pp. 328 f., s.v.

Babel, Tower of. Acc. to Gen. 11: 1–9, the tower reaching to heaven, the presumptuous construction of which was frustrated by Yahweh through confusion of languages among its builders. The story was probably inspired by the famous Babylonian temple-tower ('ziggurat') of Etemenanki, which symbolized for the Israelites the pride of the nations destined by God to dissolution from within. The immediate purpose of the narrative, which plays upon the Hebrew words בָּבֶל (Babel, 'Babylon') and בָּלַל (balal, 'to confuse'), seems to have been to account for the division of languages.

H. Gressmann, The Tower of Babel (Hilda Stroock Lectures for 1927; posthumously ed. J. Obermann, New York, 1928). A. Parrot, La Tour de Babel (Cahiers d'Archéologie Biblique, 2; 1953; Eng. tr., 1955). See also comm. on Gen., cited s.v.

Babylas, St (d. c.250), Bp. of *Antioch. He succeeded Zebinus in the see of Antioch c.240. St John *Chrysostom relates that he once refused an emperor access to a church on the ground of an unrepented crime. (The emperor has sometimes been identified with *Philip the Arabian (q.v.), of whom *Eusebius tells a similar story.) He was imprisoned in the *Decian persecution and died in bonds. In 351 his remains were translated to Daphne, a suburb of Antioch, to hallow a former temple of Apollo for Christian worship. In 362 *Julian the Apostate ordered their removal when unable to obtain a reply from the oracle of Apollo, and they were brought back to Antioch with Psalms ridiculing the heathen idols. Babylas became the object of a devoted cultus at Antioch, and Chrysostom preached two panegyrics (untrustworthy as historical sources) in his honour. Later his cultus extended to the W., and he was celebrated in both prose and verse by St *Aldhelm of Sherborne. Feast day, 24 Jan. in W., 4 Sept. in E.

Eusebius, HE 6. 29. 4 and 39. 4; *Sozomen, HE 5. 19; *Theodoret, HE 3. 6. Chrysostom's sermons on Babylas are in PG 1. 527–72; on their slight historical value see H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Passions des martyrs et les genres littéraires (1921), pp. 209 and 232. Three series of Acta (all late) are pr. in AASS, Jan. 2 (1643), pp. 569–78; P. Peeters, SJ, 'La Passion de S. Basile d'Épiphanie', Anal. Boll. 48 (1930), pp. 302–23, incl. text and refs. to Georgian material on St Babylas. Aldhelm, De Virginitate Prosa, 33, ed. R. Ehwald in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 15 (1919), pp. 274 f., and id., De Virginitate Carmen, lines 1035–70, ibid., pp. 397 f. 'Les Deux Saints Babylas', Anal. Boll. 19 (1900), pp. 5–8. J.-M. Sauget in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 464 f., s.v. 'Babila di Antiochia'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 106.

Babylonian captivity. The captivity in Babylon, whither under Nebuchadnezzar (604–562 BC) a significant proportion of the population of *Judah was deported in two batches c.597 and c.586 BC respectively (2 Kgs. 24: 14–16; 25: 11). Acc. to Ez. 1–2, they were permitted to return after the Persian ruler, Cyrus, had captured Babylon c.539 BC, though many of them did not return until at least 100 years later (Neh. 1 ff.).

The expression was used metaphorically by F. *Petrarch and subsequent writers of the exile of the Popes at *Avignon from 1309 to 1377. M. *Luther's treatise on the Babylonish Captivity of the Church (1520) was a sustained attack on the 'bondage' in which the Church had been held by the withdrawal of the chalice from the laity, the doctrine of *transubstantiation, and the *Sacrifice of the Mass.

Bach, Johann Sebastian (1685–1750), German composer. After being court organist and 'Konzertmeister' at Weimar (1708–17), and court 'Kapellmeister' at Cöthen (1717–23), he became *cantor at the Thomaskirche in Leipzig in 1723, a post he retained till his death. In his theological outlook Bach appears to have adhered to an orthodox *Lutheran position, although his choice of *cantata and *Passion texts sometimes suggests some sympathy with *Pietistic thought. Although the c.200 extant Church cantatas (many more are lost) cover most of his creative life, the majority date from the early Leipzig years, a period of astonishing fecundity, which also saw the two great settings of the Passion (acc. to St John, 1724; acc. to St Matthew, 1727). Both intersperse the Gospel narrative with arias and chorales to produce large-scale *oratorio Passions. The Protestant chorale also lies at the heart of many of the cantatas, while in the chorale-based organ works Bach often achieved a uniquely expressive interpretation of both text and melody. His other major works include the 'Magnificat', the 'Christmas Oratorio' (a series of six cantatas for the Christmas season), and the Mass in B minor. This last gigantic creation was completed only in the final years of Bach's life, although some of the music originated up to 25 years earlier. Too monumental for liturgical use (though some individual movements were so performed in Bach's time), it is best regarded as a personal summing up of the possibilities of the genre. Bach's music had to wait until the 19th cent. and the advocacy of F. Mendelssohn and others before its true greatness was widely recognized. The combination of supreme technical skill with immense creative imagination resulted in music of such spiritual power that it has transcended all denominational boundaries.

Collected edn. of his works pub. for the Bach-Gesellschaft (61 vols., Leipzig, 1851–1926); new edn. (Neue Bach-Ausgabe) for the Johann-Sebastian Bach-Institut, Göttingen, and the Bach-Archiv, Leipzig (Kassel, 1954 ff.). Supplements to the latter include Bach-Dokumente, ed. W. Neumann and H.-J. Schulze (1963 ff.). Eng. tr. of many docs. in H. T. David and A. Mendel (eds.), The Bach Reader (New York, 1945; London, 1946; rev. edn. [1966]). Thematic catalogues ed. W. Schmieder (Leipzig, 1950) and H.-J. Schulze and C. Wolff, Bach Compendium (1985 ff.). Lives by J. N. Forkel (Leipzig, 1802; Eng. tr., 1820; modern Eng. tr., with notes and appendices by C. S. Terry, 1920), P. Spitta (2 vols., Leipzig, 1873–80; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1884–5), A. *Schweitzer (in Fr., Leipzig, 1905; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1911), C. S. Terry (London, 1928), and M. Boyd (ibid., 1983). J. A. Westrup, Bach Cantatas (BBC Music Guides, 1966). G. Stiller, Johann Sebastian Bach und das Leipziger gottesdienstliche Leben seiner Zeit (Kassel [1970]; Eng. tr., St Louis [1984]). M. Petzoldt (ed.), Bach als Ausleger der Bibel (Göttingen, 1985). G. Herz, Essays on J. S. Bach (Studies in Musicology, 73; Ann Arbor, Mich., 1985). J. [J.] Pelikan, Bach among the Theologians (Philadelphia [1986]). P. [F.] Williams, The Organ Music of J. S. Bach (3 vols., Cambridge, 1980–4). C. Wolff (ed.), Bach-Bibliographie (1985). W. Emery and others in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 1 (1980), pp. 785–840, s.v.

Bacon, Francis (1561–1626), philosopher. He was the son of Sir Nicholas Bacon (1509–79), *Elizabeth I's Lord Keeper, and Ann Cooke, whose sister was married to Elizabeth's chief minister, Lord Burleigh. Born in London, from the age of 12 Bacon was for two and a half years at Trinity College, Cambridge, and then spent three years in Paris. Left ill-provided by his father's death, he trained and went to work as a barrister. The Queen was not well disposed towards him, despite his readiness to prosecute the Earl of Essex, her fallen favourite and his former friend. He represented various places in Parliament between 1584 until his elevation to the House of Lords as Lord Verulam in 1618. *James I made him successively Solicitor-General (1607), Attorney-General (1613), Lord Keeper (1617), and Lord Chancellor (1618). In 1621 he was raised to the rank of Viscount St Albans. In the same year he was accused of, and confessed to, bribery and corruption. The heavy fine and banishment from London were soon remitted, but they marked the end of his public career.

Bacon was the first English philosopher of importance since *William of Ockham (d. 1347). In his Proficience and Advancement of Learning (1605) he defended the pursuit of natural knowledge and attacked three unsatisfactory modes of enquiry (i.e. 'disputatious' learning or *Scholasticism, 'delicate' (i.e. dilettante) learning or humanism, which he regarded as preoccupied with style rather than substance, and 'fantastical' learning or occultism). He then provided an elaborate classification of the varieties of knowledge which has had lasting influence. His De Augmentis Scientiarum (1623) is an expanded Latin version of this work. His Novum Organum (written *c.*1608; pub. 1620) opens with his 'Great Instauration', a further classification of the sciences, and his famous account of the four kinds of 'idols' which mislead man in his pursuit of truth: the idols of the tribe which are mental weaknesses typical of the whole human species; idols of the cave which are individual peculiarities serving to distinguish one cast of mind from another; idols of the market which are forms of error connected with the influence of language; and idols of the theatre which are the received but erroneous systems of philosophy described in the Advancement of Learning. The main business of the book, however, is to describe a method of eliminative induction by which the inquiring student of nature can ascend by gradual steps from observed matters of particular fact to comprehensive natural laws. His most important philosophical contribution in these works was his emphasis on two characteristics of natural knowledge. He held the almost unprecedented view that knowledge was cumulative, that it is possible to enlarge it rather than simply to preserve the wisdom of the past. And he insisted that the sort of knowledge that should be pursued is for practical ends, as the indispensable means to 'the relief of man's estate'. The New Atlantis (1627, posthumous), describing the ideal state, embodies Bacon's conception of natural inquiry as an essentially cooperative undertaking. His Essays, consisting mainly of worldly moralizing, appeared with additions in each new edition (1597, 1612, and 1625); that on 'Atheism' first came out in 1612.

Bacon divided knowledge as a whole into natural knowledge (or 'philosophy') and divinity, by which he meant inspired revelation. The sole task of 'divine philosophy' (a small section of natural knowledge) was to establish the existence of God as presupposed by the existence and character of the natural world. Since it can tell us nothing more than that, we have to depend on revelation for knowledge of God's nature, action, and purposes. This apparently unquestioning dependence on scriptural authority is consistent with his *Puritan upbringing, though it is hard to reconcile with his critically inquiring outlook. In line with *Aristotle, as scholastically interpreted, Bacon took the rational soul to be implanted in the human body by God, thus securing its immortality. As superhuman it is beyond the competence of scientific investigation. Yet he insisted that 'human philosophy', i.e. the study of man and society, is to be carried out in the same inductive way as the study of non-human nature, and that every event has a cause. While Bacon has been acclaimed by freethinkers, it seems that he was at least a *deist; he wrote a number of prayers, a group of 'holy meditations', some defences of religious toleration, and he translated seven Psalms into pedestrian English.

Opera Omnia, pub. in 6 vols., Amsterdam 1661–84; standard edn. by J. Spedding, R. L. Ellis, and D. D. Heath (14 vols., London, 1857–74), of which the last 7 vols. comprise the Letters and Life of Francis Bacon (incl. his Occasional Works, ed. J. Spedding). Philosophical Works, partly repr. with introd. by J. M. Robertson (London, 1905). Modern edns. (with introd. and notes) of his Essays by E. A. Abbott ('London Series of English Classics', 2 vols., 1876); of his Novum Organum by T. Fowler (Oxford, 1878; 2nd edn., 1889); and of his Advancement of Learning and The New Atlantis by T. Case ('World's Classics', 1906). Lives by R. W. *Church ('English Men of Letters', 1884), J. Nichol (Edinburgh and London, 1888), and J. O. Fuller (London and The Hague [1981]). The many studies of his thought include: T. Fowler, Francis Bacon ('English Philosophers', 1881); F. H. Anderson, The Philosophy of Francis Bacon (Chicago, 1948); P. Rossi, Francesco Bacone: dalla magia alla scienza (Bari, 1957; Eng. tr., 1968); J. G. Crowther, Francis Bacon: The First Statesman of Science (1960); B. Vickers (ed.), Essential Articles for the Study of Francis Bacon (Hamden, Conn., 1968; London, 1972); and A. Quinton, Francis Bacon (Past Masters, Oxford, 1980). M. Purver, The Royal Society: Concept and Creation (1967), pp. 20–62. R. W. Gibson, Francis Bacon: A Bibliography of his Works and of Baconiana to the Year 1750 (Oxford, 1950; supp., privately issued, 1959).

Bacon, Roger (b. *c.*1214 or perhaps more prob *c.*1220; d. 1292 or later), 'Doctor mirabilis', *Franciscan philosopher. Born, acc. to late evidence, at either Ilminister in Somerset or Bisley in Glos., he possibly studied at *Oxford, and certainly in *Paris. His earliest writings are a series of quaestiones on *Aristotle's 'Physics' and 'Metaphysics', on the Pseudo-Aristotelian 'De Plantis', and on the *'Liber de Causis'. They are among the earliest lectures on these books, and may be assigned to the years between 1240/1 and 1245/6. About 1247 he turned to the study of languages, mathematics, and natural sciences. The date at which he moved to Oxford is not known. It was probably here that, *c.*1257, he entered the Franciscan Order, in which he came under the influence of *Adam of Marsh and other disciples of Robert *Grosseteste, for whom he later expressed an unbounded admiration.

A new stage in Bacon's career was reached in the mid-1260s. Back in Paris at the Franciscan convent, he had a chance of expounding his ideas on the defects he saw in western education to a clerk in the household of Cardinal Guy le Gros de Foulques, who not long afterwards (Feb. 1265) became Pope Clement IV. The Pope bade him dispatch to Rome an account of his doctrines 'secretly and without delay'. Bacon set to work, and in late 1267 or early 1268 sent to the Pope an encyclopedic work in seven parts, known as the 'Opus maius', in which he outlined the causes which had hindered the progress of philosophy among the Latins and had weakened W. Christendom in its struggle against *Islam. The work also gave a fervent account of the importance of the study of languages for a proper understanding of the Bible, and of the value of mathematics, optics, the natural sciences, and moral philosophy in rebuilding and strengthening W. Christendom against its enemies. He also wrote two briefer works, the 'Opus minus' and 'Opus tertium', which were partly synopses and partly elaborations of sections of the 'Opus maius'; the first was sent to the Pope, the second probably not.

The death of Pope Clement IV in Nov. 1268 brought to an end any hope of a Papal commendation for his ideas. Bacon lived more than 20 years longer, and was able to continue writing. The 'Communia Naturalium' and 'Communia Mathematica' are usually assigned to this period, though they may have been written earlier, but the 'Compendium Studii Philosophiae' is known to have been written *c.*1272, and the fragmentary 'Compendium Studii Theologiae' in 1292. In 1277 Bacon is said to have been condemned by the General of the Franciscan Order for 'suspect novelties' and 'dangerous doctrine' and imprisoned for a time. The background to this condemnation is not known. According to the Oxford chronicler, John Rous, he was buried in the Franciscan convent at Oxford.

Bacon's place in the history of thought is hard to assess. In philosophy and in science he had an exceptionally wide knowledge of works translated from Greek and Arabic, but he was never able to construct a unified system. His irascible nature and his intemperate criticism of those who disagreed with him worked against the acceptance of his proposals for the reform of theological studies. Nevertheless he was a man of wide vision. The history of his posthumous reputation remains to be written. Never entirely forgotten in the Middle Ages, his real achievement was submerged in that of a man of magical powers and imaginary mechanical inventions.

'Opus Maius', ed. J. H. Bridges (3 vols., Oxford, 1897–1900); 'Opus Minus', 'Opus Tertium', and 'Compendium Studii Philosophiae', ed. J. S. Brewer in Rogeri Bacon Opera quaedam hactenus inedita, 1 (all pub., London, 1859). 'Opus Tertium', ed. P. Duhem (Quaracchi, 1909). Bacon's 'Moralis Philosophia', ed. F. Delorme, OFM, and E. Massa (Zurich, 1953). 'Compendium Studii Theologiae', ed. H. *Rashdall (British Society for Franciscan Studies, Aberdeen, 1911; in an appendix in the vol., A. G. Little attempts the difficult task of listing Bacon's complete works, pp. 71–122). Many items ed. (not very satisfactorily) by R. Steele and others in Opera hactenus inedita Rogeri Baconi (London and Oxford, 1905 ff.; 16 vols. to 1940). His Gk. grammar and fragments of Heb. grammar ed. E. Nolan and S. A. Hirsch (Cambridge, 1902). Crit. edn., with Eng. tr., of his 'De multiplicatione specierum' and 'De speculis comburentibus' by D. C. Lindberg (Oxford, 1983). K. M. Fredborg and others, 'An unedited part of Roger Bacon's "Opus Maius": "De signis"', Traditio, 34 (1978), pp. 75–136, incl. text. A. G. Little (ed.), Roger Bacon (Commemorative Essays, 1914). D. E. Sharp, Franciscan Philosophy at Oxford in the Thirteenth Century (British Society of Franciscan Studies, 16; 1930), pp. 115–71. T. Crowley, Roger Bacon: The Problem of the Soul in his Philosophical Commentaries (Louvain and Dublin, 1950). S. E. Easton, Roger Bacon and his Search for a Universal Science (1952). E. Massa, Ruggero Bacone: Etica e poetica nella storia dell'"Opus Maius" (Uomini e Dottrine, 3; 1955). F. Alessio, Mito e scienza in Ruggero Bacone (Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Filosofia e Lettere dell'Università di Pavia; Milan, 1957). Id., 'Un Secolo di Studi su Ruggero Bacone (1848–1957)', Rivista Critica di Storia della Filosofia, 14 (1959), pp. 81–102. J. M. G. Hackett, 'The Attitude of Roger Bacon to the Scientia of Albertus Magnus', in J. A. Weisheipl, OP (ed.), Albertus Magnus and the Sciences: Commemorative Essays 1980 (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 49; 1980), pp. 53–72. A. C. Crombie and J. D. North in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 1 (1970), pp. 377–85, s.v., with detailed bibl.

Baeda. See BEDE, ST.

Baeumer, Suitbert. See BÄUMER, SUITBERT.

Bagot, Richard (1782–1854), Bp. successively of *Oxford and of *Bath and Wells. He was educated at Rugby and at *Christ Church, Oxford, and in 1804 elected a Fellow of All Souls. From 1829 to 1845 he was Bp. of Oxford. His relations with the *Tractarians are his chief interest to the historian. When in a charge of 1838 he reproved them for practices 'which hitherto had ended in superstition', E. B. *Pusey addressed to him an Open Letter. After the publication of Tract 90 in 1841, Bagot induced J. H. *Newman to cease issuing the tracts altogether, but in a charge of 1842 he defended the Tractarians against current attacks, though he denounced the 'lamentable want of judgement' of the rank and file of the movement. In 1845 he was translated at his own desire to the see of Bath and Wells, where the closing months of his life were taken up by a controversy with G. A. *Denison, Vicar of East Brent, on Eucharistic doctrine.

S. Lee in DNB 2 (1885), pp. 339 f., s.v., with bibl.

Baillie, John (1886–1960), Scottish theologian. Born in the *Free Church of Scotland manse at Gairloch, Wester Ross, he went from Inverness Royal Academy to Edinburgh to study philosophy at the university and theology at New College (then a seminary of the *United Free Church for whose ministry he trained). After some years of teaching in Canada and the USA, from 1934 until his retirement in 1956 he was Professor of Divinity at Edinburgh, latterly serving also as Principal of New College. He attracted students from all over the world. He was Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1943, and Joint President of the *World Council of Churches from 1954. His numerous publications, which included And the Life Everlasting (1934), Our Knowledge of God (1939), The Idea of Revelation in Recent Thought (1956), and The Sense of the Presence of God (*Gifford Lectures for 1961–2; 1962), were marked by literary grace, loyalty to the substance of the Christian faith despite unease at some of its traditional formulations, and avoidance of philosophical and theological extremes. While giving a strictly limited welcome to the fashionable *Barthianism of his day, he made plain his deepest concerns in the eloquent apologetic of Invitation to Pilgrimage (1942) and the warm piety of A Diary of Private Prayer (1936).

His brother, Donald Macpherson Baillie (1887–1954) was an equally distinguished preacher, theologian, and ecumenical statesman. Teaching systematic theology at St Mary's College, St Andrews, from 1934 until his death, he won international acclaim for his God was in Christ (1948), with its imaginative use of the Pauline 'paradox of grace' to illuminate *Christology. Like John, Donald was deeply indebted to the *Calvinist faith and devotion of his Highland upbringing. He became a friend of the *Student Christian Movement and the *Iona Community, and a prominent figure in the Faith and Order conferences at *Edinburgh (1937) and *Lund (1952).

D. M. Baillie, The Theology of the Sacraments and other papers (1957), with a biographical essay by J. Baillie, pp. 11–36. D. [A. S.] Fergusson (ed.), Christ, Church and Society: Essays on John Baillie and Donald Baillie (Edinburgh, 1993).

Bainbridge, Christopher (*c.*1464–1514), Abp. of *York and cardinal. He was born at Hilton, near Appleby, in Cumbria, and educated at The Queen's College, Oxford, of which he was appointed provost in 1496. He held a number of benefices and was made Dean of *Windsor in 1505. In 1507 he was consecrated Bp. of *Durham, and translated to York in 1508. *Henry VIII sent him to Rome as ambassador in 1509 and *Julius II created him cardinal in 1511. As such, Julius II entrusted him with a military expedition against Ferrara. In the same year (1511), Henry chose him to inform the Pope of England's adhesion to the Holy League against France. Bainbridge died of poison administered by one of his chaplains, who accused Sylvester de Gigli, Bp. of *Worcester and resident English ambassador at Rome, of instigating him to the murder from motives of rivalry (though de Gigli was finally acquitted). A man of violent temper, Bainbridge proved himself a courageous defender of English interests at the Curia.

Liber Pontificalis Chr. Bainbridge Archiepiscopi Eboracensis, ed. W. G. Henderson (Surtees Society, 61; 1875). D. S. Chambers, Cardinal Bainbridge in the Court of Rome 1509 to 1514 (Oxford, 1965). J. *Gairdner in DNB 2 (1885), pp. 433 f.; BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 91–3.

Baird Lectures. A series of at least six lectures established in 1871 on the benefaction of James Baird (1802–76), a wealthy ironmaster, for the defence of orthodox *Presbyterian teaching and delivered annually at Glasgow, and also if required at one other Scottish university. The lecturer must be a minister of the Church of Scotland.

Baius, Michel (1513–89), Flemish theologian. He was educated at Louvain, became principal of Standonck College in 1541, and held various appointments in the University of Louvain in the years following. Shortly after 1550 he joined John Hessels (1522–66) in asserting theological propositions on the subjects of grace and sin which were held to be unorthodox, and met with the displeasure of the Chancellor of the University and the Abp. of Malines. In 1560 eighteen of his propositions were censured by the *Sorbonne. Even so, Baius and Hessels were chosen to represent the University in 1563 at the Council of *Trent, and received the powerful protection of the King of Spain. Further publications by Baius resulted in the bull 'Ex omnibus afflictionibus' (1 Oct. 1567), in which a large number of propositions from his writings, or embodying his doctrine, were condemned, but which did not mention him by name. For the rest of his life he seems to have hesitated between loyalty to his principles and the desire to remain in the RC Church, and to have been seeking ways of verbal reconciliation between his teaching and official pronouncements. In 1579 the bull 'Provisionis Nostrae' reaffirmed that of 1567, and Baius made a formal recantation of his main views, but his subsequent writings appear to show that they still underlay his teachings.

His system, 'Baianism', is often considered an anticipation of *Jansenism. It is contained in a series of small works, in which Baius interprets in his own way the anti-*Pelagian teaching of St *Augustine. Its main principles were: (1) That in the primitive state, innocence was not a supernatural gift of God to man, but the necessary complement of human nature itself. (2) That *original sin is not merely a privation of grace, but habitual *concupiscence, transmitted by heredity, and so even in unconscious infants is a sin or moral evil of itself. (3) That the sole work of *redemption is to enable us to recover the gifts of original innocence and live moral lives; and that this end is achieved by the substitution of charity for concupiscence as the motive for each meritorious act. The grace conferred by redemption was thus not considered to be supernatural.

Opera, ed. G. Gerberon, OSB, Cologne, 1696. The 18 censured propositions, together with Baius' annotations, and a further explanation of his doctrine made to the Theology Faculty at Louvain, and part of a letter of 1569, were repr. by H. Lennerz, SJ (Pontificia Universitas Gregoriana, Textus et Documenta. Series Theologia, 24; 1938). J. B. Du Chesne, SJ, Histoire du baïanisme ou l'hérésie de Michel Baïus (Douai, 1731). F. X. Linsenmann, Michael Baius und die Grundlegung des Jansenismus (Tübingen, 1867). F.-X. Jansen, SJ, Baius et la baianisme (Museum Lessianum, Section Théologique, 18; Louvain, 1927). G. Fourure, Les Châtiments divins: Étude historique et doctrinale (Bibliothèque de Théologie, 2nd ser., Théologie Morale, 5 [1959]). G. Galeota, SJ, Bellarmino contro Baio a Lovanio: Studio e testo di un inedito bellarminiano (Aloisiana. Scritti Pubblicati sotto la Direzione della Pontificia Facoltà Teologica Napoletana 'S. Luigi', 5; Rome 1966), with extensive bibl.; V. Grossi, OSA, Baio e Bellarmino interpreti di S. Agostino nelle questioni del Soprannaturale (Studia Ephemeridis 'Augustinianum', 3; 1968). H. de *Lubac, SJ, 'Deux Augustiniens fourvoyés, Baius et Jansénius; I. Baïus', Rech. S.R. 21 (1931), pp. 422–43; id., Surnaturel: Études historiques (Théologie, 8; 1946), esp. pp. 15–37; repr. and enlarged in id., Augustinisme et théologie moderne (ibid. 63; 1965), pp. 15–48; Eng. tr. (1969), pp. 1–33. É. [J. M.] van Eijl, OFM, 'L'Interprétation de la Bulle de Pie V portant condamnation de Baius', RHE 50 (1955), pp. 499–542. N. J. Abercrombie, The Origins of Jansenism (1936), pp. 87–93, 137–42, and passim. X. Le Bachelet, SJ, in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 38–111, s.v.; E. J. M. van Eijl, OFM, in Nationaal Biografisch Woordenboek, 1 (1964), cols. 113–29, s.v. 'Bay (Baius) Michaelde', with extensive bibl.; P. J. Donnelly in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 19–21, s.v. See also works cited under JANSENISM.

Baker, Augustine (baptismal name, David) (1575–1641), *Benedictine writer on ascetical theology and history. He became a RC, entered the Benedictine Order at Padua in 1605, and was ordained priest in 1613. He worked at Cambrai and *Douai, and as a chaplain in England. Of his ascetical writings the most famous survive in Sancta Sophia, or Holy Wisdom (2 vols., 1657), a collection made posthumously. It expounds the way of contemplation, under the headings 'Of an Internal Life in General', 'Of Mortification', and 'Of Prayer'. His important researches into the history of the origins of the Benedictine Order in England were published in Apostolatus Benedictinorum in Anglia (Douai, 1626). He also left in MS a Life of Dame Gertrude *More (q.v. for details).

Confessions, ed. J. McCann, OSB (1922). A short treatise, The Substance of the Rule of St Bennet, is ed. by the nuns of Stanbrook Abbey (Worcester, 1981). Lives by P. Salvin [OSB] and S. Cressy [OSB], ed. by J. McCann (1933); 'Memorials' incl. his autobiography and life by Fr. Leander Prichard in Memorials of Father Augustine Baker and other Documents relating to the English Benedictines, ed. J. McCann and [R.] H. *Connolly (Catholic Record Society, 33; 1933), pp. 1–154, with Descriptive Catalogue of Baker MSS, pp. 274–93. Modern study by A. Low (New York, 1970). J. Gaffney, Augustine Baker's Inner Light (Scranton, Pa. [1989]). [M.] D. *Knowles, The English Mystical Tradition (1961), pp. 151–87. V. M. Lagorio and R. Bradley, The 14th-Century English Mystics: A Comprehensive Annotated Bibliography (New York and London, 1981), pp. 166–170 (nos. 804–26). P. Spearitt, OSB, in G. S. Wakefield (ed.), A Dictionary of Spirituality (1983), p. 36, s.v.

Baker, Sir Henry Williams, Bart. (1821–77), hymnwriter. The son of Vice-Admiral Sir Henry Loraine Baker, he was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. From 1851 until his death he was Vicar of Monkland, near Leominster. His many hymns, written under the influence of the *High Church Movement, of which he was a devoted supporter, were marked by simplicity of expression and smoothness of rhythm. Among those which have become well known are 'The King of Love my Shepherd is' (paraphrase of Ps. 23), 'Lord, Thy Word abideth', and 'O praise ye the Lord'. He translated a number of hymns from Latin, notably those of the 17th-cent. Victorine hymn-writer, Jean-Baptiste de Santeuil. He was also the promoter and compiler of the original edition (1861) of Hymns, Ancient and Modern (q.v.) as well as the editor of other hymn-books and a devotional manual.

A. H. Grant in DNB 3 (1885), p. 11.

baldachino (from Ital. Baldacco, 'Baghdad', whence came the materials used in its construction). A canopy used to cover an altar, also called umbraculum or *ciborium. It may be made of wood, stone, or metal, in which case it is supported on pillars, or of silk or velvet when it is suspended from the ceiling or attached to the wall. It was originally surmounted by a cross, which was later placed on or behind the altar. The oldest existing example is of the 9th cent. at *Ravenna; the largest and most famous is G. L. Bernini's canopy on twisted pillars over the high altar of St Peter's at Rome. The baldachino was required in the RC Church by the Caeremoniale Episcoporum of 1600 (1. 12. 13 and 1. 14. 1), but its use has ceased to be general in the 20th cent. and it is not mentioned in the 1984 revision. The Reformers objected to it on the ground that it tended to make the Lord's Table a fixture, and J. *Jewel, Bp. of *Salisbury, made it a subject of controversy with Thomas Harding (1516–72). The word is also used of the canopy over a bishop's throne, over statues, and of the movable canopy carried in processions, e.g. of the Blessed Sacrament.

Braun, CA 2, pp. 185–9 and 262–71. O. Treitinger in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 1150–3, s.v. with refs.

Baldwin (d. 1190), Abp. of *Canterbury. A native of *Exeter, he became a member of the household of Bp. Bartholomew (Bp. of Exeter, 1161–4), and was Archdeacon of Totnes, *c.*1161–1170. He was a distinguished scholar and friend of *John of Salisbury. At the height of the dispute between Henry II and Abp. Thomas *Becket, he became a *Cistercian monk at Forde in Devonshire, and by 1175 had been appointed Abbot. In 1180 he became Bp. of *Worcester. Like his predecessor, Bp. Roger, a notable Papal judge-delegate, Baldwin may have had a hand in compiling the important Worcester collection of *decretals. In 1184 he was translated to Canterbury, the suffragan bishops and the monks of Christ Church, who both claimed the right to elect, having chosen him separately. A dispute between Baldwin and the monks over property and patronage culminated in a struggle in the Papal court at Rome; in England the King had backed Baldwin, who planned to found a college of secular canons, first at Hackington, near Canterbury, and later at *Lambeth. His objective was, if not to set up an alternative cathedral, at least to provide income and status for his clerks and counsellors. In this enterprise he was unsuccessful, as was his successor, *Hubert Walter. In 1188 Baldwin held a metropolitan visitation of the Welsh dioceses, so affirming the jurisdiction of Canterbury in *Wales. In March 1190 he set out on the Third *Crusade, and died in Nov. at Acre. He was the author of sermons and several theological works, the best known being the treatise De Sacramento Altaris.

Opera repr. from B. Tissier, Bibliotheca Patrum Cisterciensium, 5 (1662), pp. 1–159, in J. P. Migne, PL 204. 401–774. De Sacramento Altaris, ed. J. Morson, OCSO, with Fr. tr. by E. de Solmes, OSB, and introd. by J. Leclercq, OSB (SC 93–4; 1963). Treatises also ed., with Fr. tr., by R. Thomas, OCSO (Pain de Cîteaux, 35–40 [1973–5]). P. Guébin, 'Deux sermons inédits de Baldwin, archevêque de Canterbury 1184–1190', JTS 13 (1912), pp. 571–4. His official letters as Abp. ed. C. R. Cheney and B. E. A. Jones, English Episcopal Acta, 2 (1986), pp. 203–75 (nos. 233–326). The correspondence over his dispute with his monks is ed. W. *Stubbs, Epistolae Cantuarienses (Chronicles and Memorials of the Reign of Richard I, 2; RS, 1865), pp. 4–329 passim, with admirable introd. On the circumstances of his translation to Canterbury, D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke (eds.), Councils & Synods . . . 1: A.D. 871–1204, 2 (Oxford, 1981), pp. 1015–22. His journey into Wales was described by *Giraldus Cambrensis, Itinerarium Kambriae (Opera, ed. J. F. Dimock, 6, RS, 1868, pp. 3–152). On the Collectio Wigorniensis (analysed by H.-E. Lohmann in Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kanonistische Abteilung, 22 (1933), pp. 36–187), C. Duggan, Twelfth-Century Decretal Collections (1963), pp. 110–15, and M. G. Cheney, Roger, Bishop of Worcester (Oxford, 1980), pp. 198–200.

Bale, John (1495–1563), Bp. of Ossory, 'Bilious Bale'. He entered the *Carmelite Priory at Norwich at the age of 11, and studied at Cambridge, Louvain, and Toulouse before being converted to Protestantism by Thomas Lord Wentworth *c.*1533; he renounced his celibacy and vigorously defended the Reformation, writing earthily Protestant plays which brought him favour from T. *Cromwell. On Cromwell's fall in 1540 he fled abroad, but returned in 1548 and in 1552 was nominated Bp. of Ossory. He and Abp. Hugh Goodacre of *Armagh provoked controversy by refusing to be consecrated by the traditional rite and insisting on the use of the Edwardine BCP; he made enemies by his energetic promotion of Protestantism. On *Mary's accession (1553), he tried to flee to Scotland, but after capture by pirates went to the Netherlands, Germany, and Switzerland. After his return to England on *Elizabeth I's accession in 1559, he retired to a prebend at *Canterbury, his literary savagery preserved to the last. His *millenarian views remained influential. Of 21 plays (mostly lost), King John (*c.*1536) anticipates later historical drama. Genuine if partisan historical scholarship is reflected in his Illustrium Maioris Britanniae Scriptorum, hoc est, Angliae, Cambriae, ac Scotiae Summarium (1548), an indispensable pioneering attempt at British bibliography.

Select Works, ed. H. Christmas (*Parker Society, 1849), with biogr. notice, pp. vii–xii; Complete Plays, ed. P. Happé (Tudor Interludes, 4–5; Cambridge, 1985–6). His 'Index Britanniae Scriptorum' has been ed. by R. L. Poole and M. Bateson (Anecdota Oxoniensia, Mediaeval and Modern Series, 9; 1902); his King John, ed., with modernized spelling, by W. A. Armstrong, Elizabethan History Plays (World's Classics, 1965), pp. 1–87. There is much autobiographical material in The Vocation of John Bale to the Bishopric of Ossory in Ireland, his Persecutions in the same and final Deliverance (1553; repr. in the Harleian Miscellany, 6 [1745], pp. 402–28). Modern studies by J. W. Harris (Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, 25, pt. 4; 1940), H. McCusker (Bryn Mawr, Pa., 1942), K. Sperk (Anglistische Forschungen, 101; 1973), and L. P. Fairfield (West Lafayette, Ind., 1976). J. F. Mozley, 'John Bale', Notes and Queries, 189 (1945), pp. 276 f.; L. P. Fairfield, 'John Bale and the Development of Protestant Hagiography in England', JEH 24 (1973), pp. 145–60. W. T. Davies, 'A Bibliography of John Bale', Oxford Bibliographical Society Proceedings and Papers, 5 (1940), pp. 201–79.

Balfour, Arthur James (1848–1930), British philosopher and statesman, Prime Minister, 1902–5, and Foreign Secretary, 1916–19. In 1879 he published a work intended as an apology for religious faith with the somewhat misleading title A Defence of Philosophic Doubt. It endeavoured to show that all forms of human knowledge, including the natural sciences with their boasting claims, left certain basic residual problems which defied intellectual solution, and that the ultimate convictions of mankind rested on the non-rational ground of religious faith. This position Balfour developed in his Foundations of Belief (1895), which, in view of the eminence to which he had then risen as a statesman, attracted very wide attention. He worked out his position somewhat further in two sets of *Gifford Lectures, Theism and Humanism (1915), and Theism and Thought (1923). In public affairs, his Education Bill of 1902 provoked keen hostility from Nonconformists and in defence he published a Letter on the Criticisms of an Opponent [J. *Clifford] (subsequently included in his Essays and Addresses, 3rd edn., 1905). He was a communicant in both the C of E and the Church of Scotland.

His biography was written by B. E. C. Dugdale, his niece (2 vols. London, 1936). Further Lives by [C.] K. Young (ibid., 1963), S. [H.] Zebel (Cambridge, 1973), J. M. H. S. Wyndham, Baron Egremont (London, 1980), and R. F. Mackay (Oxford, 1985). D. Judd, Balfour and the British Empire (1968). A. Cecil in DNB 1922–1930, pp. 41–56, s.v.

Ball, John (d. 1381), priest, implicated in the insurrection of Wat Tyler. Little is known of his early life. Acc. to his own account he was first at *York and later at Colchester. In 1366, when living in Essex, he was summoned before the Abp. of *Canterbury for preaching *Wycliffite doctrines of property, and the faithful were forbidden to attend his sermons. In 1376 his arrest as an excommunicated person was ordered, but his popularity continued, esp. through his teaching of the equality of bondsmen and gentry. During Tyler's insurrection (1381) he was in custody in the Archbishop's prison at Maidstone, but was freed by the rebels and brought in triumph to Canterbury. At Blackheath he preached on the famous rhyme 'When Adam dalf and Eve span, Who was then a gentilman?' and incited the populace to kill the nobles and all others opposed to his ideal of social equality. He was present at the death of Abp. *Simon of Sudbury in the Tower, and also at the meeting of Wat Tyler and the King at *Smithfield. After Tyler's death he fled to the Midlands. He was captured at Coventry and brought before Richard II at *St Albans, where he was executed as a traitor.

The chief authorities for his life are Fasciculi Zizaniorum (ed. W. W. Shirley, Rolls Series, 1858), p. 273; Thomas Walsingham, Historia Anglicana, 2 (ed. by H. T. Riley, RS, 1864), pp. 32–4; Henry Knighton, Chronicon, 2 (ed. by J. R. Lumby, RS, 1895), pp. 131 f. and 139 f. Eng. tr. of the sources, with comm. and introd., by R. B. Dobson, The Peasants' Revolt of 1381 (2nd edn., 1983), pp. xxviii–xxx, 135–7, 369–78, and 380 f. J. *Gairdner in DNB 3 (1885), pp. 73 f.

Ballerini, Pietro (1698–1769), patristic scholar and canonist. He was the son of a surgeon, born at *Verona, and educated by the *Jesuits there. Ordained priest in 1722, he shortly afterwards became principal of a classical school in the same city. Attention was drawn to his work on moral theology when his extreme views on *usury were condemned by Pope *Benedict XIV in his bull Vix pervenit (1745). In 1748 he was sent by the republic of *Venice to defend its interests at Rome in a dispute over *Aquileia. He was then commissioned by the Pope to prepare a new edition of the works of St *Leo the Great to replace that of P. *Quesnel (1675), which had been written in the interest of *Gallicanism. This edition (3 vols., Venice, 1753–7), published in conjunction with his brother Girolamo Ballerini (1702–81), has remained the standard text of Leo; the last vol. contains a valuable collection of documents (not pub. elsewhere) and dissertations on the early history of *canon law. The joint work of the two brothers, which owed much of its success to their fruitful cooperation, also included Henrici Norisii Veronensis ... Opera (4 vols., Verona, 1729–32), with valuable material on ecclesiastical history, S. Zenonis, Episcopi Veronensis, Sermones, with notes (ibid., 1739), S. Antonini, Archiepiscopi Florentini, Summa Theologica, with Life of the author (ibid., 4 pts., 1740–1) and Ratherii, Episcopi Veronensis, Opera (ibid., 1765). Pietro alone also pub., among other items, Il Metodo di S. Agostino negli studi (ibid., 1724), a history of *probabilism which seemed rather to defend the theory of *probabiliorism (ibid., 1736), an edition of the S. Raymundi de Pennafort Summa (ibid., 1744), a treatise on usury (Bologna, 1747) and, against *Febronianism, the De Vi ac Ratione Primatus Romanorum Pontificum (Verona, 1766) and the De Potestate Ecclesiastica Summorum Pontificum et Conciliorum Generalium (ibid., 1768).

Count Giammaria Mazzuchelli, Gli scrittori d'Italia, 2 (pt. 1; 1758), pp. 178–85, s.vv. T. Facchini, Il Papato principio di unità e Pietro Ballerini di Verona (Padua, 1950). C. da Remanzacco, 'Vita e Opere di Pietro Ballerini', Studia Patavina, 9 (1962), pp. 452–492. W. Telfer, 'Additional Note B. The Ballerini' appended to art. 'The Codex Verona LX (58)', HTR 36 (1943), pp. 231 f.; O. Capitani in Dizionari Biografico degli Italiani, 5 (1963), pp. 575–87, s.v.

Balsamon, Theodore (*c.*1140–after 1195), Greek canonist. He was born in *Constantinople and held several ecclesiastical appointments in the capital. Before 1191 he became Greek Patriarch of *Antioch, but he never exercised his official functions, as the see was held by a Latin Patriarch supported by the *Crusaders, and Balsamon continued to reside at Constantinople. His Scholia, his most important work, consists of: (1) a commentary on the 'Nomocanon' of *Photius, and (2) one of the principal collections of the *canon law of the E. In the latter he expounds how the civil legislation is to be treated when it conflicts with the ecclesiastical canon.

Extant works repr. from W. *Beveridge's Συνοδικόν (2 vols., Oxford, 1672) in J. P. Migne, PG 137 and 138. V. N. Beneshevich, A Study of the Tradition of the Nomocanon of Photius and the Version of Balsamon (in Russ.; 2 pts., St Petersburg, 1905). G. P. Stevens, De Theodoro Balsamone: Analysis operum ac mentis juridicae (Corona Lateranensis, 16; 1969). Krumbacher, pp. 607–9. E. Herman in DDC 2 (1937), cols. 76–83, with refs. to Russ. lit.

Balthasar, Hans Urs von (1905–88), Swiss theologian and writer. Born in Lucerne into a distinguished political and scholarly family, he studied German literature and philosophy at Vienna, Berlin, and Zurich. His doctoral thesis, Die Apokalypse der deutschen Seele (1937–9, vol. 1 repr. as Prometheus, 1947), is a massive study of German Idealism. In 1929 he became a *Jesuit. He continued his studies at Munich and Lyons, where his mentors were the philosopher Erich Przywara (1899–1972) and H. de *Lubac. The former's work on St *Augustine and *Ignatius Loyola and on the analogia entis influenced his theological development; the latter introduced him to the study of the Fathers, the fruits of which emerged in studies on *Origen (pub. in book form as Parole et mystère chez Origène, 1957), *Maximus the Confessor (Kosmische Liturgie, 1941; 2nd edn., 1961), and *Gregory of Nyssa (Présence et Pensée, 1942). From 1940 to 1948 he was university chaplain at Basle. Here he met K. *Barth, on whom he published an important study in 1951, and also Adrienne von Speyr, a Swiss medical doctor and mystic, who had a profound influence on his thought; he became the amanuensis of her visions, editor of her writings, and apologist of her mission. His first theological, as opposed to historical work, Das Herz der Welt (1945; Eng. tr., Heart of the World, 1979), shows her influence, as well as containing in outline the themes of his mature theology. In 1950 he left the Jesuits to set up a Secular *Institute, under von Speyr's inspiration, and also set up his own publishing house in Einsiedeln. He was nominated a cardinal in 1988 but died before he was admitted to the office.

Balthasar's literary output was enormous and very varied. It included translations into German of the Fathers and modern theologians (esp. de Lubac) but also of French Catholic literary figures such as P. L. C. *Claudel; studies of individual theologians, incl. M. *Buber (1958; Eng. tr., 1961), of the novelists Reinhold Schneider (1953) and Georges Bernanos (1954), and of the *Carmelite nuns St *Teresa of Lisieux (1950; Eng. tr., 1953) and Elizabeth of Dijon (1952; Eng. tr., 1956); a great work on prayer, Das betrachtendes Gebet (1955; Eng. tr., 1961); and a profound meditation of the trinitarian mystery of the triduum sacrum*, 'Mysterium Paschale' (in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 3/2 (1969), pp. 133–326). His greatest achievement, however, lay in his theological trilogy: Herrlichkeit: Eine theologische Ästhetik (3 vols. in 7, 1961–9 [incomplete]; Eng. tr., The Glory of the Lord, 7 vols., 1982–91), to which Glaubhaft is nur Liebe (1963; Eng. tr., Love Alone, 1968) was an introduction; Theodramatik (1973–83); and Theologik (1985).

Balthasar's aim was to rescue theology from a narrowing of its concern which had resulted from a shrinking from seeing God's revelation of Himself under the transcendental category of the beautiful. God's glory was seen as the central concept of the biblical revelation, primarily beautiful, then also true and good. This conception both broadens the basis of theology—any production of the human spirit is relevant to theology—and saves theology from an arid scholasticism or ignorant piety, by uniting knowledge and love in contemplation: it is a theology of 'kneeling theologians'. The God thus discerned is God the Trinity and in the Incarnation of the Son the depths of man's godlessness are shared by the Son and drawn into the mystery of God's love by the Holy Spirit.

Balthasar's Rechenschaft 1965 (Einsiedeln, 1965), incl. bibl. of works to date, pp. 37–79. H. de Lubac, SJ, Paradoxe et Mystère de l'Église [1967], pp. 180–212. J. [K.] Riches (ed.), The Analogy of Beauty: The Theology of Hans Urs von Balthasar (Edinburgh, 1986). L. Roberts, The Theological Aesthetics of Hans Urs von Balthasar (Washington, DC [1987]. K. Lehmann and W. Kasper (eds.), Hans Urs von Balthasar: Gestalt und Werk (Cologne, 1989). G. F. O'Hanlon, SJ, The immutability of God in the theology of Hans Urs von Balthasar (Cambridge, 1990). B. McGregor, OP, and T. Norris (eds.), The Beauty of Christ: An Introduction to the Theology of Hans Urs von Balthasar (Edinburgh, 1994). Bibl. ed. C. Capol (Freiburg [1990]).

Baltimore, Councils of. A series of ecclesiastical councils, three plenary (1852–84) and ten provincial (1829–69), by which many details of the administration and discipline of the RC Church in the USA were settled. Little was decreed on doctrinal matters; but the Second Plenary Council (1866) issued some warnings against the teachings which were later generally known as *Americanism and condemned by *Leo XIII in the letter 'Testem benevolentiae' (1899).

Acts and Decrees of the three Plenary Councils pub. at Baltimore in 1853, 1868, and 1886; Decrees and other documents of the Provincial Councils in Acta et Decreta Sacrorum Conciliorum Recentium Collectio Lacensis, 3 (Freiburg, 1875), cols. 9–122, 155–82, and 575–600 (also text of first two Plenary Councils, cols. 129–54 and 323–574). P. Guilday, A History of the Councils of Baltimore: 1791–1884 (New York, 1932). W. H. W. Fanning in CE 2 (1907), pp. 235–41, s.v.; J. Hennesey in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 38–43, s.v., with further bibl.

Baluze, Étienne (1630–1718), 'Balusius', ecclesiastical historian and canonist. Born at Tulle, he was educated by the *Jesuits in Tulle and Toulouse. He became secretary to P. de *Marca, then Abp. of Toulouse, and went with him to Paris. After his death, Baluze presented a thesis on canon law at the *Sorbonne in 1665, and in 1667 became librarian to J. B. Colbert, through whose influence he was made professor of canon law at the Collège Royal in 1670 and its director in 1707. He greatly enlarged Colbert's library and incidentally built up his own (now part of the Bibliothèque Nationale). His Histoire généalogique de la maison d'Auvergne (1708), using documents later proved to be forgeries, sought to prove the ancient lineage of the family older than that of the King; it led to Baluze's banishment from Paris in 1710, though he was allowed to return in 1713. His writings include Capitularia Regum Francorum (1677), an edition of the Epistles of *Innocent III (1682; incomplete, since Baluze was denied access to the Vatican archives), Conciliorum Nova Collectio (1683), an edition of *Marius Mercator (1684), Vitae Paparum Avenionensium (1693; put on the Index for alleged *Gallicanism, 1698), and Historia Tutelensis (a history of Tulle, 1717).

New edn. of his Vitae Paparum Avenionensium, ed. G. Mollat (4 vols., Paris, 1914–28). R. Fage, Les Œuvres de Baluze, cataloguées et décrites (2 pts., Tulle, 1882–4). C. Godard, De Stephano Baluzio Tutelensi, Libertatum Ecclesiae Gallicanae Propugnatore (Paris thesis, 1901). G. Mollat, Étude critique sur les Vitae Paparum Avenionensium d'Étienne Baluze (1917). J. Rambaud-Buhot, 'Baluze, bibliothécaire et canoniste', in Études d'histoire du droit canonique dédiées à Gabriel Le Bras, 1 (1965), pp. 325–42. H. *Quentin, OSB, Jean-Dominique Mansi et les grandes collections conciliaires (1900), pp. 32–8 and 204–69. L. Auvray and R. Poupardin, Catalogue des Manuscrits de la Collection Baluze (1921). G. Mollat in DHGE 6 (1932), cols. 439–52, s.v.; A. Martin in Dictionnaire de Biographie Française, 5 (1951), pp. 23–5, s.v.

Bampton Lectures. By the will of John Bampton, Canon of Salisbury (d. 1751), an endowment was created for eight annual lectures to be delivered in St Mary's, Oxford. Their subject is the exposition and defence of the Christian Faith as expressed in the Creeds, on the authority of Scripture and the Fathers. The first series was given in 1780. Since 1895 they have been delivered biennially. In modern times notable courses have been delivered by W. R. *Inge (1899), H. *Rashdall (1915), A. C. *Headlam (1920), N. P. *Williams (1924), K. E. *Kirk (1928), R. H. *Lightfoot (1934), A. M. Farrer (1948), D. E. Jenkins (1966), G. W. H. Lampe (1976), and others. Another series of lectures ('Sarum Lectures'), open to non-Anglican speakers, was established in 1952 from the Bampton fund; notable lecturers have included C. H. *Dodd (1954–5), J. *Daniélou, SJ (1956–7), B. *Capelle, OSB (1958–9), D. *Knowles, OSB (1964–5), C. Butler, OSB (1966–7), and P. Ricoeur (1978–9). In 1968 a 'Bampton Fellowship' was established for research into the subjects prescribed for the Bampton Lecturers.

Bancroft, Richard (1544–1610), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at Christ's College, and later at Jesus College, Cambridge. He first became well known between 1580 and 1590 as a stern opponent and persecutor of the *Puritans. In 1586 he was made Treasurer of *St Paul's Cathedral, and in 1587 Canon of *Westminster. In a sermon preached on 1 Jn. 4: 1 in 1589 at St Paul's Cross in defence of the divine origin of episcopacy, he outspokenly condemned not only Puritanism but also *Presbyterianism. In 1597 he was appointed to the see of London, from which date, owing to J. *Whitgift's age and incapacity, he virtually possessed archiepiscopal powers. He played a leading role in the *Hampton Court Conference, at which he adopted an uncompromising position, and on Whitgift's death later in 1604 he was translated to Canterbury. The *canons passed by the Convocations of Canterbury and York in 1604 and 1606 respectively were largely his work. As archbishop, he imposed the royal policy against Puritans and endeavoured, but without success, to improve the income of the parochial clergy and to secure the complete independence of the ecclesiastical courts from secular control. He was more successful in protecting the Church's privileges against lay encroachments in Parliament. Shortly before his death, he assisted in the re-establishment of episcopacy in Scotland.

A. Peel (ed.), Tracts ascribed to Richard Bancroft (1953). R. G. Usher, Reconstruction of the English Church (2 vols., 1910). S. B. Babbage, Puritanism and Richard Bancroft (1962). W. D. J. C. Thompson, 'A Reconsideration of Richard Bancroft's Paul's Cross Sermon of 9 February 1588/9', JEH 20 (1969), pp. 253–66, with further refs. See also works cited under HAMPTON COURT CONFERENCE.

Báñez, Domingo (1528–1604), *Thomist theologian. In his youth he studied philosophy at Salamanca, and in 1547 made his profession in the *Dominican Order. For some years he studied under Domingo *Soto, and held professorships in the Spanish universities of Ávila, Valladolid, and elsewhere. In 1577 he returned to Salamanca, was elected to the chief chair in 1580, and acquired a great reputation as an exponent of the traditional Scholastic theology, in which he usually followed St Thomas down to the smallest details; and he took a prominent part in the Jesuit-Dominican controversy on *grace which led to the appointment of the 'Congregatio *de Auxiliis'. He became the director and confessor of St *Teresa of Ávila, who relied on his counsel in her own interior life, and in her reform of the *Carmelites.

Works listed in Quétif and Échard, 2 (1721), pp. 352 f. Commentarios inéditos a la prima secundae de Santo Tomás, ed. V. Beltrán de Heredia, OP (Consejo superior de investigaciones científicas, Institutos Francisco Suárez, 3 vols., 1942–8); Commentarios inéditos a la tercera parte de Santo Tomás, ed. id. (ibid., 2 vols. in 3 pts., 1951–3). Domingo Báñez y las Controversias sobre la Gracia: Textos y Documentos, ed. id. (ibid., 1968). M. Midali, SDB, Corpus Christi Mysticum apud Dominicum Báñez eiusque fontes (Analecta Gregoriana, 116; 1962). V. Beltrán de Heredia, OP, 'Actuación de Maestro Domingo Báñez en la universidad de Salamanca', La Ciencia Tomista, 25 (1922), pp. 64–73, 208–40; 26 (1922), pp. 63–73, 199–223; 27 (1923), pp. 40–51, 361–74; 28 (1923), pp. 36–47; id., 'El Maestro Fray Domingo Báñez y la inquisición española', ibid. 37 (1928), pp. 289–309; 38 (1928), pp. 35–58, 171–86; id., 'Valor doctrinal de las lecturas del P. Báñez', ibid. 39 (1929), pp. 60–81; id., 'Vindicando la memoria del Maestro Fray Domingo Báñez', ibid. 40 (1929), pp. 312–22; id., 'El Maestro Domingo Báñez', ibid. 47 (1933), pp. 26–39, 162–79. M. Lépée, Báñez et Sainte Thérèse (1947), esp. pp. 34–74, with bibl. pp. 7 f. P. Mandonnet, OP, in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 140–5, s.v.; F. Domínguez in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 1 (1993), cols. 1384–6, s.v. with list of works and edns.

Bangor. Of the many places of this name, the three best known are:

(1) 'Bangor Fawr' in Caernarfonshire and Merionethshire. The see was traditionally founded by the abbot-bishop, St *Deiniol (d. 584?), but scarcely anything is known of it till Norman times. The cathedral was rebuilt by Bp. Anian (1267–1305), who baptized Edward II, but it was burnt in 1402 by Owen Glendower, and lay in ruins until Bp. Henry Deane (d. 1503) began to rebuild the choir. The work was completed by Bp. Thomas Skevington (d. 1533), who had previously been Abbot of *Beaulieu. From 1716 to 1721 the see was filled by B. *Hoadly. See also BANGOR, USE OF.

(2) 'Bangor Iscoed' in Wrexham. The site of one of the greatest monasteries of Wales, which at one time held 2,000 monks. The early history of this Bangor is also uncertain; but its monks are known to have refused to co-operate with St *Augustine at the close of the 6th cent. In *c.*616 the Saxons under Ethelfrid of Northumbria put to death 1,200 of its monks. Little or nothing of the abbey exists today.

(3) Bangor in Co. Down, Ireland. St *Comgall founded an abbey in 555 or 559, from which many daughter monasteries arose, so that at his death (*c.*601) he ruled 3,000 monks. It was the original home of St *Columbanus and St *Gall. After it had been plundered by the Danes in 824 it remained derelict until rebuilt on a magnificent scale in the 12th cent. It soon decayed again, however. From 1469 *Franciscans were in possession, and a century later the *Augustinians. Very little of the abbey remains.

See also following entries.

On (1), B. Willis, Survey of the Cathedral Church of Bangor (1721). M. L. Clarke, Bangor Cathedral (Cardiff, 1969). A. I. Pryce, The Diocese of Bangor in the XVIth Century, being a Digest of the Registers of the Bishops, 1512–1646 (Bangor, 1923); id., The Diocese of Bangor during the Three Centuries, 1600–1899 (Cardiff, 1929). R. Graham in DHGE 6 (1932), cols. 494 f., s.v. See also works cited under WALES, CHRISTIANITY IN.

On (2), the chief authority is *Bede, HE 2. 2; notes in edn. by C. Plummer, 2 (1896), pp. 76–8.

On (3), A. Gwynn, SJ, 'The Irish Monastery of Bangor', Irish Ecclesiastical Record, 5th ser. 74 (1950), pp. 388–97. F. O'Briain, OFM, in DHGE 6 (1932), cols. 497–502, s.v.

Bangor, Antiphonary of. This *Antiphonary, written in the monastery at the Irish Bangor between 680 and 691, passed to *Bobbio, whence Federico Borromeo transferred it in 1609 to the *Ambrosiana at Milan (where it is now Cod. C. 5 inf.). It is the only surviving liturgical authority for the choir office in the early Irish Church. The familiar hymn 'Sancti venite, Christi Corpus sumite' (Eng. tr. by J. M. *Neale, 'Draw nigh and take the body of the Lord', English Hymnal 307) is taken from this source.

Crit. edn. by F. E. Warren (HBS 4 and 10; 1893–5). M. Curran, MSC, The Antiphonary of Bangor and the Early Irish Monastic Liturgy (Blackrock, Co. Dublin, 1984). F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 2 (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 183–91.

Bangor, Use of. Of the pre-Reformation liturgical 'Use of [Welsh] Bangor' referred to by T. *Cranmer in the preface to the 1549 BCP (see CONCERNING THE SERVICE OF THE CHURCH) nothing definite can be discovered. It is likely that it preserved ancient Celtic elements and a calendar rich in Welsh saints. Earlier liturgists thought that it had survived in a MS Missal in use at Oswestry (then in the diocese of St Asaph) in 1554; but it now seems clear that this missal attests a predominantly '*Sarum Use'.

Bangorian Controversy. The dispute which followed the sermon preached by B. *Hoadly, Bp. of *Bangor, on 31 Mar. 1717 before George I on 'The Nature of the Kingdom or Church of Christ', endeavouring to prove from the text, 'My kingdom is not of this world' (Jn. 18: 36), that the Gospels afford no warrant for any visible Church authority. The subject is said to have been suggested by the King. The sermon, which was immediately published, provoked a large number of pamphlets attacking Hoadly. Among his more formidable antagonists were W. *Law, in his Three Letters to the Bishop of Bangor (1717–19), and T. *Sherlock. On 3 May 1717 the Lower House of *Convocation appointed a committee to consider the sermon, which reported on 10 May. When the Lower House resolved to send its findings to the Upper House, the King, to save Hoadly from synodical condemnation, which would have emphasized the opposition of the clergy to the government, prorogued Convocation, which did not meet again, except formally, until 1852.

The fullest bibliography is that by T. Herne, 'An Account of all the considerable pamphlets that have been published on either Side in the Present Controversy between the Bishop of Bangor, and Others to the End of the Year MDCCXIX', in The Works of Benjamin Hoadly, pub. by his son John Hoadly (1773), 2, pp. 381– banners, processional. A banner was originally the standard of a king or prince providing a rallying-point for his forces in battle. Christians of the 6th cent. had seen the symbolism of this, and were using crosses with red streamers (vexilla) attached for street processions in Rome. (Cf. the contemporary hymn Vexilla Regis prodeunt*.) Medieval banners bore the armorial designs of knights and were not apparently used exclusively for Church functions.

401, and 1, pp. 689–701. See also ibid. 2, pp. 379–990 and passim; *J. O. Nash and C. Gore, William Law's Defence of Church Principles (Westminster Library [1893]). H. D. Rack, '"Christ's Kingdom not of this World": The Case of Benjamin Hoadly versus William Law Reconsidered', in D. Baker (ed.), Church, Society and Politics (Studies in Church History, 12; 1975), pp. 275–91. G. [E.] Rupp, Religion in England 1688–1791 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 88–101.

banns of marriage. The custom of announcing a forthcoming marriage during Divine Service was probably taken over from pre-Christian practice, but it seems to have developed esp. after *Charlemagne's order for inquiry before marriage into possible *consanguinity between the parties. The word 'banns' is Middle English and means 'proclamation'. The practice was enjoined by the Synod of *Westminster of 1200 and the *Lateran Council of 1215. The BCP regards the publication of banns as the normal prelude to marriage, though the obtaining of a licence is a civil and canonical equivalent. Under the Marriage Act 1949 they must be published in an audible manner from a proper 'banns book' and not from loose papers, in the parish church or in some public chapel on three Sundays preceding the marriage, normally by a clergyman in the main morning service. If the persons to be married dwell in different parishes or chapelries, publication must take place in both, while if they are to be married in a parish on whose electoral roll at least one is entered, then publication must take place in that parish and in the parish or parishes of residence. The clergyman is entitled to seven days' notice of the first publication; and if the marriage is not solemnized within three months of the completion of publication, republication is necessary. In certain circumstances, banns may be published by a lay person, who will often be a *reader. See also MARRIAGE LICENCES.

J. B. Roberts, Banns of Marriage: An historical Synopsis and commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, 64; 1931). P. M. Smith, '"I publish the Banns of Marriage ..."', Modern Churchman, NS 12 (1969), pp. 299–308. R. D. H. Bursell, Liturgy, Order and the Law (Oxford, 1996), pp. 164–70.

Baptism. The *Sacramental rite which admits a candidate to the Christian Church. That it goes back to the earliest days is clear not only from the many references in Acts but also from the allusions in St *Paul's Epistles; he sometimes finds it necessary to remind his readers of its significance, but he takes for granted its existence and regular use. In Acts faith and repentance are the prerequisites (8: 13 and 2: 38), and acc. to St Paul it effects and represents the believer's union with Christ through which he participates in His death and resurrection (Rom. 6: 4), is cleansed from his sins (1 Cor. 6: 11), incorporated into the Body of Christ and 'made to drink of the Spirit' (1 Cor. 12: 13). In Acts it is associated with receiving the Spirit (2: 38), although the exact connection is not always the same (8: 15 f.; 10: 47; 19: 2–3). The chief precedents for it were the baptism of Jewish proselytes and baptism by *John the Baptist; Christians have often seen it foreshadowed in the *Flood, in *circumcision, and in other OT figures. Attempts to find its origin in paganism have won little acceptance, and the counterparts in mystery religions (apart from the question of their date) carry little weight.

It has been accepted in Christian tradition, on the basis of Matt. 28: 19 and the allusion to Baptism in Jn. 3: 5, that Christ Himself instituted the Sacrament. According to the Gospels as a whole, He saw Himself as sent by God for man's salvation, identified Himself with the human condition by accepting John's baptism (see BAPTISM OF CHRIST), and (Lk. 12: 50) spoke of His impending death as a baptism. The Church stems from His ministry, passion, and resurrection and preserved many of His parables and sayings, but how far He made His intentions explicit, and indeed how far He envisaged an organized Church as a continuing institution, is a matter of dispute among scholars.

Baptism has been in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit at least from the end of the 1st cent. Some passages in Acts (2: 38, 10: 48, and 19: 5) speak of Baptism 'in the name of (the Lord) Jesus (Christ)', but whether this formula was ever used has been questioned. Though *Infant Baptism is not mentioned in the NT, it is perhaps implied in such passages as Mt. 19: 14 and Acts 16: 33.

The rite of Baptism was developed in the early Church. In the 'Two Ways' of the Didache* the principal duties of the candidate for Baptism and the method of administering it by triple *immersion or affusion on the head are outlined. The triple immersion is also attested by *Tertullian (Adv. Prax. 26), who in his De Baptismo and De Corona describes the other parts of the rite, such as the preparatory fast and vigil, the confession of sins, the renunciation of the devil and, after the immersion, the anointing, the imposition of the hand of the minister and the symbolic meal of milk and honey. A full description of what is virtually the same rite is found in the Apostolic Tradition*. In the early Church the rite, normally presided over by the bishop, included the laying on of hands and anointing, and culminated in the Eucharist. (For the later division of these ceremonies in the W., see CONFIRMATION).

From the 2nd to the 4th cent. the proper seasons for Baptism were Easter and Pentecost, but other dates (e.g. *Epiphany and Christmas) were added later. In cases of necessity, however, Baptism might be administered at any time and by any Christian, though, acc. to Tertullian, the Apostolic Constitutions, and the 'Fourth Council of *Carthage', not by women. A practice which was common in the first four or five cents. was to delay Baptism until maturity, or even until death was believed to be imminent, for fear of the responsibilities incurred by it. In the latter case Baptism was conferred without further ceremonies, but it was regarded as inferior to regular Baptism and constituted a canonical impediment debarring the persons thus baptized, who were called 'clinici' (Gk. κλίνη, 'bed'), from ordination to the priesthood. Clinical Baptism gradually fell into desuetude owing esp. to the increasing practice of Infant Baptism and the development of the penitential system.

The theology of Baptism was elucidated by the 3rd-cent. controversy on the *validity of heretical Baptism. The general practice in the W. came to be to admit persons baptized in heretical sects by mere imposition of hands. In the E., however, at least in Asia Minor, the Church refused to recognize Baptism conferred by heretics and generally rebaptized such people (on many occasions, both in antiquity and in modern times, this rule has been relaxed); this practice also prevailed in N. Africa, acc. to Tertullian, De Baptismo, 15. It was strongly supported by St *Cyprian and confirmed by two Councils at Carthage in 255 and 256. When the decisions of the latter were submitted to Pope *Stephen I he refused to sanction rebaptism and also threatened the African bishops with excommunication if they continued the practice. The controversy was stopped by the deaths of Stephen (257) and Cyprian (258) and a fresh outbreak of persecution, though each party continued to follow its own custom. The dispute was revived in the beginning of the 4th cent. by the *Donatists, who held Baptism to be invalid if conferred by a heretical or even an unworthy Catholic minister. The Council of *Arles in 314 opposed this view by declaring heretical Baptism valid if conferred in the name of the Trinity, and this teaching came to be generally accepted in the W. Church, esp. through the influence of St *Augustine. He established the dependence of the validity of the Sacrament on the correct form prescribed by Christ, regardless of the faith or worthiness of the minister ('non cogitandum quis det, sed quid det'). In defending the propriety of Infant Baptism against the *Pelagians, he also maintained that one of the chief effects of the Sacrament was the removal of the stain of *Original Sin on the soul which bars even the new-born child from the Kingdom of Heaven, thereby developing earlier teaching from NT times, acc. to which the remission of Actual Sins, the infusion of grace, and the incorporation into the Church had been generally recognized as results of Baptism. The doctrine of the Baptismal *character (Gk. σφραγίς) marking the baptized soul in a special way, which had been adumbrated by *Hermas and in the 'Acts of *Thomas' and developed in the 4th cent. by St *Cyril of Jerusalem, was taken even further by Augustine. He held that the Holy Spirit produced in Baptism an effect independent of sanctifying grace. This 'royal character' (character regius, Contra Gaudentium, 1. 12. 13), he held, marked the soul as God's. Elsewhere he compared it to the military mark, nota militaris (De Baptismo, 1. 4. 5), which could not be destroyed and was not to be repeated. The effects of Baptism were produced by Christ, who is the sole giver of sacramental grace, the minister being simply His instrument. Augustine allowed, however, the 'baptism of blood' by martyrdom and the 'baptism of desire' in certain cases as equivalents of the Sacrament.

The Augustinian doctrine was taken up and developed by the Schoolmen, esp. St *Thomas Aquinas, who distinguished between the 'remote matter' of water and the 'proximate matter' of immersion or affusion. Though remitting both Original and Actual Sin and their punishment, Baptism did not efface the consequences of Original Sin in the natural order such as ignorance, suffering, concupiscence, and death. It conferred habitual grace, the infused virtues and the gifts of the Holy Spirit. The Baptismal character formed the Christian in the image of Christ and bestowed on him a certain participation in His priesthood.

The 16th-cent. Reformers did not leave the medieval teaching on Baptism intact. The *Augsburg Confession contented itself with stating that Baptism was necessary to salvation, that by it the grace of God was offered, and that children were to be baptized and thus received into God's favour. M. *Luther sought to combine belief in the necessity of Baptism with his doctrine of justification by faith alone. Baptism was a promise of Divine grace after which a man's sins are no longer imputed to him. U. *Zwingli, on the other hand, denied the necessity of Baptism, seeing in it only a sign admitting man to the Christian community. J. *Calvin, though holding that Baptism gave man an assurance of pardon and of participation in the gifts of Christ, taught that it was efficacious only for the elect, since they alone have the faith without which the rite is worthless. The BCP preserved the traditional Catholic teaching. In the Orders for the Administration of Baptism it maintained the doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration, asserting that man is washed and sanctified with the Holy Spirit, delivered from the wrath of God, received into the ark of Christ's Church, accorded remission of sins, and made an heir of everlasting salvation. In the *Thirty-Nine Articles the teaching is less explicit, but they clearly exclude the Zwinglian view and regard Baptism as a 'sign of Regeneration' by which 'the promises of forgiveness of sin, and of our adoption to be the sons of God by the Holy Ghost, are visibly signed and sealed'. The doctrine of the RC Church was restated at the Council of *Trent, particular stress being laid on the fact that Baptism is not merely a sign of grace, but actually contains and confers it on those who put no obstacle (obex) in its way, and that, further, it is the instrument used by God for the justification of infidels. The modern RC legislation concerning Baptism is contained in the CIC (1983), cans. 849–78.

The rationalism of the 18th cent. contributed largely to the indifference towards Baptism in the Continental Protestant Churches as well as in the C of E. The revival of the Catholic doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration in the latter is due to the *Tractarian Movement, esp. E. B. *Pusey's three Tracts, nos. 67–9. The *Gorham Case (q.v.) in 1850 attracted the attention of the general public to the question, and, though the secular authorities decided against the Catholic view, the latter has become increasingly prevalent in the C of E. In recent times the need for some restatement of Baptismal theology has been widely felt. This has been esp. prompted by the custom of presenting for Baptism children from homes where there is little prospect of a Christian upbringing.

The forms of the rite used in the RC Church are still the most elaborate found in the W. The Ordo Baptismi Parvulorum of 1969 governs present practice. After an undertaking from the parents that the child shall be brought up in the Christian faith, the priest reads one or more passages from Scripture and delivers a homily. A prayer of *exorcism is followed by the anointing of the candidate's breast with the 'oil of catechumens', unless a local conference of bishops has authorized the omission of the latter rite. The priest then blesses the water, except in *Paschaltide when the water blessed at the Easter Vigil is used. Both parents and *godparents renounce Satan and evil and make a declaration of faith. The priest baptizes the child, either by immersion or *affusion, using the traditional formula. He then anoints him with *chrism and the child is clothed with a white garment. The child's father lights a candle from the Paschal Candle in the baptistery and holds it. The rite of *Ephphatha may follow. The ceremony is concluded at the sanctuary with a recital of the *Lord's Prayer and a threefold blessing of the mother, father, and all present, which replaces the *Churching of Women. If Baptism is administered by a *catechist, the anointings are omitted; a form still further simplified is provided for use in danger of death. The Ordo Initiationis Christianae Adultorum (1972) provided a new Order for the Baptism of adults, which is not very different from that for the Baptism of children. The Sacrament is celebrated during the Easter Vigil or at least during Mass (after the homily); the rite consists of the *Litany of Saints, blessing of the water, the renunciation of evil and profession of faith (by the candidate answering for himself), the Baptism and other post-baptismal ceremonies, except for the chrismation. It is immediately followed by confirmation. Adult Baptism in the RC Church is the conclusion of the restored catechumenate (q.v.).

The rite of the C of E is much simpler. Acc. to the BCP, Baptism should be administered after the Second Lesson at Morning or Evening Prayer. After several prayers recited by the priest and a reading from the Gospel there follows the renunciation of the devil, the world, and the flesh, the confession of faith, the naming of the child by the godparents and the immersion in or affusion of water, accompanied by the Baptismal formula, followed by a signing with the cross and concluding prayers. The ASB provides, alternatively, for Baptism to be administered during the Eucharist, either at the beginning of the service or after the sermon. It also makes other modifications, including changes in the form of renunciation, a more elaborate formula for the signing with the cross, and the practice of giving a lighted candle to the parent or godparent of the child.

In conditional Baptism, which is given both in the RC Church and the C of E, when it is doubtful whether the candidate has already previously been validly baptized, most of the ceremonies are omitted and the Baptismal Formula is pronounced in a conditional form, beginning in the C of E 'If thou art not already baptized, I baptize thee'.

While the forms of the rite used in the W. have been simplified in modern times, that used by the Orthodox Church has remained unchanged. It falls into two parts: the rite for admission to the catechumenate, consisting of exorcisms, renunciation of Satan, and profession of faith, and the rite of Baptism proper, in which water and oil are blessed, the candidate is anointed with oil, immersed three times in water, and clothed with a white garment. Chrismation follows immediately, and the rite concludes with Epistle, Gospel, and final litany. Normally, though this is not always possible, Communion is given at the same time to the newly baptized.

See also BAPTISM OF CHRIST and INFANT BAPTISM.

The chief patristic authorities are Didache, 7; *Ep. Barnabae, 11; Apostolic Tradition, 20 f.; Tertullian, De Baptismo; Cyprian, Epistulae; Ps.-Cyprian, De Rebaptismate; Cyril of Jerusalem, Catecheses, 19–21; *Ambrose, De Mysteriis and De Sacramentis; several treatises of *Gregory of Nyssa and St Augustine; John *Chrysostom, Catecheses ad illuminandos (Series 3), Hom. 2; *Theodore of Mopsuestia, Homeliae catecheticae, 12–14; *Maximus of Turin, De Baptismo; *Ildefonsus, De Cognitione Baptismi. The classical medieval treatment is in St Thomas Aquinas, ST 3. qq. 66–71; cf. also *Alexander of Hales, ST 4. qq. 1–8, and St *Bonaventure, In quarto dist. 1–6.

G. *Cassander, De Baptismo Infantium (Cologne, 1563); W. *Wall, The History of Infant Baptism (2 vols., 1705); J. W. F. Höfling, Das Sacrament der Taufe (2 vols., 1846–8; Lutheran); E. B. Pusey, Scriptural Views of Holy Baptism (Tracts for the Times, nos. 67–9; all 1835); J. B. *Mozley, The Primitive Doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration (1856); id., A Review of the Baptismal Controversy (1862).

J. Corblet, Histoire dogmatique, liturgique et archéologique du sacrement de baptême (2 vols., 1881–2); H. Windisch, Taufe und Sünde im ältesten Christentum bis auf Origenes (1908); W. Heitmüller, Taufe und Abendmahl im Urchristentum (1911); A. d'Alès, Baptême et confirmation (1928; Eng. tr., 1929); R. *Reitzenstein, Die Vorgeschichte der christlichen Taufe (1929); P. Lundberg, La Typologie baptismale dans l'ancienne Église (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, 10; 1942). W. F. Flemington, The New Testament Doctrine of Baptism (1948); R. Schnackenburg, Das Heilsgeschehen bei der Taufe nach dem Apostel Paulus (Münchener Theologische Studien, 1. Historische Abteilung, 1; 1950; Eng. tr., 1964); G. W. H. Lampe, The Seal of the Spirit (1951); A. Benoît, Le Baptême chrétien au second siècle: La théologie des pères (1953). A. Stenzel, SJ, Die Taufe: Eine genetische Erklärung der Taufliturgie (Innsbruck, 1958). A. Gilmore (ed.), Christian Baptism: A Fresh Attempt to Understand the Rite in terms of Scripture, History, and Theology (1959). R. E. O. White, The Biblical Doctrine of Initiation (1960). E. C. Whitaker, Documents of the Baptismal Liturgy (1960; 2nd edn., 1970). G. R. Beasley-Murray, Baptism in the New Testament (1962). T. Maertens, Histoire et pastorale du rituel du catéchuménat et du baptême (Bruges, 1962). J. D. C. Fisher, Christian Initiation: Baptism in the Medieval West: A Study in the Disintegration of the Primitive Rite of Initiation (Alcuin Club Collections, 47; 1965); id., Christian Initiation: The Reformation Period (ibid. 51; 1970), pp. 3–156; P. J. Jagger, Christian Initiation 1552–1969 (ibid. 52; 1970); L. L. Mitchell, Baptismal Anointing (ibid. 48; 1965). G. Wainwright, Christian Initiation (Ecumenical Studies in History, 10; 1969). E. [J.] Yarnold, SJ, The Awe-Inspiring Rites of Initiation: Baptismal Homilies of the Fourth Century [tr. into Eng., with full introd.] (Slough, 1972). R. F. G. Burnish, The Meaning of Baptism: A Comparison of the Teaching and Practice of the Fourth Century with the Present Day (Alcuin Club Collections, 67; 1985). P.-R. Tragan (ed.), Alle Origini del Battesimo Cristiano: Atti del' VIII Convegno de Teologia Sacramentaria, Roma, 9–11 marzo 1989 (Studia Anselmiana, 106; 1991). P. [J.] Cramer, Baptism and Change in the Early Middle Ages, c.200–c.1150 (Cambridge, 1993). J. D. Crichton, Christian Celebration: The Sacraments (1973), esp. pp. 29–87; A. Kavanagh, The Shape of Baptism: The Rite of Christian Initiation (Studies in the Reformed Rites of the Catholic Church, 1; New York, 1978); R. Cabié in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en Prière (1983–4 edn.), 3, pp. 23–114; Eng. tr. (1988), pp. 11–100. R. Schulte in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 5 (Einsiedeln, 1976), pp. 136–221. Various authors in C. [P. M.] Jones, G. Wainwright and E. [J.] Yarnold, SJ (eds.), The Study of Liturgy (1978), pp. 79–146; 2nd edn. (1992), pp. 111–83. On Baptism in the E. Church, A. Schmemann, Of Water and the Spirit ([Tuckahoe, NY] 1974). B. Varghese, Les onctions baptismales dans la tradition Syrienne (CSCO 512, Subsidia, 82; Louvain, 1989).

Various authors in HERE 2 (1909), pp. 367–412 (on Christian and non-Christian Baptism), and in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 167–378; P. de Puniet, OSB, in DACL 2 (pt. 1, 1910), cols. 251–346; A. Oepke, βάπτω, βαπτίζω, βαπτισμός, βάπτισμα, βαπτιστής in TWNT 1 (1933), pp. 527–44 (Eng. tr., 1 (1964), pp. 529–46). J. Coppens in Dict. Bibl. suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 852–924, all with bibl. See also bibl. to CONFIRMATION and INFANT BAPTISM.

'Baptism, Eucharist and Ministry' (BEM). A major statement on these subjects was approved by the *Faith and Order Commission of the *World Council of Churches at Lima in Peru in 1982. It was the fruit of multilateral conversations going back to the *Lausanne Conference of 1927. Virtually all confessional traditions were represented. In the discussions past controversies were examined in the hope of setting divided Churches free to confront the future together, not in rivalry; the Churches were invited to consider the statement at the highest level and report their reactions. The text expressly affirms convergence, not consensus sufficient to remove all division; the restoration of unity is seen as a gradual process. Added commentaries identify unresolved differences (e.g. ordination of *women); questions of *authority (synods, primacy) remain unexamined, but a high estimate of Scripture is implicit throughout. Though the extent and depth of agreement has astonished the Churches, difficulties have been felt. Orthodox theologians believe that one Church already exists and is not something to be realized by the agreement of heterogeneous bodies on the theology of the sacraments. Non-episcopal bodies have been pained by the suggestion that they should consider the threefold ministry of bishops, priests, and deacons as a norm they would do well to recover. Baptists are asked to avoid rebaptism. RCs find the language about sacraments ambiguous and inadequate and ask for further study of the nature of the apostolic tradition and the issue of decisive authority in the Church. Reformed bodies desire explicit enthusiasm for the Reformation. Some Protestants would have preferred more symbolist and less realist accounts of the Eucharistic Presence and offering, and prefer to think of the pastor as representing Christ the Shepherd rather than as Priest. Nevertheless, Baptism, Eucharist and Ministry is one of the most important theological documents hitherto produced by the ecumenical movement, resolving many classical difficulties, and putting others into a new perspective.

The text, published by the World Council of Churches as Faith and Order Paper no. 111 (Geneva, 1982) is repr. in H. Meyer and L. Vischer (eds.), Growth in Agreement (Faith and Order Paper no. 108; New York and Geneva, 1984), pp. 465–503. The official reaction of the Churches, ed. M. Thurian, Churches respond to BEM (World Council of Churches, Faith and Order Papers, nos. 129, 132, 135, 137, 143, and 144; 1986). L. Vischer, Die ordinierten Dienste in der Kirche (Texte der Evangelische Arbeitstelle Oekumene, 3; Bern, 1984). Towards a Church of England Response to BEM and ARCIC (General Synod Paper 661; 1985), pp. 1–61.

'baptism in the Holy Spirit'. A doctrine best known today in its *Pentecostal form. Pentecostals generally claim that the believer is empowered for Christian witness through a unique action of Christ (cf. Mark 1: 8), distinct from conversion or sacramental *Baptism ('water baptism'). They maintain that, as the Holy Spirit fell on the first Apostles, so those summoned to be likewise 'filled' (cf. Acts 2: 4) are 'baptized with the Holy Spirit' (cf. Acts 11: 15 f.), and that the normal outward sign of this 'baptism' is their breaking into tongues (*glossolalia) (cf. Acts 10: 44–7). This criterion is the specifically Pentecostal contribution to the doctrine, which had its origins in J. *Wesley's teaching on *perfection as it was developed in the 19th-cent. American *Holiness movement. Many NT exegetes question the scriptural basis of the teaching, but it has been accepted in a modified form by many members of the *Charismatic Renewal Movement.

J. D. G. Dunn, Baptism in the Holy Spirit: A Re-examination of the New Testament Teaching on the Gift of the Spirit in Relation to Pentecostalism Today (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd. ser. 15; 1970); D. W. Dayton, The Theological Roots of Pentecostalism (Studies in Evangelicalism, 5; Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1987), pp. 87–113.

Baptism of Christ. This event is recorded by the first three Evangelists and implied by Jn. Even those critics who question the historical accuracy of many details in the Gospels accept that Jesus Christ came to hear St *John the Baptist and, like others, received baptism at his hands, thus endorsing John's mission. Mk. 1: 9–11 tells of a vision of the heavens opening and a Divine Voice declaring His Sonship. Later accounts, including *Ignatius, *Justin, the Gospels of the *Ebionites, *Nazarites, and *Hebrews, develop the tradition, reflecting some perplexity that the sinless Son of God should undergo a baptism of repentance, and at the hands of a subordinate figure.

Among patristic writers who regard the Lord's baptism as instituting Christian Baptism are *Ambrose, In Luc. 2. 83, and *Chrysostom, Hom. in Mt. 12. 3; cf. also St *Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theolog., 3. 66. 2. G. R. Beasley-Murray, Baptism in the New Testament (1962), pp. 45–67. H. Anderson, The Gospel of Mark (New Cent. Bib., 1976), pp. 74–80. See also other comm. on MARK, GOSPEL OF ST, cited s.v.

baptistery. The building or part of the church in which *Baptism is administered. At least from the 3rd cent. onwards, esp. in Mediterranean lands, this was often a separate building west of the church and polygonal in plan. But the spread of infant Baptism (by *affusion) led to the increasingly common use of *fonts, quite often placed at the west end of the church. In modern churches, however, the fonts are sometimes placed below floor-level, to emphasize the Pauline doctrine of Baptism, and the RC Ordo of 1969 envisages that in some baptisteries there may be running water.

The earliest known baptistery is that at *Dura Europos (before AD 256). Another example is that at the *Lateran at Rome, which in its origins dates from the time of *Constantine I (much altered later). It is octagonal, with a low font (now lost), surrounded by eight columns and an ambulatory. The church of S. Costanza, orig. built as a tomb for the daughter of Constantine, is another round Roman edifice which was also formerly used as a baptistery. There are later examples at Pisa, *Ravenna, Florence, Nocera, Tebéssa, el-Kantara, Poitiers, and elsewhere.

J. Corbet, 'Des Lieux consacrés à l'administration du baptême', Revue de l'Art Chrétien, 23 (1877), pp. 276–81; 24 (1877), pp. 112–82, 300–10; 25 (1878), pp. 26–49, 275–316. C. F. Rogers, 'Baptism and Christian Archaeology', Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, 5 (Oxford, 1903), pp. 239–361, esp. pp. 321–59, passim. F. J. Dölger, Antike und Christentum, 4 (1934), pp. 153–87 ('Zur Symbolik des altchristlichen Taufhauses'). J. G. Davies, The Architectural Setting of Baptism (1962). A. Khatchatrian, Les Baptistères Paléochrétiens: Plans, notices et bibliographie (1962). P. [J.] Cramer, Baptism and Change in the Early Middle Ages, c.200–c.1150 (Cambridge, 1993), pp. 267–90. On the famous baptistery at the Lateran, see also G. Pelliccioni, Le nuove scoperte sulle origini del Battistero Lateranense (Atti della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia, 3rd ser. 3, Memorie, 12/1; 1973); on that at Ravenna, S. K. Kostof, The Orthodox Baptistery at Ravenna (Yale Publications in the History of Art, 18; 1965). R. [L. P.] Milburn, Early Christian Art and Architecture (1988), pp. 203–14. A. Nesbitt in DCA 1 (1875), pp. 173–8; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 2 (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 382–469; E. Josi and E. Lavagnino in EC 2 (1949), cols. 1050–6; F. W. Deichmann in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 1157–67, s.v. 'Baptisterium', with extensive refs.

Baptists. One of the largest Protestant and Free Church communions, to be found in every Continent. Its total membership in 1988 was over 35 million, with a much larger community strength. The origins of the Baptists in modern times have been traced to the action of John *Smyth, a *Separatist exile in Amsterdam who, in 1609, reinstituted the Baptism of committed believers as the basis of fellowship of a gathered Church. But Smyth was under *Mennonite influence, and Baptist beginnings have also been traced back to the *Anabaptist wing of the Continental *Reformation (esp. in Zurich), to the protests of medieval sects against prevailing baptismal theory and practice, and to the period of the early Church and the NT. Smyth and his associates were concerned to re-establish the Baptism of believers according to its NT meaning, in the interests of a true doctrine of the nature of the Church.

The first Baptist Church in England consisted of certain members of Smyth's Church who returned to London in 1612 under the leadership of Thomas *Helwys. From this a number of other Churches sprang in Stuart and Commonwealth times. *Arminian in theology with a connectional polity, they came to be known as 'General Baptists'. In 1633 the adoption of believers' Baptism by a group of *Calvinistic London Separatists, who were members of the Church which had Henry Jacob as pastor, led to the rise of 'Particular Baptist' Churches in many parts of the country. About the same time *immersion became their usual mode of Baptism, instead of *affusion or sprinkling, again in obedience to the NT. These Particular (Calvinistic) Baptist Churches were independent or congregational in polity but gave regular expression to their inter-Church relationships through Associations, which have continued to be a vital part of Baptist Church life.

Many Baptists were associated with the more radical spiritual and political movements of the 17th cent. They were pioneers in the quest for freedom of conscience and religious liberty. After the *Restoration they moved close to the *Presbyterians and *Independents and became recognized as one of the *Three Denominations of Protestant Dissenters. John *Bunyan was an outstanding figure among them and was important not only for his writings but because he encouraged a pattern of local Church membership which could include Baptists and Paedobaptists. From the mid-17th cent. there were Baptist Churches in the American colonies. The settlement of Roger *Williams at Providence, Rhode Island, and the Church formed there in 1639 on Baptist principles is generally regarded as the beginning of American Baptist history. A small 17th-cent. group who became known as Sabbatarian or Seventh Day Baptists, and whose descendants are still represented in both England and North America, regarded the Fourth *Commandment as requiring services on the seventh, not the first, day of the week.

In the 18th cent. many of the General Baptist Churches in England came under *Unitarian influences and ultimately ceased to maintain their witness to believers' Baptism. But Dan Taylor (1738–1816), under the stimulus of the *Evangelical Revival, in 1770 formed a 'New Connexion' among them, which maintained a vigorous life, and a century later united with the main stream of Baptist witness. The *Baptist Missionary Society, formed in 1792 by ministers of the Northamptonshire Association of Particular Baptists at the call of William *Carey, initiated the modern movement of missionary expansion among Protestant Churches. Northamptonshire Baptists had been stirred by reports of the *Great Awakening in New England. This revival quickened the Baptist Churches of America and led to the beginnings of the rapid and spectacular growth of Baptists in that continent. Baptist preachers were in the van as the frontier was carried westwards. As a result of their missionary zeal Baptists became the largest religious community in many of the southern States, and among the *Black Churches of the USA about two-thirds of the members are Baptists. By 1988 there were over 29 million Baptists in North America. They are organized in several Conventions, the Southern Baptist Convention being the largest and most conservative. American Baptists have been noted for their vigorous missionary work, Adoniram *Judson of Burma being their pioneer. Other notable American Baptists have included the historian K. S. Latourette (1884–1968), Martin Luther *King, and Billy *Graham. In South America there are over 850,000 Baptists with another 230,000 in Central America and the Caribbean.

The rigid Calvinism of the 18th cent. was gradually modified not only in America, but also in England, though not without some protests. There remained in England a number of 'Strict Baptist' Churches, strongly Calvinist in theology, where Communion was, and indeed still is, restricted to baptized believers. In the 19th cent. most other Baptist Churches welcomed all believers to Communion, many also adopting 'open communion' after the Bunyan pattern. The increase in their numbers more than kept pace with the growth in population, and from their ranks came outstanding preachers such as Robert *Hall, C. H. *Spurgeon, Alexander *Maclaren, and John *Clifford. The Baptist Union, formed in 1813, was gradually transformed into the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland. Its modern development owed much to the leadership of J. H. *Shakespeare, who was secretary for over 25 years (1898–1924). In Britain there are some 216,000 Church members. Baptists in England and three Baptist Associations in Wales shared in the Free Church movement and are members of the *Free Church Federal Council, Churches Together in England, the *Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland (as they were of the *British Council of Churches), and of the *World Council of Churches. The Baptist Union of Wales is a member of CYTUN (Churches Together in Wales). The Baptists of *Scotland were much influenced by the life and teaching of Archibald McLean (1733–1812). He and his followers kept close to the NT in both doctrine and practice and were at one time known as 'Scotch Baptists' or '*Sandemanian Baptists'. Their work provided one of the sources of the *Disciples of Christ. Baptists have been numerous in *Wales since John Myles (or Miles, 1621–84) organized the first Church at Ilston (1649) and Vavasour Powell (1617–70) acted as the leader of a band of itinerant evangelists. Their most famous preacher was Christmas Evans (1766–1838). There has been a considerable emigration of Baptists from Wales to the USA. Baptists in *Ireland trace their roots back to Churches founded by Baptist officers and chaplains in Oliver *Cromwell's army and by settlers who remained there after the Restoration. These Churches, mainly of Particular Baptists with a leavening of General Baptists, survived through the 18th cent., later receiving support from English Particular Baptists.

In 1834 a Baptist Church was formed in Hamburg under the leadership of J. C. Oncken (1800–84) and from this came an extensive Baptist movement in Europe, spreading to Slavic-speaking people. Baptists were generally persecuted in Tsarist *Russia. They increased in numbers during the early years of the Soviet regime but later suffered from the general restrictions on religious freedom. In recent times their numbers have grown significantly (to some 548,000, according to the best estimates in 1988), and they form the largest Protestant community in the countries of the former USSR.

Baptist Churches were formed in *Australia and *New Zealand in the early 19th cent., and in the 20th cent. Baptist work has expanded throughout Asia, Africa, and South America. In 1905 the Baptist World Alliance was formed at a congress in London as a forum for international co-operation. It has several Commissions which deal with a variety of denominational concerns, including ecumenical relations. Its present headquarters is in McLean, Virginia.

In spite of their variety and individualism, most Baptists have remained strongly attached to the truths of evangelical Christianity. In their worship they follow in general the Reformed tradition. Their polity is a modified form of independency. Their ministers, or pastors, receive, in most countries, a careful training. Their oldest college in Britain (Bristol) traces its history back to the 1679 bequest of Edward Terrill. Regent's Park College, of which H. Wheeler *Robinson was principal from 1920 to 1942, is now a Permanent Private Hall of *Oxford University. Many colleges and universities in America and elsewhere are under Baptist auspices. In ecumenical relationships Baptists have been hesitant about schemes for organic union, partly because of their concern to preserve their witness to believers' Baptism and the autonomy of the local Church as the 'gathered community'; but they have been eager for partnership and co-operation with other Christians. Although only about 15 Baptist Conventions or Unions are members of the World Council of Churches, they comprise about 40 per cent of the world Baptist constituency.

T. Armitage, A History of the Baptists; Traced by their Vital Principles and Practices, from the Time of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to the Year 1886 (New York and London, 1888). H. L. McBeth, The Baptist Heritage (Nashville, 1987). T. Crosby, The History of the English Baptists, from the Reformation to the Beginning of the Reign of King George I (4 vols., 1738–40); J. Ivimey, A History of the English Baptists (4 vols., 1811–30). A. Taylor, The History of the English General Baptists (2 pts., privately pr., London, 1818). J. H. Wood, A Condensed History of the General Baptists of the New Connexion (1847). W. T. Whitley, A History of the British Baptists (1923); A. C. Underwood, A History of the English Baptists (1947). W. T. Whitley, The Baptists of London 1612–1928 [1928]. B. R. White, The English Baptists of the Seventeenth Century (A History of the English Baptists, 1 [1983]); R. Brown, The English Baptists of the Eighteenth Century (ibid. 2 [1986]); J. H. Y. Briggs, The English Baptists of the Nineteenth Century (ibid. 3 [1994]). E. A. Payne, The Baptist Union: A Short History (1959). T. M. Bassett, The Welsh Baptists (Swansea, 1977). D. W. Bebbington (ed.), The Baptists in Scotland: A History (Glasgow, 1988). G. K. Parker (ed.), Baptists in Europe: History & Confessions of Faith (Nashville [1982]). A. H. Newman, A History of the Baptist Churches in the United States (American Church History, 2; New York, 1894). O. K. and M. M. Armstrong, The Indomitable Baptists: A Narrative of their Role in Shaping American History (Garden City, NY, 1967). R. G. Torbet, Venture of Faith: The Story of the American Foreign Missionary Society . . . 1814–1954 (Philadelphia [1955]). R. A. Baker, The Southern Baptist Convention and its People 1607–1972 (Nashville [1974]). L. Fitts, A History of Black Baptists (ibid. [1985]). E. R. Fitch, The Baptists of Canada (Toronto [1911]). B. S. Brown, Members One of Another: The Baptist Union of Victoria, 1862–1962 (Melbourne, 1962). W. L. Lumpkin, Baptist Confessions of Faith (Philadelphia [1959]). E. A. Payne, The Fellowship of Believers: Baptist Thought and Practice Yesterday and Today (1944; 2nd edn., 1952). A. Gilmore (ed.), Christian Baptism (1959). W. T. Whitley, A Baptist Bibliography (2 vols., 1916–22); E. C. Starr, A Baptist Bibliography (26 vols., Hamilton, NY, and later other places, 1947–76).

See also publications of the Baptist Historical Society, esp. The Baptist Quarterly (1908 ff.), and works cited under ANABAPTISTS.

Baptist Missionary Society. It was founded at Kettering, Northants, on 2 Oct. 1792, with Andrew Fuller (1754–1815) as its first secretary. Its first missionary, W. *Carey, to whose earnest pleading the society owed its origin, went in 1793 to the Indian subcontinent, where the Society still has active links with Church bodies. Its other main fields have been: (1) Jamaica, where William Knibb (1803–45) and other missionaries gave vigorous support to the cause of slave emancipation, (2) *China, where Timothy Richard (1845–1919) was an outstanding pioneer, (3) *Zaire, where George Grenfell (1845–1906) and Holman Bentley (1855–1906) played notable parts in the opening up of the Congo River, and (4) *Brazil, which since 1953 has become an area of major involvement. The Society has about 200 missionaries working alongside Christian nationals engaged in pastoral, evangelistic, developmental, educational, and medical work.

Essays in J. B. Meyers (ed.), The Centenary Volume of the Baptist Missionary Society (1892); others in the BMS commemorative vol., Ter-Jubilee Celebrations, 1942 4 (1945); B. Stanley, The History of the Baptist Missionary Society 1792–1992 (Edinburgh, 1992). E. A. Payne, Freedom in Jamaica: Some Chapters in the Story of the Baptist Missionary Society [1933]; id., The First Generation: Early Leaders of the Baptist Missionary Society in England and India [1936]; id., The Great Succession: Leaders of the Baptist Missionary Society during the Nineteenth Century [1938].

Barabbas. The 'robber' (λῃστής, Jn. 18: 40) whom (according to Mk. 15: 6–15 and parallels) *Pilate released from prison instead of Christ. It is possible (on the evidence of certain MSS), but unlikely, that his real name was 'Jesus Barabbas', Barabbas in that case being a patronymic.

H. A. Rigg, 'Barabbas', Journal of Biblical Literature, 64 (1945), pp. 417–56. See also comm. to MARK, ST, GOSPEL OF, cited s.v.

Barbara, St. Acc. to tradition, the daughter of a pagan of Nicomedia, who on being converted to the Christian faith was handed over by her father to the prefect and martyred. A circumstantial account of her martyrdom is contained in the Golden Legend*. She is one of the 14 *Auxiliary Saints. Her prayers are sought esp. as a protection against thunderstorms and fire; and, by an obvious extension of this idea, she is venerated as the patroness of artillerymen and firemen. Feast day, 4 Dec., suppressed in Roman Calendar of 1969.

The earliest accounts, apparently written in Gk., are now lost; various versions in Syr., Lat., and other languages survive. A late Gk. text is printed in J. P. Migne, PG 116. 301–16; another, prob. earlier, ed. A. Wirth, Danae in christlichen Legenden (Prague, etc., 1892), pp. 103–12. Syr. text ed. A. Smith Lewis, Studia Sinaitica, 9 (1900), pp. 101–10, with Eng. tr., 10 (1900), pp. 77–84; W. Weyh, Der syrische Barbara-Legende (1912). Lat. text in P. Paschini, S. Barbara: Note agiografiche ('Lateranum', 1927), pp. 38–52, with refs. B. de Gaiffier, SJ, 'La Légende latine de Sainte Barbe par Jean de Wackerzeele', Anal. Boll. 77 (1959), pp. 5–41. S. Peine, St. Barbara, die Schutzheilige der Bergleute und der Artillerie, und ihre Darstellung in der Kunst (1896). Comte de Lapparent, 'Sur quelques représentations de Sainte Barbe', Bulletin Monumental, 86 (1927), pp. 149–53.

Barbarossa. See FREDERICK I.

barbe (Fr. 'uncle', lit. 'the bearded'). A title of respect used by the *Waldenses of their preachers.

Barberini. A Roman family of Tuscan descent, several of whose members filled important offices in the Church in Italy in the 17th cent. In 1623 Maffeo Barberini was elected Pope as *Urban VIII. Francesco Barberini the elder (1597–1679), who built the fine Palazzo Barberini in Rome, founded in 1627 the 'Biblioteca Barberina', containing the famous collection of MSS which passed to the Vatican Library in 1902. Their reckless plundering of ancient monuments for their designs, e.g. Urban VIII's conversion of the bronze beams of the roof of the portico of the Pantheon into the *baldachino for the high altar at St Peter's and cannon for the Castel S. Angelo, gave rise to the mot 'Quod non fecerunt barbari, fecerunt Barberini'.

P. Pecchiai, I Barberini (Archivi d'Italia e Rassegna Internazionale degli Archivi, Quaderno doppio 5; 1959). T. H. Didier and F. Bonnard in DHGE 6 (1932), cols. 640–5, s.v.; G. Graglia in EC 2 (1949), cols. 825–7, s.v., with bibl.

Barclay, John (1734–98), founder of the '*Bereans' (q.v.) or 'Barclayites'. The son of a farmer at Muthill in Perthshire, he was educated at St Andrews University, where he came under the influence of Archibald Campbell (1691–1756), professor of Church history, whose teaching was attracting attention through its denial of natural theology. In 1759 Barclay was licensed by the presbytery of Auchterarder, and soon afterwards became assistant to James Jobson, the incumbent of Errol, a strong Evangelical. Differences of opinion with Jobson led him to move in 1763 to Fettercairn, Kincardine, where he was appointed assistant to A. Dow. In 1766 Barclay published Rejoice Evermore, or Christ All in All, in which he expounded a doctrine of immediate Divine revelation. Censure for heresy by the presbytery followed, and in consequence, despite a petition to the Crown from virtually all the parishioners, he was not appointed to succeed Dow on his death in 1772. Barclay then made his way to Edinburgh, where he gained only a small following. Unable to procure ordination in Scotland, he went to Newcastle, and here he succeeded in being regularly ordained in 1773. Returning soon afterwards to Edinburgh, he constituted a new Church, known as the Berean Assembly, from its zeal for study of the Bible (cf. Acts 17: 10 f.). He laboured on behalf of the community in considerable poverty, but with great earnestness, and continued to publish writings. The chief was a collected work (1776) containing inter alia his earlier The Psalms, paraphrased according to the New Testament Interpretation (1766), illustrating Barclay's beliefs on Scripture. In 1776 Barclay went to London to propagate his doctrines; here he seems to have met with considerable success, and established Berean communities both in London and at Bristol. He returned to Scotland in 1778, continuing to work and travel for his cause, despite very straitened conditions, till his death.

The Works of John Barclay [i.e. his Essays], ed. J. Thomson and D. McMillan (Glasgow, 1852), with 'A Short Account of the Early Part of the Life of Mr. John Barclay', pp. 11–21. A. Miller in HERE 2 (1909), pp. 519–23, s.v. 'Bereans'.

Barclay, Robert (1648–90), Scottish *Quaker apologist. He was the son of David Barclay (1610–86), who served as a soldier under *Gustavus Adolphus, assisted in the defeat of Montrose before Inverness (1646) and was one of the 30 Scottish Members of Parliament under O. *Cromwell (1654 and 1656). Robert was born at Gordonstoun and educated at the (RC) Scots' Theological College at *Paris. His father having declared his adhesion to the Quakers in 1666, Robert followed his example in 1667. He soon acquired a wide learning which, combined with considerable intellectual powers, made him the most weighty of all Quaker theologians. In 1673 he published A Catechism and Confession of Faith. In 1676 there followed his principal work, his 'Apology', written to support 15 Quaker 'Theses Theologicae' which he had defended at Aberdeen and circulated in English, Latin, French, and Dutch. It was originally printed in Latin at Amsterdam as Theologiae Verae Christianae Apologia (1676); the English version, Apology for the True Christian Religion, as the same is set forth and preached by the people called in Scorn 'Quakers', first appeared in 1678. Its impressive and eloquent defence of the doctrine of the '*Inner Light' against the sufficiency of external authorities, including the Bible, made it the classical exposition of Quaker principles. The work also included a strong attack on *Calvinism. During his travels in the Netherlands and Germany (1676) Barclay won the sympathy of Elizabeth, the Princess Palatine, for Quaker principles; and on his return he came into favour with the Duke of York (later *James II), a distant relative whom he believed to be a genuine advocate of toleration. He was thus able to be of service to W. *Penn in his foundation of Pennsylvania, which was given a constitution on Quaker principles, and in 1683 Barclay himself became (non-resident) governor of East New Jersey. In the course of his life Barclay often suffered imprisonment for his doctrines. His other writings include The Anarchy of the Ranters (1676).

His works were issued in 1692 in a collected folio vol., with the title Truth Triumphant. They were repub. in 3 vols. in 1717–18. The Apology has often been repr. M. C. Cadbury, Robert Barclay: His Life and Work (1912). L. Eeg-Olofsson, The Conception of the Inner Light in Robert Barclay's Theology (Lund, 1954). D. E.

Trueblood, Robert Barclay (New York and London [1968]). Introductory account, with extracts of his writings, by J. P. Wragge, The Faith of Robert Barclay (1948).

Barclay, William (1907–78), NT scholar. After taking degrees in classics and divinity at Glasgow, he studied for a year (1932–3) at *Marburg. From 1933 to 1946 he was minister of Trinity Church, Renfrew (a suburb of Glasgow); from 1947 until his retirement in 1977 he held teaching appointments at Glasgow University, being from 1963 Professor of Divinity and Biblical Criticism. His principal importance lay in his ability to distil the fruits of NT scholarship and to communicate the Gospel message in plain language to a very wide public, both through his writing and broadcasting.

There is much autobiographical material in his Testament of Faith (1975). J. R. McKay and J. F. Miller (eds.), Biblical Studies: Essays in Honour of William Barclay (1976). Life by C. L. Rawlins (Grand Rapids, Mich., and Exeter, 1984).

Bar Cochba (Aram. בר כוכבא, i.e. 'son of a star'; cf. Num. 24: 17). The leader of a Jewish rebellion in Palestine in AD 132. Its purpose was to resist the project of the Emp. Hadrian to rebuild *Jerusalem as a Graeco-Roman city, with a temple of Jupiter on the site of the former Jewish Temple. (See AELIA CAPITOLINA.) A guerrilla war was waged from 132 to 135 in which both sides suffered severe losses. He claimed to be, and was accepted as, the *Messiah, acc. to Christian sources, echoed in rabbinic literature. The name Bar Cochba is found only in some rabbinic and in Christian sources; most Jewish sources call him Bar Koziba ('son of a liar'). Recent finds of some of his letters in the Judaean desert show that his real name was Simeon bar Kosiba.

J. T. Milik in P. Benoit, OP, J. T. Milik, and R. de Vaux, OP, Les Grottes de Murabba'at (Discoveries in the Judaean Desert, 2; Oxford, 1961), pp. 159–61. J. A. Fitzmyer, SJ, 'The Bar Cochba Period', in J. L. McKenzie (ed.), The Bible in Current Thought: Gruenthaner Memorial Volume (New York, 1962), pp. 133–68, repr. in Fitzmyer's Essays on the Semitic Background of the New Testament (1971), pp. 305–54. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (Eng. tr. rev. by G. Vermes and others), 1 (Edinburgh, 1973), pp. 543–52, with bibl. pp. 534 f. P. Schäfer, Der Bar Kokhba-Aufstand: Studien zum zweiten jüdischen Krieg gegen Rom (Texte und Studien zum Antiken Judentum, 1; 1981). B. Isaac and A. Oppenheimer, 'The Revolt of Bar Kokhba: Ideology and Modern Scholarship', Journal of Jewish Studies, 36 (1985), pp. 33–60.

Bardenhewer, Otto (1851–1935), *patristic scholar. Born at München-Gladbach, he was educated at Bonn and Würzburg universities, lectured at Munich from 1879 to 1884, and was professor of OT Exegesis at Münster i.W. from 1884 to 1886 and of NT Exegesis at Munich from 1886 to 1924. His Patrologie in a single volume appeared in 1894 (Eng. tr., 1908). This was followed by his more ambitious Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur (1, 1902, 2nd edn., 1913; 2, 1903, 2nd edn., 1914; 3, 1912, with additions, 1923; 4, 1924; 5, 1932), which for its completeness, soundness of judgement and clarity of presentation was long unsurpassed; it remains a standard work of reference. His other works include Des heiligen Hippolytus von Rom Commentar zum Buche Daniel (1877), Polychronius, Bruder Theodors von Mopsuestia und Bischof von Apamea (1879), and many contributions to Biblische Studien.

J. Sickenberger, Erinnerungen an Otto Bardenhewer (1937). E. Peterson in EC 2 (1949), cols. 839 f.

Bardesanes (154–222), correctly 'Bar-Daisan', regarded by later writers as a heretic. He was a speculative thinker associated with the court of Abgar VIII at *Edessa (where *Julius Africanus met him). The sources of any further biographical material are hostile and unreliable. Of his writings, a 'Dialogue of Destiny, or the Book of the Laws of the Lands' from which *Eusebius and other Christian Fathers preserve fragments (as from Περὶ εἱμαρμένης) has come down in the original Syriac. In this Bardesanes argues against the determinism of the 'Chaldaeans' (astrologers). The titles of several other works are preserved, and *Ephrem Syrus (Hymni contra Haereses, 55) quotes from his collection of 150 hymns. Bardesanes' cosmological teaching prob. influenced *Mani; his Christology was docetic and he denied the resurrection of the body. His disciples maintained a precarious existence for several centuries.

His 'Dialogue of Destiny', ed. W. *Cureton, Spicilegium Syriacum (London, 1855), pp. 1–21 (Syr.), with Eng. tr., pp. 1–34; later edns. by F. Nau in Patrologia Syriaca, 2 (1907), pp. 492–657, and, with Eng. tr., by H. J. W. Drijvers (Semitic Texts with Translations, 3; Assen, 1965). Early sources include Eusebius, HE 4. 30, *Epiphanius, Haer. 56, and *Moses of Chorene, Hist., 2. 66. H. J. W. Drijvers, Bardaisan of Edessa (Studia Semitica Neerlandica, 6; Assen, 1966), with extensive bibl.; T. Jansma, Natuur, Lot en Vrijheid: Bardesanes, de Filosoof der Arameeërs en zijn Images (Cahiers bij het Nederlands Theologisch Tijdschrift, 6 [1969]). Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 364–8; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 101 f. and 563. J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 263 f. F. *Hort in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 250–60, s.v.; H. J. W. Drijvers in TRE 5 (1980), cols. 206–12, s.v.

Bar Hebraeus (1226–86). The name by which Abû-l-Farağ, a *Jacobite Syrian bishop and polymath, is commonly known. He was the son of a physician of Jewish descent who was converted to the Christian faith. After studying medicine at Antioch and Tripoli, he was consecrated bishop in 1246, and in 1264 he became Primate of the East, with his residence at the monastery of Mar Mattai near Mosul. His works, which are mostly encyclopaedic in character, are mainly written in *Syriac (a few are in Arabic). They include 'The Candelabra of the Sanctuary', a vast theological compendium; 'The Storehouse of Mysteries' or scholia on the whole Bible; 'The Cream of Science', an encyclopaedia of *Aristotelian philosophy (most of it still unpublished); an important Chronicle; 'The Book of the Dove' on the monastic life; and two works on Church discipline and life, the Nomocanon and Ethicon.

The 'Candelabra' has mostly been pub., with Fr. tr., by J. Bakoš (PO 22, fasc. 4, and 24, fasc. 3; 1930–33), F. Graffin, SJ (ibid. 27, fasc. 4; 1957), M. Albert (ibid. 30, fasc. 2; 1961), A. Torbey (ibid. 30, fasc. 4; 1963), J. Khouri (ibid. 31, fasc. 1; 1965), É. Zigmund-Cerbü (ibid. 35, fasc. 2; 1969), and N. Séd (ibid. 40, fasc. 3, and 41, fasc. 3; 1981–3). Two 'bases' or parts were ed. separately by J. Bakoš, Psychologie de Grégoire Aboulfaradj (Leiden, 1948) and R. Kohlhaas, OSB, Jakobitische Sakramententheologie im 13. Jahrhundert (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 36; 1959). The 'Chronicle' has been pub. in two parts: pt. 1, ed., with Eng. tr., by E. A. W. Budge, The Chrono- graphy of Gregory Abû'l Faraj (2 vols., 1932); pt. 2, ed., with Lat. tr., by J. B. Abbeloos and T. J. Lamy, Gregorii Barhebraei Chronicon Ecclesiasticum (3 vols., Louvain, 1872–7). Autobiography also pub. by J. S. *Assemani, Bibliotheca Orientalis, 2 (Rome, 1721), pp. 248–63. J. Göttsberger, Barhebräus und seine Scholia zur heiligen Schrift (Biblische Studien, 5, Hefte 4–5; 1900). H. F. Janssens, L'Entretien de la sagesse: Introduction aux œuvres philosophiques de Bar Hebraeus (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège, 75; 1937). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 312–20.

Barlaam and Joasaph, Sts, two subjects of a popular medieval legend. It having been prophesied in the infancy of Joasaph (or *Josaphat), the son of a heathen Indian king, that he would be converted to Christianity, he was shut up in a palace so that he should know nothing of the facts or evils of life. Guided by a revelation, a monk Barlaam visits the prince in disguise and converts him to Christianity, using a series of 'Apologues' or fables. His father tries to win him back, by arranging a public disputation, but is himself eventually converted. For a time he ruled the kingdom with his father, but later retired to the wilderness with Barlaam.

The tale is an exhortation to renunciation of the world and is of Buddhist origin. The Greek text is traditionally ascribed to St *John of Damascus, but it is now widely accepted that it is an adapted translation from Georgian, perhaps made by St Euthymius of *Athos (d. 1028). The Georgian, which is the earliest Christianized form of the tale, goes back to an Arabic version, itself made from Middle Persian (lost). The Greek translator has incorporated many new elements, incl. the 'Apology' of *Aristides. The older of the two Latin translations was made before 1048. See also JOSAPHAT, ST.

The names of Barlaam and Josaphat were added to the *Roman Martyrology by C. *Baronius. Their feast is observed on 27 Nov. In W. calendars another St Barlaam, a martyr, is commemorated on 9 Nov.

Ed. princeps of Gk. text in J. F. Boissonade, Anecdota Graeca, 4 (1832), pp. 1–365; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 96. 857–1250. Modern edn., with Eng. tr., by G. R. Woodward and H. Mattingly (Loeb, 1914; repr., 1967, with new introd. by D. M. Lang). Two recensions of the Georgian text ed. I. V. Abuladze (Tiflis, 1957); Eng. tr. by D. M. Lang of the short recension (London, 1957) and of the long recension (ibid., 1966). Ethiopic text ed. E. A. Wallis Budge (2 vols., Cambridge, 1923). R. L. Wolff, 'Barlaam and Joasaph', HTR 32 (1939), pp. 131–9. F. Dölger, Der griechische Barlaam-Roman, ein Werk des H. Johannes von Damaskos (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, 1; Ettal, 1953). H. Peri, Der Religionsdisput der Barlaam-Legende, ein Motiv abendländischer Dichtung (Acta Salmanticensia, Filosofia y Letras, 14, no. 3; 1959). D. Gimaret, Le Livre de Bilawhar et Būdāsf selon la Version Arabe Ismaélienne (Centre de Recherches d'Histoire et de Philologie de la IV[e] Section de l'École pratique des Hautes Études, 4: Hautes Études Islamiques et Orientales d'Histoire comparée, 3; 1971). Beck, pp. 35–41 (prefers attribution to John, a monk of St Sabas, who may be John of Damascus). A. Kazhdan, 'Where, when and by whom was the Greek Barlaam and Ioasaph not written?', in W. Will (ed.), Zu Alexander d. Gr. Festschrift G. Wirth zum 60. Geburtstag am 9.12.86, 2 (Amsterdam, 1988), pp. 1187–207. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 532–5 (no. 8120). H. Bacht, SJ, in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 1193–2000, with bibl. to date; B. Stuber in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 464–6, s.v. 'Jean Damascène'.

Barlow, Thomas (1607–91), Bp. of *Lincoln. At *Oxford he became Librarian of the *Bodleian (1642), Provost of Queen's (1657), and Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity (1660). Theologically he was a definite *Calvinist, but, by persistent trimming, he kept his offices through the many changes of the century. He became Bp. of Lincoln in 1675, but there is reason to doubt whether he ever visited his cathedral. His violent anti-Papalism found full scope in the *Popish Plot, but, on the accession of *James II, he professed his loyal affection. Undismayed, he took the oath to William III without demur. His published works include a treatise on natural theology entitled Exercitationes aliquot metaphysicae de Deo (1637), Plain reasons why a Protestant of the Church of England should not turn Roman Catholic (1688), and Cases of Conscience (1692).

The Genuine Remains of . . . Dr. Thomas Barlow (1936, ed. P. Pett). A. *Wood, Athenae Oxonienses (3rd edn. by P. Bliss), 4 (1820), cols. 333–41. S. Levy, 'Bishop Barlow on the "Case of the Jews" ', Transactions of the Jewish Historical Society of England, 3 (1899), pp. 151–6. E. Venables in DNB 3 (1885), pp. 224–9.

Barlow, William (d. 1568), Bp. of *Chichester. Born of an impoverished family of gentry, he became an *Augustinian canon, and was in royal diplomatic service possibly in the later 1520s and certainly in the 1530s. Gaining preferment through *Anne Boleyn's favour, he was chosen Bp. of *St Asaph in 1536, but was apparently transferred to *St David's before his consecration. He became Bp. of *Bath and Wells in 1548, resigned on *Mary's accession, and on *Elizabeth I's in 1559 he was appointed Bp. of Chichester. As the chief consecrator of Abp. M. *Parker in 1559, Barlow's position is at the centre of the controversy on *Anglican ordinations; there is no surviving record of his own consecration, but every indication that it took place regularly under the Catholic *Ordinal. He has been much confused with namesakes. He is not to be identified with the reformist Henrician pamphleteer Jerome Barlow, but certainly wrote the conservative Dialogue describing the original ground of these Lutheran factions . . . (1531). He also translated part of the *Apocrypha for the *Bishops' Bible. Five of his daughters were wives of bishops.

Facsimile repr. of his Dialogue (Amsterdam, 1974); also, with notes and full discussion by A. M. MacLean (Courtenay Library of Reformation Classics, 15; Sutton Courtenay [1981]). A. S. Barnes, Bishop Barlow and Anglican Orders: A Study of the Original Documents (1922). C. Jenkins, 'Bishop Barlow's Consecration and Archbishop Parker's Register: With some new documents', JTS 24 (1923–4), pp. 1–32; A. M. McLean, ' "Detestynge Thabomynacyon": William Barlow, Thomas More and the Anglican Episcopacy', Moreana, no. 49 (1976), pp. 67–77; id., ' "A noughtye and a false lyeng boke": William Barlow and the Lutheran Factions', Renaissance Quarterly, 31 (1978), pp. 173–85. [E.] G. Rupp, Studies in the Making of the English Protestant Tradition (Cambridge, 1947), pp. 62–72 ('The Early Career of Bishop Barlow'). J. Fines, A Biographical Register of Early English Protestants, 1 (Sutton Courtenay [1981]), s.v. [no pagination].

Barlow, William (c.1565–1613), Bp. of *Lincoln. Educated at St John's College, Cambridge, he was a Fellow of Trinity Hall from 1590 to 1596, when he was made chaplain to Abp. *Whitgift. He became Dean of *Chester in 1602, Bp. of *Rochester in 1605, and Bp. of Lincoln in 1608. He attended the *Hampton Court Conference in 1604 and is best known for his Summe and Substance of the Conference . . . at Hampton Court (1604), which, despite contemporary and later criticism, remains the most satisfactory account. He took part in the Cambridge dispute about *predestination in the late 1590s, and in his report to Whitgift criticized J. *Overall, then regius professor of theology, for indulging the *Calvinist faction; his own views seem to anticipate those of the Dutch *Arminians.

Barlow was an able preacher and an ardent supporter of *Divine Right. In 1606 he was employed by *James I to preach before A. *Melville in an attempt to urge the acceptance of episcopacy and the royal supremacy on the Church of Scotland. Two years later he replied to R. *Parson's attack on the Oath of Allegiance. As Bp. of Lincoln he was a determined opponent of Puritan nonconformity. He was one of the translators of the AV.

His Summe and Substance is repr. in E. *Cardwell, A History of Conferences (Oxford, 1840), pp. 167–212. K. Fincham, Prelate as Pastor: The Episcopate of James I (Oxford, 1990), pp. 242 f. and 279–82. E. Venables in DNB 3 (1885), pp. 231–3.

Barmen Declaration (1934). The statement drawn up at the first Synod of the *Confessing Church at Barmen from 29 to 30 May 1934, to define the belief and mission of the Church in the face of the theologically liberal tendencies of the Nazi *German Christians. The foundation of the Church was held to be the Revelation of God in Jesus Christ and not any subordinate revelation in nature or history, and her primary mission was defined as to preach the Gospel of the free Grace of God. The Synod and its Declaration were deeply under the influence of K. *Barth.

Text, with full bibl., in K. D. Schmidt (ed.), Die Bekenntnisse und grundsätzlichen Äusserungen zur Kirchenfrage, 2 (1935), section 42, pp. 91–8. G. Niemöller, Die erste Bekenntnissynode der Deutschen evangelischen Kirche zu Barmen (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Kirchenkampfes, 5–6; 1959). W.-D. Hauschild, G. Kretschmar and C. Nicolaisen (eds.), Die lutherischen Kirchen und die Bekenntnissynode von Barmen: Referate des Internationalen Symposiums auf der Reisenburg 1984 (Göttingen, 1984). K. Scholder, Die Kirchen und das Dritte Reich, 2 [1987], esp. pp. 159–219; Eng. tr., 2 (1988), pp. 122–71.

Barnabas, St. A Jewish *Levite of *Cyprus who became one of the earliest Christian disciples at *Jerusalem. Along with St *Paul, he is called an *Apostle (Acts 14: 14). His original name was Joseph, but he was 'surnamed Barnabas by the Apostles', the word 'Barnabas' being interpreted by St Luke as 'son of consolation' (υἱὸς παρακλήσεως, Acts 4: 36). It was he who introduced Paul, perhaps an acquaintance of long standing, to the Apostles after his conversion (Acts 9: 27), and was sent by them to inquire into the situation at *Antioch, where Christianity was being preached to Gentiles on a new scale (11: 22 ff.). Having approved, he fetched Paul from Tarsus to help him in the first 'missionary journey' which followed (Acts 13 and 14; see PAUL, ST), beginning with Cyprus. Indeed, in this he was originally the leader, though Paul very soon became the more prominent. At the so-called council at Jerusalem (Acts 15) he defended the claims of the Gentile Christians, and after it returned to Antioch with Paul (15: 30). Owing to a dispute with Paul over John *Mark, 'they parted asunder one from the other' (15: 39), and Barnabas sailed for Cyprus. He probably continued to travel widely, as later Paul mentions him as if he were known to the *Galatians (Gal. 2: 1, 2: 13), the *Corinthians (1 Cor. 9: 6), and possibly the *Colossians (Col. 4: 10). He is the traditional founder of the Cypriot Church, and legend asserts that he was martyred at Salamis in AD 61. Acc. to another tradition he was one the seventy of Lk. 10: 1, and to a third the founder of the Church of Milan and its first bishop. *Tertullian attributes to his authorship the Ep. to the *Hebrews. Feast day, 11 June. See also following entry.

AASS, Jun. 2 (1698), pp. 420–60. Crit. edn. of his Acta by M. Bonnet, Acta Philippi et Acta Thomae accedunt Acta Barnabae (Leipzig, 1903), pp. 292–302. O. Braunsberger, SJ, Der Apostel Barnabas: Sein Leben und der ihm beigelegte Brief (Mainz, 1876). L. *Duchesne, 'Saint Barnabé', in *Mélanges G. B. de Rossi (Suppl. aux Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire publiés par l'École française de Rome, 12; 1892), pp. 41–71. J. D. Burger, 'L'Énigme de Barnabas', Museum Helveticum, 3 (1946), pp. 180–93. S. [P.] Brock, 'Βαρναβᾶς: υἱὸς παρακλήσεως', JTS NS 25 (1974), pp. 93–8.

Barnabas, Epistle of. An epistle of early Christian times ascribed by *Clement of Alexandria to the Apostle *Barnabas. Its Greek text was first discovered entire in the *Codex Sinaiticus. It contains a strong attack on Judaism, explaining animal sacrifices, the distinctive enactments of the Mosaic Law, and the material Temple as mistakes due to Jewish blindness and denying that they were ever God's will. The writer also maintains that the Hebrew Scriptures, so far from enjoining Judaic practices, had an esoteric sense, which he professes to reveal. In this way he succeeds in finding in the OT convincing testimonies for Christianity and against Judaism. It is very improbable that the author was really the Apostle Barnabas. He was a Christian, perhaps of *Alexandria, who wrote at some time between 70 and 150.

For edns. and trs. of text, see bibl. to APOSTOLIC FATHERS. Also ed. T. Klauser (Florilegium Patristicum, fasc. 1, new edn., 1940), R. A. Kraft, with Fr. tr., introd., and notes by P. Prigent (SC 172; 1971), and, with Ital. tr., by F. S. Barcellona (Corona Patrum; Turin, 1975). H. Windisch, Der Barnabasbrief (Hb NT, Ergänzungsband, 3; 1920); P. Prigent, L' Épître de Barnabé I–XVI et ses sources (Études Bibliques, 1961). K. Wengst, Tradition und Theologie des Barnabasbriefes (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 42; 1971). P. Richardson and M. B. Schukster, 'Barnabas, Nerva, and the Yavnean Rabbis', JTS NS 34 (1983), pp. 31–55. J. Carleton Paget, The Epistle of Barnabas: Outlook and Background (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament, 2. Reihe, 64; 1994). See also bibl. to APOSTOLIC FATHERS.

Barnabas, Gospel of. A writing in Italian, apparently dating from the 14th cent., by a native of Italy who had renounced Christianity for Islam. An 'Evangelium secundum Barnabam' is also listed in the '*Decretum Gelasianum' among the spuria; but this is prob. an independent work, now wholly lost.

Ital. text ed. with Eng. tr. by L. and L. Ragg (Oxford, 1907). Ital. text reproduced photographically, with notes and Fr. tr. by L. Cirillo and M. Frémaux, and full introd. by L. Cirillo (Paris, 1977). R. Stichel, 'Bemerkungen zum Barnabas-Evangelium', Byzantinoslavica, 43 (1982), pp. 189–201.

Barnabites. A small religious order founded at Milan in 1530 by St Antonio Maria Zaccaria (d. 1539). Officially known as the 'Clerks Regular of St Paul', its members obtained their popular name from their church of St Barnabas at Milan. Besides the usual monastic obligations, their rule provides for the study of St *Paul's Epistles and for education and mission work. In 1985 there were some 500 members of the order, in 85 houses: of these 40 were in Italy, and 15 in Brazil.

O. Premoli, Barnabite, Storia dei Barnabiti nel cinquecento (1913), nel seicento (1922), dal 1700 al 1825 (1925). L. M. Levati and others, Menologio dei Barnabiti (12 vols., Genoa, 1932–8). G. Boffito, Barnabite, Scrittori Barnabiti . . . (1533–1933) (4 vols., Florence, 1933–7). Heimbucher, 2, pp. 106–10. V. M. Colciago in EC 4 (1950), cols. 298–301, s.v. 'Congregazione di S. Paolo'; A. M. Erba in DIP 2 (1973), cols. 945–74, s.v. 'Chierici Regolari di San Paolo', with bibl.

Barnett, Samuel Augustus (1844–1913), Anglican social reformer. After studying law and modern history at Wadham College, *Oxford, he was ordained deacon in 1867. In 1869 he founded the Charity Organization Society. From 1873 to 1894 he was Vicar of St Jude's Whitechapel, where his unorthodox methods (evening schools, entertainments, serving on the Board of Guardians) at first aroused much criticism, but soon led to his recognition as a loyal priest, devoted to the religious and cultural improvement of the East End of London. He encouraged tutors from Oxford to come to lecture to his parishioners, and from 1884 to 1896 was the first Warden of Toynbee Hall. In 1884 he helped to found the Education Reform League, and in 1885 he became a promoter of the Artisans' Dwellings Act. Throughout his life he was active in initiating projects directed to the reform of social conditions on Christian principles and urging Christians to study them. In 1893 Barnett became a canon of Bristol cathedral and in 1906 was made a canon of *Westminster. He was much assisted in his work by his wife (Henrietta Octavia, née Rowland), who before marriage had been a co-worker with Octavia Hill (1838–1912). 'Barnett House', for the study of social problems, was founded at Oxford in his memory. His writings include Practicable Socialism: Essays on Social Reform (1888), The Service of God: Sermons, Essays, and Addresses (1897), and Religion and Politics (1911).

His Life was written by his wife in 2 vols. (1918). J. Wells in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 31 f.

Baro, Peter (1534–99), anti-*Calvinist divine. Born at Étampes, he studied for the law at Bourges, where he came under the influence of the recently introduced Protestant doctrines. Abandoning law for divinity, he made his way to *Geneva, where J. *Calvin admitted him to the ministry. After returning to France, he found himself compelled to flee to England. In 1574, mainly through the influence of Burghley, he was appointed Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. Here, despite his earlier personal associations with Calvin, he became a critic of the more predestinarian of the Calvinist doctrines. The *Lambeth Articles seem to have been drafted partly to rebut his teaching, but Baro put an anti-Calvinist sense on them and thus justified his formal assent. He also challenged W. *Perkins's teaching on predestination, then in high repute at Cambridge. But though Burghley had interposed in his favour and J. *Overall and L. *Andrewes had given him their support, Baro found it expedient to flee from Cambridge in 1596. He lived for the rest of his life in London. He can be regarded as an early leader of the movement in Anglican theology later popularly termed '*Arminianism'. His writings include Praelectiones on Jonah (1579), De fide ejusque Ortu et Natura plana ac dilucida Explicatio (1580), and Summa Trium de Praedestinatione Sententiarum (1613).

Abridged version of his autobiography from a Baker MS, vol. 39, p. 185, and other material pr. by R. Masters, Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the late Rev. Thomas Baker (1784), pp. 127–31. H. C. Porter, Reformation and Reaction in Tudor Cambridge (Cambridge, 1958), esp. pp. 376–97. P. [G.] Lake, Moderate Puritans and the Elizabethan Church (ibid., 1982), pp. 227–42.

barocco. See BAROQUE.

Baronius, Cesare (1538–1607), ecclesiastical historian. He became a member of the *Oratory under St *Philip Neri in 1557, and Superior in 1593. In 1596 he was made Cardinal and in 1597 Librarian of the *Vatican. His most important work, the Annales Ecclesiastici (12 folio volumes, 1588–1607), is a history of the Church in chapters each corresponding to a year, undertaken as a RC reply to the *Centuries of Magdeburg. At his death this work had only reached the year 1198, and various attempts, all worthless, were made to continue it, one by the Oratorians themselves. Baronius was at some pains to secure accuracy, as is clear from the long list of authorities he cites and compares. But on many matters, particularly where the E. Church is concerned, his information was scanty and in error, and throughout his critical powers failed to support his good intentions. In the eleventh volume, published in 1605, he included a note supporting Papal claims in Sicily against Spain, which was published as a separate treatise after his death (Paris, 1609; Leiden, 1619), and gave much offence to Philip III. At the time of the original publication it is said to have lost Baronius the Papacy, owing to Spanish opposition. He also published two new and corrected editions of the *Roman Martyrology (1586 and 1589).

The standard edn. of his Annales Ecclesiastici, with the various additions and an index to the whole, is that of J. D. *Mansi and D. Georgius (38 vols., Lucca, 1738–59). Early Life by H. Barnabeus, Cong. Orat. (Rome, 1651). G. Calenzio, La vita e gli scritti del Cardinale Cesare Baronio (1907); V. Simoncelli (ed.), Per Cesare Baronio: Scritti vari nel terzo centenario della sua morte (1911); A. Roncalli [*John XXIII], Il Cardinale Cesare Baronio: Conferenza tenuta il 4 decembre 1907 nel Seminario di Bergamo ricorrendo il terzo centenario della morte (1961); C. K. Pullapilly, Caesar Baronius: Counter-Reformation Historian (Notre Dame, Ind., and London, 1975). H. Jedin, Kardinal Caesar Baronius: Der Anfang der katholischen Kirchengeschichtsschreibung im 16. Jahrhundert (Katholisches Leben und Kirchenreform im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 38; 1978). Baronio Storico e la Controriforma: Atti del convegno internazionale di studi, Sora, 6 10 ottobre 1979, ed. R. De Maio and others (Fonti e Studi Baroniani, 1; Sora, 1982). A. Pincherle in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 6 (1964), pp. 470–8, s.v.

baroque (Portug. barroco, a 'rough pearl'). The ornate style of art and architecture which flourished in Italy during the 17th and early 18th cents., and spread throughout mainland Europe, esp. in France and Spain. By means of complex spatial geometry, a harmonious richness of decoration and an unreserved appeal to the emotions, it sought to infuse new life and religious feeling into the cold rigidity of the later Renaissance. Its most notable Italian exponents were G. L. Bernini (1598–1680), C. Maderno (1556–1629), and F. Borromini (1599–1667). In Germany and Austria some of the most distinguished examples of the baroque style are in the buildings of Balthasar Neumann (1687–1753), J. B. Fischer von Erlach (1656–1723), and the Asam brothers, Cosmas Damian (1686–1739) and Aegid Quirin (1692–1750). Owing to the fantastic exuberance of some architects, the term 'baroque' came to signify anything florid or bizarre. See also ROCOCO.

H. Wölfflin, Renaissance und Barock: Eine Untersuchung über Wesen und Entstehung des Barockstils in Italien (1888; Eng. tr., with introd. by P. Murray, 1964); G. Bazin, The Baroque: Principles, Styles, Modes, Themes, tr. by P. Wardroper (1968); J. R. Martin, Baroque (1977). A. Pigler, Barockthemen: Eine Auswahl von Verzeichnissen zur Ikonographie des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts (2 vols., Budapest, 1956; 2nd edn., 3 vols., 1974). R. Wittkower and I. B. Jaffe (eds.), Baroque Art: The Jesuit Contribution (New York, 1972). S. Sitwell, Southern Baroque Art (1924); id., German Baroque Art (1927); id., Spanish Baroque Art (1931). R. Wittkower, Art and Architecture in Italy 1600 to 1750 (Pelican History of Art, 1958; 3rd edn., 1973); E. Hempel, Baroque Art and Architecture in Central Europe, tr. by E. Hempel and M. Kay (ibid., 1965). [C.] N. [P.] Powell, From Baroque to Rococo: An Introduction to Austrian and German Architecture from 1580 to 1790 (1959). E. K. Waterhouse, Italian Baroque Painting (1962; 2nd edn., 1969). J. Hook, The Baroque Age in England [1976]. A. E. Brinckmann, Barockskulptur (Handbuch der Kunstwissenschaft [1919]). G. Briganti and others in Encyclopedia of World Art, 2 (1960), cols. 255–381, s.v. 'Baroque Art', with bibl.; H. Hatzfeld in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 106–13, s.v.; S. Galigani, ibid., pp. 113–22, s.v. 'Baroque Art'.

Barrier Act. The Act passed on 8 Jan. 1697 by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, which requires that proposals to make any important alteration in the constitution of the Church shall first be presented in the form of overtures to the Assembly, and if passed in this form shall then be sent down to presbyteries for their consideration and opinion, and thence remitted to a future Assembly. Its purpose was to prevent hasty legislation that might prejudice the doctrine, worship, or government of the Church. The Act is still in force.

J. T. Cox, Practice and Procedure in the Church of Scotland (6th edn. by D. F. M. MacDonald, 1976), pp. 15 f., 104, and 181, with text of the Act, p. 385.

Barrington, Shute (1734–1826), Bp. of *Durham. He was the youngest son of John Shute, first Viscount Barrington (1678–1734), a strong advocate of complete religious freedom for the Protestant dissenters. Educated at Eton and at Merton College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1756, and in 1761 became a canon of Christ Church. After other appointments he filled successively the sees of *Llandaff (1769), *Salisbury (1782), and Durham (1791), and was one of the most influential bishops of his age, highly regarded by his fellow-bishops and by politicians alike. He made generous distribution of his large episcopal revenues. In his attitude to the Nonconformists he was less liberal than his father, deprecating any relaxation of subscription on the ground that precise articles of faith were indispensable in an Established Church. Besides issuing an edition of his father's Miscellanea Sacra (3 vols., 1770) he published the Life of his brother, William Wildman, Viscount Barrington (1814), a collection of Sermons (1811), and some minor works.

Brief Memoir by G. Townsend in his edn. of The Theological Works of the first Viscount Barrington, 1 (1828), pp. xliv–lix. A. H. Grant in DNB 3 (1885), p. 294.

Barrow, Henry (*c.*1550–93), also Barrowe, *Congregationalist. Educated at Clare Hall, Cambridge, he was converted *c.*1580 from the profligate life of a courtier to a strict *Puritanism. In 1586, when visiting in prison J. *Greenwood, the *Separatist leader, with whom he had earlier come into association, he was detained by order of Abp. J. *Whitgift, and kept in confinement till his death. He wrote in defence of separatism and congregational independence, and also engaged in controversy with R. *Browne, although they differed little in their conviction that, according to Scripture, Church authority was vested primarily in the individual congregation. He was charged in 1590 with circulating seditious books, and three years later sentenced to be hanged. Most of his writings were printed in the Netherlands by his friends. They included A True Description . . . of the Visible Congregation of the Saints, etc. (1589) and A Brief Discovery of the False Church (1590 [?1591]). The suggestion that Barrow was the author of the *Marprelate Tracts is now generally rejected.

The Writings of Henry Barrow 1587–1590, ed. L. H. Carlson (Elizabethan Nonconformist Texts, 3; 1962); The Writings of Henry Barrow, 1590–1591, ed. id. (ibid. 5; 1966); The Writings of John Greenwood 1587–1590, together with the joint writings of Henry Barrow and John Greenwood 1587–1590, ed. id. (ibid. 4; 1962), pp. 95–273; The Writings of John Greenwood and Henry Barrow 1591–1593, ed. id. (ibid. 6; 1970), pp. 93–291. F. J. Powicke, Henry Barrow, Separatist (1550?–1593), and the Exiled Church of Amsterdam (1900); B. R. White, The English Separatist Tradition from the Marian Martyrs to the Pilgrim Fathers (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971), esp. pp. 67–90; S. Brachlow, The Communion of Saints: Radical Puritan and Separatist Ecclesiology 1570–1625 (ibid., 1988), passim.

Barrow, Isaac (1630–77), Anglican divine, classical scholar, and mathematician. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1643, and though a royalist and the son of a royalist, became a scholar in 1647, and a Fellow in 1649. From 1655 to 1659 he travelled in France, Italy, and the Near East, and on his return to England was ordained. He was appointed Professor of Greek at Cambridge in 1660, Professor of Geometry at Gresham College, London, shortly after, and the first Lucasian Professor of Mathematics at Cambridge in 1663. The last post he resigned in 1669, in favour of his pupil, I. *Newton, whose greater ability he recognized, while he himself had come to doubt whether his mathematical studies left him sufficient time for theology. Soon after this, *Charles II made him his chaplain, and in 1673 Master of Trinity. The precision of a mathematician's thought is reflected in his theology, and his Treatise on the Pope's Supremacy (1680, posthumous) remains a work of outstanding ability. He was also one of the most successful (and lengthy) preachers of his day.

Collected edn. of his Theological Works by J. *Tillotson (4 vols., London, 1683–7), incl. 'Some Account of the Life of Dr. Isaac Barrow' by A. H[ill]. Modern edn. by A. Napier (9 vols., Cambridge, 1859) incl. Life by A. Hill, vol. 1, pp. xxxvii–liv, and 'Barrow and his Academical Times as Illustrated in his Latin Works' by W. Whewell, vol. 9, pp. i–lv. Mathematical Works ed. W. Whewell (Cambridge, 1860). P. H. Osmond, Isaac Barrow, His Life and Times (1944); M. Feingold (ed.), Before Newton: The Life and Times of Isaac Barrow (Cambridge, 1990). J. H. Overton in DNB 3 (1885), pp. 299–305.

Barsanuphius, St (d. 540, at an advanced age), ascetical writer. Though born in Egypt, Barsanuphius spent most of his life as a hermit in the region S. of Gaza. He exerted much influence on E. spirituality (medieval and modern) through a collection of letters to and from John the Prophet or John of Gaza, a fellow-hermit of whom little is known. The correspondence is called Questions and Answers. Drawing on the tradition of desert spirituality best represented by the Apophthegmata Patrum*, and violently opposed to the speculations of *Origen, the teaching of both men influenced *Dorotheus, *John Climacus, Paul *Evergetinos, *Simeon the New Theologian, and the *Hesychasts. Feast day in the E., 6 Feb.

The correspondence of Barsanuphius with John was ed. by *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain (posthumously pub., Venice, 1816); this edn. was repr. by S. N. Schoinas (Volos, 1960). Crit. edn., with Eng. tr., of sections 1–124 by D. J. Chitty in PO 31 (1966), pp. 449–616. Edn. by F. Neyt and P. de Angelis-Noah for SC in preparation. Fr. tr., based on MS, by L. Regnault, P. Lemaire, and B. Outtier (Solesmes [1972]). Fragment against the Origenists in PG 86. 892–901. S. Vailhé, 'Les Lettres spirituelles de Jean et de Barsanuphe', ÉO 7 (1904), pp. 268–76; id., 'Saint Barsanuphe', ibid. 8 (1905), pp. 14–25; id., 'Jean le Prophète et Séridos' ibid., pp. 154–60. P. de Angelis-Noah, 'La méditation de Barsanuphe sur la lettre 'HTA', Byzantion, 53 (1983), pp. 494–506. Beck, pp. 395 f. CPG 3 (1979), p. 373 (no. 7350). I. Hausherr, SJ, in Dict. Sp., 1 (1937), cols. 1255–62, s.v.

Barsumas (d. c.457), archimandrite and saint of the *Syrian Orthodox Church. He was invited by the Emp. *Theodosius II (d. 450) to defend *Eutyches at the Second Council of Ephesus (*Latrocinium, 449), and at the Council of *Chalcedon (451) he was among those who presented petitions in favour of *Dioscorus. The Syriac Life, written in the 6th–7th cent., is the source of the other oriental versions. Feast day, 3 Feb.

Text of Eth. Life, with Fr. tr., ed. S. Grébaut, 'Vie de Barsoma le Syrien', Revue de l'Orient Chrétien, 13 (1908), pp. 337–45, and 14 (1909), pp. 135–42, 264–75, and 401–14. Short extracts of the Syrian Life ed., with Fr. tr. by F. Nau, ibid. 18 (1913), pp. 272–6, 379–89, and 19 (1914), pp. 113–34, 278–89; an edn. of the full text by A. N. Palmer and J. Jarry in PO is announced. E. Honigmann, Le Couvent de Barsaumā et le patriarcat jacobite d'Antioche et de Syrie (CSCO 146, Subsidia, 7; 1954), esp. pp. 6–23. G. Bardy in DHGE 6 (1932), cols. 946 f.

Barsumas (d. before 496), Bp. of Nisibis in the *Church of the East. He studied at the Persian school in *Edessa and may have been the Barsauma whose banishment was demanded at the *Latrocinium (449). At an unknown date he became Metropolitan of Nisibis and a keen propagandist of the theology of *Theodore of Mopsuestia. Over several years he conducted a feud with the see of Seleucia-Ctesiphon, and at the Synod of Beth Lapat in 484 he secured the deposition of Babowai, the *Catholicos of Seleucia. He was instrumental in founding the influential theological school in Nisibis directed by *Narsai, who had fled from Edessa c.470. When the Persian school at Edessa was finally closed (489), Barsumas welcomed the exiles from there also. Six of his letters survive.

His letters are conveniently repr. by J. B. Chabot in his edn. of the Synodicon Orientale (Notices et Extraits des Manuscrits de la Bibliothèque Nationale, 37; 1902), pp. 525–39. Ger. tr. by O. Braun, Das Buch der Synhados (1900), pp. 75–83. J. Labourt, Le Christianisme dans l'empire perse sous la dynastie sassanide (224–632) (1904), pp. 131–52. S. Gero, Barsauma of Nisibis and Persian Christianity in the Fifth Century (CSCO 426; Subsidia, 63; 1981). I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (2nd edn., Rome, 1968), pp. 118–20. G. Bardy in DHGE 6 (1932), cols. 948–50, s.v.; J.-M. Sauget in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 484–6, s.v.; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 112.

Barth, Karl (1886–1968), Protestant theologian. He was the son of Fritz Barth (1856–1912), Professor of NT Theology at Berne. After studying at Berne, Berlin, *Tübingen, and *Marburg, Karl Barth began as a minister at Geneva (1909–11) and was then for ten years (1911–21) pastor at Safenwil (Aargau). Here, under the shadow of the war of 1914–18 and in direct relation to his pastoral responsibility, he was led to a radical questioning of the prevailing liberal theology, and wrote his 'Commentary on Romans' (Der Römerbrief, '1919', pub. 1918). In this work he revived Pauline and *Reformation themes that had been muted or omitted in liberal theology—the sovereignty of God, the finitude and sinfulness of man, *eschatology, and God's judgement on human institutions and culture. The originality, critical power, and actuality of its message, particularly in the pessimism of the post-war situation, at once gave him a very wide hearing among German-speaking Protestant theologians. In 1921 he became extraordinary professor at Göttingen and later Professor at Münster i.W. (1925) and Bonn (1930).

On Hitler's accession to power and the outbreak of the 'Church Struggle' (1933), Barth at once threw in his lot with the *Confessing Church. As a Swiss subject he enjoyed a liberty of speech not open to a German and he had a strong backing. None the less his action demanded much courage. The formulation of Confessional theology in the *Barmen Declaration of 1934 was largely Barth's work. At the outset he held that National Socialism, being purely a matter of secular politics, was irrelevant to the Christian, provided the freedom of the Gospel was maintained. Later he came to the view that such neutrality was not possible, and vigorously attacked Nazism. On his refusal to take an oath of unconditional allegiance to the Führer, he was deprived of his chair. He left Germany and in 1935 became Professor of Theology at Basle, where he continued to teach until he retired in 1962.

Developing the positions already announced in Romans, Barth aimed to lead theology away from what he believed to be the fundamentally erroneous 19th-cent. synthesis between theology and culture. Theology was to be based on the Word of God communicated in the Bible, and to stand over against human philosophies. Among those who chiefly influenced his thought were the great Continental Reformers and such later thinkers as S. *Kierkegaard, F. M. *Dostoevsky, F. *Overbeck, and the *Blumhardts. Human reason, he held, has no power to attain to the knowledge of God which is given only in God's gracious revelation in Jesus Christ. This revelation comes from God to man and is contrasted with religion, which is described as man's sinful attempt to grasp God and which ends only in distortion and idolatry. Clearly this outlook rules out all *natural theology and makes any dialogue with non-Christian religions virtually impossible. It also led Barth to be very critical of such figures as F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, G. W. F. *Hegel, and A. *Ritschl, and to engage in sharp exchanges with A. *Harnack.

These doctrines Barth proclaimed with passionate fervour in a style at once graphic and forceful, and in language deeply influenced by the Bible. He made them the theme of innumerable sermons and addresses, as well as of more continuous writings. In 1927 he published the beginnings of a systematic exposition of his theology in Die Christliche Dogmatik im Entwurf, 1, 'Die Lehre vom Worte Gottes'; but he abandoned this work and a few years later began again on a vast scale. In 1932 there appeared the first volume of Die kirchliche Dogmatik, on which he was destined to be engaged for most of the rest of his life. After his retirement and a serious illness, it became impossible to complete the work according to the original plan and the final volume on 'The Doctrine of Redemption' was never written. Nevertheless, Barth's Church Dogmatics is by far the most detailed Protestant exposition of Christian doctrine to have appeared since the Reformation.

The vast work begins from 'The Doctrine of the Word of God' as the source of all revelation and the foundation of any genuinely Christian theology. But the doctrine of the Trinity is soon introduced and it becomes apparent that Barth's interpretation of the Word is made in the light of the classic theological tradition. This is clear also in his treatment of the *Incarnation. Although the adverse judgements on natural theology and religion remain, Barth introduces the idea of a 'humanity' of God, and while this leaves the initiative in grace and revelation decisively with God, it helps to narrow the gap between God and man, seemingly unbridgeable in the early writings.

In 1945 Münster University restored the doctorate of which it had deprived Barth in 1939. In politics he now declined to take up the same hostile attitude to Communism as he had hitherto done to Nazism on the ground that the Church, which must be essentially detached from politics, cannot decide in advance that Communism is necessarily evil. He continued to act as a potent astringent influence in Protestant theology, on secondary matters (e.g. *Infant Baptism) often taking up provocative and sometimes unexpected positions.

In English-speaking countries, the greatest impact of 'the Barthian Theology' was in the 1930s. By the 1950s, though Barth still had professed disciples, his theological influence had become widely diffused among many who did not share his particular views or comprise a specifically 'Barthian' movement. At the same time his personal prestige, based largely on his distinctive and forthright standpoint, gave him the position of the outstanding Protestant theologian, and perhaps the most notable Christian prophet, of his time.

Barth's other works include Das Wort Gottes und die Theologie (collected lectures, 1924; Eng. tr., 1928); Die Theologie und die Kirche (further lectures, 1928); Credo (an outline of dogmatics based on the *Apostles' Creed, 1935; Eng. tr., 1936); The Knowledge of God and the Service of God (*Gifford Lectures, 1937–8; pub. 1938; based on the *Scottish Confession of 1560); Die kirchliche Lehre von der Taufe (1943; Eng. tr., 1948); Dogmatik in Grundriss (Lectures delivered in Bonn, 1946; pub. 1947; Eng. tr., 1949); Die protestantische Theologie im 19. Jahrhundert (1947; Eng. tr. of part as From Rousseau to Ritschl, 1959; Eng. tr. of the whole, 1972); Die christliche Lehre nach dem Heidelberger Katechismus (1948; Eng. tr., 1964).

See also BRUNNER, E., and DIALECTICAL THEOLOGY.

A Gesamtausgabe has begun to appear (Zurich, 1971 ff.); it will include new edns. of his pub. works and much unpub. material in 6 sections: (1) Sermons, (2) Academic Works, (3) Lectures and Minor Works, (4) Talks, (5) Letters, and (6) Biographical Material. The Eng. tr. of Barth's Römerbrief by E. C. *Hoskyns (1933) did much to spread knowledge of his doctrines in Britain. Eng. tr. of his Kirchliche Dogmatik by G. T. Thomson, T. F. Torrance, G. W. Bromiley, and others (13 vols., 1936–69). Eng. tr. of his Göttingen lectures (from the Gesamtausgabe) by G. W. Bromiley as Göttingen Dogmatics (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1991 ff.). Festschriften were issued in honour of his 50th birthday, ed. E. Wolf (Munich, 1936); of his 60th birthday (Cahiers Théologiques de l'Actualité Protestante, Hors Série, 2; Neuchâtel and Paris, 1946) and ed. F. W. Camfield (London, 1947); of his 70th birthday, ed. E. Wolf and others (Zurich, 1956, with list of his works to date, pp. 945–60), ed. T. H. L. Parker (London, 1956) and a special issue of Theologische Zeitschrift, 12, Hefte 2–3 (1956); and for his 80th birthday, ed. E. Busch and others (Zurich, 1966, with list of his works from 1956 onwards, pp. 709–23) and ed. J. I. McCord and T. H. L. Parker (London, 1966). E. Busch, Karl Barths Lebenslauf: nach seinen Briefen und autobiographischen Texten (Munich, 1975; Eng. tr., 1976). A. Keller, Der Weg der dialektischen Theologie durch die kirchliche Welt (1931; Eng. tr. as Karl Barth and Christian Unity [1933]). C. van Til, The New Modernism: An Appraisal of the Theology of Barth and Brunner (1946). O. Weber, Karl Barth's Kirchliche Dogmatik (1950; Eng. tr., 1953). H. [U.] von *Balthasar, Karl Barth: Darstellung und Deutung seiner Theologie (1951; Eng. tr., 1972). J. Hamer, OP, Karl Barth: L'Occasionalisme théologique de Karl Barth. Étude sur sa méthode dogmatique (1949; Eng. tr., 1962). G. C. Berkouwer, De Triomf der Genade in de Theologie van Karl Barth (Kampen, 1955; Eng. tr., 1956). H. Bouillard, Karl Barth (Théologie, 38 and 39; 2 vols. in 3, 1957). H. *Küng, Rechtfertigung: Die Lehre Karl Barths und eine katholische Besinnung (Einsiedeln, 1957; Eng. tr., 1964). T. F. Torrance, Karl Barth: An Introduction to his Early Theology, 1910–1931 (1962). F. Schmid, Verkündigung und Dogmatik in der Theologie Karl Barths: Hermeneutik und Ontologie in einer Theologie des Wortes Gottes (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, Zehnte Reihe, 29; Munich, 1964). E. Jüngel, Gottes Sein ist im Werden: Verantwortliche Rede vom Sein Gottes bei Karl Barth. Eine Paraphrase (Tübingen, 1965; Eng. tr., The Doctrine of the Trinity, Monograph Supplements to the Scottish Journal of Theology, 4; 1976); id., various papers repr. in his Barth-Studien (Ökumenische Theologie, 9 [1982]). S. W. Sykes (ed.), Karl Barth: Studies of his Theological Method (Oxford, 1979). B. L. McCormack, Karl Barth's Critically Realistic Dialectical Theology: Its Genesis and Development 1909–1936 (ibid., 1995). H. M. Wildi, Bibliographie Karl Barth (Zurich, 1984 ff.).

Bartholomew, St. One of the twelve Apostles. He is mentioned only in the Synoptic Gospels (Mk. 3: 18, Lk. 6: 14, Mt. 10: 3) and in Acts (1: 13). The name is a patronymic, meaning 'son of Tolmai', so that he may have had another (personal) name, and he has sometimes been identified with *Nathanael (Jn. 1: 45–51, 21: 2). Acc. to *Eusebius, when *Pantaenus of Alexandria visited *India between AD 150 and 200, he found there 'the Gospel according to Matthew' in Hebrew, left behind by 'Bartholomew, one of the Apostles' (HE 5. 10. 3). Bartholomew is traditionally said to have been flayed alive at Albanopolis in Armenia. Feast day in W., 24 Aug.; in E., 11 June.

A. Romeo in EC 2 (1949), cols. 916–18, s.v. 'Bartolomeo, Apostolo (I)', with bibl.

Bartholomew, Gospel of St. An apocryphal Gospel whose existence was known to *Jerome and *Bede (possibly only through Jerome). It has perhaps been incorporated into the 'Questions of Bartholomew' which survive in a number of Greek, Latin, and Slavonic MSS. These 'Questions' treat of the *descent of Christ into hell, the BVM's account of the Annunciation, a vision of the bottomless pit, the summons to the devil to judgement, questions about the deadly sins, and other subjects. They have a number of parallels with *Gnostic Gospels. There also exists in Coptic (apparently in three recensions) a 'Book of the Resurrection of Christ by Bartholomew the Apostle'.

A. *Wilmart, OSB, and E. Tisserant, 'Fragments grecs et latins de l'Évangile de Barthélemy', R. Bibl. NS 10 (1913), pp. 161–90, 321–68, incl. text of Lat. and Gk. and refs. to scattered edns. of other versions; U. Moricca, 'Un nuovo testo dell'"Evangelo di Bartolomeo" ', ibid. 30 (1921), pp. 481–516, and 31 (1922), pp. 20–30, incl. text. Gk. and Lat. texts. with Sp. tr., also in A. de Santos Otero (ed.), Los Evangelios Apócrifos (6th edn., 1988), pp. 530–66. Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 652–68; also in Schneemelcher, cited below. Ger. tr., with useful introd. by F. Scheidweiler and W. Schneemelcher and assessment of Coptic texts of the 'Book of the Resurrection', in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 424–40; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 537–57, incl. Eng. tr. of the 'Questions', pp. 539–53. F. Haase, 'Zur Rekonstruktion des Bartholomäusevangeliums', ZNTW 16 (1915), pp. 93–112. A. F. L. Beeston, 'The Quaestiones Bartholomae', JTS NS 25 (1974), pp. 124–7. The Coptic 'Book of the Resurrection', ed., with Eng. tr., by E. A. W. Budge, Coptic Apocrypha in the Dialect of Upper Egypt (1913), pp. 1–48, 179–230, Eng. summary in J. K. Elliott, op. cit., pp. 668–72.

Bartholomew of the Martyrs (1514–90), Portuguese theologian. Bartholomew Fernandez, who owes his surname 'A Martyribus' to the church in which he was baptized, entered the *Dominican monastery at Lisbon in 1528. After teaching philosophy and theology in various houses of his order, he was made Bp. of Braga in 1559. In 1561 he went to *Trent, where he took a prominent part in the last nine sessions, esp. in the drafting of the decrees on the reform of the clergy, which he did his best to put into practice after his return to his diocese. In 1582 he resigned his charge and retired to the Dominican convent at Viana. He was much esteemed for his personal holiness as well as for his energy in carrying out the Tridentine reforms. Among his works is the Stimulus Pastorum (1564) and a Compendium Spiritualis Doctrinae (1582), which was translated into many languages. In 1845 he was declared Venerable by *Gregory XVI.

Opera Omnia, ed. J. D. (in religion Dom Malachie) d'Inguimbert (Rome, 2 pts. bound in 1, 1734–5). Modern edn. of Theologica Scripta, by R. de Almeida Rolo, OP (6 vols., Braga, 1973–7). The primary source is the Life by *Luis of Granada (d. 1558; crit. edn. in Opera, ed. J. Cuervo, OP, vol. 14, Madrid, 1906, pp. 323–66); it was cont. by Luis of Cacegas, OP, and Luis of Sousa, OP, who pub. it under the names of Cacegas and himself (Viana, 1619); modern edn. under the name of Luis of Sousa, with preface and notes by A. R. Machado (Colecção de Clássicos Sá da Costa, 3 vols., Lisbon, 1946–8) and by G. Chaves de Melo and A. Pinto de Castro (Biblioteca de Autores Portugueses, ibid. [1984]). Secondary Lives include that by the *Jansenists P. T. du Fossé and L. I. Le Maistre de Saci (pub. anonymously, Paris, 1663; Eng. tr., 1880). R. de Almeida Rolo, OP, O Bispo e a sua missão pastoral segundo D. Frei Bartolomeu dos Mártires (Porto, 1964; Fr. tr., Lisbon, 1965); id., Formação e Vida Intelectual de D. Frei Bartolomeu dos Mártires (Porto, 1977). IV Centenário da Morte de D. Frei Bartolomeu dos Mártires: Congresso Internacional. Actas (Fatima, 1994).

Bartholomew of Pisa (*c.*1260–1347), *Dominican theologian. He is also sometimes called 'of San Concordio' after his native place. He entered the Dominican Order in 1277, and, after studying at *Bologna, Paris, and Pisa, he taught at several Dominican houses and was soon held in high reputation as a scholar. He is chiefly famous for his alphabetically arranged 'Summa de Casibus Conscientiae' (1338), also called 'Summa Pisana' or 'Summa Bartholomea'. It was much used during the 14th and 15th cents. and was later also frequently printed.

There is a description of him in 'Chronica Antiqua Conventus Sanctae Catherinae de Pisis', pr. in Archivio Storico Italiano, 6, par. 2, sez. 3 (1845), pp. 397–633, pp. 521–9. Kaeppeli, 1 (1970), pp. 157–68.

Bartholomew's Day, Massacre of St. The massacre that took place on the night of 23–24 Aug. 1572 and the two following days in which, chiefly, it appears, at the instigation of *Catherine de' Medici, between 5,000 and 10,000 *Huguenots, including G. de *Coligny, were put to death in Paris and other large French cities.

The massacre is discussed from different angles in all Lives of Catherine de' Medici and Gaspard de Coligny, cited s.vv. J. W. Thompson, The Wars of Religion in France, 1559–1576 (1909), pp. 448–53. S. L. England, The Massacre of Saint Bartholomew (1938). P. Erlanger, Le Massacre de la Saint-Barthélemy (1960; Eng. tr., 1962). N. M. Sutherland, The Massacre of St Bartholomew and the European Conflict 1559–1572 (1973), esp. pp. 312–50. A. Soman (ed.), The Massacre of St Bartholomew: Reappraisals and Documents (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 75; The Hague, 1974). R. M. Kingdon, Myths about the St Bartholomew's Day Massacres, 1572–1576 (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1988). H. Butterfield, Man on his Past (Cambridge, 1955), pp. 171–201.

Bartholomites. (1) Armenian. A community of *Armenian monks who fled from Armenia when the Sultan of Egypt invaded the country in 1296, and settled in 1307 at Genoa, where a church dedicated to St Bartholomew was built for them, hence their name. Others from Armenia joined them, and they spread throughout Italy. At first they retained the Armenian Liturgy and the Rule of St *Basil, but later, with the approval of Innocent VI (1356), they adopted the Roman Liturgy and the Rule of St *Augustine, and wore a habit similar to that of the *Dominicans, whose privileges they were granted by Boniface IX. In the 17th cent. they began to decline and were finally suppressed by *Innocent X in 1650.

(2) German. A congregation of secular priests, 'Institutum clericorum saecularium in communi viventium', known also as 'Bartholomaeans', 'United Brethren', and 'Communists'. They were founded in 1640 at Tittmoning by Bartholomew Holzhauser (1613–58), a German parish priest and ecclesiastical writer, in order to revive the morals and discipline of the clergy and laity, after the decline due to the *Thirty Years War (1618–48). They lived in community under obedience to a superior, but without vows, and were entrusted with many seminaries. After receiving formal approbation from Innocent XI in 1680, they spread into England, Poland, Italy, and other European countries. Their extinction was brought about by the secularization of the German ecclesiastical states under Napoleon in 1803; and recent attempts at restoration have been without effect.

(1) M. A. van den Oudenrijn, OP (ed.), Les Constitutions des Frères Arméniens de Saint Basile en Italie (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 126; 1940). [P. Hélyot], Histoire des ordres monastiques, religieux et militaires, 1 (1714), pp. 243–8, Heimbucher, 1, pp. 104 f. J. M. Besse in CE 2 (1907), p. 317, s.v.; L.-A. Redigonda in DIP 1 (1973), cols. 1073–5, s.v. 'Bartolomiti Armeni', with bibl.

(2) J. P. L. Gaduel, Vie du vénérable serviteur de Dieu Barthélemy Holzhauzer . . . fondateur de l'Institut des clercs séculiers vivant en communauté, avec une étude sur cet Institut (Orléans, 1861). F. Busan, OSB, 'Das Leben und Institut des ehrwürdigen Bartholomäus Holzhauser', Studien und Mitteilungen aus dem Benediktiner- und Cistercienser-Orden, 23 (1902), pp. 403–31 and 634–55. M. Arneth, Das Ringen um Geist und Form der Priesterbildung im Säkularklerus des siebzehnten Jahrunderts (Würzburg [1970]), pp. 179–279 and 380–434. Heimbucher, 2, pp. 595–7. M. Arneth in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 590–7, s.v. 'Holzhauser', with bibl.; J. Berdonces in DIP 1 (1973), cols. 1070–3, s.v. 'Bartolomiti', with bibl.

Bartimaeus. The blind beggar healed by Christ at or near *Jericho on His last journey to *Jerusalem. He is said to have afterwards 'followed Him in the way' (Mk. 10: 46–52).

Bartolommeo, Fra (1475–1517), Florentine painter. Bartolommeo (or Baccio) di Paolo del Fattorino, known as Baccio della Porta, was an admirer and follower of G. *Savonarola, whose portrait he painted. In 1500 he entered the *Dominican Order, and was based at San Marco, Florence; he gave up painting until 1504. His work exemplified the transition from the Early to the High Renaissance and for a time he was the most important painter in Florence after the departure of *Leonardo da Vinci and *Raphael from the city. He travelled to *Venice (1508), where he was impressed by Giovanni Bellini, and Rome (1514), but was mainly active in Florence, working in partnership with Mariotto Albertinelli. Among his most famous works are the 'Last Judgement', painted (1499–1500) for S. Maria Nuova (now in the Museo di San Marco) and the 'Lamentation' in the Pitti, both in Florence; he also painted numerous magnificent altar-pieces.

F. Knapp, Fra Bartolommeo della Porta und die Schule von San Marco (1903). H. von der Gabelentz, Fra Bartolommeo und die Florentiner Renaissance (2 vols., 1922). J. A. Crowe and G. B. Cavalcaselle, A History of Painting in Italy, 6 (1914), ch. 3, pp. 50–104; A. Venturi, Storia dell'Arte Italiana, 9, pt. 1 (Milan, 1925), pp. 223–347; S. J. Freedberg, Painting in Italy 1500 1600 (Pelican History of Art, 1971), pp. 49–54, with bibl. p. 519 (rev. paperback edn., 1975, pp. 84–90, with bibl. p. 716).

Barton, Elizabeth (*c.*1506–34), the 'Maid of Kent'. She was a servant girl who, after an illness in 1525, had trances and claimed to utter prophecies. After inquiries and a public examination by the Prior of Christ Church, Canterbury (1526), she was admitted as a nun at St Sepulchre's Convent in the city. Her prophecies then took a political turn, consisting in personal attacks on *Henry VIII for his intention to divorce his queen. In 1533, under examination by Abp. T. *Cranmer, a confession, true or false, was extorted from her that her trances were feigned, and she was prosecuted by Bill of Attainder and executed in 1534.

The main sources for her life are the Act of Attainder by which she was condemned (Treason of Elizabeth Barton (Pretended Revelations) Act 1533), and J. *Gairdner (ed.), Letters and Papers Foreign and Domestic of the Reign of Henry VIII, 6 (1882) and 7 (1883), passim. Some material from the *Cottonian MSS is pr. by T. Wright, Three Chapters of Letters Relating to the Suppression of the Monasteries (Camden Society, 26; 1843), pp. 13–34. A. D. Cheney, 'The Holy Maid of Kent', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, NS 18 (1904), pp. 107–29; E. J. Devereux, 'Elizabeth Barton and Tudor Censorship', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 49 (1966–7), pp. 91–106. A. Neame, The Holy Maid of Kent (1971).

Baruch, Book of. A Book of the *Apocrypha to which is attached the 'Epistle of *Jeremy' (q.v.), the two together, with *Lamentations, forming appendices to the Book of *Jeremiah. The book consists of (1) an introduction, which professes to have been written by Baruch, the disciple of Jeremiah, and read by him to the Jewish captives in Babylon in the 6th cent. BC (1: 1–14); (2) a liturgical confession (1: 15–3: 8); (3) a sermon (3: 9–4: 4); and (4) a set of canticles (4: 5–5: 9). On a critical view, the unmistakable dependence of the work upon *Daniel has led scholars to date it in post-Maccabaean times, and its liturgical use has suggested to some that it was either written or adapted for use in the cycle of sabbaths commemorating national disasters which began to be observed after the fall of *Jerusalem in AD 70. It is generally held that at any rate the earlier sections of the Book were originally written in Hebrew.

Gk. and Heb. text ed. and reconstructed, with Eng. tr., by E. Tov (Society of Biblical Literature, Texts and Translations, Pseudepigrapha Series, 6; Missoula, Mont. [1975]). Comm. by O. C. Whitehouse in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 569–95, and C. A. Moore, Daniel, Esther and Jeremiah: The Additions (Anchor Bible, 44; 1977), pp. 256–316. R. R. Harwell, The Principal Versions of Baruch (Yale Diss., New Haven, Conn., 1915). D. G. Burke, The Poetry of Baruch: A Reconstruction and Analysis of the original Hebrew Text of Baruch 3: 9–5: 5 (Society of Biblical Literature, Septuagint and Cognate Studies, 10; Chico, Calif. [1982]). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 2, Edinburgh, 1987), pp. 733–43, with bibl. J. Le Moyne, OSB, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 8 (1972), cols. 729–36, s.v. 'Prophètes d'Israël'. See also bibl. to APOCRYPHA.

Baruch, II. The Syriac Apocalypse. A Jewish work which professes to have been written by Baruch, Jeremiah's secretary. Opinions about the date of its composition vary, but since it describes the capture of *Jerusalem by the Chaldeans *c.*586 BC, it has been inferred that it was written after the fall of Jerusalem in AD 70, to encourage the Jews after the destruction of the Temple. A reference to the 'twenty-fifth year' (in ch. 1) has led P. Bogaert to suggest that it dates from AD 95; other scholars have placed it variously between AD 70 and *c.*135. In language and ideas it has striking resemblances to IV Ezra (II *Esdras). The Apocalypse was originally composed in Greek, but the bulk of it is extant only in a single 6th-cent. Syriac MS in the *Ambrosiana at Milan. The theory that the book in its latest form was the work of a Christian has not been generally accepted.

Syr. text ed. by A. M. Ceriani in Monumenta Sacra et Profana, 5 (pt. 2; Milan, 1871), pp. 113–80; also by M. Kmosko in Patrologia Syriaca (ed. R. Graffin), 2 (1907), cols. 1056–207, and S. Dedering in The Old Testament in Syriac according to the Peshitta Version, pt. 4, fasc. 3 (Leiden, 1973), first item. Eng. trs. with introds., notes, and indices by R. H. *Charles (London, 1896); id., The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (1913), pp. 470–526; A. F. J. Klijn in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 1 (1983), pp. 615–52; and L. H. Brockington in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984), pp. 835–95. Fr. tr., with introd. and comm., by P. Bogaert, OSB (SC 144–5; 1969). Ger. tr. by B. Violet (GCS 32, 1924, pp. 205–336, with introd. pp. lvi–xcvi). A.-M. Denis, Introduction aux pseudépigraphes grecs d'Ancien Testament (Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha, 1; Leiden, 1970), pp. 182–6 ('Les fragments grecs de l'Apocryphe syriaque de Baruch'). J. B. Frey in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 418–23, s.v. 'Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament. 9: L'Apocalypse syriaque de Baruch'.

Baruch, III and IV. 'The Greek Apocalypse of Baruch' (traditionally numbered III Baruch) is an apocryphal work, apparently of Jewish origin, but worked over by a Christian hand. It may date from the 2nd cent., and it was probably known to *Origen (De princ. 2. 3. 6). The Apocalypse described the visions of the seven heavens which were granted to Baruch, though the last two are wanting as the MS is defective. A Slavonic version also exists.

'The Paraleipomena of Jeremiah' or 'The Rest of the Words of Baruch' (traditionally called IV Baruch) also dates from the 2nd cent., and may be earlier than the above. It is prob. the work of a Jewish Christian and deals with the end of *Jeremiah's life. The Greek text appears to be the original, but there are also Ethiopic, Armenian, and Slavonic translations.

The numbering of III and IV Baruch is sometimes interchanged.

Gk. text of the 'Greek Apocalypse' ed. M. R. James, Apocrypha Anecdota, 2nd ser. (Texts and Studies, 5, no. 1; Cambridge, 1897), pp. 84–94; also ed. by J. C. Picard in Pseudepigrapha Veteris Testamenti Graece, 2 (Leiden, 1967), pp. 61–96. Eng. tr. of Slavonic text by W. R. Morfill in M. R. James, op. cit., pp. 95–102. Introd., ibid., pp. li–lxx. Eng. trs. of Gk. text, with introds. and notes, in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (1913), pp. 527–41, rev. by A. W. Argyle in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984), pp. 897–914, and of Gk. and Slavonic texts by H. E. Gaylord, Jun., in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 1 (1983), pp. 653–79.

Gk. text of the 'Rest of the Words of Baruch' first pub. by A. M. Ceriani, Monumenta Sacra et Profana, 5, pt. 1 (Milan, 1868), pp. 9–18; standard edn. with introd. by J. R. Harris (London, 1889). Eng. tr. by R. Thornhill in H. F. D. Sparks, op. cit., pp. 813–33; Ethiopic text ed. A. *Dillmann, Chrestomathia Aethiopica (Leipzig, 1866), pp. 1–15. G. Delling, Jüdische Lehre und Frömmigkeit in den Paralipomena Jeremiae (Beihefte zur ZATW, 100; 1967), with bibl.

Basel, Confessions and Council of. See BASLE, CONFESSIONS and COUNCIL OF.

Bashmuric. See FAYUMIC.

Basil, St, 'the Great' (*c.*330–79 [or possibly slightly earlier]). One of the three *Cappadocian Fathers. He was the brother of St *Gregory of Nyssa and St *Macrina. After being educated at Caesarea in Cappadocia, *Constantinople, and *Athens in the best pagan and Christian culture of his day, he forsook the world for the monastic life, and, after a brief period in Syria and Egypt, settled as a hermit by the river Iris near Neocaesarea (358). Here his early friendship with St *Gregory of Nazianzus was renewed, and they preached missions together. It has been suggested that the Emp. *Julian (361–3) tried to bring him to court, but it is not clear that the letter (ep. 32, Bidez) was addressed to Basil the Great rather than another Basil. In any case, it was not until *c.*364 that he left his retirement at the behest of his bishop, Eusebius of Caesarea in Cappadocia, to defend orthodoxy against the Arian Emperor, Valens. In 370 he was appointed to succeed Eusebius in the see of Caesarea, and held this office for the rest of his life. It brought him into the thick of further controversies with the extreme *Arian party led by *Eunomius, as well as with the *Pneumatomachi, who denied the divinity of the Holy Spirit, and with the Bps. of Rome (*Damasus) and Alexandria (*Athanasius), who refused to recognize his revered supporter, St *Meletius, as Bp. of Antioch.

In character Basil, besides being eloquent, learned, and statesmanlike, was possessed of great personal holiness. His nature was at once sensitive and pugnacious. To these qualities he added an unusual talent for organization, and impressed on E. monasticism the structure and ethos which it has retained ever since. The vast series of buildings he established on the outskirts of Caesarea, which included, besides the church and episcopal residence, hospitals and hostels for the poor, who were cared for by a carefully planned system of relief, long remained a monument to his memory.

His more important writings include a large collection of letters, his treatise 'On the Holy Spirit', and his three 'Books against Eunomius'. In conjunction with Gregory of Nazianzus he compiled the Philocalia*, a selection of passages from the works of *Origen. In the field of doctrine he made a strong effort to reconcile the *Semiarians to the formula of *Nicaea, and to show that their word Homoiousios ('like in substance to the Father') had the same implications as the Nicene Homoousios* ('of one substance'). The virtual termination of the Arian controversy at the Council of *Constantinople in 381/2 shortly after his death is a tribute to his success. In some quarters he was suspected of *Apollinarianism, because he corresponded with Apollinarius, but it is clear from other letters (236 and 261) that his Christology was not Apollinarian. Feast day in W., 2 Jan. (formerly 14 June, as now in parts of the Anglican Communion); in E., 1 Jan. See also the following entries.

Collected Works first ed. at Basle, 1532; best edn. that of J. *Garnier, OSB, and P. *Maran, OSB, Paris, 1721–30, repr., with additions, 'apud Gaume', 3 vols. in 6, Paris, 1839, and in J. P. Migne, PG 29–32. Crit. edns. of De Spiritu Sancto, by C. F. Johnston (Oxford, 1892) and B. Pruche, OP (SC 17 bis, 1968); of Epp. by R. Deferrari (Loeb, 4 vols., 1926–34) and Y. Courtonne (Collection des Universités de France, Paris, 3 vols., 1957–66); of Hom., 22 ('Ad adolescentes'), by F. Boulenger (Paris, 1935; repr., with corrections, by N. G. Wilson, Saint Basil on the Value of Greek Literature, 1975); of Hom. in Hexaëm., by S. Giet (SC 26; 1950); of Hom. on 'Observe-toi toi-même' by S. Y. Rudberg (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, 2 [1962]); of Comm. in Is., by P. Trevisan (2 vols., Turin, 1939); of De Baptismo, with Ital. tr., by U. Neri (Brescia, 1976), repr., with notes and Fr. tr. by J. Ducatillon (SC 357; 1989); and of Contra Eunomium, by B. de Sesboüé, SJ, G.-M. de Durand, OP, and L. Doutreleau, SJ (SC 299 and 305; 1982–3). The sermons de creatione hominis, ed. under the name of Basil by A. Smets, SJ, and M. Van Esbroeck, SJ (SC 160; 1970), may be the work of Gregory of Nyssa. Eng. tr. of selected works by B. Jackson (NPNCF, 1895).

P. Allard, Saint Basile (1903); W. K. L. Clarke, St Basil the Great: A Study in Monasticism (1913); Y. Courtonne, Saint Basile et l'hellénisme (1934); id., Un témoin du IVᵉ siècle oriental: Saint Basile et son temps d'après sa correspondance (Collection d'Études anciennes, 1973). G. F. Reilly, Imperium and Sacerdotium according to St Basil the Great (Washington, DC, 1945); D. Amand, OSB, L'Ascèse monastique de Saint Basile (Maredsous, 1949). J. Gribomont, OSB, Histoire du texte des Ascétiques de S. Basile (Bibliothèque du Muséon, 32; 1953); S. Y. Rudberg, Études sur la tradition manuscrite de Saint Basile (Stockholm, 1953). H. Dörries, De Spiritu Sancto: Der Beitrag des Basilius zum Abschluss des trinitarischen Dogmas (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, 39; 1956). G. L. Prestige, St Basil the Great and Apollinaris of Laodicea, ed. H. Chadwick (1956). T. Špidlík, SJ, La Sophiologie de S. Basile (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 162; 1961). H. Dehnhard, Das Problem der Abhängigkeit des Basilius von Platon: Quellenuntersuchungen zu seinen Schriften De Spiritu Sancto (Patristische Texte und Studien, 3; 1964). E. Amand de Mendieta and S. Y. Rudberg, Basile de Césarée: La tradition manuscrite directe des neuf homélies sur l'Hexaéméron (TU 123; 1980). P. J. Fedwick (ed.), Basil of Caesarea, Christian Humanist, Ascetic: A Sixteen-Hundredth Anniversary Symposium (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, 2 vols., Toronto [1981]). J. Gribomont, OSB, Saint Basile, Évangile et Église (Spiritualité Orientale et Vie Monastique, 36–7; 1984 [collection of repr. papers]). P. Rousseau, Basil of Caesarea (Berkeley, Calif., 1994). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 140–78 (nos. 2835–3005). Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 130–62 and 670 f.; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 290–8 and 606–9. J. Gribomont, OSB, in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 143–6, with bibl.; id. in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 491–7, s.v.; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), pp. 114 f.

See also works cited in the two following entries.

Basil, Liturgy of St. This liturgy is extant in two forms, the earlier and shorter of which is the ordinary liturgy of the *Coptic Church. An early MS of this form in a 7th-cent. Sahidic version (the original was Greek) contains an anaphora of Antiochene structure with some Egyptian features; it is comparable in brevity and simplicity to those of Addai and Mari and the Apostolic Tradition. The expansion of this anaphora into the longer form may well be in part the work of St *Basil the Great. For some centuries this longer form was the chief liturgy of *Constantinople, but it was eventually superseded on most days of the ecclesiastical year by the 'Liturgy of St *Chrysostom', which it had prob. influenced. It is, however, still used in the Orthodox Church on the first five Sundays in *Lent, on *Maundy Thursday, on the eves of *Easter, of *Christmas, and of *Epiphany, and on the feast of St Basil (1 Jan.). The Egyptian form of the Liturgy of St Basil has served as a model for modern *Eucharistic Prayers, esp. those of the RC Church.

Text in Brightman, LEW, pp. 309–44, 400–11; also in J. P. Migne, PG 31. 1629–56. H. Engberding, OSB, Das eucharistische Hochgebet der Basileiosliturgie (1931). S. Euringer, Die äthiopische Anaphora des hl. Basilius (Rome, 1934; ed., with tr. and notes, from four MSS). J. Doresse and E. Lanne, Un témoin archaïque de la liturgie copte de S. Basile, with appendix by B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Les Liturgies "basiliennes" et saint Basile' (Bibliothèque du Muséon, 47; 1960). A. Raes, SJ, 'Un nouveau document de la Liturgie de S. Basile', OCP 26 (1960), pp. 401–11. W. E. Pitt, 'The Origin of the Anaphora of the Liturgy of St Basil', JEH 12 (1961), pp. 1–13. H. Engberding, OSB, 'Das anaphorische Fürbittgebet der Basiliusliturgie', Oriens Christianus, 47 (1963), pp. 16–52; 49 (1965), pp. 18–37. P. Scazzoso, Introduzione alla ecclesiologia di san Basilio (Studia Patristica Mediolanensia, 4; 1975), pp. 144–70. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 163 f. (no. 2905). P. de Meester, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1596–604 ('Authenticité des liturgies de Saint Basile et de Saint Jean Chrysostome'), s.v. 'Grecques (Liturgies)'.

Basil, Rule of St. The monastic Rule put forward by St *Basil the Great, which is the basis of the usual Rule still followed by religious in the E. Church. Basil's earliest attempt to provide rules for the monastic life is known as the 'moral rules' (regulae morales) or Moralia, composed at the beginning of his monastic life in 358/9; they form a collection of 80 rules, each supported by quotations from the NT. What is usually referred to as the 'Rule of St Basil' is his Asceticon, a collection of questions and answers on the monastic life, which originated in questions put to Basil on his travels by devout lay people. The earliest form of these (called the 'Short Asceticon') goes back to the early 360s and now exists only in a Latin translation made by *Rufinus in 397 and in fragments of a Syriac version. Some of the questions seem to betray a *Messalian influence. A later redaction of these questions and answers seems to have been made for the monastery Basil set up at Caesarea; to it is appended the Epitimia, rules for the punishment of monastic offenders. This form of the Asceticon was used by St *Theodore of Studios (d. 826) in his revision of the Rule. Basil prepared a further, more literary, redaction, which he sent, with the 'moral rules', to his disciples in Pontus. The most widespread form of the Asceticon (the so-called 'Vulgate') was, however, compiled in the 6th cent. This consists of the 'moral rules', the questions and answers, and the Epitimia, interspersed with 'prologues', most of which are authentically Basilian. In this form the questions and answers are divided into 55 'detailed rules' (regulae fusius tractatae), which provide a systematic presentation of the monastic life, and 313 'short rules' (regulae brevius tractatae), which discuss the detailed application of these principles to the cloistered life. This 'Great Asceticon' was further expanded in the Middle Ages by the addition of the Constitutiones asceticae and a treatise on Baptism.

While strict, the Asceticon avoided giving encouragement to the more extreme austerities of the hermits of the deserts. It conceived of asceticism as a means to the perfect service of God, to be achieved in community life under obedience. Hours of liturgical prayer were laid down, and manual and other work, in the form of set tasks, enjoined. Poverty and chastity similar to those later prescribed in the W. were also imposed. Children were to be trained in classes attached to the monasteries, and were to be given an opportunity of testing their vocation to the religious life. The monks were enjoined also to care for the poor.

The text of all three forms of Regulae (incl. the moralia), with the prologues and Epitimia, and the Constitutiones asceticae, is pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 31. 653–870, 881–1428. Crit. edn. of Rufinus' translation of the 'Short Asceticon' by K. Zelzer (CSEL 86; 1986). Eng. tr. by W. K. L. Clarke, The Ascetic Works of Saint Basil (1925).

E. F. Morison, St Basil and his Rule: A Study in Early Monasticism (1912). J. Gribomont, OSB, Histoire du texte des Ascétiques de S. Basile (Bibliothèque du Muséon, 32; 1953). K. Zelzer, 'L'histoire du text des Règles de saint Basile et de saint Benoît à la lumière de la tradition gallo-franque', Regulae Benedicti Studia, 13 (1986), pp. 75–89. J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 211–14. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 152–60 (nos. 2875–98).

Basil of Ancyra (4th cent.), *Arian Bp. He was a typical representative of the more moderate party of the Arians. Elected in 336 to succeed *Marcellus in the see of Ancyra, he was himself deposed by the Council of *Sardica in 343, but reinstated by Constantius *c.*348. He took part in the Arianizing synods of Sirmium (351), of Ancyra (358), and Seleucia (359). His constantly increasing criticisms of the more extreme Arian doctrines, however, led their exponents to remove him from his see in 360, and banish him to Illyria, where he died. A short dogmatic treatise which he composed in conjunction with *George of Laodicea has been preserved by *Epiphanius in his Haer. 73. 12–22. He was also perhaps the author of the treatise 'On Virginity' (so F. Cavallera) included among the works of St *Basil the Great.

For the writings mentioned, see J. P. Migne, PG 42. 425–44, and 30. 669–810. Old-Slav text of De Virginitate ed., with Fr. tr., by A. Vaillant (Textes publiés par l'Institut d'Études Slaves, 3; 1943). J. Gummerus, Die homöusianische Partei bis zum Tode des Konstantius (1900), pp. 121–34. F. Cavallera, 'Le "De Virginitae" de Basile d'Ancyre', RHE 6 (1905), pp. 5–14. J. J. Cuesta, 'Dieta y virginidad: Basilio de Ancira y san Gregorio de Nisa', Miscelánea Comillas, 14 (1950), pp. 187–97, esp. pp. 189–93. J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 201–3.

Basil of Seleucia (d. after 468), Abp. of Seleucia by 448. He is remembered chiefly for his vacillating part in the events which preceded the Council of *Chalcedon in 451. Having condemned *Eutyches, the heresiarch, in 448, he acquiesced in his rehabilitation by the *Latrocinium in 449, but recanted shortly after and signed the *Tome of St *Leo I in 450. A series of 41 sermons of Basil on the Scriptures (two not genuine) have been preserved; and there are a few other writings, some of them spurious, that have come down under his name; these apparently include the 'De Vita et Miraculis Sanctae Theclae'.

Works in J. P. Migne, PG 85. 1–618; P. [T.] Camelot, OP, 'Une Homélie inédite de Basile de Séleucie', in Mélanges offerts à A. M. Desrousseaux (1937), pp. 35–48; Hesychius of Jerusalem, Basil of Seleucia, and others, Homélies Pascales (cinq homélies inédites), ed. M. Aubineau (SC 187; 1972), pp. 167–277, with Fr. tr. and introd. B. Marx, 'Der homiletische Nachlass des Basileios von Seleukia', OCP 7 (1941), pp. 329–69. E. Honigmann, Patristic Studies (ST 173; 1953), pp. 180–3. M. Van Parys, 'L'évolution de la doctrine christologique de Basile de Séleucie', Irénikon, 44 (1971), pp. 493–514. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 278–83 (nos. 6655–75). See also bibl. to THECLA, ST.

basilica. An early form of the building used for Christian worship, especially common in W. Europe in the centuries which immediately followed the recognition of Christianity by *Constantine. It seems to have been modelled on the Roman building of the same name, which served as a law court and a commercial exchange; but some features were apparently derived from the Roman house and others from the chapels of the *catacombs, both of which had served as places of Christian worship before the conversion of the Empire. The building was often approached by an '*atrium', or outer courtyard, with its colonnaded cloister. The church itself consisted of a '*narthex', or narrow porch, leading by three or more doorways into the main building. This was built with a nave and two (or even four) narrower aisles with pillars supporting horizontal architraves at first, but in later times arches. Above these rose the clerestory pierced by windows. The building was usually orientated, with the E. end completed by an arch and semicircular apse, with mosaics in its vaulting. The altar, which stood out from the wall on the chord of the apse, was raised on a platform and surmounted by a canopy. Directly underneath the altar and partly below the level of the floor was the 'confessio' or chapel which sometimes contained the body of the patron Saint. While the basilica was being used for worship the bishop sat on a throne in the centre of the wall of the apse, with his clergy in a semicircle on either side. He moved to the altar for the celebration of the Eucharist. See also ORIENTATION.

Today the title of 'basilica' is given by the Pope to certain privileged churches. Such basilicas are 'major' or 'minor'. The four 'Major Basilicas' are the Roman churches of St John *Lateran (for the 'Patriarch of the West', the Pope), *St Peter's at the Vatican (for the Patriarch of *Constantinople), *St Paul's outside the Walls (for the Patriarch of *Alexandria), and *Santa Maria Maggiore (for the Patriarch of *Antioch). Each has a Papal altar, the use of which was until 1966 restricted to the Pope or his immediate delegate. There are a number of 'Minor Basilicas' in Rome and others throughout the world.

R. Krautheimer, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae: The Early Christian Basilicas of Rome, IV–IX Cent. (Monumenti di Antichità Pubblicati dal Pontificio Istituto di Archeologia Cristiana, 2nd ser. 2; 5 vols., 1937–77). L. Bréhier, 'Les Origines de la basilique chrétienne', Bulletin Monumental, 86 (1927), pp. 221–49. J. G. Davies, The Origin and Development of Early Christian Church Architecture (1952), pp. 12–50. J. B. Ward Perkins, 'Constantine and the Origins of the Christian Basilica', Papers of the British School at Rome, 22 (1954), pp. 69–90. R. Krautheimer, Early Christian and Byzantine Architecture (Pelican History of Art, 1965; 3rd edn., 1979). R [L. P.] Milburn, Early Christian Art and Architecture (1988), pp. 85–8 and 94–119. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 2 (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 525–602, s.v. 'Basilique'; E. Langlotz and F. W. Deichmann in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 1225–59, s.v. 'Basilika'.

Basilides. A theologian of *Gnostic tendencies who taught at *Alexandria in the second quarter of the 2nd cent. He wrote a biblical commentary, the Exegetica, in 24 books; perhaps also a work entitled 'the Gospel' (contents unknown); and some Odes. Besides biblical material he used secret traditions supposedly deriving from St *Peter and St *Matthias, some Gnostic doctrines, and elements of Platonic and Stoic philosophy. His system is difficult to reconstruct, since only fragments of his writings survive, and conflicting accounts are given by *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Hippolytus. Acc. to Irenaeus, Basilides taught a form of *dualistic Gnosticism, reminiscent of *Valentinianism, but more elaborate, with 365 heavens; the ruler of the lowest is the creator God of the OT. Christ is a messenger of the supreme God, manifest in Jesus, who exchanged roles with *Simon of Cyrene before the Crucifixion. In complete contrast, Hippolytus' Basilides is perhaps the only seriously philosophical Gnostic; he taught a *monist system in which everything is derived from an ineffable 'non-existent' God. Jesus is an enlightened being who leads the elect back to God. Acc.

to Clement, Basilides was much more orthodox, though a dualist. His followers soon formed a separate sect, but his influence seems to have been largely confined to Egypt.

The chief authorities are Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. 1. 24; Clement of Alexandria, Strom. passim; Hippolytus, Haer. 7. 20–7. D. A. Hilgenfeld, Die Ketzergeschichte des Urchristentums (Leipzig, 1884), pp. 195–230. P. J. G. A. Hendrix, De Alexandrijnsche Haeresiarch Basilides (Amsterdam, 1926). W. Foerster, 'Das System des Basilides', New Testament Studies, 9 (1963), pp. 233–55; W. A. Löhr, Basilides und seine Schule (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament, 83; 1996). A. Pourkier, L'hérésiologie chez Épiphane de Salamine (Christianisme Antique, 4 [1992]), pp. 205–56, with bibl. p. 505. F. J. A. *Hort in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 268–81; J. H. Waszink in RAC 1 (1950), cols. 1217–25, both s.v. See also works cited under GNOSTICISM.

Basilikon Doron (Gk. Βασιλικὸν Δῶρον, 'a royal gift'). The title of *James I's book addressed to his eldest son, Henry (d. 1612). Its professed purpose was to guide Henry in his duties when he succeeded to the throne, but its real object was to rebuke ministers of religion who meddled in State affairs. James had a private edition of seven copies printed in 1599, but published it openly in 1603 on the death of *Elizabeth I. It was immediately popular and within three years translations had been printed in French (two versions), Danish, Dutch, Latin, German, Welsh, and Swedish.

Crit. edn. by J. Craigie (Scottish Text Society, 3rd ser. 16 and 18; 1944–50). Text also in C. H. McIlwain (ed.), The Political Works of James I (Harvard Political Classics, 1; Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1918), pp. 3–52, with important introd. Facsimile of 1599 edn. (Menston, Yorks., 1969).

Basle, Confessions of. The [first] 'Confession of Basle', which was compiled by O. *Myconius on the basis of a shorter formula put forward by J. *Oecolampadius in 1531, was made the basis of the reform introduced at Basle in 1534. Its theological standpoint represents a compromise between the positions of M. *Luther and H. *Zwingli. The 'First *Helvetic Confession' of 1536 is sometimes known also as the 'Second Confession of Basle'.

The text of the two Confessions is in H. A. Niemeyer, Collectio Confessionum in ecclesiis reformatis publicatarum (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 78–122; Eng. tr., with introd. and bibl., in A. C. Cochrane (ed.), Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 89–111.

Basle, Council of (1431–49). The Council, which inherited both the tasks and the difficulties of the Council of *Constance (q.v.), was convoked by *Martin V and opened in 1431. It was presided over by Card. G. *Cesarini, who was confirmed in this office by the new Pope, *Eugenius IV. When the latter, acting on unfavourable reports, dissolved it by a bull of 18 Dec. 1431, the Council disregarded the Pope's action, which was opposed also by Cesarini, and reaffirmed the decrees of Constance on the superiority of a *General Council over a Pope. The assembly at that time consisted of only a few bishops and abbots, apart from the inferior clergy, but it grew rapidly and, in order to enhance its authority, it introduced new regulations for procedure which gave the lower grades a majority over the bishops. It was, moreover, widely supported by the princes and the great universities, one of its best-known members being *Nicholas of Cusa, the humanist.

The Pope, pressed by the Council, the Emp. Sigismund, and even by Venice, and beset by political difficulties in Italy, in the bull 'Dudum sacrum' of 15 Dec. 1433 revoked his former decision and recognized the Council. The Council continued, however, in its anti-Papal attitude, reasserted once again the decrees of Constance, imposed many restrictions on the Papal legates, and prescribed an oath to be taken by a Pope after his election. It also attempted to regulate the nominations of cardinals and other affairs of the *Curia. In 1436 Eugenius IV denounced the usurpations of the Council in a memorandum to all Catholic princes. In 1437 the *Hussite question was settled against the Papal views by the ratification of the 'Compactata', thereby conceding to the Bohemians Communion in both kinds and several other demands. In the same year occurred the final break of the Council with the Orthodox Church over the place of the proposed council for union. As the Pope, the Greek envoys, and the Papal minority of the Council preferred a place in Italy, Eugenius transferred the Council to Ferrara; while those who remained at Basle deposed the Pope as a heretic and elected Amadeus VIII of Savoy as antipope (Felix V) in 1439. The renewal of the schism cost the Council its prestige, and the nations submitted one by one to Eugenius. In 1448 the Council was driven from Basle and moved to Lausanne, where Felix V abdicated, and in 1449 it decreed its own closure.

The oecumenicity of the Council of Basle has been an object of much discussion, but most RC theologians now recognize the first 25 sessions, until the transfer of the Council to Ferrara and *Florence. See also CONCILIAR THEORY.

Texts in Hardouin, 8–9; Mansi, 29–31 (1788–98). Crit. texts in Concilium Basiliense: Studien und Quellen zur Geschichte des Concils von Basel (ed. J. Haller and others 1896 ff.; 8 vols. to 1936); other contemporary material in Monumenta Conciliorum Generalium Seculi Decimi Quinti, ed. by F. Palacky and others (3 vols., Vienna and Basle, 1857–1932; vol. 4, indices, Basle, 1935). Text of decrees, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 453–513. Eng. tr. of other primary docs. in C. M. D. Crowder, Unity, Heresy and Reform, 1378–1460: The Conciliar Response to the Great Schism (1977), pp. 146–65, 177–9, with introd., pp. 29–35. Hefele and Leclercq, 7 (pt. 2, 1916), pp. 663–1137, with extensive bibl. refs. J. Gill, SJ, Constance et Bâle–Florence (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 9; 1965), pp. 119–209 and 332–51. J. W. Stieber, Pope Eugenius IV, the Council of Basel and the Secular and Ecclesiastical Authorities in the Empire (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 13; Leiden, 1978). G. Christianson, Cesarini: The Conciliar Cardinal. The Basel Years, 1431–1438 (Kirchengeschichtliche Quellen und Studien, 10; 1979). A. [J.] Black, Council and Commune: The conciliar movement and the fifteenth-century heritage [in some issues subtitled The Conciliar Movement and the Council of Basle] (1979), esp. pp. 1–117 and 194–222. H. Müller, Die Franzosen, Frankreich und das Basler Konzil (1431–1449) (Konziliengeschichte, Reihe B; 2 vols., 1990). E. Delaruelle, E. R. Labande, and F. Ourliac in Fliche and Martin, 14 (1962), pp. 227–92, with extensive bibl. pp. 227 f. J. Gill, SJ, in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 141 f., s.v. 'Basel, Council of'; A. N. E. D. Schofield in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 284–9, s.v. 'Basel–Ferrara–Florenz, Konzil von. I. Das Konzil von Basel'.

Basnage, Jacques (1653–1723), *Calvinist theologian and Church historian. Having become in 1676 a minister at Rouen, his native town, he retired to the Netherlands in 1685 after the revocation of the Edict of *Nantes. He later took a prominent part in Dutch affairs of state. His two most important writings are his Histoire de la religion des églises réformées (2 vols., 1690) and his Histoire de l'église (2 vols., 1699), both pub. at Rotterdam. He also wrote against J. B. *Bossuet.

E.-A. Maihlet, Jacques Basnage, théologien, controversiste, diplomate et historien: Sa vie et ses écrits (Geneva, 1880; repr. 1978). G. Loirette in DHGE 6 (1932), cols. 1251–3, s.v.

Bassendyne Bible. The earliest edition of the Bible in English to be published in Scotland. In July 1575 Thomas Bassendyne (or Bassinden; d. 1577) was granted a licence by the Privy Council to print the Bible, with the stipulation that it should be ready in nine months, and in 1576 the NT appeared. The Bible was not completed, however, till 1579.

W. T. Dobson, History of the Bassendyne Bible (Edinburgh, 1887), esp. pp. 101–57. Darlow and Moule, 1, ed. A. S. Herbert (1968), no. 158, pp. 88 f.

Bath and Wells. A see of the Province of *Canterbury, roughly equal to the historical county of Somerset. It was founded *c.*909 by King Edward the Elder as the diocese of *Wells. Between 1088 and 1091 the see was moved from Wells to Bath by King William II and Bp. John de Villula (1088–1122), and John and his successors styled themselves Bishops of Bath until Bp. Savaric (1192–1205), having obtained the abbacy of *Glastonbury, changed the title to 'Bath and Glastonbury'. In 1219 *Honorius III dissolved the union of Glastonbury with Bath and authorized the title 'Bath and Wells', though Bp. Jocelin (1206–42) did not assume it. A protracted dispute between the canons of Wells and the monks of Bath over the right to elect the bishop was resolved by *Innocent IV in 1245. He confirmed the title of 'Bath and Wells ' (which was then taken by Bp. Roger, 1244–7, and all his successors), and ordered that elections should be made alternately in Wells and Bath by the two chapters jointly, and that enthronements should be at the place of election. This arrangement came to an end with the dissolution of Bath Abbey in 1540; since then, Wells has been the sole cathedral of the diocese, but the title of the see and the bishop has remained unchanged. Notable holders of the see have included R. *Fox (1492–4), T. *Wolsey (1518–23), W. *Barlow (1548–1553), T. *Ken (1685–90), and R. *Bagot (1845–54). The present abbey-church at Bath has served since the *dissolution of the monasteries as a parish church.

The following Episcopal Registers have been pub. by the Somerset Record Society: Walter Giffard, 1265–6 (13; 1899), John de Drokensford, 1309–29 (1; 1887), Ralph of Shrewsbury, 1329–1363 (9 and 10; 1896), Henry Bowett, 1401–7 (13; 1899), Nicholas Bubwith, 1407–24 (29 and 30; 1914), John Stafford, 1425–43 (31 and 32; 1915–16), Thomas Beckington, 1443–65 (49 and 50; 1934–5), Robert Stillington, 1466–91, and Richard Fox, 1492–4 (52; 1937), Oliver King, 1496–1503, and Hadrian de Castello, 1503–18 (54; 1939), Thomas Wolsey, 1518–23, John Clerke, 1523–41, William Knyght, 1541–7, and Gilbert Bourne, 1554–9 (55; 1940). A Survey of the Diocesan Archives, carried out by a committee appointed by the Pilgrim Trust in 1946, was circulated in typescript among the principal record libraries of England. H. *Wharton, Anglia Sacra, 1 (1691), pp. 551–77. S. H. Cassan, Lives of the Bishops of Bath and Wells from the Earliest Times to the Present Period (1829). P. M. Hembry, The Bishops of Bath and Wells, 1540–1640: Social and Economic Problems (1967). T. S. Holmes in W. Page (ed.), VCH, Somerset, 2 (1911), pp. 1–67. On Bath Abbey, see W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 2 (1819 edn.), pp. 256–73; T. S. Holmes in VCH, loc. cit., pp. 69–81. C. L. Marson in DECH, pp. 44–6, s.v. See also bibl. to WELLS.

Bath Qol (Heb. בַּת קוֹל, 'daughter of a voice'). The term in *Rabbinic theology for a voice from Heaven such as was believed to be a regular means of God's communication with men. Such a voice is referred to in the NT at Christ's *Baptism (Mk. 1: 11) and *Transfiguration (Mk. 9: 7) and before His Passion (Jn. 12: 28), and also in Acts (9: 4, cf. 10: 13).

Batiffol, Pierre (1861–1929), Church historian. A pupil of G. B. *de Rossi, from 1889 till his death he was at the École de Ste-Barbe at *Paris, except from 1898 to 1908 when he was rector of the Institut Catholique at Toulouse. In 1890 he produced a critical edition of the Syntagma Doctrinae ad Monachos, a work once attributed to St *Athanasius. His Histoire du Bréviaire romain (1893; much improved 1911; Eng. tr., 1912) exercised a considerable influence on the revival of liturgical studies. For some years he was closely associated with the group of scholars later condemned as *Modernists. His first series of Études d'histoire et de théologie positive (1902) was followed in 1903 by a second volume dealing with the Eucharist. This created such a storm that Batiffol was forced to resign from his rectorship at Toulouse, and in 1911 it was placed on the *Index. In 1913 he issued a much revised edition with the separate title L'Eucharistie, la Présence réelle et la Transsubstantiation. His later years were mainly taken up with a history of the Church and esp. of the growth of Papal power to the time of St *Leo, of which the successive volumes were L'Église naissante et le catholicisme (1909; Eng. tr., Primitive Catholicism, 1911), La Paix constantinienne et le catholicisme (1914), Le Catholicisme de Saint Augustin (1920), and Le Siège apostolique, 359–451 (1924). In 1928 followed Saint Grégoire le Grand (Eng. tr., 1929). His writings, if not mostly of great originality, did much to encourage critical study in France and esp. to introduce to his country recent German work in patristics.

J. Rivière, Monseigneur Batiffol (1929). Id. in DHGE 6 (1932), cols. 1327–30, s.v.

Bauer, Bruno (1809–82), German theologian and historian. He was at first a conservative *Hegelian, but, after moving from Berlin to Bonn in 1839, he adopted a position even more extreme than that of D. F. *Strauss and attributed the Gospel story to the imagination, not, like Strauss, of the Christian community, but of a single mind. In 1842 he was deprived of his teaching post. The guiding principle of his many writings was a belief that the origins of Christianity were to be found in Graeco-Roman philosophy. He assigned the 'Original Gospel' to the reign of Hadrian (117–38) and the Epp. of St *Paul to that of *Marcus Aurelius (161–80). Besides his work on NT criticism, he wrote on the history of the 18th cent.

M. Kegel, Bruno Bauer und seine Theorien über die Entstehung des Christentums (Abhandlungen zur Philosophie und ihrer Geschichte, 6; 1908). E. Barnikol, Bruno Bauer: Studien und Materialien aus dem Nachlass, ed. P. Reimer and H.-M. Saas (Assen, 1972). Z. Rosen, Bruno Bauer and Karl Marx: The Influence of Bruno Bauer on Marx's Thought (The Hague, 1977). A. *Schweitzer, Geschichte der Leben-Jesu Forschung (2nd edn., 1913), pp. 141–61; J. C. O'Neill, The Bible's Authority (Edinburgh, 1991), pp. 150–66. E. Barnikol in RGG (3rd edn.), 1 (1957), cols. 922–4, s.v.; J. Mehlhausen in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 314–17, s.v.

Bäumer, Suitbert (1845–94), liturgical scholar. After studying at Bonn and *Tübingen, he took the *Benedictine habit at *Beuron in 1865. From 1875 to 1890 he was in exile at *Maredsous, through the *Kulturkampf. He wrote extensively on liturgical subjects, esp. in Der Katholik of Mainz. His chief work, Die Geschichte des Breviers (Freiburg i. B., 1895; Fr. tr. by R. Biron, 2 vols., 1905), was the fruit of long and patient researches in the principal libraries of Europe. Among its theses were the liturgical importance of St *Gregory I and the widespread influence of *Gregory VII's rite in the Papal chapel through its subsequent adoption by the *Franciscans. In his later years he collaborated closely with E. *Bishop. His other works include a Life of J. *Mabillon (1892) and a treatise on the *Apostles' Creed (1893).

U. Berlière, OSB, 'Dom Suitbert Baeumer, OSB', R. Bén. 11 (1894), pp. 481–99 (incl. list of works; pp. 497–9). R. Biron, OSB, 'Notice biographique' prefixed to his tr. of Bäumer's Geschichte des Breviers ('Histoire du bréviaire'), 1 (1905), pp. xiii–xiv. R. Proost in DACL 2 (1910), cols. 623–6, s.v.; P. Séjourné, OSB, in DHGE 6 (1932), cols. 1474–81, s.v.

Baumstark, Anton (1872–1948), Semitic scholar and liturgist. A native of Constance, he studied classical and oriental philology at Heidelberg. From 1899 to 1905 he resided at the German Campo Santo at Rome. Later he was a schoolmaster at Sassbach in Baden (1905–21); then, simultaneously, Professor at Bonn (from 1921), Nijmegen (from 1923), and Utrecht (from 1926); and from 1930 to 1935 Professor Ordinarius in Oriental Studies at Münster i. W. In 1901 he began the periodical Oriens Christianus* (3 series; to 1941) in which he published much of his best work. He was also a constant contributor to the *Maria Laach Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft (from 1921). His separate works include: Die Messe im Morgenland (1906), Festbrevier und Kirchenjahr der syrischen Jakobiten (1910), Die christlichen Literaturen des Orients (2 vols., Sammlung Göschen, 1911), Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), Die älteste erreichbare Gestalt des 'Liber sacramentorum anni circuli' der römischen Kirche (with C. Mohlberg, 1927), Liturgie comparée: Conférences faites au prieuré d'Amay (1940; 3rd edn. by B. Botte, OSB, 1953; Eng. edn. by F. L. Cross, 1958), Nocturna Laus: Typen frühchristlicher Vigilienfeier und ihr Fortleben vor allem im römischen und monastischen Ritus (posthumously ed. by O. Heiming, 1957), and Die Vorlage des althochdeutschen Tatians (ed. J. Rathofer, 1964).

Short obituary by T. Klauser in EL 63 (1949), pp. 185–7, followed by full bibl. by H. E. Killy (1894–1948; 546 items), pp. 187–207.

Baur, Ferdinand Christian (1792–1860), German Protestant theologian, founder of the *Tübingen School (q.v.). A native of Schmiden in Württemberg, he was educated at Tübingen University. From 1817 to 1826 he taught classics at Blaubeuren and in 1824–5 he published his work Symbolik und Mythologie. From 1826 until his death he taught New Testament and historical theology at Tübingen. A student of German Idealism, he was drawn to modern theology by F. D. E. *Schleiermacher's work Die christliche Glaube (1821–2), and from 1835 he was inspired by G. F. W. *Hegel's theory of historical development. This guided his theological interpretation of Die christliche Gnosis (1835), Die christliche Lehre von der Versöhnung (1838), and Die christliche Lehre von der Dreieinigkeit und Menschwerdung Gottes in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung (3 vols., 1841–3), which set a new standard in the history of doctrine. In Die Christuspartei in der korinthischen Gemeinde (1831) he recognized the fact of conflict in early Christianity and later made this the key to his understanding of early Christianity. In Die sogenannten Pastoralbriefe des Apostels Paulus (1835) he denied the Pauline authorship of the *Pastoral Epistles, dating them in the 2nd cent. on account of the historical situation they presuppose. His view of the development is clearest in his monograph on St *Paul (Paulus, der Apostel Jesu Christi, 1845; Eng. tr., 1873–5). This denied the authenticity of all the Pauline Epistles except Gal., 1 and 2 Cor., and Rom., and assigned Acts to the later 2nd cent. In 1847 he concluded his researches into the NT canon with a work on the Gospels, Kritische Untersuchungen über die kanonischen Evangelien, in which he assigned the earliest date to Mt., as representing the Judaizing party, and the latest to Jn., as depicting the final reconciliation. This last Gospel reflected the *Gnostic and *Montanist controversies of the 2nd cent. and was devoid of historical value. In his later years he devoted himself chiefly to Church history, which he carried from the beginnings of Christianity to the 19th cent., the last vols. being published posthumously. The whole picture is summarized in Das Christentum und die christliche Kirche der drei ersten Jahrhunderte (1853; Eng. tr., The Church History of the First Three Centuries, 1878–1879). Among his other writings were Lehrbuch der christlichen Dogmengeschichte (1847), his Vorlesungen über neutestamentliche Theologie (ed. by his son, F. F. Baur, 1864), and Vorlesungen über die christliche Dogmengeschichte (ed. id., 3 vols., 1865–7).

Ausgewählte Werke in Einzelausgaben, ed. K. Scholder (5 vols., Stuttgart, 1963–75). Eng. tr. of some of his writings on Church History, with introd. by P. C. Hodgson (New York, 1968), and bibl. Life by G. Frädrich (Gotha, 1909). E. Zeller, Vorträge und Abhandlungen, 1 (2nd edn., 1875), pp. 390–479 (no. 11: F. C. Baur). W. Geiger, Spekulation und Kritik: Die Geschichtstheologie Ferdinand Christian Baurs (1964). P. C. Hodgson, The Formation of Historical Theology: A Study of Ferdinand Christian Baur (New York [1966]). J. Fitzer, Möhler and Baur in Controversy, 1832–38: Romantic-Idealist Assessment of the Reformation and Counter-Reformation (American Academy of Religion Studies in Religion, 7; Tallahassee, Fla., 1974), esp. pp. 1–20 and 45–116. H. Harris, The Tübingen School (Oxford, 1975), pp. 11–54. P. Friedrich, Ferdinand Christian Baur als Symboliker (Studien zur Theologie und Geistesgeschichte des Neunzehnten Jahrhunderts, 12; 1975). E. P. Meijering, F. C. Baur als Patristiker: Die Bedeutung seiner Geschichtsphilosophie und Quellenforschung (Amsterdam, 1986). R. [C.] Morgan in N. Smart and others (eds.), Nineteenth Century Religious Thought in the West, 1 (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 261–89, with bibl. H. Schmidt and J. Haussleiter in PRE (3rd edn.), 2 (1897), pp. 467–83, with full list of Baur's writings (pp. 467–9) and bibl. (pp. 469 f.); K. Scholder in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 352–9, s.v.

Bavon, St (d. *c.*653), also called Allowin. The patron saint of the cathedral and diocese of Ghent (feast days, 1 Oct. and 1 Aug.) and of the diocese of Haarlem (feast days, 9 Aug. and 10 May).

Three Lives are printed in AASS, Oct. 1 (1765), pp. 229–53; the first, and a short extract from the third, ed. by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 4 (1902), pp. 527–46. R. Podevijn, OSB, Bavo (Bruges, 1945). M. Coens, SJ, 'S. Bavon était-il évêque?', Anal. Boll. 63 (1945), pp. 220–41, with refs.; id., 'Translations et miracles de Saint Bavon au XI[e] siècle', ibid. 86 (1968), pp. 39–66. L. van der Essen in DIIGE 7 (1934), cols. 14 f., s.v., incl. full bibl. M. Van Uytganghe in Nationaal Biografisch Woordenboek, 10 (1983), pp. 18–21, s.v. 'Bavo'.

Baxter, Richard (1615–91), *Puritan divine. Born at Rowton, Salop, he was largely self-educated. He studied first at the free school of Wroxeter, next under the nominal tutelage of Richard Wickstead, Chaplain at Ludlow Castle, and finally (1633) in London under the patronage of Sir Henry Herbert, Master of the Revels. In disgust at the frivolity of the Court he returned home to study divinity, in particular the Schoolmen. In 1634 he came into intimate contact with Joseph Symonds and Walter Cradock, two devout Nonconformist divines, who awakened his sympathies for the positive elements in dissent. In 1638 he was ordained by John Thornborough, Bp. of *Worcester, and in 1639 nominated assistant minister at Bridgnorth, where he remained for two years, increasing his knowledge of the issues between Nonconformity and the C of E. After the promulgation of the 'Et Cetera Oath' (1640) he rejected belief in episcopacy in its current English form. In 1641 he became curate of the incumbent of Kidderminster, where among a population of hand-loom workers he continued to minister with remarkable success until 1660. So far as possible he ignored the differences between Presbyterian, Episcopalian, and Independent, and secured cooperation among the local ministers in common pastoral work. In the early part of the Civil War he temporarily joined the Parliamentary Army, preaching at Alcester on the day of the Battle of Edgehill (23 Oct. 1642). A champion of moderation, he was opposed to the *Solemn League and Covenant (1643) and also disliked O. *Cromwell's religious views. After the Battle of Naseby (14 June 1645) he became Chaplain to Colonel Edward Whalley's regiment, seeking to counteract the sectaries and to curb republican tendencies. On leaving the army (1647) he retired for a time to Rous Lench, where he wrote his devotional classic, The Saints' Everlasting Rest (1650). In 1660 he played a prominent part in the recall of *Charles II; but his dissatisfaction with episcopacy led him to decline the bishopric of *Hereford. This refusal debarred him from ecclesiastical office and he was not permitted to return to Kidderminster or to hold any living. He took a prominent part at the *Savoy Conference (1661; q.v.), for which he had prepared a 'Reformed Liturgy'; here he presented the *Exceptions to the BCP. Between 1662 and the *Declaration of Indulgence of 1687 he endured persecution, suffering at the hands of the notorious Judge Jeffreys on the questionable charge of having 'libelled the Church' in his Paraphrase on the New Testament (1685). He was in sympathy with those responsible for the overthrow of *James II and readily complied with the *Toleration Act of William and Mary. He died on 8 Dec. 1691.

Baxter left nearly 200 writings. They breathe a spirit of deep unaffected piety and reflect his love of moderation. Gildas Salvianus; The Reformed Pastor (1656) illustrates the great care he took in his pastoral organization, and the Reliquiae Baxterianae (ed. Matthew Sylvester, 1696) is a long and careful autobiography. He also wrote several hymns, among them 'Ye holy angels bright' and 'He wants not friends that hath Thy love'.

The Practical Works of . . . Richard Baxter (London, 4 vols., 1707); new edn. with Life and examination of Baxter's writings by W. Orme (23 vols., 1830). Calendar of the Correspondence of Richard Baxter by N. H. Keeble and G. F. Nuttall (2 vols., Oxford, 1991). Many of his works were repr. in the 19th cent. Modern abridged edns. of The Saints' Everlasting Rest, by M. Monckton (Reunion edn. [1928]), Gildas Salvianus; the Reformed Pastor, by J. T. Wilkinson (1939) and of his autobiography, the Reliquiae Baxterianae by J. M. L. Thomas (1925; and in Everyman's Library, 1931). Chapters from a Christian Directory, selected by J. Tawney with a preface by C. *Gore (1925). F. J. Powicke (ed.), with introd. by G. Unwin, 'The Reverend Baxter's last Treatise', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 10 (1926), pp. 163–218; Various MSS in Dr Williams's Library pr. in R. Schlatter, Richard Baxter & Puritan Politics (New Brunswick, NJ [1957]). F. J. Powicke, A Life of the Reverend Richard Baxter, 1615–1691 (1924); id., The Reverend Richard Baxter Under the Cross, 1662–1691 (1927); I. Morgan, The Nonconformity of Richard Baxter (1926); G. F. Nuttall, Richard Baxter (1965); W. M. Lamont, Richard Baxter and the Millennium: Protestant Imperialism and the English Revolution (1979); N. H. Keeble, Richard Baxter: Puritan Man of Letters (Oxford, 1982). A. B. Grosart, Annotated List of the Writings of Richard Baxter (1868). N. H. Keeble, 'Richard Baxter's Preaching Ministry: its History and Texts', JEH 35 (1984), pp. 539–59, with checklist of his known sermons. J. T. Wilkinson, Richard Baxter and Margaret Charlton: A Puritan Love Story. Being the Breviate of the Life of Margaret Baxter, by Richard Baxter 1681 (1928). H. Martin, Puritanism and Richard Baxter (1954), esp. pp. 122–92. A. H. Wood, Church Unity without Uniformity: A Study of Seventeenth-Century English Church Movements and of Richard Baxter's Proposals for a Comprehensive Church (1963). A. B. Grosart in DNB 3 (1885), pp. 429–37.

Bay Psalm Book. The metrical version of the Psalms produced at Cambridge, Massachusetts (popularly known in the USA as 'Bay State'), in 1640, and the first book to be printed in British America. It was the work of a body of *Congregationalists, among them Richard Mather (1596–1669).

Z. Haraszti, The Enigma of the Bay Psalm Book (Chicago [1956]), pub. together with facsimile repr. B. F. Swan, 'Some Thoughts on the Bay Psalm Book of 1640, with a Census of Copies', Yale University Library Gazette, 22 (1948), pp. 51–176.

Bayeux Tapestry. An embroidered band of linen, 231 ft. by 20 in., preserved at Bayeux in Normandy, which depicts the Norman invasion of England and the events preceding it. It was probably made for Bp. *Odo of Bayeux for use in his cathedral. In it appear Odo himself, Abp. *Stigand, and *Edward the Confessor's *Westminster Abbey, for the architecture of which it is a valuable authority. It is also an important witness to the ecclesiastical dress of the epoch.

Complete tapestry reproduced in colour, with introd. by D. M. Wilson (London, 1985). F. M. Stenton (ed.), The Bayeux Tapestry (1957; 2nd edn., 1965); D. J. Bernstein, The Mystery of the Bayeux Tapestry (1986).

Bayle, Pierre (1647–1706), sceptical writer. The son of a French Protestant minister, he became professor of philosophy and history at Rotterdam in 1681. In his Pensées diverses sur le comète (1683) he argued inter alia that, religion and morality being independent of one another, all the private and social virtues may be equally practised by atheists. By such views, and by his championship of universal toleration in his Commentaire philosophique sur ces paroles de Jésus-Christ: 'Contrains-les d'entrer' (1686–8; written in connection with the revocation of the Edict of *Nantes), he incurred the antagonism of influential French Protestants, and was deprived of his chair in 1693. His most famous work was his Dictionnaire historique et critique (1695–7; 2nd edition, enlarged, 1702). His accuracy, encyclopaedic knowledge, and sceptical temper made his work invaluable to the anti-Christian *Deists and philosophes of the 18th cent., both in France and in England, but his own religious position seems to have been one of *fideism within the French Reformed Church.

His Œuvres diverses (4 vols. in 5 parts, The Hague, 1725–31; 2nd edn., ibid., 1737) contains letters and all his works except the Dictionnaire. Further letters ed. E. Gigas (Copenhagen, 1890). Life by P. Des Maizeaux prefixed to Dictionnaire historique et critique, 1 (4th edn., 1730), pp. xvii–cviii, issued separately (2 vols., 1732). Studies by L. A. *Feuerbach (Ansbach, 1838; 2nd edn., Leipzig, 1844), J. Delvolé (Paris, 1906), C. Serrurier (Lausanne, 1912), H. Robinson (New York, 1931), ed. P. Dibon (Paris, 1959), É. Labrousse (2 vols., The Hague, 1963–4; also, more briefly in the series 'Past Masters', Oxford, 1983), and W. Rex (The Hague, 1965). H. T. Mason, Pierre Bayle and Voltaire (Oxford, 1963); P. Rétat, Le Dictionnaire de Bayle et la lutte philosophique au XVIII^e siècle (1971); R. Whelan, The Anatomy of superstition: A study of the historical theory and practice of Pierre Bayle (Studies on Voltaire and the eighteenth century, 259; Oxford, 1989).

Bayly, Lewis (d. 1631), the author of The Practice of Piety. He was educated at Oxford, probably at Exeter College, and became chaplain to Henry, Prince of Wales. His *Puritan opinions gave offence at court; but he returned to favour and in 1616 became chaplain to *James I and later in the year Bp. of *Bangor. As a bishop, his opinions again made him unpopular; continual trouble with the Council led to his imprisonment in the Fleet (1621); and his laxity in ecclesiastical discipline was attacked constantly until his death. His Practice of Piety (3rd edn., 1613; the date of its original publication is not known) enjoyed remarkable popularity, esp. among the Puritans, and was translated into several languages; John *Bunyan regarded it as a great influence in his life.

Biog. Preface (inaccurate) by G. Webster to the 1842 edn. of Bayly's Practice of Piety. J. E. Bailey, 'Bishop Lewis Bayly and his "Practice of Piety" ', Manchester Quarterly, 2 (1883), pp. 221–39, repr. separately, 1883. M. Schmidt, 'Eigenart und Bedeutung der Eschatologie im englischen Puritanismus', Theologia Viatorum: Jahrbuch der Kirchlichen Hochschule, Berlin, 4 (for 1952; 1953), pp. 205–66, esp. pp. 224–51. T. F. Tout in DNB 3 (1885), pp. 448 f.

BCMS (Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society). A society formed out of the *CMS when a group broke away from the parent body in 1922 in order to assert its fidelity to the traditional doctrines of the Evangelical party (in particular, to the belief in the complete inerrancy of the Scriptures), as opposed to any reinterpretation or alteration of emphasis adopted by *Liberal Evangelicals.

W. S. Hooton and J. Stafford Wright, The First Twenty-Five Years of the Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society, 1922–47 (1947).

bead (Mid. Eng. 'bede'). Originally the word meant a prayer (cf. Ger. beten, 'to pray'), but later it was transferred to the small spherical bodies used for 'telling beads' (i.e. counting the beads of a *rosary), and hence also applied, e.g., to the parts of a necklace. 'To bid a bead' thus means 'to offer a prayer'. See also BIDDING PRAYER.

beadle. In the Church of Scotland an official appointed by the *session to care for the place of worship and to perform other similar functions. He is subject to the minister for direction in his duties, and hence used frequently to be known as 'the minister's man'. One of his most conspicuous tasks is to bear the books to the pulpit before divine service begins. In the newer branches of Presbyterianism he is generally called by the ambiguous title 'church officer'.

beard. See BEARDS, CLERICAL.

Beard, Charles (1827–88), *Unitarian divine. From 1867 he was in charge of Renshaw Street chapel, Liverpool, and from 1864 to 1879 was editor of the Theological Review. Besides some fine sermons and addresses, he published several historical works. Of these the best known is his series of Hibbert Lectures for 1883, The Reformation in its relation to Modern Thought and Knowledge, in which, in accordance with his own sympathies, he stressed the humanistic, as against the more definitely theological, aspects of the Reformers' work.

Study in H. McLachlan, Records of a Family, 1800–1933 (Publications of the University of Manchester, no. 239; 1935), pp. 36–75. A. Gordon in DNB, Suppl. 1 (1901), pp. 154 f.

beards, clerical. The wearing of beards by clerics has remained the practice of the E. Church since apostolic times. From the 5th cent. onwards, however, largely under monastic influence, W. clerics adopted the practice of being clean-shaven, and at the time of *Photius, the beardlessness of the W. clergy became one of the points of controversy between E. and W. From the 12th cent. a long series of prohibitions were issued by W. Councils against clerics wearing beards, but in the 15th cent. they widely came in again under the influence of secular fashion, being worn, e.g., by 16th- and 17th-cent. Popes. They are still worn by *Capuchins.

The Apologia de Barbis, apparently by the *Cistercian Abbot Burchard of Bellevaux (d. 1163/5), was ed. by R. B. C. Huygens, Apologiae Duae (CCCM 62; 1985), pp. 130–224, with introd. on beards in the Middle Ages by G. Constable, pp. 47–130. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 2 (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 478–93, s.v. 'Barbe'; H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 2 (1907), p. 363, s.v.

Beatific Vision. The vision of the Divine Being in heaven which, acc. to Christian theology, is the final destiny of the redeemed. Its nature and conditions were a subject of much dispute in the later Middle Ages. *Benedict XII (1336) formally defined that the Divine Essence would be seen by direct intuition and face to face (visione intuitiva et etiam faciali), while against the Beghards and *Beguines the Council of *Vienne of 1311 laid down that it transcended man's natural capacities and hence was supernatural, and that it was through the Divine gift of the 'light of glory' (lumen gloriae) that it was made accessible to him. Whereas its primary object is the vision of the Divine Essence itself, it is held that the vision also extends in a secondary and complementary sense to cover all that the blessed may have a reasonable interest in knowing. Acc. to some theologians the vision is bestowed in exceptional circumstances for brief periods in this life, e.g. St *Thomas Aquinas held that it was granted to *Moses (Ex. 34: 28–35) and St *Paul (2 Cor. 12: 2–4).

C. Trottmann, La Vision Béatifique: Des disputes scolastiques à sa définition par Benoît XII (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 289; 1995).

beatification. In the RC Church, the act by which the Pope permits the public veneration after his death of some faithful Catholic in parts of the Church. Before the 12th cent., and less generally from that date to the 17th cent., it was customary for local bishops to beatify people for their own dioceses. A person who has been beatified receives the title of 'Blessed'. Although the CIC (1983), can. 1187, distinguishes the Blessed from the Saints, there are indications that, at least in its present form, beatification may not survive. Normally one attested *miracle is required for beatification. In the Russian Church there is a similar process, though not bearing the same name, for authorizing the local cult of deceased Christians. See also CANONIZATION.

*Benedict XIV, De Servorum Dei Beatificatione et de Beatorum Canonizatione (Bonn, 4 vols. bound in 5, 1734–8), passim. On current procedures, A. Casieri, Postulatorum Vademecum (Studium Pro Causis Sanctorum Congregationis; 2nd edn., Rome, 1985). G. Löw, CSSR, in EC 2 (1949), cols. 1090–6, s.v. 'Beatificazione'. See also bibl. to CANONIZATION.

beating of the bounds. A ceremony common in medieval England, and associated with the *Rogationtide procession round the parish. When written maps, showing parish boundaries, were hardly known, this annual perambulation was a means of impressing these limits on the minds of the young. The bounds were solemnly beaten with willow rods, and on occasion boys of the parish were also beaten or bumped on the ground at the boundary. The custom is known to date back to the end of the 9th or beginning of the 10th cent., and lasted long after the religious part of the procession was abolished under *Elizabeth I. In modern times it has been revived in some parishes.

The *Injunctions of Elizabeth I (no. 18). J. H. MacMichael, 'Beating the Bounds: Its Origin', Notes and Queries, 10th ser. 2 (1904), pp. 113 f., with short bibl. Further bibl. by J. T. Page, ibid. 3 (1905), pp. 390 f., and by G. Potter, ibid. 4 (1905), p. 31.

Beatitudes, the. Christ's promises of coming blessings in the '*Sermon on the Mount' (Mt. 5: 3–11) and the 'Sermon on the Plain' (Lk. 6: 20–2). In Mt. there are eight (or nine) blessings, applicable to all, whereas in Lk. there are four blessings, spoken to the disciples, followed by four 'Woes'. The Beatitudes have formal analogies in the OT (e.g. Is. 32: 20, Ps. 1: 1) and elsewhere in the NT (e.g. Lk. 12: 37, Mt. 13: 16). In Lk. their content refers to external conditions, in Mt. more to the moral and spiritual qualities of Christian discipleship. The sixth, on purity of heart, has had a particular influence on the mystical tradition.

J. Dupont, OSB, Les Béatitudes: Le problème littéraire, le message doctrinal (Louvain, 1954; 2nd edn. of chs. 1–2: Les Béatitudes, vol. 1: Le problème littéraire: les deux versions du Sermon sur la montagne et des Béatitudes, 1958; of ch. 3 as Les Béatitudes, vol. 2: La bonne nouvelle, 1969; of chs. 4–5 as Les Béatitudes, vol. 3: Les Évangélistes, 1973), with bibl. See also bibl. to SERMON ON THE MOUNT and comm. to MATTHEW and LUKE, GOSPELS OF, cited s.vv.

Beatitudes, Mount of the. The name traditionally given to the place where the *Sermon on the Mount is believed to have been delivered (cf. Mt. 5: 1). It has been identified since Crusading times with the mountain Karn Hattin, W. of the Sea of *Galilee.

Beaton (or Bethune), David (*c.*1494–1546), Cardinal Abp. of St Andrews. He became Abbot of Arbroath in 1523, and was sent by James V on various missions to France. In 1529 he became Keeper of the Privy Seal, Cardinal in 1538, and succeeded his uncle as Abp. of St Andrews in 1539. On the death of James (1542) he made a bid for the regency, and in spite of his failure to secure it, acquired considerable influence over his successful competitor, the Earl of Arran. It was largely through his influence that the English plans for the subjugation of Scotland were defeated; but after his death his countrymen preferred to remember and exaggerate his actions as a persecutor, and in particular his trial and condemnation of the propagandist G. *Wishart, whose zeal for the Reformation seems to have been involved with political plottings and designs on the Cardinal's life. He was assassinated by John Leslie at St Andrews on 29 May 1546.

R. K. Hannay (ed.), Rentale Sancti Andree, being the Chamberlain and Granitar Accounts of the Archbishopric in the Time of Cardinal Betoun, 1538–1546 (Scottish History Society, 2nd ser. 4; 1913). The main sources for his life are J. *Knox's History of the Reformation, Bk. 1, passim, and J. *Spottiswoode, History of the Church of Scotland (1847–51 edn.), 1, pp. 134–65. M. H. B. Sanderson, Cardinal of Scotland: David Beaton, c.1494–1546 (Edinburgh [1986]). M. MacArthur in DNB 4 (1885), pp. 17 f. See also works on the Scottish Reformation cited s.v. SCOTLAND, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Beauduin, Lambert (1873–1960), Belgian liturgist and founder of *Chevetogne. After ordination in 1897, he worked with a society of priests devoted to the care of working men and in 1906 entered the *Benedictine Abbey of Mont-César at Louvain. Here he took part in the organization of Liturgical Weeks in 1909, established the periodical La Vie liturgique (since 1911 Les Questions liturgiques), and wrote La Piété de l'Église (1914), which popularized the aims of the *Liturgical Movement. In 1921 he was sent to the Anselmo in Rome and became interested in E. liturgy. After Pope *Pius XI had urged that Benedictines should pray for Christian unity (Equidem verba, 21 March 1924), Dom Beauduin founded a monastery of Union at Amay-sur-Meuse (see CHEVETOGNE). He attended Cardinal *Mercier at the *Malines Conversations and in a report to him expressed the desire that the Anglican Church should be 'united to Rome, not absorbed'

('unie non absorbée'). When this phrase was published considerable criticism was directed against him. In 1928 he had to leave Amay and in 1930 he was condemned by a Roman tribunal. His preaching in 1942 was one of the factors leading to the establishment of the Centre de Pastorale Liturgique in Paris. In 1950 he was able to return to his community, now at Chevetogne. The validity of his approach to questions of reunion was recognized by Pope *John XXIII.

Beauduin's memorandum on 'L'Église Anglicane unie non absorbée' is pr. in The Conversations at Malines 1912–1925: Original Documents, ed. Lord Halifax (1930), pp. 241–61; Eng. tr. in G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), Documents on Christian Unity, 3rd ser. 1930–48 (1948), pp. 21–32 (no. 149). Lives by L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat. (Tournai, 1964) and S. A. Quitslund (New York, 1973). Veilleur avant l'Aurore: Colloque Lambert Beauduin [held at Chevetogne, 30 Aug.–3 Sept. 1976] (Chevetogne, 1978). M. Cappuyns, OSB, 'Dom Lambert Beauduin (1873–1960). Quelques Documents et Souvenirs', RHE 61 (1966), pp. 424–54 and 761–807. A. Haquin, 'L'Exile de dom Lambert Beauduin au monastère d'En-Calcat (1932–1934)', ibid. 80 (1985), pp. 51–99 and 415–40.

Beaufort, Henry (c. 1375–1447), Cardinal and Bp. of *Lincoln and *Winchester. He was born at Beaufort, Anjou, the son of John of Gaunt and Catherine Swynford. His parents having been married in 1396, he was declared legitimate in 1397. He was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, and at Queen's College, Oxford. After holding various benefices, incl. a prebend at Lincoln from 1389, he became Dean of *Wells in 1396 and in the following year Chancellor of the University of Oxford. In 1398 he was provided to the see of Lincoln. In 1403 he became Chancellor until he was translated to Winchester in 1404, succeeding *William of Wykeham. During most of the reign of Henry IV, however, he supported the party of the Prince of Wales in opposition to the King and Abp. *Arundel. In 1407 he was declared debarred from the succession. With the accession of Henry V in 1413 he was appointed Chancellor, but resigned in 1417, ostensibly to go on pilgrimage. On the way he attended the Council of *Constance. Here he was largely responsible for the election of Oddo Colonna as *Martin V, who issued a bull creating him Cardinal and legatus a latere and prob. granted him permission to hold the see of Winchester in commendam for life. Henry V, however, prevented him from accepting these favours. Appointed in 1421 as one of the guardians of Henry VI, he became Chancellor in 1424 and virtually ruled the realm for the next two years. After a serious quarrel with the Duke of Gloucester, he sought leave to go on pilgrimage again in 1426. In the same year he accepted a cardinalate, and led an unsuccessful expedition against the *Hussites; but his new office, which rendered his position ambiguous, made him very unpopular in England. In spite, however, of continued attacks by the Duke of Gloucester, esp. in 1439, he played a considerable part in foreign policy, being present at the Council of Arras in 1435 and the subsequent negotiations. He also took part in the trial of *Joan of Arc. After the fall of Gloucester (1441) his party was left supreme, but he personally seems to have taken little further part in politics. He died at Wolvesey Palace on Palm Sunday, 1447.

At Winchester Beaufort completed the transformation of the nave of the Cathedral, and greatly extended the Hospital of St Cross. But he stands out by his financial ability and shrewd statesmanship rather than as a Churchman. By lending money to the King at opportune moments and high rates of (disguised) interest, he amassed a fortune which made his support indispensable to the government. In general he upheld the ideals of constitutional government and strove for peace.

G. L. Harriss, Cardinal Beaufort: A Study of Lancastrian Ascendancy and Decline (Oxford, 1988), with full bibl. BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 139–42; BRUC, pp. 46–9, s.v.

Beaufort, Margaret. See MARGARET, LADY.

Beaulieu, Abbey of. This *Cistercian abbey in Hampshire was founded and endowed in 1204 by King *John for 30 monks from *Cîteaux, and dedicated in 1246 in the presence of Henry III and his queen, Eleanor. The abbey was from the first 'exempted' by *Innocent III, with right of sanctuary, which was sought by Ann Neville, wife of Warwick the King-Maker, Perkin Warbeck, and others. At the time of the suppression (1539) there were 32 sanctuary-men with their wives and families within the precincts. Among the portions still standing are the Early English refectory (now used as the parish church), the gatehouse (now a private residence), the guesthouse dormitory, and parts of the cloisters and chapter house. Beaulieu (Bellus locus) has preserved its original Norman-French pronunciation of 'Bewley'.

W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 5 (1825 edn.), pp. 680–4. W. J. St John Hope and H. Breakspear, 'The Cistercian Abbey of Beaulieu', Archaeological Journal, 63 (1906), pp. 130–86. J. K. Fowler, A History of Beaulieu Abbey A.D. 1204–1539 [1911]. J. C. Cox in VCH, Hampshire and the Isle of Wight, ed. H. A. Doubleday and W. Page, 2 (1903), pp. 140–6.

Bec, Abbey of. This celebrated Norman abbey, situated between *Rouen and *Lisieux, was founded by Bl Herluin (feast day, 26 Aug.) and consecrated by Mauger, Abp. of Rouen and uncle of William the Conqueror, in 1041. In 1060 it was rebuilt on a much larger scale. Its notable monks included *Lanfranc (Prior, c.1045–63; later Abp. of *Canterbury), St *Anselm (Prior, 1063–78; Abbot, 1078–93; also later Abp. of Canterbury); Gundulf (Bp. of *Rochester, 1077–1108), Ernulf (also Bp. of Rochester, 1114–24), and Gilbert Crispin (Abbot of *Westminster, 1085–1117). It long enjoyed royal patronage and was visited by Henry I (1106) and Henry II (1152, 1159, 1178), kings of England. A fire in 1263 destroyed most of the abbey; the new church built soon afterwards lasted until the 19th cent. In 1467 the Tour St Nicholas, still extant, was constructed. After the concordat between Francis I and *Leo X in 1516, the government of the abbey passed into the hands of *commendatory abbots. In 1626 it was taken over and largely rebuilt by the *Maurists. It was suppressed in 1790 and partly demolished from 1810 onwards. In the latter part of the 19th cent. the buildings attracted the interest of historians and in 1948 the Benedictine life (*Olivetan Congregation) was re-established. The abbey at one time had considerable property in England (cf. Tooting Bec); and the modern community actively promotes religious relations between France and England.

M. P. Dickson, OSB (ed.), Consuetudines Beccenses (Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, 4; Siegburg, 1967). Gilbert Crispin's 'Life of Herluin', ed. J. A. *Robinson, Gilbert Crispin, Abbot of Westminster (Cambridge, 1911), pp. 87–110. A. A. Porée, Histoire de l'abbaye du Bec (2 vols., Évreux, 1901). Select Documents of the English Lands of the Abbey of Bec, ed. M. Chibnall (Camden Society, 3rd ser. 73; 1951). M. [McC.] Morgan, The English Lands of the Abbey of Bec (Oxford Historical Series; Oxford, 1946). J. de La Varende, L'Abbaye du Bec-Hellouin: vingt-quatre photographies de J. M. Marcel (Paris, 1951). L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire Topo-Bibliographique des Abbayes et Prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 316–19. P. Cousin in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 209–11, s.v., with further bibl.

Becket, St Thomas (?1120–70), Abp. of *Canterbury. A son of Normans who had settled in London, Thomas was educated at Merton Priory (Surrey), at a school in London, and in *Paris, where *Robert of Melun may have been among his teachers; but he was never a great scholar. By 1146 he was a member of the household of *Theobald, Abp. of Canterbury, who sent him to study law at *Bologna and Auxerre and, after ordaining him deacon, appointed him Archdeacon of Canterbury in 1154. In 1155 Henry II made him his Chancellor, and his influence was enhanced by an intimate friendship with the King. He liked hunting and the display of pomp, and during a military expedition to France took a personal part in the fighting. His policy as Chancellor was generally in harmony with the wishes of the King, often against the interests of the Church; and when, in 1162, he was elected Abp. of Canterbury at the instigation of the King, he accepted the office with reluctance, knowing a break to be inevitable.

From now on Becket championed his own rights and those of his archbishopric and of the Church with surprising determination. He resigned the chancellorship, and disputes with the King, crucially over how criminous clerks should be tried and punished, led Henry in 1163 to require the bishops to sanction the 'ancient customs of the kingdom'. When a code of these customs, the 'Constitutions of *Clarendon', was promulgated in 1164, Becket was forced to submit, an act of which he soon repented. Henry, therefore, began to persecute him because of his 'ingratitude', required him to account for money he had received when Chancellor, and charged him with breaking his promise to observe the Constitutions. His trial and condemnation in the royal court at Northampton in October led him to flee to France and appeal for justice to *Alexander III, then at Sens. During the following negotiations between the Pope, Henry, and the Archbishop, Thomas stayed at first at the *Cistercian abbey of Pontigny in Burgundy, and when the King threatened to expel all Cistercians from his dominions (1166), he moved to the *Benedictine abbey of Ste-Colombe at Sens, which was under the special protection of the French King. After he had issued sentences of excommunication against some bishops and royal servants in 1166 and 1169, he made peace unexpectedly with Henry at Fréteval in July 1170. The King promised to make amends for the coronation of his son by the Abp. of *York (Roger of Pont-l'Évêque), a flagrant infringement of the prerogatives of Canterbury, while Thomas sent Papal letters of suspension to the bishops who had assisted at the ceremony.

Becket crossed to England on 30 Nov., where he was received with popular enthusiasm. He refused, however, to absolve the bishops, unless they would swear to accept penalties which the Pope would impose. Henry, naturally furious, uttered some words in a fit of rage which were enough to inspire four knights (Hugh de Morville, William de Tracy, Reginald Fitz-Urse, Richard le Breton) to make their way to Canterbury in revenge. Becket was assassinated in his cathedral in the late afternoon of 29 Dec. 1170.

The murder provoked great indignation throughout Europe. Miracles were soon recorded at Becket's tomb and a widespread cultus developed. On 21 Feb. 1173 he was canonized by Alexander III and on 12 July 1174 Henry did public penance at the shrine. Becket's remains were translated to their place in the choir (the 'Trinity Chapel') in 1220 and until the destruction of the shrine under Henry VIII (1538) it remained one of the principal pilgrimage centres of Christendom. Feast day, 29 Dec.; of his translation, 7 July.

J. C. Robertson and J. B. Sheppard, Materials for the History of Thomas Becket (RS, 7 vols., 1875–85); The Life and Death of Thomas Becket . . . based on the account of William fitzStephen his clerk, with additions from other contemporary sources, tr. and ed. G. Greenaway (Folio Society, 1961). A. Duggan, Thomas Becket: A Textual History of his Letters (Oxford, 1980); an edn. of the letters is in preparation.

F. Barlow, Thomas Becket [1986]. Earlier works include W. H. *Hutton, Thomas Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury (1910; rev. edn., 1926); E. Walberg, La Tradition hagiographique de Saint Thomas Becket avant la fin du XII^e siècle: Études critiques (1929); R. Foreville, L'Église et la royauté en Angleterre sous Henri II Plantagenet, 1154–1189 (1943); id., Le Jubilé de Saint Thomas Becket du XIII^e au XV^e siècle (1220–1470): Étude et documents (1958); [M.] D. *Knowles, Thomas Becket (1970), and other works of this author; B. Smalley, The Becket Conflict and the Schools (Oxford, 1973), esp. pp. 109–37. Thomas Becket: Actes du Colloque International de Sédières, 19–24 Août 1973, ed. R. Foreville (1975). Dramatic interpretation in T. S. *Eliot, Murder in the Cathedral (1935). M. D. Knowles in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 212–14, s.v.

Becon, Thomas (*c.*1511–67), Protestant Reformer. A native of Norfolk, he was educated at St John's College, Cambridge, where he came under the influence of *H. Latimer. He was ordained priest in 1538. He was arrested for preaching Protestant doctrines and forced to recant in 1541 and again in 1543, when he publicly destroyed his writings. At this time he lived as a layman in Kent, publishing under the pseudonym of Theodore Basil. Travelling around the country until the accession of *Edward VI (1547), he then became chaplain to Lord Protector *Somerset and to Abp. T. *Cranmer, who made him one of the *Six Preachers at *Canterbury. He was presented to the living of St Stephen Walbrook in London. Losing all preferment on *Mary's accession (1553), he was imprisoned for allegedly seditious preaching and on his release went to Strasbourg (1554) and Frankfurt (1555) and then seems to have taught at *Marburg University (1556–9). On his return to England under *Elizabeth I, he was installed as a canon of Canterbury Cathedral in 1559 and given other preferment.

Becon's prolific, lively and usually polemical writings enjoyed wide popularity. Until his exile, he remained more influenced by *Lutheranism than most English Reformers, but he was also an early opponent of images. He contributed the sermon 'Against Whoredom and Uncleanness' (usually known as the 'Homily against Adultery') to the 'Book of *Homilies' and may have assisted Cranmer in his controversial writings. His numerous other works include The Jewel of Joy (prob. written 1547–8; earliest extant copy perhaps 1550), and The Sick Man's Salve (composed before 1553; entered on the Stationers' Register, 1558–9). He revised and republished his works in a folio edition (3 vols., 1560–4), in which his New Catechism appeared for the first time.

Modern edn. of most of his works by J. Ayre (*Parker Society, 3 vols., 1843–4). D. S. Bailey, Thomas Becon and the Reformation of the Church in England (1952).

Beda, the ('Collegio Beda'). The college at Rome where English candidates for the RC priesthood who have discovered their vocation late in life, including converts from non-Roman ministries who wish to be ordained in the RC Church, are trained.

J. J. Curtin in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 215 f., s.v.

bede (prayer). See BEAD.

Bede, St (*c.*673–735), 'The Venerable', pedagogue, computist, biblical exegete, hagiographer, and historian, the foremost and most influential scholar from Anglo-Saxon England. The course of his uneventful life is known from the brief notice which he himself gave in the last chapter of his Historia Ecclesiastica: at the age of 7 he was given as an *oblate to the newly-founded monastery of *Wearmouth under the care of St *Benedict Biscop and subsequently, on the foundation of Jarrow in 682, was transferred to that abbey and to its abbot, Ceolfrith. Except for brief excursions to *Lindisfarne and *York, Bede spent the remainder of his life at Jarrow, devoting himself to reading, teaching, and the explication of Scripture. He was ordained deacon at the age of 19 and priested when he was 30; he died at Jarrow aged over 60.

Bede's pedagogical writings include treatises De Orthographia, an alphabetically arranged glossary of Latin words which are capable of confusion or misunderstanding by beginners; De Arte Metrica, a lucid account of the principles underlying quantitative verse, based on Late Latin grammatical treatises but including many quotations from Christian Latin poets; and De Natura Rerum, a cursory exposition of natural phenomena such as the motion of the planets, eclipses, tides, etc., based mainly on *Isidore and Pliny. Each of these pedagogical treatises survives in large numbers of manuscripts, indicating that they constituted an essential ingredient of the medieval curriculum. His computistical writings were equally influential. They include an early work, the De Temporibus, written to explain to his students the principles for the calculation of *Easter acc. to the Roman usage adopted by the Synod of *Whitby (664). This work was so highly compressed, however, that Bede later produced a longer and more discursive account of Paschal reckoning in his De Temporum Ratione (written in 725), and this work, which survives in some 250 manuscripts, proved to be the most widely studied computistical manual of the Middle Ages. Bede's pedagogical instincts were, however, best applied to the explication of Scripture. For his biblical exegesis he used both the *Vulgate and the *Old Latin texts as well as (for Acts) the Greek text. His commentaries were largely based on the writings of St *Augustine, St *Jerome, St *Ambrose, and St *Gregory the Great, but they also embodied original comment: they were motivated above all by concern with clarity of exposition, and it was this concern which commended them to his contemporaries and successors. His commentaries include works on Gen. 1–20, Exod. 24: 12–30: 21, Sam., Kgs., Tobit, Song of Songs, Ez. and Neh., Mk., Lk., Acts, the *Catholic Epistles, and Rev. Bede's interest in hagiography is reflected in the extensive revision which he made of the *Hieronymian Martyrologium (his revision does not survive in its pristine form) as well as in the prose Vita S. Felicis, a recasting of various poems by *Paulinus of Nola on St Felix. But it was his two Lives of St *Cuthbert—one in verse and a later one in prose (*c.*721)—which secured Bede's reputation as a hagiographer and the establishment of the cult of St Cuthbert throughout Europe. Whereas during the Middle Ages Bede was widely known for all facets of his scholarly work, he is best known today as a historian; indeed he has been called the 'Father of English History'. His early interest in computus led him naturally to the study of chronology: to each of his major computistical treatises he appended a set of annals recording the history of the world from creation to his own day. The study of chronology culminated in the Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Anglorum (completed in 731), one of the great works of medieval historiography and the single most important source for our understanding of early England.

To the end of his life Bede was occupied in teaching and expounding Scripture, as we learn from an eyewitness account of his last days by a devoted student (the Epistula Cuthberti de obitu Bedae). In a letter written towards the end of his life and addressed to *Egbert (Abp of *York, 732–66) he emphasized the importance of episcopal visitation, Confirmation, and frequent Communion as the remedy for the ills of the time. Less than a century after his death he was honoured with the title of Venerable, and in the 11th cent. his bones were translated to *Durham; a conspicuous tomb in the cathedral still commemorates him. In 1899 *Leo XIII declared him a '*Doctor of the Church'. Feast day, 25 (formerly 27) May.

Collected Works pub. in 3 vols., Paris, 1521–36, also ed., with Eng. tr., by J. A. Giles (12 vols., London, 1843–4); Lat. text repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 90–5. Crit. edn. in CCSL 118–23 (1955 ff. incl. his biblical comms. except that on Rev.). Other edns. of his Opera Historica by C. Plummer (with notes, Oxford, 1896) and of his Historia Ecclesiastica, with Eng. tr., by B. Colgrave and R. A. B. Mynors (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1969; historical comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, ibid., 1988); of his prose Life of St Cuthbert, with Eng. tr., by B. Colgrave, Two Lives of St Cuthbert (Cambridge, 1940; repr. 1985), pp. 142–307 and 341–59; of his metrical Life of St Cuthbert by W. Jaager (Palaestra, 198; 1935); of his Expositio Actuum Apostolorum et Retractatio, by M. L. W. Laistner (Mediaeval Academy of America, Publication 35; 1939; repr. in CCSL 121, pp. 1–178); and of his Opera de Temporibus, by C. W. Jones (Mediaeval Academy of America, Publication, 41; 1943; text repr., with glosses from a MS written in 873/4, in CCSL 123, pp. 263–460). M. L. W. Laistner and H. H. King, A Hand-List of Bede Manuscripts (New York, 1943), C. W. Jones, Bedae Pseudepigrapha: Scientific Writings Falsely Attributed to Bede (1939). A. H. Thompson (ed.), Bede: His Life, Times and Writings. Essays in Commemoration of the Twelfth Centenary of his Death (Oxford, 1935); three essays by B. *Capelle, OSB, M. Inguanez, OSB, and Beda Thum, OSB, S. Beda Venerabilis (Studia Anselmiana, 6; 1936); G. [I.] Bonner (ed.), Famulus Christi: Essays in Commemoration of the Thirteenth Centenary of the Birth of the Venerable Bede (1976). G. H. Brown, Bede the Venerable (1987). P. H. Blair, The World of Bede (1970). J. Campbell, Essays in Anglo-Saxon History (1986), pp. 1–48 and 85–119 [repr. four items orig. pub. between 1966 and 1979, with additional notes]. Various Jarrow lectures are devoted to Bede. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 444–58 (nos. 1343–84) and pp. 737 f. (nos. 2318–2323b). I. Cecchetti in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 2 (Rome, 1962), cols. 1006–1072, s.v. 'Beda', with extensive refs.

Bedlam (= 'Bethlehem'). Originally the name given to the 'Hospital of St Mary of Bethlehem', in Bishopsgate, which the Sheriff of London founded in 1247 for the housing of the clergy of St Mary of Bethlehem when they visited Britain. It is uncertain when insane persons were first received here, but the house is mentioned as a hospital for the sick in 1330 and lunatics are definitely stated to have been there in 1402. On the *dissolution of the monasteries it passed to the London civic authorities, and in 1547 became a royal foundation for the reception of lunatics. Its place was taken in 1675 by a new hospital in Moorfields, and this again was transferred to the Lambeth Road in 1815. By an extension in meaning, the word 'Bedlam' has come to be applied to any lunatic asylum or any scene of disorder within doors.

R. M. Clay, The Medieval Hospitals of England ('The Antiquary's Books'; 1909), pp. 32–4, 210, and 238. E. G. O'Donoghue, The Story of Bethlehem Hospital from its Foundation in 1247 (1914).

Beecher, Lyman (1775–1863), American Protestant minister. Born in New Haven, Connecticut, he went to Yale University, where he came under the influence of its first president, Timothy Dwight (1752–1817) and the spirit of *revivalism which led to the Second *Great Awakening. He became pastor of *Presbyterian churches in East Hampton, Long Island (1799) and Cincinnati, Ohio (1832) and of *Congregational churches in Litchfield, Connecticut (1810) and Boston, Massachusetts (1810). In Cincinnati he was also President of the newly founded Lane Theological Seminary (1832–50). A major figure in American evangelical Protestantism in the period before the Civil War, Beecher was a leader in revivals (at first he opposed C. G. *Finney and his 'new measures' but came to accept him), a committed advocate of social reform (the *temperance movement, women's suffrage, anti-*slavery), and a staunch opponent of *Unitarianism and RCism. At one time a defender of the *established Church (Congregational in Connecticut and Massachusetts), he came to recognize that disestablishment, fully realized in 1833, offered a great opportunity for the Churches. His Plea for the West (1835) was a recognition of the importance of the mid-west for the future of the nation, as well as an outspoken tract against imagined plots of the RC Church and European monarchies to control or influence the mid-western territories. In 1835 he was tried for heresy, but acquitted by his *presbytery and synod. His seven sons entered the ministry, and one of his daughters, Mrs Harriet Beecher Stowe, was the author of Uncle Tom's Cabin (1852). The Lyman Beecher Lectures on Preaching at Yale were established in 1871.

His Autobiography, with Correspondence, ed. by C. Beecher [son] (2 vols., New York, 1864–5), also ed. B. M. Cross (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1961). M. Caskey, Chariot of Fire: Religion and the Beecher Family (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1978), pp. 3–67. J. W. Fraser, Pedagogue for God's Kingdom: Lyman Beecher and the Second Great Awakening (Langham, Md., etc. [1985]).

Beelzebub. The name applied to 'the prince of devils' in the Gospels, where Christ's enemies accuse Him of 'casting out devils by Beelzebub' (Mk. 3: 22–6; cf. Mt. 12: 24–8, Lk. 11: 15–20), i.e. of acting by the power of, or of being an agent of, the evil one (cf. Mt. 10: 25), not of God. It is this direct and deliberate calling of good 'evil' which leads to the Lord's words on the sin that 'hath never forgiveness' (Mk. 3: 29, etc.).

In all the Gk. MSS of the Gospels the form is 'Beelzebul' (Βεελζεβούλ); the form 'Beelzebub' is due to the influence of the OT, where 'Baal-zebub' is the god of the Philistine city of Ekron mentioned in 2 Kgs. 1. Neither name is found elsewhere in the Bible or in contemporary sources, Jewish or pagan. 'Baal-zebub' appears to mean in Heb. 'lord of flies' and the word is so explained by ancient commentators; but the exact connection between this and the 'Beelzebul' evidently current in *Galilee in the time of Christ and regarded as practically equivalent to '*Satan' (Mk. 3: 23), is uncertain. 'Beelzebul' is variously regarded as (1) a mere corruption in pronunciation of 'Baal-zebub', possibly influenced by an *Aramaic word meaning 'enmity', which suggested the use of this OT name for the arch-fiend; (2) derived from a Heb. word meaning 'dung', i.e. 'lord of filth'; or (3) derived from an uncommon Hebrew word for house or mansion, i.e. 'lord of the underworld'. This last suggestion, though it would give added point to the references to 'a house divided' and 'the strong man's house' in the Gospel passages (cf. 'master of the house', Mt. 10: 25), seems etymologically very improbable. The *Mishnah contains one reference to Beelzebub, understood as 'fly-god'. From the general absence of other references from Jewish literature it would seem that the term was of only local or temporary currency.

A. *Loisy, 'Béelzeboul', Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature Religieuses, 9 (1904), pp. 434–66; W. E. M. Aitken, 'Beelzebul', Journal of Biblical Literature, 31 (1912), pp. 34–53. M. Limbeck, 'Beelzebul—eine ursprüngliche Bezeichnung für Jesus?', in H. Feld and J. Nolte (eds.), Wort Gottes in der Zeit: Festschrift Karl Hermann Schelkle zum 65. Geburtstag dargebracht (Düsseldorf, 1973), pp. 31–42. E. *Nestle in DCG 1 (1906), pp. 181 f., s.v.; W. Foerster in TWNT 1 (1933; Eng. tr., 1964), pp. 605 f.; further bibl. in 10/2 (1979), pp. 1014 f.; T. H. Gaster in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, 1 (1962), p. 374, s.v. 'Beelzebul'.

Beghards. See following entry.

Beguines, Beghards. The Beguines were women leading pious, but non-monastic lives, mainly in the late Middle Ages. Some lived alone, some in communities. They promised to remain celibate and obey a rule while living as Beguines, but retained the use of private property and were free to change their status and marry. They often wore a simple habit, but they were not a religious order with a common rule or structure. They usually engaged in communal prayer and in philanthropic work, but Beguines could be found in almost every profession open to women. Their male counterparts were the Beghards, who were usually weavers, dyers, or fullers, who had a common purse and held no private property; they were fewer in number.

The origin of the terms is obscure. Beguina (from which beghardus derived) appears to have been used first of the groups of women leading semi-religious lives in the towns of the Low Countries; one such group in the diocese of Liège was inspired by Lambert le Bègue (d. 1177), but it is not clear that the term derives from his name. While it was in the Low Countries that the movement was most complex and enduring, similar groups were numerous in Germany, France, and other countries of mainland Europe in the 13th and 14th cents. Beguine settlements (known as Beguinages) were established, often in the vicinity of *Dominican and *Franciscan friaries, with whom they often had close links. Beguines attracted criticism from the Church authorities on account of their lack of enclosure and regular status, often coupled with an enthusiastic piety which emphasized direct personal relationship with God. The Council of *Vienne (1311–14) condemned Beguines and Beghards as 'an abominable sect' (decree 28) on account of their association with the heresy attributed to the *Brethren of the Free Spirit, and tried to suppress Beguines living outside Beguinages (decree 16). In the 13th and 14th cents. some Beguines were executed (e.g. Margaret *Porette) and they suffered persecution and declined during the *Reformation and again in the French Revolution. The Beguinages of the Low Countries had a second period of growth in the 17th cent., but few Beguines now continue the tradition.

Beguines such as *Mechthild of Magdeburg and *Hadewijch were responsible for some of the earliest religious writing in the vernacular. Their writing, which is personal and poetic, is associated with 'bridal mysticism' (Brautmystik).

J. L. von *Mosheim, De Beghardis et Beguinabus Commentarius (Leipzig, 1790), with docs. Eng. tr. of works of three of the Beguines by [A.] O. Davies, ed., with introd. by F. Bowie, Beguine Spirituality (1989). L. J. M. Philippen, De Begijnhoven (Antwerp, 1918). H. Grundmann, Religiöse Bewegungen im Mittelalter (Historische Studien, 267; 1935), pp. 319–475; repr., Hildesheim, 1961, with additional material, pp. 524–38. E. W. McDonnell, The Beguines and Beghards in Medieval Culture (New Brunswick, 1954). B. M. Bolton, 'Vitae matrum: A further aspect of the Frauenfrage', in D. Baker (ed.), Medieval Women (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 1; Oxford, 1978), pp. 253–73; id., 'Some Thirteenth Century Women in the Low Countries. A Special Case?', Nederlands Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis, 61 (1981), pp. 7–29. J. Asen, 'Die Beginen in Köln', Annalen des Historischen Vereins für den Niederrhein, 111 (1927), pp. 81–180; 112 (1928), pp. 71–148; and 113 (1928), pp. 13–96. D. Phillips, Beguines in Medieval Strasburg: A Study of the Social Aspect of Beguine Life (University of Columbia thesis; Stanford, Calif., 1941). A. Mens, OFM Cap., Oorsprong en Betekenis van de Nederlandse Begijnen- en Begardenbeweging (Verhandelingen van de Koninklijke Vlaamse Academie voor Wetenschappen, Letteren en Schone Kunsten van België. Klasse der Letteren, Jaargang 9, no. 7; Antwerp, 1947). R. Manselli, Spirituali e Beghini in Provenza (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo. Studi Storici, 31–4; 1959). E. G. Neumann, Rheinische Beginen- und Begardenwesen: Ein Mainzer Beitrag zur religiösen Bewegung am Rhein (Mainzer Abhandlungen zur mittleren und neueren Geschichte, 4; Meisenheim am Glan, 1960). K. Ruh, 'Beginenmystik. Hadewijch, Mechthild von Magdeburg, Marguerite Porete', Zeitschrift für deutsches Altertum und deutsche Literatur, 106 (1977), pp. 265–77. U. Peters, Religiöse Erfahrung als literarisches Faktum: Zur Vorgeschichte und Genese frauenmystischer Texte des 13. und 14. Jahrhunderts (Tübingen, 1988), esp. pp. 41–100. R. W. Southern, Western Society and the Church in the Middle Ages (Pelican History of the Church, 2; 1970), pp. 318–31. J. van Mierlo, SJ, in DHGE 7 (1934), cols. 426–41 and 457–73, s.vv. 'Bégardisme' and 'Béguinages'; R. E. Lerner in J. Strayer (ed.), Dictionary of the Middle Ages, 2 (1983), pp. 157–62, s.v.

Behemoth (Heb. בְּהֵמוֹת). This Heb. word, which occurs several times in the OT, is generally translated 'beast' except in Job 40: 15, where the AV, RV, and RSV all retain the form 'behemoth'. Here it means a particular beast, the greatest of all land animals (perhaps the hippopotamus), and the counterpart of the sea-beast, *Leviathan.

Bel. Another form of 'Baal' (q.v.). In Jer. 50: 2, 51: 44 and Is. 46: 1, he is the guardian deity of Babylon, the empire which held the Jews captive.

Bel and the Dragon (or Bel and the Serpent [or Snake]). Two stories attached to the Book of *Daniel in certain Gk. MSS (*Septuagint and *Theodotion) of the OT and hence included (as a single item) in the *Apocrypha of the English Bible. The former recounts (vv. 1–22; [Vulg.] Dan. 13: 65–14: 21) how Daniel convinced the Babylonian King that the offerings of food and drink which were daily set before the image of Bel were not really consumed by the god but removed secretly by the priests, leading to the execution of the priests and the destruction of the image. The latter story (vv. 23–42; [Vulg.] Dan. 14: 22–42), which appears to be based on an ancient Semitic myth, describes how Daniel, having obtained the King's consent to attack the dragon (or serpent), put him to death by feeding him cakes made of pitch, fat, and hair. The people in their rage insisted that Daniel should be cast into a den of seven lions, whence, with the aid of the prophet *Habakkuk, who was miraculously transported from Judaea to feed him, he was saved from death and liberated (cf. Dan. 6). In consequence the King became a worshipper of Yahweh.

The occurrence of these stories in the Septuagint led them to be accepted by *Irenaeus, *Tertullian, *Origen, and others, but they were already questioned by *Julius Africanus. *Jerome incorporated them into the *Vulgate, though he did not conceal his doubts about them. In the AV they are entitled 'The History of the Destruction of Bel and the Dragon, cut off from the End of Daniel'. In 1894 M. Gaster announced the discovery of a story of the Dragon in *Aramaic which appeared to underlie the Gk.; his arguments were widely challenged, but many now hold, on other grounds, that the narratives are based on a Semitic original.

Comm. by T. Witton Davies in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 652–64, and C. A. Moore, Daniel, Esther and Jeremiah: The Additions (Anchor Bible, 44; 1977), pp. 23–38 and 117–49. M. Gaster, 'The Unknown Aramaic Original of Theodotion's Additions to the Book of Daniel', Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archeology, 16 (1894), pp. 280–90 and 312–17. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 2; Edinburgh, 1987), pp. 723–30, with bibl. See also bibl. to APOCRYPHA.

Belgic Confession (1561). The 'Confession de Foi des Églises Réformées Wallonnes et Flamandes', originally drawn up in French by Guido de Brès (1522–67) on the basis of the *Gallican Confession (1559). In an attempt to conciliate the Netherlands' government it specifically repudiated *Anabaptist doctrines. Its adoption in synod at Antwerp in May 1566 marked the final acceptance of Calvinistic principles in the Netherlands. It was again adopted by the Synod of *Dort in 1619.

Both the original 1561 text and the amended form of 1619 are pr. in J. N. Bakhuisen van den Brink (ed.), De Nederlandse Belijdenisgeschriften (2nd edn., Amsterdam, 1976), pp. 59–146, with introd., pp. 1–27. Eng. tr. of the 1619 form, with introd., in A. C. Cochrane (ed.), Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 185–219.

Belgium, Christianity in. The history of Belgium as an independent country dates only from 1830, but Christianity can be traced back to the mid-4th cent., when Servatius, the first Bp. of Tongres and a strong opponent of *Arianism, attended the Councils of *Sardica and *Rimini. The area was more lastingly evangelized in the 7th cent. by St *Amandus and St *Eligius. A large number of monasteries were founded and important schools at Liège were fostered by Bp. *Notker. Throughout the Middle Ages there was considerable religious fervour, which found its expression in the religious movements of *Beguines and Beghards, and in the writings of the great mystics J. van *Ruysbroeck and *Hadewijch. In 1520 the University of Louvain, founded in 1425, condemned the first writings of M. *Luther. The *Reformation brought about the break-up of the Spanish Netherlands, sanctioned by the Peace of *Westphalia in 1648. Strong Spanish repression maintained the South, that was to become Belgium, within the Catholic sphere of influence. In the 17th cent. *Jansenism became influential and was the object of bitter controversy.

When Belgium became independent of the *Netherlands in 1830, the Church had suffered under the Austrian *Josephite, the French revolutionary and Napoleonic regimes, and then under the Dutch *Calvinist government of William I of Holland (reigned 1813–40), during which severe restrictions were imposed on RCs. The 'Sacred Union' between Catholics and Liberals that carried out the Revolution of 1830 and drew up a constitution in which the separation of Church and State is enshrined, lasted until *c.*1847, when tensions resulted in *Anticlericalism on the one hand and *Ultramontanism on the other. Interactions and tensions between the spheres of religion and politics have been reflected in recurrent problems over the financing of Catholic schools (1879–84 and 1952–8) and the so-called 'pillarization' (the development of separate Catholic, Socialist, and Liberal social networks covering every aspect of life), as well as in social and cultural-linguistic issues. Belgium is a predominantly RC country but, because of increasing secularization, the Church is losing more and more of its social significance. In recent times the Belgian Church has played an important international role: Belgian missionaries have worked throughout the world, most vigorously in *Zaire and *India; Card. D. J. *Mercier was instrumental in the development of neo-*Thomism and was largely responsible for the *Malines Conversations; Card. J. L. *Cardijn exercised great influence on the social thinking of the RC Church; and Card. L. J. Suenens played a leading role at the Second *Vatican Council. There are Protestant, Orthodox, Jewish, and growing Islamic minorities in Belgium.

É. de Moreau, SJ, Histoire de l'Église en Belgique [to 1633] (Museum Lessianum, Section historique, 1, 2, 3, 11, 12, and 15; 1940–52); id., L'Église en Belgique: Des origines au début du XXᵉ siècle (1944); R. Aubert, 150 ans de vie des églises (1979). U. Berlière, OSB, and others, Monasticon Belge (Bruges and other places, 1890 ff. [Tome 7, vol. 4, 1984]); E. Michel, Abbayes et monastères de Belgique: leur importance et leur rôle dans le développement du pays (1923); H. Haag, Les origines du catholicisme libéral en Belgique (1789–1839) (Université de Louvain, Recueil de Travaux d'Histoire et de Philosophie, 3rd ser. 36; 1950). Recherches Sociologiques, 16 (1985), no. 3: special number devoted to 'La Belgique et ses dieux', with summaries in English. On the period 1914–58, A. Tihon in J.-M. Mayeur and others (eds.), Histoire du Christianisme des origines à nos jours, 12 (1990), pp. 538–54. There is also much information on the Church in H. Pirenne, Histoire de Belgique (7 vols., 1900–32; illustrated edn., 4 vols. [1948–52]), complemented by J. Bartier and others, Histoire de la Belgique contemporaine, 1914–1970 [1975]. Useful introds. to Belgian history by P. Carson, The Fair Face of Flanders (Ghent, 1969) and G.-H. Dumont, La Belgique (Que Sais-Je? 319; 1991). There are many important monographs in the Cahiers/Bijdragen of the Centre Interuniversitaire d'Histoire Contemporaine (Louvain and Paris, 1957 ff.). The KA(tholiek) DO(cumentatie) C(entrum) at the University of Leuven has pub. yearbooks on aspects of Church life in Belgium since 1830. É. de Moreau, SJ, in DHGE 7 (1934), cols. 520–756, s.v. 'Belgique'; M. Dierickx in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 239–49, s.v.; É. Brouette in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 511–25, s.v. 'Belgien'.

Belial. A Heb. word (בְּלִיַּעַל) of uncertain etymology, probably meaning 'worthlessness', 'wickedness', or 'destruction'. It is usually found in combination with a noun, e.g. 'sons of Belial' (Deut. 13: 13; 1 Sam. 2: 12; 10: 27; 25: 17; 2 Chr. 13: 7, etc.). In 2 Cor. 6: 15, the only NT ref. (where the best MSS read Βελίαρ not Βελίαλ), St *Paul uses the word of Satan. In J. *Milton it is the name of the fallen angel who represents impurity (Paradise Lost, 1. 490–505, Paradise Regained, 2. 150).

Bell, George Kennedy Allen (1881–1958), Bp. of *Chichester. The son of a clergyman, Bell was educated at Westminster School and *Christ Church, Oxford. He was ordained deacon in 1907, priest in 1908. After a curacy at Leeds and a brief period as tutor and lecturer at Christ Church (1910–14), he became secretary to Abp. *Davidson. In 1920 he acted as assistant secretary to the *Lambeth Conference. During the period when he was Dean of *Canterbury (1924–9), various reforms were introduced, incl. the abolition of visitors' fees and the establishment of the *Friends of the Cathedral. In 1928 he arranged for the production of John Masefield's The Coming of Christ, the first dramatic performance in an English cathedral in modern times. As Bp. of Chichester from 1929 to 1958 he pursued a forward-looking policy, but it was in the field of ecumenical and international affairs that his chief contribution lay.

His interest in the *Ecumenical Movement dated from 1919, when he went as part of the British delegation to the meeting at Oud Wassenaar (near The Hague) of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches. He became one of the leaders of the *Life and Work movement and played a prominent part at the first conference at *Stockholm in 1925. He was chairman of the Council from 1932 to 1934 and of the administrative committee from 1934 to 1938. He supported the *Confessing Church in its struggle against the Nazi government. His outspoken condemnation of indiscriminate Allied bombing of German towns during the Second World War was prob. a major factor in preventing his succession to William *Temple as Abp. of Canterbury in 1944. His contacts with German and other Churches after the war facilitated the first meeting of the *World Council of Churches in 1948. He was chairman of its central committee from 1948 to 1954 and then honorary president until his death. He was also a staunch supporter of the Church of *South India and acted as joint-chairman of the *Anglican–Methodist Conversations which began in 1956. He edited several volumes of Documents on Christian Unity (1924–58) and wrote other works on the subject. His Life of Randall Davidson (2 vols., 1935) is a notable contribution to contemporary English Church history. He resigned from the see of Chichester in Jan. 1958 and died later in the same year.

Correspondence with Alphons Koechlin, 1933–54 (in Ger. tr.), ed. A. Lindt (Zurich, 1969). R. C. D. Jasper, George Bell, Bishop of Chichester (1967). Further study by K. Slack (London, 1971). [E.] G. Rupp, 'I seek my brethren': Bishop Bell and the German Churches (lecture, 1975). P. K. Walker, The Anglican Church Today: Rediscovering the Middle Way (1988), pp. 27–70. R. C. D. Jasper in DNB, 1951–1960 (1971), pp. 80–2.

Bellarmine, St Robert (1542–1621), theologian and controversialist. Roberto Francesco Romolo Bellarmino was born at Montepulciano in Tuscany. In 1560 he joined the *Jesuits and was ordained priest in 1570. As professor of theology at Louvain (1570), where he came into contact with non-Roman thought, he soon gained a reputation for learning and eloquence; but, partly owing to the cold climate of the N., he moved to Rome in 1576 where he became professor of controversial theology at the newly founded 'Collegium Romanum'. He was made a cardinal in 1599 and from 1602 to 1605 was Abp. of Capua. His later years were spent in the composition of works of spirituality.

His life was largely devoted to scholarship and controversy. He proved himself a vigorous and successful opponent of the Protestants, whom he sought to vanquish by reason and argument rather than by dogmatic assertion and abuse; and *James I of England engaged in controversy with him. His chief work was the Disputationes de Controversiis Christianae Fidei adversus hujus temporis Haereticos (3 vols., Ingolstadt, 1586–93), a systematic and clear apologia for the RC position. He also took a prominent part in the production of the revised edition of the *Vulgate, known as the Sixto-Clementine, in 1592. As regards the Papacy, he supported *Paul V in his struggle against *Venice and wrote a book against that of W. Barclay of Aberdeen (*c.*1547–1608) denying the temporal authority of the Pope; but Bellarmine held that the Pope had only an indirect, not a direct, power in temporal matters, a view which had previously brought him into disgrace with *Sixtus V. Finally his sympathetic interest in G. *Galileo reflects his reasonableness.

He became entitled to the appellation of 'Venerable' in 1627, but further recognition was long delayed, despite frequent attempts to secure it, owing to his minimizing view of Papal authority. He was eventually canonized in 1930 and declared to be a *Doctor of the Church in 1931. Feast day, 17 Sept. (formerly 13 May).

Collected edn. of his works pub. in 7 vols., Cologne, 1617–21, vol. 7 being ed. by S. Rychius; modern edns., 12 vols., Paris, 1870–4, and 8 vols., Naples, 1872; suppl. to his works ed. X. M. Le Bachelet, SJ, Auctarium Bellarminianum (Paris, 1913); Opera Oratoria Postuma, adiunctis Documentis Variis ad Gubernium Animarum Spectantibus, ed. S. Tromp, SJ (11 vols., Rome, 1942–1969). G. Galeota, SJ, Bellarmino contro Baio a Lovanio: Studio e Testo di un inedito Bellarminiano (Aloisiana. Scritti Pubblicati sotto la direzione della Pontificia Facoltà Teologica Napoletana 'S. Luigi', 5; Rome, 1966). Eng. tr. of some of his spiritual writings by J. P. Donnelly, SJ, and R. J. Teske, SJ (Classics of Western Spirituality, New York [1989]). His autobiography, written in 1613, was pr. at the time of his attempted beatification, Rome, 1676; repr. Louvain, 1753. The primary authorities for his life are the biographies of J. Fuligatti, SJ (Rome, 1624), D. Bartoli, SJ (ibid., 1678), and N. Frizon, SJ (Nancy, 1708). X. M. Le Bachelet, SJ, Bellarmin avant son cardinalat, 1524–1598 (1911), with important docs.; id., Bellarmin et la bible sixto-clémentine (1911), also with docs. J. Brodrick, SJ, The Life and Works of Blessed Robert Francis Cardinal Bellarmine (2 vols., 1928); id., Robert Bellarmine, Saint and Scholar (1961). F. X. Arnold, Die Staatslehre des Kardinals Bellarmin: Eine Beitrag zur Rechts- und Staatsphilosophie des konfessionellen Zeitalters (Munich, 1934). E. A. Ryan, SJ, The Historical Scholarship of Saint Bellarmine (Université de Louvain. Recueil de Travaux publiés par les Membres des Conférences d'Histoire et de Philologie, 2nd ser. 35; 1936); A. Bernier, SJ, Un Cardinal humaniste: Saint Robert Bellarmin ... et la musique liturgique (Montreal and Paris, 1939). A. M. Artola, CP, De la Revelación a la Inspiración: Los orígenes de la moderna teología católica sobre la Inspiración bíblica (Bilbao, 1983), pp. 30–6, 41–51, 62–5, and 79 f. Sommervogel, 1 (1890), cols. 1151–254; Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 234–59. P. Dudon, SJ, in DHGE 7 (1934), cols. 798–824, s.v. 'Bellarmin'; G. Galeota, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 713–20, s.v. 'Robert (3) Bellarmin'.

Belloc, Joseph Hilaire Pierre (1870–1953), RC historical writer and critic. Half French, he was born at St-Cloud (nr. Versailles), educated at the *Oratory School in Birmingham under J. H. *Newman, served for a year with the French artillery, and then entered Balliol College, Oxford (1892). In 1906 he was elected Liberal MP for South Salford, but his fervent individualism and fear of State dominance made him critical of his party's alliance with the Socialists and he did not stand for the second election of 1910. He then joined G. K. *Chesterton and his brother, Cecil Chesterton, in a series of political broadsides popularly known as the 'Chesterbellocs'; and for the rest of his life he was a well-known figure in journalism, expounding Catholic economic liberalism and upholding the traditional values of European civilization as the true inheritance of the medieval system. On this general topic his chief work was Europe and the Faith (1912). He was the author of many historical writings which commanded attention by their brilliant and provocative style, though they were seldom contributions to serious knowledge. They include The French Revolution (1924), a History of England (1925–7), and Lives of *Joan of Arc (1929), *Richelieu (1930), *Wolsey (1930), Napoleon (1932), *Charles I (1933), *Cromwell (1934), and *Milton (1935). He also wrote the popular travel-book, The Path to Rome (1902), some volumes of light essays, and some successful light and satirical verse.

D. Woodruff (ed.), For Hilaire Belloc: Essays in Honour of his 72nd Birthday (1942), incl. an essay by D. Jerrold, 'On the Influence of Hilaire Belloc', pp. 9–17. R. Speaight, The Life of Hilaire Belloc (1957); A. N. Wilson, Hilaire Belloc (1984). Shorter study by E. and R. Jebb [daughter and son-in-law] (London, 1956).

bells. The legend that associates the introduction of the bell into Christian worship with *Paulinus of Nola in Campania (d. 431) lacks historical foundation; it was perhaps invented to account for the Latin words campana and nola, both meaning bell. The earliest reference to such usage occurs in a letter of *Ferrandus of Carthage (*c.*535), but St *Gregory of Tours is the first writer to mention it frequently. Handbells were much used in the British Isles and other areas under Celtic influence from the 5th to the 9th-cent; a famous example is the Bell of St *Patrick's Will, now in the National Museum of Ireland, Dublin. Hanging bells had come into general use in the Church by the 8th cent. There was a peal of three bells in *St Peter's, Rome, in the time of Pope *Stephen II (752–7), and another at *Winchester is depicted in the Benedictional of St *Ethelwold (*c.*980). Both he and St *Dunstan cast bells for churches. From the 8th cent. bells were blessed by a bishop with *holy water and *chrism; since 1984 the ceremony (popularly called the 'baptism of bells') may be performed by a priest, and oil is no longer used. For centuries it has been customary to ring bells to summon the people to church and on other occasions, e.g. to announce the passing of a parishioner (the 'passing bell') or his death (still ordered in the 1604 Canons of the C of E, but not retained in those of 1969), or for the ringing of the '*Angelus' or the '*De profundis'. The 10th-cent. Regularis Concordia notes as an established English custom the frequent pealing of bells at feasts. From medieval times to the present it has been customary for bells to bear inscriptions, sometimes in the form of a hexameter line, such as Stella Maria maris succurre piissima nobis. In size they vary very widely from the quite small treble to the large tenor. Thus Great Paul in *St Paul's Cathedral (1882) weighs almost 16¾ tons, and the Petrusglocke in *Cologne Cathedral (1923) over 25 tons. Small bells are sometimes used at the altar and rung at the Eucharist at the *Elevation and the *Communion.

T. North, English Bells and Bell Lore (Leek, 1888); J. J. Raven, The Bells of England (The Antiquary's Books, 1906); H. B. Walters, The Church Bells of England (1912), with bibl., pp. ix–xx; E. Morris, The History and Art of Change Ringing (1931); id., Towers and Bells of Britain (1955); [F.] P. Price, Bells and Man (Oxford, 1983); E. V. Williams, The Bells of Russia: History and Technology (Princeton, NJ, 1985). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 1954–77, s.v. 'Cloche, clochette'; P. Price in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 2 (1980), pp. 424–37, s.v.

bell-tower. See CAMPANILE.

'beloved disciple'. The anonymous and idealized disciple in St. *John's Gospel, identified as the one 'whom Jesus loved' (13: 23, 19: 26, 20: 2, 21: 7, and 21: 20) and at 21: 24 (cf. 19: 35) as the eye witness source of this gospel's tradition. Some assume a reference to him also at 1: 37–9 and 18: 15. On account of his prominence and closeness to the Lord he has often been identified with St. *John, the Apostle, who is not named in the gospel but was later thought to be the Evangelist. Others have suggested *Lazarus or John Mark (see MARK, ST), or have seen here a purely fictitious character.

For bibl. see JOHN, ST, APOSTLE.

bema (Gk. βῆμα, 'platform'). Acc. to E. usage, the space, usually raised above the level of the *nave of a church, which is shut off by the *iconostasis and contains the *altar, i.e. the counterpart of the *sanctuary in the W. The word is also used, less correctly, for the altar itself.

Benedicamus Domino (Lat., 'Let us bless the Lord'). In the Roman rite a formula used from the 11th cent. until modern times to mark the end of the choir *office and in some circumstances also the end of Mass. It is now used only at the conclusion of the *Office of Readings and the midday office. The response is 'Deo gratias' ('Thanks be to God').

The formula is first found in Gallican sources. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 538–40; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 435–7.

Benedicite (Lat., 'Bless ye [the Lord]'). The *canticle or song of praise put into the mouths of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, as they stood in the 'fiery furnace' before King Nebuchadnezzar. It forms part (vv. 35–66) of the *Song of the Three Children (q.v.). It has been used in Christian liturgical worship from early times. *Rufinus, writing *c.*406, says that it was sung by Christians throughout the world. It is found in certain orders for the *Paschal Vigil Service and it came to be widely used in the morning office of *Lauds in the W. and its E. equivalents. From the medieval Lauds, in which it was sung on all Sundays and festivals, it passed into the BCP as an alternative to the *Te Deum at *Mattins, used mainly in *Lent and *Advent. In modern revisions of the morning office, the ASB provides an abridged form of the Benedicite, and in the 1971 reordering of the RC Divine *Office it is preserved on festivals and at least two Sundays out of four. In the Byzantine *Orthros it is prescribed as the eighth daily canticle, but it is usually represented by a single chanting of the refrain.

F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 2 (1910), cols. 660–4. See also works cited under CANTICLE and under SONG OF THE THREE CHILDREN.

Benedict, St (*c.*480–*c.*550), of Nursia, the 'Patriarch of Western monasticism'. Little is known of his life. Born at Nursia, he was educated at Rome, where the licentiousness of contemporary society led him to withdraw from the world and retire *c.*500 to a cave at *Subiaco. Here he lived as a hermit for some years. A community gradually grew up round him and he is said to have established a group of monasteries in the area. Local jealousy prompted him to leave Subiaco, and *c.*529, he moved with a small band of monks to *Monte Cassino, where he remained till his death. It was here that he elaborated his plans for the reform of monasticism and composed his Rule (see foll. entry). He does not appear to have been ordained or to have contemplated founding an order. He was buried at Monte Cassino in the same grave as his sister, St *Scholastica. Feast day, in W., 11 July (formerly 21 Mar.; within the *Benedictine Order, both feasts have long been and still are observed); in E., 14 Mar.

Practically the sole source for his life is St *Gregory I, Dialogues, Bk. 2 (ed. A. de Vogüé, OSB, with Fr. tr. by P. Antin, OSB, SC 260, 1979, pp. 120–249). Modern biographical studies by J. *Chapman, OSB (London, 1929), F. *Cabrol, OSB (Paris, 1933; Eng. tr., 1934), J. McCann, OSB (London, 1937; repr. 1979), I. Schuster, OSB (Milan, 1943; Eng. tr., St Louis, 1951; London, 1953). Atti del 7° Congresso Internazionale di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo . . . 29 settembre–5 ottobre 1980 [devoted to 'San Benedetto nel suo Tempo'] (Centro Italiano di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo, 2 vols., Spoleto, 1982); Monastica: Scritti Raccolti in Memoria del XV Centenario della Nascità di S. Benedetto (480–1980) (Miscellanea Cassinese, 44, 46–8; Montecassino, 1981–4). Il Sepolcro di San Benedetto (ibid. 27 and 45; 1951–82). O. L. Kapsner, OSB, A Benedictine Bibliography (2nd edn., 2 vols.; Collegeville, Minn., 1962), esp. 2, pp. 15–30 (for works on Benedict himself), with suppl. (ibid., 1982), esp. pp. 439–47. A Bulletin d'Histoire Bénédictine, containing full bibl. information on the saint, his Rule and the history of the Benedictine order, has appeared at intervals in R. Bén. since 1895 and as separate suppl. since 1912.

Benedict, Rule of St. The monastic Rule drawn up by St *Benedict of Nursia *c.*540 for his monks, mostly laymen, of *Monte Cassino. Drawing freely from the earlier Rule of St Basil (see BASIL, RULE OF ST), in the version of *Rufinus, and from John *Cassian, as well as from the Fathers of the Desert, St *Augustine, and St Caesarius of Arles, but probably predominantly from the Regula Magistri, Benedict created a taut, inclusive, and individual directory of the spiritual as well as of the administrative life of a monastery. The Rule is marked by prudence and humanity, and leads by observance and obedience to the perfect following of Christ. It is safeguarded and applied by a patriarchal *abbot, chosen by his monks, with full authority, who is directed to take counsel and to care for the individual. The chief task and central act of the community is the Divine Office (opus Dei) which with private prayer, spiritual reading, and work fills the day. All monks must renounce private ownership, though the monastery may own property; the regime is austere but not exacting.

There is an immense literature. Crit. edns. of the Rule include those by R. Hanslik (CSEL 75; 1960; 2nd edn., 1977), and, with Fr. tr. and comm. by J. Neufville, OSB, and A. de Vogüé, OSB, (SC 181–6; 1971–2; with additional vol. of doctrinal and spiritual comm. by A. de Vogüé, 1977; Eng. tr. of this vol., Cistercian Studies Series, 54; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1983). Text and Eng. tr. by J. McCann, OSB (London, 1952) and RB 1980, ed. T. Fry, OSB (Collegeville, Minn. [1981]), with good introd. and notes. Facsimile of text in Bodleian MS Hatton 48 (Early English Manuscripts in Facsimile, 15; Copenhagen, 1968), with introd. by D. H. Farmer, pp. 11–29. Comm. by P. Delatte, OSB (Paris, 1913; Eng. tr., 1921), G. Herwegen, OSB (Einsiedeln, 1944), and B. Steidle, OSB (Beuron, 1952). Id. (ed.), Commentationes in Regulam S. Benedicti (Studia Anselmiana, 42; Rome, 1957). P. Meyvaert, OSB, 'Problems concerning the "Autograph" manuscript of Saint Benedict's Rule', R. Bén. 69 (1959), pp. 3–21; repr. in id., Benedict, Gregory, Bede and Others (1977), no. 3. The modern history of the text of the Rule is documented by J. D. Broekaert, Bibliographie de la Règle de Saint Benoît: Éditions latines et traductions imprimées de 1489 à 1929 (Studia Anselmiana, 77–8; Rome, 1980; 1213 items) and B. Jaspert, Bibliographie der Regula Benedicti 1930–1980: Ausgaben und Übersetzungen (Regula Benedicti Studia, suppl. 5; Hildesheim, 1983; 424 items). The annual Regula Benedicti Studia (ibid., 1972 ff.) provides a bibliography of secondary works on the Rule. See also works cited, s.v. BENEDICT, ST, BENEDICTINE ORDER, and REGULA MAGISTRI.

Benedict of Aniane, St (*c.*750–821), abbot. After serving under *Pepin and his son, *Charlemagne, he became a monk at St-Seine, near Dijon, prob. in 774. In 779 he founded on his own property at Aniane in Languedoc a monastery which became the centre of an extended reform of all the French monastic houses. His systematization of the *Benedictine Rule received official approval at the Synods of Aachen of 816 and 817. His collection of early monastic Rules (known as the Codex Regularum monasticarum et canonicarum) is our most important single source of texts of this type. He was also responsible for a major dogmatic compilation (the Munimenta fidei) and, it is now widely thought, for the Hucusque* (q.v.). From *c.*795 he took a vigorous part in opposing the teaching of the *Adoptianist *Felix of Urgel. His personal life was one of severe asceticism. Feast day, 11 Feb.

His writings are in J. P. Migne, PL 103. 393–1440, with Life by his disciple and friend, Ardo, cols. 335–84; crit. ed. of the Life by G. Waitz in MGH, Scriptores, 15 (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 198–220; Eng. tr. by A. Cabaniss (Ilfracombe, Devon, 1979). Relevant decrees of the Synods of Aachen and related texts ed. J. Semmler in K. Hallinger, OSB (ed.), Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, 1 (Siegburg, 1963), pp. 423–561; the 'Modus Penitentiarum' ascribed to Benedict, ibid., pp. 563–82. Contents of the Munimenta fidei described, with edn. of sections attributable to Benedict, by J. Leclercq, OSB, Analecta Monastica, 1st ser. (Studia Anselmiana, 20; 1948), pp. 21–74. Discussion of the contents of the Codex Regularum by A. de Vogüé, OSB, Les Règles monastiques anciennes (Typologie des Sources du Moyen Âge Occidental, 46; 1985), esp. pp. 42–5. J. Narberhaus, Benedikt von Aniane (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, 16; 1930); W. Williams, 'St Benedict of Aniane', Downside Review, 54 (1936), pp. 357–74; S. Dulcy, La Règle de Saint Benoît d'Aniane et la réforme monastique à l'époque carolingienne (Montpellier thesis; Nîmes, 1935); J. Winandy, OSB, 'L'Œuvre monastique de Saint Benoît d'Aniane', in Mélanges bénédictins publiés à l'occasion du XIV^e Centenaire de la Mort de Saint Benoît par les Moines de l'Abbaye de Saint Jérôme de Rome (Wandrille, 1947), pp. 235–58; P. Schmitz, OSB, 'L'Influence de Saint Benoît', in Il monachesimo nell'alto medioevo e la formazione della civiltà occidentale (Settimane di Studio del Centro Italiano di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo, 4; 1957), pp. 401–15. J. Semmler, 'Die Beschlüsse des Aachener Konzils im Jahre 816', ZKG 74 (1963), pp. 15–82. P. Schmitz, OSB, in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 177–88, s.v. 'Benoît d'Aniane', with bibl. E. von Severus, OSB, in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 535–8; J. Semmler in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 2 (1994), cols. 200 f., both s.v. 'Benedikt von Aniane'.

Benedict Biscop, St (*c.*628–689 or 690), *Benedictine monk. Of noble Northumbrian birth, he spent his youth at the court of King Oswiu. After two journeys to *Rome (the first, 653, with St *Wilfrid), in 666 he became a monk of *Lérins. In 669 he accompanied Abp. *Theodore to *Canterbury, where he became Abbot of the monastery of St Peter and St Paul (later St *Augustine's). In 674 he founded the monastery of St Peter at *Wearmouth and in 682 that of St Paul at Jarrow. An enthusiast for learning and art, Benedict brought back from his journeys to Rome (five in all) many paintings, relics, and MSS. He also secured the services of John, the archcantor of St Peter's, Rome, to teach in England the Roman chant. He is further reputed to have introduced into England the use of glass windows and churches built in stone. He was an enthusiastic advocate of Roman liturgical practice. His Life was written by *Bede, who was entrusted to Benedict's care at the age of 7. Feast day, 12 Jan. He is the patron of the English Benedictines.

Bede, HE 4. 18 and 5. 19, and Historia Abbatum, 1; *William of Malmesbury, Gesta Pontificum, 4. 186, ed. by N. E. S. A. Hamilton (RS, 1870), pp. 327–9. P. Wormald, 'Bede and Benedict Biscop', in G. [I.] Bonner (ed.), Famulus Christi: Essays in Commemoration of the Thirteenth Centenary of the Birth of the Venerable Bede (1976), pp. 141–69. K. Zelzer, 'Zur Frage der Observanz des Benedict Biscop', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 20 (Louvain, 1989), pp. 323–9.

Benedict Joseph Labre, St. See LABRE, ST BENEDICT JOSEPH.

Benedict XII (d. 1342), Pope from 1334. Jacques Fournier was the third of the *Avignon Popes. Of humble origin, he entered as a youth the *Cistercian abbey of Boulbonne and was later transferred to Fontfroide. Having studied at *Paris and become Master of Theology, he was installed Abbot of Fontfroide in 1311, appointed Bp. of Pamiers in 1317, and translated to Mirepoix in 1326. Created cardinal in 1327, he took part in the dogmatic controversies of the time, esp. on the questions of the poverty of Christ and on the *Beatific Vision. After being elected Pope in 1334, he at once inaugurated several ecclesiastical reforms. Himself entirely free from nepotism, he fought esp. the rapacity of the clergy, many of whom he sent back from Avignon to their dioceses without conferring benefices on them. He forbade the holding of benefices *in commendam except in the case of cardinals and was a zealous reformer of the religious orders, esp. the *Benedictines by his bull 'Summi magistri' (1336). He also ordered the establishment of houses of studies in every country and improved the training of novices, many of his measures being later adopted by the Council of *Trent. In the political field, where he tended to commit himself to the policy of Philip VI of France, he was less successful. French influence led his conciliatory attitude towards Louis of Bavaria to fail, and hence to the declaration of the Electors assembled at Rense to the effect that the Emperor holds his rights not through confirmation by the Pope but through the fact of his election. Louis, though allying himself with France in 1341, finally wrecked all hopes of better relations between Pope and Emperor by ignoring the Pope's remonstrations and giving his son, Louis of Brandenburg, in marriage to Margaret Maultasch, who had separated from her husband without ecclesiastical dispensation. Through the war between England and France Benedict's plan for a Crusade came to nothing, and his contemplated return to Rome was frustrated by the opposition of Philip VI and the unrest in Italy, though after 1339 *Verona, *Bologna, and Milan returned to the Papal allegiance. He also began the building of the famous palace of the Popes at Avignon. Benedict XII was a competent theologian, though most of his works have remained unpublished. His chief doctrinal pronouncement is the constitution 'Benedictus Deus' (1336) in which he defined the Catholic doctrine that the souls of the just who have no faults to expiate enjoy the Beatific Vision immediately after death, thereby resolving the conflict started by *John XXII in his private capacity.

His Lettres closes, patentes et curiales se rapportant à la France, ed. G. Daumet (Bibliothèque des Écoles Française d'Athènes et de Rome, 3rd ser. 2; 3 pts., 1899–1920); Lettres communes, ed. J.-M. Vidal (ibid. 2 bis; 3 vols., 1902–11); Lettres closes et patentes intéressant les pays autres que la France, ed. J.-M. Vidal and G. Mollat (ibid. 2 [ter], 5 pts., 2 vols., 1913–50); A. L. Tautu (ed.), Acta . . . e regestis Vaticanis aliisque fontibus (Pontificia Commissio ad Redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis. Fontes, 3rd ser., vol. 8, 1958). J. Duvernoy (ed.), Le Registre d'Inquisition de Jacques Fournier, évêque de Pamiers (1318–1325) (Bibliothèque Méridionale, 2nd ser. 41; 3 vols., Toulouse, 1965); see also E. Le Roy Ladurie, Montaillou, village occitan de 1294 à 1324 (1975; rev. edn., 1982; abbreviated Eng. tr., 1978). He also wrote a Comm. on Mt., part of which was pub. by G. Lazarus (Venice, 1603) under the name of 'Benedict XI'. S. *Baluse, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium (ed. G. Mollat, 1, 1914, pp. 195–240 and 576–80). C. Jacob, Studien über Papst Benedikt XII (1910). J. B. Mahn, Le Pape Benoît XII et les Cisterciens (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, 295; 1950); B. Guillemain, La Politique Bénéficiale du Pape Benoît XII (ibid. 299; 1952); C. Schmitt, OSB, Un Pape réformateur et un défenseur de l'unité de l'Église: Benoît XII et l'Ordre des Frères Mineurs (Florence, 1959). J. M. Vidal, 'Notice sur les œuvres du Pape Benoît XII', RHE 6 (1905), pp. 557–65 and 785–810. H. Otto, 'Benedikt XII als Reformator des Kirchenstaates', RQ 36 (1928), pp. 59–110. G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (1912), esp. Bk. 1, ch. 4, and Bk. 2, ch. 1, pt. 4 (10th edn. [1965], pp. 72–88 and 200–212; Eng. tr. of an earlier edn., 1963, pp. 26–36 and 110–19). K. A. Fink in Handbuch der Kirchengeschichte, ed. H. Jedin, 3 (pt. 2; 1968), pp. 393–9; Eng. tr., vol. 4 (1980), pp. 315–24. X. Le Bachelet, SJ, in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 653–704, s.v. 'Benoît XII'; B. Guillemain in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 8 (1966), pp. 378–84, s.v. 'Benedetto XII'.

Benedict XIII (d. 1423), *Antipope at *Avignon from 1394 to 1417. Pedro de Luna was a doctor of Canon Law of great learning and austerity of life. Created *cardinal in 1375 by *Gregory XI, he took part in the election of Gregory's successor, *Urban VI, but later became a partisan of his Antipope, Clement VII. After Clement's death (1394) he himself was elected Antipope, largely because he promised to put an end to the schism, even if it meant abdicating. After his enthronement, however, he refused to resign, and even sustained a long siege and subsequent imprisonment in the Papal castle of Avignon in defence of his dignity. Personal negotiations with the Roman Pope, Boniface IX, and his successors Innocent VII and Gregory XII were equally unsuccessful. The Council of *Pisa, against which he had called a synod at Perpignan, deposed him in 1409, and the Council of *Constance confirmed his deposition in 1417. After this even his last adherents (Scotland, Aragon, Castile, and Sicily) left him. He shut himself up in his castle at Peñiscola near Valencia, where he still claimed to be the rightful Pope until his death. As RC historians deny his rightful place in the Papal succession, the title of 'Benedict XIII' is attached to P. F. Orsini (d. 1730; see following entry).

Documents relatifs au Grand Schisme, 4–5: Lettres de Benoît XIII (1394–1422), vol. 1, ed. J. Paye-Bourgeois (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica [première série], 31; 1983), vol. 2, ed. M.-J. Tits-Dieuaide (ibid. 19; 1960). F. McGurk (ed.), Calendar of Papal Letters to Scotland of Benedict XIII of Avignon 1394–1419 (Scottish History Society, 4th ser. 13; 1976). H. Millett and E. Poulle, Le vote de la soustraction d'obédience en 1398 (1988 ff.). L. Panzan, Recordanzas en tiempo de Papa Luna (1407–1435), ed. G. de Andres (1987), pp. 76–103, 113–22, and 128–58. Martin de Alpartil, Chronica Actitatorum Temporibus Domini Benedicti XIII, ed. F. Ehrle, SJ (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, 12; 1906). S. Puig y Puig, Episcopologio barcinonese: Pedro de Luna, último papa de Aviñon, 1387–1430 (Barcelona, 1920). A. Glasfurd, The Antipope (Peter de Luna, 1342–1423): A Study in Obstinacy (1965), with bibl. F. Ehrle, SJ, 'Aus den Akten des Afterkonzils von Perpignan 1408', Archiv für Literatur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, 5 (1889), pp. 387–492, and 7 (1900), pp. 576–696; id., 'Neue Materialien zur Geschichte Peters von Luna (Benedikt XIII)', ibid. 6 (1892), pp. 138–308, and 7 (1900), pp. 1–306; id., 'Die kirchenrechtlichen Schriften Peters von Luna (Benedikt XIII)', ibid. 7 (1900), pp. 515–75. G. Mollat, 'Épisodes du siège du palais des papes au temps de Benoît XIII (1398–1399)', RHE 23 (1927), pp. 489–501. W. Brandmüller, 'Die Gesandtschaft Benedikts XIII. an das Konzil von Pisa', in G. Schwaiger (ed.), Konzil und Papst . . . Festgabe für Hermann Tüchle (1975), pp. 169–205, repr. in Brandmüller, Papst und Konzil im Grossen Schisma (1990), pp. 42–70. N. Valois, La France et le grand schisme d'occident (4 vols., 1898–1902), passim. F. Baix and L. Jadin in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 135–63, s.v. 'Benoît XIII', with bibl.

Benedict XIII (1649–1730), Pope from 1724. Pietro Francesco Orsini, who entered the *Dominican Order in 1667, became a cardinal in 1672 and Abp. of Benevento in 1686. As Pope, he presided at the provincial Lateran Council of 1725, which sought to reform clerical morals; but though well-intentioned and scholarly, he was of weak character, and his policy was determined by his unscrupulous favourite, Cardinal Coscia. In 1725 he confirmed the bull '*Unigenitus', though he suffered the Dominicans to preach a doctrine of *grace akin to that of the *Jansenists.

Quétif and Échard, 2 (1721), pp. 814–17. G. B. Pittoni, Vita del sommo pontifice Benedetto Decimoterzo (Venice, 1730); A. Borgia, Benedicti XIII, Romani Pontificis Vita Commentario Excerpta (Rome, 1741). G. B. Vignato, OP, Storia di Benedetto XIII (vol. 1–3 only pub. [dealing with his pre-papal period], [1952–6]). Pastor, 24 (1941), pp. 98–299. J. Carreyre in DHGE 7 (1935), cols. 163 f.; G. De Caro in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 8 (1966), pp. 384–93, s.v. 'Benedetto XIII'.

Benedict XIV (1675–1758), Pope from 1740. A native of *Bologna, Prospero Lorenzo Lambertini was educated at Rome at the Collegium Clementinum. He became Consistorial Advocate in 1701, *Promotor Fidei in 1708, and assessor of the Congregation of *Rites in 1712. In 1718 he was appointed secretary of the Congregation of the Council, in 1727 Bp. of Ancona, in 1728 cardinal, and in 1731 Abp. of Bologna. On the death of Clement XII (6 Feb. 1740), after a conclave lasting six months he was elected to the Papacy on 17 Aug.

Of wide sympathies, a clear sense of order and proportion, and a real interest in science and learning, Benedict did much to commend his office to the Aufklärung*. He was an exemplary administrator, conciliatory in his dealings with the secular powers, and esp. concerned to strengthen the moral influence of the Papacy; and his prudence and ability were respected in the courts of Europe, Protestant as well as Catholic. His De Servorum Dei Beatificatione et Beatorum Canonizatione (1734–8; often repr.), which grew out of his practical experience as 'Promotor Fidei', has remained the classic treatise on the subject. Book 1 contains extensive material on the history of beatification and *canonization; Books 2 and 3 treat of the successive stages in the process, including the testimonies, virtuous life and special graces (gratis datae) to be sought in the candidate; and Book 4 deals with the requisite miracles (pt. 1) and with various liturgical questions (Office and Mass of the Saint, insertion in the *Roman Martyrology, and adoption as Patron; pt. 2). Benedict also compiled an extensive work of hardly less authority on Diocesan *Synods (De Synodo Diœcesana, Rome, 1748; often repr.). His official pronouncements, collected in Bullarium Benedicti XIV (1768), frequently embodied scientific disquisitions. His other writings included an elaborate treatise on the Sacrifice of the Mass (De Sacrosancto Missae Sacrificio, 1748) and further works on canon law; and in 1752 he issued a standard edition of the Caeremoniale Episcoporum* (q.v.). His pronouncements dealt, inter alia, with the suppression of pagan practices admitted into Christianity, notably by the *Jesuits in *China ('Ex quo singulari', 1742) and *Malabar ('Omnium sollicitudinum', 1744); *usury ('Vix pervenit', 1745); *mixed marriages ('Magnae nobis admirationis', 1748); and *Jansenism ('Ex omnibus christiani orbis', 1756). To encourage historical studies, Benedict also founded a number of academies at Rome. He was buried in St Peter's, Rome, where he is commemorated by a striking monument by Pietro Bracci.

Opera, ed. E. de Azevedo, SJ (12 vols., Rome, 1747–51), and, with Bullarium, ed. J. Silvester (17 vols., Prato, 1839–46); Opera Omnia Inedita, ed. F. Heiner (Freiburg i. B., 1904); Correspondance, ed. E. Heeckeren (2 vols., Paris, 1912). Lettere . . . al Card. de Tencin, ed. E. Morelli (Rome, 1955 ff.). Modern Eng. tr. of extracts of his De Synodo Diœcesana (London, 1926). Life by [L. A. de] Caraccioli (Paris, 1783). A. M. Beltanini, Benedetto XIV e la repubblica di Venezia (Milan, 1931). E. Morelli, Tre Profili (1955), pp. 1–45. R. Haynes, Philosopher King: The Humanist Pope Benedict XIV [1970]. M. Cecchelli (ed.), Benedetto XIV (Prospero Lambertini): Convegno Internazionale di studi storici sotto il patrocinio dell'Archidiocesi di Bologna. Cento, 6–9 dicembre 1979 (3 vols., Cento, 1981–3). Pastor, 35 ('1949' [1950]) and 36 (1950), pp. 1–142, with bibl. to date. R. Naz in DDC 2 (1937), cols. 752–61, s.v. 'Benoît XIV'; J. Carreyre, PSS, in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 164–7, s.v. 'Benoît XIV'; M. Rosa in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 8 (1966), pp. 393–408, s.v. 'Benedetto XIV'.

Benedict XV (1854–1922), Pope from 1914. Giacomo P. G. B. della Chiesa was born at Pegli in the diocese of Genoa, and studied at Genoa and at the *Gregorian University, Rome. From 1883 to 1887 he was in Spain as secretary to Cardinal Rampolla, then Papal Nuncio at Madrid; and when the latter was recalled in 1887, della Chiesa returned to Rome with him, and remained there until appointed Abp. of *Bologna in 1907. On the death of Pius X shortly after the outbreak of the war of 1914–1918 he was elected to succeed him. While endeavouring to preserve the neutrality of the Holy See, he protested against inhuman methods of warfare and made several strenuous efforts to bring about peace. After the war he continued to work for international reconciliation. In 1917 he promulgated the code of canon law (Codex Iuris Canonici), which was almost complete at the time of his election. He paved the way for a better understanding with the E. Churches by the establishment in the same year of the Congregation for the Oriental Church and the Pontifical Oriental Institute in Rome. In an apostolic letter of 30 Nov. 1919 ('Maximum illud') he urged missionary bishops to build up a native clergy as well as to seek the welfare of the people among whom they worked. During his pontificate a British representative was accredited to the Papal court for the first time since the 17th cent.

Official acts of his pontificate in AAS, vol. 6 (1914) p. 473–vol. 14 (1922), p. 92 (incl. the accounts of his election and funeral). W. Steglich (ed.), Der Friedensappell Papst Benedikts XV. vom 1. August 1917 und die Mittelmachte: Diplomatische Aktenstücke des deutschen Auswärtigen Amtes . . . aus den Jahren 1915–1922 (Wiesbaden, 1970). The many Lives include those by F. Vistalli (Rome, 1928), G. Migliori (Milan, 1932), H. E. G. Rope (London, 1941), F. Hayward (Paris, 1955), and W. H. Peters (Milwaukee [1959]). [P. L. T.] G. Goyau, Papauté et chrétienté sous Benoît XV (1922); G. Rossini (ed.), Benedetto XV, i cattolici e la prima guerra mondiale: Atti del Convegno di Studio tenuto a Spoleto nei giorni 7–8–9 settembre 1962 (1963). E. de Moreau, SJ, in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 167–72, s.v. 'Benoît XV'; G. de Rosa in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 8 (1966), pp. 408–17, s.v. 'Benedetto XV'; W. H. Peters in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 279 f., s.v.

Benedictine Order. St *Benedict of Nursia founded monasteries at *Subiaco and *Monte Cassino in central Italy, and he wrote a Rule (see BENEDICT, RULE OF ST), but he did not found an order. Although internal evidence suggests that he expected his Rule to be used in more than one monastery, it was only one among several rules which an individual monastery might adopt in determining its observance. In the 7th and 8th cents. it was increasingly widely followed in Gaul, in England (prob. largely through the influence of St *Wilfrid), and in Germany (through the missionary work of St *Boniface and other Anglo-Saxons), but there was no juridical link between the monasteries using it. Both *Charlemagne and *Louis the Pious wished to reform monasteries through promoting observance of the Rule of St Benedict, and Louis, assisted by St *Benedict of Aniane, in 816–17 issued legislation imposing on all monasteries within the Frankish domain a uniform observance based on the Rule (the 'capitulare monasticum') and instituting visitations to ensure that this was enforced. From this period there developed a consciousness among monks and nuns in the W. that they all belonged to the family, or Order, of St Benedict.

In the Middle Ages liturgical observance became more prolonged and more solemn, and manual work diminished in importance. Monasteries became large and wealthy institutions. Because individual monasteries were autonomous, i.e. with no superior above their own *abbot, one of the chief difficulties of medieval Benedictinism was reforming the abuses that inevitably crept into monastic observance. *Cluny (founded 909) was one of the main centres of reform; by the end of the 11th cent. well over a thousand monasteries had been either founded by, or affiliated to, Cluny, all of them obliged to follow the Cluniac observance. Several popes, esp. *Innocent III at the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215), attempted to promote reforms by establishing general chapters and visitations along the *Cistercian model. This method was relatively successful in England, but in many countries these efforts at reform were short-lived. Reform movements in N. Europe in the 15th cent. led to unions of independent monasteries, e.g. the Bursfeld Union in Germany (1446); in S. Europe there were some monastic *congregations founded in which the autonomy of the monasteries was virtually abolished, e.g. the Congregation of Santa Giustina in Italy (1419). In the 16th cent. the *Reformation put an end to monastic life in much of N. Europe and in England (see DISSOLUTION OF THE MONASTERIES), though English monasteries were later founded in Continental Europe and kept alive the English Benedictine tradition. The Council of *Trent in 1563 gave a renewed impetus to the institution of general chapters and visitations, and in the following years several new congregations were founded, notably the *Maurist Congregation in France (1621).

Reforms such as these from the 15th cent. onwards facilitated the growth of libraries and the development of biblical and patristic scholarship. The *Enlightenment, the French Revolution, and the *anticlerical legislation of the 19th cent. led to State interference in all Benedictine monasteries. The majority were suppressed; a few were able to survive. The mid-19th cent. witnessed a revival of Benedictine monasticism with the foundation of *Solesmes in France (1833), St Vincent, Pennsylvania, USA (1846), and *Beuron in Germany (1863), each of which became the centre of a new congregation. In 1893 *Leo XIII united all the Benedictine congregations of monks into the Benedictine Confederation, with an Abbot Primate resident at Rome; his intention was not to abolish the autonomy of monasteries but to promote co-operation. In recent years the smaller orders founded in the 11th–14th cents., which follow the Rule of St Benedict (*Vallombrosians, *Olivetans, *Camaldolese, *Sylvestrines), but not the *Cistercian Order, have joined the Benedictine Confederation.

Evidence of communities of nuns following the Rule of St Benedict goes back to at least the 7th cent. A number of Benedictine nuns, e.g. St *Hildegard of Bingen in the 12th cent. and St *Gertrude the Great and Mechthild of Magdeburg in the 13th cent., illustrate the high degree of culture and spirituality that flourished among them. Many of the reform movements of the Middle Ages had counterparts among Benedictine nuns. In modern times most communities of nuns are autonomous, but subject to the supervision of the bishop; only since the mid-20th cent. have efforts been made to reduce the isolation of many communities. There are a few communities (esp. in England, Brazil, Belgium, and Germany) which are full members of a monastic congregation to which communities of monks also belong. The Council of Trent in 1563 imposed on all nuns a stricter enclosure (clausura) than had previously been practised by many communities of Benedictine nuns. The 17th cent. saw the foundation of many new communities, esp. in France, including some communities of Englishwomen. Communities of Benedictine nuns, like those of monks, experienced decline and suppression, followed by revival, in the 18th and 19th cents.

There are also communities of Benedictine sisters, i.e. religious who are not nuns and have less strict rules of enclosure. Most are engaged in charitable work, e.g. education and care of the sick, and in missionary activity. The majority of these communities were founded in the 19th and 20th cents. They are most numerous in the USA, but there are increasing numbers in Africa and other parts of the Third World.

In the W. Church the Rule of St Benedict has been the norm of monastic piety, and it was Benedictines who preserved classical learning by their care and copying of MSS in the Dark Ages and by their teaching and civilizing influence (see MONASTICISM). In later generations Benedictines have been influential in fostering the ideals and practice of scholarship and have played an important part in the development of liturgical worship, esp. in the early days of the '*liturgical movement'.

In the 20th cent. Benedictine monasteries have been established in the Anglican Church (see RELIGIOUS ORDERS IN ANGLICANISM) and in the Lutheran Church of *Sweden.

There is an immense literature. The standard modern account is that of P. Schmitz, OSB, Histoire de l'Ordre de Saint-Benoît (7 vols., Maredsous, 1942–56). Useful introds. by [E.] C. Butler, OSB, Benedictine Monachism (1919; 2nd edn., 1924); H. van Zeller, OSB, The Benedictine Idea [1959]; and by T. Fry, OSB (ed.), RB 1980: The Rule of St Benedict (Collegeville, Minn. [1981]), pp. 113–51. More specialized works include Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens (Hefte 1–22, ed. I. Herwegen, OSB; 1912–41; Hefte 23 ff., ed. S. Hilpisch, OSB, and E. v. Severus, OSB; 1959 ff.). S. Hilpisch, OSB, Geschichte des Benediktinischen Mönchtums in ihren Grundzügen (Freiburg, 1929); id., Das Benediktinertum im Wandel der Zeiten (St Ottilien, 1950). G. Penco, OSB, 'La Prima diffusione della Regola di S. Benedetto', in B. Steidle, OSB (ed.), Commentationes in Regulam S. Benedicti (Studia Anselmiana, 42; 1957), pp. 321–45; id., Storia del Monachesimo in Italia dalle origini alla fine del Medio Evo (Tempi e Figure, 2nd ser. 31 [1961]), passim. B. Collett, Italian Benedictine Scholars and the Reformation: The Congregation of Santa Giustina of Padua (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1985). The standard work on Benedictine nuns is by S. Hilpisch, OSB, Geschichte der Benediktinerinnen (St Ottilien, 1951; Eng. tr., Collegeville, Minn., 1958). On Benedictine life in England, W. *Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum (1655–73; new edn., 1817–30); [M.] D. *Knowles, OSB, The Monastic Order in England: A History of its Development from the Times of St Dunstan to the Fourth Lateran Council, 943–1216 (Cambridge, 1940; 2nd edn., 1963, with bibl.); id., The Religious Orders in England (3 vols., ibid., 1948–59), passim; [M.] D. Knowles and R. N. Hadcock, Medieval Religious Houses: England and Wales (1953; rev. edn., 1971; catalogue, with maps). [M.] D. Knowles and J. K. S. St Joseph, Monastic Sites from the Air (Cambridge Air Surveys, no. 1, 1952). O. L. Kapsner, OSB, A Benedictine Bibliography (2nd edn., 2 vols., Collegeville, Minn., 1962, with suppl., 1982). A Bulletin d'Histoire Bénédictine has appeared in R. Bén. at intervals since 1895 and as a separate suppl. since 1912. Heimbucher, 1, pp. 154–314, and 2, pp. 650–5. P. Schmitz, OSB, in DHGE 7 (1934), cols. 1062–234; J. Leclercq, OSB, A. G. Biggs, and others in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 205–303; G. Lunardi, OSB, in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 1222–46, s.v. 'Benedettine, Monache', and cols. 1246–8, s.v. 'Benedettine, Suore'; P. Englebert, OSB, in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 2 (1994), cols. 211–18, s.v. 'Benediktiner'. See also works cited under BENEDICT, RULE OF ST, and MONASTICISM.

benedictio mensae. A liturgical form of grace developed in monastic circles from verses of the Psalms. Reference to it is found as early as *Cassian (Inst. coenob. 7. 12) and St *Benedict (Regula 43). Today the grace consists of a verse which varies acc. to the feasts, short prayers, and a blessing. After meals the prayers are preceded by a psalm and concluded by intercessions for benefactors and the dead, and the *Lord's Prayer.

benediction. See BLESSING.

Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. A service in the W. Church culminating in the blessing of the people with the Reserved Sacrament. A comparatively late form of worship, it developed from the fusion of the veneration of the Host exposed outside Mass, which dates from the 14th cent., with the custom of the confraternities and guilds singing the Salve Regina or other antiphons to the BVM on Saturday evenings. The *Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament concluded (as it normally still does) with the blessing of the people with the Host. The giving of such a blessing was in keeping with the medieval practice of ending popular devotions by blessing with a sacred object (e.g. a *crucifix or *relic) those who took part in them. The blessing or benediction with the Blessed Sacrament came to be regarded as the focal point of the service, and from about the 16th cent. it often followed a comparatively brief period of exposition, giving its name to the devotion which was the most common form of evening service in RC churches until the introduction of *Evening Masses after 1953. It is now forbidden to give such a blessing except at the end of a service including biblical readings and a reasonable period of exposition. For details of the service, see EXPOSITION OF THE BLESSED SACRAMENT. A comparable service came into use in parts of the Anglican Communion in the late 19th–early 20th cent., sometimes called 'Adoration' or 'Devotions'.

For current RC legislation on Benediction and Exposition, see bibl. to EXPOSITION. Series of arts. by H. Thurston, SJ, in The Month, 97 (1901), pp. 587–97; 98 (1901), pp. 58–69, 186–93, 264–76; and 106 (1905), pp. 394–404. Id., 'Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament', in Report of the Nineteenth Eucharistic Congress, held at Westminster from 9th to 13th September 1908 (1909), pp. 452–64. N. Mitchell, OSB, Cult and Controversy: The Worship of the Eucharist outside Mass (Studies in the Reformed Rites of the Catholic Church, 4; New York, 1982), esp. pp. 181–5 and 322–31.

Benedictional. In the W. Church the liturgical book containing the formulae of the bishop's blessing formerly pronounced at Mass, esp. in Spain, France, and England, before the 'Pax Domini'. The oldest extant copy appears to date from the 7th cent.

Benedictus. The song of thanksgiving (Lk. 1: 68–79) uttered by *Zachariah at the birth of his son, St *John the Baptist. The hymn is addressed to God in thanksgiving for the fulfilment of the Messianic hopes, and to the child who is to be the Lord's forerunner. In the W. Church it is sung liturgically at *Lauds, whence it was taken over in the BCP, where it finds a place in Morning Prayer. In modern Anglican liturgies it often follows the First Lesson rather than the Second, as in the BCP. In the E. Church it is prescribed to be sung daily at the morning office (*Orthros), but in practice it is usually omitted, except in monasteries and in Lent.

P. Vielhauer, 'Das Benedictus des Zacharias', Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, 49 (1952), pp. 253–72. See also comm. to LUKE, GOSPEL OF ST, cited s.v.

Benedictus qui venit. The Latin form of Mt. 21: 9: 'Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord'. In most of the ancient liturgies, including the Roman *Mass, it is said or sung immediately after the *Sanctus, though in sung Masses at one time it followed the *Elevation in the Roman rite. It was included, in a slightly altered form, in the BCP of 1549, but dropped in the 1552 revision. It is allowed in the ASB and other modern Anglican rites.

It is first found in Gaul, viz. *Caesarius of Arles, Serm. 73. 4. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 170–3; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 136–8.

benefice. A term originally used for a grant of land for life as a reward (beneficium) for services. Under *canon law it came to imply an ecclesiastical office which prescribed certain duties or conditions ('spiritualities') for the due discharge of which it awarded certain revenues ('temporalities'). Parochial benefices in the C of E are of three kinds: rectories, vicarages, and perpetual curacies. In each case the duties of the incumbent include observance of the promises made at *Ordination, the showing of proper respect for his office, and due solicitude for the moral and spiritual welfare of his parishioners. The union of benefices is now governed by the Pastoral Measure 1968, and is effected by a pastoral scheme under that Measure. On a vacancy, the Patronage (Benefices) Measure 1986 regulates the way in which the registered patron is to consult with the bishop and two parish representatives before making a presentation. Once the *Institution or *Collation has taken place, the incumbent has a freehold of the benefice, subject to the fixed retirement age, and the possibility of removal under the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963 for misconduct. See also ADVOWSON.

In the RC Church the Second Vatican Council called for the abandonment or reform of the system of benefices. The 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici (can. 1272) provides that where benefices in the strict sense still exist they are to be supervised by the local Conference of Bishops; gradually they are to be phased out in favour of other arrangements. See also TITLE.

Benefit of Clergy. The exemption from trial by a secular court on being charged with a felony which was accorded to the clergy in the Middle Ages. It was granted to all who were tonsured as well as to nuns. In later times benefit of clergy was allowed on a first conviction for certain offences to all who could read, on the ground that ability to read was the accepted test of a cleric. The privilege was finally abolished in England by the Criminal Law Act 1827. It was last successfully claimed in South Carolina, USA, in The State v. Bosse [1855], 42 SC 276.

F. Pollock and F. W. *Maitland, The History of English Law before the Time of Edward I, 1 (Cambridge, 1895), pp. 424–40. L. C. Gabel, Benefit of Clergy in England in the Later Middle Ages (Smith College Studies in History, 14; Northampton, Mass., 1929). G. Crosse in DECH (3rd edn., 1948), p. 53, s.v.

Benet, St. An older English form of the name of St *Benedict.

Benet of Canfield (1562–1611), *Capuchin spiritual writer. William Fitch was born in Little Canfield, Essex, and educated at the Inns of Court. His reading of R. *Parsons, The First Book of the Christian Exercise (1582) prompted him to approach Robert Darbyshire, then in Newgate prison, who received him into the RC Church in August 1585. He left England the following year and entered the Capuchin Order in Paris in 1587. He was professed in 1588, completed his studies in Italy, and was ordained in 1591 or 1592. He returned to France and held various positions in Capuchin houses, becoming Definitor in Paris. He counselled his fellow Capuchins François de Tremblay ('Grey Eminence') and Ange de Joyeuse, acted as spiritual director to Mme *Acarie, and assisted in the reform of various religious houses (e.g. the *Benedictine nuns at Montmartre) and he helped Mme de Sainte-Beuve establish the *Ursulines in Paris. He returned to England in 1599 and was imprisoned in Wisbech Castle; he was released and went back to France in 1602 or 1603. During his captivity he wrote, in English, the first parts of The Rule of Perfection, as well as Le Chevalier Chrétien (pub., 1609). The first French version of the Rule, entitled Exercise de la Volonté de Dieu, began to circulate in MS from 1593. He revised the text at different times. The three parts of La Règle de Perfection (1610) cover the three forms of God's will: the exterior, the interior, and the essential. At first God's will is sought actively in the circumstances of life; then follow the manifestations of God's will through inspiration and illumination to the passive soul. In the third and difficult part the soul contemplates God's will directly without the help of the intellect or images; this entails the annihilation of the self before God. The third part also contains several, perhaps intercalated, chapters on Christ's Passion. The Rule shows the influence of the Cloud of Unknowing*, W. *Hilton's Scala Perfectionis, St *Bonaventura's Itinerarium Mentis in Deum, the Flemish spiritual writers, as well as *Dionysius, the Pseudo-Areopagite. H. *Bremond considered Benet 'the Master of Masters' in his spirituality.

The 1st and 2nd pts. of the Rule in Eng. were pub., Rouen, 1608; in Fr., Paris, '1609' [1608]. All 3 pts. of the Fr., ibid., 1610. It is unlikely that Benet himself produced an Eng. edn. of the 3rd pt. but a version of part of it by Augustine *Baker, OSB, underlines the adaptation by G. Randall, A Bright Starre leading to and centering in Christ our perfection (London, 1646). Crit. edn. of Eng. and Fr. texts by J. Orcibal (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, Section des Sciences Religieuses, 83 [1982]). Life by J. Brousse, La Vie du Révérend Père P. Ange de Joyeuse . . . (Paris, 1621), pp. 429–668; Eng. tr. (Douai, 1623), ed. T. A. Birrell, The Lives of Ange de Joyeuse and Benet of Canfield (1959), pp. 87–175. Optat de Veghel, OFM Cap., Benoît de Canfeld (1562 1610): Sa vie, sa doctrine et son influence (Bibliotheca Seraphico-Capuccina, Sectio Historica, 11; Rome, 1949). P. Renaudin, Un Maître de la mystique française, Benoît de Canfeld [1956]. E. Gullick, 'The Life of Father Benet of Canfield', Collectanea Franciscana, 42 (1972), pp. 39–67, id., 'Benet of Canfield. The Rule of Perfection: the active and contemplative life', Laurentianium, 13 (1972), pp. 401–36. P. Mommaers, 'Benoît de Canfield et ses sources flamandes', Revue d'Histoire de la Spiritualité, 48 (1972), pp. 401–34; 49 (1973), pp. 37–66; K. Emery, ' "All and Nothing": Benet of Canfield's Règle de perfection', Downside Review, 92 (1974), pp. 46–61. Cuthbert [Hess], OSFC, The Capuchins (2 vols., 1928), esp. 2, pp. 421–4. Bremond, 2 (1916), pp. 135–68.

Bengel, Johannes Albrecht (1687–1752), *Lutheran NT scholar. He entered the Lutheran ministry in 1707, and in 1713 became professor at the seminary of Denkendorf. In 1741 he was made *General Superintendent at Herbrechtingen, and in 1749 at Alpirspach. He did some work on classical and patristic literature, but his chief importance is as a textual critic and expositor of the NT. His text and *critical apparatus (1734) mark the beginning of modern scientific work in that field. Hardly less celebrated was his penetrating and pithy exegesis of the NT, published in his Gnomon Novi Testamenti (1742; revised Eng. tr., 1857–8). It was much used and admired by J. *Wesley, and remains a classic.

Correspondence ed. J. C. F. Burk (great-grandson; Stuttgart, 1836). Life, also by Burk (ibid., 1831; Eng. tr., 1837). G. Mälzer, Johann Albrecht Bengel: Leben und Werk (Stuttgart [1970]), and other works of this author. Further studies by O. Wächter (ibid., 1865) and K. Hermann (ibid., 1937). M. Brecht in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 583–9, s.v.

Bennett, William James Early (1804–86), Anglican *High Churchman. An upholder of *Tractarian principles, he became in 1840 priest-in-charge of St Paul's, Knightsbridge, and in this capacity built St Barnabas's, Pimlico (opened 1850), where he introduced what was then regarded as very advanced ceremonial. This provoked fierce opposition and mob rioting; and C. J. *Blomfield, Bp. of London, despite a certain sympathy with Bennett, became alarmed, and induced him to resign. He was instituted, however, to the vicarage of Frome Selwood, in Somerset, in 1852. In 1867 a public letter to E. B. *Pusey

(A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England), in which he dealt with the *Real Presence in the *Eucharist, led to a series of legal actions which were significant as showing the inadequacy of the existing courts to deal with matters of doctrine. The legitimacy of his Eucharistic teaching, however, was allowed. The Old Church Porch, which he began at Frome in 1854 (pub. in London), is claimed as the first parish magazine. He published many controversial and other writings.

Life by F. Bennett (London, 1909). W. P. Courtney in DNB, suppl. 1 (1901), pp. 169–71.

ben Sira (i.e. 'the son of Sira'). Jesus ben Sira, the author of *Ecclesiasticus (q.v.). 'Sirach' is the Greek form, the termination 'ch' indicating that the word was indeclinable.

Benson, Edward White (1829–96), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham (where he made a lifelong friendship with his fellow-pupil, J. B. *Lightfoot), and Trinity College, Cambridge, he became at first an assistant master at Rugby (1852), and then Master of the newly-founded school at Wellington (1859). In 1872 Bp. C. *Wordsworth appointed him Chancellor of *Lincoln, where he was responsible for the foundation of the Theological College (1874). In 1877 he went as its first bishop to *Truro; his vigorous and forceful character was particularly well suited to the needs of the new diocese. In 1883 he succeeded Abp. A. C. *Tait at Canterbury, where he was intensely zealous and active in the Church's interests, but intolerant of opposition and criticism. A strong Tory, he vigorously upheld the Establishment; yet he remained a friend of W. E. *Gladstone, to whom he owed his appointment, and it was while on a visit to him that he died in Hawarden church. Convinced that the influence of the laity should be given institutional recognition, he encouraged the establishment of the House of Laymen, with consultative status, in 1886. In 1887 he reconstituted the Bishopric in *Jerusalem (q.v.). To deal with the ritual charges brought against E. *King, Bp. of *Lincoln, he revived the 'court of the Abp. of Canterbury', which based its decisions on the rubrics of the BCP and traditional practice in the C of E (see also LINCOLN JUDGEMENT). His great devotion to St *Cyprian bore fruit in Cyprian, his Life, his Times, his Work (1897), published a few months after his death.

Index to his Letters and Papers in Lambeth Palace Library, by M. Stewart and others (1980). His Life (2 vols., London, 1899–1900) by his son, A. C. Benson. Id., The Trefoil: Wellington College, Lincoln, and Truro (1923). D. Williams, Genesis and Exodus: A Portrait of the Benson Family (1979), esp. pp. 1–107. P. [B.] Hinchliff, God and History: Aspects of British Theology 1875–1914 (Oxford, 1992), pp. 73–98. A. J. Mason in DNB, suppl. 1 (1901), pp. 171–9.

Benson, Richard Meux (1824–1915), founder of the *Society of St John the Evangelist (SSJE). Educated at *Christ Church, Oxford, of which he was a Student from 1846 to 1915, he was ordained in 1848 and in 1850 appointed Vicar of Cowley, then a village, some two miles from *Oxford, where he lived a studious, devoted life. In 1859 he was on the point of going to India on missionary work when Bp. S. *Wilberforce induced him to remain to take charge of the new suburb developing at the Oxford end of his parish. A sermon preached by J. *Keble inspired him to found the SSJE in 1865. In 1890 he resigned his superiorship of the Society. His religious writings, mostly based on his sermons, reveal his penetrating originality and deeply spiritual mind.

'Letters' ed. G. Congreve, SSJE, and W. H. Longridge, SSJE (Oxford, 1916), 'Further Letters' ed. by idd. (1920). M. V. Woodgate, Father Benson: Founder of the Cowley Fathers (1953); M. L. Smith, SSJE (ed.), Benson of Cowley (Oxford, 1980). S. L. Ollard in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 38 f.

Benson, Robert Hugh (1871–1914), RC apologist. The youngest son of E. W. *Benson, Abp. of Canterbury, he was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1894 Benson was ordained, then served in the Eton mission at Hackney Wick and elsewhere, and in 1898 went to the *Community of the Resurrection at Mirfield, where he was professed in 1901. In 1903 he was received into the RC Church. After (re-)ordination in 1904, he devoted most of the remainder of his life to preaching and literary work, residing, from 1908, at Buntingford. His novels, remarkable for their vivid characterization and fervent creed, include The Light Invisible (1903), By What Authority? (1904), The Sentimentalists (1906), The Lord of the World (1907), and None other Gods (1910). His published sermons include Christ in the Church (1911) and The Friendship of Christ (1912).

There is much autobiog. material in his Confessions of a Convert (1913). Spiritual Letters, with preface by A. C. Benson (brother; London, 1917). Life by C. C. Martindale, SJ (2 vols., ibid., 1916). Short Memoir by A. C. Benson (ibid., 1915). A. Wilkinson, The Community of the Resurrection (1992), pp. 82–7. C. C. Martindale, SJ, in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 39–41.

Bentley, Richard (1662–1742), English classical scholar. He entered St John's College, Cambridge, at the early age of 14. After a year as headmaster of Spalding Grammar School, he became tutor to the son of E. *Stillingfleet. In his *Boyle Lectures (1692) on the Evidences of Natural and Revealed Religion, as in his attack (1713) on the freethinker A. *Collins, he appeared in the role of an able apologist for Christianity. But it was as a classical scholar that he made his real mark. Before his 24th year he had started a Hexapla dictionary and in 1691 he issued a Latin letter to John *Mills as an appendix to an edition of the 'Chronicle' of *John Malalas. His brilliant restoration in this appendix of many passages where the text was corrupt revealed his great powers as a critic to the few capable to judge. In 1699 his attack on Charles Boyle in his Dissertation on the Epistles of Phalaris was a still more remarkable performance. During the coming years an astonishing array of works, among them his notorious re-editing of J. *Milton's Paradise Lost, came from Bentley's pen. Nearly all the time, too, Bentley, who had been admitted Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1700, was engaged in a bitter feud, largely provoked by his high-handed methods and reforms, with the Fellows of the College. They tried repeatedly, and almost successfully, to get their Master deposed from office, but he held it till his death.

Works, ed. A. Dyce (3 vols., 1836–8); J. H. Monk, Life of Bentley (2 vols., 1833); R. C. Jebb, Life of Bentley (1882); E. Hedicke, Studia Bentleiana (1902); R. J. White, Dr. Bentley: A Study in Academic Scarlet (1965). C. O. Brink, English Classical Scholar- ship (Cambridge, 1986), pp. 21–83 and notes pp. 201–9. A. T. Bartholomew and J. W. Clark, Bibliography of Richard Bentley (1908).

Berakah (Heb. בְּרָכָה, 'blessing'). The characteristic Jewish prayer, which takes the form of a blessing or thanksgiving to God. Hence the name 'Berakoth' (the plural form of the word) is applied to the tractates of the *Talmud which contain directions about prayer, both public and private. The OT provides many examples of this type of prayer (e.g. Gen. 24: 27, Job 1: 21, Ps. 28: 6), which was carried over into Christian usage (2 Cor. 1: 3, 1 Pet. 1: 3), and there are parallelisms in ideas and phraseology between early Christian prayers and Jewish berakoth (cf. 1 Clem. 59 and the second of the *Eighteen Benedictions). It has been suggested that the use of 'Eucharist' (Gk. εὐχαριστία, one of the two translations of Heb. berakah), for the central Christian rite arose from the fact that the Eucharistic prayer was a Christian adaptation of the Jewish berakah which was recited over a cup of wine.

Berdyaev, Nicolas (1874–1948), Russian *existentialist religious philosopher. His works portray a philosophical evolution from Marxism to Idealism, and thence to Orthodox or would-be Orthodox mysticism; they are imbued with prophetic, apocalyptic presentiments and a keen sense of the transcendent meaning of history. From 1922 onwards Berdyaev lived as an émigré in Berlin and, mainly, in Paris. His seminal work, written before the Revolution in Russia, is The Meaning of the Christian Act (pub. in Russian in 1916; Eng. tr., 1955); it is an apologia of man as co-creator with God. His main post-revolutionary work begins with Freedom and the Spirit (Russian, 1927; Eng. tr., 1935), his most theological book, in which he sets out for the first time his version of religious existentialist or personalist philosophy. His next major work was The Destiny of Man (Russian, 1931; Eng. tr., 1937), which develops a theory of ethics, going, as he maintained, beyond the 'ethics of law' and the 'ethics of redemption'. Highly sensitive to the moods of his time, he believed that the 'contradictions of modern history' portend a new era of 'divine–human creation'. This belief is expressed in a number of smaller books, such as The End of our Time (Russian, 1924; Eng. tr., 1933), The Bourgeois Mind and Other Essays (Eng. tr. from various sources, 1934), The Fate of Man in the Modern World (Russian, 1934; Eng. tr., 1935), Slavery and Freedom (Russian, 1939; Eng. tr., 1943), and The Origins of Russian Communism (Eng. tr., 1937; Russian not pub. until 1955); in these works his critical, nonconformist allegiance to Orthodoxy is combined with moral and social radicalism and, in contrast to most of his fellow émigrés, an eventual acceptance of post-revolutionary Russia. His two outstanding late works are The Beginning and the End (Russian, 1947; Eng. tr., 1952), a restatement of specifically philosophical and metaphysical problems; and Dream and Reality (posthumously pub., Russian, 1949; Eng. tr., 1950), a largely non-factual, intellectual autobiography, a critical self-assessment, and a summing up of his outlook.

Studies by M. Spinka (Philadelphia [1950]), O. Fielding Clarke (London, 1950), E. Porret (Neuchâtel and Paris, 1951), M. A. Villon (London, 1961), J.-L. Segundo (Paris [1963]), M.-M. Davy (Paris, 1964; Eng. tr., 1967), F. Nucho (London, 1967), D. B. Richardson (in Eng.; The Hague, 1968), and V. A. Kuvakin (Moscow, 1980). P. Klein, Die 'kreative Freiheit' nach Nikolaj Berdjajew (Studien zur Geschichte der katholischen Moraltheologie, 21; 1976); P. C. Murdoch, Der Sakramentalphilosophische Aspekt im Denken Nikolaj Aleksandrovitsch Berdjaevs (Oikonomia. Quellen und Studien zur orthodoxen Theologie, 14; Erlangen, 1981).

Bereans, also known as Barclayans or Barclayites. A religious sect founded at Edinburgh in 1773 by J. *Barclay (q.v.). The name was derived from the characteristics of the Bereans mentioned in Acts 17: 10 f. Barclay taught a modified form of *Calvinism, stressing at once its supernatural and mystical aspects. Natural theology he held to be impossible, since every attempt to prove the existence of God rests on a petitio principii. The sole fount of truth is Holy Scripture, which speaks throughout of Christ. The Christian, who is enabled to understand it by faith illuminated by the Holy Spirit, will find, e.g., that every single verse in the Psalms points forward to Christ or His Church. The act of faith implanted in the believer conveys assurance of salvation to him. It is thus the highest gift of God to man, and the 'blasphemy against the Holy Ghost' mentioned in the Gospels is unbelief. Any idea of a covenant-renewal at the Lord's Supper was repudiated as leading to the Romish doctrine of the Mass.

Barclay's doctrines won for a time an enthusiastic reception in a few widely scattered congregations in Scotland. Berean communities were also established in London and Bristol. After Barclay's death (1798), however, they soon melted away, and were for the most part merged in the *Congregationalists.

A. Miller in HERE 2 (1909), pp. 519–23, s.v.

Berengar of Tours (*c.*1010–88), pre-scholastic theologian. Berengar's family was associated with St Martin's, Tours, and by 1030 he was a canon there. After studying at *Chartres, *c.*1028, when *Fulbert was bishop, he took service with Geoffrey Martel, Count of Anjou (1040–60). By 1040 he was archdeacon and by 1047 treasurer of Angers cathedral. By 1053 he had ceased to be treasurer, but he remained archdeacon until 1060. The new Count (Geoffrey the Bearded) was hostile, and Berengar returned to St Martin's where he appears as 'master of the schools' from *c.*1070. Some time after 1080 he retired to the island hermitage of St Côme, three miles west of Tours, where he died.

Berengar was much criticized for his teaching on the *Eucharist. His case was discussed twice by *Leo IX in 1050, and again at a legatine synod at Tours in 1054; by Nicholas II in 1059; and at last definitively by *Gregory VII in 1078–9. Tractates were written against him in all parts of Europe, but esp. in Normandy. They include: John of Fécamp, Confessio Fidei, 4 (J. P. Migne, PL 101. 1085–91); *Durandus of Troarn, De Corpore et Sanguine Christi (ibid. 149. 1375–424); *Lanfranc of Bec, De Corpore et Sanguine Domini (ibid. 150. 407–42); and Guitmund of La Croix-St-Leufroy, De Corporis et Sanguinis Domini Veritate (ibid. 149. 1427–94). Berengar's surviving theological work consists almost entirely of his reply to Lanfranc, traditionally known as the De Sacra Coena and now (more correctly) as Rescriptum contra Lanfrannum. Here he maintains the fact of the Real Presence, but denies that any material change in the elements is needed to explain it.

Berengar's position was never diametrically opposed to that of his critics, and he was prob. never excommunicated. But the controversy that he aroused forced men to reconsider the Carolingian discussion of the Eucharist, as *Paschasius had left it, and to clarify the doctrine of *transubstantiation. Further, when both Berengar and his critics used the secular disciplines of logic and grammar to express a matter of Christian doctrine, the way was open to the *scholasticism of the 12th cent.

The text of Berengar's Rescriptum was discovered by G. E. *Lessing and ed. by A. F. and F. T. Vischer (Berlin, 1834). Crit. edn. by R. B. C. Huygens, with facsimile and paleographical introd. by W. Milde (CCSM 84 and 84A; 1988). Letters ed. C. Erdmann in id. and N. Fickermann (eds.), Briefsammlung der Zeit Heinriches IV. (MGH, Die deutschen Geschichtsquellen des Mittelalters 500–1500, 5; 1950), pp. 132–72. M. Matronola, OSB, (ed.), Un testo inedito di Berengario di Tours e il Concilio Romano del 1079 (Orbis Romanus, 6; 1936). A. J. Macdonald, Berengar and the Reform of Sacramental Doctrine (1930). O. Capitani, Studi su Berengario di Tours (Lecce [1966]). J. de Montclos, Lanfranc et Bérenger: La controverse eucharistique du XI^e siècle (SSL, 37; 1971), esp. pp. 3–245. P. Ganz and others (eds.), Auctoritas und Ratio: Studien zu Berengar von Tours (Wolfenbüttler Mittelalter-Studien, 2; Wiesbaden, 1990). H. Chadwick, 'Ego Berengarius', JTS NS 40 (1989), pp. 414–45. D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Eucharist, 1 (1909), pp. 244–59; G. Macy, The Theologies of the Eucharist in the Early Scholastic Period (Oxford, 1984), esp. pp. 35–53. M. Cappuyns in DHCE 8 (1935), cols. 385–407, s.v., with detailed bibl.

Bereshith (Heb. בְּרֵאשִׁית, 'in the beginning'). The first word of the Hebrew text of *Genesis and hence the Hebrew name for the Book.

Berggrav, Eivind (1884–1959), Bp. of Oslo. Born at Stavanger, the son of a bishop and Minister for Church and Education in the Norwegian Government, he studied at Oslo, Oxford, Cambridge, Marburg, and Lund. In 1909 he was made editor of the monthly journal Kirke og Kultur, and began ten years' work as a teacher. In 1919 he became pastor at Hurdalen, in 1925 prison chaplain in Oslo, and in 1929 Bp. of Hälogaland in the extreme north of Norway. In 1937 he returned to Oslo as Primate of the Norwegian Church. In earlier years he had been influenced by N. *Söderblom, Abp. of Uppsala, and at Oslo he rapidly won leadership in the *Ecumenical Movement, being elected President of the World Alliance for Promoting International Friendship through the Churches in 1938 and calling a conference of Scandinavian Church leaders on the outbreak of war in 1939. After the occupation of Norway by the Nazis (9 Apr. 1940) Berggrav took an active part in organizing resistance to the Quisling Government. With six other Norwegian bishops he resigned (24 Feb. 1941) 'what the state has committed to my charge', at the same time declaring that 'the spiritual calling which has been ordained to me at the altar of God remains mine by God and by right'. Arrested on 9 Apr., he remained a solitary prisoner in a log cabin on the outskirts of Oslo until the defeat of Hitler (1945). After the war he took an active part in the foundation of the *World Council of Churches and its work. He retired from his see in 1950. His writings include With God in the Darkness (1943), an account in English of the Norwegian Church Conflict.

Study by A. Johnson (Oslo, 1959; Eng. tr., Minneapolis, 1960).

Bergson, Henri (1859–1941), French philosopher. He was born at Paris, of Jewish descent, and studied at the École Normale Supérieure, where he fell under the spell of the activist doctrines of L. *Ollé-Laprune (1839–98) and É. Boutroux (1845–1921) and in 1889 submitted for his doctorate his celebrated Essai (see below). In 1900 he accepted a professorship at the Collège de France, remaining there until his retirement in 1924. His intellectual brilliance and daring gained him the hearing of large audiences in many countries. In 1914 he was honoured with election to the French Academy and in 1928 with the Nobel Prize.

Believing that the way to reality was by intuition, Bergson aimed at a radical criticism of all forms of intellectualism. He held that in real life the function of the intellect is subordinate; and that in man it is intuition which accomplishes those purposes which in the lower animals are carried out by instinct. All intellectualist conceptions of reality rest on spatial patterns akin to the diagrams and clock-time of the physicist, which distort the truth and must be abandoned for a new view of time (durée). Reality is evolutionary and progressive. Hence the traditional philosophic systems, which in the end can never escape a static and pantheistic determinism, must give way to a new philosophy of creativity and free will in which 'the gates of the future lie ever open'. At the root of moral action lies a 'life-force' (élan vital), which is an impulse found at its fullest development in heroes and prophets. Bergson's doctrines thus had close affinities with the thought of W. *James and the *Pragmatists generally.

Bergson's chief works were Essai sur les données immédiates de la conscience (1889; Eng. tr., Time and Free Will, 1910); Matière et mémoire (1896; Eng. tr., 1911); L' Évolution créatrice (1907; Eng. tr., 1911); Les Deux Sources de la morale et de la religion (1932; Eng. tr., 1935). His influence extended far beyond professed philosophers. His ideas, in whole or in part, were welcomed by many religious thinkers (notably the RC *Modernists) who were dissatisfied with the dominating position which traditional theology assigns to the human intellect.

Œuvres complètes d'Henri Bergson (7 vols., Geneva, 1945–6); his main Œuvres also ed. by A. Robinet (1959); Écrits et Paroles, ed. R.-M. Mossé Bastide (3 vols., 1957–9); and Mélanges, ed. A. Robinet and others (1972). Sympathetic interpretation by a disciple in H. W. Carr, Henri Bergson: The Philosophy of Change (1912) and id., The Philosophy of Change (1914). E. Le Roy, Une Philosophie nouvelle: Henri Bergson (1912; Eng. tr., 1913); J. *Maritain, La Philosophie bergsonienne: Études critiques (1914; Eng. tr., with additional material from Ransoming the Time, as Bergsonian Philosophy and Thomism, New York [1955]); A. Thibaudet, Le Bergsonisme (2 vols., 4th edn., 1923); J. Chevalier, Bergson (1926); R. Jolivet, Essai sur le bergsonisme (1931); A. Béguin and P. Thévenez (eds.), Henri Bergson: Essais et témoignages (Neuchâtel, 1943); L. Adolphe, La Philosophie religieuse de Bergson (1946); id., La Dialectique des images chez Bergson (1951); id., L'Univers bergsonien [1955]; J. Chevalier, Entretiens avec Bergson [1959]; V. Jankélévitch, Henri Bergson (Paris, 1959); T. Hanna (ed.), The Bergsonian Heritage (1962); M. Barthélemy-Madaule, Bergson et Teilhard de Chardin [1963]; id., Bergson adversaire de Kant (Bibliothèque de Philosophie Contemporaine, 1966); A. R. Lacey, Bergson (The Arguments of the Philosophers, 1989); P. Soulez, Bergson politique [1989]; M. Cariou, Lectures bergsoniennes [1990], and other works of this author. Good introd. by L. Kolakowski, Bergson (Past Masters, Oxford, 1985). P. A. Y. Gunter, Henri Bergson: A Bibliography (Bowling Green, Oh. [1974]).

Berkeley, George (1685–1753), philosopher and divine. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, of which he became Fellow in 1707. After some time spent in travelling abroad, he was appointed Dean of Derry in 1724. From 1728 to 1732 he was in America, attempting to found a missionary college in Bermuda, but the refusal of the home government to support his plan led him to abandon it. In 1734 he was made Bp. of Cloyne, a position he held until his death in Oxford, where he spent the last five months of his life. His most important philosophical works, all of them the works of his youth, were A New Theory of Vision (1709), Principles of Human Knowledge (1710), and Hylas and Philonous (1713).

Berkeley is celebrated for his metaphysical doctrine, which was a form of Subjective Idealism. He held that, when we affirm material things to be real, we mean no more than that they are perceived (esse est percipi). Material objects, on Berkeley's view, continue to exist when not perceived by us solely because they are objects of the thought of God. The only things that exist in a primary sense are spirits, and material objects exist simply in the sense that they are perceived by spirits.

Berkeley was a philosopher rather than a theologian, but in a small work called A Discourse on Passive Obedience (1712) he upheld an ethical utilitarianism of a theological rather than a philosophical kind. He also wrote various short treatises on practical matters of the day.

Crit. edn. of his works by A. A. Luce and T. E. Jessop ('Bibliotheca Britannica Philosophica', 9 vols., 1948–57). Also useful is the edn. by A. C. *Fraser (4 vols., Oxford, 1871; rev. reissue, 1901). Life by A. A. Luce (London, 1949). Other studies by G. A. Johnston (London, 1923), J. M. Hone and M. M. Rossi (ibid., 1931), G. D. *Hicks (ibid., 1932), J. Wild (Cambridge, Mass., 1936), G. J. Warnock (Harmondsworth, 1953; reissued with additions, Oxford, 1982), I. C. Tipton (London, 1974), G. Pitcher (ibid., 1977), K. P. Winkler (Oxford, 1989), and D. Berman (ibid., 1994). A. A. Luce, Berkeley and Malebranche (1934); id., Berkeley's Immaterialism (1945); id., The Dialectic of Immaterialism: An Account of the Making of Berkeley's Principles (1963); E. A. Sillem, George Berkeley and the Proofs for the Existence of God (1957); A. D. Ritchie, George Berkeley: A Reappraisal, ed. G. E. Davie (Manchester, 1967). W. E. Steinkraus (ed.), New Studies in Berkeley's Philosophy (New York and London, 1966); J. Foster and H. Robinson (eds.), Essays on George Berkeley: A Tercentennial Celebration (Oxford, 1985). T. E. Jessop, A Bibliography of George Berkeley (1934; 2nd edn., The Hague, 1973).

Bernadette, St (1844–79), peasant girl of *Lourdes. She was the daughter of François Soubirous, a miller, and the eldest child of a family of six. She was baptized as 'Marie Bernarde', but became affectionately known to her family and neighbours as 'Bernadette'. After a childhood lived in a context of poverty, at the age of 14 she received 18 *apparitions of the BVM at the Massabielle Rock, near Lourdes. The first was on 11 Feb. 1858 and the last on 16 July of the same year. The Virgin, who manifested herself as the 'Immaculate Conception', revealed her presence by supernatural occurrences (esp. a miraculous spring of water) and commands (the building of a church). After a period in which Bernadette suffered much from constant questionings and publicity, she joined the Sisters of Notre-Dame at Nevers, where she lived for the rest of her life. She was beatified by *Pius XI in 1925 and canonized in 1933. Feast day in France, 18 Feb. (not in the universal calendar). Her feast has also been observed on 16 Apr.

The principal collection of primary docs. is ed. by R. Laurentin, B. Billet, OSB, and P. Galland, Lourdes: Documents authentiques (7 vols. [1957–66]; to 1866); R. Laurentin and M.-T. Bourgeade, Logia de Bernadette: Étude critique de ses paroles de 1866 à 1879 (3 vols., 1971). Smaller collection by L. [J. M.] Cros, SJ, and P. M. Olphe-Galliard, SJ, Lourdes 1858 [1957]. Les Écrits de Sainte Bernadette et sa voie spirituelle, ed. A. Ravier, SJ (1961). H. Petitot, Histoire exacte des apparitions de N.-D. de Lourdes à Bernadette [1935]; id., Histoire exacte de la vie intérieure et religieuse de Ste Bernadette [1935]. The many popular Lives include those of E. Guynot (Paris [1937]), F. Trochu (ibid., 1954; Eng. tr., 1957), M. Trouncer (London, 1958), R. Laurentin (Paris, 1978; Eng. tr., 1979), and A. Ravier, SJ (Freiburg i. B., 1979; Eng. tr., 1979). See also bibl. to LOURDES.

Bernard, St (1090–1153), Abbot of *Clairvaux. Born of noble parents at Fontaines near Dijon, in 1112 he entered the recently-founded monastery of *Cîteaux, together with 30 other young noblemen of Burgundy, including his own brothers. When three years later he was asked by the abbot, St *Stephen Harding, to choose a place for a new monastery, he established a house at Clairvaux, which soon became one of the chief centres of the *Cistercian Order. As Abbot of Clairvaux, Bernard came to exercise immense influence in ecclesiastical and political affairs. In 1128 he acted as secretary to the Synod of Troyes and there obtained recognition for the Rules of the new order of Knights *Templar, which he is said himself to have drawn up. In the disputed election which followed the death of Pope Honorius II in 1130, Bernard sided with Innocent II against the antipope, Anacletus, and was eventually successful in securing Innocent's victory. As a reward, the Pope showered privileges on the Cistercian Order. Bernard's relations with the Papacy became more intimate still with the election of a Cistercian monk and former pupil as Pope *Eugenius III in 1145. During the next few years Bernard attacked the heretical teaching of *Henry of Lausanne in Languedoc, and he preached the Second *Crusade. When the Crusade failed, Bernard blamed the crusaders for their lack of faith.

Bernard's best-known work is the unfinished series of sermons on the Song of Songs ('Sermones super Cantica Canticorum'). In it he ranges from the practical life of the monk to the mystical confrontation between the bridegroom and bride of the Canticle; by use of *allegory he interprets the bridegroom as Christ and the bride sometimes as the Church, sometimes as himself. The 'Sermones per annum' are sermons for liturgical feast days; some of these, as well as the sermons 'In laudibus virginis matris', convey his deep-felt devotion to the BVM, though its influence on the Marian cult has been exaggerated. His treatises single out particular themes of the ascetic life: humility in the 'De gradibus humilitatis et superbiae', love in the 'De diligendo Deo', in which he insists that God should be loved simply and purely because He is God. The longest treatise, 'De consideratione', is addressed to Pope Eugenius III; as well as a portrait of the ideal pope, it gives an elaborate account of the knowledge of God. The large body of his letters show his concern with political and moral matters, such as the abuse of feudal lordship. They also did much to prepare, and then secure, the condemnation of Peter *Abelard at the Council of *Sens (1140). In his denunciation of the luxury of the *Cluniac way of life and his attacks on Abelard and on *Gilbert de la Porré in 1148, he gave less attention to his opponents' motives than to defending the ascetic ideal, as defined by tradition. He was above all else a monk. Nevertheless, for all his stubborn effort to limit the use of reason in theology, his language attains a formal beauty (itself an expression of the ritual order of the monastery) and a richness of imagery which associate him with the 12th-cent. rebirth of letters. In his opposition to the persecution of the Jews, he stood apart from most of his contemporaries. While the attribution to him of the poem '*Jesu, dulcis memoria' is almost certainly erroneous, the devotion it expresses is reflected in his genuine work. His writings were widely read in his own time and later, by monks and laymen alike, and after the Reformation by both Protestants and Catholics. He was canonized in 1174, and created a '*Doctor of the Church' in 1830. Feast day, 20 Aug.

Editio princeps of his works by A. Brocard (Paris, 1508). The classic edn. is 2nd edn. of that by J. *Mabillon, OSB (2 vols., Paris, 1690 [1st edn., 6 vols. in 9, 1667]), repr., with additions, in J. P. Migne, PL 182–5. Modern edn. by J. Leclercq, OSB, C. H. Talbot, and H. M. Rochais, OSB (8 vols., Rome, 1957–77). Eng. tr. of Mabillon's edn., with additional notes by S. J. Eales (Catholic Standard Library, 4 vols., 1889–96); Eng. tr. based on edn. of Leclercq, etc. (Cistercian Fathers Series, 1, 4, 7, 10, 13, 18, 19, 20, 25, 31, 37, 40, 53, etc.; 1970 ff.). Eng. tr. of his letters by B. S. James (London, 1953). J. Leclercq, OSB, Études sur Saint Bernard et le texte de ses écrits (Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis, 9, fascs. 1–2; Rome, 1953); id., Recueil d'études sur Saint Bernard et ses écrits (Storia e Letteratura, 92, 104, 114, 167, and 182; Rome, 1962–92). The chief sources for the biog. of the saint are some contemporary Lives, pr. in J. Mabillon (also PL 185), esp. the 'Vita Prima' (ibid., cols. 225–454) and the 'Vita Secunda' (cols. 469–524). Eng. tr. of 'Vita Prima' by G. Webb and A. Walker (1960). A. H. Bredero, 'Études sur la "Vita Prima" de Saint Bernard', Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis, 17 (1961), pp. 3–72, 215–60; 18 (1962), pp. 3–59. Classic modern Life by E. Vacandard (2 vols., Paris, 1895); also J. Leclercq, OSB, Saint Bernard Mystique [Bruges, 1948], and many other works of this author. E. *Gilson, La Théologie mystique de Saint Bernard (Études de philosophie médiévale, 20; 1934; Eng. tr., 1940). Saint Bernard théologien: Actes du Congrès de Dijon 15–19 Septembre 1953 (Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis, 9, fascs. 3–4; Rome, 1953). J. Leclercq, Monks and Love in Twelfth-Century France: Psycho-Historical Essays (Oxford, 1979), passim. G. R. Evans, The Mind of St Bernard of Clairvaux (Oxford, 1983). B. Jacqueline, Papauté et Épiscopat selon Saint Bernard de Clairvaux [1963]. A. H. Bredero, Cluny et Cîteaux au douzième siècle: L'Histoire d'une controverse monastique (Amsterdam and Maarssen, 1985). J. R. Sommerfeldt (ed.), Bernardus Magister: Papers Presented at the Nonacentenary Celebration of the Birth of Saint Bernard of Clairvaux, Kalamazoo, Michigan . . . 10–13 May 1990 (Kalamazoo and Cîteaux, 1992). K. Elm (ed.), Bernhard von Clairvaux: Rezeption und Wirkung im Mittelalter und in der Neuzeit (Wolfenbütteler Mittelalter-Studien, 6; 1994). J. de la Croix Bouton, Bibliographie Bernardine 1891–1957 (Commission d'histoire de l'Ordre de Cîteaux, 5 [1958]); E. Manning, Bibliographie Bernardine 1957–1970 (Documentation Cistercienne, 6; Rochefort, 1972). E. Vacandard in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 746–85; J.-M. Canivez, O. Cist., in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 610–44; J. Leclercq, OSB, in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 644–51, s.v. 'Bernhard von Clairvaux'.

Bernard of Chartres (*c.*1080–*c.*1130), grammarian. A canon of *Chartres, he was master in the cathedral school from *c.*1114 (prob. much earlier) and in 1124 Chancellor of the cathedral. A revered teacher of the 'artes', he was as concerned with his pupils' moral growth as with their intellectual development. He honoured the classical authors as giants, with whose support modern scholars could advance still further. He left only a few lines of verse, preserved by *John of Salisbury, whom he taught.

John of Salisbury, Metalogicon, 1. 5, 11, 24; 2. 17; 3. 2, 4; 4. 35, and Polycraticus, 2. 22; 7. 13. E. Jeauneau, 'Lectio Philosophorum': Recherches sur l'école de Chartres (Amsterdam, 1973), pp. 51–73, with refs. R. W. Southern, Medieval Humanism and Other Studies (Oxford, 1970), p. 68.

Bernard of Cluny (*c.*1100–*c.*1150), also called Bernard of Morlás (Dept. Hautes-Pyrénées) or Morval. He is not to be confused with the author of the 11th-cent. Cluniac ordo nor with any of the 12th-cent. priors of *Cluny. Bernard dedicated his major poem, De contemptu mundi, to *Peter the Venerable, and a prefatory letter (datable after 1125) implies that he himself is a Cluniac monk. Several famous hymns by J. M. *Neale derive from the De contemptu mundi, notably 'Jerusalem the Golden'. Bernard's Mariale, which includes 15 hymns to the BVM, was widely current. He wrote five further didactic poems, dedicating one to Pope *Eugenius III (1145–53), and the prose Instructio sacerdotis.

The De contemptu mundi is ed. by T. Wright, The Anglo-Latin Satirical Poets and Epigrammatists of the Twelfth Century, 2 (RS, 1872), pp. 3–102, by H. C. Hoskier (London, 1929), and, with Eng. tr., by R. E. Pepin (Medieval Texts and Studies, 8; East Lansing, Mich. [1991]). Eng. tr. of this and other works attributed to Bernard by H. Preble (Chicago, 1906). The Mariale is ed. by G. M. Dreves in AHMA 50 (1907), pp. 423–82. The poem De vanitate mundi (or 'Carmen ad Rainaldum') is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 184. 1307–14, and the other four poems (identified by A. *Wilmart) are ed. by K. Halvarson (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, Studia Latina Stockholmiensia, 9; 1963). The Instructio sacerdotis is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 184. 771–92. A. Wilmart, OSB, 'Grands poèmes inédits de Bernard le Clunisien', R. Bén. 45 (1933), pp. 249–54; R. C. Petry, 'Mediaeval eschatology and social responsibility in Bernard of Morval's De contemptu mundi', Speculum, 24 (1949), pp. 207–17; G. J. Engelhardt, 'The "De contemptu mundi" of Bernardus Morvalensis', Mediaeval Studies, 22 (1960), pp. 108–35; 26 (1964), pp. 109–42; and 29 (1967), pp. 243–72. Raby, pp. 315–19. M.-T. Disdier, AA, in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 699 f., s.v. 'Bernard de Morlaix'.

Bernard, John Henry (1860–1927), successively Abp. of *Dublin and Provost of *Trinity College, Dublin. He came of a Kerry family and was born in Bengal. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he was elected to a fellowship in 1884 and an important lectureship in Divinity in 1886. In his earlier years, when his interests were as much philosophical as theological, he collaborated with his colleague, J. P. Mahaffy (1839–1919), in his second edition of Kant's Critical Philosophy for English Readers (1889); and in 1892 he published the first English version of Kant's Kritik der Urtheilskraft. Theologically a *High Churchman, he came to fill a prominent place in the life of the Church of *Ireland. In 1911 he became Bp. of Ossory, and in 1915 Abp. of Dublin; and he played a notable part in the Convention on the self-government of Ireland, where he was one of the official representatives of the Protestant Church (1916–18). In 1919 he succeeded Mahaffy as Provost of Trinity College, successfully piloting the College through the revolution and its aftermath. His scholarly editions and commentaries include an English version of 'The Pilgrimage of Silvia' (see EGERIA) for the Palestine Pilgrims' Text Society (1891), the Irish Liber Hymnorum (with R. Atkinson, HBS, 13 and 14, 1898), and commentaries on the *Pastoral Epp. (Camb. Bible, 1899) and, his most considerable work, on St John's Gospel (posthumously ed. A. H. McNeile, 2 vols., ICC, 1928). His work was marked by accuracy and sound judgement rather than originality.

Life by R. H. Murray (London, 1931). On his family, see Bernard's own work, The Bernards of Kerry (Dublin, 1922). E. J. Gwynn in DNB, 1922–1930 (1937), pp. 78–91.

Bernardines. The title popularly given to the 'Reformed Congregation of St *Bernard', i.e. the Italian branch of the *Feuillants (q.v.).

Bernardino of Siena, St (1380–1444), *Franciscan reformer, 'the Apostle of the Holy Name'. Born at Massa Marittima, a town of which his father was then governor, he became a Franciscan friar at the age of 22 and in 1438 was elected Vicar General of the Friars of the Strict *Observance in Italy. A preacher of great eloquence, to whom, said *Pius II, men listened as they might have listened to St *Paul, he made it his chief aim to regenerate the age in which he lived. He was responsible for moral reforms in many cities, and by the time of his death, although accused of heretical views on many occasions, he was perhaps the most influential religious force in Italy. He was a great promoter of devotion to the Holy *Name of Jesus. Feast day, 20 May.

Works ed. P. Rodulphius, 4 vols., Venice, 1591, and J. de la Haye, OFM, 4 vols., Paris, 1635; crit. edn. studio et cura PP. Collegii S. Bonaventurae (9 vols., Quaracchi, 1950–65). D. Pacetti, OFM, De Sancti Bernardini Senensis Operibus: Ratio Criticae Editionis (ibid., 1947), with details of edns. of vernacular works to date. AASS, Mai. 5 (1685), pp. 257*–318*. Life by Leonard Benvoglienti, dated 8 May 1446, ed. F. Van Ortroy, SJ, Anal. Boll. 21 (1902), pp. 53–80; 'Vie inédite de S. Bernardin de Sienne par un frère mineur, son contemporain', ed. id., ibid. 25 (1906), pp. 304–38. A. M. da Venezia, Vita di S. Bernardino da Siena (Venice, 1745; various later edns.). Modern Lives by P. Thureau-Dangin (Paris, 1896; Eng. tr., 1906), K. Hefele (Freiburg i.B., 1912), A. G. F. Howell (London, 1913), and V. Facchinetti, OFM (Milan, 1933). M. Sticco, Il pensiero di S. Bernardino da Siena [1924]. B. Stasiewski, Der heilige Bernardin von Siena: Untersuchungen über die Quellen seiner Biographien (Franziskanische Studien, Beiheft 13; 1931). M. Sticco and others, S. Bernardino da Siena: Saggi e ricerche pubblicati nel quinto centenario della morte, 1444–1944 (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del S. Cuore, NS 6; 1945). I. Origo, The World of San Bernardino (1963), with bibl. Enciclopedia Bernardiniana: Opera edita per conto del Centro Promotore Generale delle Celebrazioni del VI Centenario della Nascita di S. Bernardino da Siena, 1: Bibliografia, ed. E. d'Angelo [1980]. Bullettino di Studi Bernardiniani (10 vols., Siena, 1935–50). B. Korošak and R. Aprile in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 2 (1962), cols. 1294–321; R. Manselli in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 9 (1967), pp. 215–26; D. Pacetti in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 345–7.

Berne, Theses of. Ten theological propositions compiled by two Berne pastors, F. Kolb and B. *Haller, for the Berne disputation of 6–26 Jan. 1528. The purpose of the disputation, convened on the decision of the City Council, was to establish the Reformation in Berne. The measure was a reaction not only to a religious crisis within Berne itself but also to the Baden disputation of 1526, which had attempted to consolidate Swiss opposition to the Reformation. The Theses express U. *Zwingli's teaching. They were directed against (1) the *Papacy, (2) *Tradition, (3) *Satisfaction, (4) the *Real Presence in the Eucharist, (5) the *Sacrifice of the Mass, (6) Mediation through the Saints, (7) *Purgatory, (8) *Images, (9) and (10) *Celibacy. After being debated by Protestants and RCs, they were embodied in a decree of 7 Feb. 1528 which enforced the Reformation in Berne, thus ending the confessionally isolated position of Zurich within Switzerland.

Text in R. Steck and G. Tobler (eds.), Aktensammlung zur Geschichte der Berner Reformation 1521–1532 (Berne, 1923), pp. 518–21 (no. 1371). Lat. tr. (by Zwingli) in Kidd, pp. 459 f. (no. 217); Eng. tr. in P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, 1 (1877), pp. 365 f., with introd. and bibl., pp. 364 f.; also, with introd., in A. C. Cochrane, Reformed Confessions of the 16th Century (1966), pp. 45–50. L. von Muralt, Die Badener Disputation (Quellen und Abhandlungen zur Schweizerischen Reformationsgeschichte, 3; 1926). K. Guggisberg, Bernische Kirchengeschichte (Berne, 1958), esp. pp. 101–20. I. Backus, The Disputations of Baden, 1526, and Berne, 1528: Neutralizing the Early Church (Studies in Reformed Theology and History, 1, no. 1; Princeton, NJ, 1993), esp. pp. 79–98.

Bérulle, Pierre de (1575–1629), cardinal, diplomat, theologian, and reformer. His family, members of the legal nobility, lived in Paris, where he was educated. He studied theology and was ordained priest in 1599. In the circle around his cousin, Mme *Acarie, he became acquainted with mystical experiences, and he then read the works of the Rheno-Flemish mystics. He went to Spain in 1604 and brought the reformed *Carmelites to Paris. In 1611 he founded the *Oratory on the pattern of that established by St *Philip Neri in 1564. At court, he reconciled Louis XIII with his mother in 1619 but he antagonized *Richelieu by his disapproval of his foreign policy. He negotiated the dispensation necessary for the marriage of *Henrietta Maria to *Charles I in 1625 and accompanied her to England. He was made a cardinal in 1627. In his main work, Discours de l'État et des Grandeurs de Jésus (1623) he expounded his Christocentric spirituality, his devotion to Christ as God-made-man; this led *Urban VIII to describe him as the 'Apostolus Verbi Incarnati'. He formulated a vow of spiritual servitude to Jesus and Mary which he tried to impose on those under his spiritual care, and he initiated a devotion to the Child Jesus. His spiritual teaching dominated the Oratory for the rest of the century.

Works ed. F. Bourgoing, Cong. Orat. (Paris, 1644); repr., with additions, by J. P. *Migne (ibid., 1856); also repr., 2 vols., Montsoult, 1960. Correspondance, ed. J. Dagens (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 17–19; 1937–9), with Essai biographique in vol. 1, pp. ix–xlv. G. Harbert, La Vie du Cardinal de Bérulle (1646). M. Houssaye, M. de Bérulle et les Carmélites de France, 1575–1611 (1872); id., Le Père de Bérulle et l'oratoire de Jésus, 1611–1625 (1874); id., Le Cardinal de Bérulle et le Cardinal de Richelieu, 1625–1629 (1875). A. Molien, Cong. Orat., Le Cardinal de Bérulle (2 vols., 1947). J. Dagens, Bérulle et les origines de la restauration catholique [1952]. R. Bellemare, Le Sens de la créature dans la doctrine de Bérulle [1959]. P. Cochois, Bérulle et l'École Française [1963]. M. Dupoy, Bérulle: Une Spiritualité de l'adoration [1964]; id., Bérulle et le sacerdoce: Étude historique et doctrinale (1969), incl. unpub. texts. J. Orcibal, Le Cardinal de Bérulle: Évolution d'une spiritualité (1965). F. Guillén Preckler, Sch.P., Bérulle aujourd'hui, 1575–1975: Pour une spiritualité du Christ [1978]. Bremond, 3, pp. 3–279; Pourrat, 3, pp. 491–515; L. Cognet, La Spiritualité Moderne, 1 (1966), pp. 210–410. A. Molien in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 1539–81, s.v.

Bessarion (1403–72), cardinal, Greek scholar and statesman. He became a monk in 1423; and after studying under *Gemistos Plethon (1431–6) he was made Metropolitan of *Nicaea in 1437 by the Emp. John VIII Palaeologus. He accompanied the latter to the Council of Ferrara-*Florence, where in the course of the debates he was persuaded by the Latins' arguments and became an ardent advocate of the union of the Latin and Greek Churches. While he was still at sea on his way home, he was created a cardinal by Pope *Eugenius IV (1439). In *Constantinople the union was unpopular but, although many repudiated it, Bessarion remained in communion with Rome and shortly afterwards returned to Italy (1440). There he gained the patronage of Eugenius IV and his successors, fulfilled important ecclesiastical missions, and was nearly elected Pope. In 1463 *Pius II appointed him Patriarch of Constantinople (since 1453 in the hands of the Turks) and from Viterbo he addressed an Encyclical Letter to his flock to encourage them and explain his own position in respect of the union of the Churches.

Bessarion was an enthusiastic scholar and patron of scholars, and among his protégés were T. Gaza, D. Chalcondyles, and J. and C. Lascaris, all of whom played a prominent part in the revival of Greek studies in the Italian Renaissance. He himself translated into Latin *Aristotle's 'Metaphysics' and Xenophon's 'Memorabilia', and among other works he wrote a treatise 'In Calumniatorem Platonis', directed against the Aristotelian views of George of Trebizond, and a treatise on the Eucharist. Bessarion bequeathed his library, notable for its large collection of Greek and Latin MSS, to the Senate of Venice, where it became the foundation of the *Marciana.

Works in J. P. Migne, PG 160 and 161.137–746. L. Mohler, Kardinal Bessarion als Theologe, Humanist und Staatsmann (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, 20, 22, and 24; 1923–42), incl. Gk. text, with a Lat. tr., of his 'In Calumniatorem Platonis libri IV' and 'De Sacramento Eucharistiae'. His 'Oratio Dogmatica de Unione' ed., with introd., by E. Candal, SJ (Concilium Florentinum, Documenta et Scriptores, Series B, 7, fasc. 1; Rome, 1958); and his 'De Spiritus Sancti Processione ad Alexium Lascarin Philanthropinum' ed. id. (ibid. 7, fasc. 2; 1961). H. Vast, Le Cardinal Bessarion (1403–1473): Étude sur la chrétienté et la renaissance vers le milieu du XV^e siècle (1878). H. D. Saffrey [OP], 'Notes Autographes du Cardinal Bessarion dans un Manuscrit de Munich' Byzantion, 35 (1965), pp. 536–63. L. Labowsky, Bessarion's Library and the Biblioteca Marciana: Six Early Inventories (Sussidi Eruditi, 31; 1979). Miscellanea Marciana di Studi Bessarionei (a coronamento del V Centenario della donazione nicena) (Medioevo e Umanesimo, 24; Padua, 1976). J. Gill, SJ, 'Was Bessarion a conciliarist or a unionist before the Council of Florence?', in Collectanea Byzantina (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 204; Rome, 1977), pp. 201–16. N. G. Wilson, From Byzantium to Italy (1992), esp. pp. 57–67. L. Bréhier in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 1181–99; L. Labowsky in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 9 (1967), pp. 686–96, with extensive bibl.; J. Gill, SJ, in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 725–30, s.v.

beth (Heb. בַּיִת, a 'house'). A word often occurring in biblical place-names. See following entries.

Bethabara. Acc. to Jn. 1: 28 (AV), the place 'beyond *Jordan' where St *John the Baptist baptized, and thus presumably the scene of Christ's *Baptism. It is possibly the modern ford 'Abarah', N. of Beisan; but (1) 'abarah' means only 'crossing', and (2) many important MSS, followed by the RV, read '*Bethany beyond Jordan', and this is almost certainly the correct text.

For readings of the different MSS, see comm. on Jn. F. M. Abel, OP, Géographie de la Palestine, 2 (1938), pp. 264 f. C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg, 1959), pp. 153–66; Eng. tr. as The Holy Places of the Gospels (1963), pp. 113–29. A. Barrois, OP, in Dict. Bibl. suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 968–70, s.v. 'Béthanie'.

Bethany. The village of Sts *Martha and *Mary and *Lazarus (Jn. 11: 1), about two miles (Jn. 11: 18) from *Jerusalem, on the SE slopes of the Mount of *Olives (Mk. 11: 1). There Christ supped with Simon (Mk. 14: 3), and lodged during the week before His Passion (Mt. 21: 17). Its modern name is 'Azaryah, i.e. 'the place of Lazarus'. 'Bethany beyond Jordan' (Jn. 1: 28 RV) is another village.

F. M. Abel, OP, Géographie de la Palestine, 2 (1938), pp. 266 f., with refs. P. Benoit, OP, and M. E. Boismard, OP, 'Un Ancien Sanctuaire chrétien à Béthanie', R. Bibl. 58 (1951), pp. 200–51. S. J. Saller, OFM, Excavations at Bethany (1949–1953) (Publications of the Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, 12; Jerusalem, 1957). J. Murphy-O'Connor, OP, The Holy Land (2nd edn., Oxford, 1986), pp. 115–18 [popular guidebook].

Bethel (lit., Heb. 'House of God'). (1) A major sanctuary to the north of *Jerusalem. Acc. to Gen. 28: 10–22, God appeared here in a dream to *Jacob, who thereupon erected the stone on which his head had rested as a sacred pillar. On the division of the Hebrew Kingdom after the death of *Solomon (*c.*930 BC), Jeroboam I, the first ruler of the independent northern kingdom (*Israel), set up a 'golden calf' here (1 Kgs. 12: 28 f.), the worship continuing (cf. Am. 7: 10–13) until King Josiah abolished sacrificial worship at all sanctuaries except Jerusalem in 621.

(2) The small town near Bielefeld in Westphalia which gives the popular name to the Bodelschwinghsche Stiftungen. These consist of homes for epileptics, training centres for deaconesses and male nurses, and a college for Protestant theological students. The aim of their founder, the *Lutheran pastor Friedrich Bodelschwingh (1831–1910), was to relieve the lot of the mentally defective by giving them a share in the work of the community acc. to their capacity and by providing for their spiritual needs. At the same time Bethel furnished a staff of men and women willing and able to help in the social activities of the Lutheran Church. See also INNERE MISSION.

(3) A name used, esp. by certain *Methodists and *Baptists, for a place of religious worship.

On (1) F. M. Abel, OP, Géographie de la Palestine, 2 (1938), pp. 270 f., with refs. to earlier lit. J. L. Kelso, The Excavation of Bethel (1934–1960), with chs. by W. F. Albright and others (Annual of the American Schools of Oriental Research, 39; Cambridge, Mass., 1968), incl. ch. on 'The History of Bethel', pp. 45–53. J. L. Kelso in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 1 (Jerusalem and New York [1993]), pp. 192–4, s.v.

Bethesda. A pool at *Jerusalem (Jn. 5: 2; but some important MSS read 'Bethzatha' or similar variant) believed to possess miraculous properties connected with a periodical disturbance of the water. It has been variously identified, e.g. with the 'Virgin's Pool' SE of the *Temple, where a spring still bubbles intermittently.

J. Jeremias, Die Wiederentdeckung von Bethesda, Johannes, 5, 2 (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, NS 41; 1949; rev. Eng. tr., New Testament Archaeology Monograph, 1; Louisville, Ky., 1966). D. J. Wieand, 'John v. 2 and the Pool of Bethesda', New Testament Studies, 12 (1966), pp. 392–404; W. D. Davies, The Gospel and the Land (1974), pp. 302–13. B. Lindars, SSF, The Gospel of John (New Cent. Bib. [1972]), pp. 212 f. See also other comm. to Jn.

Bethlehem. The small town five miles S. of *Jerusalem which was the native city of King *David and the birthplace of Christ. About half of the inhabitants are now Christian. It contains one of the oldest churches in Christendom, the 'Church of the Holy Nativity', built by *Constantine in 330 upon the supposed site of the Holy Birth. In spite of rebuilding by *Justinian in the 6th cent., much of the original church survives, including a mosaic pavement unearthed in 1934. Both the Orthodox and Latin Churches have rights within it. For the Council of Bethlehem (1672), see JERUSALEM, SYNOD OF.

L. H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Bethléem: Le Sanctuaire de la Nativité (1914). L. H. Vincent, OP, 'Bethléem. Le Sanctuaire de la Nativité d'après les fouilles récentes', R. Bibl. 45 (1936), pp. 544–74, and 46 (1937), pp. 93–121. B. Bagatti, OFM, Gli antichi Edifici Sacri di Betlemme (Pubblicazioni dello Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, 9; Jerusalem 1952). R. W. Hamilton, The Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem: A Guide (Jerusalem, 1947). C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg, 1959), pp. 11–85; abridged Eng. tr., The Holy Places of the Gospels (1963), pp. 1–47. J. [D.] Wilkinson, Jerusalem Pilgrims before the Crusades (Warminster [1977]), pp. 151 f. M. Stekelis and others in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 1 (Jerusalem and New York [1993]), pp. 203–10, s.v.

Bethlehemites. The name of several orders of religious. *Matthew Paris attests the existence at Cambridge of a military order dedicated to Our Lady of Bethlehem in 1257. Two centuries later *Pius II founded a military order, dedicated to the 'Blessed Virgin Mary of Bethlehem', for the defence of the Aegean against the Turks after the fall of *Constantinople in 1453. Another order of Bethlehemites, or 'Belemites', was established c. 1655 in Guatemala for the purposes of tending the sick and education. None of these survives. In 1976 an order of monks and nuns of Bethlehem was founded in France and has spread to other countries. They are *Carthusian in inspiration, but have a special interest in religious art. See also BEDLAM.

J. M. Besse, OSB, in CE 2 (1907), pp. 534–6; D. [M.] *Knowles, A. Martínez Cuesta, and J. Berdonces in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 1420–5, s.v. 'Betlemiti'.

Bethphage. A village on the Mount of *Olives near *Bethany, with which it is usually associated in the NT (Mk. 11: 1; Lk. 19: 29). Its site is uncertain, but it is traditionally located on the road linking Bethany and el Tur.

F. M. Abel, OP, Géographie de la Palestine, 2 (1938), p. 279, with refs. S. J. Saller, OFM, and E. Testa, OFM, The Archaeological Setting of the Shrine of Bethphage (Publications of the Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, Smaller Series, 1; Jerusalem, 1961). C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg, 1959), pp. 323–32; abridged Eng. tr., The Holy Places of the Gospels (1963), pp. 267–77; J. [D.] Wilkinson, Jerusalem Pilgrims before the Crusades (Warminster [1977]), pp. 152 f.

Bethsaida (lit. 'House of Fishing'). A town on the E. bank of the *Jordan where it enters the Sea of Galilee; its site has not been precisely identified. It was a predominantly Gentile city, and rebuilt by Herod Philip the tetrarch (d. AD 33 or 34), who renamed it 'Julias' in honour of the Roman Imperial house. Christ visited it in the course of His ministry (Mk. 8: 22, Lk. 9: 10). It has been suggested that 'Bethsaida of Galilee' (Jn. 12: 21), the home of the disciples *Philip, *Peter, and *Andrew (Jn. 1: 44), was a different place, and that, if so, this would be the city referred to at Mk. 6: 45.

F. M. Abel, OP, Géographie de la Palestine, 2 (1938), pp. 279 f., with refs. C. Kopp (Eng. tr. by J. Watt), 'Christian Sites around the Sea of Galilee. II. Bethsaida and El-Minyeh', Dominican Studies, 3 (1950), pp. 10–40. J. [D.] Wilkinson, Jerusalem Pilgrims before the Crusades (Warminster [1977]), p. 153.

Bethune, David. See BEATON, DAVID.

betrothal. A free promise of future marriage between two persons. In origin the Christian betrothal ceremonies date back, both in their Jewish and Roman counterparts, to the custom of 'wife purchase'. The giving of a ring is an earnest of the man's good faith. In many countries formal betrothal before witnesses is still the custom, but in England the Church has ceased to exercise any authority in the matter. See also MATRIMONY.

betting and gambling. A gamble is a contract whereby the loss or gain of something of value is made wholly dependent on an uncertain event. If either of the contracting parties is in a state of certainty about the event, the gamble is invalid and fraudulent. The common forms of a gamble are bets, games of chance, and lotteries. The morality of gambling, considered as a species of recreation, is debated. Some hold it to be always illicit, but the majority of Christians regard it as permissible, though highly open to abuse. Among the latter there is agreement that for a gamble to be allowable it must conform to certain conditions. It must not be about an unlawful matter, e.g. one may not bet someone that he will not get drunk; the stake must not be excessive; and it must be for some end other than mere avarice, e.g. recreation. There is now no explicit RC law proscribing it, though habitual gambling was long forbidden to the clergy. The Council of *Elvira (can. 79) condemns dice, perhaps because of their pagan associations. St *Alphonsus Liguori considers every bet at least a venial sin; but this is not the view of most RC theologians. The peculiar nature of the gambling contract and its doubtful morality are recognized by most civil codes of law, which do not allow the winner to sue at law for his gains. On the other hand they recognize it to the extent that they do not allow the loser, once he has paid, to sue for the recovery of his losses.

R. C. Mortimer, Gambling (1933). Gambling: An Ethical Discussion. A Report of the Social and Industrial Commission of the Church Assembly (1950).

Beuno, St (d. *c.*640), Abbot of Clynnog. He is the subject of many legends and superstitions, from which it seems impossible to disentangle any certain history. He is said to have founded monasteries in Herefordshire, but his chief mission work is believed to have been in N. Wales, where his tomb was long venerated at Clynnog Fawr (Caernarfonshire and Merionethshire). He is supposed to have restored to life St *Winifred, his niece. He is the titular saint of the modern Jesuit College at St Asaph, Denbighshire. Feast day, 21 Apr.

There is a Welsh Life of St Beuno (Buchedd Beuno), of which the earliest MS dates from 1346; text ed. J. Morris Jones and J. Rhŷs, The Elucidarium and other tracts in Welsh from Llyvyr Agkyr Llandewivrevi (Anecdota Oxoniensia, Oxford, 1894), pp. 105–18, and by A. W. Wade-Evans, Vitae Sanctorum Britanniae et Genealogiae (Board of Celtic Studies, University of Wales, History and Law Series, 9; Cardiff, 1944), pp. 16–22. Eng. tr. with notes by id., 'Beuno Sant', Archaeologia Cambrensis, 85 (1930), pp. 315–41. J. H. Pollen, SJ, 'Traces of a Great Welsh Saint', The Month, 80 (1894), pp. 235–47.

Beuron, Abbey of. The mother abbey of the 'Beuron Congregation' of *Benedictine monks in Hohenzollern, on the upper Danube. The present abbey was constituted in 1863, and the monastic *congregation established in 1873, though there were *Augustinian canons at Beuron as far back as the 11th cent. It has become famous through its work for *liturgical reform, in which it has been esp. assisted by its daughter abbey of *Maria Laach, and the creation of a school of religious art. Until 1920 the now separated Belgian abbeys of *Maredsous and Mont-César (at Louvain) belonged to the Beuron Congregation.

K. T. Zingeler, Geschichte des Klosters Beuron im Donauthale (1890; on the Augustinian foundation). The present Benedictine Monastery is described in O. Wolff, OSB, Beuron: Bilder und Erinnerungen aus dem Mönchsleben der Jetztzeit (1889; 6th edn., 1923). 'Regula S. Patris Benedicti, Abbatis et Monachorum Patriarchae, cum constitutionibus congregationis Beuronensis', Archiv für katholisches Kirchenrecht, 54 (1885), pp. 78–114. J. Kreitmaier, Beuroner Kunst: Eine Ausdrucksform der christlichen Mystik (3rd edn., 1921). S. Mayer, OSB, Benediktinisches Ordensrecht in der Beuroner Kongregation (4 vols., Beuron, 1929–30). Id., Beuroner Bibliographie: Schriftsteller und Künstler während der ersten hundert Jahre des Benediktinerklosters Beuron 1863–1963 (ibid., 1963). Festschrift zum hundertjährigen Bestehen der Erzabtei St Martin, Beuron (ibid., 1963). V. E. Fiala, OSB, 'Die besondere Ausprägung des Benediktinischen Mönchtums in der Beuroner Kongregation', R. Bén. 83 (1973), pp. 181–228. The periodical Benediktinische Monatsschrift zur Pflege religiösen und geistigen Lebens is pub. from Beuron (1919 ff.). V. E. Fiala, OSB, in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 1427–36, s.v.

Beveridge, William (1637–1708), Bp. of *St Asaph. Educated at St John's College, Cambridge, he was ordained both deacon and priest in Jan. 1661 and immediately became Vicar of Ealing. In 1672 he published his Συνοδικόν, a collection of Greek canons, which contained an abundance of (in places misguided) erudition. In the same year he became Vicar of St Peter's Cornhill, where he had a daily service and a Eucharist every Sunday. In 1681 he became Archdeacon of Colchester and in 1684 Prebendary of *Canterbury. When T. *Ken was deprived in 1691, Beveridge was offered (but through his *nonjuring sympathies declined) the vacated see of *Bath and Wells; and was not again offered a bishopric until 1704, when he became Bp. of St Asaph. As bishop he was sympathetic towards the Welsh language, and he was a strong supporter of the *SPCK, the translation of whose publications into Welsh he encouraged. His Private Thoughts upon Religion (posthumous, 1709) places him among the spiritual writers of the century, while the translation of several of his works into Welsh after his death witnesses to his continued influence.

Collected edns. of his Works [by T. Gregory] (2 vols., fol., London, 1720), T. H. Horne (9 vols., ibid., 1824), and J. Bliss (LACT, 12 vols., 1843–8); all incomplete. A. B. Grosart in DNB 4 (1885), pp. 447 f., s.v.

Beverley Minster. The minster, which stands on the site of a Saxon church founded by St *John of Beverley (d. 721) and is held to be one of the finest examples of early Gothic architecture in Britain, is now a parish church. In the 10th cent. a college of secular canons was established here. The existing building was constructed after the destruction of the earlier church by fire in 1188. At the *Reformation the minster survived until the Dissolution of Colleges Act 1547, as it was in the hands of secular canons. In 1713 a restoration prevented it from falling into ruin.

W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 2 (1819 edn.), pp. 128–30, and 6 (pt. 2; 1830), pp. 1306–12. G. Poulson, Beverlac; or, The Antiquities and History of the Town of Beverley, 2 (1829), pp. 513–720; G. Oliver, The History and Antiquities of the Town and Minster of Beverley (1829). C. Hiatt, Beverley Minster (1898). A. Hamilton Thompson, in VCH, Yorkshire, 2 (1913), pp. 353–9; K. [R.] Miller and others, Beverley (Royal Commission on Historical Monuments, England, suppl. ser. 4; 1982), pp. 7–15, with refs.

Beyschlag, Willibald (1823–1900), German Evangelical theologian. In 1856 he became Court Preacher at Karlsruhe and in 1860 Professor of Pastoral Theology at Halle. One of the leading exponents of the '*Vermittlungstheologie', he rejected the *Chalcedonian Christology, but strongly attacked the rationalistic doctrines of E. *Renan and D. F. *Strauss. In his later years he took a prominent part in ecclesiastical politics. After 1870 he helped to draw up the new constitution of the Prussian Church, and he supported the Prussian Government in the *Kulturkampf, partly by lending his aid to the cause of the '*Old Catholics'. He was also one of the chief agents in founding the *Evangelischer Bund. His writings include Karl Immanuel Nitzsch (1871), Der Altkatholizismus (3rd edn., 1883), Leben Jesu (2 vols., 1885–6), Neutestamentliche Theologie (2 vols., 1891; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1895) and Aus meinem Leben: Erinnerungen und Erfahrungen der jüngeren Jahre (2 vols., Halle, 1896–9).

K. H. Pahncke, Willibald Beyschlag: Ein Gedenkblatt zur 5jähr. Wiederkehr seines Todestages (am 25.xi.1900). Auf Grund von Tagenbüchern, Briefen und eigenen Erinnerungen (Tübingen, 1905). Id. in PRE (3rd edn.), 23 (1913), pp. 192–203.

Beza, Theodore (1519–1605), *Calvinist theologian. De Bèze (the original form of his name) came from an old Catholic family of Vézelay in Burgundy. He was educated by his tutor M. Wolmar, first at Orléans, later at Bourges, where Wolmar became a Protestant and made his house a centre of the new religion, J. *Calvin being one of its most frequent guests. In 1534 Wolmar returned to Germany, and from 1535 to 1539 Beza studied law at Orléans with a view to embracing an ecclesiastical career. Having soon abandoned this plan he went to *Paris, where he wrote the Poemata Juvenilia (1548), later editions of which he partly expurgated. In 1548 he officially renounced the Catholic religion and went to *Geneva, where he formally married Claudine Denosses, with whom he had concluded a clandestine marriage in 1544. In 1549 he became professor of Greek at Lausanne. In 1554 he defended the burning of M. *Servetus at Geneva in his treatise De Haereticis a civili Magistratu Puniendis. In 1558 Calvin offered him a professorship at the newly founded academy at Geneva, a post which Beza held until 1595. In 1559 he published his Confession de la foi chrétienne, an exposition of Calvinist beliefs which was translated into Latin in 1560 and into several vernacular languages shortly afterwards. In 1561 he completed the edition of the Psalms begun by C. *Marot and in the same year he took a prominent part in the colloquy between Catholics and *Huguenots at *Poissy, urging the Huguenots not to accept a compromise solution. In 1562 when civil war broke out in France between the two religious groups, Beza tried to procure men and arms from the Protestant German princes. He returned to Geneva in 1563 and on the death of Calvin in 1564 succeeded him as head of the Genevan Church and leader of the Calvinist movement in Europe. He was involved in numerous theological controversies. In the 1550s and 1560s he disputed with S. *Castellio about free-will, and he defended the orthodox doctrine of the Trinity against L. *Socinus, G. Biandrata, and others. In defence of the view that the Holy Spirit makes Christ's Divine (but not His human) nature present to the faithful in the *Eucharist, between 1559 and 1593 Beza produced a series of writings against the Lutheran *Ubiquitarians, notably J. *Brenz, J. Westphal, and J. *Andreae. In 1571 he presided over the National Synod of La Rochelle which marked the consolidation of the French Huguenot Church. In his Du Droit des magistrats, published anonymously in 1574, Beza went against most political thinkers of his time in asserting that lower-placed government officials had the right to overthrow a tyrannical ruler. He is usually considered to have hardened Calvin's doctrine of *predestination by arguing (in his 'Tabula Praedestinationis' of 1555 and elsewhere) that even the *Fall was part of God's eternal plan; it followed the election of some to salvation and others to damnation, the atoning death of Christ being offered only for the former.

Beza's NT went through five editions during his lifetime. In 1556 he published an annotated Latin translation of the NT, adding the Greek text in 1565. The work was intended to replace *Erasmus' Greek text, Latin translation, and annotations which Beza considered doctrinally and textually unsound. In fact, his own Greek text, although based on R. *Stephanus' edition of 1550, on variants collected by H. Stephanus and on a number of hitherto unknown MSS, incl. (from 1582) the *Codex Bezae and the *Peshitta, differed little from Erasmus'. The principal differences lay in his Latin translation and in his detailed textual and theological annotations. The work remained influential all over Europe in the 17th cent., providing one of the chief sources for the translators of the AV.

See also CODEX BEZAE.

Some of his treatises and letters were collected by Beza and pub. as Tractationes Theologicae (3 vols., Geneva, 1570–82). Crit. edn. of his Correspondance collected by H. Aubert and pub. by F. Aubert and others (Geneva, 1960 ff., in the series Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance). Modern edns. of the Histoire ecclésiastique des Églises réformées au Royaume de France (compiled by Beza from memoirs sent to him from all over France, 1580) by G. Baum and E. Cunitz (3 vols., Paris, 1883–9), of Beza's Chrestiennes Méditations by M. Richter (Textes Littéraires Français, 113; 1964), of Abraham Sacrifiant by K. Cameron, K. M. Hall, and F. Higman (ibid. 135; 1967), of Du droit des magistrats by R. M. Kingdon (Classiques de la Pensée Politique, 7; '1970' [1971]), and of a student's notes on his lectures on Rom. and Heb., 1564–66, by P. Fraenkel and L. Perrotet (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 226; 1988). Lives by F. C. Schlosser (Heidelberg, 1809), J. W. Baum ([only to 1563], 2 vols., Berlin, 1843–51), H. Heppe (Elberfeld, 1861), and P.-F. Geisendorf (Geneva, 1949). W. Kickel, Vernunft und Offenbarung bei Theodor Beza: Zum Problem des Verhältnisses von Theologie, Philosophie und Staat (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 25; 1967). J. Raitt, The Eucharistic Theology of Theodore Beza: Development of the Reformed Doctrine (American Academy of Religion, Studies in Religion, 4; Chambersburg, Pa., 1972). J. S. Bray, Theodore Beza's Doctrine of Predestination (Bibliotheca Humanistica & Reformatorica, 12; Nieuwkoop, 1975). T. Maruyama, The Ecclesiology of Theodore Beza: The Reform of the True Church (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 166; Geneva, 1978). I. D. Backus, The Reformed Roots of the English New Testament: The Influence of Theodore Beza on the English New Testament (Pittsburgh Theological Monograph Series, 28; Pittsburgh, 1980). F. Gardy, Bibliographie des œuvres théologiques, littéraires, historiques et juridiques de Théodore de Bèze (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 41; 1960). E. Choisy, L'État chrétien à Genève au temps de Théodore de Bèze (1903). J. Raitt in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 765–74, s.v.

BFBS. See BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Biasca Sacramentary. The oldest surviving MS (10th cent.), of the *Ambrosian rite. It is preserved at Milan in the *Ambrosiana (A. 24 bis inf.).

Crit. edn. by O. Heiming (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 51, etc.; 1969 ff.), with bibl.

Bible. (1) Word. The word 'Bible' is derived through the Fr. and Lat. from the Gk. βιβλία, 'books', used in the *Septuagint in such expressions as 'the Books of the Law' (1 Macc. 1: 56) and 'the holy Books' (1 Macc. 12: 9). The usual Gk. word (NT, *Philo, *Josephus) for the Jewish sacred writings, however, was not βιβλία but γραφαί ('scriptures'). But whereas γραφαί was translated into Lat. (scripturae), βιβλία was transliterated; and 'Biblia' thus became a new and distinctive term for the Holy Scriptures, denoting, as its plural form shows, a collection of books. As the biblical books were increasingly considered a unity, the word (orig. neut. pl.) came to be understood as a fem. sing., whence the Eng. 'Bible', Fr. la Bible, etc.

(2) The Jewish Scriptures. The Jews classified their Scriptures in three groups: (a) the Law (*Torah), (b) the Prophets, and (c) other Books, known collectively as the 'Writings'. The Law comprised the *Pentateuch or 'Five Books of Moses' (Gen., Exod., Lev., Num., Deut.), regarded as on a higher level than all the rest. The 'Prophets' fell into two groups, the 'Former Prophets' (Josh., Jgs., 1 and 2 Sam., and 1 and 2 Kgs.) and the 'Latter Prophets' (Is., Jer., Ezek., and the Twelve *Minor Prophets). The inclusion of the 'Former Prophets', properly historical Books, among the Prophets accords with the modern view which sees in them history written from an essentially prophetic point of view. The 'Writings' comprised all the remaining Books of the English OT (Ruth, 1 and 2 Chron., Ez., Neh., Est., Job, Pss., Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs, and Dan.) as well as some others, e.g. Ecclus., Tob., Macc., which the Jews later rejected. By the time of Christ, Jews everywhere recognized the Law and the Prophets as holy Scripture, but the exact compass of the 'Writings' was still undefined. While some, e.g. the Pss., were universally received, others, e.g. Est., which were later officially accepted, were still disputed, and others again, e.g. Ecclus., which were later rejected, were not yet definitely excluded. The *canon of the Jewish Scriptures was perhaps settled at about the end of the first century AD, though some scholars favour a rather later date.

(3) The Greek Old Testament. Before the Christian era the Hebrew Scriptures, including some which were later rejected from the canon, had been translated into Greek for the use of Greek-speaking Jews. This Greek Bible was extended by the inclusion of other Jewish writings of a similar kind, e.g. Wisd. Sol., which were not translations but original Greek compositions. The version of this Greek Bible in most general use was the Septuagint (q.v.). As soon as Christianity won its footing in the Hellenistic world, this was the version in which Christians received the Jewish Scriptures; hence it was the first Christian Bible. The early separation of Christianity from Judaism caused the Christian canon before long to differ from that of the Jews. The Jewish rejection of certain books c. AD 100 was unheeded by the Church, which continued to reckon all books in the Septuagint as Scripture. It was only at a later date that the Church became generally conscious of its divergence here from Judaism. Then the Church designated those Books (or parts of Books) which were not in the Hebrew canon as 'Deuterocanonical' or (as in the AV and RV) as *Apocrypha. They include some, e.g. Ecclus., Tob., Judith, 1 Macc., which it is fairly or quite certain were translations from the Heb. and others, e.g. Wisd. Sol. and 2 Macc., which are more probably original compositions by Jewish authors in Greek. Besides the Septuagint, other versions (*Symmachus, *Aquila, *Theodotion) also circulated to some extent among the Greek-speaking Jews and in the early Christian Church.

(4) The New Testament. During the 2nd cent. the Christian Church came to regard certain of her own writings, esp. if of Apostolic origin, as of equal authority and inspiration to those she had inherited from Judaism (cf. the collocation of St *Paul's Epp. with 'the other scriptures' in 2 Pet. 3: 16). The canon (q.v.) of the NT, based on the four Gospels and the Epp. of St Paul, came into existence largely without definition. It was prob. formally fixed at *Rome in 382, when the Christian OT canon (based on the Septuagint) was also defined. At *Alexandria the present canon is already found in St *Athanasius' Festal Ep. for 367.

(5) The Latin Bible, the Apocrypha, and other Versions. Many early Latin versions of parts of the Bible ('*Old Latin') came into use in the Christian Church, esp. in Africa and Italy. The OT Books were translated, not from the Hebrew but from the Greek. To remedy the confusion created by a variety of translations, St *Jerome, encouraged by Pope *Damasus, revised the Gospels and subsequently made a fresh translation of the OT, wherever possible from the Hebrew original. St Jerome's version (the '*Vulgate', q.v.), which was given formal recognition at the Council of *Trent (sess. 4), became the authoritative Latin translation of the Bible in the RC Church.

Jerome's task necessarily drew his attention to the Deuterocanonical Books not found in the Heb. Bible. He himself sought to exclude them from the Christian canon ('libri canonici') as 'libri ecclesiastici' or Apocrypha. But though frequent doubts as to their status continued to be raised, the Latin Church retained them and finally settled their authority at Trent (sess. 4). At the Reformation, the Protestants in their vernacular versions either omitted the Apocrypha altogether or placed them in a separate section between the OT and the NT. At the Synod of *Jerusalem in 1672 the E. Church, which had hitherto continued to use the Septuagint canon, but with some doubts about certain of the Deuterocanonical Books, rejected all but four (Tob., Judith, Ecclus., and Wisd.), though retaining the full LXX text of Jer., Dan., and Est.

For the ancient versions other than the Septuagint and Vulgate, see SYRIAC, COPTIC, ETHIOPIC; for the principal English versions, see foll. entry and refs. there given; for translations into other modern languages, see under the names of the translators (M. *Luther, T. *Beza, etc.).

(6) Authority and Interpretation. The respect shown by Christ and the Apostolic Church to the Scriptures of Judaism forms the basis of the Christian attitude to the Bible. The OT Scriptures, regarded as inspired by the Holy Spirit (Lk. 24: 44, 2 Tim. 3: 15 f.) were seen as a revelation of God and a preparation for the coming of Christ, which in various ways they foretold (Heb. 1: 1 f.). Many OT ordinances were superseded, but the OT as a whole remained authoritative. Its message was completed by the NT, so that the two together formed a single and final revelation.

In patristic times the most serious challenge to this view of the Bible was that of *Marcion (q.v.), who repudiated the OT and accepted only part of what later came to constitute the NT. After the failure of Marcion's challenge the authority of the Bible was everywhere accepted. The other great heretics (e.g. *Arius) took a common stand with the orthodox and appealed to both OT and NT in support of their doctrines. In the matter of interpretation, *allegorical methods were much in use in the patristic, medieval, and Reformation periods, but the literal sense generally exercised control in matters of doctrine. The Reformers benefited from Renaissance humanist scholarship as they insisted more strongly on the priority of the literal and 'historical' (i.e. Christological) sense and appealed to Scripture against ecclesiastical tradition. But Luther's flexible Christocentric interpretation soon became petrified into theories of verbal inerrancy, and both Catholics and Protestants shared a common view of inspiration that insisted on the truth of the biblical statements, not only in matters of history, doctrine, and ethics, but also cosmology and natural science. Thus the heliocentric teaching of *Galileo was condemned as heretical.

Modern science and philosophy, esp. *Cartesianism, challenged this position from without, and in the 18th cent. modern linguistic, *text-critical, and historical study undermined it from within biblical scholarship itself. The critical radicalism of the English *Deists was combined in 19th-cent. German Protestantism with a sense of historical development and newer methods for reconstructing history (*source criticism). In 19th-cent. England it was geology and evolutionary theories that did most to shake biblical authority. Hostility to any notion of a supernatural revelation on the part of some critics of orthodoxy evoked a series of robust responses from those who maintained more traditional theologies, and the resulting polarization has been characteristic of the development of biblical criticism to the present day. By the end of the 19th cent., however, archaeology was making its mark and *higher criticism was widely accepted in the Protestant Churches of Europe and North America. Two important reactions against biblical criticism were the suppression of RC *Modernism by *Pius X and the emergence of *Fundamentalism in the United States of America. But following the encyclical '*Divino Afflante Spiritu' (1943) of *Pius XII RC biblical scholarship progressed more openly and since the Second *Vatican Council has played a major role. Evangelical scholarship has also developed and, despite continuing opposition to rational enquiry in Fundamentalist circles, the old hostilities have largely subsided. Newer literary approaches have directed attention away from the more contentious questions of historicity, and in recent years an interpretative pluralism has emerged.

See also BIBLICAL COMMISSION, BIBLICAL THEOLOGY, CANON OF SCRIPTURE, FORM CRITICISM, HISTORICAL JESUS, QUEST OF THE, MANUSCRIPTS OF THE BIBLE, TEXTUAL CRITICISM, and articles on individual biblical Books and persons, and on biblical scholars.

TEXTS. Edns. of the Hebrew OT by K. Elliger and W. Rudolph, Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia (1977; 2nd edn., 1983); Greek NT by B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort (1881); E. B. *Nestle (1898, 27th edn. by B. and K. Aland, 1993); A. *Souter (1910; 2nd edn., 1947; text that underlying RV, apparatus only due to Souter); K. Aland and others (1966; 4th edn. by B. Aland and others, 1993). For edns. of the Septuagint and Vulgate, see s.vv. For Eng. versions see foll. entry.

DICTIONARIES. J. *Hastings (ed.), A Dictionary of the Bible (4 vols., Edinburgh, 1898–1902, and extra vol., 1904; still useful); T. K. *Cheyne and J. S. Black (eds.), Encyclopaedia Biblica (4 vols., 1899–1903; with some excellent and original articles but often erratic); F. Vigouroux (ed.), Dictionnaire de la Bible (5 vols., 1891–1912) and Supplément (ed. L. Pirot and others, 1928 ff.); G. A. Buttrick (ed.), The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible (4 vols., Nashville and New York [1962], and suppl. vol., ed. K. Crim [1976]); D. N. Freedman and others (eds.), The Anchor Bible Dictionary (6 vols. [1992]); B. M. Metzger and M. D. Coogan (eds.), The Oxford Companion to the Bible (New York and Oxford, 1993).

COMMENTARIES. Complete comm. ed. by A. S. *Peake (q.v., 1919; the 1962 edn. is a completely new book ed. M. Black and H. H. Rowley); The New Jerome Biblical Commentary, ed. R. E. Brown, SS, J. A. Fitzmyer, SJ, and R. E. Murphy, O.Carm. (1989); and The Catholic Study Bible: The New American Bible, ed. D. Senior (New York [1990]). Comm. on separate books in 'International Critical Commentary' (Edinburgh, 1895 ff.), 'New Clarendon Bible' (Oxford, 1963 ff.), 'New Century Bible' (London, 1966 ff.), 'Anchor Bible' (Garden City, NY, 1964–88; New York, 1989 ff.), 'Hermeneia' (Philadelphia, 1971–87; Minneapolis, 1989 ff.), 'Word Biblical Commentary' (Waco, Tex., 1982–8; Dallas, 1988 ff.); 'New International Commentary on the OT' (Grand Rapids, 1964 ff.); 'New International Commentary on the NT' (ibid., 1950 ff.; early vols. pub. in Britain as 'New London Commentary on the NT'); 'Black's NT Commentaries' (London, 1957 ff.), and 'Sacra Pagina' (Collegeville, Minn., 1991 ff.); also important comm. in German, many of them continuously revised: 'Kritisch-exegetischer Kommentar über das Neue Testament', founded by H. A. W. *Meyer (Göttingen, 1832 ff.); the 'Handbuch zum Neuen Testament' (Tübingen, 1906 ff.); the 'Handbuch zum Alten Testament' (ibid., 1934 ff.); 'Das Neue Testament Deutsch' (Göttingen, 1932 ff.); 'Das Alte Testament Deutsch' (ibid., 1951 ff.; the 'Old Testament Library', 1960 ff., is based on this series); 'Herders theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament' (Freiburg i. B., 1953 ff.); 'Biblischer Kommentar: Altes Testament' (Neukirchen, 1955 ff.); and the 'Evangelisch-katholischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament' (Neukirchen, 1969 ff.).

GENERAL WORKS. O. Eissfeldt, Einleitung in das Alte Testament unter Einschluss der Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen (1934; 3rd edn., 1964; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1965); R. H. Pfeiffer, Introduction to the Old Testament (New York, 1948; London, 1952); J. A. Soggin, Introduzione all'Antico Testamento (2 vols., Brescia [1968–9]; 4th edn., 1987; Eng. tr., 1989); W. G. Kümmel, Einleitung in das Neue Testament, 17th edn. by P. Feine and J. Behm ([1973]; Eng. tr., 1975); J. L. Crenshaw, Story and Faith: A Guide to the Old Testament (New York, 1986). The Cambridge History of the Bible, ed. S. L. Greenslade and others (3 vols., Cambridge, 1963–70). H. von Campenhausen, Die Entstehung der Christlichen Bibel (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 39; 1968; Eng. tr., The Formation of the Christian Bible, 1972); Bible de tous les temps, ed. C. Kannengiesser, SJ (8 vols., 1984–9).

AUTHORITY AND INTERPRETATION. K. Scholder, Ursprünge und Probleme der Bibelkritik im 17. Jahrhundert (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, Zehnte Reihe, 33; 1966; Eng. tr., The Birth of Modern Critical Theology, 1990); J. Barr, The Bible in the Modern World (1973), and other works of this author; H. W. Frei, The Eclipse of Biblical Narrative: A Study in Eighteenth and Nineteenth Century Hermeneutics (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1974); D. H. Kelsey, The Uses of Scripture in Recent Theology (1975); D. [E.] Nineham, The Use and Abuse of the Bible: A Study of the Bible in an Age of Rapid Cultural Change (1976); H. Reventlow, Bibelautorität und Geist der Moderne (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 30; 1980; Eng. tr., with additional material, The Authority of the Bible and the Rise of the Modern World, 1984); J. Barton, People of the Book? The Authority of the Bible in Christianity (Bampton Lectures for 1988; 1988); R. [C.] Morgan and J. Barton, Biblical Interpretation (Oxford Bible Series, 1988). See also bibl. to HERMENEUTICS.

Bible (English versions). 1. PRE-REFORMATION VERSIONS. No complete Anglo-Saxon Bible, or even NT, exists. Translations of this period comprise (a) interlinear glosses (forming a crude word-by-word translation) of the Gospels and Pss., and (b) versions, sometimes abridged, of separate portions of the Bible, e.g. parts of Exod. 20–3 in the introductory section of King *Alfred's Laws, a prose version of Pss. 1–50 (possibly by Alfred himself), and the four Gospels in W. Saxon (perhaps 10th cent.). Free renderings of OT narrative passages occur in the homilies of *Aelfric (c.992), who also translated Gen. 1–35 (36–50 having been done by another hand previously) and (with considerable omissions) Exod. 1–Josh. 11. There are also numerous detached quotations and free renderings of other parts of the Bible in homilies.

In Middle English, from *c.*1250 onwards, metrical versions of certain Books (esp. Gen. and Exod.), of biblical history generally, and of the Psalter, were made. There followed in Midland and in Northern dialect prose versions of the Psalter, the latter by Richard *Rolle of Hampole.

In the 14th cent. several anonymous translations of NT Books in various dialects were produced, apparently in connection with *Lollardy and under the influence of J. *Wycliffe. But the popular view that Wycliffe himself was the first English translator of the complete Bible seems to be without foundation. There are two 'Wycliffite' versions:

(a) Early Version. The most important MS is Bodley 959, which covers the greater part of the OT (i.e. as far as Bar. 3: 20, in Vulgate order). This early version, which was made by the 1390s, has been associated with *Nicholas Hereford. It was very literal, and was soon revised.

(b) Later Version. This was produced on the basis of an intermediate version; later critics suggested it was connected with John *Purvey. In the prologue the translator explains his method of working 'with divers fellows and helpers' and with 'many good fellows and cunning at the correcting of the translation'. It is much more idiomatic than the early version.

Both these versions, esp. the former, follow the Vulgate (then the only text available), often so closely as to be detrimental to the clarity of the English. At the Council of Oxford in 1407 the making of any fresh translations of the whole or any portion of the Bible and the use of any translation made 'in the times of John Wycliffe or since' without diocesan or synodical sanction were forbidden. Nevertheless many MSS of the Wycliffite versions (esp. the later text) continued to be made and used until the appearance of W. *Tyndale's and M. *Coverdale's work.

2. THE REFORMATION PERIOD. The Wycliffite versions, being under ecclesiastical censure, were not printed. New facilities for textual study and translation of the Bible were opened up by the printing of the Vulgate (first in 1456), the Hebrew text (1488), *Erasmus' Greek Testament (1516, with four revisions by 1535), the *Complutensian Polyglot (1522), and S. *Pagninus' literal Latin rendering of the Hebrew OT (1528). The plan of a translation of the NT from the Greek is due to W. Tyndale and dates from *c.*1523. He failed to obtain the patronage of C. *Tunstall, Bp. of London, but for a short while was supported by Humphrey Monmouth, a London merchant. In 1524 he fled to Germany, where he probably met at *Wittenberg M. *Luther, whose German NT had appeared in 1522. The printing of Tyndale's NT (in 4to) was begun at *Cologne in 1525; but before it was complete Tyndale was forced to flee to Worms, where it was restarted and finished (in 8vo) in 1526. Subsequent editions were printed in the Netherlands, and copies soon reached England. Tyndale then translated the *Pentateuch, which was printed at Antwerp in 1529–30. His translation of Jonah appeared in 1531 and a revision of Gen. and of the NT in 1534, and of the NT again in 1535. He also translated, but never published, Josh.–2 Chron. inclusive. His NT and Pentateuch contained marginal notes, described by *Henry VIII as 'pestilent glosses', expressing his strongly Protestant views. In his prefaces, prologues, marginal references, etc., Tyndale is greatly dependent on Luther, but his translation is an independent and pioneer work, using Erasmus' Latin version of the NT, the Vulgate, and Luther's German, as well as his own interpretation of the original. His final version of the NT contains much which passed unchanged into the Authorized Version.

In 1534 Canterbury *Convocation petitioned Henry VIII that the whole Bible might be translated into English. Though no royal command to this effect was issued, Miles *Coverdale published in 1535 a complete Bible, dedicated to the King. He based his rendering on Tyndale's where available; the other OT books he translated from the German of Luther and the Zurich version of U. *Zwingli and Leo Juda, with guidance from Pagninus and the Vulgate. He does not appear to have known Hebrew. His Psalter has remained in constant use until modern times in the BCP version of the Psalms. In 1537 a revised English Bible known as '*Matthew's Bible' appeared. It was the first to bear the King's authorization and was printed in Antwerp for the London printers, R. *Grafton and E. *Whitchurch. The ascription to 'Thomas Matthew' was nominal (the suggested identification with one Thomas Matthew of Colchester is improbable), its real editor being John *Rogers. The text consisted of Tyndale's Pentateuch, a version of Josh.–2 Chron. made from the Hebrew and hitherto unpublished (prob. also Tyndale's, cf. above), Tyndale's NT of 1535, and the remainder in Coverdale's version. Rogers's work was confined to careful editing and adaptation. For the Prayer of Manasses, omitted by Coverdale, he translated the French version of *Olivetan, from whom also he took some editorial matter. At about the same time Coverdale's Bible, previously printed abroad, was for the first time printed in England.

Further revisions of the whole Bible followed. The '*Great Bible' of 1539, printed in Paris, was issued under T. *Cromwell's patronage. In 1540 it was revised and reissued with a preface by T. *Cranmer and a notice identifying it with the 'Bible in the largest volume in English' which the *Injunction of 1538 ordered to be set up in churches. Both these revisions, which claimed on the title-page of 1539 to have been made from the Hebrew and Greek 'by the diligent study of divers excellent learned men', were by Coverdale, though they did not bear his name. Among the 'learned men' whom Coverdale had consulted was S. *Münster, who in 1534–5 had issued a literal German translation of the Hebrew. All notes and controversial matter were deliberately excluded. In 1539 R. *Taverner also published a revision of 'Matthew's Bible' based on careful attention to the Greek and to the Vulgate OT. In 1542 S. *Gardiner, Bp. of *Winchester, headed a reaction in favour of the Vulgate, and in 1546 the use of Tyndale's or Coverdale's NT was forbidden by royal decree. Under *Edward VI this policy was reversed by the Protestant movement and the English versions were again reprinted.

In the reign of *Mary, W. *Whittingham issued at Geneva in 1557 a new English NT for the Protestant exiles (for the first time divided into verses and printed in roman type). Then followed in 1559 the Psalms, and in 1560 a complete Bible, dedicated to Queen *Elizabeth I. This version (the '*Geneva Bible' (q.v.), also popularly the '*Breeches Bible') was based on Tyndale and the Great Bible, but influenced by J. *Calvin and T. *Beza, as well as by the French Bibles of Lefèvre and Olivetan. It had marginal notes written from an extreme Protestant viewpoint. Many of its renderings, not found in previous English versions, were later adopted into the AV.

In the reign of Elizabeth I the Geneva Bible obtained great popularity in England, although it lacked the royal and ecclesiastical authorization still possessed by the Great Bible. In 1566 Abp. M. *Parker undertook a revision of the latter in co-operation with other bishops. This new translation (the '*Bishops' Bible') was published in 1568 and revised in 1572. It copied the Geneva Bible in the adoption of verse-divisions, but the rendering was explicitly based on the Great Bible, with attention to the Greek and to the Hebrew, for which Pagninus and Münster were taken as authorities. Phrases which savoured of 'lightness or obscenity' were altered and passages considered unedifying were marked for omission in public reading. All comment, in the form of marginal notes, was eschewed. As the several revisers worked without much co-ordination, this translation varies in quality from Book to Book.

Though not yet acknowledging the right of the laity to read the Bible in the vernacular without special ecclesiastical sanction, the RC Church also felt the need for an acceptable English version. The NT was translated by members of the English College at Reims, largely at the instigation of W. (later Cardinal) *Allen. The chief translators were Gregory *Martin and Richard Bristow, and it was issued in 1582. The OT followed from Douai in 1609–1610 (see DOUAI-REIMS BIBLE). Both NT and OT were translated from the Vulgate, in acc. with the Council of Trent's endorsement of this version; but in the NT at least the original language was consulted. Many words and turns of phrase show the close adherence (also deliberate) of the translators to their standard, e.g. 'Pasch' (Passover), 'Azymes' (Unleavened Bread), 'supersubstantial bread' (Mt. 6: 11), 'legates of Christ' (ambassadors). But in many places the English is vivid and direct. The Reims NT was among the versions consulted by the makers of the AV.

3. THE AUTHORIZED VERSION (1611) AND ITS SUCCESSORS. At the *Hampton Court Conference a new version of the Bible was suggested to *James I, who in the same year appointed for the task 54 divines, among them the Puritan J. *Rainolds, J. Bois of Cambridge, H. *Savile, J. *Overall, L. *Andrewes, and W. *Barlow. The 'Bishops' Bible' was used as a basis, but earlier English versions were taken into consideration, and the new Bible was designedly a revision rather than a completely original work. Careful marginal notes on matters of text and translation (not theology) were provided and the best resources of contemporary scholarship were utilized. The result, published in 1611, was a version of great felicity, which within a generation displaced all previous versions, and became the only familiar, and in most cases the only known, form of the Bible to generations of English-speaking people. Beyond the royal authority under which it was made, and the statement on the title-page 'Appointed to be read in churches', no formal authorization was given to it. In the BCP of 1662 it was adopted as the text for the Epistles and Gospels, though the Psalter remained in Coverdale's version. It was carried from England to the American Colonies, and it continues in use in the USA, where it is known as the 'King James Version', and in other English-speaking countries. See also AUTHORIZED VERSION.

The Authorized Version was not accepted entirely without criticism, but projects for further revision, e.g. that of the Long Parliament of 1653, came to nothing. Modifications in spelling, punctuation, use of capitals, etc., were unobtrusively made by editors, esp. T. Paris at Cambridge (1762) and B. Blayney at Oxford (1769), and the headlines of pages and the marginal references altered in different editions. The only new translations or revisions from this period were private ones. J. *Wesley's Explanatory Notes on the New Testament (1755) embodied a conservative revision of the AV. Other 18th-cent. translators (e.g. D. *Mace, 1729) went further in the introduction of colloquialisms or in free paraphrase into the style of contemporary elegance, esp. E. Hardwood's A Liberal Translation of the NT (1768). Among scholarly translations of individual books was R. *Lowth's Isaiah (1778). The Reims-Douai version was revised by Bp. R. *Challoner (1749–50); and versions of the Pentateuch were issued by the Jewish scholars I. Delgado (1785) and D. Levi (1787).

4. THE REVISED VERSION (1881–5) and AMERICAN STANDARD VERSION (1901). The growth of biblical scholarship and the availability of new versions for comparison, as well as changes in English usage since 1611, led to occasional expressions of dissatisfaction with the AV from the early 19th cent., and from the middle of the century proposals for the revision of the AV were both advocated and opposed. In 1890 the Convocation of Canterbury took up the matter and a committee of revisers, to which non-Anglican scholars were co-opted, was appointed. They were instructed to 'introduce as few alterations as possible into the text of the AV, consistently with faithfulness' and 'to limit, as far as possible, the expression of such alterations to the language of the Authorized and earlier English versions'. No change in the text was to be finally approved except by a two-thirds majority; changes supported by only a simple majority were to be noted in the margin. The NT was published in 1881, the OT in 1885. The *Apocrypha was undertaken after the main work, and issued in 1895. As far as practicable, the revisers used the same English word or phrase for the same Hebrew or Greek, thus facilitating the study of the original through the medium of the English. The Psalms and other poetical OT books were printed in lines according to their original structure, the rest of the text in paragraphs instead of in separate verses. The American Standard Version (pub. 1901) incorporated into the text of the RV those renderings preferred by the American scholars who had co-operated (by correspondence).

5. MODERN TRANSLATIONS. Since the publication of the RV and its American counterpart there have been numerous translations of single books produced as parts of learned commentaries and separately. There have also been a number of private translations of the complete NT or the whole Bible, aiming increasingly at making the Bible intelligible to the common man. These have included, on the Protestant side, the NT of R. F. Weymouth (1903); the NT (1913) and OT (1924) of J. *Moffatt (whole Bible, revised, 1935); The Bible: An American Translation by E. J.

Goodspeed (NT, 1923, and Apocrypha, 1938) and J. M. Powis Smith (OT, 1935); The New Testament in Modern English (1958; revised 1973) by J. B. Phillips (1906–82, a parish priest of the C of E who retired in 1955 to devote himself to writing), originally pub. as Letters to Young Churches (1947), The Gospels (1952), and The Young Church in Action (Acts, 1955); two versions in completely non-ecclesiastical English: The Good News Bible: Today's English Version pub. by the American and other Bible Societies (NT, New York, 1966; in Britain, slightly adapted, 1968; whole Bible in both editions, 1976), and The Living Bible paraphrased by K. N. Taylor (Wheaton, Ill., NT, 1967; adapted British version, 1969; complete Bible in both editions, 1971); and the much more traditional NT version by W. *Barclay (2 vols., 1968–9). There have also been two RC translations: the Westminster Version of the Holy Scriptures, ed. by C. Lattey and J. Keating (NT, 1935; OT incomplete), translated from the original languages, with attention to the Vulgate, and the version of R. A. *Knox (NT, 1945; OT, 1948–9; whole Bible, 1955), made from the (Clementine) Vulgate with due attention to the Greek and Hebrew. The latter, which was commissioned by the English RC hierarchy, after some hesitation received ecclesiastical sanction and gained some approbation from non-RCs for its literary merit. It has been largely superseded by the Jerusalem Bible (see below).

The most important 20th-cent. biblical translations, as in the past, have been corporate ventures. A version in Basic English (i.e. using a restricted vocabulary advocated for teaching English to foreigners) of the NT (1941) and of the complete Bible (1949) was made by a committee under the chairmanship of S. H. Hooke. Of far greater significance was the Revised Standard Version (NT, 1946; OT, 1952; Apocrypha, 1957). This was a revision of the American Standard Version, intended to stand 'in the Tyndale–King James tradition', undertaken by a committee representing the major Protestant Churches of N. America; the revisers took account of current scholarship and changes in language to produce a rendering more accurate than the American Standard Version and free from archaisms thought to be misleading, unintelligible, or unnecessary, but preserving a dignity suitable for public worship. The RSV came to be widely used not only in America but also in Britain (where it is printed in editions with British spellings) and other English-speaking countries. Its faithfulness to the original, and relative caution in modernization, have given it a wide appeal among all traditions, including conservative evangelicals (see FUNDAMENTALISM). In 1965 the NT, and in 1966 the whole Bible (in Vulgate order) appeared in a 'Catholic edition' bearing the *imprimatur; it had slight textual changes and some adaptations in the notes for RC readers. In what became known as the 'Common Bible' (1973), designed to appeal to RCs, Protestants, and Orthodox alike, the RSV text was rearranged so that those parts of the Apocrypha which were included in the OT in the Vulgate (e.g. Esther) were printed between the NT and OT and the material regarded by neither RCs or Protestants as canonical, but included as an appendix in the Vulgate (e.g. the Prayer of Manasseh), was printed as an appendix. A revision of the RSV, the New Revised Standard Version appeared in 1989. While avoiding archaisms and almost always using inclusive language, this translation is in direct descent from the AV and retains much of its solemnity.

The New English Bible (NT 1961; whole Bible, with slightly revised NT, 1970) is in a different mould. It was designed as a new translation of the Bible into contemporary English, to be made from the original languages and drawing on the best scholarship and literary judgement. It was made under the direction of a Joint Committee of the non-RC Churches of the British Isles, established in 1947 on the initiative of the Church of Scotland, with the co-operation of the *British and Foreign Bible Society and the National Bible Society of Scotland. The panels of translators worked under the chairmanship of C. H. *Dodd from 1950 to 1965, and from 1965 under that of Dodd and Sir Godfrey *Driver jointly. The NEB won limited acceptance, partly because of its academic flavour, and in 1974 a revision was undertaken by a panel, including RCs, under the chairmanship of W. D. McHardy. The Revised English Bible (1989) is a radical revision of the NEB. While generally more conservative in its treatment of the original text, it avoids the eccentricities of individual views that are reflected in the NEB and is generally more satisfactory for public reading. Inclusive language is used where it is thought not to endanger the original sense, and 'thou' is no longer retained in passages where God is addressed.

The Jerusalem Bible (1966) is an English parallel, made by a group of English-speaking RCs under the chairmanship of Alexander Jones, of La Bible de Jérusalem. This was a French rendering of the original Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic texts, with extensive notes, made by members of the *Dominican École Biblique in Jerusalem and published in France (1948–54; first one-volume edition, 1956). The English text generally follows the interpretation of the French but was made with reference to the original languages and is accompanied by revised notes. It follows the Vulgate order but has the traditional (AV/RV) English forms of biblical names rather than those of the Douai version (e.g. Hosea, not Osee); it uses 'Yahweh' not 'the Lord' to represent the *tetragrammaton in the OT and 'you' rather than 'thee' and 'thou' in passages addressing God. Its revision, The New Jerusalem Bible (1985), produced under the chairmanship of Dom Henry Wansbrough, OSB, makes use of the new edition of La Bible de Jérusalem (1973), whose interpretation it normally follows in the notes and introduction, though incorporating the results of biblical scholarship since 1973. The translation, again made from the original languages, uses the same word for key terms throughout. It was the first complete English version to make serious efforts at inclusive language. Both the JB and the NJB have been accepted by many outside the RC Church.

Other modern translations include the New American Bible (1970), made by members of the Catholic Biblical Association of America under the patronage of the Bishops' Committee of the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine and widely used by RCs in the USA; the New International Version (1978 in the USA; 1979 in Britain), the work of scholars from different parts of the English-speaking world, representing a broad range of *evangelical denominations, directed by the New York Bible Society; and the New King James Version, made under the auspices of the United Bible Societies (NT, 1979; whole Bible, 1982; text adapted to British usage as the Revised Authorized Version, 1982); the primary aim of this translation is to recast the AV in modern English without sacrificing its 'majestic and reverent style'.

In the C of E, the liturgical reading of the AV is assumed in the BCP, but the legality of reading the RV was established in 1899. In 1965 the Prayer Book (Versions of the Bible) Measure authorized the optional use, for any scriptural passage, of the RSV or NEB. Since then a wide variety of translations has been authorized, and the ASB includes passages from the RSV, NEB, JB, and Today's English Version (The Good News Bible) among the readings for the Eucharist. In the RC Church national hierarchies each authorize translations for liturgical use; those sanctioned in England and Wales include the Knox version, the RSV, NRSV, JB, and NJB; the New American Bible is favoured in the USA.

The principal edns. of the pre-Reformation versions are: W. W. Skeat (ed.), The Gospel according to Saint Mark in Anglo-Saxon and Northumbrian Versions (Cambridge, 1871); id. (ed.), The Gospel according to Saint Luke . . . (ibid., 1874); id. (ed.), The Gospel according to Saint John . . . (ibid., 1878); id. (ed.), The Gospel according to Saint Matthew in Anglo-Saxon, Northumbrian, and Old Mercian Versions (ibid., 1887); J. W. Bright (ed.), The Gospel of Saint Luke in Anglo-Saxon (Oxford, 1893); these will be superseded by R. M. Liuzza (ed.), The Old English Version of the Gospels (EETS 304, etc.; 1994 ff.); H. Sweet (ed.), The Oldest English Texts (ibid. 83; 1885), pp. 183–420 [Vespasian Psalter]); G. P. Krapp (ed.), The Paris Psalter (New York, 1932); K. D. Bülbring (ed.), The Earliest Complete English Prose Psalter, pt. 1 (EETS 97; 1891); H. R. Bramley (ed.), The Psalter or Psalms of David and Certain Canticles with a Translation and Exposition in English by Richard Rolle of Hampole (Oxford, 1884); A. C. Paues (ed.), A Fourteenth Century English Biblical Version (Cambridge, 1904); J. Forshall and F. Madden (eds.), The Holy Bible . . . in the Earliest English Versions made from the Latin Vulgate by John Wycliffe and his Followers (5 vols., Oxford, 1850); C. Lindberg (ed.), MS. Bodley 959 (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, Stockholm Studies in English, 6, 8, 10, 13, 20; 1959–69); the remaining part of the early version of the OT ed. from MS Christ Church 145, by id. (ibid. 29; 1973).

M. Deanesly, The Lollard Bible and other Medieval Biblical Versions (1920). S. L. Fristedt, The Wycliffite Bible, pt. 1 (Stockholm Studies in English, 4; 1953); id., 'New Light on John Wycliffe and the First Full English Bible' in Studier i modern Språkvetenskap, NS 3 (1968), pp. 61–86. The English Hexapla of the NT Scriptures [Wycliffe, Tyndale, Cranmer, Genevan, Anglo-Rhemish, Authorized] (1841). B. F. Westcott, A General View of the History of the English Bible (1868; 3rd edn., rev. W. A. Wright, 1905); A. W. Pollard, Records of the English Bible (1911); H. W. *Robinson (ed.), The Bible in its Ancient and English Versions (1940); C. C. Butterworth, The Literary Lineage of the King James Bible 1340–1611 (Philadelphia, 1941); H. Pope, OP, English Versions of the Bible (St Louis, 1952); F. F. Bruce, The English Bible: A History of Translations (1961; 3rd edn., 1979); F. C. Grant, Translating the Bible (1961). S. L. Greenslade (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible: The West from the Reformation to the Present Day (1963), esp. pp. 141–70 and 361–82; G. Hammond, The Making of the English Bible (Manchester, 1982); E. H. Robertson, Makers of the English Bible (Cambridge, 1990); D. Norton, A History of the Bible as Literature (2 vols., ibid., 1993). G. [N. S.] Hunt, About the New English Bible (1970); R. Coleman, New Light and Truth: The Making of the Revised English Bible (Oxford and Cambridge, 1989); B. M. Metzger and others, The Making of the New Revised Standard Version of the Bible (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1991). For printed edns., see list in Darlow and Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, 1 (1968). M. T. Hills (ed.), The English Bible in America: A Bibliography of Editions of the Bible & New Testament Published in America 1777–1957 (New York, 1961).

Bible Christians (or Bryanites). One of the bodies which went to form the *United Methodist Church in 1907. It traces its origin to William O'Bryan (1778–1868), a local preacher of the *Wesleyan Methodist Church. Finding many of the villages of Devon and Cornwall in almost complete ignorance of the Gospel, he extended his very successful evangelism beyond the limits of his own circuit. In the conflict with the local Wesleyan authorities which ensued, O'Bryan, not without hesitation and regret, separated himself, and in 1815 he founded the first society of a new community at Shebbear, in N. Devon. Although faced by much opposition and persecution the new movement spread rapidly. At the end of the first year there were 567 members, and after only five years of work in the west, missionaries were sent to Kent and London. In 1831 missions were founded in Canada and Prince Edward Island; in 1846, in the USA; in 1850, in Australia. Membership reached its maximum at 32,317 in 1906.

For several years O'Bryan, as the founder of the movement, was accepted as the natural head of the Society and president of its annual Conference. His assumption of autocratic control of the property and affairs of his Churches gradually led to disputes, which were temporarily settled in 1827 by the Conference being the recognized organ of government with O'Bryan continuing as president. O'Bryan, however, was dissatisfied and in 1829 left his Society; in 1831 he went to America. Later he was reconciled to the Conference, though he never rejoined it.

The Bible Christians held the doctrines common to all the branches of Methodism. When the Conference was officially constituted in 1831 provision was made for the inclusion of lay representatives. Women were admitted to the ministry equally with men, esp. in the earliest period. As it grew the movement did notable missionary work, e.g. that of Samuel Pollard in SW China.

In 1907 the Bible Christians united with the *Methodist New Connexion and the *United Methodist Free Churches to form the *United Methodist Church.

T. Shaw, The Bible Christians 1815–1907 (1965). J. T. Wilkinson in R. [E.] Davies, A. R. George, and [E.] G. Rupp (eds.), A History of the Methodist Church in Great Britain, 2 (1978), pp. 294–303; 3 (1983), pp. 169–72, with bibl.

Bible Churchmen's Missionary Society. See BCMS.

Bible divisions and references. The division of major sections of the OT (such as the *Pentateuch) into Books was associated with the amount of material that would fit on to a single scroll. When the Hebrew was translated into Greek, which takes more space than Hebrew (partly because Greek is written with a full set of vowels), some Books (Sam., Kgs., Chron.) were divided into two. In other parts of the OT and in the NT single items which were collected in the Bible constituted Books. The Hebrew Bible was further divided into sections for liturgical reading in Jewish services; these divisions were marked in the margin in much the same way as was done in the Church (see LECTIONARY) and continue to appear in printed Hebrew Bibles. Paragraph and verse divisions existed in Hebrew MSS from a very early date; paragraphs are found in the *Dead Sea Scrolls and verses are referred to in the * Mishnah (Megillah, 4. 4). A reference system which used paragraphs denoted by letters of the alphabet was introduced in NT MSS from the middle of the 13th cent. Chapter divisions originated in Christian Bibles. Introduced for ease of reference, they followed a number of schemes, e.g. that of the *Eusebian Canons; the oldest known system of capitation of the Bible is that preserved in the margins of *Codex Vaticanus (4th cent.). The system in current use is attributed to S. *Langton (d. 1228). It was adapted to the Hebrew Bible in Rabbi Isaac Nathan's concordance produced in the middle of the 15th cent., though chapters in the Hebrew Bible do not always correspond exactly with those of the OT in Christian Bibles. The first printed Hebrew Bible to contain chapter divisions was that produced by D. Bomberg in 1517. Verse numbers were first used by Rabbi Nathan; they were taken over in the Latin translation of S. *Paginus and in the French (1553) and Latin (1555) Bibles of Robert Estienne I (*Stephanus). For the NT Estienne did not follow the cumbersome divisions of Paginus but in 1551 introduced numbered verses in his edition of the Gk. and Lat. NT. These have remained in use ever since. The first Bibles to have numbered verses throughout were those of Estienne just mentioned. The *Geneva Bible (1560) was the first such English Bible.

C. D. Ginsburg, Introduction to the Massoretico-Critical Edition of the Hebrew Bible (1897), pp. 1–108. J. M. Oesch, Petucha und Setuma: Untersuchungen zu einer überlieferten Gliederung im hebräischen Text des Alten Testaments (Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis, 27; 1979). G. F. Moore, 'The Vulgate Chapters and Numbered Verses in the Hebrew Bible', Journal of Biblical Literature, 13 (1893), pp. 73–8. J. H. Harris, 'Some Notes on the Verse-Division of the New Testament', ibid. 19 (1900), pp. 114–23. B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (2nd edn., Oxford, 1952; 3rd edn., 1983), pp. 222–4, with refs. F. Kenyon, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts (5th edn. by A. W. Adams, 1958), pp. 261 and 299. B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (Oxford, 1964; 3rd edn., 1992), pp. 22–5; id., Manuscripts of the Greek Bible (New York and Oxford, 1981), pp. 40–43. Darlow and Moule, pt. 2 (1911), p. 388 (no. 3719); pt. 3 (1911), pp. 588–90 (no. 4623), pp. 924 f. (no. 6108), and pp. 938 f. (nos. 6135 f.).

Bible Society, British and Foreign. See BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Biblia Pauperum (Lat., 'the Bible of Poor Men'). Though also employed from the early Middle Ages to describe various other short biblical summaries for elementary instruction, the title Biblia Pauperum is used to denote specifically a picture-book in which on each page a set group of figures illustrates a NT antitype flanked by two corresponding OT *types, with short explanatory texts from the Bible and mnemonic verses. More than 80 MS examples are known from the 14th cent.; they can be grouped into separately recognizable traditions from Austria and S. Germany. Soon after the invention of printing in the mid-15th cent., the Biblia Pauperum enjoyed a short vogue in the Netherlands and Germany in the form of various blockbook (xylographic) editions, each double page of pictures and text being printed from a single woodcut, or made up of a mixture of woodcut pictures and handwritten text. The text may be in Latin or German. A number of these blockbook editions have been reproduced in facsimile.

Description and discussion of MSS in [J.] H. Cornell, Biblia Pauperum (Stockholm, 1925). G. Schmidt, Die Armenbibeln des XIV. Jahrhunderts (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, 19; 1959). A. Henry, Biblia Pauperum (Aldershot, 1987) [facsimile of a blockbook of *c.*1460, with Eng. tr.], incl. general introd. pp. 3–46. R. L. P. Milburn in G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, 2 (1969), pp. 280–308. K.-A. Wirth in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 1 (1978), cols. 843–52, s.v.

Bibliander (= Buchmann), Theodor (*c.*1504–64), Orientalist and Protestant theologian. He succeeded to U. *Zwingli's chair at Zurich University on the Reformer's death in 1531. He maintained that the heathen possessed by the law of nature a knowledge of God, and attacked the *Calvinistic doctrine of *predestination. Among his chief works were a Hebrew grammar (1535), editions of the Koran (1543) and of the Protevangelium Jacobi (1552), and some studies in chronology (1551; 1558).

E. Egli, Analecta Reformatoria, 2 (1901), pp. 1–144. R. Pfister, 'Das Türkenbüchlein Theodor Biblianders', Theologische Zeitschrift, 9 (1953), pp. 438–54. E. Egli in PRE (3rd edn.), 3 (1897), pp. 185–7, s.v.

Biblical Commission. Originally a committee of five *cardinals, assisted by 39 consultors, created as an organ for the study of the Bible in the RC Church. It was instituted by *Leo XIII in the apostolic letter 'Vigilantiae' (30 Oct. 1902) to further biblical studies in conformity with the requirements of modern scholarship and to safeguard the authority of Scripture against the attacks of exaggerated criticism. In 1904 it was empowered to confer ecclesiastical academic degrees. One of its chief tasks was to answer questions on biblical matters. Among its notable responsa were those on the Mosaic authorship of the *Pentateuch (1906), the authenticity and historicity of Jn. (1907), the authenticity and character of Is. (1908), the historicity of Gen. 1–3 (1909), and the *Synoptic Problem (1912). The responsa were never understood to have been issued infallibly. In his motu proprio 'Praestantia sacrae Scripturae' (1907) *Pius X considered them 'useful for the proper progress and guidance of biblical scholarship along safe lines'. He did, however, require the same submission by RCs to those responsa as to similar papally approved decrees of other *Roman Congregations, and consequently a dark cloud of fear and reactionary conservatism settled over RC biblical scholarship in the first half of the 20th cent. A more liberal attitude to biblical criticism was reflected in *Pius XII's encyclical 'Divino afflante Spiritu' (30 Sept. 1943). The responsa gave way to 'letters' and 'instructions' in which, though concern was at times expressed about excessive tendencies, the Commission gradually assumed a more positive stance. In 1954 a second edition of the Enchiridion Biblicum was issued. The Commission's secretary, A. Miller, and its subsecretary, A. Kleinhans, reviewed it in texts which were almost identical save for the language (German and Latin). They declared that responsa touching on faith and morals were still valid, whereas those that dealt with literary questions were to be regarded as conditioned by their time and corresponding to a historical context that no longer existed; in such cases the RC interpreter could proceed 'with full freedom' (in aller Freiheit, plena libertate). The Commission's instruction 'De historica evangeliorum veritate' (1964) explicitly reckoned with *form criticism and distinguished three stages in the development of the Gospel tradition. Its essential content was briefly summarized in 'Dei Verbum' (§ 19) of the Second *Vatican Council. In 1971 *Paul VI reorganized the Biblical Commission, making it the counterpart of the International Theological Commission, a part of the Congregation for the *Doctrine of the Faith. It is now composed of 20 RC biblical scholars who meet once a year and advise the Congregation and the Pope on biblical aspects of current theological issues. Since that reorganization the Commission has published various statements.

The names of the members of the Commission are given in Annuario Pontificio. The responsa are pr. in Enchiridion Biblicum: Documenta Ecclesiastica Sacram Scripturam Spectantia auctoritate Pontificiae Commissionis de Re Biblica edita (4th edn., Rome and Naples, 1961), nos. 160 f., 181–4, 187–9, 276–80, 324–39, 383–416, 513–21, 534–7, and 621; two letters, ibid., nos. 522–33 and 577–81; most are also pr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), nos. 3372 f., 3394–400, 3505–9, 3512–28, 3561–78, 3581–93, 3628–30, 3750 f., 3792–6, and 3862–4. The instruction 'De historica evangeliorum veritate' is pr. in AAS 56 (1964), pp. 712–18; Eng. tr. and comm. by J. A. Fitzmyer, SJ, A Christological Catechism (New York, etc. [1982]), pp. 97–140. Reviews of Enchiridion Biblicum (2nd edn.) by A. Miller, OSB, in Benediktinische Monatschrift, 31 (1955), pp. 49 f., and by A. Kleinhans, OFM, in Antonianum, 30 (1955), pp. 63–5; cf. E. F. Siegman, CPPS, 'The Decrees of the Pontifical Biblical Commission. A recent clarification', Catholic Biblical Quarterly, 18 (1956), pp. 23–9. More recent statements of the Commission include 'Can Women be Priests?', Origins, 6 (1976–7), pp. 92–6; Fede e cultura alla luce della Bibbia (Turin, 1981); Bible et Christologie (Paris, 1984); Unité et diversité dans l'église (Vatican City, 1989); and L'Interprétation de la Bible dans l'église (ibid., 1993; also conveniently pr. in Biblica, 84 (1993), pp. 451–528).

Biblical Theology. In 1787 J. P. Gabler drew a distinction between biblical theology and dogmatic theology, the former being the non-dogmatic description of the religious doctrines contained in the Bible and the latter the traditional dogmatic interpretation of them. The term is now more often used with reference to a movement among biblical scholars in the mid-20th cent. which was derived from the thought of K. *Barth and others of similar outlook. Though by no means homogeneous, it usually exhibited the following characteristics: (1) Biblical concepts were held to be sui generis, and in particular a sharp contrast was drawn between Hebrew and Greek thought, to the advantage of the former. (2) Biblical concepts were held to be still adequate for all essential purposes. (3) God's action in history was taken to be the primary medium of revelation, and a distinctive stream of 'salvation history' was often isolated. Christian faith was held to be based on events as opposed to ideas. (4) Emphasis was placed on the inner coherence of the biblical material, often represented as centred upon certain key concepts, e.g. '*covenant' or '*kerygma'. (5) A fairly conservative attitude was taken with regard to the historical trustworthiness of the biblical records.

In Britain and America the movement was less conceptually based than it was in Germany, where it underlay G. *Kittel's influential Wörterbuch of the NT. It provided a route by which scientific study of the Bible could make its way in the RC Church and has had considerable influence on the choice and arrangement of the biblical material in the modern liturgies of the RC and other Churches. In 1961 it was seriously challenged by J. Barr on the ground that it failed to do justice to the complex interrelations of biblical and non-biblical cultures. Others have argued that it exaggerated the historical trustworthiness of the Bible. Considerable diversity is now found within the biblical material, and further study of cultural relativism has raised doubts whether biblical ways of thinking can be applied to the contemporary situation in the way the proponents of biblical theology presupposed. These included O. *Cullmann, C. H. *Dodd, G. von *Rad, and A. Richardson (1905–75).

G. E. Wright, God Who Acts: Biblical Theology as Recital (Studies in Biblical Theology, 8; 1952). J. Barr, The Semantics of Biblical Language (Oxford, 1961), esp. pp. 263–87, and other works of this author; B. S. Childs, Biblical Theology in Crisis (Philadelphia [1970]); H.-J. Kraus, Die Biblische Theologie (Neukirchen, 1970); W. J. Harrington, OP, The Path of Biblical Theology (Dublin, 1973); D. [E.] Nineham, The Use and Abuse of the Bible (1976), esp. pp. 73–93; J. D. G. Dunn, Unity and Diversity in the New Testament (1977; 2nd edn., 1990); J. D. Smart, The Past, Present, and Future of Biblical Theology (Philadelphia [1979]); H. Reventlow, Hauptprobleme der Biblischen Theologie im 20. Jahrhundert (Darmstadt, 1983; Eng. tr., 1986).

bibliolatry. Excessive veneration for the letter of Scripture, as found in certain *Protestants in *Reformation times and since. Cf. the cry that 'The Bible, and the Bible only, is the religion of Protestants' (based on a misunderstanding of W. *Chillingworth).

Bickell, Gustav (1838–1906), Orientalist and patristic scholar. A convert to the RC Church (1865), he was ordained priest in 1867 and was elected to professorships at Innsbruck (1874) and Vienna (1892). His patristic writings include editions of St *Ephraem's Carmina Nisibena (1866) and the works of Isaac of Antioch (2 vols., 1873–77). He also wrote on the origins of the Christian Eucharistic rite (Messe und Pascha, 1872) and on metre in biblical Hebrew.

Biog. sketch by D. M. Müller in Almanach der kaiserlichen Akademie der Wissenschaften, 56 (Vienna, 1906), pp. 347–51.

Bickersteth, Edward (1786–1850), leader of the Anglican *Evangelicals from the death of Charles *Simeon in 1836 until his own. The son of a surgeon, he left school at the age of 14, worked in the Post Office, became an articled clerk in a solicitor's office in London, and then entered into partnership with his brother-in-law, a solicitor in *Norwich. From his late teens he took religious duties very seriously, and in Norwich he founded a *CMS Association. He also wrote A Help to the Study of the Scriptures (1815), called in its later editions A Scripture Help. In 1815 he gave up the practice of law and was ordained deacon and priest in the same year, before going to Africa on behalf of the CMS to settle disputes among the missionaries. He was secretary of the CMS from 1824 to 1830, when he became Rector of Watton, Herts, though he continued to travel extensively on its behalf. Opposed both to Roman Catholicism and *Tractarianism, he was one of the founders of the *Parker Society. He was also active in the foundation of the *Evangelical Alliance. His books were designed to foster piety, but display considerable learning. They include A Treatise on Prayer (1818), A Treatise on the Lord's Supper (1822), and A Treatise on Baptism (1840). His Christian Psalmody (1833) long remained the most popular hymn book among Evangelicals. A friend of Lord *Shaftesbury, he campaigned on behalf of children working in factories. His son, Edward Henry Bickersteth (1825–1906), was Bp. of *Exeter, 1855–1906; his grandson, Edward Bickersteth (1850–97), Bp. of South Tokyo, 1886–97; his nephew Robert Bickersteth (1816–84), Bp. of *Ripon, 1857–84; and his great-great-grandson John Monier Bickersteth (b. 1921), Bp. of *Bath and Wells, 1975–87.

T. R. Birks (son-in-law), Memoir of the Rev. Edward Bickersteth (2 vols., 1851). M. [M.] Hennell, Sons of the Prophets (1979), pp. 29–49. W. Hunt in DNB 5 (1886), pp. 3 f.

Bidding Prayer. The form of prayer interceding for the Universal Church, the State, Clergy, Nobility, and Commons, and commemorating the departed, which the Anglican Canon 55 (1604) ordered to be used by preachers before the sermon. In origin it derives from the group of intercessions, usually in Litany form, which in ancient liturgies occurred after the Sermon or the Gospel. These survived in the Roman Solemn Prayers ('the Collects') of the *Good Friday Liturgy and in the isolated 'Oremus' in the ordinary Latin Mass (at the beginning of the 'Mass of the Faithful').

By the 9th cent. the priest prayed for all conditions of men and made commemoration of the departed after the sermon at Mass on Sundays and festivals. In England during the Middle Ages this was called 'Bidding the *Bedes'. These Biddings formed part of the vernacular devotions, instructions, and notices attached to the sermon, and together were known in France (where they survive in certain places) as the Prône (a word of uncertain origin). At first they were left to the discretion of the priest but gradually tended to assume fixed forms. The Bidding Prayer is now seldom used except in the universities, at Assize sermons, and on state occasions.

In the Liturgical Constitution of the Second *Vatican Council (4 Dec. 1963), provision was made for the restoration of the 'Community Prayer' or 'Prayer of the Faithful' in the Roman Mass, esp. on days on which there is a homily. 'By this prayer, in which the people are to take part, intercession will be made for Holy Church, for the civil authorities, for those oppressed by various needs, for all mankind and for the salvation of the entire world' (sect. 53). In the C of E a similar prayer, in the form of a series of biddings, has been incorporated in the Eucharist in the ASB.

F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite, 2 (1915), Appendix 1, pp. 1020–45. P. de Clerck, La 'Prière Universelle' dans les liturgies latines anciennes (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 62; 1977).

Biddle, John (1615–62), English *Unitarian. Graduating in 1638 at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, he became shortly afterwards master of the free school at *Gloucester, where he wrote his 'XII Arguments' against the deity of the Holy Spirit. In 1645 the MS was seized and Biddle was imprisoned for a time. In 1647, however, the 'XII Arguments' were published, and on 6 Sept. they were ordered to be burned by the hangman. Notwithstanding the ordinance of 1648, visiting with death all who denied the Trinity, he published two anti-Trinitarian tracts, but he was saved by his friends among the *Independent Parliamentarians and retired to Staffordshire, where he preached and helped to edit an edition of the *Septuagint. On the passing of the act of oblivion of 1652, his adherents ('Biddellians', '*Socinians', or 'Unitarians') began regular Sunday worship. Biddle now published two catechisms, for which he was summoned before Parliament (1654) and again imprisoned. On release he was again put on trial, but banished by Cromwell to the Scilly Isles (1655). Returning to London on his release (1662), he was arrested, fined, and sent to prison, where he died.

Vita, said to be by J. Farrington (anon., London, 1682). J. Toulmin, A Review of the Life, Character and Writings of the Rev. John Biddle, MA (1791). H. J. McLachlan, Socinianism in Seventeenth-Century England (Oxford, 1951), esp. pp. 163–217. A. B. Grosart in DNB 5 (1886), pp. 13–16.

Biel, Gabriel (*c.*1420–95), scholastic philosopher. Educated at Heidelberg, Erfurt, and Cologne, he later joined the *Brethren of the Common Life at Marienthal and became first provost of the house at Butzbach, and in 1479 was appointed provost of the house at Urach. With Count Eberhard of Württemberg, he was responsible for founding the University of *Tübingen, where he held the professorial chair of theology. One of the last great medieval scholastic thinkers, he was a follower of the *nominalist thought of *William of Ockham, though he showed himself tolerant of opposite systems. His views on the relationship between the economy of commercial life and theology reflect the transitional nature of his age. Thus he held that the 'just price' was determined by supply and demand rather than by theological maxims, and that the merchant is a useful and necessary member of society. His works included a 'Commentary on the Sentences of *Peter Lombard', an exposition of the *Canon of the Mass, and a treatise 'De potestate et utilitate monetarum'.

Most of his works exist only in edns. of 15th and 16th cents.; list in Überweg, 2, p. 604. Mod. edn. of his 'Quaestiones de Justificatione', by C. Feckes (Opuscula et Textus, Series Scholastica, 4; Münster i.W., 1929), of his Canonis Misse Expositio by H. A. Oberman and W. J. Courtenay (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte Mainz, 31–4; 1963–7; with index and Disquisitio et consensus materiae ed. W. Werbeck, ibid. 79; 1976), of his Defensorium Obedientiae Apostolicae, with Eng. tr., by H. A. Oberman, D. E. Zerfoss, and W. J. Courtenay (Cambridge, Mass., 1968), and of his Collectorium circa quattuor libros Sententiarum by W. Werbeck and U. Hofmann (4 vols. in 5 pts., Tübingen, 1973–84). Eng. tr. of his Treatise on the Power and Utility of Moneys, by R. B. Burke (Philadelphia and Oxford, 1930). M. *Luther, Randbemerkungen zu Gabriel Biels Collectorium in Quattuor Libros Sententiarum und zu dessen Sacri Canonis Missae Expositio (Lyons, 1514; repr. 1933). H. A. Oberman, The Harvest of Medieval Theology: Gabriel Biel and Late Medieval Nominalism (Cambridge, Mass., 1963), with bibl. L. Grane, Contra Gabrielem: Luthers Auseinandersetzung mit Gabriel Biel in der Disputatio Contra Scholasticam Theologiam 1517 (Acta theologica Danica, 4; Copenhagen, 1962). W. Ernst, Gott und Mensch am Vorabend der Reformation: Eine Untersuchung zur Moralphilosophie und -Theologie bei Gabriel Biel (Erfurter theologische Studien, 28; Leipzig, 1972). F. J. Burkard, Philosophische Lehrgehalte in Gabriel Biels Sentenzenkommentar unter besonderer Berücksichtigung seiner Erkenntnislehre (Monographien zur philosophischen Forschung, 122; Meisenheim am Glan, 1974). J. L. Farthing, Thomas Aquinas and Gabriel Biel: Interpretations of St Thomas Aquinas in German Nominalism on the Eve of the Reformation (Duke Monographs in Medieval and Renaissance Studies, 9; Durham, NC, 1988). M. Cappuyns, OSB, in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 1429–35; V. Heynck in NCE 2 (1967), p. 552; W. Dettloff in TRE 6 (1980), pp. 488–91, all s.v.

bigamy. (1) A 'second marriage' contracted by a person whose 'first' husband or wife is still alive, when the 'first' marriage has not been declared null. The traditional view of the W. Church is that such a union is no marriage. English civil law takes the same view if a divorce has not been obtained, and, moreover, regards bigamy in such circumstances as a criminal offence. See also DIVORCE.

(2) Acc. to older usage, the term relates to a second marriage after the death of one of the partners to the first marriage. In this sense it is also known as 'digamy' (q.v.).

J. Vergier-Boimond in DDC 2 (1937), cols. 853–88, s.v. 'Bigamie (l'Irrégularité de)', with extensive bibl.; R. Naz, ibid., cols. 888 f., s.v. 'Bigamie (le Délit de)'.

Bigg, Charles (1840–1908), Church historian. Educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he was in his early life a college tutor and schoolmaster. In 1886 he delivered and published his *Bampton Lectures on The Christian Platonists of Alexandria, one of the finest works of English theology in the 19th cent. From 1887 to 1901 he was Rector of Fenny Compton, and in 1901 succeeded W. *Bright as Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Oxford.

A. Clark in DNB, 1901–1911, 1 (1912), pp. 162 f., s.v.

Bilney, Thomas (*c.*1495–1531), Protestant martyr. A member of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, he is said to have converted H. *Latimer to the doctrines of the Reformation, as well as to have had some influence on M. *Parker, the future archbishop. In 1527 he was arrested for heresy, but escaped death by recanting. Four years later he was again on trial for *Lollardy; and after recanting and relapsing he was burnt at *Norwich on 19 Aug. 1531. The grounds of his condemnation are obscure. He seems to have been perfectly orthodox on such things as *transubstantiation and the *sacrifice of the Mass, but to have aroused hostility by preaching violent sermons against *relics, *pilgrimages, and the cult of the saints.

The principal authority is J. *Foxe, Acts and Monuments (ed. G. Townsend, 4, 1846, pp. 619–56 and 755–63). J. Y. Batley, On a Reformer's Latin Bible: Being an Essay on the Adversaria in the Vulgate of Thomas Bilney (Cambridge, 1940), with biographical sketch, pp. 1–12. J. F. Davis, 'The trials of Thomas Bylney and the English Reformation', Historical Journal, 24 (1981), pp. 775–90; G. Walker, 'Saint or Schemer? The 1527 Heresy Trial of Thomas Bilney Reconsidered', JEH 40 (1989), pp. 219–38.

bilocation. The presence of a person in more than one place at the same moment. Certain saints, e.g. *Alphonsus Liguori, *Antony of Padua, and *Philip Neri, are supposed to have been granted this gift on occasion.

bination. The celebration of two Masses on the same day by the same priest. In the RC Church no priest may normally celebrate (or concelebrate) Mass more than once a day, except on the few occasions, such as *Christmas and *Maundy Thursday, when more than one Mass is provided. The local *ordinary may, however, allow priests to celebrate twice in a day, or even three times on Sundays and *Feasts of Obligation when pastoral necessity requires it (CIC (1983), can. 905). In the Middle Ages the custom gave rise to scandals through priests who multiplied their Masses to obtain additional Mass stipends.

K. Holböck, Die Bination: Rechtsgeschichtliche Untersuchung (Rome, 1941). É. Jombart in DDC 2 (1937), cols. 889–98, s.v. 'Binage'.

binding and loosing. The power which Mt. 16: 19 reports was given by Christ to St *Peter and later to all the Apostles (Mt. 18: 18). It seems to be a general authority to exercise discipline over the Church, and, while some have identified it with the power of forgiving or retaining sins (Jn. 20: 23), others hold it to be a wider and more inclusive authority.

H. Vorgrimler, 'Das "Binden und Lösen" in der Exegese nach dem Tridentinum bis zu Beginn des 20. Jahrhunderts', ZKT 85 (1963), pp. 460–77, with refs. F. Büschel in TWNT 2 (1935), pp. 59 f. (Eng. tr., 1964, pp. 60 f.), s.v. δέω; J. Jeremias, ibid. 3 (1938; Eng. tr., 1965), pp. 749–53, s.v. 'κλεὶς. B. Die Schüsselgewalt'; O. Michel in RAC 2 (1954), cols. 374–80, s.v. 'Binden und Lösen', with extensive bibl. See also comm. to JOHN, GOSPEL OF ST, and MATTHEW, GOSPEL OF ST.

Bingham, Joseph (1668–1723), author of The Antiquities of the Christian Church. He was educated at Wakefield Grammar School and University College, Oxford, where he became a Fellow in 1689. He was delated to the Vice-Chancellor for a sermon preached in St Mary's, Oxford, on 28 Oct. 1695 and on being condemned (with scant justice) for teaching the tritheistic doctrines of W. *Sherlock, resigned his Fellowship. In the same year he became Rector of Headbourne Worthy, near *Winchester, and in 1712 also Rector of Havant, holding the livings in plurality until his death. In 1706 he argued in The French Church's Apology for the Church of England that the real affinities of the *Huguenots were with the C of E and not with the English Dissenters. He also took an active part in the controversy on lay-baptism, of which he was a strong advocate. His most famous work, the Origines Ecclesiasticae; or the Antiquities of the Christian Church (10 vols., 1708–22), with its wealth of systematically arranged information, on the hierarchy, organization, rites, discipline, and calendar of the early Church, was the fruit of some 20 years' labours and has not been superseded. In the preface to a projected 2nd edition he advocated the reunion of the Churches on the basis of primitive episcopacy. A Latin version was published at Halle in 1724–8 by the *Lutheran, J. H. Grischow, and a RC abridgement at Augsburg in 1788–96.

Works in 2 vols., fol., London, 1726; best edn., 10 vols., Oxford, 1855, with Life by his great-grandson, R. Bingham (repr. from edn. in 9 vols., 1821–9) in vol. 1, pp. xvii–xxxi. L. W. Barnard, 'The Use of the Patristic Tradition in the Late Seventeenth and Early Eighteenth Centuries', in R. [J.] Bauckham and B. Drewery (eds.), Scripture, Tradition and Reason: ... Essays in Honour of Richard P. C. Hanson (Edinburgh, 1988), pp. 174–203. J. H. Overton in DNB 5 (1886), pp. 48–50; F. E. *Brightman in DECH (1912), pp. 55 f.; N. Sykes in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 1506–8, s.v.

Binitarianism. The belief that there are only two Persons in the Godhead instead of the three of the *Trinity, thus involving the denial of the deity of the Holy Spirit. It has been held that a few early Christian theologians, e.g. *Tertullian before he became a *Montanist, had an imperfect apprehension of the Trinity and thought in binitarian terms. The word appears to have been coined by F. *Loofs in 1898.

W. Macholz, Spuren binitarischer Denkweisen seit Tertullian (1902). K. E. *Kirk, 'The Evolution of the Doctrine of the Trinity', in A. E. J. Rawlinson (ed.), Essays on the Trinity and Incarnation (1928), pp. 157–237.

bioethics. The term 'bioethics' was coined in 1971 to describe ethical reflection on issues arising within the sphere of the biological and medical sciences; it is preferable to 'medical ethics' which is often used to refer to the limited rules of conduct and etiquette contained in professional codes. The problems of bioethics have increased with recent technological developments and include contraception, in vitro fertilization, artifical insemination, genetic engineering, abortion, eugenics, experimentation, transplantation, the rationing of resources, the treatment of mental illness, and euthanasia. In Christian thinking bioethics is a part of *moral theology and is governed by its principles, variously derived from Scripture or the natural law. Chief among these principles have been the sacredness of human life, love of neighbour, and respect for the sovereignty and providence of God. For other writers it is a branch of ethics in which principles of autonomy, beneficence, confidentiality, and justice are to be applied. For discussion of some branches of bioethics see CONTRACEPTION, PROCREATION, AND ABORTION, ETHICS OF, and DYING, CARE OF THE.

W. T. Reich (ed.), The Encyclopaedia of Bioethics (4 vols. [1978]).

Bird, William. See BYRD, WILLIAM.

biretta. The hard square cap sometimes worn by clergy in the W. Church. In origin it was apparently a soft hat, the use of which was originally confined to the higher graduates of universities; but in the 16th cent. its use was allowed to all the clergy. Its colour is black for *priests, purple for *bishops, red for *cardinals, and white for *Premonstratensian canons and Cistercian abbots. In recent times the biretta has tended to go out of use.

Braun, LC, pp. 510–14. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 2 (1907), pp. 577 f., with refs.

Birgitta, St, of Sweden. See BRIDGET, ST, OF SWEDEN.

Birinus, St (d. 649 or 650), first Bp. of *Dorchester, near Oxford, and Apostle to the West Saxons. He was consecrated bishop by Asterius at Genoa and landed in Wessex in 634. In the following year he converted and baptized the King, Cynegils, who gave him Dorchester as his episcopal see. It had been intended that he should evangelize the more remote parts of Britain, but he remained in Wessex. Feast day, 3 Dec. (in some places, 5 Dec.).

The principal authority is *Bede, HE 3. 7; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 97 f. and 231. Modern studies by J. E. Field (London, 1902) and T. Varley (Winchester, 1934). R. Graham in DHGE 8 (1935), cols. 1530 f., s.v.

Bischop, Simon. See EPISCOPIUS.

bishop (Gk. ἐπίσκοπος, lit. 'overseer'). The highest order of ministers in the Christian Church. The word is an Anglo-Saxon corruption of episcopus.

In Catholic Christendom (incl. the Anglican Communion) bishops are the chief pastors of the Church, who individually form a centre of unity in their dioceses, and together, by their sharing in the episcopal college, embody the unity of the Church, and by their consecration and power to confer *Orders, witness to the succession of the Church throughout the ages. They normally receive consecration at the hands of a *Metropolitan and two other bishops, and are consecrated to rule a particular diocese or part of the Church within that Metropolitan's *province. In addition to consecration two further things are necessary: election and mission. Election is the choosing of a particular person. The candidate must be of mature age (30 years in the C of E), have spent a certain period in priest's orders, and be of good character and sound doctrine. In the RC Church election is performed by the Pope; nowadays the clergy of the diocese may nominate candidates, but in every case the final choice is his. Elsewhere the usual method is for a bishop to be chosen by the dean and chapter of the cathedral of the diocese or some other ecclesiastical body existing specially for this purpose. Throughout the history of the Church secular rulers have from time to time secured the right to nominate candidates to vacant sees, but theoretically this has always been subject to ecclesiastical approval. In the C of E at the present day the *Crown Appointments Commission submits two names to the Prime Minister, who recommends one to the Sovereign; the Sovereign then gives leave to the *dean and chapter to proceed to an election (the document containing this permission is known as the congé d'élire) and nominates the person to be elected. After the election the royal assent is given to it. Should the chapter elect a person other than the one nominated, the royal assent would, presumably, be refused and the electors become subject to certain pains and penalties. When there is no recognized chapter in the diocese the Crown appoints a person directly by letters patent. Mission is the conveying of the powers of a bishop. In the C of E the Metropolitan of the province confirms the election and at the direction of the Crown proceeds to the consecration. If the candidate is nominated directly by the Crown there is no confirmation. After consecration the new bishop is enthroned in his cathedral and takes possession of his see. Acc. to Anglican theory this is the result of his acceptance into their company by the other bishops. In the RC Church every diocesan bishop is required either in person or by an approved deputy to visit Rome every five years and report on the state of his diocese. (See AD LIMINA APOSTOLORUM.)

The chief duties of a modern bishop in the W. Church consist in the general oversight of his diocese, in the leadership of his clergy and laity in the proclamation of the Gospel, and in administering those Sacraments which he alone is competent to confer (*Confirmation and Ordination). The diocesan bishop may be assisted by other bishops who are subordinate to him and known as *suffragans (q.v.), auxiliaries, coadjutors, or assistants. In the E. Church the position and spiritual powers of the bishop are similar to those in the W., with the exception of the additional requirement that bishops, unlike other priests, are required to be unmarried (or widowed). This practice virtually necessitates their recruitment from the monastic order.

In the C of E the diocesan bishop exercises jurisdiction either through his *Consistory Court, over which he himself presides in theory (though he usually delegates the presidency nowadays to his *chancellor), or through commissaries appointed under the Church Discipline Act 1840. From medieval times the English bishops have had seats in the House of Lords; but under the Bishoprics Act 1878 only 26 English bishops (that is the two archbishops and the bishops of London, *Durham, and *Winchester ex officio, and 21 others senior by nomination to an English see) enjoy this privilege. The bishop's connection with his cathedral church, which is governed by the statutes of the various cathedrals, varies considerably from diocese to diocese.

Among the insignia traditional to the bishop (most of them now widely in use in the Anglican Communion) are the throne in his cathedral (usually on the Gospel side of the sanctuary; at *Norwich behind the high altar; see CATHEDRA), *mitre, *pastoral staff, *pectoral cross, and *ring. In England he is addressed as 'Right Reverend'; if an archbishop, as 'Most Reverend'. In the RC Church he is styled 'Reverendissimus et Illustrissimus'. Here, and often elsewhere, he is mentioned throughout his diocese by name in the Eucharistic prayer.

The beginnings of the episcopate in early times have long been debated, partly because of the inconclusiveness of the NT evidence by itself, partly on account of its relevance to the many contemporary forms of Church government. It seems that at first the terms 'episcopos' and 'presbyter' were used interchangeably (cf. e.g. Acts 20: 17 and 20: 28). But for St *Ignatius (early 2nd cent.), bishops, presbyters, and deacons are already quite distinct. On the other hand, elsewhere, notably in Egypt, the threefold ministry does not seem to have established itself until considerably later. By the middle of the 2nd cent. all the leading centres of Christianity would appear to have had their bishops, and from then until the Reformation, Christianity was everywhere organized on an episcopal basis.

The title of bishop was retained after the Reformation in certain *Lutheran Churches, notably those of *Denmark, *Norway, *Finland, *Sweden, and Transylvania. It was temporarily restored in Prussia in 1701 and was customary in certain other German provinces such as Schleswig-Holstein; it was generally adopted for the *'Superintendents' of the German Lutheran Church in 1927. In the case of Lutheran bishops, however, with the exception of Sweden, and Finland until 1884, the title implied no claim to apostolic succession or any of the peculiar powers deriving therefrom, such as are normally connected with the Catholic use of the word. The title is also in use among certain other Protestant bodies such as the *Moravians and the *Methodist Episcopal Churches of America and Africa: the former claiming apostolic succession although it is Presbyterian in government; the latter derives its succession from the appointments made by J. *Wesley.

See also APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION, CHOREPISCOPUS, ORDERS AND ORDINATION, SUFFRAGAN BISHOP.

A. Barbosa, Pastoralis Solicitudinis, siue de Officio, et Potestate Episcopi Tripartita Descriptio (2 vols., Lyons, 1628); C. Ziegler, De Episcopis, eorumque Juribus, Privilegiis et Vivendi Ratione (Nuremberg, 1686). D. Bouix, Tractatus de Episcopo, ubi et de Synodo Diocesana (2 vols., Paris, 1859). R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, 1 (2nd edn., by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), esp. pp. 18–86; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (8th edn., by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 70–86; G. [E.] Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law, 3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson (1992), esp. pp. 16–20. G. Coulton in DECH, pp. 58–63, s.v. The main duties and rights of modern RC bishops are laid down in CIC (1983), cans. 375–430. T. J. Green in J. A. Coriden, T. J. Green, and D. E. Heintschel, The Code of Canon Law: A Text and Commentary (1985), pp. 319–49, with bibl. E. Valton in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1701–25, s.v. 'Évêques. Questions théologiques et canoniques', with refs. F. Claeys-Bouuaert in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 569–89, s.v. 'Évêques', with bibl.

For the chief original texts on the early growth of episcopacy, D. *Stone, Episcopacy and Valid Orders in the Primitive Church (1910). J. *Bingham, Origines Ecclesiasticae, bk. 2, chs. 1–18 (1708), pp. 49–257. J. Réville, Les Origines de l'épiscopat (1894); R. L. Fox, Pagans and Christians (1986), pp. 493–545. A. J. Mason, The Church of England and Episcopacy (1914). C. Jenkins and K. D. Mackenzie (eds.), Episcopacy, Ancient and Modern (1930); N. Sykes, The Church of England and Non-Episcopal Churches in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries (1948); E. R. Fairweather and R. F. Hettlinger, Episcopacy and Reunion (Toronto, 1952; London, 1953); F. Benz, Bischofsamt und apostolische Sukzession im deutschen Protestantismus (1953); K. M. Carey (ed.), The Historic Episcopate in the Fullness of the Church (1954; 2nd edn., 1960); N. Sykes, Old Priest and New Presbyter: Episcopacy and Presbyterianism since the Reformation with especial relation to the Churches of England and Scotland (Cambridge, 1956); W. H. G. Simon (ed.), Bishops (1961); W. Telfer, The Office of a Bishop (1962); A. G. Hebert, SSM, Apostle and Bishop (1963); J. Colson, L'Épiscopat catholique: Collégialité et primauté dans les trois premiers siècles de l'Église (Unam Sanctam, 43; 1963), and other works of this author. [R.] J. Halliburton, The Authority of a Bishop (1987). J. A. *Robinson in E.Bi., 1 (1899), cols. 578–84, s.v.; D. Stone in HERE 5 (1912), pp. 332–7, s.v. 'Episcopacy'; F. Prat, SJ, in DTC 5 (1913), cols. 1656–701, s.v. 'Évêques (origines de l'épiscopat)' See also works cited under ORDERS AND ORDINATION.

Bishop, Edmund (1846–1917), liturgist and historian. A native of Totnes, Devon, he had his schooling at *Exeter and in *Belgium. After a short time as secretary to T. *Carlyle, he held a government post from 1864 to 1885 in the Education Office, when he spent most of his leisure in research in the British Museum. In 1867 he was received into the Church of Rome. After leaving the Education Office he hoped to become a monk at *Downside Abbey; but his intention was frustrated by weak health. He continued, however, to maintain close connections with Downside, where he made the friendship of F. A. *Gasquet, who shared his liturgical interests. In 1890, in conjunction with Gasquet, he published Edward VI and the Book of Common Prayer; in 1908 a study of the early English calendars in the Bosworth Psalter; and in 1909 studies in various liturgical subjects in an appendix to R. H. *Connolly's Liturgical Homilies of Narsai. He also made notable contributions to the early history of the Roman liturgy, esp. the text of the canon missae* and the history of the *Gregorian Sacramentary. Perhaps his most widely known writing was his paper on 'The Genius of the Roman Rite', originally delivered to the Historical Research Society on 8 May 1899, in which he maintained that the two chief characteristics of the Roman rite (when divested of *Gallican accretions) were 'soberness' and 'sense'. This and many of his other papers were collected in Liturgica Historica (1918; posthumous).

Life by N. [J.] Abercrombie (London, 1959). A. R. Vidler, A Variety of Catholic Modernists (Sarum Lectures, 1968–9; Cambridge, 1970), pp. 134–52.

Bishops' Bible. A new English translation of the Bible, compiled at the direction of Abp. M. *Parker, and first published in 1568. It was a revision of the *Great Bible version. All *churchwardens were ordered by *Convocation to obtain a copy for their churches in 1571, and in the following year it was republished with some corrections. A novel feature of this edition was the placing of each translator's initials at the end of his part. It remained the official English version till the publication of the *Authorized Version in 1611, but despite numerous editions by the Queen's Printers it won less popularity than the unauthorized *Calvinist translation known as the *Geneva Bible.

Darlow and Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, 1 (1968), pp. 70 f. (no. 125).

Bishops' Book (1537). Under the title 'The Institution of a Christen Man', this book was an exposition of the *Creed, the *Seven Sacraments, the *Decalogue, the *Lord's Prayer, and the *Ave Maria, compiled by a committee of English bishops and divines in 1537. It also dealt with certain other vexed questions, among them the doctrines of *justification and *purgatory and the relation of the C of E to the Roman see. The book never received the authority of the King, who used it rather to test the temper of the people. In 1543 a revised edition was published by *Henry VIII which came to be known as the *King's Book.

The book was repr. in Formularies of Faith set forth by Authority during the Reign of Henry VIII (ed. C. *Lloyd, 1825), pp. 21–212. F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (2 vols., 1915), Introd. (see index, p. 1064).

Bishops' Wars. The two brief campaigns in Scotland in 1639 and 1640. After the attempt of *Charles I to enforce the use of the Prayer Book in Scotland, the Scots had broken out into rebellion, and their avowed aim was to abolish episcopacy. The military importance of these campaigns was inconsiderable, but the need for money to conduct them obliged the King to summon the English Parliament, which had not met since 1629, and so gave his enemies in England a chance to gather their forces.

Black Canons. See BLACK MONKS.

Black Churches. Apart from the ancient Churches of *Nubia and *Ethiopia, Black Churches originated in the 18th cent. among the descendants of African slaves in the *United States of America. Beginning in the 1740s, evangelical *revivals attracted increasing numbers of Blacks to Christianity, perhaps largely because they were permitted to assume active roles as preachers and leaders. The *Baptist and *Methodist Churches that resulted from the revivals licensed Black men to preach. By the 1770s Black Baptists were acting as pastors of separate Black congregations of slave and free members. In the South, Black Churches were restricted and sometimes suppressed because Whites suspected they might foment slave rebellion. In the 19th cent. slaves became familiar with at least the rudiments of Christianity. Some attended church with Whites or met separately under White supervision, but the majority had no access to formal church services. Slaves regularly held their own religious meetings, with or without their owners' consent. In sermon and song they recounted biblical stories and identified themselves as a chosen people whom God would free as He had done Israel of old. The slaves generated a distinct religious culture, best expressed in the *spirituals (q.v.).

In the North, the abolition of slavery after the Revolution (1776–83) enabled Blacks to exercise religious freedom. Alienated by White discrimination, Blacks in Philadelphia founded two influential churches, Bethel African Methodist and St Thomas African Episcopal, both in 1794. Over the next decade, separate Black Churches of various denominations sprang up across the North. In 1816 the first major Black denomination, the African Methodist Episcopal Church was formed and Richard Allen (1760–1831), a former slave, elected as its bishop. As the one institution under Black control, the Church served to organize the socio-political, as well as the religious, life of free Black communities. It became the primary forum for promoting the causes of education, self-help, and anti-slavery. When, for example, delegates to the first National Negro Convention gathered in 1830 to try to improve conditions for Blacks, they met in Bethel African Methodist Episcopal church in Philadelphia, with Bp. Allen presiding. Black leaders in abolition, temperance, and moral reform movements were mainly ministers.

Most Black Churches were Protestant, because Blacks had little contact with RCism except in Maryland and Louisiana. Black RC communities in Baltimore and New Orleans organized two religious orders of Black women, the Oblate Sisters of Providence in 1829 and the Holy Family Sisters in 1842. The first African American priest, James Augustine Healy (1830–1900), was ordained in 1854. Black RCs did not, however, attain anything like the institutional independence of the Black Protestant Churches until the 20th cent.

Black Church membership was predominantly female, but, as in other Churches, the clergy were exclusively male, since women were barred from ordination until the 20th cent. With the rare exception of travelling evangelists such as Jarena Lee (b. 1783) and Amanda Berry Smith (1837–1915), women were not permitted to preach in church. They did, however, lead home prayer meetings, offer spiritual counsel, and wield considerable influence through auxiliary, missionary, and Sunday school boards.

Blacks began the first American foreign missions in the 1780s when George Liele (*c.*1750–1820) established Baptist Churches in Jamaica and David George (*c.*1742–1810) did the same in Nova Scotia and *Sierra Leone. In 1820 an African Methodist Episcopal Church missionary, Daniel Coker (born Isaac Wright, 1780–1846), sailed to Sierra Leone and a Black Baptist, Lott Carey (1780?–1828) arrived in Liberia in 1821.

After Emancipation in 1865, northern missionaries went South to organize Churches among the former slaves. The influx of southern members enlarged the rolls of northern Black denominations and made them national in scope. Ex-slaves withdrew from White Churches in large numbers to found their own. When Reconstruction (1865–77) allowed Blacks to hold political office, ministers took active roles in government, until disfranchisement once again restricted Black leadership primarily to the Church.

After the demise of Reconstruction, worsening race relations prompted some Black Americans to consider emigrating to Africa, a position advocated most forcefully by the African Methodist Episcopal Church Bp. Henry McNeal Turner (1834–1915). Few emigrated, but many agreed with the Black Episcopalian, Alexander Crummell (1819–98), a former missionary to Liberia, that it was the divinely appointed destiny of African Americans to Christianize Africa. Although Black Churches were too poor to finance missions on a large scale, scores of Black American men and women served in Africa with the support of Black or White mission boards.

At the end of the 19th cent., Black Church membership reached 2.7 million out of a population of 8.3 million Blacks. In 1895 Black Baptists united to form the National Baptist Convention, soon the largest Black denomination. Blacks joined new *Holiness and *Pentecostal Churches that emphasized sanctification and speaking in tongues. A Black preacher, William J. Seymour (1870–1922), led the 1906 Azusa Street revival in Los Angeles that inspired Pentecostal Churches across America. At the beginning of the 20th cent. rural Blacks moved in increasing numbers to the cities of the South and North. Some of the larger Churches developed social agencies to assist in their relocation. Migrants increased the ranks of urban Churches and formed new congregations, usually in homes or rented shopfronts. In the cities new religious options emerged. RCism attracted significant numbers of Black converts, primarily by means of the parochial schools. Esoteric forms of Judaism and Islam, and charismatic religious leaders gained followers at the expense of mainstream Churches. In this setting of religious ferment, the emphasis of Holiness and Pentecostal Churches on charismatic experience exerted a wide appeal.

Twentieth cent. urbanization and modernization also brought criticism of the Church for alleged conservatism and other-worldliness. Secular alternatives competed with the Church and new professionals rivalled the minister's authority. The Church, none the less, remained the central institution for Black social, cultural, and political life. The struggle for civil rights depended heavily upon the support of Black Churches and Black clergy. The career of the Black Baptist minister Martin Luther *King epitomized for his followers the religious nature of the political struggle for racial equality. King drew upon the Black Church tradition to mobilize demonstrations against racism, poverty, and war.

In the late 1960s and 1970s militant critics accused the Church of retarding Black liberation. In response, some Black clergy developed a Black theology that emphasized the theme of liberation (see LIBERATION THEOLOGY). More recently Black women, as well as White, have articulated theological critiques of sexism in Church and society. Today the Black Church is no longer the only institution which Black Americans control. It remains, however, a central institution for Black communities throughout the country.

Historically Black Churches arose in the racially divided society of America, but they now also have a substantial presence in the urban areas of Britain. After the end of the Second World War (1945), a large number of Black people from the Caribbean were recruited to fill job vacancies in England. Many of those who came first belonged to mainstream Churches (esp. Anglican and Baptist), but, feeling unwelcome in the English congregations of these communions, a significant proportion of them came to disregard their denominational loyalties. Increasingly, later Caribbean immigrants came from Holiness and Pentecostal backgrounds. They suffered from liturgical and doctrinal incompatibilities, and, given the more evangelical emphasis of their Churches in the Caribbean, felt alienated by what they regarded as nominal Christianity. The regrouping of individuals around denominational loyalties within the Holiness–Pentecostal stream provided not only a common bond in worship but also some social and cultural cohesion for Afro-Caribbean Christians of various denominations, and they were joined by those who had become disaffected in other Churches. The majority of Black Churches in Britain fall within the Pentecostal–Holiness tradition, but there is a strong presence among the *Seventh-day Adventists and the emerging African Christian groups. Since the mid-1970s, concentration on social action has given rise to such groups as the Afro-West Indian United Council of Churches (established in 1976), and in more recent times they have become involved in wider ecumenical endeavours, such as the establishment of *Churches Together in England and Wales (1991). The term 'Black-led', formerly widely used, is disliked by these Churches.

Collections of primary material by M. C. Sernett (ed.), Afro-American Religious History: A Documentary Witness (Durham, NC, 1985) and G. S. Wilmore and J. H. Cone (eds.), Black Theology: A Documentary History, 1966–1979 (Maryknoll, NY [1979]). C. G. Woodson, The History of the Negro Church (Washington, DC [1921]; 2nd edn. [1945]). G. S. Wilmore, Black Religion and Black Radicalism: An Interpretation of the Religious History of Afro-American People (Garden City, NY, 1972; 2nd edn., Maryknoll, NY [1983]). C. V. R. George, Segregated Sabbaths: Richard Allen and the Emergence of Independent Black Churches 1760–1840 (New York, 1973). A. J. Raboteau, Slave Religion: The 'Invisible Institution' of the Antebellum South (ibid., 1978). R. K. Burkett and R. Newman (eds.), Black Apostles: Afro-American Clergy Confront the Twentieth Century (Boston [1978]); D. W. Wills and R. Newman (eds.), Black Apostles at Home and Abroad: Afro-Americans and the Christian Mission from the Revolution to Reconstruction (ibid. [1982]). J. M. Washington, Frustrated Fellowship: The Black Baptist Quest for Social Power (Macon, Ga. [1986]). E. Lincoln and L. H. Mamiya, The Black Church in the African American Experience (Durham, NC, and London, 1990).

Black Friars. Friars of the Order of Preachers or *Dominicans. They are so called from the black mantles worn over their white habits and *scapulars. The name is first attested in the 14th cent.

W. Gumbley, OP, 'On the Name Blackfriars', Blackfriars, 1 (1920–1), pp. 54 f.

Black Letter Days. The lesser (mainly non-scriptural) Saints' Days (printed in black), as distinct from the major festivals, which formerly appeared in red letters in the BCP calendar. They were omitted in 1549, but four appeared in the 1552 Book and the remainder in 1561 save for St *Evurtius (added, 1604), St *Alban, and the Ven. *Bede (added, 1662). In 1662 their purpose was defined by the revising bishops as the commemoration of Saints and the provision of useful calendrical notes for business purposes. The practice of distinguishing important feasts by the use of red letters goes back to the pre-Reformation service books. The Black Letter days were excluded from the Irish (1878) and American (1786) Prayer Books. Much more extensive lists are found in modern Anglican Prayer Books.

[W. *Sanday], Minor Holy Days in the Church of England: Primary Authorities for the Early Names [1901]. V. Staley, The Liturgical Year: An Explanation of the Origin, History and Significance of the Festival Days and Fasting Days of the English Church (1907), ch. 12, pp. 129–58.

Black Mass. The expression is used as a popular name for: (1) a *Requiem, or Mass for the Dead, so called from the custom of using black vestments; and (2) a parody of the Mass celebrated with blasphemous intention, in honour of the devil.

Black Monks. A name given in medieval England to the *Benedictine monks, as they were distinguished by wearing black habits. The analogous term 'Black Canons' is also found as a designation of *Augustinian canons.

Black Rubric. The name now commonly given to the 'Declaration on Kneeling' printed at the end of the Holy Communion service in the BCP. It is first found in the Book of 1552, when it was inserted at the last moment without Parliamentary authority. The Elizabethan edition of 1559 removed it; but a shortened version was replaced in the Book of 1662, with the significant change that the words 'real and essential' were altered to 'corporal' presence, thereby indicating that its purpose was rather to guard against *transubstantiation and popular medieval ideas of Eucharistic doctrine than to deny altogether Christ's presence in the Sacrament. The expression 'Black Rubric' dates only from the 19th cent. when the practice of printing the BCP with the rubrics in red was introduced and the fact that the 'Declaration' was really not a rubric at all was marked by printing it in black. In modern two-colour reprints of the BCP it will be found, however, printed in red.

J. G. Simpson in PBD, pp. 105 f., s.v. See also F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (2 vols., 1915), index (p. 1062), s.v. 'Declaration on Kneeling'.

Blackwell, George (1547–1612), RC *archpriest. He was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he was elected to a fellowship in 1566, which he subsequently gave up through his RC sympathies. In 1574 he entered the English College at *Douai and was ordained priest in 1575. He returned to England on the RC mission in 1576. After the confusion in RC discipline that followed Card. W. *Allen's death (1594) through the absence of a supreme authority in England, Blackwell was put in control of the secular clergy by *Clement VIII, with the title of archpriest and with 12 assistants to help him. Though not himself a *Jesuit, Blackwell pursued a strongly pro-Jesuit policy hostile to the interests of the secular clergy, who aimed at political rapprochement with the Crown. A group of 31 *Appellants (q.v.), headed by W. Bishop, sought redress from Rome, but on 6 Apr. 1599 a reply was issued in Blackwell's favour. On the strength of it Blackwell continued his previous policy, but after two further appeals he was reproved by Clement in a letter of 5 Oct. 1602. After imprisonment for a time in 1607, he took the Oath of Allegiance to *James I, which had been formally condemned by *Paul V in 1606 and 1607, and in 1608 the Pope appointed George Birket or Birkhead in his place.

Refs. to Blackwell will be found in the docs. of the Archpriest Controversy listed s.v. APPELLANTS. T. Cooper in DNB 5 (1886), pp. 144–6.

Blaise, St. See BLASIUS, ST.

Blake, William (1757–1827), poet, artist, and visionary. Apprenticed to an engraver from 1771 to 1778, he became, through frequent work in *Westminster Abbey, imbued with the spirit of Gothic art which remained his guiding ideal throughout his life. In 1789 he finished his Songs of Innocence, a collection of poems of childlike simplicity which included 'The Divine Image', where God and His image, man, are hymned as 'Mercy, Pity, Peace, and Love'. The book was engraved by hand and illustrated by coloured drawings, a technique adopted in most of his subsequent works. It was followed by The Book of Thel (1789) and The Marriage of Heaven and Hell (1793), allegorical poems full of obscure though often beautiful imagery, which Blake used to express his religious convictions. The Songs of Experience (1794) are a kind of complement to the Songs of Innocence, though on a sterner note and penetrated by a deep sense of the darker side of life, e.g. in the famous 'Tyger'. His later poetical works, written in something like free verse, are increasingly given over to theosophical speculations and unintelligible allegories. At the same time his compositions gained in artistic maturity. About 1795 he produced a series of large colour prints of much imaginative power, including the magnificent 'The Elohim creating Adam', and in 1797 his illustrations of Edward Young's Night Thoughts. In 1804 he published his poem Milton, the proem of which consists of the famous lines 'Jerusalem', much used (with the music of Hubert Parry) as a national hymn. In the following years he produced engravings for Robert Blair's Grave of high visionary qualities, but, like most of his drawings, not without flaws in technique. From 1808 to 1818 he was occupied with writing and illustrating his great allegorical poem Jerusalem, in which St *Teresa and Mme *Guyon figure among 'the gentle souls who guide the great wine-press of Love'. His unconventional religious beliefs found fresh expression in an unfinished poem, The Everlasting Gospel, which rejects the traditional picture of a meek and humble Christ. His greatest work, the Illustrations to the Book of Job, completed in the last years of his life (1821–1825, pub. 1826), consists of 21 engravings showing the dealings of God with Job from the peaceful contentment of the opening scene, through the despair of the tormented Job accusing his Creator, to the rapturous bliss of his final restoration. The figures, often of elemental strength and beauty, move in the atmosphere of crude black and white contrasts which invests Blake's works with their characteristic impression of haunting unreality.

Blake's art, which spurns reason as well as nature and lives solely in the realm of imagination, was inseparable from his religion, which was itself a religion of art. Opposed to both dogma and asceticism, it flowed from a boundless sympathy with all living things which Blake identified with the forgiveness of sins proclaimed by the Gospel. Though he was little understood by his contemporaries, his visionary genius, both as a poet and an artist, has been increasingly admired since its discovery by A. C. Swinburne and interpretation by W. B. Yeats. His insistence on the supremacy of the spiritual world, though unbalanced by reason and a sound sense of reality, has acted as a powerful antidote to 19th cent. materialism.

The best edns. of his writings are those by G. [L.] Keynes (3 vols., London, 1925, repr., with additional material, 1966) and G. E. Bentley, Jun. (2 vols., Oxford, 1978). Id., Blake Records (ibid., 1969). M. Butlin, The Paintings and Drawings of William Blake (2 vols., New Haven, Conn., and London, 1981). Life by A. Gilchrist (2 vols., London, 1863), repr. in Everyman's Library (1942). Modern studies by M. Wilson (London, 1927; 3rd edn. by G. [L.] Keynes, 1971), T. Wright (2 vols., Olney, Bucks, 1929), K. [J.] Raine (London, 1970), J. King (ibid., 1991), and P. Ackroyd (ibid., 1995).

G. [L.] Keynes, Blake Studies (1949; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1971); G. W. Digby, Symbol and Image in William Blake (ibid., 1957); G. M. Harper, The Neoplatonism of William Blake (Chapel Hill, NC, and London, 1961); M. D. Paley and M. Phillips (eds.), William Blake: Essays in Honour of Sir Geoffrey Keynes (Oxford, 1973). P. Berger, William Blake: Mysticisme et poésie (1906; Eng. tr., 1914); J. G. Davies, The Theology of William Blake (1948). D. Bindman, Blake as an Artist (Oxford, 1977). R. N. Essick, William Blake Printmaker (Princeton, NJ, 1980); id., The Separate Plates of William Blake: A Catalogue (ibid., 1983). M. Eaves, William Blake's Theory of Art (ibid., 1982). S. F. Damon, A Blake Dictionary (Providence, RI, 1965). G. [L.] Keynes, A Bibliography of William Blake (New York, 1921); G. E. Bentley, Jun., and M. K. Nurmi, A Blake Bibliography (Minneapolis, 1964; rev. as Blake Books, Oxford, 1977). Blake Newsletter, 1–10 (Berkeley, Calif., 1967–77); Blake: An Illustrated Quarterly, 11 ff. (ibid., 1977 ff.).

Blandina, St. A virgin slave girl martyred in 177 at Lyons, together with *Pothinus, the bishop of the city. Feast day in the W., 2 June; in E., 26 July.

Her heroic courage is described in the 'Letter of the Churches of Lyons and Vienne', preserved in *Eusebius, HE 5. 1. 3–63.

Blasius, St. Acc. to a late and historically worthless but widely distributed legend, St Blasius (Blaise) was Bp. of Sebaste in Armenia and martyred under *Licinius in the early 4th cent. He is said to have miraculously saved the life of a young child who was nearly choked by a fish-bone, and hence his intercessions have been sought by the sick, and esp. those with throat trouble. He is also invoked for the cure of diseases of cattle and is the patron saint of woolcombers. He is one of the 14 *Auxiliary Saints, and his cult used to be very popular in Germany. His feast is observed in the W. on 3 Feb. (formerly 15 Feb.); in the E. on 11 Feb.

AASS, Feb. 1 (1658), pp. 331–53. His Gk. Legend is pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 116. 817–30. G. Garitte, 'La Passion de S. Irénarque de Sébastée et la Passion de S. Blaise', Anal. Boll. 73 (1955), pp. 18–54. J. P. Kirsch in CE 2 (1907), p. 592; G. D. Gordini and others in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 3 (1963), cols. 157–70, s.v. 'Biagio, vescovo di Sebaste', both with bibl.

blasphemy (Gk. βλασφημία, from βλάπτω, 'to damage', and φήμη, 'reputation'). Speech, thought, or action manifesting contempt for God. In moral theology it is commonly regarded as a sin against the virtue of religion, though St *Thomas Aquinas defined it as a sin against faith. It may be directed either immediately against God or mediately against the Church or the saints, and is by its nature a mortal sin. Blasphemy was punished by stoning in the OT (Lev. 24: 16, 1 Kgs. 21: 10), and the Code of *Justinian, as well as the medieval canon law, also prescribed severe punishments. Thus the Council of Aachen of 818 re-established the death penalty. In post-Reformation England, blasphemy laws were passed in 1558 and reinforced in 1698. From the time of the *Enlightenment the secular authorities in most countries have regarded blasphemy no longer as a crime against God but as an offence against society and punished it as such. In recent times repeated attempts have been made in many countries to abolish the laws against blasphemy altogether. Thus in Great Britain only scurrilous attacks on Christianity can be sustained under the blasphemy laws, as calculated to offend believers or even to cause a breach of the peace.

Blass, Friedrich Wilhelm (1843–1907), German classical scholar, who also contributed much to the philology and *textual criticism of the NT. Besides editions of Matthew (1901), Luke (1897), John (1902), and Acts (1895), he published a Grammatik des neutestamentlichen Griechisch (1896; 16th edn. by A. Debrunner and F. Rehkopf, 1976; Eng. tr. by H. St J. Thackeray, 1898; Eng. tr. of 9–10th edns., incorporating notes by A. Debrunner, by R. W. Funk, Cambridge, 1961) and a Philology of the Gospels (London, 1898). He maintained that the *Western and non-Western texts of Lk. and Acts were different recensions both deriving from the same author (St Luke), a view, however, which has found little favour among most textual critics.

W. Crönert, 'Friedrich Blass', Biographisches Jahrbuch für die Altertumswissenschaft, 32 (1909), pp. 1–32 (with list of Blass's works, pp. 30–2). For his theory of Luke-Acts, see L. J. M. Bebb in HDB 3 (1900), pp. 164 f. A. Romeo in EC 2 (1949), cols. 1716 f.

Blastares, Matthew (fl. 1335). A monk of Thessalonica who composed an alphabetical handbook of *canon law (Σύνταγμα κατὰ στοιχεῖον) as well as treatises against 'the Latins' (i.e. W. Catholics) and the Jews. He seems also to be the author of a collection of hymns.

His Syntagma is repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 144. 960–1400. His hymns were ed. by P. B. Paschos (Athens, 1980); id., 'Ο Ματθαῖος Βλάσταρης καὶ τὸ ὑμνογραφικὸν ἔργον του (Thessalonica, 1978), with summary in Fr. Beck (1959), pp. 786 f., with refs. J. Herman in DDC 2 (1937), cols. 920–5, s.v.

Blemmydes, Nicephorus (1197–?1269). A Greek theologian who took an active part in the attempts to reunite the E. and W. Churches in the 13th cent. From 1214 to 1221 he studied medicine with his father; in 1223/4 he was ordained deacon, and priest in 1234. He wrote on a variety of subjects, including theology, physics, and logic, and also produced some poems and a monastic rule.

His theological writings are in J. P. Migne, PG 142. 527–1622. Curriculum Vitae et Carmina ed. A. Heisenberg (Teub., 1896); the edn. of the Curriculum Vitae is now superseded by that, accompanied by the Epistula Universalior, ed. J. A. Munitiz (CCSG 13; 1984); Eng. tr. of the Curriculum Vitae (A Partial Account), with comm., by id. (SSL 48; 1988). P. Canart, 'Nicéphore Blemmyde et le Mémoire adressé aux envoyés de Grégoire IX (Nicée, 1234)', OCP 25 (1959), pp. 310–25, incl. text. Beck (1959), pp. 671–3, with lit. to date.

Blessed (as title). See BEATIFICATION.

Blessed Sacrament. A term used of the Sacrament of the Eucharist, and applied both to the service itself and more esp. to the consecrated elements.

Blessed Virgin, the. See MARY, THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

blessing. The authoritative pronouncement of God's favour. Instances in the OT are the blessing of Isaac (Gen. 27) and the prayer of Balaam (Num. 23 f.), both of which presuppose the automatic action of a blessing, independently of moral considerations. Later we see liturgical blessings of persons (Num. 6: 22 ff.) and of things, such as food (1 Sam. 9: 13, cf. Mt. 14: 19). In Christian practice blessing finds a frequent place in the liturgy, esp. in the blessing of the elements in consecration (so Mt. 26: 26). The blessing of the people at the end of the Mass did not become general until the later Middle Ages. Blessings are frequently given to individuals, e.g. the deacon who is to sing the Gospel, the penitent about to make a confession, and less formally outside liturgical services, by bishops and priests (and in the RC Church now also by deacons), and by parents to their children. In many places a custom has arisen of concluding all services with a blessing, often given at the altar. The right hand is raised to bless, and usually the *sign of the cross is made, though occasionally this is omitted. The section of the *Rituale Romanum, De benedictionibus (1984) provides forms of blessings of people in various circumstances of their life and for animals, buildings, fields, and food as well as other inanimate objects. These blessings are real services, incl. biblical readings and intercessions. Provision is also made for *grace at meals. See also BERAKAH.

A. Franz, Die kirchlichen Benediktionen im Mittelalter (1909). T. G. Simons, Blessings: A reappraisal of their nature, purpose and celebration (Saratoga, Calif., 1981); M. Collins and D. Power (eds.), Blessing and Power (Concilium, 178; 1985).

Blomfield, Charles James (1786–1857), Bp. of London. He was the son of a schoolmaster at Bury St Edmunds, and, after a distinguished career at Trinity College, Cambridge, was ordained in 1810. In the next 14 years he was appointed to a succession of benefices culminating in his nomination in 1824 to the see of *Chester. Here he set himself to raise the standard of clerical life and to root out abuses, esp. those of non-residence, though he himself retained his former living of St Botolph's, Aldgate, *in commendam. In 1828 he became Bp. of London. During his episcopate some 200 new churches were built and consecrated in his diocese, chiefly through his zeal and interest. In politics his position wavered. Though nominally a Whig, he resisted Catholic Emancipation (1829), and absented himself in the early stages of the Reform Bill, but he finally voted in its favour. His Churchmanship also seemed inconsistent. While he drove W. J. E. *Bennett from St Paul's, Knightsbridge, and supported the *Jerusalem Bishopric scheme of 1841, he signed the protest against R. D. *Hampden's appointment to the see of *Hereford, and dissented from the judgement of the Privy Council in the *Gorham case. He was an active member of the *Ecclesiastical Commission. In 1856 he was forced by paralysis to resign his see. He was held in repute as a classical scholar and issued editions of Prometheus Vinctus (1810), Callimachus (1815), Euripides (1821) and other texts.

Memoir by his son, A. Blomfield (2 vols., 1893). P. J. Welch, 'Bishop Blomfield and Church Extension in London', JEH 4 (1953), pp. 203–15; id., 'Blomfield and Peel: A Study in Cooperation between Church and State, 1841–1846', ibid. 12 (1961), pp. 71–84. G. F. A. Best, Temporal Pillars: Queen Anne's Bounty, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and the Church of England (Cambridge, 1964), passim.

Blondel, David (1590–1655), French Protestant ecclesiastical historian. A native of Châlons-sur-Marne, he was educated at Sedan and at the *Genevan Academy. For most of his life he was a pastor at Roucy; in 1631 he was offered a chair of theology at Saumur, but the opposition of his patron led the synod of Charenton to revoke the invitation. In 1645 he was created an 'Honorary Professor' of Saumur, with a generous annual financial grant, and in 1650 finally left Roucy to succeed G. J. *Voss at the École Illustre at Amsterdam, where he came into prominence through his liberal sympathies. He was at once a learned historian and effective controversialist. His Pseudo-Isidorus et Turrianus Vapulantes (1928), perhaps his most important work, finally discredited the historicity of the '*False Decretals'. His De la primauté en l'Église (1641) was a defence of the Reformed ecclesiastical polity and his Apologia pro Sententia Hieronymi de Episcopis et Presbyteris (1646) an attack on episcopacy. He also wrote an erudite and successful criticism of the myth of Pope *Joan (in two writings, 1647 and 1657) which aroused hostility among many of his fellow Protestants.

All his works were on the *Index. E. and E. Haag, La France Protestante (2nd edn.), 2 (1879), pp. 623–31. A. Lambert in DDC 2 (1937), cols. 926 f.

Blondel, Maurice (1861–1949), French philosopher. He was a native of Dijon, where he was educated at the École Normale, and later held professorships of philosophy at Montauban, Lille, and Aix-Marseille. The work that first placed him in the front rank of contemporary thinkers was L'Action (1893; Eng. tr., 1984), with the significant subtitle, 'Essai d'une critique de la vie et d'une science de la pratique'. In it Blondel attempted to construct a 'philosophy of action', conceiving 'action' in its widest sense and all its ramifications, and to develop also a philosophy of the idea, as well as to expound the relations between science and belief and between philosophy and religion. His analysis of action led him to conclude that the human will which produces action cannot satisfy itself, because its fundamental desire is never fulfilled by any finite good. From this point of departure he developed an argument for the being of God resting on volition, in the light of which he modified the old Scholastic proofs. God imposes Himself on the will as the first principle and the last term; we must, therefore, 'opt' either for or against Him.

The teaching of L'Action was amplified in several later works, e.g. Histoire et dogme (1904; Eng. tr., 1964), Le Procès de l'intelligence (1922), and esp. Le Problème de la philosophie catholique (1932) and La Pensée (2 vols., 1934). The last-named work states his final position with regard to the intellectual aspects of experience. He here accords a greater place to abstract conceptions than in L'Action and affirms the legitimacy of methodical argumentation, e.g. in the rational proofs of the existence of God. Yet his position is not that of *Aristotle and St *Thomas Aquinas, but follows rather the *Platonic tradition as continued in St *Augustine, R. *Descartes, and G. W. *Leibniz. For Blondel it is not that knowledge of creatures precedes knowledge of God, but rather it is the existence of an obscure yet positive affirmation of God that is the very condition which makes the Aristotelian and Thomist proofs possible. The problem of the supernatural also played a large part in the thought of Blondel, who was a devout Catholic. He held that the whole mental life of man was directed to the possession of God in the Beatific Vision, and consequently he attributed to unaided human reason the capacity of demonstrating its positive possibility.

Blondel's thought has been of considerable influence in modern philosophy. For several years he was closely associated with the leading figures in the *Modernist Movement, which welcomed the pragmatist aspects of his teaching; and many contemporary thinkers, incl. R. Eucken (1846–1926), G. *Gentile, and F. *von Hügel, were indebted to him.

P. Archambault, L'Œuvre philosophique de Maurice Blondel: Vers un réalisme intégral (Cahiers de La Nouvelle Journée, 12; 1928); B. Romeyer, SJ, La Philosophie religieuse de Maurice Blondel (1943); H. Duméry, La Philosophie de l'action: Essai sur l'intellectualisme blondélien ('Philosophie de l'Esprit', 1948), with preface by Blondel; H. Bouillard, Blondel et le christianisme [1961]; C. Tresmontant, Introduction à la métaphysique de Maurice Blondel [1963]; R. Saint-Jean, SJ, Genèse de l'Action: Blondel 1882–1893 (Museum Lessianum, section philosophique, 52; 1965); id., L'Apologétique philosophique: Blondel 1893–1913 (Théologie, 67; 1966); J. J. McNeill, SJ, The Blondelian Synthesis: A Study of the Influence of German Philosophical Sources on the Formation of Blondel's Method and Thought (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 1; Leiden, 1966); M. Jouhaud, Le Problème de l'être de l'expérience morale chez Maurice Blondel (1970); U. Hommes, Tranzendenz und Personalität: Zum Begriff der Action bei Maurice Blondel (Philosophische Abhandlungen, 41; Frankfurt am Main [1972]); R. Virgoulay, Blondel et le Modernisme (1980). D. Folscheid (ed.), Maurice Blondel: Une Dramatique de la modernité. Actes du colloque . . . organisé par le séminaire Saint Luc, Aix-en-Provence, mars 1989 (1990). G. Baum, Man Becoming: God in Secular Experience (New York, 1970), esp. ch. 1. R. Virgoulay and C. Troisfontaines, Maurice Blondel: Bibliographie analytique et critique (Centre d'Archives Maurice Blondel, 2–3; Louvain [1975–6]). See also bibl. to LABERTHONNIÈRE, L.

Blount, Charles (1654–93), English *Deist. He is best known by his Anima Mundi (1679), a sceptical discussion of the subject of immortality, and The Two First Books of Philostratus concerning the Life of Apollonius Tyaneus (1680). The notes of the latter gave offence by their attacks on priestcraft and sympathy with the free thought of T. *Hobbes.

The Miscellaneous Works of Charles Blount . . . to which is prefixed the life of the author [signed Lindamour, a pseudonym of Charles Gildon] (5 pts., 1685). Modern studies by U. Bonanate (Florence, 1972) and K.-J. Walber (Aspekte der englischen Geistes- und Kulturgeschichte, 15; Frankfurt [1988]).

Blow, John (1649–1708), composer and organist. He became one of the Children of the *Chapel Royal at the Restoration, and at an early age distinguished himself as a composer of *anthems. Already in 1668 he was appointed organist of *Westminster Abbey, an office which he gave up in 1679 in favour of his greater pupil, H. *Purcell, resuming it on Purcell's death in 1695. The most important of his other offices was that of Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal (1674). Of his works over 100 anthems and 10 services survive, besides secular compositions.

W. Shaw in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 2 (1980), pp. 805–12, s.v., with detailed list of his works.

Bloxam, John Rouse (1807–91), Anglican ceremonialist and historian. Educated at Rugby School and at Worcester and Magdalen Colleges, *Oxford, he was ordained priest in 1833 and elected a Fellow of Magdalen in 1836. He held a succession of offices at Magdalen until appointed Vicar of Upper Beeding, W. Sussex (1862), where he remained till his death. He associated himself closely with the *Tractarian Movement and from 1837 to 1840 was J. H. *Newman's curate at Littlemore. A careful and learned ecclesiologist, Bloxam was the real originator of the ceremonial revival in the English Church. He introduced various ornaments into Littlemore church (gilded candlesticks, wooden alms-dish, black silk stole, credence table, litany desk, etc.), which were soon afterwards copied by F. *Oakeley at the Margaret Chapel in London and thence spread and came into general use. Through his correspondence with A. L. M. P. *de Lisle about reunion, he became one of the first Tractarians to establish relations with RCs, though these seem to have been abruptly terminated by the secession of R. W. Sibthorp in Oct. 1841. Deeply devoted to his college, he published a Magdalen College Register (7 vols., 1853–81) and also compiled a valuable (unpublished) collection of college papers.

R. D. Middleton, Magdalen Studies (1936), pp. 31–79; id., Newman and Bloxam: An Oxford Friendship (1947). W. P. Courtney in DNB, Suppl. 1 (1901), pp. 224 f.

Blumhardt, Johann Christoph (1805–80), Protestant evangelist. The nephew of Christian Gottlieb Blumhardt (1779–1838), who founded the Protestant 'Basel Mission', he was born at Stuttgart, studied at *Tübingen, taught at Basle from 1830, and in 1838 became pastor at Möttlingen in Württemberg, where his evangelical work attracted much attention, largely through the physical cures by which it was sometimes accompanied. As his motto he took the words 'Jesus is Conqueror' (Jesus ist Sieger). From 1852 until his death he worked at Bad Boll, near Göppingen, which became a centre of influential international missionary work. Blumhardt's theology was developed under the influence of Swabian *Pietism (J. A. *Bengel, P. M. Hahn), but its eschatological emphasis also anticipated some elements in *Dialectical Theology. His collected works were published in 3 vols., 1886–8.

His son, Christoph Friedrich Blumhardt (1842–1919), who took over the direction of Bad Boll after his father's death, was also a zealous missioner and a considerable theologian. Active sympathy with the needs of the working classes led him to become from 1900 to 1906 a Social Democrat member of the Württemberg Diet.

Modern edn. of J. C. Blumhardt's Collected Works, by J. Scharfenberg and others (Göttingen, 1968 ff.). F. Zuendel, Pfarrer J. C. Blumhardt: Ein Lebensbild (Zurich, 1880). L. Ragaz, Der Kampf um das Reich Gottes in Blumhardt, Vater und Sohn (ibid., 1922). E. Jäckh, Blumhardt, Vater und Sohn und ihre Botschaft (1924). G. Sauter, Die Theologie des Reiches Gottes beim älteren und jüngeren Blumhardt (Zurich and Stuttgart, 1962). E. *Thurneysen, Christoph Blumhardt (1926). E. Kerlen, Zu den Füssen Gottes: Untersuchungen zur Predigt Christoph Blumhardts (Munich, 1981). K. *Barth, Die protestantische Theologie im 19. Jahrhundert (Zurich, 1947), pp. 588–97; Eng. tr. (1972), pp. 643–53. J. Scharfenberg in TRE 6 (1980), pp. 721–7, s.v. 'Blumhardt, Johann Christoph'; E. Kerlen, ibid., pp. 719–21, s.v. 'Blumhardt, Christoph'.

Boanerges. The surname given by Christ (Mk. 3: 17) to *James and *John, the sons of Zebedee. The word is there stated to mean 'sons of thunder', but the derivation is quite uncertain.

Bobbio. A small town in the Apennines, some 40 miles NE of Genoa, once the seat of an important abbey founded in 612 by St *Columbanus (who died there in 615). Its celebrated collection of early MSS (many of them dating from the 10th cent.) has mostly passed to the *Vatican Library, the *Ambrosiana at Milan, and Turin (several of these were destroyed in the fire of 1904). The 'Bobbio Missal', now in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris (BN Lat. 13246) is an important collection of liturgical texts dating from the 8th cent. There are signs of Irish influence, but opinion is divided as to whether it was written in S. France or N. Italy.

L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 400–2, s.v. A. Ratti (*Pius XI), Le ultime vicende della Biblioteca e dell'Archivio di S. Colombano di Bobbio (1901). C. Cipolla, Codici bobbiesi della Biblioteca Nazionale Universitaria di Torino (Collezione paleografica bobbiese, 1; 2 vols., 1907); id. and G. Buzzi, Codice diplomatico del Monastero di San Colombano di Bobbio fino all'anno MCCVIII (3 vols., 1918); P. Collura, La Precarolina e la Carolina a Bobbio (1943), with refs. These works are mainly superseded by G. *Mercati's 'Prolegomenon de Fatis Bibliothecae Monasterii S. Columbani Bobiensis' to his edn. of M. Tulli Ciceronis De Re Publica Libri e Codice Rescripto Vaticano Latino 5757 Phototypice Expressi (Codices e Vaticanis Selecti, 23; Vatican, 1934), pp. 1–174. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, 4 (Oxford, 1947), esp. pp. xx–xxviii. P. Engelbert, 'Zur Frühgeschichte des Bobbieser Skriptoriums', R. Bén. 78 (1968), pp. 220–60. P. Verrua, Bibliografia bobbiese (Piacenza, 1936). M. Passalacqua (ed.), Tre testi grammaticali Bobbiesi (Sussidi Eruditi, 38; Rome, 1984). The 'Bobbio Missal' ed., with facsimile reproduction, by E. A. Lowe (HBS 53, 58; 1917–20), with notes and studies by A. *Wilmart, OSB, E. A. Lowe, and H. A. Wilson (ibid. 61; 1924). K. Gamber, Sakramentartypen (Texte und Arbeiten, Abt. 1, Hefte 49/50; Beuron, 1958), pp. 39–43. A. Wilmart in DACL 2 (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 935–9, s.v. 'Bobbio (Manuscrits de)'; id., ibid., cols. 939–62, s.v. 'Bobbio (Missel de)'.

Bochart, Samuel (1599–1667), biblical scholar. A native of Rouen, he studied philosophy at Sedan and theology at Saumur and in 1628 became pastor at Caen. In 1652 he accompanied P. D. *Huet to the court of *Christina of Sweden. After his return he became a member of Caen Academy. His chief works are his Geographia Sacra (2 pts., 1646, 1651) and the Hierozoicon, sive Historia Animalium S. Scripturae (2 vols., 1663; 3rd edn., with notes by E. F. C. Rosenmüller, 3 vols. 1793–6); the latter esp. was drawn on by later biblical commentators. He was a very learned oriental linguist, though his long preoccupation with Phoenician and other Semitic languages sometimes led him to fantastic etymological conclusions.

Works pub. in 2 vols., Leiden, 1675; also ed. by J. Leusden and P. de Villemandy, with Life by E. Morin (3 vols., ibid., 1692). E. H. Smith, Samuel Bochart: Recherches sur la vie et les ouvrages de cet auteur illustre (Caen, 1833).

Bodleian Library. The library of the University of *Oxford. The oldest portion (15th cent.), over the Divinity School, is known as 'Duke Humfrey's Library'; but the 600 MSS presented by Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester (d. 1447), son of Henry IV, were dispersed in the 16th cent. The library was restocked and endowed early in the 17th cent. by Sir Thomas Bodley (d. 1613), a retired diplomat, who added the E. wing. Between 1635 and 1640 W. *Laud presented about 1,300 MSS, including the 'Codex Laudianus' of Acts. Its other benefactors have included J. *Selden; Richard Rawlinson (a *non-juring bp.; d. 1755), who bequeathed nearly 5,000 MSS, besides printed books and pictures; and Francis Douce (d. 1834), who left to the Bodleian his collection of illuminated service-books and other rarities. The library possesses a good collection of patristic MSS, oriental as well as Greek and Latin. It is one of the six libraries which under the Copyright Acts can claim a presentation copy of every new work published in Great Britain and Ireland.

F. Madan and H. H. E. Craster (eds.), Summary Catalogue of the Western Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford (7 vols. bound in 13, 1895–1953; Supp. covering the post-medieval accessions 1916–75 by M. Clapinson and T. D. Rogers, 3 vols., 1991). Thomas James's orig. pr. catalogue (1605) was repr. in facsimile in 1986, with useful introd. W. D. Macray, Annals of the Bodleian Library, Oxford: with a notice of the Earlier Library of the University (1868, 2nd edn. enlarged, 1890, repr. 1984); [H. H.] E. Craster, History of the Bodleian Library 1845–1945 (1952; repr. 1981). S. [G.] Gillam, The Divinity School and Duke Humfrey's Library at Oxford (1988); I. [G.] Philip, The Bodleian Library in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (1983); D. [M.] Rogers, The Bodleian Library and its Treasures 1320–1700 (Henley-on-Thames [1991]). G. W. Wheeler (ed.), Letters of Sir Thomas Bodley to Thomas James, First Keeper of the Bodleian Library (1926; repr. 1985).

Bodley, George Frederick (1827–1907), ecclesiastical architect and designer. Born at Hull, he was articled to Sir G. G. *Scott. His earliest churches, such as Selsley, Glos (1858–62) and St Martin's, Scarborough (1861–3), were built in a continental Gothic style, influenced by J. *Ruskin, and are notable for their decoration and stained glass by W. *Morris, D. G. *Rossetti, and E. Burne-Jones. All Saints', Jesus Lane, Cambridge (1863–70) marks his adoption of a more purely English late Decorated style. In 1869 he formed a partnership with Thomas Garner (1839– 1906) which lasted until 1898. Together they developed the 19th-cent. English Gothic tradition with great refinement in a number of outstanding church buildings, including St Augustine's, Pendlebury (1870–74), Holy Angels', Hoar Cross, Staffs (1872–6), and St Mary's, Clumber Park, Notts (1886–9). Bodley was an extremely influential architect; his particular style spread throughout the Anglican Communion. He designed St David's Cathedral, Hobart, Tasmania (1868–94), the high altar and reredos of *St Paul's Cathedral, London (1887, destroyed 1944), and, with Henry Vaughan, the Episcopal Cathedral in *Washington, DC. As an ecclesiastical designer he was responsible for the arrangements at ritualistic centres, such as St Paul's, Knightsbridge, (1882; reredos, rood screen, and stained glass). With Garner and G. C. Scott, Jun., in 1874 he founded the firm of Watts and Co. to produce furnishings to his designs. His pupils include Sir Ninian Comper (1864–1960).

D. Verey, 'George Frederick Bodley: climax of the Gothic Revival', in J. Fawcett (ed.), Seven Victorian Architects [1976], pp. 84–101, 145 f., and 153–6. P. Waterhouse in DNB, 1901–1911, 1 (1912), pp. 187–90.

Bodmer Papyri. A collection of unusually important MSS, most on papyrus (see PAPYROLOGY), some on parchment, all with one exception codices and all with a few exceptions containing works of Christian literature, acquired by purchase for his library in Geneva by M. Martin Bodmer, mostly in 1956. The earlier MSS are in Greek, the later in Coptic (mainly Sahidic). Their provenance is alleged to have been *Nag Hammadi, but may well have been Panopolis (Akhmîm); there are grounds for thinking that they and the *Chester Beatty Papyri come from the same site; in either case they may represent the remains of an ancient church or early monastic library, surviving in a *geniza when no longer required for use. This would explain both the widely varying dates of the MSS (ranging from *c.*AD 200 to the 7th cent.) as well as the relatively good state of preservation. If the texts of Iliad 1 and the Menander Codex belong to the same find, these are among the pagan authors whom Christians might be expected to read.

The most important Christian MSS are those of the fourth Gospel (P. 66) of *c.*AD 200 which survives nearly complete and another of a codex containing both the third and the fourth Gospels (P. 75), written in the 3rd cent., of which more than four-fifths remain, a nearly contemporary MS of the original Greek of the Acts of *Phileas, and a copy of *Melito, 'On the Pasch'.

Edn. of the texts by V. Martin, M. Testuz, and R. Kasser pub. by the Bibliotheca Bodmeriana (Coligny, Geneva, 1954 ff. [20 vols. to 1969]). Bodmer Papyrus II (containing Jn.) was reissued, with a Supp., under the editorship of V. Martin and J. W. B. Barnes, ibid., 1962. Bodmer Papyrus III (Coptic text of Jn. and Gen. 1–4: 2) ed. R. Kasser (CSCO, Scriptores Copti, 25, with Fr. tr., ibid. 26; 1958); Bodmer Papyrus VI (Coptic text of Proverbs), ed. id. (ibid. 27, with Fr. tr., ibid. 28; 1960). On the provenance of the collection and its relation with the Chester Beatty Papyri, see E. G. Turner, Greek Papyri (enlarged repr., Oxford, 1980), pp. 52 f., 163 f., 201.

Body of Christ. (1) The natural or human Body which the Lord took of Mary, and which, acc. to orthodox Christian theology, was changed but not abandoned at the Resurrection and remains for ever His in heaven.

(2) The *Church (q.v.), as the community whose members are incorporated into His life in Baptism (see 1 Cor., Eph., Col., etc.), and which since *Pentecost has formed the vehicle of His redemptive activity on earth.

(3) The consecrated Bread in the *Eucharist (q.v.).

(4) The Latin form, '*Corpus Christi' (q.v.), has been used as the title of a feast which since the 13th cent. has been kept in the W. Church on the Thursday after Trinity Sunday in honour of the *Blessed Sacrament; and as a designation of churches and colleges dedicated in honour of the Eucharist.

Boehme, Jakob (1575–1624), German *Lutheran theosophical author, known as 'philosophus Teutonicus'. He was the son of a farmer. At first a shepherd, he was later apprenticed to a shoemaker, and from 1599, when he was married, till 1613 followed that trade at Görlitz in Silesia. The recipient of mystical experiences, he claimed that in his writings he described only what he had learnt personally from Divine illumination. In 1612 he published his first work, Morgenröte im Aufgang oder Aurora, which aroused the opposition of the Lutheran pastor, Gregorius Richter, who forced the municipal authorities to intervene; and Boehme was ordered to cease writing. In 1618, however, he began a series of devotional treatises which were published under the title Der Weg zu Christo in 1623. As Richter continued his opposition, Boehme left Görlitz in 1624 and went to Dresden and later to the houses of several friends in Silesia, where he was much appreciated. He died soon after his return to Görlitz in the same year. His writings, most of them published posthumously, include Die drei Prinzipien göttlichen Wesens, an inquiry into the Divine essence; Signatura Rerum, containing his cosmological theories; Mysterium Magnum, an allegorical explanation of the Book of Genesis; and Von Christi Testamenten, a treatise on Baptism and the Eucharist.

Boehme is a very obscure and difficult writer who made abundant use of abstruse terminology, borrowed largely from *Paracelsus, the mystics, alchemy, and astrology; and his critics are still divided as to whether the foundation of his thought is pantheistic or dualist. Having lived from childhood in a state of religious exaltation, he believed himself called to penetrate the deepest mysteries concerning God, man, and nature. Acc. to him God, the Father, is the 'Ungrund', the indefinable matter of the universe, neither good nor evil, but containing the germs of either, unconscious and impenetrable. This 'abyss' tends to know itself in the Son, who is light and wisdom, and to expand and express itself in the Holy Spirit. The Godhead has two wills, one good and one evil, 'love' and 'wrath', which drive Him to create nature, which unfolds itself in the seven nature spirits or 'Quellgeister', the last of which is man. The unfolding of creation is revelation, or the birth of God. Man accepts this revelation through faith in Christ, and experiences the birth of God in his soul. He will then be a conqueror on earth and will ultimately replace Lucifer, the fallen angel, in the heavenly city.

Boehme has exercised a far-reaching influence, esp. in Germany and the English-speaking countries. The thinkers of German Romanticism, such as G. W. F.

*Hegel, F. W. J. von *Schelling and F. X. von Baader, acknowledge their debt to him; and in England he was a source of inspiration to P. *Sterry, the Cambridge Platonist, to the 17th–18th-cent. '*Philadelphian Society', and to W. *Law. I. *Newton also wrestled with his writings for three months. His teaching was propagated by circles of disciples called 'Behmenists'.

A modern Ger. edn. of his Works is that by K. W. Schiebler (1831–47, repr. 1922); repr. of J. W. Ueberfeld's 1730 edn. by A. Faust and W. E. Peuckert (11 vols., Stuttgart, 1955–60). Original MSS of Morgenröte and various other works ed. by W. Buddecke as Die Urschriften (2 vols., ibid., 1963–66). A complete Eng. tr. of his works was made by J. Ellistone and J. Sparrow (1644–62; re-ed. 1762–84). More recent Eng. tr. of Der Weg zu Christ (The Way to Christ) by P. [C.] Erb (Classics of Western Spirituality, New York, etc. [1978]). A. [A.] Koyré, La Philosophie de Jacob Boehme (1929); H. R. Brinton, The Mystic Way, based on a Study of the Philosophy of Jacob Boehme (1931); H. Grunsky, Jacob Boehme (Stuttgart, 1956); J. J. Stoudt, Sunrise to Eternity: A Study in Jacob Boehme's Life and Thought (Philadelphia [1957]); E. Benz, Der Prophet Jakob Boehme: Eine Studie über den Typus nachreformatorischen Prophetentums (Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur [in Mainz]. Abhandlungen der Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaftlichen Klasse, Jahrgang 1959, Heft 3); H. Tesch, Vom dreifachen Leben: Ein geistiges Porträt des Mystikers Jakob Böhme (Remagen [1971]); G. Wehr and P. Deghaye, Jacob Böhme (1977), with bibl., pp. 227–36; P. Deghaye, La Naissance de Dieu ou la doctrine de Jacob Boehme (1985). Jacob Boehme, ou L'obscure lumière de la connaissance mystique, pub. under the auspices of the Centre de Recherche sur l'histoire des idées de l'Université de Picardie (1979). S. Hutin, Les Disciples anglais de Jacob Boehme aux XVII[e] et XVIII[e] siècles [1960]. N. Smith, Perfection Proclaimed: Language and Literature in English Radical Religion 1640–1660 (Oxford, 1989), pp. 185–225. G. W. Allen in HERE 2 (1909), pp. 778–84; E. H. Pältz in TRE 6 (1980), pp. 748–54.

Boethius, Anicius Manlius Torquatus Severinus (*c.*480–*c.*524), philosopher and statesman. Of an old senatorial family (the Anicii), Boethius was himself consul in 510 and his sons together in 522. The consulship was ceremonial. Only in middle life did Boethius take an active part in politics: indirectly *c.*517–22 by writing the Opuscula Sacra (see below), directly in 522 by becoming 'Master of the Offices' at the Ostrogothic court in *Ravenna. In the latter capacity he was charged with treason, imprisoned in Pavia, and judicially murdered.

Boethius made Latin adaptations of Greek works on the *quadrivium, prob. including Euclid's Geometry, but his abiding interest was in logic, broadly understood. He made translations of, and commentaries on, *Aristotle's Περὶ ἑρμηνείας and 'Categories', and a commentary on Marius *Victorinus' translation of *Porphyry's Isagoge, all of them a main source of Aristotelian knowledge in the early Middle Ages. He also wrote on 'Topics' and on 'Hypothetical Syllogisms' (a major source for ancient propositional logic). Logic dominates the Opuscula Sacra, 1–3 and 5, Boethius' brief contributions to the debate with and within the Greek Church on the Trinity and the Person of Christ. Since the court in Ravenna was *Arian, such definitions had a political as well as a religious dimension. But Boethius' most famous work, the De consolatione philosophiae, was written in the face of death. In alternating verse and prose, he offers a Platonic vindication of providence, despite the ethical problem of evil and the logical hurdle of free will. Boethius' mind was formed by contemporary *Neoplatonists, esp. *Proclus and *Ammonius. His definition of 'person' as 'the individual substance of a rational nature' became classical; so also that of eternity as 'the simultaneous and perfect possession of limitless life'. Like Porphyry, he bequeathed to medieval philosophers an indecisiveness whether *universals are real apart from the concrete existents in which they are embodied; the distinction between Being and Existence; and the reconciliation of providence with freedom by the doctrine that what is contingent to us is not so to God, who is timeless.

Boethius was a major educator of the medieval west, initially as a logician and always as the author of De consolatione philosophiae. Despite the absence of specifically Christian teaching the moral of the Consolation was clear to the medieval commentator: through philosophy the soul attains to knowledge of the vision of God. An Anglo-Saxon translation is attributed to King *Alfred, and translations and commentaries continued in most W. languages until the Renaissance. Boethius was canonized as 'St Severinus', and his tomb is honoured at the church of San Pietro in Ciel d'Oro in Pavia; feast day, 23 Oct.

Works first ed. Venice, 1492. Later edns. and reprs. include J. P. Migne, PL 63–4. Modern edns. of the Consolatio by R. Pieper (Teub., 1871) and L. Bieler (CCSL 94; 1957; 2nd edn., 1984); the Pieper edn. is repr., with Eng. tr. by S. J. Tester, in Theological Tractates, ed. H. F. Stewart, E. K. Rand, and S. J. Tester (Loeb, 1973), pp. 130–435. In Isagogen Porphyrii Commenta, ed. S. Brandt (CSEL 48; 1906); comm. on Aristotle's Περὶ ἑρμηνείας ed. C. Meiser (Teub., 2 pts., 1877–80); De Institutione Arithmetica and De Institutione Musica, ed. G. Friedlein (ibid., 1867; repr. Frankfurt, 1966); his tr. of Porphyry's Isagoge, ed. L. Minio-Paluello, Aristoteles Latinus, 1. 6–7 (1966); his trs. of works of Aristotle are included in the relevant vols. of Aristoteles Latinus. Theological Tractates ('Opuscula Sacra'), ed., with Eng. tr., by H. F. Stewart and E. K. Rand (Loeb, 1918; rev. edn. by S. J. Tester, 1973). *Cassidorus' testimony is pr. in the introd. to the edn. of his Variae by Å. J. Fridh (CCSL 96; 1973), pp. v f. L. Cooper, A Concordance of Boethius: The five theological tractates and the Consolation of Philosophy (Mediaeval Academy of America, Publication 1; 1928). M. Bernhard, Wortkonkordanz zu Anicius Manlius Severinus Boethius De Institutione Musica (Bayerische Akademie der Wissenschaften, Veröffentlichungen der Musikhistorischen Kommission, 4; 1979). J. Shiel, 'Boethius' Commentaries on Aristotle', Mediaeval and Renaissance Studies, 4 (1958), pp. 217–44. H. Potiron, Boèce, théoricien de la musique grecque (Travaux de l'Institut Catholique de Paris, 9 [1961]). G. Schrimpf, Die Axiomenschrift des Boethius (De Hebdomadibus) als philosophisches Lehrbuch des Mittelalters (Studien zur Problemgeschichte der antiken und mittelalterlichen Philosophie 2; Leiden, 1966). P. Courcelle, La Consolation de Philosophie dans la tradition littéraire: Antécédents et postérité de Boèce (1967). L. Obertello, Severino Boezio (2 vols., Genoa, 1974). J. Gruber, Kommentar zu Boethius De Consolatione Philosophiae (1978). M. [T.] Gibson (ed.), Boethius: His Life, Thought and Influence (Oxford, 1981), incl. list of works on logic, with details of best edns., pp. 85 f. H. Chadwick, Boethius: The Consolation of Music, Logic, Theology, and Philosophy (ibid., 1981). Congresso internazionale di Studi Boeziani (Pavia, 5–8 ottobre 1980): Atti, ed. L. Obertello (1981). G. [J. P.] O'Daly, The Poetry of Boethius (1991). E. K. Rand, Founders of the Middle Ages (Cambridge, Mass., 1928), pp. 135–80. M. Cappuyns in DHGE 9 (1937), cols. 348–80, s.v. 'Boèce'.

Bogomils. A medieval Balkan sect of *Manichaean origin. In the 8th cent. the Byzantine emperors settled a number of *Paulicians in Thrace, and under their influence the heresy known as Bogomilism after its founder, Bogomil (the Bulgarian for Theophilus, 'beloved of God'), was introduced into the Balkans. The earliest description of the heresy is found in a reply to the Bulgar Tsar Peter by the Patriarch Theophylact (*c.*950), who described it as 'Manichaeism mixed with Paulicianism'. The Bogomils were denounced *c.*972 by the Bulgarian priest Cosmas in his Sermon against the Heretics, which mentioned their refusal to obey authority, civil or ecclesiastical.

The Bogomils, whose doctrines are known principally through the writings of *Euthymius Zigabenus, taught that the world and the human body were the work of Satan, only the soul being created by God. The true Christian conquered matter by abstaining from marriage, meat, and wine, and by the renunciation of all possessions. Such an ideal was in practice possible only for the 'Perfect'; the ordinary faithful might sin but were under obligation to obey the Perfect and would receive 'spiritual baptism' on their death-beds. Like other dualist sects, they accepted only the NT and the Psalms, holding the rest of the OT to be the work of the devil. They held the *Docetic view that Christ did not have a human body but only the appearance of one. They rejected the Sacraments, churches, and relics, but retained a hierarchy of their own.

Bogomilism spread rapidly in the Balkans and Asia Minor in the 11th cent., and from the mid-12th cent. onwards exerted a formative influence on the sect of the *Cathari in France and Italy. The leader of a Bogomil organization in Constantinople was burnt at the stake *c.*1110, and strong measures were taken against the Bogomils in Serbia *c.*1180 and in Bulgaria in 1211. In the 13th cent. its votaries secured a notable success in Dalmatia, and esp. in Bosnia, where under the name of *Patarenes they later became the dominant religious group. Catholicism was nominally restored in 1450, but many Patarenes fled to Herzegovina, and when the Turks conquered Bosnia in 1463 and Herzegovina in 1482, large numbers of the people adopted *Islam. No traces of the heresy remain in the Balkans except perhaps tombstones with symbolic decorations which may go back to Manichaeism.

D. Obolensky, The Bogomils: A Study in Balkan Neo-Manichaeism (1948), with full bibl. H. C. Puech and A. Vaillant, Le Traité contre les Bogomiles de Cosmas le Prêtre: Traduction et Étude (1945). S. Runciman, The Medieval Manichee: A Study of the Christian Dualist Heresy (Cambridge, 1947), esp. pp. 63–115. E. Werner, 'Die Bogomilen in Bulgarien. Forschungen und Fortschritte', Studi Medievali, 3rd ser. 3 (1962), pp. 249–78. On the Bogomils in Bulgaria there is a magisterial work in Bulgarian by D. S. Angelov (Sofia, 1969). Id., 'Der Bogomilismus in Bulgarien', Bulgarian Historical Review, 3, no. 2 (ibid., 1975), pp. 34–54, repr. in id., Les Balkans au Moyen Age: la Bulgarie des Bogomils aux Turcs (1978), no. 1; see also nos. 2–6. M. D. Lambert, Medieval Heresy: Popular Movements from Bogomil to Hus (1977), esp. pp. 12–23. A. V. Soloviev in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 633 f., s.v.; A. de Santos Otero in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 28–42, s.v. 'Bogomilen', with extensive bibl.

Bohairic. One of the principal dialects of *Coptic; the name, from the Arabic 'Bohaïrah', indicates an origin in the northern part of the Nile Delta. The former popular designation of this dialect, 'Memphitic' (from Memphis, the great Egyptian city at the southern apex of the Delta) was misleading, since it referred to a stage in its history when its use had spread far south of its place of origin. Such literature as may have been written in it while it was merely a local dialect is almost wholly lost; but texts in Bohairic become very plentiful from about the 9th cent. when its use became general throughout Egypt, supplanting other dialects, particularly *Sahidic. As knowledge of Greek was widespread in Lower Egypt, the translation of the Scriptures was a less pressing need than further south; the Bohairic version which we have is much later than the Sahidic, dating probably from the 6th–7th cents., and has long been, and still is, the official version of the *Coptic Church. Although the vast majority of Bohairic MSS date from the 9th cent. and later, a small number from the 4th cent. are now known; the place of these early Bohairic texts within the development of the Coptic biblical text is not clear. See also SAHIDIC.

There is a critical edn. of the Bohairic NT by G. Horner (4 vols., Oxford, 1898–1905). R. Kasser (ed.), Papyrus Bodmer III: Évangile de Jean et Genèse I–IV, 2 en bohaïrique (CSCO, Scriptores, 25–6; 1958, incl. Fr. tr.). The best-known grammar of the Bohairic dialect of Coptic is A. Mallon, Grammaire copte (Beirut, 1904; 4th edn., rev. by M. Malinine, ibid., 1956). See also works cited under COPTIC.

Bohemian Brethren, later known as '*Moravian Brethren' and 'Unitas Fratrum'. They were a group of *Utraquists (q.v.) who, having for some years led an existence apart within that religious body, separated formally under the leadership of 'Brother Gregory' in 1467, in order to follow more closely the teaching of Peter Chelčický (d. *c.*1460). They rejected oaths and military service, deprecated town life and private property, stressed Christian discipline, and stood for a simple, pure, and unworldly Christianity. The Brethren were organized as a Church by Lukáš of Prague, who broke with the tradition of uncompromising asceticism of the earlier Brethren, exalted faith without works, and in 1494 had the writings of Chelčický and Gregory condemned by the Synod of Rychnov. Under Lukáš's leadership the sect spread rapidly, though persecuted by the Utraquists. Their efforts to associate with the *Lutherans, frustrated at first by refusal to give up the celibacy of the priesthood, the Seven Sacraments, and a strict Church discipline, were successful only in 1542, after the death of Lukáš (1528), when they accepted justification by faith alone and the *Real Presence, but retained their discipline of public and private confession of sins. After the victory of Mühlberg (1547) the Emp. Ferdinand took repressive measures against them and many emigrated. Some eventually settled in *Poland, where they allied themselves with the *Calvinists at the Synod of Koźminek (1555). Those who remained in Bohemia likewise became more Calvinist in doctrine; they obtained the freedom to practise their cult from Maximilian II in 1575, but fixed their principal seat in Moravia, hence the other name under which they are known. They became the leading sector in Bohemian Protestantism, though outnumbered by the quasi-Lutheran Utraquists. In 1609 Rudolf II handed over to both groups the university of Prague and gave them many other rights, but after the Battle of the White Mountain (1620) all Protestants were exiled, together with the last bishop of the Brethren, the famous educationist, J. A. *Comenius. The remains of the sect survived for a hundred years, and in 1721 accepted an offer of N. L. von *Zinzendorf to join the *Herrnhuter, with whom they amalgamated. Their doctrine rested on the authority of Scripture, the interpretation of which was entrusted to the community. Each member was to realize the ideal of the Sermon on the Mount by a life of poverty and renunciation under the supervision of the elders, though later this austerity was relaxed, and in the 16th cent. numerous noblemen joined the Brethren. The sect rejected the veneration of the saints and held that the efficacy of the Sacraments depended on the dignity of the minister and the faith of the recipients. They laid special emphasis on Church services, organization, and education. Their schools were famous and their contribution to Czech literature considerable (esp. through their complete translation of the Bible, 6 vols., 1579–93), though the remnant which later moved to Herrnhut were German-speaking. They greatly influenced *Methodism in its earlier stages.

For their later history, see under HERRNHUT and MORAVIAN BRETHREN.

For the bulk of the lit. see bibl. to MORAVIANS. J. Goll (ed.), Quellen und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Böhmischen Brüder (2 vols., Prague, 1878–82). J. T. Müller, Geschichte der Böhmischen Brüder (3 vols., Herrnhut, 1922–31). R. Říčan, Die Böhmischen Brüder: Ihr Ursprung und ihre Geschichte, tr. into Ger. by B. Polelár (1961); E. Peschke, Die Böhmischen Brüder im Urteil ihrer Zeit (Arbeiten zur Theologie, 1st ser. 17; 1964). P. Brock, The Political and Social Doctrines of the Unity of Czech Brethren in the Fifteenth and Early Sixteenth Centuries (Slavistic Printings and Reprintings, 11; The Hague, 1957); J. K. Zeman, The Anabaptists and the Czech Brethren in Moravia, 1526–1618: A Study of Origins and Contacts (The Hague, 1969). W. Eberhard, Konfessionsbildung und Stände in Böhmen 1478–1530 (Veröffentlichungen des Collegium Carolinum, 38; Munich, 1981); id., Monarchie und Widerstand: Zur ständischen Oppositionsbildung im Herrschaftssystem Ferdinands I. in Böhmen (ibid. 54; 1985). M. L. Wagner, Petr Chelčický: A Radical Separatist in Hussite Bohemia (Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History, 25; Scottdale, Pa., 1983).

Bohemond I (*c.*1052–1111), Prince of Antioch. He was the eldest son of Duke Robert Guiscard, the Norman conqueror of Apulia, on whose death (1085) he was passed over in favour of his half-brother. As leader of the S. Italian contingent Bohemond played an important part in the success of the First *Crusade. In return for his undertaking to secure the surrender of Antioch, the other leaders promised Bohemond possession of that city, which should, however, as a recent Byzantine possession, have been returned to the Emp. Alexius I (June 1098). Bohemond remained in Antioch during the march on Jerusalem, received investiture from the new Latin Patriarch of Jerusalem, and was enlarging his new principality when he was captured by the Turks (August 1100–May 1103). After losses of territory to Alexius he left Antioch to raise an expedition in the W. against the Emperor, but his enterprise, which received Papal backing, ended in defeat (Treaty of Devol, 1108) and he died at Canosa in 1111.

Bohemond's expulsion of the Greek Patriarch from Antioch and his appointment of a Latin successor (1100), together with his hostility towards Byzantium, contributed much to the hardening of the schism between Rome and the E. Churches.

The most important primary authority for Bohemond's career in 1097–9 is the Gesta Francorum et aliorum Hierosolimitanorum, written by an unknown knight in his army, separately ed. by H. Hagenmeyer (2 pts., Heidelberg, 1889–90), L. Bréhier (Paris, 1924), B. A. Lees (Oxford, 1924), and, with Eng. tr., R. Hill (London, 1962); it must be compared with other W. chronicles of the First Crusade written from different viewpoints. *Anna Comnena (q.v.), who as the 14-year-old daughter of Alexius I was clearly fascinated by Bohemond in 1097, gives a hostile Byzantine view in her Alexiad. Ralf of Caen, 'Gesta Tancredi in expeditione Hierosolymitana', in Recueil des historiens des Croisades, Historiens occidentaux, 3 (Paris, 1856), pp. 587–716, is an apologia for Bohemond's nephew and lieutenant Tancred. The standard modern Life is R. B. Yewdale, Bohemond I, Prince of Antioch (Princeton, NJ, 1924). A. R. Gadolin, 'Prince Bohemund's death and apotheosis in the church of San Sabino, Canosa di Puglia', Byzantion, 52 (1982), pp. 124–53. L. Bréhier in DHGE 9 (1937), cols. 484–98, s.v.; D. Girgensohn in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 11 (1969), pp. 117–24, s.v. 'Boemondo I', with bibl.

Bollandists. The *Jesuit editors of the '*Acta Sanctorum', so called after John van Bolland (1596–1665), the founder and first editor of the work. The plan for a critical edition of the lives of the Saints, based on authentic sources, had been conceived by Heribert Rosweyde (1569–1629), who, however, did not live to see any of it published. Under Bolland and his successors nearly all the archives and libraries of religious houses were systematically combed for material, for which a special museum was founded at Antwerp. Work by the Bollandists was suspended when the Jesuits were suppressed in Belgium in 1773, but resumed in 1837. Among the most outstanding of modern Bollandists is H. *Delehaye. Since 1882 the '*Analecta Bollandiana' (q.v.) have been published as supplements.

H. Delehaye, SJ, A travers trois siècles: L'œuvre des Bollandistes, 1615–1915 (1920; Eng. tr., 1922; revised edn. with additional bibl., 1959); P. Peeters, SJ, L'Œuvre des Bollandistes (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres. Mémoires. 2nd ser. (8vo), 39, fasc. 4; 1942; 2nd edn., 54, fasc. 5; 1961). Id., Figures bollandiennes contemporaines (Collection Durandal, no. 73; 1948). [M.] D. *Knowles, Great Historical Enterprises (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 1–32. R. Aigrain, L'Hagiographie (1953), pp. 329–50. C. De Smedt, SJ, in CE 2 (1907), pp. 630–9, s.v.; M. Scaduto, SJ, in EC 2 (1949), cols. 1782–90, s.v.

Bologna. The ancient Bononia, in N. Italy. In the Middle Ages its university (founded in the 12th cent.) was the chief centre in Europe for the study of canon and civil law. The city has retained since the 5th cent. its devotion to St *Petronius (d. *c.*450), an early bishop. The first general chapter of the *Dominican Order was held in the town in 1220, and in the church of S. Domenico lies the body of St *Dominic (d. 1221).

H. *Rashdall (ed. by F. M. Powicke and A. B. Emden), The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages, 1 (1936), ch. 4, pp. 87–268, with bibl. A. Sorbelli and L. Simeoni, Storia della università di Bologna (2 vols., 1940). Storia di Bologna: vol. 1: I Tempi Antichi, by P. Ducati (Bologna, 1928); vol. 2: Dalle Origini del Cristianesimo agli Albori del Comune, by A. Sorbelli (ibid., 1938). R. Grandi, I Monumenti dei Dottori e la Scultura a Bologna (1267–1348) (ibid. [1982]). G. Zanelli, Bibliografia per la Storia dell'Università di Bologna (Origini–1945) (ibid., 1976). F. Bonnard in DHGE 9 (1937), cols. 645–60, incl. further bibl.

Bologna, Concordat of (1516). The agreement between Pope *Leo X and Francis I of France which ended the *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges. The French king was to nominate ecclesiastics to metropolitan and cathedral churches, to abbeys, and to conventual priories, and, if certain rules were complied with, Papal confirmation was not to be refused. After two invalid nominations, however, the appointment was to lapse to the Pope.

Orig. indult, 'Primitiva illa Ecclesia', in Hardouin, 9 (1714), cols. 1810–25; Leo X's supplementary bull, 'Pastor Aeternus' (19 Dec. 1516), which finally abrogated the Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges, ibid., cols. 1826–31; extracts in Mirbt and Aland (1967), p. 498 (no. 785). L. Madelin, 'Les Premières Applications du concordat de 1516 d'après les dossiers du château Saint-Ange', Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire de l'École Française de Rome, 17 (1897), pp. 323–85. See also works cited s.v. FRANCE, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Bolsec, Hieronymus Hermes (d. 1584), physician and religious controversialist. Originally a *Carmelite friar in Paris, he adopted Protestantism *c.*1545 and settled first on the estates of the Duchess of Ferrara and subsequently (1547) in the Chablais (then under Bernese jurisdiction), working as a physician. Frequenting theological gatherings in Geneva, Bolsec came into conflict with J. *Calvin by arguing that *predestination to salvation or reprobation amounted to no more than man's own faith or lack of faith in God. Arrested in Oct. 1551, Bolsec was tried and banished from Genevan territory. This relatively light sentence was due to the intervention of the Bernese and other Swiss Protestant Churches who did not share Calvin's extreme view of predestination. Bolsec then travelled in France and Switzerland, continuing his attacks on Calvin. His doctrines were condemned by the Synod of Lyons in 1563. In his last years he returned to the RC Church, settled in France, and published very hostile Lives of Calvin (1577) and T. *Beza (1582).

Documents of his trial are printed in Calvin's Opera, ed. G. Baum and others, 8 (Corpus Reformatorum, 36; Brunswick, 1870), cols. 145–248; ed. H. Fazy in Mémoires de l'Institut national genevois, 10 (1865), pp. 3–74; and in Registres de la Compagnie des Pasteurs de Genève au temps de Calvin, ed. R.-M. Kingdon and J.-F. Bergier, 1: 1546–1553, ed. J.-F. Bergier (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 55; 1964), pp. 80–131. F. Pfeilschifter, Das Calvinbild bei Bolsec und sein Fortwirken im französischen Katholizismus bis ins 20 Jhdt. (Augsburg, 1983), with details of edns. of Bolsec's Life of Calvin. E. and É. Hagg, La France protestante, 2 (2nd edn., 1879), cols. 745–76; J. Dedieu in DHGE 9 (1937), cols. 676–9, both s.v.

Bolsena, the Miracle of. The traditional story, familiar through *Raphael's fresco in the *Vatican stanze, has it that when a German priest on pilgrimage to Rome was once celebrating Mass in the church of St Cristina in the little Umbrian town of Bolsena, he was disturbed by doubts about the transubstantiation of the bread and wine, which were suddenly resolved when he saw blood issue from the elements and bathe the corporal. It is also narrated that when Pope Urban IV (1261-4) had been shown the corporal, which had been conveyed to Orvieto where he was staying, he at once determined to institute the feast of *Corpus Christi and also enjoined work to begin on the cathedral of Orvieto to enshrine such a precious relic. There is no contemporary evidence for the miracle, and there is no trace of it in Urban's bull instituting the feast.

Scenes from the legend are depicted on a *reliquary made in 1338 and in a fresco cycle begun in 1357, both in the cathedral at Orvieto. Mentioned in the 15th cent. by St *Antoninus of Florence (Chronica, 3, tit. 19, c. 13), it is found in a fuller form in *Benedict XIV, Commentarii duo de D. N. Jesu Christi Matrisque Eius Festis, 1 (Lat. tr., 1745), p. 212.

Bombastus von Hohenheim, Theophrastus. See PARACELSUS.

Bonaventure, St (*c.*1217–74). *Franciscan theologian, 'Doctor seraphicus'. An Italian by birth, Giovanni di Fidanza studied in the Faculty of Arts in the University of *Paris. Probably in 1243 he entered the Franciscan Order and then studied theology under *Alexander of Hales. In 1248 he began to teach publicly; in 1253–4 he became doctor in theology; he continued teaching until 1257, with a short interruption due to the quarrel between the secular masters and the mendicant orders. On 2 Feb. 1257 he was elected Minister General of his order, and in this capacity he took a prominent part in settling the internal dissensions by which the order was then rent. He first codified its statutes in the 'Constitutions of Narbonne' in 1260. His Life of St *Francis was approved by his order in 1263 as the official biography of their founder, and in 1266 a general chapter at Paris decreed the destruction of all other 'legends' of the saint. In 1271 he was mainly responsible for securing the election of *Gregory X to the Papacy. In 1273 he was created Cardinal Bp. of Albano. He took a prominent part in the events of the Second Council of *Lyons in 1274 and died while it was still sitting. Feast day, 15 (until 1969, 14) July.

As a theologian he remained faithful to the tradition which derived from St *Augustine and was reasserted by St *Anselm, and had only limited sympathy with the new *Aristotelian doctrines, though he acknowledged that Aristotle's description of the facts was often correct. As against St *Thomas Aquinas, who gave a far more ready hearing to the new doctrines, St Bonaventure held that the creation of the world in time could be demonstrated by the light of reason. He emphasized that all human wisdom was folly when compared with the mystical illumination which God sheds on the faithful Christian; and this essentially mystical theory of knowledge he set forth in his 'Itinerarium Mentis in Deum'. His most extensive and systematic work is his 'Commentary on the *Sentences' of *Peter Lombard. He denied the doctrine of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM. As a spiritual writer he had a great and lasting influence.

Crit. edn. of his Works by the Franciscans of Quaracchi (10 vols.; sep. index to vols. 1–6, Quaracchi, 1882–1902). Opera Theologica Selecta, ed. idd., Editio Minor (5 vols., ibid., 1934–64) [vols. 1–4 contain his comm. on the Sentences, vol. 5 various smaller works]. A different recension of the Collationes in Hexaëmeron from that in the complete works was ed. by F. Delorme, OFM (Bibliotheca Franciscana Scholastica Medii Aevi, 8; ibid., 1934). Modern Eng. tr of his works by J. de Vinck (5 vols., Patterson, NJ, 1960–70); also of his 'Itinerarium Mentis in Deum', 'Lignum Vitae' and Life of St Francis by E. Cousins (Classics of Western Spirituality [1978]). B. Distelbrink, Bonaventurae Scripta Authentica, Dubia vel Spuria critice Recensita (Subsidia Scientifica Franciscalia, 5; Rome 1975). E. *Gilson, La Philosophie de Saint Bonaventure (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, 4; 1924; 2nd edn., 1943, repr., 1978; Eng. tr., 1938). J. Ratzinger, Die Geschichtstheologie des heiligen Bonaventura (1959; Eng. tr., Chicago [1971]). J. G. Bougerol, OFM, Introduction à l'Étude de Saint Bonaventure (Bibliothèque de Théologie, 1st ser., Théologie dogmatique, 2 [1961]). J. F. Quinn, The Historical Constitution of St Bonaventure's Philosophy (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 23; Toronto, 1973). S. Bonaventura 1274–1974: Volumen commemorativum anni septies centenarii a morte S. Bonaventurae . . . cura et studio Commissionis Internationalis Bonaventurianae (5 vols., Rome [1974]); A. Pompei (ed.), San Bonaventura Maestro di Vita Francescana et di Sapienza Cristiana: Atti del Congresso Internazionale per il VII centenario di san Bonaventura da Bagnoregio, Roma, 19 26 settembre 1974 (3 vols., ibid., 1979). Z. Hayes, OFM, The Hidden Centre: Spirituality and Speculative Christology in St Bonaventure (New York [1981]). F. Van Steenberghen, La Philosophie au XIII^e siècle (2nd edn., Philosophes Médiévaux, 28; 1991), pp. 177–244. J. Hamesse, Thesaurus Bonaventurianus (Travaux publiés par le Centre de Traitement Electronique des Documents de l'Université Catholique de Louvain, 3; 1972 ff.). E. Longpré, OFM, in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 1768–843, s.v.; I. C. Brady, OFM, in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 658–64, s.v.; R. Sbardella, OFM, in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 1504–12, s.v.; A. Gerken, OFM, in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 2 (1983), cols. 402–7, s.v.

Bonhoeffer, Dietrich (1906–45), Lutheran pastor. The son of a professor of psychiatry at Berlin, Bonhoeffer studied at *Tübingen and Berlin, but was deeply influenced by K. *Barth. After his ordination, he worked in Barcelona and at the *Union Theological Seminary in New York (1928–9), and then returned to a university lectureship and pastoral work in Berlin in 1931, a year in which he also began his enduring connection with the *ecumenical movement. Opposed to the Nazi movement from the first, he sided with the *Confessing Church against the *German Christians, and signed the *Barmen Declaration in 1934. After serving as Chaplain to the Lutheran congregation in London, he returned to Germany in 1935 to become head of a seminary for the Confessing Church at Finkenwalde in Pomerania; here he put into practice ideas learnt in England at Kelham and *Mirfield. He was forbidden by the Nazis to teach, banned from Berlin and dismissed from his lectureship there in 1936; in 1937 the seminary at Finkenwalde was closed by the government. On the outbreak of the Second World War Bonhoeffer was in America on a lecture-tour, but he felt it his duty to return to Germany. In 1942 he tried to mediate between the Germans opposed to Hitler and the British government through his friendship with G. K. A. *Bell. He was arrested in 1943 and after imprisonment in Buchenwald he was hanged by the Gestapo at Flossenbürg in 1945.

His best-known work, Widerstand und Ergebung (ed. E. Bethge, 1951; Eng. tr. as Letters and Papers from Prison, 1953; enlarged edn., 1970; Eng. tr., 1971), needs to be read in the context of his surroundings and other writings. His first work, Sanctorum Communio (1930; Eng. tr., 1963), on the structure of the Church, is much modified by his second, Akt und Sein (1931; Eng. tr., Act and Being, 1962). This centres on the concept of revelation, which to him demanded a continuity to be found in Christ preached in the Church; the individual thus experiences revelation only in relation to the community. In Widerstand und Ergebung he is concerned with the growing secularization of modern man and the necessity of speaking in a secular way about God. Though writers of the 'Death of God' school have taken up his idea of religionless Christianity, his teaching represents a search for the beyond in the midst, and a demand for a radical reform of the Church, which in its existing form he thought to have no message for the present day. In its place he sought a form of Christianity capable of dispensing with traditional religion as a prerequisite of biblical faith. His other works include Die Nachfolge (1937; Eng. tr., The Cost of Discipleship, 1948) and Ethik (ed. E. Bethge, 1949; Eng. tr., 1955).

Gesammelte Schriften, ed. E. Bethge (6 vols., Munich, 1958–74); new edn. of his Werke by E. Bethge and others (ibid., 1986 ff.). Eng. tr. of selections of Letters, Lectures, and Notes, from the Collected Works, by E. H. Robertson and J. Bowden, under the titles No Rusty Swords (1965), The Way to Freedom (1966), and True Patriotism (1973). Collection of extracts in Eng. tr. by J. de Gruchy, Dietrich Bonhoeffer, Witness to Jesus Christ (1988). E. Bethge, Dietrich Bonhoeffer: Theologe, Christ, Zeitgenosse (Munich, 1967; Eng. tr., 1970). Other studies by J. D. Godsey (Philadelphia and London, 1960), R. Marlé (Paris, 1967; Eng. tr., 1968), W. Kuhns (Dayton, Oh., 1967; London, 1968), M. Bosanquet (London, 1968), A. Dumas (Geneva, 1968; Eng. tr., 1972), and H. R. Pelikan (Vienna, etc. [1982]). H. Müller, Von der Kirche zur Welt: Ein Beitrag zu der Beziehung des Wortes Gottes auf die Societas in Dietrich Bonhoeffers theologischer Entwicklung (Hamburg, 1966); J. A. Phillips, The Form of Christ in the World: A Study of Bonhoeffer's Christology (1967). R. Mayer, Christuswirklichkeit: Grundlagen, Entwicklung und Konsequenzen der Theologie Dietrich Bonhoeffers (1969); G. L. Müller, Bonhoeffers Theologie der Sakramente (Frankfurter Theologische Studien, 28; 1979); id., Für Andere da: Christus-Kirche-Gott in Bonhoeffers Sicht der mündig gewordenen Welt (Konfessionskundliche und Kontroverstheologische Studien, 44 [1980]). E. G. Wendel, Studien zur Homiletik Dietrich Bonhoeffers (Hermeneutische Untersuchungen zur Theologie, 21; Tübingen, 1985). C. Marsh, Reclaiming Dietrich Bonhoeffer: The Promise of his Theology (New York and Oxford, 1994). E. Bethge and others, Die Mündige Welt: Dem Andenken Dietrich Bonhoeffers (5 vols., Munich, 1955–69). Useful collection of essays on Bonhoeffer in Eng. in R. G. Smith (ed.), World Come of Age (1967). G. Krause in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 55–66, s.v., with bibl.

Boniface, St (c.675–754), the 'Apostle of Germany'. Wynfrith, as he was originally called, was born in Wessex (at *Crediton, according to later tradition), educated at *Exeter, and entered the monastery of Nursling, near Southampton. He was a man of learning; besides a collection of hexametrical enigmata, he wrote a Latin grammar and possibly a treatise on metrics. In 716 he made a first, unsuccessful, missionary journey to Frisia. Undaunted, two years later he went to Rome, where in 719 *Gregory II commissioned him to preach to the heathen; at the same time he seems to have given him the name Boniface. After helping St *Willibrord in Frisia, Boniface turned south and converted many of the Hessians. He was summoned to Rome in 722 and ordained bishop, without being given a see. On his return to Germany, his courage in felling the Oak of Thor at Geismar, near Fritzlar, won him many converts in Hesse. He also worked in Thuringia and founded a number of monasteries, including Fritzlar, Taubersbischofsheim, Ohrdruf, Ochsenfurt, and Kitzingen. Prob. in 732 Gregory III sent him a *pallium and in the following years he laid the foundations of a settled ecclesiastical organization E. of the Rhine. After the death of *Charles Martel (741), he convened a series of Councils to reform the Frankish Church, and c.746 he became Abp. of Mainz. After a few years he resigned his see to return to his mission in Frisia, where he met with martyrdom from brigands at Dokkum in 754. His body was taken to *Fulda, which he had played some part in founding in 744. His devotion to the Papacy, coupled with the success of his work, may have assisted the spread of Papal influence N. of the Alps. Feast day, 5 June.

Opera Omnia, ed. J. A. Giles (2 vols., London, 1844); J. P. Migne, PL 89. 597–892. Crit. edn. of his Letters by M. Tangl (MGH, Epistolae Selectae, 1; 1916); Eng. tr. by E. Emerton (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 31; New York, 1940). Hexametrical enigmata also ed. E. Duemmler in MGH, Poetae Latini Aevi Carolini, 1 (1881), pp. 1–23. Ars Grammatica and Ars Metrica, ed. G. J. Gebauer and B. Löfstedt (CCSL 133B; 1980). Of the early Lives (ed. W. Levison in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in Usum Scholarum, 1905), the most trustworthy is that by Willibald. The Letters, some other docs., and the Life by Willibald are also ed., with Ger. tr., by R. Rau (Ausgewählte Quellen zur deutschen Geschichte des Mittelalters, 4b; 1968). Eng. tr. of Life by Willibald and a selection of Boniface's letters in C. H. Talbot, The Anglo-Saxon Missionaries in Germany (1954), pp. 23–149. The standard modern work is T. Schieffer, Winfrid-Bonifatius und die christliche Grundelung Europas (Freiburg, 1954; repr. with new bibl., Darmstadt, 1972). Other studies include those of G. Kurth ('Les Saints', Paris, 1902), G. F. Browne (London, 1910), W. Lampen (Amsterdam, 1949), G. W. Greenaway (London, 1955), and J. C. Sladden (Exeter, 1980). Sankt Bonifatius: Gedenkgabe zum zwölfhundertsten Todestag (Fulda, 1954). T. Reuter (ed.), The Greatest Englishman: Essays on St Boniface and the Church at Crediton (Exeter, 1980). M. B. Parkes, 'The Handwriting of St Boniface: A Reassessment of the Problems', Beiträge zur Geschichte der deutschen Sprache und Literatur, 98 (1976), pp. 161–79. D. Parsons, 'Sites and Monuments of the Anglo-Saxon Mission in Central Germany', Archaeological Journal, 140 (1983), pp. 280–321. W. Levison, England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Ford Lectures, 1943; Oxford, 1946), esp. pp. 70–93. J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983), pp. 150–61.

Boniface I, St (d. 422), Pope from 418. Before his election to the Papacy, he had been a presbyter at Rome. Immediately on the death of *Zosimus on 26 Dec. 418, both Boniface and the archdeacon Eulalius, a rival candidate, were elected and both were consecrated on the same day (29 Dec. 418). In consequence of the dispute, Boniface did not obtain possession of the see till 10 Apr. 419, after the Emp. Honorius had decided in his favour a week earlier at *Ravenna. After the caution shown by his predecessor, he took a decisive stand at the Imperial Court against *Pelagianism. He restored the rights of the metropolitans in the South of Gaul. He also secured the prefecture of Illyricum for his own jurisdiction when the E. Emp. *Theodosius II was endeavouring to transfer it to the obedience of the Patr. of *Constantinople. Feast day, 4 Sept.

Letters and decrees repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 20. 745–92. LP (Duchesne), 1 (1886), pp. 227–9. G. Bardy in DHGE 9 (1937), cols. 895–7, s.v.; J. Chapin in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 668 f., s.v.

Boniface VIII (*c.*1234–1303), Pope from 1294. Benedict Gaetani was a native of Anagni. After studying at Todi and Spoleto he became a canon at *Paris, Rome, and elsewhere, and in 1276 entered upon his career at the Curia, being appointed consistorial advocate and *notary apostolic. Having been created cardinal-deacon in 1281 and cardinal-priest in 1291, he was employed on important missions to France and Italy and took a decisive part in the abdication of St *Celestine V. Elected Pope at Naples in 1294, he immediately went to Rome, and from the first strove to realize his double aim of the pacification of Europe and the liberation of the Holy Land from the Turks. His exertions, however, were destined to failure. After trying without success to reconcile Genoa and *Venice (1295), and to prevent the election of Frederick of Aragon as King of Sicily (1296), he became involved in his great struggle with Philip the Fair of France, which was to last until his death. In a professed attempt to stop the war between England and France by depriving the belligerents of their main financial resources, he issued the bull '*Clericis laicos' (q.v.; 25 Feb. 1296), forbidding the King to demand or receive extraordinary taxes from the clergy without Papal assent. When Philip replied by stopping all transports of gold and valuables to Rome, the Pope had to modify his claims and to concede to Philip the right to decide for himself cases of necessity in which he might levy taxes without consulting him, in the letter 'Ineffabilis Amoris' (20 Sept. 1296). At the same time the Papal position was aggravated by his difficulties with the powerful family of Colonna, with whom sided the *Fraticelli, whose exaggerated teachings Boniface had proscribed. The Papal armies, however, razed the Colonna fortresses to the ground, many members of the family finding refuge in France. In 1300 the Pope was able to celebrate the *Holy Year with great pomp, despite the absence of nearly all European princes. But in 1301 the struggle between Boniface and Philip broke out again when the King brought to trial the Papal legate, Bp. Bernard de Saisset, demanding his degradation and delivery to the secular power. The Pope replied by the bull '*Ausculta fili' (5 Dec. 1301), in which he enunciated the doctrine of Papal supremacy over princes and kingdoms, attacked Philip's government, and summoned the King or his representative to a synod in Rome. It was followed by the famous bull '*Unam Sanctam' (q.v.; 18 Nov. 1302), in which Boniface defended, with numerous patristic quotations, the jurisdiction of the Pope over every human creature. The struggle with Philip came to a head in 1303, when Philip refused to restore communications with Rome and endeavoured to bring the Pope to trial. Boniface replied by preparing a bull of excommunication, but Philip forestalled him, and William de Nogaret, at the head of a band of mercenaries, took the Pope prisoner at Anagni. Though Italian troops released him after three days, he was now broken in health and died at Rome a month later.

One of the great upholders of the absolute power of the Papacy, Boniface was the true successor of *Gregory VII and *Innocent III, but failed to understand the growth of national feeling which had taken place in the latter part of the 13th cent., and which increasingly diminished the political influence of the Popes. Among his many achievements is the compilation of the *Sext (q.v.), the embellishment of the Roman churches, and the foundation of the Roman university, the 'Sapienza' (1303).

G. Digard, M. Faucon, A. Thomas, and R. Fawtier (eds.), Les Registres de Boniface VIII (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2nd ser. 4; 4 vols., 1904–39). T. S. R. Boase, Boniface VIII (1933). F. M. Powicke, 'Pope Boniface VIII', History, NS 18 (1934), pp. 307–29. M. Seidlmayer, 'Papst Bonifaz VIII und der Kirchenstaat', Hist. J. 60 (1940), pp. 78–87. J. Rivière, Le Problème de l'Église et de l'État au temps de Philippe le Bel (SSL 8, 1926), passim, G. Digard, Philippe le Bel et le Saint-Siège de 1285 à 1304, ed. F. Lehoux (2 vols., 1936). T. Schmidt, Der Bonifaz-Prozess: Verfahren der Papstanklage in der Zeit Bonifaz' VIII. und Clemens' V. (Forschungen zur kirchlichen Rechtsgeschichte und zum Kirchenrecht, 19; 1989). H. Wolter, SJ, in Handbuch der Kirchengeschichte, ed. H. Jedin, 3 (pt. 2; 1968), pp. 344–56, with bibl. pp. 340–2; Eng. tr., vol. 4 (1980), pp. 269–81, with bibl. pp. 708 f. B. Tierney in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 671–3; E. Dupré Theseider in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 12 (1970), pp. 146–70, s.v. 'Bonifacio VIII', with extensive bibl.

Boniface of Savoy (d. 1270), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was the son of Thomas I, Count of Savoy, and through his sister's marriage became nearly related to Henry III. Having entered the *Carthusian Order while still a boy, in 1234 he was elected Bp. of Belley in Burgundy. In 1241 he was elected to succeed St *Edmund of Abingdon as Abp. of Canterbury, but Papal confirmation was delayed and he did not reach England until 1244, when he promptly carried through several important financial reforms. In the same year he left to attend the First Council of *Lyons (1245), where he was consecrated by *Innocent IV. He did not return until 1249, when he was enthroned at Canterbury on All Saints' Day. He instituted a metropolitical visitation of his province which met with strong resistance from the clergy generally, and he retired to Rome until 1252. In his later years he was frequently abroad, returning to England for the last time in 1265. In 1269 he set out with Edward I on a crusade, but died on the way at St Helena, Savoy. He became the subject of a cultus in Savoy (confirmed in 1830), where his feast is kept on 13 Mar.

G. Strickland, 'Ricerche storiche sopra il B. Bonifacio di Savoia, arcivescovo di Cantorbery 1207–70', Miscellanea di Storia Italiana, 3rd ser. 1 (no. 32 della Raccolta, 1895), pp. 349–432. R. Foreville, 'L'élection de Boniface de Savoie au Siège Primatial de Canterbury (1241–1243)', Bulletin Philologique et Historique . . . du Comité des Travaux Historiques et Scientifiques, 1 (1960), pp. 435–50. L. F. Wilshire, 'Boniface of Savoy, Carthusian and Archbishop of Canterbury 1207–1270', Analecta Cartusiana, 31 (Salzburg, 1977), pp. 1–89. M. *Creighton in DNB 5 (1886), pp. 350–2, s.v.

Bonifatiusverein (Ger., 'Boniface Society'). A society founded in 1849 under the patronage of St *Boniface for the support of Catholics living in those parts of Germany where the population is mainly Protestant. Its work is centred at Paderborn in Westphalia.

G. Walf in L.Th.K. (3rd edn.), 2 (1994), cols. 582 f., s.v. 'Bonifatiuswerk der deutschen Katholiken e. V.'.

Bonn Reunion Conferences. Two international conferences held at Bonn in 1874 and 1875 under the presidency of J. J. I. von *Döllinger to foster reunion between Churches which had retained the faith and order of historic Christianity. Their direction was in the hands of the newly separated *Old Catholics (though Döllinger himself never formally joined them). Others present included German Evangelicals, members of the E. Churches, and many theologians from Great Britain (including E. H. *Browne [Bp. of Winchester], H. P. *Liddon, and E. S. *Talbot) and America.

The Reports were pub. in English (London, 1875, 1876).

Bonner, Edmund (c.1500–69), Bp. of London. Trained at Oxford in *canon and civil law, he was employed by *Henry VIII on diplomatic missions from 1527, notably to Pope *Clement VII in 1532–3, to King Francis I of France in 1538–40, and to the Emp. *Charles V in 1542–3. He was appointed Bp. of *Hereford in 1538, and in 1539 translated to London, where he was responsible for enforcing the Act of the *Six Articles. Under *Edward VI he opposed the Royal *Injunctions of 1547 and evaded the provisions of the 1549 Book of *Common Prayer; he was deprived and imprisoned in 1549 for disobeying a Privy Council instruction. Restored by *Mary in 1553, he was energetic in the reconstruction of Catholic belief and worship and in the conviction of heretics. His reputation for cruelty may be exaggerated; he was pressed into action by Mary, and tried to obtain recantations. Under *Elizabeth I he refused to take the oath under the Act of *Supremacy and was deprived in 1559; he spent his last years imprisoned in the Marshalsea.

G. Alexander, 'Bonner and the Marian Persecutions', History, 60 (1975), pp. 374–91 (repr. in C. Haigh (ed.), The English Reformation Revised (Cambridge, 1987), pp. 157–75); id., 'Bishop Bonner and the Parliament of 1559', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, 56 (1983), pp. 164–79. J. *Gairdner in DNB 5 (1886), pp. 356–60; BRUO, 1501–1540, pp. 57–9, both s.v., with bibl.

Bonosus (d. c.400). A Bp. of Naïssus (as *Innocent I implies, epp. 16 and 17) or *Sardica (acc. to *Marius Mercator), who denied the perpetual virginity of the BVM. His teaching was examined at a council at Capua in 391 and subsequently condemned; but Bonosus refused to submit and founded a sect (the 'Bonosians') which survived down to the 7th cent.

The earliest authority is Pope *Siricius, ep. 9 (ad Anysium, epis. Thessalonicensem); by an error, this letter is also ascribed to *Ambrose ('ep. 79'). Other sources include the Council of *Orange (538), can. 31, and *Vigilius, ep. 15. J. R. Palanque, Saint Ambroise et l'empire romain (1933), pp. 259–63. E. Venables in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 330 f.; F. *Loofs in PRE (3rd edn.), 3 (1897), pp. 314–17, with further refs. to sources; X. Le Bachelet, SJ, in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 1027–31.

Book Annexed, the. See ANNEXED BOOK, THE.

Book of Advertisements. See ADVERTISEMENTS, BOOK OF.

Book of Armagh. See ARMAGH, BOOK OF.

Book of Common Order [Common Prayer]. See COMMON ORDER [COMMON PRAYER], BOOK OF.

Book of Concord. See CONCORD, FORMULA AND BOOK OF.

Book of Jubilees. See JUBILEES, BOOK OF.

Book of Kells. See KELLS, BOOK OF.

book of life. The phrase occurs in six passages in the NT: Phil. 4: 3; Rev. 3: 5; 13: 8; 17: 8; 20: 12, 15; and 21: 27. (In AV, also at 22: 19, but here all the best MS evidence is for 'tree of life'.) The conception of a heavenly register of the elect is based on ideas found in the OT (e.g. Exod. 32: 32; Ps. 69: 28; Dan. 7: 10; 12: 1) and in 1 *Enoch (47. 3).

Book of Sports. See SPORTS, BOOK OF.

Books of Discipline. See DISCIPLINE, BOOKS OF.

Booth, William (1829–1912), founder and first General of the *Salvation Army (q.v.). A native of Nottingham and of partly Jewish origin, he was apprenticed to a pawnbroker in 1842. He became a *Methodist soon after, and in 1844 he had an experience of conversion. Two years later he became a revivalist preacher. In 1849 he went to London, and in 1855 married Catherine Mumford (1829–90), who shared his aspirations and became herself a famous preacher. In 1861 he left the Methodists, with whom he had come into conflict on account of his aggressive preaching, and established a revivalist movement of his own, called the Christian Mission, in Whitechapel, which undertook evangelistic, social, and rescue work. From 1880, when the Salvation Army spread to the USA, Australia, the Continent, and elsewhere, he spent much of his life travelling and organizing and addressing meetings. In 1890 he published In Darkest England and the Way Out in collaboration with W. T. Stead, in which he suggested a number of remedies for the social evils of the times, including farm colonies and rescue homes. His work was encouraged by Edward VII as well as by several foreign authorities.

Booth's chief characteristic was his love for the poor, whose souls he sought to save by his preaching while at the same time ministering to their bodily needs. Though he was ignorant of theology and of a rather narrow outlook, the strength of his emotions and sympathies, combined with a shrewd commercial sense, made his movement one of the most successful religious revivals of modern times.

In 1912 he was succeeded by his son, William Bramwell Booth (1856–1929), as General.

The Life of General Booth, by various authors (1912); H. Begbie, Life of William Booth (2 vols., 1920); St John Ervine, God's Soldier (2 vols., 1934); R. Collier, The General next to God (1965). H. Begbie in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 50–2.

Life of Catherine Booth by her son-in-law, F. de L. Booth-Tucker (2 vols., London [1892]); modern Life by her granddaughter, C. Bramwell Booth (ibid., 1970). Life of William Bramwell Booth by id. (ibid., 1933).

Booths, Feast of. See TABERNACLES, FEAST OF.

Borborians. A sect of libertine *Gnostics which flourished from the 2nd to the 5th cents. Their doctrines and practices are described by *Epiphanius (Haer. 26).

Bordeaux Pilgrim. The earliest known Christian pilgrim from W. Europe to the *Holy Land. He made his pilgrimage in AD 333–4, visiting *Constantinople and finishing his journey at Milan. His account ('Itinerarium Burdigalense') is for the most part only a list of the stages in his route, but there is a brief description of some of the sites of Palestine.

Itinerarium first pub. by P. *Pithou (n.p., 1589); crit. edns. by P. Geyer, CSEL 39 (1889), pp. 1–33, with introd. pp. iv–viii, and O. Cuntz, Itineraria Romana, 1 (Leipzig, 1929), pp. 86–102. Edn. based on those of Geyer and Cuntz, CCSL 175 (1965), pp. 1–26. Eng. tr. by A. Stewart, with notes by C. W. Wilson (Palestine Pilgrims' Text Society, 1887). B. Kötting, Peregrinatio Religiosa (Forschungen zur Volkskunde, 33–5; 1950), pp. 89–110 and 343–54, passim. R. Gelsomino, 'L'Itinerarium Burdigalense et la Puglia', Vetera Christianorum, 3 (1966), pp. 161–208.

Borgia, Cesare (1475–1507), Italian prince. An illegitimate son of Pope *Alexander VI, he was appointed to the archbishopric of Valencia and the cardinalate before he was 20 years of age. A few years later (1499) he was dispensed from the obligations of his orders so that he might marry Charlotte d'Albret, the sister of the King of Navarre. Soon after, King Louis XII created him Duke of Valentinois and his father made him 'Captain General of the Church'. A picturesque and able soldier, Cesare proved himself unscrupulous and merciless in securing his ends, though he ruled his subjects, once they were conquered, with justice and firmness, and on his activities N. Machiavelli is said to have based his portrait of The Prince. Cesare recovered many of the Papal provinces which had broken away from the Holy See, and was himself proclaimed Duke of Romagna. On his father's death, an illness precluded his taking part in the elections of his successors, Pius III (who lived only a few weeks) and *Julius II. The new Pope was a resolute enemy of the Borgia family and Cesare fled to Naples, where he was arrested and taken to Spain by order of *Ferdinand of Aragon. He escaped to Navarre, where he was employed on military service by his brother-in-law and killed while besieging the rebel castle of Viana.

E. Alvisi, Cesare Borgia, Duca di Romagna: Notizie e documenti (1878). Studies by C. Yriarte (2 vols., Paris, 1889; Eng. version (shortened), 1947), W. H. Woodward, (London, 1913), C. Beuf (Toronto and New York, 1942), and G. Sacerdote (Milan, 1950). M. Mallett, The Borgias (1969), passim. F. Gilbert in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 12 (1970), pp. 696–708.

Borgia, St Francis (1510–72), *Jesuit. A Spanish courtier and great-grandson of Pope *Alexander VI, he became Viceroy of Catalonia in 1539 until he succeeded to the dukedom of Gandia on the death of his father in 1534. In 1546 his wife died, and shortly afterwards he made a vow to join the Jesuits. He made his solemn profession in 1548, but in secret and with a dispensation regarding poverty for up to three years so that he could discharge all his family and administrative responsibilities. In the autumn of 1550 he travelled to Rome and from there let his membership of the Society of Jesus become public. Returning to Spain in 1551, he was ordained priest in the Basque country. From 1554 until 1560 he was in overall charge of the Jesuit provinces of Spain and Portugal. In 1561 he returned to Rome and became assistant to D. *Laínez, succeeding him as *General of the Society in 1565 and holding this office until his own death in 1572.

The membership of so significant a figure greatly increased the prestige of the new Society, and Borgia's eremitical inclinations may have had a decisive influence on the development of the Jesuit spiritual tradition. Through him the Spiritual Exercises* of St *Ignatius Loyola were officially approved by Pope *Paul III in 1548, and both his money and influence were crucial in the establishment of the 'Roman College' (later *Gregorianum). Also important were his close, if not always easy, contacts with the Spanish and Portuguese courts: in particular, he was spiritual director to Princess Juana (regent of Spain during *Philip II's absence in England), who was admitted to secret membership of the Society in 1555. Borgia nevertheless encountered difficulties with the *Inquisition in 1559–61, which were resolved only by his return to Rome. As General, Borgia developed the Society's legislation considerably and presided over continuing growth, inaugurating the Jesuit missions in the Spanish American colonies. He was canonized in 1671. Feast day, 10 Oct.

Opera Omnia, pub. at Brussels, 1675. Letters and other material in the Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu (5 vols., Madrid, 1894–1911). Further texts in edn. of M. Ruiz Jurado, SJ, in Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu, 41 (1972), pp. 176–206. Modern edn. of his Tratados espirituales, with introd., by C. de Dalmases, SJ (Espirituales Españoles, Serie A, Textos, 15; Barcelona, 1964). Contemporary Lives by P. de Ribadeneira, SJ (Madrid, 1592; modern edn. by E. Rey, SJ, under the title Historias de la Contrareforma (1945), pp. 601–852) and D. Vásquez, SJ (unpub.). Modern biographies by P. Suau (Paris, 1910), O. Karrer, SJ (Freiburg i. B., 1921), and C. de Dalmases (Madrid, 1983; Eng. tr., St Louis, 1991). M. Yeo, The Greatest of the Borgias (1936). C. de Dalmases, SJ, and J. F. Gilmong, SJ, 'Las obras de San Francisco de Borgia', Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu, 30 (1961), pp. 125–79; C. de Dalmases, SJ, 'San Francísco de Borja y la Inquisición española 1559–1561', ibid. 41 (1972), pp. 48–135; M. Scaduto, SJ, 'Il governo di S. Francesco Borgia 1565–1572', ibid., pp. 136–75. Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 316–25. C. de Dalmases, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 1019–32, s.v. 'François (5) de Borgia'; id. in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 709 f., s.v.

Borromeo, St Charles. See CHARLES BORROMEO, ST.

Borrow, George Henry (1803–81), philologist and traveller. After education at Norwich Grammar School, he was articled to a firm of solicitors. His ambition was to be a writer, and soon he left the law to seek his fortune in London. He went on tramp as a tinker for several years; and from the wide experience thus gained he later wrote the descriptions of gypsy life in Lavengro (1851) and The Romany Rye (2 vols., 1857). As an agent of the *British and Foreign Bible Society he travelled widely, distributing copies of the Bible. His The Bible in Spain (3 vols., 1843) became widely popular through its picturesque and vivacious narrative. He was also a considerable linguist, who made several translations of portions of the Scriptures into little-known tongues.

Collected edn. of his works by C. [K.] Shorter (16 vols., London, 1923–4). W. I. Knapp, The Life, Writings and Correspondence of George Borrow (1899). Studies by H. Jenkins (London, 1912), C. K. Shorter (ibid., 1913, incl. unpub. letters; also ibid. [1920]), R. Fréchet (Paris, 1956), D. Williams (Oxford, 1982), and M. Collie (Cambridge, 1982). M. Collie and A. Fraser, George Borrow: A Bibliographical Study (Winchester, 1984).

Bosanquet, Bernard (1848–1923), idealist philosopher. Educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he came under the influence of T. H. *Green and R. L. Nettleship, he was elected a Fellow of University College in 1870 and remained there until 1881. For most of the rest of his life he lived privately in London, except from 1903 to 1908 when he was Professor of Moral Philosophy at St Andrews. With F. H. *Bradley he was the leading exponent of *Absolute Idealism in England, though his interests were wider and his outlook more conciliatory. In logic, the judgement and not the concept was the fundamental form. In his political theory he ascribed to the State, as the 'general' or 'rational will', almost limitless powers. His understanding of religion was essentially *pantheistic. He conceived of it as only a stage towards metaphysics, and correspondingly of the God of religion as not more than the highest of the appearances of the Absolute; and the Incarnation at a moment in history he found meaningless. Among his many writings the chief are: Logic, or the Morphology of Knowledge (2 vols., 1888), A History of Aesthetic (1892), *A Companion to Plato's Republic (1895), The Philosophical Theory of the State (1899), The Principle of Individuality and Value (1912), The Value and Destiny of the Individual (1913), What Religion Is (1920), and The Meeting of Extremes in Contemporary Philosophy (1921).

His Life was written by his wife, H. Bosanquet (1924). J. H. Muirhead, B. Bosanquet and his Friends: Letters (1935). C. Le Chevalier, Éthique et idéalisme: Le Courant néo-hégélien en Angleterre, Bernard Bosanquet et ses amis (Bibliothèque d'Histoire de la Philosophie, 1963). C. C. J. *Webb, 'Bernard Bosanquet's Philosophy of Religion', Hibbert Journal, 22 (1923–4), pp. 75–96. A. M. McBriar, An Edwardian Mixed Doubles: The Bosanquets versus the Webbs. A Study in British Social Policy 1890–1929 (Oxford, 1987). A. D. Lindsay in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 91–3.

Bosco, St John (1815–88). The founder of the *Salesian Order (q.v.). The son of Piedmontese peasants, he was brought up in and around Turin, where he spent most of his life. A vision received at the age of 9 (the first of many more throughout his life) aroused in him a keen interest in winning lads to the Christian faith, and in 1859 he founded the 'Pious Society of St *Francis de Sales', commonly known as the 'Salesians'. His influence over his boys was achieved by using a minimum of restraint and discipline, combined with a careful watch over his pupils' development and the use of personal and religious encouragement. Don Bosco also actively promoted industrial schools and evening classes where young men could be apprenticed for secular vocations in a religious background. In the latter part of his life he did much to foster missionary work. He was beatified in 1929 and canonized in 1934. Feast day, 31 Jan.

Epistolario, ed. E. Ceria (4 vols., Turin, 1955–9). Memorie dell'Oratorio di S. Francesco di Sales dal 1815 al 1855 [Bosco's autobiography] ed. id. (ibid., 1946; Eng. tr., New Rochelle, NY, 1989). G. B. Lemoyne and E. Ceria, Memorie biografiche di don Giovanni Bosco (19 vols., ibid., 1898–1939; Eng. tr., New Rochelle, NY, 1965 ff.). C. d'Espiney, Don Bosco (Nice, 1881; 10th edn. with additional material, 1888). P. Stella, Don Bosco nella storia della religiosità Cattolica (2 vols., Zurich, 1968–9). Other Lives by A. Auffray, SDBL (Paris, 1929; Eng. tr., 1930), and L. C. Sheppard (London, 1957). F. Desramaut, SDB, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 291–303, s.v. 'Jean (35) Bosco'; id. in DIP 4 (1977), cols. 1246–53, s.v. 'Giovanni Bosco'.

Bosio, Antonio (*c.*1575–1629), Italian archaeologist, dubbed by G. B. *de Rossi the 'Columbus of the *Catacombs'. A native of Malta, he was sent to school at Rome. After preliminary studies in philosophy and law, he gave himself up at the age of 18 to archaeology, to which he devoted the rest of his life. He was among the first to recognize the significance of an accidental discovery on 31 May 1578 of a subterranean burial-place on the Via Salaria. Bosio's first descent was on 10 Dec. 1593 at the Catacomb of *Domitilla (though Bosio could not yet name it) on the Via Ardeatina, when, through inexperience, he lost himself and only just succeeded in finding his way out. His very extensive discoveries were described in his Roma sotterranea (finished 1620; not published until '1632', actually 1634 owing to delays with printing), which remained the standard work until G. B. de Rossi's researches. It was a remarkable achievement, methodical and deeply learned, the least satisfactory part of it being the engravings, which Bosio had entrusted to colleagues.

A. Valeri, Cenni biografici di Antonio Bossio con documenti inediti (1900); G. Ferretto, Note storico-bibliografiche di archeologia cristiana (1942), pp. 132–62. J. Stevenson, The Catacombs (1978), pp. 50–3. N. Parise in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 13 (1971), pp. 257–9.

Bossey, Switzerland. An Ecumenical Institute of the *World Council of Churches was opened at the Château de Bossey, 12 miles from Geneva, in Sept. 1946. It owed its existence largely to the generosity of John D. Rockefeller, Jun. The Institute runs courses and conferences which aim at fostering characteristics of Christian leadership, as well as bringing together members of different Churches. By arrangement with the University of Geneva, it constitutes a Graduate School of Ecumenical Studies.

Bossuet, Jacques-Bénigne (1627–1704), French preacher and Bp. of Meaux. The fifth son of a judge in the Parlement of Dijon, he was educated first at the *Jesuit school at Dijon, later at Metz (whither his father had removed), and at the age of 13 appointed to a canonry in Metz cathedral. In 1642 he went to *Paris, where he entered the Collège de Navarre to train for the priesthood. His oratorical gifts attracted notice through a sermon with which as a boy of 16 he entertained a salon at the Hôtel de Rambouillet. In 1649 he was ordained deacon and, after preparation under St *Vincent de Paul, priest at Metz in 1652. After seven years at Metz, spent in study, controversy with the Protestants, and preaching, in 1659 he moved to Paris. Here his fame rapidly grew and he was a frequent preacher before the court. He was mainly responsible for the conversion of Marshal Turenne from Protestantism in 1668. In 1669 he was appointed Bp. of Condom in Gascony and in the same year delivered the first of his great 'Funeral Orations' (on *Henrietta Maria), which revealed to the full his powers as a pulpit orator. For the next 11 years he was tutor to the Dauphin (1670–1681). During this period he published his Exposition de la doctrine catholique sur les matières de controverse (1671), and also wrote (in the first place for his pupil's instruction) his Traité de la connaissance de Dieu et de soi-même (pub. 1722) and his Discours sur l'histoire universelle (1681). The latter was a compelling presentation of the Christian view of Divine overruling in history. On the completion of his duties as preceptor he was translated to the see of Meaux (1681), and now came to take an increasingly prominent part in French ecclesiastical affairs. At the *Assemblée générale du Clergé of 1682 he was mainly instrumental in securing the support of the French clergy for the moderate *Gallicanism of the Four *Gallican Articles (q.v.), which he himself drew up. In his zeal for the Catholic faith he approved of the Revocation of the Edict of *Nantes (1685) and also directed many publications against the Protestants, among which his Histoire des variations des Églises protestantes (2 vols., 1688) was the most notable. At the same time Bossuet hoped that Christian reunion might be furthered by peaceful methods, and to this end conducted a long correspondence (1683–1700) with G. W. *Leibniz. His Méditations sur l'Évangile (pub. 1731) and his Élévations sur les mystères (pub. 1727), written in the concluding decade of his life, rank as classics of French devotional literature. In his last years the case of Mme *Guyon led him into a bitter controversy on mysticism with F. *Fénelon, and Bossuet was mainly responsible for his condemnation in 1699. His views were embodied in his Relation sur le quiétisme (1698). He was also a vigorous opponent of R. *Simon's theories of the Bible, notably in his Défense de la tradition et des saints pères (pub. 1763).

By common consent Bossuet is among the greatest preachers of all time. Not only did he possess the outward gifts which belong to the successful orator (an impressive presence, a pleasing voice, ease of manner, fitness of phrase); he also combined with them precision of thought, complete grasp of the subject and, above all, a strong hold on dogmatic truth; and to the dry light of argument he added the fire of passion. The fact that he was at his best on a large canvas made the funeral oration a form specially suited to his talents. The three on Henrietta Maria (1669), Henriette Anne d'Angleterre (1670), and the Prince de Condé (1687) will remain classics. But his real greatness as a preacher rests on the distinction he showed on less formal occasions.

Complete Works, ed. F. Lachat (31 vols., Paris, 1862–6). Œuvres oratoires, ed. J. Lebarq, rev. by C. Urbain and E. Levesque (7 vols., Paris, 1914–26). Correspondence, ed. C. Urbain and E. Levesque (15 vols., Paris, 1909–12). Modern Eng. tr. of Bossuet's Politique tirée des propres paroles de l'Écriture Sainte (1709), with introd. by P. Riley (Cambridge Texts in the History of Political Thought, 1990). Lives by A. Rébelliau ('Les Grands Écrivains français', 1900), W. J. Sparrow Simpson (London, 1937), and J. Calvet (Paris, 1941). R. Schmittlein, L'Aspect politique du différend Bossuet–Fénelon (Bade, 1954); L. Cognet, Crépuscule des mystiques: Bossuet. Fénelon (Tournai [1958]); J. Truchet, La Prédication de Bossuet (2 vols., 1960); id., Bossuet panégyriste (1962); id., Politique de Bossuet (1966); T. Goyet, L'Humanisme de Bossuet (2 vols. in 1 [1965]); J. Lebrun, Bossuet ('Les écrivains devant Dieu' [1970]); id., La spiritualité de Bossuet [1972]. F. *Cabrol, OSB, 'Bossuet, ses relations avec l'Angleterre', RHE 27 (1931), pp. 525–71. A. Largent in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 1049–89; E. Levesque in DHGE 9 (1937), cols. 1339–91.

Bötticher, Paul Anton. See LAGARDE, PAUL ANTON DE.

Botulph, St (mid-7th cent.), also Botolph, Botwulf. Acc. to the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle the founder and first abbot of a monastery at Icanhoe (or Ox-island) in 654; it is uncertain whether this was Iken in Suffolk, where the church is dedicated to St Botulph, or (less probably) Boston (i.e. Botulph's town) in Lincs. During the Middle Ages the cult of the saint was very popular, esp. in East Anglia and the north, and some 70 English churches have been dedicated to him. Feast day, 17 June.

Historia Abbatum Auctore Anonymo, cap. 4; pr. by C. Plummer in his edn. of the historical works of *Bede (2 vols., Oxford, 1896), 1, p. 389, with notes, 2, p. 372. Life by Folcard pr. in AASS, Jun. 3 (1701), pp. 402 f. For MSS, edns. and value of Folcard and other Lives, Hardy, 1, pp. 373–6. F. S. Stevenson, 'St Botolph (Botwulf) and Iken', Proceedings of the Suffolk Institute of Archaeology and Natural History, 18 (1922), pp. 29–52.

bounds, beating of the. See BEATING OF THE BOUNDS.

Bourchier, Thomas (*c.*1410–86), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at Oxford, of which University he later became Chancellor, he was appointed to the see of *Worcester in 1433, of *Ely in 1443, of Canterbury in 1454, and created cardinal in 1467. He became much involved in the political affairs of the time, maintaining an even balance between the conflicting interests of Lancaster and York, and retaining the favour of Edward IV. In 1457 he took a leading part in the trial of R. *Pecock, Bp. of *Chichester, for heresy. He lived to crown Henry VII king.

Registrum Thome Bourgchier Cantuariensis Archiepiscopi A.D. 1454–1486, ed. F. R. H. du Boulay (Canterbury and York Society, 54; 1957). W. F. *Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, 5 (1867), pp. 268–386. J. *Gairdner in DNB 5 (1886), pp. 15–18, s.v.; BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 230–2, s.v. 'Bourgchier, Thomas'; both with refs. For his part in Pecock's condemnation see also V. H. H. Green, Bishop Reginald Pecock (1945), pp. 49–60.

Bourdaloue, Louis (1632–1704), French preacher. He joined the *Jesuits in 1648, and was employed in teaching humanities and morals in various provincial houses. His preaching career began in 1666. His courses of sermons, twelve in all, delivered before Louis XIV and his court during Advent and Lent in and after 1670, earned him an outstanding reputation as a preacher. The published sermons exhibit qualities of clarity and logical construction; and notes taken at the time of their delivery tend to confirm the impression of rhetorical power which he made upon his contemporaries. For the most part he was concerned with the moral applications of Christianity, combining an inflexible austerity of principle with a remarkable psychological tact and insight, perfected in the practice of spiritual direction.

Sermons et autres œuvres, ed. by F. Bretonneau, SJ (16 vols., Lyons, etc., 1707–34). Œuvres complètes (18 vols., Toulouse, 1818); also ed. by E. Griselle (vols. 1 and 2 only, Paris, 1919–22). Selected sermons ed. by G. Truc (Paris, 1921); R. Daeschler (ibid., 1929); and L. Dimier (ibid., 1936). M. Lauras, SJ, Bourdaloue, sa vie et ses œuvres (2 vols., 1881). Other Lives by [A. A.] L. Pauthe (Paris, 1900), F. Castets (2 vols., ibid., 1901–4), and E. Byrne (ibid., 1929). E. Griselle, Bourdaloue: Histoire critique de sa prédication d'après les notes de ses auditeurs et les témoignages contemporains (3 vols., 1901–6); F. Brunetière, Études critiques, 8 (1907), pp. 121–82 ('L'éloquence de Bourdaloue'); G. Truc, 'L'actualité psychologique dans les sermons de Bourdaloue', Revue d'histoire littéraire de la France, 21 (1914), pp. 41–61; J. C. Reville, SJ, Herald of Christ: Louis Bourdaloue S.J., king of preachers and preacher of kings (New York [1922]); M. F. Hitz, Die Redekunst in Bourdaloues Predigt (Diss., Munich, 1936). Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 360–7.

Bourignon, Antoinette (1616–80), Flemish enthusiast and mystical writer. She tried to found a new ascetic order, and to run an orphanage at Liège as an *Augustinian house, both unsuccessfully. After 1662 she was estranged from mainstream Christianity, and came to conceive herself to be the 'woman clothed with the sun' of Rev. 12. She influenced P. *Poiret, who published her works. John *Wesley included an edited version of her writings in his *Christian Library. Bourignonist ideas were particularly influential in Scotland in the early part of the 18th cent.; between 1711 and 1889 ministers of the Church of Scotland had to make an explicit denial of Bourignonism before ordination.

Collected works pub. in 19 vols., Amsterdam, 1669–86. A. v. d. Linde, Antoinette Bourignon: Das Licht der Welt (Leiden, 1895); A. R. Macewen, Antoinette Bourignon, Quietist (1910). G. D. Henderson, Mystics of the North-East (Third Spalding Club, Aberdeen, 1934), passim (see index). R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm: Chapters in the History of Religion (Oxford, 1950), pp. 352–5.

Bousset, Wilhelm (1865–1920), NT scholar. In 1916 he became professor of NT theology at Giessen. He made extensive investigations into the connections of later *Judaism and early Christianity with the contemporary Hellenistic religions, and the growth of the so-called '*Religionsgeschichtliche Schule' owed much to his researches. Among his chief writings were Der Antichrist (1895), Die Religion des Judentums im neutestamentlichen Zeitalter (1903; 3rd edn. by H. Gressmann, 1926), Die Hauptprobleme der Gnosis (1907), Kyrios Christos (1913; Eng. tr., Nashville, 1970), and Apophthegmata: Studien zur Geschichte des ältesten Mönchtums (1923, posthumous).

Bousset edited, with W. Heitmüller, the Theologische Rundschau, 1897–1917, and with H. *Gunkel the Forschungen zur Religion und Geschichte des AT und NT, 1903 ff. A collection of his Religionsgeschichtliche Studien was ed. A. F. Verheule (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 50; 1979), with introd., pp. 1–27. Id., Wilhelm Bousset: Leben und Werk (Utrecht thesis; Amsterdam, 1973). J. M. Schmidt in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 97–101, s.v.

Bow Church. The church of St Mary-le-Bow ('S. Maria de Arcubus') in Cheapside, so named from the stone arches of the original 11th-cent. church on the site. The present church, which was badly damaged in an air raid in 1940, was built by C. *Wren after the Great Fire of 1666. It gave its name to the '*Arches Court of Canterbury' which formerly met in the crypt of the church. The confirmation of those elected bishops in the province of *Canterbury still takes place here.

See bibl. to ARCHES, COURT OF CANTERBURY.

Bowden, John William (1798–1844), *Tractarian. A close friend and contemporary at Trinity College, Oxford, of J. H. *Newman, with whom he collaborated on a poem on 'St Bartholomew's Eve' (1821), he became a warm supporter of the Oxford Movement. He wrote some of the Tracts for the Times (nos. 5, 29, 30, 56, and perhaps 58), many articles for the British Critic* and a Life of *Gregory VII (1840). He also contributed six hymns to 'Lyra Apostolica' (1836).

His son, John Edward Bowden (1829–74), who became a RC in 1848, was a member of the London *Oratory and the biographer of F. W. *Faber.

C. Kent in DNB 6 (1886), p. 41, s.v.

bowing. From very early times Christians have bowed 'at the name of Jesus', on the authority of Phil. 2: 10. How far back the custom of bowing at other times, particularly to the altar, can be traced, is disputed. In the C of E, despite *Puritan objections, bowing at the Holy *Name was enjoined in Canon 18 (1604), and the practice of making their reverence and obeisance on entering and leaving the church was recommended to the people in Canon 7 (1640). The statutes of *Winchester Cathedral require that the clergy on entering and leaving the church shall 'severally bow themselves towards the altar, devoutly worshipping the Divine Majesty'.

boy bishop. In medieval times it was a widespread custom, in many English monasteries, schools, and country parishes, to elect on St *Nicholas's Day (6 Dec.) a boy who should execute till *Holy Innocents' Day (28 Dec.) various functions in church ordinarily performed by a bishop. The practice was abolished by *Henry VIII, revived by *Mary, and finally abolished by *Elizabeth I. On the Continent it was never so common, though analogous celebrations sometimes took place, esp. in Germany, on the Feast of St Gregory the Great (then 12 Mar.). The intention was to express in dramatic form the reverence for childhood shown in the Gospels.

E. K. Chambers, The Mediaeval Stage (2 vols., Oxford, 1903), 1, pp. 336–71, and 2, pp. 282–9; K. Young, The Drama of the Medieval Church, 1 (ibid., 1933), pp. 106–11 and 552.

Boyle, Robert (1627–91), scientist, 'the father of chemistry and son of the Earl of Cork'. From 1654 to 1668 he lived in Oxford, exercising great influence, but, partly because he did not wish to take the oaths which would be incumbent on taking office, he accepted no official position at any time. His experimental research on atmospheric pressure and chemical affinity by atomic or 'corpuscular' interaction was of fundamental importance. He saw his scientific work as demonstrating the Divine design of nature, and published a series of treatises which sought to emphasize the harmony which existed between scientific enquiry and Christian life. In his early days he was a member of that group of scientists which he later styled the 'Invisible College' and he took a prominent part in the formation of the Royal Society in 1662. He was active in promoting Bible translation and other evangelical enterprises, while in his will he left the sum of £50 a year for a series of eight lectures to be given in some church in London to confute unbelievers (the 'Boyle Lectures').

Boyle's collected works, with Life, were pub. by T. Birch (5 vols., London, 1744). Considerable extracts from his writings in P. E. More and F. L. Cross, Anglicanism (1935), nos. 56, 89, 103, 104, 124, 350, 351. Lives, besides the primary work of T. Birch, include those of R. Boulton in his edn. of Boyle's Theological Works . . . Epitomized (3 vols., 1715), 1, pp. 1–374, R. Pilkington (London, 1959), and R. E. W. Maddison (ibid., 1969). J. R. Jacob, Robert Boyle and the English Revolution (Studies in the History of Science, 3; New York [1977]). R. McM. Hunt, The Place of Religion in the Science of Robert Boyle (Pittsburgh, 1955). J. G. Lennox, 'Robert Boyle's Defence of Teleological Inference in Experimental Science', Isis, 74 (Philadelphia, 1983), pp. 38–52. J. F. Fulton, A Bibliography of the Honourable Robert Boyle (orig. pub. in Oxford Bibliographical Society Proceedings and Papers, 3 (1933), pp. 1–172 and 339–65; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1961).

Brabourne, Theophilus (1590–*c.*1661), English *Puritan author. In early life he appears to have officiated as a clergyman at *Norwich. In 1628 and 1631 he published two pamphlets maintaining that Saturday, not Sunday, ought to be kept as the Christian Sabbath, and for the second of these, the Defence . . . of the Sabbath Day, he was imprisoned for 18 months at Newgate. The stir thus aroused was one of the reasons for *Charles I's reissue in 1633 of the 'Book of *Sports'. Under the Commonwealth Brabourne again took up the Sabbath question in a dispute with John Collinges, a Presbyterian writer. At the Restoration he wrote three pamphlets in defence of the royal supremacy against the *Quakers.

B. Brook, The Lives of the Puritans, 2 (1813), pp. 362–4. K. L. Parker, The English Sabbath (Cambridge, 1988), pp. 198–202. A. Gordon in DNB 6 (1886), pp. 139–41, s.v.

brachium saeculare. See SECULAR ARM.

Bradford, John (*c.*1510–55), Protestant martyr. He was a native of Manchester and for a time secretary to Sir John Harrington, paymaster of the English forces in France. He began studying law at the Inner Temple *c.*1547, but after hearing sermons by H. *Latimer he became conscience-stricken over his involvement in the embezzlement of military funds, made restitution, and embarked on the study of theology. He moved to St Catharine's Hall, Cambridge, where he took his MA in 1549, and shortly afterwards was elected Fellow of Pembroke Hall, where J. *Whitgift was among his pupils. He was ordained deacon in 1550 by N. *Ridley, Bp. of London, who, finding him a strong supporter of the Protestant cause and a good preacher, made him his chaplain. Soon after Mary's accession (1553) he was imprisoned on a charge of sedition in the Tower, where during 18 months he carried on an extensive correspondence, wrote The Hurt of Hearing Mass (posthumously pub., ?1561), and vigorously defended *predestination against the *Freewillers among his fellow-prisoners. In a trial before S. *Gardiner and others, he remained steadfast to his Protestantism and was burnt at *Smithfield on 1 July 1555.

A complete edn. of his writings was pub. by the Parker Society (2 vols., 1848, 1853). C. Hughes, 'Two Sixteenth-Century Northern Protestants: John Bradford and William Turner', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 66 (1983–4), pp. 104–38, esp. pp. 104–21. C. R. Trueman, Luther's Legacy: Salvation and English Reformers, 1525–1556 (Oxford, 1994), pp. 27–30 and 243–88.

Bradlaugh, Charles (1833–91), free-thinker. A Londoner by birth, he was brought up in the C of E, but soon became an *atheist. He worked as a lawyer's clerk, but devoted his spare time to popular lecturing, becoming president of the London Secular Society (1858–90). From 1860 he conducted the National Reformer in defence of free thinking. Prosecution for its alleged sedition, followed by a legal contest as to whether Bradlaugh as an atheist could give evidence (1867–9), led to the passage of the Evidence Further Amendment Act in 1869. In 1876, together with Mrs A. Besant (1847–1933), who was his co-editor of the National Reformer from 1874 to 1885, he entered the lists in support of a Bristol publisher who had issued an American pamphlet, Fruits of Philosophy, and been lightly sentenced for its indecency. When Bradlaugh and Mrs Besant reissued the pamphlet, both were sentenced heavily, but the indictment was quashed on a technical point. He himself wrote a number of pamphlets.

In 1868 Bradlaugh stood for Parliament at Northampton, but was defeated. After two further defeats he was elected MP for Northampton in 1880. On the refusal of his plea to affirm or to be allowed to take the oath, he was several times excluded from the House of Commons and re-elected. Finally, as a result of a ruling by the Prime Minister, Sir Robert Peel, when Parliament assembled on 12 Jan. 1886 he was allowed to make the oath required by the Parliamentary Oaths Act 1866 and take his seat. In his last years he was actively interested in promoting social and political reform in *India and attended the Indian National Congress of 1889. He dissociated himself from Mrs Besant after she became a *theosophist.

Modern edn. of Humanity's Gain from Unbelief and Selections from other Works (Thinker's Library, 1929). H. B. Bonner (daughter), Charles Bradlaugh: A Record of his Life and Work, with an Account of his Parliamentary Struggle, Politics and Teachings, by J. M. Robertson (2 vols., 1894). Other Lives by A. S. Headingley (London, 1880; rev. edn., 1883) and D. Tribe (ibid., 1971). W. L. Arnstein, The Bradlaugh Case: A Study in late Victorian Opinion and Politics (Oxford, 1965).

Bradley, Francis Herbert (1846–1924), exponent of *Absolute Idealism. He was born at Clapham and educated at Marlborough and at University College, Oxford. From 1870 till his death he was a Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. His first important publication was his brilliant Ethical Studies (1876). Next followed The Principles of Logic (1883) and, ten years later, Appearance and Reality (1893), the most original work in British metaphysics in the 19th cent. Bradley argued that everywhere in the fields of natural science, ethics, religion, etc., contradictions are patent, and that therefore these realms cannot be conceived of as reality. The only true reality is to be found in an all-inclusive experience, the Absolute, wherein all contradictions, including the gulf between subject and object, are finally transcended. As the notions of personality and selfhood are riddled with contradictions, Theism and personal immortality must be rejected. In an essay on 'The Presuppositions of Critical History' (1874) he examined the foundations of historical credibility and rejected the historicity of the Gospels on the ground that their facts were without parallel in our experience. Bradley always maintained that he was indifferent to the sources of his ideas; but he was, like B. *Bosanquet, deeply indebted to G. W. F. *Hegel, partly through the medium of T. H. *Green, who had done much to encourage constructive interest in German Idealism in Oxford. Among his later works are Essays on Truth and Reality (1914) and a revised edition of The Principles of Logic (1922).

His Essays were collected in 2 vols., Oxford, 1935. C. A. Campbell, Scepticism and Construction: Bradley's Sceptical Principles (1931); R. Kagey, The Growth of F. H. Bradley's Logic (1931); R. Wollheim, F. H. Bradley (Harmondsworth, 1959); S. K. Saxena, Studies in the Metaphysics of Bradley (Muirhead Library of Philosophy, 1967); A. [R.] Manser, Bradley's Logic (Oxford, 1983); id. and G. Stock (eds.), The Philosophy of F. H. Bradley (ibid., 1984). A. E. *Taylor in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 101–3.

Bradwardine, Thomas (*c.*1295–1349), Abp. of *Canterbury. His father lived in *Chichester, and Bradwardine was prob. born there. He was a Fellow, first of Balliol College and then of Merton College, Oxford. After becoming a master of arts in the mid-1320s, he entered the theological faculty. During this time he wrote his influential work on physics, De proportionibus (*c.*1328) and his controversial treatise on future contingents (*c.*1333). In 1335 he became chaplain to Richard of Bury, Bp. of *Durham, and in 1337 Chancellor of *St Paul's Cathedral. About the same time he was made confessor to Edward III, whom he sometimes accompanied on his travels on the Continent during the wars with France. In 1346 he was one of the commissioners who tried to bring about peace between England, France, and Scotland. In 1349 he was consecrated Abp. of Canterbury at *Avignon, and, having returned to England, died in the same year of the Black Death.

Bradwardine was held in esteem by his contemporaries for his learning, esp. in mathematics and theology. His principal work, De Causa Dei contra Pelagium (completed by 1344), earned him the title of 'Doctor Profundus'. Under the influence esp. of St *Augustine, St *Anselm, and *Duns Scotus, he sought to build up a theological system on evident propositions, utilizing esp. the *Ontological Argument. Against the *Pelagian ideas prevalent among some contemporary theologians, he insisted on the necessity of grace and the 'irresistible' efficacy of the Divine Will, which lies behind all action, whether necessary or contingent. His writings paved the way for the predestinarian thought of John *Wycliffe. He also made original and influential contributions to a number of theoretical problems in mathematics and physics, notably in his treatment of geometry, of continuity and infinity, of proportions, and of motion.

His De Causa Dei contra Pelagium, ed. H. *Savile (London, 1618; photographically repr., Frankfurt, 1964), with biog. introd. (no pagination). De proportionibus ed. H. L. Crosby, Jun. (Madison, Wis., 1955). H. A. Oberman and J. A. Weisheipl, OP, 'The Sermo Epinicius ascribed to Thomas Bradwardine (1346)', AHDLMA 25 (for 1958; 1959), pp. 295–329, incl. text; M. L. Roure, 'La Problématique des Propositions insolubles au XIII^e siècle et au début du XIV^e, ibid. 37 (for 1970; 1971), pp. 205–326, incl. text of Bradwardine's 'De Insolubilibus', pp. 285–326. J.-F. Genest, 'Le De futuris contingentibus de Thomas Bradwardine', Recherches Augustiniennes, 14 (1979), pp. 249–336, incl. text. S. Hahn, Thomas Bradwardine und seine Lehre von der menschlichen Willensfreiheit (BGPM 5, Heft 2; 1905). G. [A.] Leff, Bradwardine and the Pelagians (Cambridge, 1957), esp. pp. 1–124. H. A. Oberman, Archbishop Thomas Bradwardine: A Fourteenth Century Augustinian (Utrecht diss., 1957). Various authors in N. Kretzmann and others (eds.), The Cambridge History of Later Medieval Philosophy (1982), esp. pp. 374–7, 533–6, 540–2, 578–80, and 887. J. A. Weisheipl in J. I. Catto (ed.), The Early Oxford Schools (The History of the University of Oxford, 1; Oxford, 1984), esp. pp. 633–58. BRUO 1 (1957), pp. 244–6, with further refs. J. E. Murdoch in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 2 (1970), pp. 390–7, s.v.

Brady, Nicholas (1659–1726). See TATE, NAHUM, AND BRADY, NICHOLAS.

Braga, rite of. The form of the Latin rite used in the cathedral of Braga (Civitas Bracarensis) in N. Portugal. There is documentary evidence for its existence from the 14th cent. and it may have owed its compilation to St Giraldus *c.*1100. In 1924 *Pius XI confirmed the use throughout the archdiocese of a revised form of the rite, much influenced by the then current Roman Missal. A further revision in 1971 incorporated various changes recommended by the Second *Vatican Council; at the same time its use in the archdiocese was made optional.

P. R. Rochat, L'Office Divin au Moyen Age dans l'Église de Braga (1980). A. A. King, Liturgies of the Primatial Sees (1957), pp. 155–285.

Bramhall, John (1594–1663), Abp. of *Armagh. Born near Pontefract, W. Yorks, he was educated at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, and ordained *c.*1616. In 1633 he went to Ireland as Strafford's chaplain and in 1634 became Bp. of Derry. Here he helped in strengthening episcopacy and maintaining the revenues of the Church of Ireland. In 1642 he retired to England and in 1644 to the Continent, returning for a brief spell to Ireland in 1648. On his permanent return at the *Restoration, he became Abp. of Armagh (1661) and exercised moderation in enforcing the Conformity Laws. He devoted his exile to replying to attacks upon the English Church from three quarters. In Serpent Salve (1643) he upheld episcopal and monarchical government against the democratic and presbyterian system of the Puritans, returning to the attack in Fair Warning against the Scottish Discipline (1649). His Defence of True Liberty (1655) was directed against the philosophical materialism and determinism of T. *Hobbes, whom he had met in *Paris; to Hobbes's Animadversions in reply, Bramhall answered with Castigations of Hobbes' Animadversions (1658), with an appendix on 'The Catching of Leviathan, the Great Whale'. In a third sphere of controversy, with Rome, he published (1653) a reply to T. B. de la Milletière's defence of *transubstantiation (1651), upholding the Anglican doctrine of the *Real Presence. His attacks on *Ultramontanism were widely welcomed by French Catholics. In 1654 he published his celebrated A Just Vindication of the Church of England from the Unjust Aspersion of Criminal Schism. In response to the RC reply to this by Dr Richard Smith, titular Bp of *Chalcedon, Bramhall issued his Replication (1656), a prayer that he might live to see the reunion of Christendom.

Collected edn. of Works, with Life by H. Vesey (Dublin, 1676); modern edn. by A. W. Haddan in the LACT (5 vols., 1842–5), with life from Biographia Britannica (vol. 1, pp. iii–xv). Much of Bramhall's Correspondence, with other material on his episcopate, is printed in the Report of the Manuscripts of the late Reginald Rawdon Hastings, ed. F. Bickley (Historical MSS Commission, 78), 4 (1947), pp. 55–152. W. J. Sparrow Simpson, Archbishop Bramhall (1927). F. R. Bolton, The Caroline Tradition of the Church of Ireland with special reference to Bishop Jeremy Taylor (1958), passim; H. R. McAdoo, The Spirit of Anglicanism (1965), pp. 368–85.

branch theory of the Church. The theory that, though the Church may have fallen into schism within itself and its several provinces or groups of provinces be out of communion with each other, each may yet be a 'branch' of the one Church of Christ, provided that it continues to hold the faith of the original undivided Church, and to maintain the *apostolic succession of its bishops. Such, it is contended by many Anglican theologians, is the condition of the Church at the present time, there being now three main branches, the Roman, the Eastern, and the Anglican Communions. The theory in this precise form was apparently first put forward in the 19th cent. under the inspiration of the *Oxford Movement. It is the basis of W. *Palmer's Treatise on the Church of Christ (1838), but only became general and popular later.

brasses. Monuments consisting of brass plates, engraved with images or inscriptions, set into stones in the pavement or on a wall of a church. They are more durable than incised stone slabs, and take up less room than sculptured figures. Originating in the 13th cent., they were popular until the 16th cent., esp. in England, France, Germany, and the Low Countries. In the Reformation period many were destroyed by iconoclasts; often their metal was reused elsewhere, sometimes for new brasses engraved on the reverse (known somewhat inexactly as 'palimpsests'). They enjoyed a revival in the 19th cent. They provide much valuable historical information, esp. about the costume and beliefs of the time.

H. Haines, A Manual of Monumental Brasses (2 vols., 1861; repr., Bath, 1970); H. Druitt, A Manual of Costume as illustrated by Monumental Brasses (1906; repr., Bath, 1970); M. Stephenson, A List of Monumental Brasses in the British Isles (1926; Appendix, 1938); H. K. Cameron, A List of Monumental Brasses on the Continent of Europe (1970; 2nd edn., 1973); J. Bertram, Lost Brasses [1976]; M. [W.] Norris, Monumental Brasses: The Memorials (2 vols. [1977]); id., Monumental Brasses: The Craft (1978); D. [G.] Meara, Victorian Memorial Brasses (1983); J. Coales (ed.), The Earliest English Brasses: Patronage, Style and Workshops 1270–1350 (1987). Transactions of the Cambridge University Association of Brass Collectors (12 pts., 1887–93); Transactions of the Monumental Brass Society (1894 ff.). More popular works include M. [W.] Norris, Brass Rubbing [1965]; J. Page-Phillips, Macklin's Monumental Brasses (1969; 2nd edn., 1972).

brawling. The offence of creating a disturbance in a church or churchyard. Technically the word applies to any kind of speaking in a church other than that prescribed by the BCP. Brawling has been a punishable offence in England under ecclesiastical jurisdiction since 1551, and under civil procedure since 1860. The services of non-Anglican churches are similarly protected by the Liberty of Religious Worship Act 1855.

Bray, Thomas (1656–1730), founder of the *SPCK and of the *SPG (qq.v.). A native of Marton in Shropshire, he was educated at Oswestry School and All Souls College, Oxford. In 1690 he became Rector of Sheldon, W. Midlands. When an appeal from Maryland reached Henry *Compton, Bp. of London, for assistance in the colony's ecclesiastical organization, the Bishop selected Bray and made him his commissary; but legal complications long delayed his departure. Meanwhile Bray sought out missionaries to accompany him and (in view of the poverty of the clergy) worked out a scheme for the provision of free libraries in the colony. This last project met with such support that he determined to promote it also at home, where before his death he had been instrumental in establishing some 80 parochial libraries. Other of his educational and literary projects took shape in the foundation of the 'Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge' (1698). In 1699 he finally set sail for Maryland. Though well received by the governor, Bray soon found that he could better promote his purposes from Great Britain and before long returned home. Here the work of the SPCK had developed to such dimensions that Bray founded the 'Society for the Propagation of the Gospel' as a separate society for foreign missions (1701). His endeavours for the appointment of a bishop for New England, however, were unsuccessful. In 1706 he became Vicar of St Botolph Without, Aldgate. To put the libraries on a permanent basis he created the 'Associates of Dr Bray' (1723), which is still active. His most widely circulated work was

A Course of Lectures upon the Church Catechism (4 vols., 1696). In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 15 Feb.

H. P. Thompson, Thomas Bray (London, 1954), with bibl. C. T. Laugher, Thomas Bray's Grand Design: Libraries of the Church of England in America, 1695–1785 (Association of College and Research Libraries, Publications in Librarianship, 35; Chicago, 1973). W. K. Lowther Clarke, Eighteenth Century Piety (1944), ch. 8, pp. 96–100. J. H. Overton in DNB 6 (1886), pp. 239–41.

Bray, the Vicar of. The hero of the well-known ballad whose pretended zeal for each new form of established religion from *Charles II to George I assured his tenure of his benefice. The song, which appears to date from 1720, is apparently based on an anecdote of a certain Vicar of Bray, Berks, to be read in T. *Fuller's 'Worthies' (1662. 'This vicar, being taxed by one for being a turncoat and an inconsistent changeling, "Not so", said he, "for I always kept my principle, which is this,—to live and die the Vicar of Bray" '.) Attempts to identify Fuller's cleric have not been successful. Simon Aleyn (Vicar, 1540–88) and Simon Simmonds (his predecessor, afterwards Canon of Windsor) alone seem to fit Fuller's dating; but there is no contemporary evidence that either was the sort of cleric portrayed in the song. The suggestion that he belongs to Bray, near Dublin, is a modern conjecture wholly without support. The ballad is said to have been composed by an army officer in the time of George I.

C. Kerry, The History and Antiquities of the Hundred of Bray, in the County of Berks (privately pr., London, 1861), with text of ballad, p. 185. An anecdote reported on p. 145 suggests that an incidental remark made by *James I to the then Vicar of Bray whom he happened to fall in with at the Bear Inn, Maidenhead ('You shall be Vicar of Bray still, I promise you'), may have been the source of the story.

brazen serpent. The image set up by *Moses in the wilderness, on looking at which those who had been bitten by serpents were healed (Num. 21: 8, 9). Acc. to 2 Kgs. 18: 4 it was destroyed by Hezekiah because the Israelites had been in the habit of burning incense to it. It is mentioned once in the NT as a type of the crucified Christ (Jn. 3: 14).

Brazil, Christianity in. The conversion of Brazil was effected by the major orders of friars (*Franciscans, *Dominicans, *Augustinians), but principally by the *Jesuits, who founded the city of São Paulo in 1554. They mastered the native languages and were pioneers in education; they worked with the indigenous people, creating communes and protecting their rights. A. *Vieira (1608–97, q.v.) was among those who took part in this enterprise. The influx of slaves from Africa, who were forcibly converted to Christianity, produced a synthesis of African religions and Catholicism as a way of preserving the language and culture of the African tribes (Afro-Brazilian rites). Brazil gained her independence from *Portugal in 1822, and the 19th cent. saw a movement for independence from *Ultramontanism among clergy and politicians. With the establishment of the Republic in 1889, the Church was disestablished and her endowments discontinued. Freedom of worship was guaranteed to all bodies. In the 40 years following the establishment of the Republic, NE Brazil saw two popular religious movements, one led by the mystic, Antonio Conselheiro (1828–97), who preached in his holy city of Canudos (Bahia), and the other at Joaseiro (Ceará), led by the suspended RC priest Padre Cicero. In recent years Protestantism (esp. *Baptists, *Pentecostalists, and *Seventh-day Adventists), *Spiritualism, and Afro-Brazilian rites have increased their adherents. Following the Second *Vatican Council and the conferences of Latin American bishops at Medellín in 1968 and Puebla in 1979 the Brazilian conference of bishops has been active in implementing the preferential 'option for the poor' expounded at these conferences in the pastoral practice of the RC Church. Many of the pioneers of *Liberation Theology have worked within the Basic Christian communities (comunidades eclesias de base) in Brazil as part of a wider movement for social and political reform.

S. Leite, SJ, Páginas de história no Brasil (1937), esp. ch. 1, 'Influência religiosa na formação do Brasil', pp. 11–34, and passim. Id., História da Companhia de Jesus no Brasil (10 vols., Lisbon and Rio de Janeiro, 1938–50). J. [H.] Hemming, Red Gold: The Conquest of the Brazilian Indians (1978). R. Bastide, Les religions africaines au Brésil: Vers une sociologie des interpénétrations de civilisations (1960; Eng. tr. [1978]). E. da Cunha, Os Sertões (Rio de Janeiro, 1902; Eng. tr. as Rebellion in the Backlands, Chicago, 1944). A. Montenegro, Antônio Conselheiro (Fortaleza, 1954). M. I. P. de Queiroz, O Messianismo— no Brasil e no mundo (São Paulo, 1965). T. C. Bruneau, The Political Transformation of the Brazilian Catholic Church (Cambridge, 1974); id., The Church in Brazil: The Politics of Religion (Austin, Tex., 1982). S. Mainwaring, The Catholic Church and Politics in Brazil, 1916–1985 (Stanford, Calif., 1986). D. Regan, C.S.Sp., Church for Liberation: A Pastoral Portrait of the Church in Brazil (1987). J. Serrano in DHGE 10 (1938), cols. 565–89, s.v. 'Brésil'; M. C. Kiemen and B. Kloppenburg in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 762–72, s.v. L. Palacín, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (1986), cols. 1985–95, s.v. 'Portugal et Brésil'.

bread, leavened and unleavened. In the *Eucharistic rite, the E. Churches (except the *Armenian) customarily use leavened bread, whereas Catholics in the W. use unleavened bread. The difference in practice developed gradually; but by the time of the Schism of 1054, the divergence between E. and W. was a leading cause of dissension. In the C of E the BCP of 1549 ordered the continuance of unleavened bread, while that of 1552 permitted ('it shall suffice'), without enjoining, leavened. The '*Injunctions' of Queen *Elizabeth I (1559) attempted to enforce again the use of unleavened bread, but the Book of 1661 left the rubric of 1552 practically unaltered. The *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, however, has twice ruled that common bread is directed by the rubric. A number of modern Anglican liturgies expressly allow the use of either (e.g. those of *New Zealand and *Wales), but most make no mention of the matter. Leavened bread is generally used by Nonconformists.

Among the earliest undisputed witnesses for unleavened bread are *Alcuin (ep. 90, ad fratres Lugdunenses, AD 798; PL 100. 289) and his pupil, *Rabanus Maurus (Instit. Cler. 1. 31). J. *Sirmond, SJ, 'Disquisitio de Azymo', first pub. in his Historia Poenitentiae Publicae (Paris, 1651). R. M. Woolley, The Bread of the Eucharist (Alcuin Club Tracts, 11; 1897). M. H. Smith, And Taking Bread . . .: Cerularius and the Azyme Controversy of 1054 (Théologie Historique, 47 [1978]). F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 3254–60, s.v. 'Azymes', with good bibl.

Bread of the Presence. See SHEWBREAD.

Breakspear, Nicolas. See HADRIAN IV.

Breastplate of St Patrick. An Old Irish hymn, generally familiar through Mrs C. F. Alexander's translation (1889), beginning 'I bind unto myself today The strong Name of the Trinity'. It has been dated to the early 8th cent. and was probably the 'Canticum Scotticum' mentioned in the 'Book of *Armagh' (807). Though ancient, its ascription to St *Patrick (q.v.) is impossible on linguistic grounds. The hymn belongs to the genre loricae. In it the author invokes the Trinity, Angels, Prophets, the powers of heaven and earth, and finally Christ Himself to protect him against the dominion of evil.

The text survives in three ancient MSS: (1) the 11th-cent. Irish Liber Hymnorum at *Trinity College, Dublin, (2) a 14th- or 15th-cent. copy of the Tripartite Life of St Patrick in the *Bodleian Library, Oxford (Rawl. B. 512), and (3) a MS in the British Library (Egerton 93). It was first pub., with an Eng. tr., [by J. O'Donovan] in G. Petrie, 'On the History and Antiquities of Tara Hill', Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, 18 (1839), pp. 56–68; crit. edns. with metrical Eng. trs. in J. H. Bernard and R. Atkinson (eds.), The Irish Liber Hymnorum (HBS 13–14; 1898), 1, pp. 133–6, and 2, pp. 49–51, with notes, pp. 208–12, and W. Stokes and J. Strachan (eds.), Thesaurus Palaeohibernicus, 2 (1903), pp. 354–8, repr. in The Works of St Patrick, tr. by L. Bieler (ACW 17; 1953), pp. 67–72, incl. introd.; Eng. tr. by W. Stokes repr. in J. H. Todd, St Patrick, Apostle of Ireland (1864), pp. 426–9. D. A. Binchy, 'Varia III. No. 3. Atomriug, No. 4. The date of the so-called "Hymn of Patrick" ', Ériu, 20 (1966), pp. 232–6, with refs. See also works cited under PATRICK, ST.

Breda, Declaration of. The declaration made by *Charles II at Breda in the Netherlands on 4/14 Apr. 1660, immediately before the Restoration. He expressed inter alia his readiness to grant his subjects a 'liberty to tender consciences' in matters of religion not affecting the peace of the kingdom.

Text in Gee and Hardy, no. 114, pp. 585–8. See also general works on Charles II (q.v.).

Breeches Bible. A popular name for the *Geneva Bible of 1560 from its rendering of Gen. 3: 7, where AV has 'aprons'.

Bremond, Henri (1865–1933), French spiritual writer. He entered the Society of Jesus in 1882, and after spending his novitiate in England was ordained priest in 1892. In 1899 he was appointed editor of the *Jesuit periodical Études. In 1904 he left the order to devote himself entirely to literary activities. He soon experienced difficulties with the ecclesiastical authorities, notably in 1907 in connection with his essay on J. H. *Newman (pub. in 1906), and his Life of *Jane Frances de Chantal (pub. in 1912) was put on the *Index in 1913. His principal work, his voluminous Histoire littéraire du sentiment religieux en France (11 vols., 1916–33 + index, 1936), is a history of French spirituality, chiefly in the 17th cent., in the form of a series of essays on outstanding religious personalities. Its original and penetrating descriptions of the life of souls are illustrated by numerous quotations, often from forgotten and almost inaccessible contemporary sources. A brilliant stylist, Bremond draws captivating pictures esp. of less well-known personalities such as Mme *Acarie, J. *Surin, or the Ursuline nun Marie *Guyard. His judgement on representatives of a more active and ascetical type was in general less sympathetic. Among his other works is an exquisite little study, Prière et poésie (1926).

His Histoire littéraire was repr. 1967–8; index, 1971. H. Hogarth, Henri Bremond: The Life and Work of a Devout Humanist (1950). F. Hermans, L'Humanisme Religieux de l'Abbé Henri Bremond 1865–1933 (1965). Entretiens sur Henri Bremond sous la direction de M. Nédoncelle et J. Dagens [27–31 Aug. 1965] (Décades du Centre Culturel International de Cerisy-la-Salle, NS 4 [1967]). A. Blanchet, Histoire d'une mise à l'index: La "Sainte Chantal" de l'Abbé Bremond d'après des documents inédits [1967]. Id., Henri Bremond 1865–1904 (posthumously pub. [1975]). E. Goichot, Henri Bremond historien du sentiment religieux: Genèse et stratégie d'une enterprise littéraire [1982]. A. *Loisy, George Tyrrell et Henri Bremond (1936). A. Blanchet (ed.), Henri Bremond et Maurice Blondel: Correspondance (3 vols., 1970–1). A. Guinan, 'Portrait of a devout humanist, M. l'Abbé Henri Brémond', HTR 47 (1954), pp. 15–53. Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 378–84.

Brendan, St (484–577 or 583), also 'St Brenainn', Abbot of Clonfert. In his lifetime Brendan acquired the reputation of being a navigator (as is known from St *Adomnán), and an anonymous Hiberno-Latin work, prob. of the 8th cent., the Navigatio S. Brendani, describes voyages made by Brendan and 12 monks to a number of mythical islands in the W. Ocean in search of an earthly paradise. Although the purpose of the Navigatio was the inculcation of monastic discipline, it was widely popular from the 10th cent., and was translated into many vernacular languages. The tradition that he founded the monastery of Cluain Fearta (Clonfert, in Co. Galway) may quite well be true. The churches of Brendon in Devonshire and Brancepeth in Co. Durham are dedicated to him. Feast day, 16 May. [He is to be distinguished from his contemporary St Brendan of Birr (*c.*490–573), whose feast is kept on 29 Nov.]

Lat. text of the 'Navigation of St Brendan' pr., with other material, by [Card.] P. F. Moran, Acta Sancti Brendani (Dublin, 1872); modern edn., with introd. and bibl., by C. Selmer (Publications in Mediaeval Studies, 16; Notre Dame, Ind., 1959). Modern Eng. tr. by J. J. O'Meara, The Voyage of Saint Brendan (Dublin, 1978). I. Short and B. Merrilees (eds.), The Anglo-Norman Voyage of St Brendan (Manchester, 1979); for other vernacular translations see C. Selmer, 'The Vernacular Translations of the Navigatio Sancti Brendani. A Bibliographical Study', Mediaeval Studies, 18 (1956), pp. 145–57. G. Orlandi, Navigatio Sancti Brendani, 1: Introduzione (Testi e documenti per lo studio dell'antichità, 38 [1968]). D. O'Donoghue, Brendaniana: St Brendan the Voyager in Story and Legend (Dublin, 1893); G. A. Little, Brendan the Navigator: An Interpretation (1945); G. Ashe, Land to the West: St Brendan's Voyage to America (1962), with bibl.

Brent, Charles Henry (1862–1929), Anglican '*Faith and Order' leader. Born at Newcastle, Ontario, Canada, he studied at Trinity College, Toronto, and was ordained priest in 1887. From 1888 to 1891 he was engaged in pastoral work in Boston, Mass. In 1901 he became the Protestant Episcopal Bp. of the Philippine Islands, and in 1918 of Western New York. From 1917 to 1919 he was the Chief of Chaplains of the American Expeditionary Force in Europe. From his first months in the Philippines Brent energetically combated the opium traffic. In 1909 he was President of the Opium Conference at Shanghai and in 1923 represented the USA on the League of Nations Narcotics Committee. In his later years his chief work was for the *Ecumenical (Faith and Order) Movement, in which he was one of the most ardent spirits. On returning from the *Edinburgh Conference of 1910 to the USA he induced the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church to convene a 'World Conference on Faith and Order', and when the conference ultimately met at *Lausanne in 1927, Brent was its President. Feast day in the American BCP (1979), 27 Mar.

F. W. Kates, Charles Henry Brent (1948). R. B. Ogilby in Dict. Amer. Biog., Supp. 1 (1944), pp. 115–17.

Brentano, Franz (1838–1917), Austrian philosopher. Ordained to the RC priesthood in 1864, he was appointed Privatdozent at Würzburg in 1866. In 1873, chiefly owing to intellectual difficulties about the Trinity, he separated himself from the Church. Through lectures at Vienna from 1880 to 1915 he exercised great influence on some of the leading philosophers of the next generation, among them E. Husserl and A. von Meinong. His high regard for *Scholastic and *Aristotelian doctrines, which he had inherited from his RC training, led him to be critical of all forms of Idealism, and some of the anti-idealistic currents in 20th-cent. philosophy in German-speaking countries derived directly from his teaching. His main works were Psychologie vom empirischen Standpunkt (vol. 1 [all issued], 1874; Eng. tr., 1973) and Vom Ursprung sittlicher Erkenntnis (1889; Eng. tr., 1902; also 1969).

A number of Brentano's works have been posthumously pub. under the editorship of O. Kraus, A. Kastil, and others, at Leipzig, and after the Second World War, at Berne and then Hamburg; several of these have been tr. into Eng. O. Kraus, Franz Brentano: Zur Kenntnis seines Lebens und seiner Lehre (Munich, 1919). A. Kastil, Die Philosophie Franz Brentano: Eine Einführung in seine Lehre (Berne, 1951); L. L. McAlister (ed.), The Philosophy of Brentano (1976). R. M. Chisholm Brentano and Intrinsic Value (Cambridge, 1986). P. Gregoretti, Franz Brentano: Bibliografia Completa (1862–1982) (Trieste, 1983). R. M. Chisholm in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 1 (1967), pp. 365–8, s.v.

Brenz, Johann (1499–1570), reformer of Württemberg. He was born at Weilderstadt, studied at Heidelberg under *Oecolampadius, and in 1518 came under the influence of M. *Luther. In 1522 he was appointed Preacher at the church of St Michael in Schwäbisch Hall and from now on actively supported the Reformation, preaching against the Mass and the cult of the saints. In 1525, like Luther, he refused to support the insurgents in the *Peasants' War. Against Oecolampadius he insisted in his Syngramma Suevicum (21 Oct. 1525) on the Real Presence in the Eucharist and thus ensured the acceptance of the Lutheran teaching over the greater part of Württemberg. He put forward a proposal for a Church Order in Hall in 1527. He participated in the *Marburg Colloquy (1529). From 1535 onwards the Hall form of Church government began to be adopted throughout Württemberg. He played an active part in the reconstitution of the University of *Tübingen (1537–8). He was present at the Disputation of Worms (1540–1) and at the Conference of *Ratisbon (1541). Obliged to flee Hall after the *Augsburg Interim (1548), he was invited to England by T. *Cranmer, but refused; he went to several German cities, compiling the *Württemberg Confession in 1552. In 1553 he became provost of the Stiftskirche in Stuttgart and adviser to Duke Christoph of Württemberg. He defended *Ubiquitarianism in controversies with T. *Beza and H. *Bullinger. A prolific writer, he was the author of two Catechisms (1527, 1535), several biblical commentaries, sermons, and polemical treatises.

Works ed. M. Brecht and others (Tübingen, 1970 ff.). Incomplete early edn., 8 vols. fol., ibid., 1576–90. T. Pressel, Anecdota Brentiana: Ungedruckte Briefe und Bedenken von Johannes Brenz (Tübingen, 1868). Life by J. Hartmann and C. Jaeger (2 vols., Hamburg, 1840–2). W. E. Köhler, Bibliographia Brentiana (Berlin, 1904); id., Brentiana und andere Reformatoria (Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, Jahrgg. 9–11, 13, 14, 16, 19, 21, 22, 24, 26; 1912–29). M. Brecht, Die frühe Theologie des Johannes Brenz (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 36; Tübingen, 1966). H.-M. Maurer and K. Ulshöfer, Johannes Brenz und die Reformation in Württemberg (Forschungen aus Württembergisch Franken, 9 [1973]). J. M. Estes, Christian Magistrate and State Church: The Reforming Career of Johannes Brenz [1982]. M. Brecht in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 170–81, s.v., with bibl.

Brest-Litovsk, Union of, often now called the Union of Brest. The union concluded in 1596 between the *Ukrainian (or Ruthenian) and the RC Churches, with the approbation of Pope *Clement VIII and Sigismund III of Poland. By it, the Metropolitan of Kiev, together with five of his bishops, and some millions of Christians, all of the Byzantine rite, joined the RC Church, with permission to retain their liturgy. During succeeding years the union was opposed both by Russia, which succeeded in bringing large numbers of Ruthenians back to the Orthodox Church, and also by the Latin Poles, who despised and feared Byzantine Ruthenians.

The official docs. are pr. by A. Theiner, Vetera Monumenta Poloniae et Lithuaniae Gentiumque Finitimarum Historiam Illustrantia, 3 (Rome, 1863), no. 185, pp.232–49; further Papal letters, pp. 269–73. E. Likowski, Union de l'Église grecque-ruthène en Pologne avec l'Église romaine, conclue à Brest, en Lithuanie, en 1596 (1903); id., Die ruthenisch-römische Kirchenvereinigung, genannt Union zu Brest (1904). J. Pelesz, Geschichte der Union der ruthenischen Kirche mit Rom von den aeltesten Zeiten bis auf die Gegenwart (2 vols., 1881). O. [J. L.] Halecki, From Florence to Brest (1439–1596) (Rome, 1958), pp. 199–419; A. Jobert, De Luther à Mohila: La Pologne dans la crise de la Chrétienté, 1517–1648 (Collection historique de l'Insitut d'Études Slaves, 21; 1974), pp. 321–43. J. Ostrowski in DHGE 10 (1938), cols. 615–18.

Brethren, Church of the. See TUNKERS.

Brethren of the Common Life (Lat. 'Fratres Communis Vitae'). An association founded in the 14th cent. to foster a higher level of Christian life and devotion. The original leader was G. *Groote (q.v.), a canon of Utrecht, who resigned his prebend to travel through the Netherlands and preach against clerical abuses and call men to repentance. He demanded no vows from his disciples but left them free, whether clerics or laymen, to continue in their ordinary vocations. His followers developed a lofty spirituality. They laid great stress on teaching, founding schools all over the Netherlands, and later in Germany, where a general education was offered, unsurpassed in quality and without fees. To supply books for their schools, many of their members engaged in copying MSS, and later in printing. On the death of Groote (1384), the leadership of the Brethren was assumed by *Florentius Radewijns. Before long a group of these disciples adopted a rule and organized themselves as *Augustinian Canons. Among the 'Brethren' were I. *Busch, *Thomas à Kempis, Pope *Hadrian VI, and Gabriel *Biel. *Nicholas of Cusa and Rudolph Agricola (1443–85) also studied in their schools, and thus the movement exercised considerable influence on the New Learning. By the end of the 17th cent. the rise of modern universities and diocesan seminaries had led to their extinction. See also DEVOTIO MODERNA and WINDESHEIM.

W. J. Alberts (ed.), Consuetudines Fratrum Vitae Communis (Groningen, 1959). E. Barnikol, Studien zur Geschichte der Brüder vom gemeinsamen Leben (1917). A. Hyma, The Christian Renaissance: A History of the 'Devotio Moderna' (New York, 1925), with bibl. pp. 477–94; 2nd edn., with additional material (Hamden, Conn., 1965); id., Brethren of the Common Life (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1950). R. R. Post, The Modern Devotion: Confrontation with Reformation and Humanism (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 3; Leiden, 1968). C. van der Wansem, SCJ, Het ontstaan en de geschiedenis der Broederschap van het Gemene Leven tot 1400 (Universiteit te Leuven, Publicaties op het Gebied der Geschiedenis en der Philologie, 4e Reeks, 12; 1958). E. F. Jacob, Essays in the Conciliar Epoch (Manchester, 1943), pp. 121–38 ('The Brethren of the Common Life'); K. Elm, 'Die Bruderschaft von gemeinsamen Leben', Ons Geestelijk Erf, 59 (1985), pp. 470–96. Pourrat, 2, pp. 381–9. W. Leesch and others (eds.), Monasticon Fratrum Vitae Communis (Archives et Bibliothèques de Belgique, Numéro spécial, 18; 2 vols., Brussels, 1977–9). W. Lourdaux in DHGE 18 (1977), cols. 1438–54, s.v. 'Frères de la vie commune'; R. Stupperich in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 220–5, s.v. 'Brüder vom gemeinsamen Leben', with bibl.

Brethren of the Free Spirit. Individuals who adhered to heretical views of an *antinomian nature, first identified by St *Albertus Magnus at Ries, near Augsburg, in the 1270s. They apparently believed that they could be entirely liberated from conventional moral norms through attaining perfect union with God, and were accused in particular of sexual profligacy. The heresy, which tended towards a form of speculative pantheism, was later associated with certain *Beguines and was described in two decrees of the Council of *Vienne (1311–2; 16: 'Cum de quibusdam mulieribus', and 28: 'Ad nostrum'). See also PORETTE, MARGARET.

R. Guarnieri, 'Il Movimento del Libero Spirito', Archivio Italiano per la Storia della Pietà, 4 (1965), pp. 351–708. G. Leff, Heresy in the Later Middle Ages, 1 (Manchester and New York, 1967), pp. 308–407. N. Cohn, The Pursuit of the Millennium (rev. edn., 1970), pp. 148–86. R. E. Lerner, The Heresy of the Free Spirit in the Later Middle Ages (1972). R. Guarnieri in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 1241–68, s.v. 'Frères du Libre Esprit', with extensive bibl.

brethren of the Lord. References to 'the Lord's brethren', who include *James, Joseph, Simon, and *Jude, occur at Mk. 6: 3, etc., Jn. 7: 3, Acts 1: 14, 1 Cor. 9: 5. They may have been (1) sons of the Virgin *Mary and *Joseph, born after Christ. This is the most natural inference from the NT, and was accepted by *Tertullian and probably by *Hegesippus. But when put forward by *Helvidius, c.382, it was rejected by St *Jerome, who, apparently voicing the general opinion of the Church, maintained the perpetual virginity of the Virgin Mary. Hence St Jerome held that (2) the Lord's 'brethren' were the sons of *Mary, 'the mother of James and Joses' (Mk. 15: 40), whom he identified with the wife of Clopas and sister of the Virgin Mary (Jn. 19: 25, RV). They may have been, however, (3) sons of Joseph by a former marriage (the view of St *Epiphanius and the E. Church), or (4), acc. to a modern suggestion, sons of Mary, 'mother of James and Joses' (not here identified with the Virgin Mary's sister), and Clopas, who acc. to Hegesippus was the brother of Joseph. See MARYS IN THE NT (3) and (4), and CLEOPAS.

J. B. *Lightfoot, St Paul's Epistle to the Galatians (1865), pp. 241–74, with refs. to earlier lit.; T. *Zahn, 'Brüder und Vettern Jesu', Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons und der altkirchlichen Literatur, 6 (1900), 2, pp. 225–364. R. [J.] Bauckham, Jude and the Relatives of Jesus in the Early Church (Edinburgh, 1990), pp. 1–133. F. V. Filson in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, 1 (1962), pp. 470–2, s.v. 'Brothers of the Lord'.

Bretschneider, Karl Gottlieb (1776–1848), German theologian. In 1816 he became *General Superintendent at Gotha. Of his many writings, the only one of permanent interest is his Probabilia (1820), in which he anticipated later NT criticism by questioning the historicity of the fourth Gospel on the grounds of its divergence from the other three. In 1834 he founded the Corpus Reformatorum, a series of reprints of the works of the 16th-cent. Reformers, for which he himself edited the works of P. *Melanchthon.

Autobiography posthumously ed. Horst Bretscheider (Gotha, 1851); id. (ed.), Anhang zu Karl Gottlieb Bretschneider's Selbstbiographie (1852). E. Stöve in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 186 f., s.v.

Brett, Thomas (1667–1744), *Nonjuror. He was educated at Queens' and Corpus Christi Colleges, Cambridge, and ordained deacon in 1690. After holding several livings he was appointed Rector of Ruckinge in 1705. Having so far had no scruples in taking the oath, he resolved, after H. *Sacheverell's trial, never to do so again. On the accession of George I (1714) he consequently resigned his living (1715) and was received as a Nonjuror by G. *Hickes, after whose death he was consecrated bishop in 1716. From 1716 to 1725 he took part in the abortive negotiations for reunion of his party with the Greek Church. He was involved in several controversies, esp. in that on the *Usages which broke out in 1715 among the Nonjurors themselves. As an eminent liturgical scholar with a particular interest in the E. liturgies, he insisted on the explicit oblation of the Eucharistic elements to the Father and on the *Epiclesis of the Holy Spirit, but reckoned the other two controversial points (prayer for the dead and the mixed chalice) as of minor importance. His principal work is his Dissertation on the Ancient Liturgies (1720), which is still valuable, though it regards the so-called *Clementine Liturgy (i.e. *Apostolic Constitutions VIII) as authentic. Among his other works are The Divine Right of Episcopacy (1718), Discourses concerning the Ever Blessed Trinity (1720), a Life of J. *Johnson (posthumously pub., 1748), and answers to J. *Bingham's History of Lay Baptism (1712) and to B. *Hoadly's Plain Account of the Sacrament (1735).

His papers, including extensive correspondence, which are preserved in the *Bodleian Library, were widely used in H. Broxap, The Later Non-Jurors (Cambridge, 1924). W. J. Grisbrooke, Anglican Liturgies of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (Alcuin Club Collections, 40; 1958), pp. 71–112 passim. L. Stephen in DNB 6 (1886), pp. 285 f., s.v.

Breviary. The liturgical book containing the Psalms, hymns, lessons, prayers, etc., to be recited in the Divine *Office of the RC Church. The various parts were originally distributed in different books, such as the *Psaltery, *Lectionary, etc., but in the 11th cent., particularly with the rise of small communities, the need was felt for an instrument with which to collate the texts necessary for the day's Offices. To meet this need the Ordo was developed, indicating for each day and Office the texts to be sung, with their opening words; it came to be called Breviarium sive ordo officiorum per totam anni decursionem ('Short Conspectus or Order for the Offices of the Whole Year'); hence prob. the term 'breviary'. It remained only for the texts themselves to be added to produce the Office book or breviary as it was henceforth called. This was done in the 12th cent. for the Papal chapel, and it was this breviary that was adopted by the *Franciscans and became widely known throughout Europe. See also OFFICE, DIVINE.

For bibl. see OFFICE, DIVINE.

Bride, St. See BRIGIT, ST.

Bridges, Robert Seymour (1844–1930), Poet Laureate. Educated at Eton and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he practised for some years as a physician. Meanwhile he had been writing poetry, and in 1882 abandoned medicine to devote himself to literary interests and music. For most of the rest of his life he lived at Yattendon, Berks (1882–1904), and on Boar's Hill, Oxford (1907–30). In 1913 he became Poet Laureate. Already as a boy at Eton, he had been attracted to Catholic ideals through the influence of V. S. S. Coles (later Principal of Pusey House, Oxford) and D. M. Dolben. In mature life he tended to reject all rigid dogmatic belief, but retained strong Christian sympathies. His most considerable work, The Testament of Beauty (1929), was a philosophical poem, in 'loose Alexandrine' metre, which sought to reconcile scientific knowledge with Christian faith. He was also interested in Church music, and did much to raise the standard of hymnody in the English parish churches; in the Yattendon Hymnal (1895–9), which embodied his ideals, he revived many fine 16th- and 17th-cent. melodies. His hymn-book was extensively drawn on in the English Hymnal* (1906) and the Oxford Hymn Book (1908). He was also one of the founders of the 'Society for Pure English'. His other publications include The Spirit of Man (1915), an anthology; and the first collected edition (1918) of the Poems of his friend G. M. *Hopkins.

Poetical Works pub., in 6 vols., London, 1896–1905; also, omitting the eight dramas, but with other new material, ibid., 1912; enlarged edn., 1936; and incl. Testament of Beauty, 1953. Selected Letters, ed. D. E. Stanford (2 vols., Newark, Del., London, and Toronto [1983–4]). E. Thompson, Robert Bridges, 1844–1930 (1944); A. Guérard, Jun., Robert Bridges: A Study of Traditionalism in Poetry (Cambridge, Mass., 1942); J.-G. Ritz, Robert Bridges and Gerard Hopkins 1863–1889: A Literary Friendship (1960); D. E. Stanford, In the Classic Mode: The Achievement of Robert Bridges (Newark, Del., and London [1978]); C. Phillips, Robert Bridges: A Biography (Oxford, 1992). N. C. Smith in DNB, 1922–1930 (1937), pp. 115–19. G. L. McKay, A Bibliography of Robert Bridges (New York and London, 1933); W. White in NCBEL 3 (1969), cols. 593–7.

Bridget (Birgitta) of Sweden, St (*c.*1303–73), founder of the *Bridgettine Order. The daughter of a wealthy landowner in Sweden, she is reputed to have lived a pious life and had visions as a child. She married at 13, and had eight children. In 1341 she and her husband Ulf went on a pilgrimage to *Compostela; within a year of their return her husband had died in the *Cistercian monastery of Alvastra. Shortly afterwards, she appears to have begun having a series of revelations which led her to urge the Pope's return to Rome from *Avignon, and to challenge what she saw as decay in the spiritual life of the Church. In the course of these experiences, she received detailed instructions about the foundation of a new religious order. She was helped in the foundation by the Cistercians with whom she was associated and by one of her daughters, St *Catherine of Sweden, who became the first abbess. In 1349 she went to Rome, where, except for occasional pilgrimages, she lived for the rest of her life, campaigning for the reform of the Church and the foundation of her order. Her revelations and the devotions they inspired were highly esteemed in the later Middle Ages; they are outstanding examples of the affective spirituality of the time. She was canonized in 1391. Feast day 23 July (formerly 8 Oct.).

Her 'Revelations' were pub. at Lübeck, 1492. A better and more accessible edn. is that of C. Durante (2 vols., Rome, 1628). Modern crit. edn. of the last book, Reuelaciones Extrauagantes, by L. Hollman (Samlingar utgivna av Svenska Fornskriftsållskapet, 2nd ser., Latinska Skrifter, 5; Uppsala, 1956); other books ed. B. Bergh and others (ibid. 7; 1967 ff. [later parts pub. Stockholm]); Opera Minora, ed. S. Eklund (ibid. 8; 3 vols., 1972–91). 14th-cent. Swedish tr., with other material, ed. by G. E. Klemming, Heliga Birgittas Uppenbarelser (5 vols. bound in 4, Samlingar utgifna af Svenska Fornskriftsällskapet, 1857–84); 15th-cent. Eng. selection of extracts ed. P. Cummings (EETS 178; 1929). Modern Eng. tr. of the Life written for her canonization procedure and selections from her 'Revelations' by A. R. Kezel, ed. M. T. Harris (Classics of Western Spirituality; Mahwah, NJ, and New York, 1990).

Life by Skänning and Peter of Alvastra, her confessors, ed. C. Annerstedt, Scriptores Rerum Suecicarum Medii Aevi, 3, pt. 2 (Uppsala, 1871), pp. 185–206. Life by Birger, Abp. of Uppsala, ed. I. Collijn (Samlingar utgivna av Svenska Fornskriftsällskapet, 2nd ser., Latinska Skrifter, 4; 1946). Id. (ed.), Acta et Processus Canonizationis Beate Birgitte (ibid. 1; Uppsala, 1924–31). Best modern Life is that of a Bridgettine, H. Redpath, God's Ambassadress—St Bridget of Sweden (Milwaukee, 1947). B. Klockars, Birgitta och hennes värld (Kungl. Vitterhets Historie och Antikvitets Akademiens Handlingar, Historiska Serien, 16; 1971, with summary in Eng.), and other works of this author. Popular Life by A. Andersson (tr. from Swedish, London, 1980). F. Vernet in Dict. Sp. 1 (1937), cols. 1943–58, s.v. 'Brigitte de Suède'; I. Cecchetti, M. C. Celletti, and M. V. Brandi in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 3 (Rome, 1956), pp. 439–533, s.v. 'Brigida di Svezia'.

Bridgettine Order (Ordo Sanctissimi Salvatoris), also known as the 'Brigittine Order'. It was founded by St *Bridget of Sweden, following detailed revelations which she was held to have received. Land for the mother house at Vadstena was granted in 1346 and the order approved in a bull of 1370. Its members were organized in double monasteries, originally under the direction of an abbess, with 12 priests, 4 deacons, and 8 lay brothers acting as chaplains and assistants to 60 nuns. Although strictly segregated and with different liturgical obligations, they shared a common church, the nuns' choir consisting of a raised gallery. The male branch of the order died out in 1842; the female religious still maintain a few houses. Syon Abbey, founded at Isleworth in Middlesex in 1415, was among the first religious houses in England to employ the printing press to spread its teaching; the foundation still exists in Devon. A number of attempts have been made to adapt the Bridgettine Rule, notably by the post-Reformation Fratres Novissimi Brigittini in Belgium and the Bridgettines of the Recollection, founded in Spain in the 17th cent.

Edns. of St Bridget's Revelations are listed s.v. Crit. edn. of her Rule for the order ed. S. Eklund among her Opera Minora, 1 (Samlingar utgivna av Svenska Fornskriftsällskapet, 2nd ser., Latinska Skrifter, 8, 1; Lund, 1975). C. Gejrot (ed.), Diarium Vadstenense: The Memorial Book of Vadstena Abbey (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, Studia Latina Stockholmiensia, 33; 1988). B. Williamson, The Bridgettine Order: Its foundress, history and spirit (1922; brief). R. Ellis, Viderunt eum filie Syon: The Spirituality of the English house of a medieval contemplative order from its beginnings to the present day (Analecta Cartusiana, 68. 2; Salzburg, 1984). P. Debongnie, CSSR, in DHGE 10 (1938), cols. 728–31, s.v. 'Brigittins'; T. Nyberg in DIP 1 (1974), cols. 1578–93, s.v. 'Brigidini'.

Bridgewater Treatises. Eight treatises, published between 1833 and 1840, upon various aspects of 'the power, wisdom, and goodness of God, as manifested in the Creation'. They were produced under the will of F. H. *Egerton, 8th Earl of Bridgewater (1756–1829), who left a sum of £8,000 to the President of the Royal Society, to be paid to one or more authors selected by him to write and publish treatises on this subject. The eight authors chosen were: T. *Chalmers, J. Kidd, W. Whewell, Sir C. Bell, P. M. Roget, W. *Buckland, W. Kirby, W. Prout. The 'Ninth Bridgewater Treatise' (1837) by C. Babbage does not properly belong to the series.

D. W. Grundy, 'The Bridgewater Treatises and their authors', History, NS 31 (1946), pp. 140–52; J. M. Robson, 'The Fiat and Finger of God: The Bridgewater Treatises', in R. J. Helmstadter and B. Lightman (eds.), Victorian Faith in Crisis (1990), pp. 71–125.

briefs, Church. Warrants (usually royal, but sometimes issued by archbishops or bishops) for collections for specific charitable purposes. In England after the Reformation Church briefs were the successors to Papal briefs (see BULL); they were read in church during the Communion service after the Creed. They authorized collections (usually for one year) in places of worship or from house to house. They were commonly issued in favour of ecclesiastical buildings damaged by fire or storm, but secular buildings and individual sufferers might also be beneficiaries, as might persecuted groups overseas, e.g. the exiled ministers of the Palatinate (1628), the *Waldenses (1655), and Hungarian slaves (1671). The earliest printed English brief dates from 1520 and the printed broadsheet format became the norm from the 1580s. Briefs were issued with particular frequency from the Commonwealth onwards, and some 2,000 are recorded from 1624 until the suppression of the process in 1828.

W. A. Bewes, Church Briefs or royal warrants for collections for charitable objects (1896).

Briggs, Charles Augustus (1841–1913), OT scholar. After graduating at *Union Theological Seminary, New York, he studied in Berlin, was for some years a Presbyterian pastor, and in 1874 became Professor of Hebrew at Union Seminary. As editor (1880–90) of the Presbyterian Review he became known as a vigorous exponent of *Higher Criticism of the OT on the lines of W. R. *Smith in Scotland. His inaugural address as Professor of Biblical Theology in 1891 led to his trial for heresy; and though acquitted by the New York presbytery, he was suspended by the General Assembly in 1893 from clerical functions. After taking orders in the Protestant *Episcopal Church in 1899, he devoted much energy to advocating Christian reunion. He was one of the editors both of the International Critical Commentaries and of the standard Hebrew Lexicon.

Essays in Modern Theology and Related Subjects gathered and published as a Testimonial to Charles Augustus Briggs ... on the Completion of his Seventieth Year January 18, 1911 (New York, 1911), with bibl. of his chief works (to 1909) by C. R. Gillett, pp. 327–47. His lectures on the History of the Study of Theology (delivered at the Union Theological Seminary, New York, 1912–13) were posthumously pub. by his daughter, E. G. Briggs (2 vols., London, 1916). Obituary notices by H. P. Smith in American Journal of Theology, 17 (1913), pp. 497–508, and in Expository Times, 25 (1913–14), pp. 294–8. A. C. McGiffert in Dict. Amer. Biog. 3 (1929), pp. 40 f., s.v., with further bibl.

Bright, William (1824–1901), Church historian. He was Fellow of University College, Oxford, from 1847 to 1868, Tutor of Trinity College, Glenalmond, from 1851 to 1858, and (in succession to H. L. *Mansel) Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, from 1868 until his death. He was a devoted student of the Fathers and a keen High Churchman. He wrote several well-known hymns, among them, 'And now, O Father, mindful of the love'. He was also a forceful and vivid lecturer. His historical writings include A History of the Church, ... A.D. 313 ... A.D. 451 (1860), Early English Church History (1878), and The Age of the Fathers (2 vols., ed. W. Lock, 1903).

Selected Letters ... with a Memoir, ed. B. J. Kidd (1903). A. Clark in DNB, 1901–1911, 1, pp. 224 f.

Brightman, Frank Edward (1856–1932), liturgist. From 1884 to 1903 he was a librarian of Pusey House, Oxford, and from 1902 until his death a Fellow of Magdalen. A meticulously exact scholar, he issued in 1896 Liturgies Eastern and Western, vol. 1, 'Eastern', a new edition of the sections on the E. Church in C. E. Hammond's book (1878) on the subject. Its learned notes were the fruit of extended researches and several journeys to monasteries in the East. (Vol. 2 was never published.) His English Rite (1915) is a laborious and valuable edition of the different versions of the BCP, arranged in parallel columns. From 1904 to 1932 he was joint-editor of the Journal of Theological Studies, where his wide knowledge was constantly at the disposal of the contributors. Brightman was a strong High Churchman, whose counsel was much sought after by the leaders of the C of E.

Obituary by H. N. Bate in Proceedings of the British Academy, 19 (1933), pp. 345–50. S. L. Ollard in DNB, 1931–1940, p. 103.

Brigit, St (perhaps 5th–6th cent.), 'Bride'. Though she is regarded with great veneration in *Ireland, the traditions about her are conflicting and nothing can be said with certainty. It is even possible that she never lived, and represents the pagan goddess Brig euhemerized. Genealogical tradition has her born in the dynastic group Fothairt Laigin, and in a poem on this people written *c.*600 she is already called 'a second Mary, mother of the great Lord'. Later tradition corrupted the name to Fochart (now Faughard, nr. Dundalk), where she is often said to have been born. But all her connections are with Leinster, and esp. Cell Dara (now Kildare), where she was honoured as founder and patron. Kildare is associated with the nearby Iron Age temple site of Dún Ailinne (Knockaulin). There are two early Latin Lives and one in Old Irish (Bethu Brigte): the second Latin Life, written by Cogitosus (*c.*680), is closely associated with the ambitions of Kildare to achieve metropolitan status; the first Latin Life and the Old Irish Life give a more generalized picture of the national saint who after St *Patrick is the second patron saint of Ireland. Her feast day, 1 Feb., coincides with the pagan festival of Imbelc.

Fothairt poem in M. A. O'Brien, (ed.), Corpus Genealogicarum Hiberniae, 1 (Dublin, 1962), pp. 80–1; the best edn. of the first Latin Life is by J. Colgan, OFM, Trias Thaumaturga (Louvain, 1647), pp. 527–45; Cogitosus' Life in AASS, Feb. 1 (1658), pp. 135–41; Bethu Brigte, ed., with Eng. tr., by D. Ó hAodha (Dublin, 1978). Middle-Irish Life (11th cent.), ed. W. Stokes, Three Middle-Irish Homilies (privately pr., Calcutta, 1877), pp. 50–87, and from the Book of *Lismore by id. (Anecdota Oxoniensia, Mediaeval and Modern Series, 5; Oxford, 1890), pp. 34–53, with Eng. tr., pp. 182–200. R. Sharpe, 'Vitae S. Brigitae: the oldest texts', Peritia, 1 (1982), pp. 81–106; K. McCone, 'Brigit in the seventh century: a saint with three lives?', ibid., pp. 107–45. See also J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, 1 (Records of Civilization; New York, 1929), pp. 356–63.

Brigittine Order. See BRIDGETTINE ORDER.

British and Foreign Bible Society. One of the largest Bible Societies. It was founded in London in 1804 for the printing and distribution of the Bible at home and abroad, on account of representations made to the *Religious Tract Society by Thomas Charles, a *Calvinist Methodist minister of Bala. A strictly interdenominational body, by its constitution its committee is composed of 36 laymen (including 6 foreign members), the English members consisting of 15 Anglicans and 15 members of other denominations. It resisted both Bp. Herbert Marsh's wish to include the circulation of the BCP in its work, and also the Baptist bias which William *Carey sought to introduce. It has published translations of the Bible (excluding the *Apocrypha) in very many languages.

J. Owen, The History of the Origin and First Ten Years of the British and Foreign Bible Society (3 vols., 1816–20); W. Canton, A History of the British and Foreign Bible Society (5 vols., 1904–10); J. M. Roe, A History of the British and Foreign Bible Society 1905–1954 (1965). G. Browne, The History of the British and Foreign Bible Society, from its Institution in 1804 to its Jubilee in 1854 (2 vols., 1859). L. Howsam, Cheap Bibles: Nineteenth-Century Publishing and the British and Foreign Bible Society (Cambridge, 1991). T. H. Darlow and H. F. Moule, Historical Catalogue of the Printed Editions of Holy Scripture in the Library of the British and Foreign Bible Society (2 vols., bound in 4, 1903–11; new edn. of vol. 1, on English Bibles, by A. S. Herbert, 1968).

British Council of Churches. An organization created in 1942 to further Christian action and promote the cause of unity among the Churches of Great Britain and Ireland. On the foundation of the *World Council of Churches in 1948 it became an 'Associated Council'. Its 'Articles of Amalgamation' (23 Sept. 1943) provided for 112 members, with official representatives of the C of E, the Church of *Scotland, the *Free Churches, the Churches of *Ireland and *Wales, the *Salvation Army, the Society of *Friends, and the *Unitarian and Free Christian Churches. From 1968 the Friends and Unitarians were 'Associate Members'. Various other Churches joined the Council, including the Greek *Orthodox Church in Great Britain, and from 1965 the RC Church sent observers to its meetings. In 1985 the Council began consultation with the RC Church in England, Scotland, and Wales, and with the black-led *Pentecostal and *Holiness Churches (the 'Not Strangers but Pilgrims' Inter-Church Process), and in 1990 the Council was succeeded by the *Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland, which co-ordinates the work of the new national ecumenical bodies—Churches together in England, ACTS (Action of Churches Together in Scotland), and CYTUN (Churches Together in Wales)—and the Irish ecumenical bodies.

'Christian Aid' was originally an organ of the British Council of Churches and, along with the 'Catholic Fund for Overseas Development' (CAFOD) and the 'Scottish Catholic International Aid Fund', is an official agency of the Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland.

Articles of Amalgamation in G. K. A. *Bell, Documents on Christian Unity, 3rd ser., 1930–48 (1948), no. 187. E. A. Payne, Thirty Years of the British Council of Churches 1942–1972 [1972], with Articles of Amalgamation, pp. 37–9. C. Davey and A. Dawkins, The Story of the BCC [1990].

British Critic, The. A mainly theological review, formed by the amalgamation of three existing periodicals (its full title was originally: 'British Critic, Quarterly Theological Review and Ecclesiastical Record'), which ran from 1827 to 1843. It supported the cause of the *Tractarian theologians, most of whom contributed articles to it. In its later years it came increasingly under the influence of those in the Tractarian Movement most in sympathy with Rome.

British Israel theory. The theory that the British people is ultimately descended from the ten Israelite tribes which were taken captive into Assyria *c.*721 BC, and thereafter wholly disappeared from Hebrew history. It was often found in conjunction with pronounced imperialist views; and though the numbers and influence of those who defend it are small, they often hold it with a persistence and enthusiasm which refuse to give a dispassionate consideration to objections urged against it. The theory meets with no support from serious ethnologists or archaeologists.

For a criticism, see H. L. Goudge, The British Israel Theory (1922).

Britten, Edward Benjamin (1913–76), English composer. Born at Lowestoft, Suffolk, he was encouraged by his musical mother and began writing music at an early age. After the 1927 Norwich Festival he met Frank Bridge (1879–1941); he became his pupil and rapidly espoused his pacifism. From 1930 to 1933 he studied at the rather conservative Royal College of Music in London, but in the next few years earned a somewhat unwelcome reputation as a musician committed to the Left. At this time he wrote music for documentary films, co-operating in this and other enterprises with the poet W. H. Auden (1907–73). In 1934 he met Peter Pears, the tenor (1910–86), who became his lifelong friend and collaborator. Britten went to N. America in 1939, but nostalgia for East Anglia led to his return in 1942. In 1947 he settled at Aldeburgh, Suffolk, and the next year established the famous festival for which many of his works were written. His stature as a composer, accompanist, and conductor was recognized by a series of honours, culminating in a Life Peerage in 1976.

He won early acclaim in England and on the Continent with his Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge (1937). Though a brilliant imitator, Britten developed an original style, which has never inspired a 'school'. His greatest immediate successes were the opera Peter Grimes (1945) and the War Requiem written for the celebrations in connection with the dedication of *Coventry Cathedral (1962). In the Requiem, poems of Wilfred Owen, who died in the 1914–18 War, are juxtaposed with the traditional Latin text. A Ceremony of Carols for trebles and harp (1942) has remained popular. Apart from settings for the Te Deum* and Jubilate*, the attractive Missa Brevis for the trebles of *Westminster Cathedral (1959), and the *cantata Rejoice in the Lamb (1943), he wrote little music specifically for use in Church services. Nevertheless, he was preoccupied with cruelty, war, compassion, and the plight of the innocent 'outsider'; such titles as Abraham and Isaac, The Burning Fiery Furnace, and The Prodigal Son, given to non-liturgical works described as 'Canticles' or 'Church Parables', confirm his penchant for biblical and prophetic themes, as does that of the children's opera Noye's Fludde (1957).

P. [A.] Evans, The Music of Benjamin Britten (1979); [G.] M. [S.] Kennedy, Britten (Master Musicians Series, 1981); E. W. White, Benjamin Britten: His Life and Operas (2nd edn., 1983). A. Whittall, The Music of Britten and Tippett (Cambridge, 1982). C. Palmer (ed.), The Britten Companion (1984). J. Evans and others, A Britten Source Book (Aldeburgh, 1987). P. [A.] Evans in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 3 (1980), pp. 293–308, s.v.

broadcasting, religious. The use of modern electronic modes of communication to transmit radio programmes dealing with religion goes back before the beginnings of regular broadcasting during the 1920s. In the late 19th cent. pioneering metropolitan telephone companies offered subscribers the opportunity of listening to religious services at a distance, and in 1912 the Canadian inventor, R. E. Fessenden, the first man successfully to broadcast radio signals in words, not morse, transmitted a Christmas eve service to ships off the E. coast of America. It included passages from St *Luke's Gospel and a violin solo of 'Holy Night' played by Fessenden himself. In Britain, in the summer of 1922, shortly before the establishment of the British Broadcasting Company, a congregation in Peckham heard the voice of their minister broadcasting from the Burndept Aerial Works in Blackheath. The transmission had a radius of *c.*100 miles.

Recognition of the religious potential of radio technology—its dangers as well as its opportunities—was strengthened when regular broadcasting began on both sides of the Atlantic. While the technology was the same, the development of Christian broadcasting in different countries was shaped by differences both of religious outlook and of institutional patterns of broadcasting. In particular, context, control, and content were markedly different in the USA and in Europe, although there were differences in Europe itself based on post-Reformation divergences in religious allegiance and history.

In the USA the first licensed radio station, KDKA, Pittsburgh, broadcast a religious service in Jan. 1921, less than two months after the station went on the air, and three years later the first radio station launched under religious auspices, KFUO ('keep forward, upward, onward') began broadcasting from the *Lutheran Concordia Seminary, St Louis. The number of such stations grew rapidly: of *c.*600 licensed radio stations in 1926, one in ten was licensed to a religious organization. Policy towards their licensing became less permissive after the setting up of the Federal Radio Commission in 1927, and the number of Church-owned stations fell sharply. When the main radio networks were established the religious broadcasts they transmitted were 'mainstream' Christian, and evangelical Protestant denominations, critical of 'liberal' religion and anxious to win converts, bought radio time from commercial stations. In the process they learned how to produce programmes that would appeal to large audiences and attract funds, making full use of radio personalities.

In Europe, where commercial stations were few in number, religious proselytizing by radio was either forbidden or frowned upon. None the less, religious broadcasting developed its own momentum. The Netherlands acknowledged 'mainstream' religious differences by creating a balanced system of public broadcasting, with four radio services based on religion: two Protestant and two RC. In Britain Christianity was afforded a special place in broadcasting, and the British Broadcasting Company, which began to operate in 1922, set up a 'Sunday Committee' in May 1923. The first religious service was broadcast from St Martin-in-the-Fields in London in Jan. 1924. The establishment of a Central Religious Advisory Committee was significant in that it included not only Anglicans and Nonconformists but also RCs, and it supervised religious broadcasting not only on Sunday but also on weekdays. In Jan. 1929 a daily service was introduced, and still survives. When the BBC became a public corporation in 1927 its charter did not mention religion, but for John Reith, General Manager of the old company and Director-General of the new corporation, religion was fundamental. Christianity, he insisted, was 'the stated and official religion of this country'.

In Italy the RC Church was strong enough to ensure that there was no Protestant religious broadcasting on state radio before 1944. In 1931 the great pioneer of radio, Guglielmo Marconi, presented the Vatican with a short-wave transmitter and introduced Pope *Pius XI delivering a greeting to the world. Protestant 'televangelism' was to deliver its own message to the world when television had supplanted radio as the major electronic medium, although radio remained a powerful force in religious broadcasting through organizations such as Trans World Radio which began as The Voice of Tangier in 1954.

Radio personalities who broadcast religious messages were sometimes drawn into political as well as religious controversy, as was Fr. Charles Coughlin, broadcasting during the 1930s from the Shrine of the Little Flower in Royal Oak, Michigan. Some broke with old traditions; others established new traditions that influenced future television broadcasters. Jerry Falwell, who became active in political as well as religious controversy during the 1970s, grew up listening to Charles Fuller's 'Old Fashioned Revival Hour' which reached an audience of over 10 million in 1937. Billy *Graham was similarly impressed. In 1950 the first telecast of Graham's 'Hour of Decision' was broadcast on a major network. The best-known early RC religious broadcaster was Mgr. Fulton J. Sheen, whose 'Life is Worth Living' was sponsored by Texaco. It was paid evangelistic broadcasting, however, that came to dominate what was increasingly thought of as a market, international as well as American.

The biggest claim for the application of new and still developing television technology was made by Ben Armstrong, Executive Director of National Religious Broadcasters, in his book, The Electric Church (1979), which ended with a quotation from Rev. 14: 6: 'And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people'. The angel, he explained, could be a satellite beaming programmes to all parts of the world. Such eschatological language was bound to generate controversy, not least in Church circles. How could an 'audience' be a 'congregation'? There was also a case for arguing, as Malcolm Muggeridge did in Britain, that the effect of the media at all levels was 'to draw away from reality, which means away from Christ'. The core of such arguments generated less interest, however, than subsequent scandals affecting the reputation of some of the best-known televangelists, among them 'Jim' Bakker and Jimmy Swaggart. There has also been political controversy surrounding the role of Falwell in the emergence of the New Christian Right and other similar moral and political issues.

The advent of television in Europe opened up opportunities for religious broadcasting in a number of countries, including France, where the world's first televised RC mass was broadcast on Christmas Eve 1948 and a new 90-minute religious magazine programme, 'Le Jour du Seigneur', was launched ten months later. In West Germany a long-running bi-confessional studio sermon programme, 'Wort zum Sonntag' (the Word for Sunday), was first transmitted in prime time on Saturday evenings in 1954.

Religious broadcasting by the BBC continued to be 'mainstream' on television as on radio. Although it took time to accept its potential, the Central Religious Advisory Committee gave the BBC 'a completely free hand' in 1948 'in experimenting with different types of television acts of worship'. Progress in this direction remained slow until 1952, and it was not until 1954 that 'people's religious programmes' were introduced on television. With the advent of competition from commercial companies in 1955 the number of experiments increased. 'Stars on Sunday', introduced in 1969, in what was still a closed period reserved on Sunday evenings for religious broadcasting, was the first religious programme to achieve wide popularity, at its peak attracting an audience of 15 million. It also attracted criticism from those who questioned whether it could be defined as religious broadcasting at all.

The BBC made significant changes during the 1970s after the closed period was reduced in length. Increasing emphasis was placed on religious broadcasting as a forum, and in 1977 the Central Religious Advisory Committee, which after 1955 served both the BBC and the Independent Broadcasting Authority, introduced new guidelines, one of which stated that religious broadcasting should 'seek to reflect the worship, thought and action of the principal religious traditions represented in Britain, recognizing that those traditions are mainly, though not exclusively, Christian'. The Committee was also anxious to meet 'the religious interests, concerns and needs of those outside the churches'. It was the old 'mainstream' programmes, however, which attracted the largest audiences. Of these 'Songs of Praise' was the most important.

Since the 1970s technological changes have had as large an influence on patterns of religious broadcasting as Christian purposes. The development of satellite and cable systems and the challenges to public service broadcasting have influenced both the production and the distribution of religious programmes. So too has the development of video. In Europe the role of independent religious broadcasters has become more important through such bodies as the Churches Television and Radio Centre in Bushey and the World Association for Christian Communications. Yet in the Monte Carlo schedule of Trans World Radio at the end of the 1980s over 38 per cent of the religious programmes transmitted originated in the USA.

The proportion of broadcasting time devoted to religious broadcasting remains higher in Islamic countries than it does in Christian countries, except on stations run directly by religious bodies. While this contrast encourages some Christians to reach out for inter-faith broadcasting, it encourages others to proclaim a unique gospel of salvation with the help of every technological device.

A. Briggs, The History of Broadcasting in the United Kingdom (4 vols., Oxford, 1961–79), passim (see index under Religion); K. M. Wolfe, The Churches and the British Broadcasting Corporation 1922–1956 (1984). B. Armstrong, The Electric Church (Nashville [1979]); W. F. Fore, Television and Religion: The Shaping of Faith, Values and Culture (Minneapolis, 1987); J. K. Hadden and A. Schupe, Televangelism: Power and Politics on God's Frontier (New York, 1988); Q. J. Schultze (ed.), American Evangelicals and the Mass Media (Grand Rapids, Mich., 1990). P. Elvy (ed.), Opportunities and Limitations in Religious Broadcasting (Edinburgh, 1991).

Broad Church. A popular term, coined on the analogy of *High Church and *Low Church, and current esp. in the latter half of the 19th cent., for those in the C of E who objected to positive definition in theology and sought to interpret the Anglican formularies in a broad and liberal sense. The expression appears to have been coined lightheartedly by A. H. Clough but gained wider currency through W. J. *Conybeare's analysis of Church parties in the 1853 Edinburgh Review. The existence of Broad Churchmen as a distinct party owed much to the influence of T. *Arnold and R. D. Hampden. Characteristic representatives of the school were most of the writers for Essays and Reviews (1860) and A. P. *Stanley. F. D.

*Maurice, though often categorized as a Broad Churchman, disliked the designation.

The biographies of its adherents, e.g. B. *Jowett, M. *Pattison, and those named above, and works on Essays and Reviews, provide much useful information. W. J. Conybeare, Essays Ecclesiastical and Social (1855), pp. 57–164 (an expansion of his Edinburgh Review article). C. R. Sanders, Coleridge and the Broad Church Movement (Durham, NC, 1942); D. Forbes, The Liberal Anglican Idea of History (Cambridge, 1952); D. G. Wigmore-Beddoes, Yesterday's Radicals: A Study of the Affinity between Unitarianism and Broad Church Anglicanism in the Nineteenth Century (1971).

broad stole. A broad band of material formerly worn *stole-wise by the deacon during part of *High Mass in certain penitential seasons. In origin it was not a stole at all, but represented a *folded chasuble, and thus went back to the days when the deacon as well as the celebrant wore a chasuble, and folded it thus to facilitate movement. Indeed, the rubrics of the Roman Missal continued to enjoin the use of a real folded chasuble, the broad stole being permitted for reasons of convenience. It was finally given up in 1960.

Braun, LG, p. 150.

Brompton Oratory. The house and church of the *Oratorians in London. The first Oratory, in King William Street, was founded in 1849, principally through the efforts of J. H. *Newman. In 1854 its members moved to Brompton Road. The present church in a somewhat florid Italian style was consecrated in 1884. It is one of the most important RC centres in London.

The London Oratory, 1849–1949 (1949); H. M. Gillett, The Story of the London Oratory Church (1946), incl. bibl.; M. Napier and A. Laing (eds.), The London Oratory Centenary 1884–1984 [1984]. See also Lives of FABER, F. W., cited s.v.

Brooke, Stopford Augustus (1832–1916), *Broad Church theologian and author. He was born at Glendowan, nr. Letterkenny, Co. Donegal, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. Having been ordained in 1857, he became curate of St Mary Abbots, Kensington, in 1859, where he made a name as a preacher. His Broad views brought him into conflict with the ecclesiastical authorities, and in 1863 he went to Berlin as chaplain to the Princess Royal and to the British embassy. The post, however, proved unsatisfactory; he returned to London in 1864, and in 1865 he published his widely read *Life and Letters of Frederick W. Robertson. The book reflects the outlook of the Broad Church party and was sharply attacked by the Evangelicals. In 1866 he was appointed minister of the *proprietary chapel of St James, York Street, where his preaching drew large congregations. In 1867 he became chaplain-in-ordinary to the Queen. In 1876 he published his Primer of English Literature, which became one of the most popular works on the subject. In the same year he moved to Bedford Chapel, Bloomsbury, where he continued to engage in pastoral work even after he had left the C of E in 1880. Among the publications of this period are a Life and Writings of Milton (1879), a History of Early English Literature (1892), and volumes of sermons. In 1895 he gave up Bedford Chapel owing to ill-health, but continued his literary activities and sometimes preached in the chapels of the *Unitarians.

L. P. Jacks, Life and Letters of Stopford Brooke (2 vols., 1917). G. V. Jacks in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 68 f.

Brooks, Phillips (1835–93), Bp. of Massachusetts. A native of Boston, he studied at Harvard and after a short period of teaching was ordained in the Protestant *Episcopal Church in 1859. From 1862 to 1869 he was Rector of Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, where he became much attracted to the liberal religious outlook of such English theologians as F. D. *Maurice and F. W. *Robertson. In 1869 he became Rector of Trinity Church, Boston, and in 1891 Bp. of Massachusetts. The most considerable American preacher of his generation, he owed his influence to his impressive personality, wide sympathies, and passionate sincerity. In 1877 he published his Yale Lectures on Preaching and from 1878 onwards several volumes of sermons. He was the author of the well-known carol 'O little town of Bethlehem' (1868). Commemorated in the Episcopal Church on 23 Jan.

His Life and Letters were published by A. V. G. Allen (2 vols., New York, 1901). An abridged edn. was issued in 1907. R. W. Albright, Focus on Infinity: A Life of Phillips Brooks (New York, 1961).

Brother Lawrence of the Resurrection (Nicolas Herman) (*c.*1614–91), *Carmelite lay brother and mystic. After being a soldier and later a hermit, he entered the Discalced Carmelite monastery at Paris in 1649, where he was given charge of the kitchen and led a life of almost constant recollection. Lawrence's writings were edited by the Abbé de Beaufort after his death in two volumes entitled Maximes spirituelles (1692) and Mœurs et entretiens du F. Laurent (1694). They recommend a very elevated form of prayer consisting in the simple practice of the presence of God, whether by the imagination or by the intellect. His maxims, which were highly appreciated by his contemporaries, were frequently quoted by *Fénelon in his Défenses.

Good modern edns. of selections of his prayers and letters under the title La Pratique de la présence de Dieu, with introd. and notes, by L. Van Den Bossche (Bruges, 1934), S. M. Bouchereaux (Paris, 1948), and C. De Meester, O. Carm. (Paris, 1991). Convenient Eng. trs. by D. Attwater (Orchard Books, Extra Series, 3; 1926, frequently repr.) and, with introd., by J. J. Delaney (Garden City, NY, 1977). S. P. Michel in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976), cols. 415–17, s.v. 'Laurent (11) de la Résurrection'.

Brothers Hospitallers. The Order, whose members are for the most part laymen, developed out of the work for the sick of St *John of God (d. 1550; q.v.). It began at Granada; then with the support of *Philip II hospitals were established in Madrid, Córdoba, and elsewhere in Spain; and in 1572 *Pius V formally approved the Order, which adopted the *Augustinian rule. In the next decade the Hospital of St John Calybita, established in 1584 in Rome, became the mother-house of the Order. In addition to the three usual vows a fourth is taken to serve for life the sick in hospitals. In more recent times the Order has flourished esp. in Italy, Spain, France, and Central Europe. At present they conduct over 190 hospitals. See also HOSPITALLERS.

J. Monval, Les Frères Hospitaliers de Saint-Jean de Dieu (1936; rev. edn., 1950); G. Russotto, FBF, L'ordine ospedaliero di S. Giovanni di Dio ('Fatebenefratelli') (1950); id., San Giovanni di

Dio e il suo Ordine ospeldaliero (2 vols., 1969); N. McMahon, OSJD, The Story of the Hospitallers of St John of God (Dublin, 1958). G. Antropius in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 470–72, s.v. 'Jean 76: Jean de Dieu, 2. Histoire de l'Ordre'; R. Botifoll, FBF, in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 982–8, s.v. 'Ospedalieri di San Giovanni di Dio'.

Brothers of the Common Life. See BRETHREN OF THE COMMON LIFE.

Brown, William Adams (1865–1943), *Presbyterian theologian. From 1898 to 1930 he was Roosevelt Professor of Systematic Theology at the *Union Theological Seminary, New York. Belonging to the more liberal wing of American Presbyterianism, he took a prominent part in the *Ecumenical Movement and in Christian social work. His writings include The Essence of Christianity (1902), Christian Theology in Outline (1906), Modern Theology and the Preaching of the Gospel (1914), The Church in America (1922), and Imperialistic Religion and the Religion of Democracy (1923).

S. McC. Cavert and H. P. van Dusen (eds.), The Church Through Half a Century: Essays in Honor of William Adams Brown (1936), with biographical material pp. 3–90.

Browne, Edward Harold (1811–91), Bp. of *Winchester. Educated at Eton and Emmanuel College, Cambridge, he was ordained deacon in 1836 and priest in 1837. After some parochial charges and the Vice-Principalship of St David's College, Lampeter (1843–9), he became Norrisian Professor of Divinity at Cambridge in 1854. In 1864 he became Bp. of *Ely, and in 1873, in succession to S. *Wilberforce, Bp. of Winchester. Had he been younger he would probably have succeeded A. C. *Tait at Canterbury in 1882. In 1890 he resigned his see. He was a moderating influence in the fierce conflicts aroused by Essays and Reviews (1860) and J. W. *Colenso's work on the *Pentateuch (1862–79). His theological beliefs were embodied in his Exposition of the Thirty-Nine Articles (2 vols., 1850–3), long a standard work among theological students. He also contributed an article on 'Inspiration' in Aids to Faith (1861; a reply to Essays and Reviews).

G. W. Kitchin, Edward Harold Browne, D.D. (1895).

Browne, George (d. *c.*1556), Abp. of *Dublin and promoter of the Reformation in *Ireland. An English *Augustinian friar, in 1532 he became Prior of the Augustinian house in London. Here he came into contact with T. *Cromwell. In 1534, as Provincial of his order, together with the *Dominican John Hilsey, he was charged by *Henry VIII with a general visitation of the friars which included administering the Oath of *Supremacy, and early in 1536 he was appointed Abp. of Dublin. After receiving a rebuke from the King in Sept. 1537, he endeavoured to bring about the union of the Irish Church with the C of E under the royal supremacy; he took part in the suppression of the Irish monasteries and included Protestant elements in his preaching. It seems, however, that he acted as an instrument of government policy rather than as a zealous doctrinal reformer. Under *Edward VI, the 1549 Prayer Book was used in his diocese and Browne became the leader of those members of the Irish clergy who accepted the new religion. In 1552 he was granted the primacy of all Ireland, though on *Mary's accession the following year, this was restored to the see of Armagh. Though not sympathizing with his views, Browne consecrated J. *Bale Bp. of Ossory in 1553. In 1554 Browne was deprived of his see, presumably because he was married. Later in the year he was dispensed and allowed to hold a benefice; he almost certainly became a prebendary of St Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin.

Historical Collections of the Church in Ireland during the Reigns of Kings Henry VIII, Edward VI and Queen Mary . . . set forth in the Life and Death of George Browne (1681). B. Bradshaw, SM, 'George Browne, First Reformation Archbishop of Dublin, 1536–1554', JEH 21 (1970), pp. 301–26. R. W. Dixon in DNB 7 (1886), pp. 43–5, s.v.; BRUO, 1501–40, p. 76.

Browne, Robert (*c.*1550–1633), *Puritan separatist. He was a relative of William Cecil, Lord Burghley, who more than once afforded him protection. Born at Tolethorpe, nr. Stamford, Lincs, Browne studied at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and while there came under the influence of T. *Cartwright, then advocating a *Presbyterian polity for the Church. After nine years of increasingly radical Puritan activity in East Anglia, in 1581 Browne established an independent congregation at *Norwich and was promptly imprisoned for his schismatic act. Having been freed by Cecil's intervention, he migrated with his Norwich flock to Middelburg in the Netherlands; and there issued A Book which sheweth the Life and Manner of all True Christians (Middelburg, 1582) and A Treatise of Reformation without Tarrying for Any (ibid., 1582). Before long Browne, who was of a quarrelsome nature, fell out with many of his congregation, and left for Scotland. Not finding the welcome he had looked for from the Scottish Church, he returned to England and published An Answer to Master Cartwright his Letter for joining with the English Churches (London, ?1585). He then made a formal submission to the C of E, and became Master of St Olave's School, *Southwark, in 1586. His changed standpoint may be reflected in a paper, A Reproof of Certain Schismatical Persons, a MS copy of which is preserved at *Lambeth Palace, but argument about its authorship is inconclusive; in any case, while at Southwark he seems to have ministered to separatist congregations. In 1591 he received episcopal ordination and became Rector of Thorpe Achurch, Northants. He held the benefice until his death, though there is an unexplained period (1616–26) when the entries in the parish register are in a different hand. He died in Northampton Gaol, whither he had been committed for assaulting a police constable. Browne exercised an important influence on the beginnings of *Congregationalism, so much so that its early members were often termed 'Brownists'.

The Reproof mentioned in the text, a MS of 31 pages of which scattered extracts had been pub. by S. Bredwell, The Rasing of the Foundations of Brownisme (1588), was discovered by Champlin Burrage in 1905 and pub. as The 'Retractation' of Robert Browne, Father of Congregationalism (1907). A. Peel and L. H. Carlson (eds.), The Writings of Robert Harrison and Robert Browne (Elizabethan Nonconformist Texts, 2; 1953), pp. 150–531. C. Burrage, The True Story of Robert Browne (1906), with full list of Browne's writings and bibl. refs. B. R. White, The English Separatist Tradition from the Marian Martyrs to the Pilgrim Fathers (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971), esp. pp. 44–90; S.

Brachlow, The Communion of Saints: Radical Puritan and Separatist Ecclesiology 1570–1625 (ibid., 1988), passim. A. Jessopp in DNB 7 (1886), pp. 57–61.

Browne, Sir Thomas (1605–82), natural historian, antiquary, and moralist. After studying medicine at Oxford, Montpellier, and Padua, and receiving a doctorate from *Leiden, he began to practise as a physician, and in 1637 settled in *Norwich, where he spent the rest of his life. In Religio Medici (1642; rev. authorized edn., 1643) he expounded his personal reconciliation of devout belief in the Word of God with thoroughgoing empiricism when reading the Book of Nature, along with an unusually tolerant attitude to people of different beliefs and races. His most substantial work, Pseudodoxia Epidemica (1646; enlarged 1650, 1658, 1672), examined many longstanding beliefs in natural history, physiology, iconography, geography, history, and biblical and classical history in the light of reason and experience. The twin tracts Hydriotaphia and The Garden of Cyrus (pub. together, 1658) are eloquent and ingenious meditations on death and resurrection in the form of treatises on burial customs and the recurrence of quincuncial forms in ancient customs and artefacts, the natural world, and religion. Despite his learning and mildness of nature, he clung to traditional beliefs in alchemy and witchcraft, and was slow to accept the new astronomy. His other published works are Certain Miscellany Tracts (1683), A Letter to a Friend upon Occasion of the Death of his Intimate Friend (1690), and Christian Morals (1716; 2nd edn., with Life by S. *Johnson, 1756), whose content overlaps with that of A Letter, but was said by a daughter to be a continuation of Religio Medici.

First collected Works, 1686; fuller edn. with Memoir by S. Wilkin (4 vols., 1835–6); modern edn. by G. [L.] Keynes (6 vols., London, 1928–31, much corrected in 4 vols., ibid., 1964). Religio Medici and Other Works [Hydriotaphia, The Garden of Cyrus, A Letter to a Friend, Christian Morals], ed., with introd., by L. C. Martin (Oxford, 1964), Pseudodoxia Epidemica, ed. R. [H. A.] Robbins (2 vols., Oxford, 1981). Studies by J. S. Finch (New York [1950]), J. Bennett (Cambridge, 1962), F. L. Huntley (Ann Arbor, Mich. [1962]), and L. Nathanson (Chicago and London, 1967), and collection ed. by C. A. Patrides (Columbia and London, 1982). Bibl. by G. [L.] Keynes (Cambridge, 1924; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1968); N. J. Endicott in NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 2228–33. A. H. Bullen in DNB 7 (1886), pp. 64–72.

Brownists. See BROWNE, ROBERT.

Bruce, Alexander Balmain (1831–99), Scottish divine. Educated at Edinburgh University, he entered the Free Church ministry, and in 1875 was appointed professor in the Free Church Hall at Glasgow. He is chiefly remembered as an exponent of the '*kenotic theory', esp. in The Humiliation of Christ (1876). His Kingdom of God; or Christ's Teaching according to the Synoptic Gospels (1889) was much criticized in the General Assembly of the Free Church for its adoption of new principles of biblical criticism, but no formal censure was passed. Among Bruce's later writings were Apologetics; or, Christianity Defensively Stated (1892), and two series of *Gifford Lectures for 1896–7 and 1897–8 (pub., 1897 and 1899). He also worked actively for the encouragement of Church music.

A. P. F. Sell, Defending and Declaring the Faith (Exeter and Colorado Springs, Colo. [1987]), pp. 89–117. E. I. Carlyle in DNB, Suppl. 1 (1901), pp. 321 f., s.v.

Brügglers. A small Swiss sect founded at Brügglen, near Berne, *c.*1745, by two brothers, Christian and Hieronymus Kohler, probably both impostors from start to finish. Of *Pietist origin, they proclaimed several fantastic doctrines, asserting, e.g., that they themselves and one of their disciples, Elizabeth Kissling, were respectively incarnations of the three Persons of the Trinity, and foretold that the world would end at Christmas 1748. Their excesses and immoralities led to their exile by the Berne government in 1749, and in 1753 Hieronymus Kohler was burnt. The sect survived for a short time in remote mountainous regions.

W. Hadorn, Geschichte des Pietismus in den Schweizerischen Reformierten Kirchen (Constance, 1901), pp. 243–5; id. in PRE (3rd edn.), 10 (1901), pp. 638–41, s.v. 'Kohler, Christian und Hieronymus', with bibl.

Brunner, Emil (1889–1966), Swiss *dialectical theologian. A native of Winterthur, from 1916 to 1922 he was a pastor at Obstalden. From 1922 to 1953, apart from several visits to America, he taught at Zurich, and then until 1956 at the International Christian University at Tokyo. He supported K. *Barth in opposing theological liberalism, but he was sharply divided from him by the influence of M. *Buber and by his acceptance of the concept of *natural theology, by which a limited knowledge of God may be gained from creation. This, though it did not, like revelation, provide a personal meeting, was a necessary condition of Christian thought. In this he was fiercely opposed by K. Barth in his pamphlet Nein! Antwort an Emil Brunner (1934). His writings include Die Mystik und das Wort (1924); Religionsphilosophie evangelischer Theologie (1926; Eng. tr., The Philosophy of Religion from the Standpoint of Protestant Theology, 1937); Der Mittler (1927; Eng. tr., The Mediator, 1934); Das Gebot und die Ordnungen (1932; Eng. tr., The Divine Imperative, 1937); Der Mensch im Widerspruch (1937; Eng. tr., Man in Revolt, 1939), Dogmatik (1946–60; Eng. tr., 1946–62), and Christianity and Civilisation (*Gifford Lectures for 1947–8; 1948–9). For a short time he professed his adherence to the *Oxford Group Movement.

Festschrift for his 60th birthday (Zurich, 1950); for his 70th birthday (Stuttgart [1959]). P. K. Jewett, Emil Brunner's Concept of Revelation (1954); S. Scheld, Die Christologie Emil Brunners (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Europäische Geschichte Mainz, Abteilung für abendländische Religiongeschichte, 104; Wiesbaden, 1981). C. W. Kegley (ed.), The Theology of Emil Brunner [1962], with list of Brunner's works to date. H. Beintker in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 236–42, s.v.

Bruno, St (*c.*925–65), Abp. of *Cologne. The third son of King Henry I of Germany (Henry the Fowler), he was educated in the circle of Bp. Balderic of Utrecht, rejoined the court in 939, was chancellor in the administration of his brother Otto I, and became archchaplain in 951. He was learned, an able administrator, and a staunch supporter of his brother. In 953 he was elevated to the see of Cologne and made Duke of Lotharingia. He exercised considerable influence in Saxon and Frankish political affairs, esp. in Lotharingia. He founded the monastery of St Pantaleon in Cologne in 964. Feast day, 11 Oct. (though on other days in some places).

Contemporary Life by Ruotger, a monk of Cologne, is pr. in AASS, Oct. 5 (1786), pp. 765–86; ed. by G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 4 (1841), pp. 252–75, and I. Ott (MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, NS 10, 1951; new edn., 1958); Ott's text is repr., with introd. and Ger. tr. by H. Kallfelz, Lebensbeschreibungen einiger Bischöfe des 10. 12. Jahrhunderts (Ausgewählte Quellen zur deutschen Geschichte des Mittelalters, 22; 1973), pp. 169–261. F. Lotter, Die Vita Brunonis des Ruotger (Bonner historische Forschungen, 9; 1958). R. Haass, 'Bruno I. Erzbischof von Köln', Rheinische Lebensbilder, 1 (1961), pp. 1–11. W. Neuss and F. W. Oediger (eds.), Geschichte des Erzbistums Köln, 1 (1964), pp. 165–72. J. Fleckenstein, Die Hofkapelle der deutschen Könige, 2 (Schriften der Monumenta Germaniae historica, 16/2; 1966), esp. pp. 24–7, 49–51, and 55–60. P. Corbet, Les Saints Ottoniens (Beihefte der Francia, 15; 1986), pp. 51–8 and 74–80. J. Fleckenstein in Lexicon des Mittelalters, 2 (1983), cols. 753–5, s.v. 'Brun (3)', with bibl.

Bruno, St (*c.*1032–1101). The founder of the *Carthusian Order. Educated at *Cologne and Reims, he became a canon of St Cunibert's in Cologne, whence he was recalled to be 'scholasticus' of the important cathedral school of Reims (*c.*1057). Here he had among his pupils the future Pope *Urban II. He was made chancellor of the diocese in 1075 by Manasses, the new archbishop, a man of scandalous character, with whom he soon came into conflict. In the course of a long struggle Bruno was forced to leave his school (1076), but he returned in 1080 when Manasses was deposed from his see. Shortly after, Bruno turned to the religious life and for a time placed himself under the direction of St *Robert, who later founded *Cîteaux. Before long he left Robert, and with six companions went into the mountainous district near Grenoble, where, under the protection of the bishop, St *Hugh, he laid the foundations of the Carthusian Order (1084). In 1090 he was summoned by Pope Urban II to live in Italy and assist him with his counsel. He obeyed, but refusing the archbishopric of Reggio, retired to the wilds of Calabria and founded the monastery of La Torre, where he died. He was never formally canonized, but in 1514 his order obtained Papal leave to keep his festival (6 Oct.). The observance of the feast was imposed on all Westerns in communion with Rome in 1623.

His Expositions on the Psalms and on the Epp. of St *Paul have been repr. by the Carthusians of Montreuil-sur-Mer, 1891–2; also in J. P. Migne, PL 152 and 153; their authenticity is still a matter of dispute; see A. Stoelen, O. Carth., 'Les Commentaires scripturaires attribués à Bruno le Chartreux', RTAM 25 (1958), pp. 177–247; id., 'Bruno le Chartreux, Jean Gratiadei et la "Lettre de S. Anselme" sur l'Eucharistie', ibid. 34 (1967), pp. 18–83. 3 letters, with Fr. tr. and introd., in Lettres des Premiers Chartreux, ed. by Un Chartreux, 1 (SC 88; 1962, 2nd edn., 1988), pp. 9–93. Extracts from anon. 13th-cent. Life (Vita Antiquior), together with other primary material, in AASS, Oct. 3 (1700), pp. 491–777. [M. Laporte, OSB] Aux Sources de la Vie Cartusienne, 1: Eclaircissements concernant la Vie de Saint Bruno (St-Pierre-de-Chartreuse, 1960). A. P. F. Lefebvre, Saint Bruno et l'ordre des Chartreux (2 vols., 1883); H. Löbbel, Der Stifter des Carthäuser-Ordens, der heilige Bruno aus Köln (1899). A. Ravier, S. Bruno, le premier des ermites de la Chartreuse (1967). Y. Gourdel, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 705–10, s.v. 'Chartreux'; J. Dubois, OSB, in DIP 1 (1973), cols. 1606–15, s.v. See also works cited under CARTHUSIAN ORDER.

Bruno, Giordano (1548–1600), Italian philosopher. In 1562 he joined the *Dominican Order at Naples, but on being censured for unorthodoxy, he fled in 1576. For 17 years he moved from place to place under constant suspicion, and was in England from 1583 to 1585; during this time he seems to have acted as a spy on RC conspirators for the English government. Captured at Venice in 1592 by the emissaries of the *Inquisition, he was in confinement at Rome from 1593 till, on 17 Feb. 1600, he was burnt at the stake on the Campo dei Fiori.

Under Renaissance influences Bruno became a fierce opponent of *Aristotelian doctrines and a warm admirer of N. *Copernicus. His enthusiasm for nature, however, led him to hold an extreme form of pantheistic immanentism. God was the efficient and final cause of everything, the beginning, middle, and end, the eternal and infinite. He developed this philosophy in its many consequences in his two Italian metaphysical treatises of 1584, De la Causa, Principio, ed Uno and De l'Infinito, Universo, e Mondi. In his Latin treatises, written somewhat later, he slightly modified this extreme pantheism. In the latter half of the 19th cent. the name of Bruno came to be identified with *anticlerical elements in the movement for Italian nationalism.

Latin works ed. F. Fiorentino [F. Tocco and others] (8 vols., Florence and Naples, 1879–91); Italian works ed. G. *Gentile (2 vols., Bari, 1907–8). V. Spampanato, Vita di Giordano Bruno (Messina, 1921); id., Documenti della Vita di Giordano Bruno (Florence, 1933). A. Mercati, Il Sommario del Processo di Giordano Bruno (ST 101; 1942, with documents); L. Firpo, Il Processo di Giordano Bruno (Quaderni della Rivista Storica Italiana, 1; Naples, 1949). A. Corsano, Il Pensiero di Giordano Bruno nel suo svolgimento storico (Biblioteca storia del Rinascimento, NS 1; Florence [1940]); D. W. Singer, Giordano Bruno: His Life and Thought, with annotated tr. of On the Infinite Universe and Worlds [1950]; J. C. Nelson, Renaissance Theory of Love: The Context of Giordano Bruno's Eroici furori (New York, 1958); F. A. Yates, Giordano Bruno and the Hermetic Tradition (1964) and other arts. by this author (repr. in her Collected Essays, vol. 1 [1982], pp. 129–221, vol. 2 [1983], pp. 101–50); H. Védrine, La Conception de la Nature chez Giordano Bruno (De Pétrarque à Descartes, 14; 1967) with bibl.; J. Bossy, Giordano Bruno and the Embassy Affair (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1991). V. Salvestrini, Bibliografia delle opere di Giordano Bruno (1926; 2nd edn. by L. Firpo [to 1950], 1958).

Bruys, Pierre de. See PETER DE BRUYS.

Bryanites. See BIBLE CHRISTIANS.

Bryennios, Philotheos (1833–1914), the discoverer of the '*Didache'. A native of *Constantinople, he studied at several German universities, became professor of Church history and exegesis at Halki in 1861, director of the school in the *Phanar at Constantinople in 1867, Metropolitan of Serrae in Macedonia in 1875 and of Nicomedia in 1877. In 1873 he discovered in the library of the Hospice of the 'Jerusalem Monastery of the Holy Sepulchre' at Constantinople a MS (no. 456) written in 1056 which contained some early Christian documents of the first importance, among them the Greek texts of the Ep. of *Barnabas, the first and second Epp. of *Clement to the Corinthians, and, the most celebrated, the Didache. He published the two Clementine Epistles in 1875 and the Didache in 1883. In 1875 he was a delegate of the E. Church at the *Bonn Reunion Conference.

Brief notice by N. Turchi in EC 3 (1950), col. 163. P. *Schaff, The Oldest Church Manual called the 'Teaching of the Twelve Apostles' (1885), pp. 279–96 (with autobiog. letter from Bryennios).

Buber, Martin (1878–1965), Jewish religious thinker. He was a native of Vienna, where he took his doctor's degree in 1900, and played an active part in the Zionist Movement, which he had joined in 1898. From 1906 onwards he devoted himself chiefly to religious studies. These led him to preoccupation with *Chasidism, whence he derived many of his ideas, e.g. those on a kind of activist mysticism and the sanctification of daily life. From 1916 to 1924 he was editor of Der Jude, a leading monthly of German-speaking Jewry. In 1923 he received a call to Frankfurt University, where he lectured on Jewish theology and ethics. In 1926 he started a periodical, Die Kreatur, with Catholic and Protestant collaborators. In 1933 he was deprived of his chair by the government, though he stayed in Germany until 1938. In that year he went to Palestine to become Professor of Sociology at the Hebrew University of *Jerusalem, where apart from lecture tours in the USA, he spent the rest of his life.

Among his more important writings are Die Legende des Baalschem (1908, Eng. tr., 1956), Vom Geist des Judentums (1916), Die Schrift (from 1925, translation of the Bible, with F. Rosenzweig), and Königtum Gottes (1932, Eng. tr., 1967), a study of the Messianic idea. The book which has exercised the greatest influence on Christian theologians as well as on the German Youth Movement is his small treatise Ich und Du (1923; Eng. trs., 1937 and 1970). Written in poetic language, it contrasts the 'I–Thou' relationship, in which the other is granted its full reality, with the 'I–It' relationship in which the other is subjected to my needs and purposes.

The influence of Buber's ideas, esp. on man's relationship to God, is evident in much 20th-cent. theology, both Catholic and Protestant.

Werke, 3 vols., Munich, 1962–4, incomplete; Der Jude und sein Judentum: Gesammelte Aufsätze und Reden (Cologne [1963]); Briefwechsel aus sieben Jahrzehnten, ed. G. Schaeder (3 vols., Heidelberg, 1972–5). Studies by H. Kohn (Hellerau, 1930, repr. with continuation by R. Weltsch, Cologne, 1961), M. S. Friedman (London, 1955, and 3 vols., New York, 1982–4), A. A. Cohen (ibid., 1957), H. U. von *Balthasar (Cologne and Olten, 1958; Eng. tr., 1961), M. L. Durand (New York, 1960), G. Schaeder (Göttingen [1966]), ed. P. A. Schilpp and M. [S.] Friedman (Library of Living Philosophers, 12; La Salle, Ill., and London, 1967), incl. Eng. tr. of Buber's autobiographical fragments and his replies to criticism, ed. H. Gordon and J. Bloch [New York, 1984; tr. from Heb.], and P. Vermes (London, 1988). R. Horwitz, Buber's Way to I and Thou: An Historical Analysis and the First Publication of Martin Buber's Lectures 'Religion als Gegenwart' (Heidelberg, 1978). P. Vermes, Buber on God and the Perfect Man (Brown Judaic Studies, 13; Chico, Calif. [1980]). H. Kress, Religiöse Ethik und dialogisches Denken: Das Werk Martin Bubers in der Beziehung zu Georg Simmel (Studien zur evangelischen Ethik, 16 [1985]), pp. 97–263. L. J. Silberstein, Martin Buber's Social and Religious Thought (New York and London [1989]). M. Cohn and R. Buber, Martin Buber: A Bibliography of his Writings 1897–1978 (Jerusalem, 1980).

Bucer, Martin (1491–1551), Protestant Reformer, also spelled 'Butzer'. In 1506/7 he entered the *Dominican Order at Sélestat, moving (*c.*1516/17) to Heidelberg, where in April 1518 he heard M. *Luther dispute. In 1521 he adopted Lutheranism and by 1523, having secured Papal dispensation from his monastic vows and married, he began publicly to preach Lutheranism in Alsace. He settled in Strasbourg in 1523. In 1524 he was put in charge of the parish of Ste Aurélie; later he held that of St Thomas. While involved in polemic against RC theologians such as Conrad Treger, he also opposed *Anabaptists and other religious radicals. His doctrine of the Eucharist is normally considered half-way between that of Luther and U. *Zwingli. Although he and his colleague W. *Capito supported the Zwinglian doctrine of the Eucharist at the unsuccessful *Marburg Colloquy (1529), the *Tetrapolitan Confession, which originated in Strasbourg, expressed an intermediate position. In 1531, after Zwingli's death, Strasbourg joined the *Schmalkaldic League and in May 1536 Bucer, by signing the *Wittenberg Concord, accepted, at least ostensibly, Luther's doctrine of the Eucharist. Bucer took part in the unsuccessful conferences between Catholics and Protestants at *Hagenau (1540), *Worms (1540), and *Ratisbon (1541), and then assisted *Hermann of Wied in his vain attempt to introduce Reformed doctrines at Cologne. In 1546 when the Strasbourg Council showed itself reluctant to enforce Protestant Church discipline, Bucer introduced a system of meetings of élite groups chosen from among the faithful ('christliche Gemeinschaften') to motivate other parishioners. After unavailing opposition to the *Interim of 1548, Bucer came to England at the invitation of T. *Cranmer, and was made Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. He had a marked influence on parts of the Anglican *Ordinal. He died on 28 Feb. 1551 and was buried in Great St Mary's church at Cambridge. His body was exhumed and publicly burnt in 1557. He wrote numerous theological treatises and biblical commentaries in Latin and German; his Latin style is notoriously difficult and unattractive.

Scripta Anglicana fere omnia, ed. C. Hubert (Basle, 1577). Modern edn. of his complete works in three series: (1) Deutsche Schriften, ed. R. Stupperich (Gütersloh, 1960 ff.); (2) Opera latina, ed. C. Augustijn and others (Paris, 1954–5 [vol. 15 in 2 pts.]; Leiden [Studies in Medieval and Renaissance Thought], 1982 ff.) and (3) Correspondance, ed. J. Rott and others (Leiden [Studies in Medieval and Renaissance Thought], 1979 ff.). Selected correspondence in J. V. Pollet, OP, Martin Bucer: Études sur la Correspondance (2 vols., 1958–62) and id., Martin Bucer: Études sur les relations de Bucer avec les Pays-Bas, l'Électorat de Cologne et l'Allemagne du Nord (Studies in Medieval and Renaissance Thought, 33; 2 vols., Leiden, 1985). Eng. tr. of De Regno Christi in W. Pauck (ed.), Melanchthon and Bucer (Library of Christian Classics, 19 [1969]), pp. 174–394. The exact corpus of Bucer's writings has been the subject of dispute; see F. Mentz, 'Bibliographische Zusammenstellung der gedruckten Schriften Butzer's', in Zur 400jährigen Geburtsfeier Martin Butzer's (Strasbourg, 1891), pp. 99–164; R. Stupperich, 'Bibliographia Bucerana', in H. Bornkamm, Martin Butzers Bedeutung für die europäische Reformationsgeschichte (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, 169; 1952), pp. 37–96 (includes secondary works to 1950); P. Lardet, 'Vers une nouvelle bibliographie bucérienne: résultats d'un premier inventaire', in I. Backus and others, Martin Bucer apocryphe et authentique (Cahiers de la Revue de Théologie et de Philosophie, 8; Geneva, 1983), pp. 3–26. Life by H. Eells (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1931; repr. New York, 1971). J. W. Baum, Capito und Butzer (Elberfeld, 1860); A. Lang, Der Evangelienkommentar

Martin Butzers und die Grundzüge seiner Theologie (Leipzig, 1900); C. Hopf, Martin Bucer and the English Reformation (Oxford, 1946); G. J. van de Poll, Martin Bucer's Liturgical Ideas (Assen, 1954); W. P. Stephens, The Holy Spirit in the Theology of Martin Bucer (Cambridge, 1970); W. van't Spijker, De Ambten bij Martin Bucer (Kampen, 1970); I. Backus and others, Logique et théologie au XVI^e siècle: aux sources de l'argumentation de Martin Bucer (Cahiers de la Revue de Théologie et de Philosophie, 5; Geneva, 1980); G. Hammann, Entre le secte et la cité: Le projet d'Église du réformateur Martin Bucer (1491–1551) (Geneva [1984]). C. Krieger and M. Leinhard (eds.), Martin Bucer and Sixteenth Century Europe: Actes du colloque de Strasbourg (28–31 août 1991) (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 52–3; Leiden, 1993). D. F. Wright (ed.), Martin Bucer: Reforming church and community (Cambridge, 1994). M. Köhn, 'Bucer-Bibliographie 1951–1974', in M. de Kroon and F. Krüger (eds.), Bucer und seine Zeit (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte Mainz, 80; Wiesbaden, 1976), pp. 133–64. A. W. Ward in DNB 7 (1886), pp. 172–7, s.v.; R. Stupperich in TRE 7 (1983), pp. 258–70, s.v.

Buchanan, Claudius (1766–1815), Bengal chaplain. After conversion and a period spent under the personal influence of the famous Evangelical, J. *Newton, Buchanan entered Queens' College, Cambridge, in 1791, where he made the close acquaintance of C. *Simeon. On being ordained priest in 1796, he accepted a chaplaincy in Bengal, proceeded to Calcutta shortly afterwards, and was for several years vice-provost of a cultural college which Lord Wellesley had established at Fort William. Though his official position in the East India Company restricted the amount of active mission work he could do, he used his influence to the utmost to further the cause of Christianity in native India; and it was largely through his instrumentality after his return to England (1808) that an episcopate in India was created, T. F. *Middleton, the first Bp. of Calcutta, being appointed in 1814.

Works (incomplete) in 2 pts., New York, 1812. H. N. Pearson, Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Claudius Buchanan (2 vols., 1817). A. J. Arbuthnot in DNB 7 (1886), pp. 182–4.

Buchanan, George (1506–82), Scottish scholar and man of letters. He began his academic career as a pupil of John Major at the universities of Paris and St Andrews, and in the 1540s and 1550s held various teaching posts in France (Bordeaux and Paris) and at Coimbra in Portugal, gaining a reputation as a poet, dramatist, and classical scholar. He came under suspicion of heresy for his satires on the contemporary Church, was imprisoned for some months by the *Inquisition in Portugal, and eventually moved from humanism of the Erasmian type to alignment with the forces of Protestantism. Returning to Scotland in 1561, he took part in the counsels of the Reformed Church, became Principal of St Leonard's College, St Andrews, and served as Moderator of the General Assembly of the Kirk in 1567. Though he was tutor to both *Mary, Queen of Scots, and James VI (*James I of England), he rejected the doctrine of the *Divine Right of Kings and regarded the people as the source of political power, expounding his view in De Jure Regni apud Scotos (1579); in his later years he pursued the deposed Queen with implacable hostility. A Gaelic speaker and pioneer of Celtic studies, propagandist and man of affairs, he closed his many-sided career by publishing the influential but partisan Rerum Scoticarum Historia (1582). S. *Johnson praised him as 'the only man of genius his country produced'.

Opera Omnia, ed. T. Ruddiman (2 vols., Edinburgh, 1715). P. H. Brown, George Buchanan: Humanist and Reformer (ibid., 1890), id., George Buchanan and his Times (1906). I. D. McFarlane, Buchanan (1981).

Buchman, Frank (Nathan Daniel) (1878–1961), founder and director of the *Oxford Group (q.v.). Born of a *Lutheran family of Swiss descent at Pennsburg, Pa., he graduated at Muhlenberg College, studied at Mount Airy Seminary, Philadelphia, and entered the Lutheran ministry. After a year of graduate study abroad he was in charge of a parish in Philadelphia for three years and subsequently of a hostel for poor young men. In 1908 he resigned this work in a spirit of disillusionment and on a visit to England attended the *Keswick Convention, where an address on the *Atonement in a small church in the neighbourhood convinced him that his previous ministry had been wholly unprofitable and he experienced conversion. On the advice of J. R. *Mott he took up evangelistic work among the students of Pennsylvania State College. In 1915 and 1917–19 he visited *India and the Far East, and in 1920—with introductions from two Anglican missionary bishops whom he met in China—Cambridge, after which some Cambridge undergraduates joined him in a visit to Oxford. Out of this last visit the Group movement grew. In 1929 he visited South Africa with a team of supporters, and subsequently travelled widely, including tours to Canada and USA in 1932–3 and 1933–4, Scandinavia in 1934–5, Switzerland in 1935, Utrecht and the Near East in 1937. In 1938 in London he called for *Moral Re-Armament, a development of the work which stressed the role of individuals in spiritually transforming society. World Assemblies of this later movement were held at Caux, Switzerland, in 1946 and subsequent years.

Life by G. [D.] Lean (London, 1985). See also bibl. to OXFORD GROUP.

Buchmann, Theodor. See BIBLIANDER, THEODOR.

Büchner, Karl Friedrich Christian Ludwig (1824–99), German materialist philosopher. While lecturer in medicine at *Tübingen (from 1852), he published in 1855 his celebrated Kraft und Stoff, in which he defended a purely materialistic doctrine of the natural world, seeking on the bases of the conservation-laws of energy and of matter to reduce everything in the universe, whether mental or physical, to a single non-spiritual source. The book became a sort of Bible for the materialists and aroused such bitter opposition that Büchner was forced to retire. For the rest of his life he lived at Darmstadt, where he published several other widely read treatises. He maintained that his doctrinaire materialism was not incompatible with idealism in practical life.

R. Handy in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 1 (1967), pp. 411–13, s.v.

Buckfast Abbey, Devon. The first abbey was founded in 1018 by Earl Aethelweard and was ceded to the Abbot of *Savigny in 1136. Together with a number of other Savigny houses in England it adopted the rule of Cîteaux in 1147 and remained *Cistercian until its *dissolution in 1539. In the early years of the 19th cent. a private house was built on the site and it was to this that a group of exiled French monks from the abbey of La-Pierre-qui-Vire came in 1882. Buckfast was again raised to the rank of abbey in 1902, with Dom Boniface Netter as abbot. After his death in a shipwreck in 1906 he was succeeded by Dom Anscar *Vonier, who decided to rebuild the monastic buildings. The abbey church, built by the community in Gothic style, was opened in 1922 and consecrated in 1932. The monastery was affiliated to the English *Benedictine Congregation in 1960; a preparatory school was started by the community in 1967, but closed in 1994.

W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 5 (1825 edn.), pp. 385–7. J. Stéphan, OSB, A History of Buckfast Abbey, from 1018 to 1968 (Bristol, 1970). L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), col. 525. J. M. Canivez, O. Cist., in DHGE 10 (1938), cols. 1034–6, s.v.

Buckland, William (1784–1856), Dean of *Westminster from 1845, and geologist. He was elected to a fellowship at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in 1808, and in 1819 became the first University reader in geology. He saw in the vestiges of the ice-age striking proof of the biblical story of the *Flood, defending his views in Reliquiae Diluvianae, or Observations on the Organic Remains attesting the Action of a Universal Deluge (1823). In 1836 he issued an ambitious contribution to the *Bridgewater Treatises on Geology and Mineralogy considered with Reference to Natural Theology.

Mrs Gordon [E. O. Buckland, daughter], The Life and Correspondence of William Buckland (1894). N. A. Rupke, The Great Chain of History: William Buckland and the English School of Geology (1814–1849) (Oxford, 1983).

Budde, Karl (1850–1935), OT scholar. He was professor of OT from 1889 to 1900 at Strasbourg and from 1900 to 1921 at Marburg. He did much to further OT criticism on the lines laid down by J. *Wellhausen. Besides many commentaries, his writings include a concise and widely read Religion of Israel (1899; Ger. edn., 1900).

Karl Budde's Schriftum bis zu seinem 80. Geburtstage (Beiheft 54 of the ZATW, 1930).

Bugenhagen, Johann (1485–1558), 'Pomeranus', *Lutheran theologian. In early life he was a *Premonstratensian canon of Treptow (in Pomerania), where he was appointed rector of the city school in 1504. After his marriage in 1522, M. *Luther secured his appointment as pastor in *Wittenberg in 1523, and here he remained till his death, acting as Luther's confessor. He took a leading part in the organization of the Lutheran Church in N. Germany and *Denmark, and the 'Brunswick Church Order' of 1528 was mainly his work. In 1537 Bugenhagen made his way to Denmark, where his presence had been sought by King Christian III, to rearrange ecclesiastical affairs on a Protestant basis, and on 12 Aug. he crowned both King and Queen. He then proceeded to consecrate seven men to be superintendents or 'bishops', and in this way the Danish Church lost the episcopal *Apostolic Succession. He also reorganized the University of Copenhagen, arranging for lectures on St *Augustine's 'De Spiritu et Littera', Luther's 'Commentary on Galatians', and the 'Loci Communes' of P. *Melanchthon. He also assisted Luther in his translation of the Bible.

Collections of sermons ed. G. Buchwald (Halle, 1885; Leipzig, 1909); Correspondence ed. O. Vogt (Stettin, 1888). The 'Brunswick Church Order' is conveniently pr. in E. Sehling (ed.), Die evangelischen Kirchenordnungen des XVI. Jahrhunderts, 16 (pt. 1; 1955), pp. 348–455. Life by H. Hering (Halle, 1888). G. Geisenhof, Bibliotheca Bugenhagiana (ibid., 1908). W. Rautenberg (ed.), Johann Bugenhagen: Beiträge zu seinem 400. Todestag [1958]. J. H. Bergsma, Die Reform der Messliturgie durch Johannes Bugenhagen (1485–1558) (Hildesheim [1966]). H. H. Holfelder, Tentatio et Consolatio: Studien zu Bugenhagens 'Interpretatio in Librum Psalmorum' (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 45; 1974); id., Solus Christus . . . : Eine Untersuchung zur Genese von Bugenhagens Theologie (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 63; 1981). Id. in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 354–63, s.v.

bugia (also scotula, palmatorium). A portable candlestick containing a lighted candle which is sometimes held beside a RC bishop (and other prelates by special privilege) while he reads or sings certain prayers. In 1968 its use was restricted to such times as circumstances made it of practical necessity.

Bulgakov, Sergius (1871–1944), Russian theologian. The son of a Russian priest, he was intended for the priesthood but later became a philosophical and religious sceptic and active in Marxist political movements. Disillusioned after the 1905 Revolution, he slowly retraced his steps to the Church. In the Moscow Sobor of 1917, which restored the patriarchate, Bulgakov took a prominent part as a layman. He became a priest shortly afterwards. Expelled from Russia, he was Dean of the Orthodox Theological Academy at *Paris from 1925 till his death. He was a man of remarkable personality and intellectual power, well known in W. Europe and America through his participation in the *Ecumenical Movement, of which he was a warm but critical supporter. Theologically he is best known for his contributions to Sophiology, a body of thought claiming descent through V. *Solovyov and P. Florensky from the E. Fathers, which seeks to solve the problems of the relation between God and the world by the concept of the Divine Wisdom or sophia. His teaching was condemned, partly it would seem on political grounds, by the Moscow patriarchate in 1935 but without much practical result. His chief works translated into English are The Orthodox Church (1935) and The Wisdom of God (1937). His major work, in three parts called 'The Divine Wisdom and the Godmanhood', is available in Fr. tr.: Du Verbe incarné (1943), Le Paraclet (1947), and L'Épouse de l'Agneau (1984).

J. Pain and N. *Zernov (eds.), A Bulgakov Anthology (1976). K. Naumov, Bibliographie des Œuvres de Serge Boulgakov (Bibliothèque Russe de l'Institut d'Études Slaves, 68/1; Paris, 1984), with preface by C. Andronikof, pp. 7–41. N. Zernov, The Russian Religious Renaissance of the Twentieth Century (1963), pp. 138–50. S. Swierkosz, SJ, L'Église Visible selon Serge Bulgakov (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 221; Rome, 1980), with bibl. F. C. Copleston, SJ, Russian Religious Philosophy (1988), esp. pp. 90–9.

Bulgaria, Christianity in. The official introduction of Christianity into Bulgaria occurred in 864–5, with the baptism of the Prince, Boris. Both Byzantine and German missionaries were at work in the country, and Boris wavered for a time between Constantinople and Rome, finally deciding *c.*870 in favour of the former. During the late 9th and early 10th cent. Clement of Ochrid (d. 916), one of the leading disciples of St *Cyril and St Methodius, laboured for several decades in Bulgaria to establish Slavonic Christianity under Byzantine auspices. Under Tsar Simeon (893–927) the Bulgarian kingdom attained great cultural brilliance, with a rich Christian literature in Slavonic; and during his reign the Bulgarian Church became *autocephalous, its head assuming the title '*Patriarch', with his seat first at Preslav and later at Ochrid. On the defeat of Bulgaria by the Byzantines in 1018, the Bulgarian Patriarchate was suppressed, but it was restored during the years 1235—1393, its seat being now at Trnovo. During the Turkish period the Bulgarian Church became increasingly subject to Constantinople, finally losing all traces of independence in 1767; and from then until 1870 the episcopate was generally filled with Greeks (compare the similar position of *Romania and *Serbia). The Bulgarians, on attaining political independence, created an autocephalous *Exarchate in 1870; but they acted without the consent of the Patriarchate of Constantinople, which excommunicated them in 1872 for the heresy of 'philetism' (nationalism), the schism remaining unhealed until 1945. In 1953 the Metropolitan of Sofia, as head of the Bulgarian Church, assumed the title 'Patriarch', being recognized as such by the *Oecumenical Patriarch in 1961. Besides the Orthodox, there is a very small RC community in Bulgaria, and a more substantial Muslim minority (*c.*10 per cent of the population).

M. Spinka, A History of Christianity in the Balkans: A Study in the Spread of Byzantine Culture among the Slavs (Chicago [1933]), esp. pp. 1–72 and 91–128. A. P. Vlasto, The Entry of the Slavs into Christendom (Cambridge, 1970), pp. 155–87; R. Browning, Byzantium and Bulgaria: A comparative study across the early medieval frontier (1975), pp. 140–69. [A.] M. Macdermott, A History of Bulgaria 1393–1855 (1962), pp. 143–68. I. Dujčev, Il Cattolicesimo in Bulgaria nel sec. XVII (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 111; 1937), and other works of this author. I. Sofranov, Histoire du mouvement bulgare vers l'église catholique au XIX^e siècle, 1 (Bibliothèque Catholique Belge, 1960). M. Rinvolucri, Anatomy of a Church: Greek Orthodoxy Today (1966), pp. 174–83 ('Report on the Orthodox Church in Bulgaria'). P. Walters (ed.), World Christianity: Eastern Europe (Keston Book, 29; Eastbourne, 1988), pp. 271–88. R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 10 (1938), cols. 1120–94; A. de Santos Otero and F. Heyer in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 364–75, s.v. 'Bulgarien', both with bibl.

Bull (Lat. bulla, 'seal'). A written mandate of the Pope, of a more serious and weighty kind than a 'brief'. Such documents were sealed in earlier times with the Pope's signet-ring, but from the 6th cent. either seal-boxes of lead or signets stamped in wax were used. Since 1878 only the most important bulls ('consistorial bulls') are sealed in this way, others being sealed merely with a red stamp. Consistorial bulls are signed not only by the Pope, but also by the *Cardinals, and are sent out in copy, the original being retained at Rome.

For collections of bulls see BULLARIUM. N. Valois, 'Étude sur le rythme des bulles pontificales', Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, 42 (1881), pp. 161–98 and 257–72. R. L. Poole in DECH, pp. 72–4, s.v. 'Bulls, Papal'; G. Battelli in EC 2 (1949), cols. 1778–81, s.v. 'Bolla', with bibl.

Bull, George (1634–1710), Bp. of *St Davids and theologian. He was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, and was ordained deacon and priest on the same day in 1655. In 1659 he became Rector of Suddington, in 1686 Archdeacon of *Llandaff, and in 1705 Bp. of St Davids. In theology he was a staunch *High Churchman. His Harmonia Apostolica (1669–70) was an attack on the more Protestant theories of *justification, its thesis being that the passages where St *Paul seems to imply human incapacity for moral attainment must be interpreted in the light of St *James's Epistle. In his celebrated treatise, Defensio Fidei Nicaenae (1685; he added later several other works by way of postscript), he maintained, largely in criticism of the *Jesuit D. *Petavius, that the teaching of the pre-Nicene Fathers on the Trinity completely agreed with that of orthodox theologians of Nicene and post-Nicene times. The work greatly commended itself to J. B. *Bossuet and other contemporary French theologians, and, after the publication of one of its sequels, the Judicium Ecclesiae Catholicae, in 1694, Bull received the unusual tribute of the formal thanks of the French clergy at their synod at St Germain in 1700. In answer to their subsequent inquiries why, in view of so masterly a defence of Catholic doctrine, he did not become a RC, Bull wrote a popular and vigorous work, The Corruptions of the Church of Rome (1705). A posthumous work of Bull, popular in later times, was A Companion for the Candidates of Holy Orders, or the Great Importance of the Priestly Office (1714). His Life was written by R. *Nelson, who had been a pupil of Bull's at Suddington.

Works, ed. E. Burton (6 vols., Oxford, 1827). R. Nelson, The Life of Dr George Bull . . . with the history of those Controversies in which he was engaged (1713). L. W. Barnard, 'Bishop George Bull of St. David's: Scholar and Defender of the Faith', Journal of Welsh Ecclesiastical History, 9 (1992), pp. 37–51. J. H. Overton in DNB 7 (1886), pp. 236–8, s.v.

bullarium. A term said to have been invented by the canonist, Laertius Cherubini (d. 1626), for a collection of Papal *bulls and other similar documents. Such 'bullaria', being the collections of private individuals, have no authority beyond that attaching to their component pieces. Among the best known are those of L. Cherubini (1586); the 'Luxembourg Bullarium' (stated to have been really printed at Geneva) (1727–30); Mainardi's 'Roman Bullarium' (1733–62); and the 'Turin Bullarium' (1857–85).

T. Ortolan in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 1243–55, s.v. 'Bullaire', with bibl.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2977–82, s.v. 'Lettres des papes'.

Bullinger, Heinrich (1504–75). Swiss Reformer. Born in Bremgarten in the Swiss canton of Aarau, he was educated at the monastic school in Emmerich, near Nijmegen, where he came under the influence of the devotio moderna*, and then at the University of Cologne. About 1520, hearing about M. *Luther's theology and wishing to compare it with RC teaching, he read *Gratian and *Peter Lombard, and from them was led to study the Church Fathers and the NT; he also came under the influence of P. *Melanchthon's Loci communes and some of the writings of Luther. Convinced of the primary importance of Scripture in Christian dogma, he adopted *Lutheranism and later Zwinglianism. From 1523 to 1529 he taught at the *Cistercian school in Kappel. In 1529 he became Pastor of Bremgarten and married. Two years later he succeeded U. *Zwingli as Chief Pastor at Zurich, a post which he held until his death.

Next to J. *Calvin, Bullinger was prob. the most influential of the second-generation Reformers. Within Switzerland, he played a leading part in drawing up the first and second *Helvetic Confessions (1536 and 1566) and the *Consensus Tigurinus (1549); these provided a national basis for the Reformation and prevented it from becoming a merely cantonal phenomenon. Abroad, he combated the Lutheran doctrine of the Eucharist, in the 1560s engaging in controversy with J. *Brenz. He refuted *Anabaptist theology, notably in Von dem unverschämten Freuel (1531) and in Der Wiedertäufer Ursprung (1560), while generally maintaining an open-minded attitude to the various radical movements of the period. He was the only Continental Reformer to be consulted about the *vestiarian controversies under both *Edward VI (1550) and *Elizabeth I (1566). In 1570 he was asked by R. *Cox to prepare a reply to the bull Regnans in excelsis which excommunicated Elizabeth. The reply was published in Latin (1571), English (1572), and German (1578). The Decades, a Latin version of his Hausbuch of sermons, were translated into English in 1577 and adopted as a textbook at *Lincoln and *Canterbury. It is usually held that his chief contribution to Reformed theology is his doctrine of the *covenant; this was developed as early as his treatise De testamento (1534). Following *Marsiglio of Padua, he saw no basic distinction between the Christian State and the Christian Church and considered that the norms for a Christian society had been established by God in the OT. This doctrine had two important consequences: (1) the jurisdiction of the civil authority extended to ecclesiastical matters; and (2) the doctrine of *predestination, while still of prime importance, was less rigid than that of Calvin or T. *Beza. According to Bullinger, God's election was binding in history only in so far as men kept the conditions of the covenant. Bullinger was enormously prolific. Apart from polemical treatises, his works include histories and sermons and commentaries on the entire NT apart from Rev.

Crit. edn. of his main works by F. Büsser and others (Zurich, 1972 ff.), incl. Abteilung I: Bibliographie (2 vols., 1972–7), with details of secondary lit. to 1975. Other edns. include those of his Autobiography by J. J. Hottinger and H. H. Vögeli (3 vols., Frauenfeld, 1838–40), the Decades, by T. Harding (*Parker Society, 4 vols., 1849–52), his Diarium, by E. Egli (Quellen zur schweizerischen Reformationsgeschichte, 2; 1904), Korrespondenz mit den Graubündnern, by T. Schiess (Quellen zur Schweizer Geschichte, 23–5; 1904–6), and Ratio Studiorum, by P. Stotz (2 vols., Zurich, 1987). Modern Eng. tr. of his sermon 'Of the Catholic Church' in G. W. Bromiley (ed.), Zwingli and Bullinger (Library of Christian Classics, 24; 1953), pp. 283–325. Classic study by C. Pestalozzi (Elberfeld, 1858). A. Bouvier, Henri Bullinger . . . le successeur de Zwingli, d'après sa correspondance avec les réformés et les humanistes de langue française (1940), with bibl. F. Blanke, Der junge Bullinger 1504–1531 (Zurich, 1942). W. Hollweg, Heinrich Bullingers Hausbuch: Eine Untersuchung über die Anfänge der reformierten Predigtliteratur (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 8; 1956). H. Fast, Heinrich Bullinger und die Täufer (Schriftenreihe des Mennonitischen Geschichtsvereins, 7; 1959). J. Staedtke, Die Theologie des jungen Bullinger (Zurich, 1962). S. Hausammann, Römerbriefauslegung zwischen Humanismus und Reformation: Eine Studie zu Heinrich Bullingers Römerbriefvorlesung von 1525 (Studien zur dogmengeschichtliche und systematische Theologie, 27; 1970). U. Gäbler and E. Herkenrath (eds.), Heinrich Bullinger 1504–1575: Gesammelte Aufsätze zum 400. Todestag (Zürcher Beiträge zur Reformationsgeschichte, 7–8; 1975). J. W. Baker, Heinrich Bullinger and the Covenant (Athens, Oh., 1980). R. C. Walton, 'Heinrich Bullinger und die Autorität der Schrift', in M. Brecht (ed.), Texte—Worte—Glaube (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 50; 1980), pp. 274–97. H. U. Bächtold, Heinrich Bullinger vor dem Rat: Zur Gestaltung und Verwaltung des Zürcher Staatswesens in den Jahren 1531 bis 1575 (Berne, 1982). F. Büsser, Wurzeln der Reformation in Zürich (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 31; Leiden, 1985), pp. 106–98. Id. in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 375–87, s.v.

Bulteel, Henry Bellenden (1800–66), Protestant controversialist. A native of Devonshire, Bulteel was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, and elected a Fellow of Exeter in 1824. In 1826 he became Curate of St Ebbe's church in Oxford; he resigned his fellowship on his marriage in 1829. In 1831 he preached a University Sermon on predestination and free will, in which he was outspoken about the state of the University and the C of E. Later in the year, partly on account of this sermon and partly because of his preaching in dissenting chapels, the Bp. of Oxford revoked his licence. He left the C of E and conducted services on Strict *Baptist lines in a chapel of his own. His followers were known as Bulteelers. In 1832 he attended the chapel of E. *Irving in London and for a time adopted some of his tenets. He also became convinced of the doctrine of universal redemption, which he propounded in his appendix to The Unknown Tongues by E. Irving and N. Armstrong (1832). In his Doctrine of the Miraculous Interference of Jesus on Behalf of Believers (1832) he claimed to have healed three women. His other works include an anonymous denunciation of the *Tractarians in 1845.

J. S. Reynolds, The Evangelicals at Oxford 1735–1871 (Oxford, 1953), pp. 97–9 and 162. G. C. Boase in DNB 7 (1886), p. 261.

Bultmann, Rudolf (1884–1976), NT scholar and theologian. After studying at *Marburg, *Tübingen, and Berlin he became Privatdozent at Marburg in 1912, Extraordinary Professor at Breslau in 1916, and Professor at Giessen in 1920. From 1921 until his retirement in 1951 he was Professor of NT Studies at Marburg.

A pupil of H. *Gunkel, J. *Weiss, and W. Heitmüller, and a follower of the '*Religionsgeschichtliche Schule' (esp. of W. *Wrede and W. *Bousset), Bultmann carried their history-of-traditions method (cf. *FORM CRITICISM) to the point at which any historical value in the Gospels was called radically into question. He did this notably in his Die Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition (1921; enlarged 1931, and repr. with supplement, 1957–8; Eng. tr., 1963). In his Jesus (1926; Eng. tr., Jesus and the Word, 1934), he presented the mission of Jesus as summoning His hearers to a decision (Entscheidung). This call to accept His proclamation and to obey His radical demand meant that Jesus understood Himself as the one in whom God was finally and savingly present, that is to say, it implied a *Christology. Bultmann combined his biblical scholarship with the *dialectical theology of K. *Barth and the *Lutheran sola fide to make an almost complete hiatus between history and faith, leaving only the bare fact (dass) of Christ crucified as necessary for Christian faith. This kerygmatic theology, based on a Lutheran existentialist interpretation of the NT, received classic expression in his commentary on St *John's Gospel (KEK 2; 1941; Eng. tr., 1971) and Theologie des Neuen Testaments (1948–53; Eng. tr., 1952–5). St *Paul and the author of Jn. are treated as the only genuine theologians in the NT, because they offer an interpretation of human existence and see talk of God, Christ, and salvation in terms of the individual's changed self-understanding effected by the proclaimed Word or *kerygma. Narrowing the theological focus in this way involved criticizing the cosmological elements in the NT as 'myth' and it was his programme of '*demythologizing' the NT which in the 1940s and 1950s made Bultmann notorious. Latterly his aim to make the Christian message intelligible in the modern world has been more widely respected, and his hermeneutical concerns have been developed by RC and even conservative evangelical theologians.

After the completion of his doctoral thesis, Der Stil der paulinischen Predigt und die kynisch-stoische Diatribe (pub. in 1910) and his 1912 Habilitionschrift, Die Exegese des Theodore von Mopsuestia (posthumously pub., 1984), Bultmann developed his views on the NT and theology in a number of writings. Besides those already mentioned, they include Das Urchristentum im Rahmen der antiken Religionen (1949; Eng. tr., 1956), his *Gifford Lectures for 1955 entitled History and Eschatology (1957), Jesus Christ and Mythology (1958), Die drei Johannesbriefe (KEK 14; 1967; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1973]), Der zweite Brief an die Korinther, ed. E. Dinkler (KEK 6; 1976; Eng. tr., Minneapolis [1985]), and the posthumously pub. Theologische Enzyclopädie (1984), as well as 27 contributions to G. *Kittel's Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament (9 vols., 1933–73; Eng. tr., 1964–76).

Bultmann pub. a collection of essays, Glauben und Verstehen (4 vols., Tübingen, 1933–65; Eng. tr. of most of vol. 1 as Faith and Understanding, 1, 1969; of vol. 2 as Essays Philosophical and Theological, 1955); a collection of his sermons (Tübingen, 1956; Eng. tr., 1960); and a collection of papers on the NT, Exegetica, ed. E. Dinkler (ibid., 1967). There are further collections of his essays ed. and tr. into Eng. by S. M. Ogden, Existence and Faith (Cleveland, Oh., 1960; London, 1961) and New Testament and Mythology (Philadelphia, 1984; London, 1985), both including some unpub. material. The correspondence between Barth and Bultmann was ed. B. Jaspert in the Gesamtausgabe of Barth's Works, 5.1 (Zurich [1971]; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1982). Other letters are available in Tübingen University Library.

C. A. Braaten and R. A. Harrisville (eds. and trs.), Kerygma and History: A symposium on the theology of Rudolf Bultmann (Nashville and New York, 1962); C. W. Kegley (ed.), The Theology of Rudolf Bultmann (1966); W. Schmithals, Die Theologie Rudolf Bultmanns (Tübingen, 1966, 2nd edn., 1967; Eng. tr., 1968); B. Jaspert (ed.), Rudolf Bultmanns Werk und Werkung (Darmstadt, 1984); M. Evang, Rudolf Bultmann in seiner Frühzeit (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 74; Tübingen [1988]), with list of Bultmann's works, pp. 341–50. [S.] G. [J.] Jones, Bultmann: Towards a Critical Theology (Cambridge, 1991). See also bibl. to DEMYTHOLOGIZING.

Bunsen, Christian Carl Josias von, also known as 'Chevalier Bunsen' (1791–1860), German diplomatist and amateur theologian. From 1823 to 1839 he was minister at the Prussian legation at Rome, where he proved himself a masterly diplomat and settled delicate matters connected with the relations between Germany and the Holy See. After two years as minister at Berne, he held the same office in London from 1841 to 1854. Here he was regarded as the most distinguished representative of European Protestantism in England and was the chief instrument in the scheme for a joint Lutheran and Anglican bishopric in *Jerusalem. His voluminous and verbose theological writings, for the most part of little enduring value, include a treatise on the Epp. of St *Ignatius (1874); Hippolytus and his Age (4 vols., 1852); Christianity and Mankind (7 vols., 1855, an English version of some earlier writings, then first published as one work); Gott in der Geschichte (3 vols., 1857–8; Eng. tr., 1868–70); and Vollständiges Bibelwerk für die Gemeinde (9 vols., 1858–70).

Memoir by Frances, Baroness Bunsen, widow (2 vols., London, 1868). L. von *Ranke, Aus dem Briefwechsel Friedrich Wilhelms IV. mit Bunsen (1873). R. A. D. Owen, Christian Bunsen and Liberal English Theology (University of Wisconsin thesis, 1924). W. Höcker, Der Gesandte Bunsen als Vermittler zwischen Deutschland und England (Göttinger Bausteine zur Geschichtswissenschaft, 1; 1951). E. Geldbach (ed.), Der gelehrte Diplomat: Zum Wirken Christian Carl Josias Bunsens (Beihefte der Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, 21; Leiden, 1980). J. Rogerson, Old Testament Criticism in Nineteenth Century England and Germany (1984), pp. 121–9.

Bunting, Jabez (1779–1858), Wesleyan *Methodist minister. A native of Manchester, he was received on trial into the Methodist ministry in 1799 and admitted into full connexion in 1803 as minister at Oldham Street Chapel, Manchester. He worked in several large towns until in 1833 he was permanently attached to the Methodist headquarters in London. In 1835 he became president of the first Wesleyan Theological College, established at Hoxton. His main work was to transform the Methodist society into a Church, possessed of a sound and consolidated organization, independent of the C of E. He was anxious, however, to work in harmony with the Established Church. He also took a keen interest in foreign missions and was for 18 years secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. Despite his love of political and religious freedom, he distrusted the more radical forms of democracy that commended themselves to many Nonconformists of the 19th cent.

Correspondence, 1820–9, ed. W. R. Ward (Camden Society, 4th ser. 11; 1972); Correspondence, 1830–58, ed. id. (Oxford, 1976). Life by his son, Thomas Percival Bunting (2 vols., London, 1859–87). J. [H. S.] Kent, The Age of Disunity (1966), pp. 44–85 and 103–26.

Bunyan, John (1628–88), author of *The Pilgrim's Progress. Of the external details of his life comparatively little is known. Born at Elstow in Bedfordshire, he was the son of poor parents (his father was a brazier, a trade he himself followed—hence the loose description of him as a 'tinker'), and probably acquired his knowledge and mastery of the English language from reading the Bible. He took part in the Civil War on the Parliamentary side (1644–6). About 1649 he married a woman of piety who introduced him to A. Dent's Plain Man's Pathway to Heaven and Bp. L. *Bayly's Practice of Piety; and these, together with the Bible, the BCP, and J. *Foxe's Book of Martyrs, seem to have been his sole reading. In 1653 he was received into an *Independent Congregation at Bedford, and after being formally recognized as a preacher in 1657, he soon became well known in that capacity. He suffered much from the repressive measures of the royalists after the Restoration of 1660, and spent most of the years 1660–72 in Bedford gaol. During and after his imprisonment he wrote extensively, including some verse compositions. Of his prose works, the chief and most famous are his autobiography, Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners (1666); The Pilgrim's Progress (q.v.; 1678 and 1684); and The Holy War (1682). For the rest of his life after his release in 1672, he worked among the Independents at Bedford, and took part in evangelistic work in other parts of the country. One of his last writings was a treatise, Antichrist and his Ruin (1692, posthumously pub. among his collected works), against the Church of Rome, whose influence in England under *James II he much feared. If history and biography furnish little aid in understanding the personality of Bunyan, his chief writings demonstrate that to him the world was exclusively the scene of a spiritual warfare and that nothing mattered save the salvation of the soul. In the ASB, feast day, 31 Aug.

First edn. of collected Works, vol. 1 (all pr.), London, 1692. Later edns. by G. Offer (3 vols., Edinburgh, 1852–3) and H. Stebbing (4 vols., London, 1859–60). Crit. edns. of Miscellaneous Works under the general editorship of R. Sharrock (13 vols., Oxford, 1976–94), of Grace Abounding by id. (ibid., 1962), The Holy War by id. and J. F. Forrest (ibid., 1980), and of The Life and Death of Mr. Badman by idd. (ibid., 1988). Lives by R. *Southey (London, 1830), J. A. Froude ('English Men of Letters', 1880), R. Sharrock (HUL, 1954), and G. [S.] Wakefield (London, 1992). [J. E.] C. Hill, A Turbulent, Seditious and Factious People: John Bunyan and his Church (Oxford, 1988). R. L. Greaves, John Bunyan (Courtenay Studies in Reformation Theology, 2; Appleford, Berks [1969]). N. H. Keeble, The Literary Culture of Nonconformity in Later Seventeenth-Century England (Leicester, 1987), passim; id. (ed.), John Bunyan, Conventicle and Parnassus: Tercentenary Essays (Oxford, 1988). A. Laurence and others (eds.), John Bunyan and his England, 1628-88 (1990). J. F. Forrest and R. L. Greaves, John Bunyan: A reference guide (Boston [1982]).

Buonarroti. See MICHELANGELO.

Burckard (or Burchard), John (d. 1506), Papal Master of Ceremonies. Born in a village near Strasbourg, he first went to Rome in Oct. 1467 and soon began to amass progressively more important benefices. He was canon of St Thomas's, Strasbourg, from 1477, a Papal Chaplain from 1478 with some duties in the Papal Chapel, and was a non-participating *Protonotary from Feb. 1481, though he seems to have had no particular canon law appointment. He was consecrated Bp. of Cività Castellana and made a Cardinal in 1504, having been made Papal Master of Ceremonies in 1483.

Burckard assisted his predecessor, Agostino Patrizzi, with the revision of the Pontificale Romanum (1485) and with the production of a new Caeremoniale Romanum* (completed 1488 and published in 1516). His major work was a detailed set of rubrics for *Low Mass, the Ordo servandus per sacerdotem in celebratione Missae, originally published at Rome in 1502. It went through several editions and was the basis of the Ritus Celebrandi of 1570. It was the first attempt to lay down the ceremonial for this form of Mass. Burckard's diary, begun in 1483, was a series of notes on Papal ceremonial that steadily increased in scope and which provides a primary source for the history of the Papacy in the late 15th and early 16th cents.

His Diarium sive Rerum Urbanarum Commentarii (1483–1506) ed. L. Thuasne (3 vols., Paris, 1883–5), with 'notice biographique' in vol. 3, pp. i–lxviii. Eng. tr. of vol. 1, 1910. Modern repr. of his Ordo servandus per sacerdotem in celebratione Missae in J. W. Legg, Tracts on the Mass (HBS 27; 1904), pp. 121–78, with introd. pp. xxv–xxviii. B. Schimmelpfenning, Die Zeremonienbücher der römischen Kurie im Mittelalter (Bibliothek des Deutschen Historischen Instituts in Rom, 40; 1973), pp. 136–8; M. Dykmans, SJ, L'Œuvre de Patrizi Piccolomini ou le cérémonial papal de la première renaissance, 1 (ST 293; 1980), pp. 70*–97*. E. Vansteenberghe in DHGE 10 (1938), cols. 1249–51, s.v.

Burchard (*c.*965–1025), Bp. of Worms from 1000. He was one of the most influential bishops of his time, and was successful in asserting episcopal authority in the secular affairs of his diocese, in building new churches, in forming new parishes, and in disciplining his clergy. Between *c.*1008 and 1012 he compiled his Decretum, a collection of *canon law, which exercised great influence in the 11th and 12th cents.

Decretum [ed. B. Questenburgh] (Cologne, 1548); also pr. Paris, 1549, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 140. 537–1058. A Life, approx. contemporary, ed. G. Waitz in MGH, Scriptores, 4 (1841), pp. 829–46; repr. J. P. Migne, loc. cit., 505–36. Crit. edn. by H. Boos, Monumenta Wormatiensia: Annalen und Chroniken (Quellen zur Geschichte der Stadt Worms, 3; 1893), pp. 97–126, with discussion pp. xxvi f. Two later Lives ed. O. Holder-Egger in MGH, Scriptores, 15 (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 44–62, of which one has been re-ed. by F. J. Bendel (Paderborn, 1912). P. Fournier and G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en Occident depuis les Fausses Décrétales jusqu'au Décret de Gratien, 1 (1931), pp. 364–421; H. Fuhrmann, Einfluss und Verbreitung der pseudoisidorischen Fälschungen (Schriften der MGH, 24), 2 (1973), pp. 442–85. G. Fransen, 'Le Décret de Burchard de Worms. Valeur du texte de l'édition. Essai de classement des manuscrits', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, 94, Kanonistische Abteilung, 63 (1977), pp. 1–19. H. Hoffmann and R. Pokorny, Das Dekret des Bischofs Burchard von Worms (MGH, Hilfsmittel, 12; 1991). C. Munier in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 887 f., s.v. 'Burchard, Decretum of'; R. Kaiser and M. Kerner in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 2 (1983), pp. 946–51, s.v. 'Burchard (13), Bf. v. Worms'.

Burdett-Coutts, Angela Georgina (1814–1906), heiress and philanthropist. She was a granddaughter of Thomas Coutts, the banker, from whom she inherited in 1837 nearly £2,000,000. In 1871 she was raised to the peerage. She included among her many public benefactions some munificent gifts to the C of E, building and endowing the churches of St Stephen, Rochester Row, Westminster (1847), St John, Limehouse (1853), St James, Hatcham (1854), St John, Deptford (1855), and St Stephen, *Carlisle (1865). She was led by her interest in colonial expansion and in religion to endow as dependent sees of the Church at home the Anglican bishoprics of Cape Town, South Africa (1847), and Adelaide, Australia (1847), and of British Columbia (1857).

E. Johnson (ed.), Letters from Charles Dickens to Angela Burdett-Coutts, 1841–1865 (1953). C. B. Patterson (great-niece), Angela Burdett-Coutts and the Victorians (1953). Biographies by E. Healey (London, 1978) and D. Orton (ibid., 1980). J. P. Anderson in DNB, 1901–1911, 1, pp. 259–66.

Burgher. A member of the group in the Scottish Secession Church which defended in 1747 the lawfulness of the religious clause in the civil Burgess Oath and thus separated from the '*Antiburghers'.

Burgon, John William (1813–88), Dean of *Chichester. Educated at Worcester College, *Oxford, he became a Fellow of Oriel in 1846, Vicar of St Mary's, Oxford, in 1863, and Dean of Chichester in 1876. He was an old-fashioned *High Churchman who was famous for his support of a long series of lost causes. He fiercely denounced the disestablishment of the Irish Church in 1869, the appointment of A. P. *Stanley as a Select Preacher in 1872, and the new BCP lectionary of 1879. He was also a strenuous upholder of the *Textus Receptus of the NT, publishing in 1871 *The Last Twelve Verses of the Gospel according to St Mark Vindicated, and in 1883 The Revision [i.e. the RV] Revised; two further works on the subject were published posthumously. His widely read Lives of Twelve Good Men (1888) contained vivid sketches of 19th cent. High Churchmen, often enlivened by Burgon's provocative judgements on his contemporaries.

Life by E. M. *Goulburn (2 vols., London, 1892). A. F. Pollard in DNB, Suppl. 1 (1901), pp. 335–8.

Burgundio of Pisa (c.1110–93), lawyer. He translated the works of several Greek Fathers into Latin. His version of St *John of Damascus' De fide orthodoxa was the best known in the W. until 1507 and was responsible for John's popularity throughout the Middle Ages.

John of Damascus, De fide orthodoxa: Versions of Burgundio and Cerbanus, ed. E. M. Buytaert, OFM (Franciscan Institute Publications, text series, 8; St Bonaventure, NY, 1955), pp. 1–386, with list of his translations, p. viii. P. Classen, Burgundio von Pisa: Richter-Gesandter-Übersetzer (Sb. (Heid.), Jhg. 1974, Abh. 4). F. Liotta in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 15 (1972), pp. 423–28, s.v.

Burial Acts. A series of enactments, passed between 1852 and 1900, giving to local authorities powers to deal with the increasing overcrowding of churchyards, and to supervise all burial grounds to secure decency of burial and adequate sanitary precautions. Authority was given for the closing of burial grounds, or their conversion to recreation grounds (in towns), and for the opening of new ones. Various provisions were also made as to the manner of burial, the fees payable, the rights and obligations of the *curate of the parish, and disinterment. By the Local Government Act 1894 permission was given to transfer the powers and duties of the Burial Boards, formerly elected by the vestry, in towns to district councils, and in rural districts to the parish councils. By the Burial Laws Amendment Act 1880, anyone with responsibility for the funeral of a parishioner was entitled to arrange burial in a churchyard or parish graveyard without the use of the Prayer Book or the attendance of a clergyman, with or without any form of Christian service. The Act also permitted C of E clergy to conduct funerals in unconsecrated burial grounds or cemeteries, and to use approved forms of service for the burial of parishioners who by rubric and canon are forbidden burial acc. to the Prayer Book rite.

On the law concerning rights to and duty of burial, see R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, 1 (2nd edn., 1895), pp. 650–701; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law Relating to the Church and Clergy (8th edn. by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 564–89. For the text of the 1880 Act, see R. P. Findall, The Church of England 1815–1948 (1972), pp. 239–41.

burial services. Burial is the traditional Christian method of disposing of the dead, and in the 4th cent., which is the earliest period of which we have information, the burials were occasions of joy, and those attending them wore white. But from about the 8th cent., when the prevalence of merely nominal Christianity made such joy not always fitting, the service became 'black', and the prayers petitions for speedy purification and for deliverance from hell. By the later Middle Ages the form had become fixed. The burial itself, at which the rite consisted of the committal prayers, was preceded overnight by *Vespers (or *Placebo), after which *Mattins and *Lauds (Dirige or *Dirge) were said in the night, and in the morning *Requiem Mass, with prayers for the absolution of the dead. Requiems were also said on the 3rd, 9th, and 30th day after death, and on anniversaries. In the RC Church the Ordo Exsequiarum of 1969 provides that, where it is customary, there can be a service in the house of the deceased and a procession to the church. The Requiem Mass now concludes with a final commendation in place of the absolution of the dead. The 1969 Ordo also provides an alternative form of service for use in a cemetery chapel and makes provision, where the *Ordinary permits, for the funeral rites, including the Mass, to take place in a house. Unless they have given signs of repentance before they died, however, none of these rites are to be conducted for notorious apostates, heretics, schismatics, public sinners, or for those who for anti-Christian reasons desired *cremation (CIC (1983), can. 1184). In the BCP the Dirge in a modified form (sentences, psalm, and lesson) is ordered, followed at the graveside by the committal prayers, and is to be used for all except those under (greater) excommunication, the unbaptized, and deliberate *suicides. Modern Anglican revisions make alterations of phrasing, allow other alternative psalms and different lessons. In some revisions special forms are provided for the burial of a child. (In the Irish BCP a form is given for an unbaptized child of Christian parents, as well as for an adult who had desired but not received baptism. The ASB makes no mention of any categories for whom its Funeral Service is not to be used; it has special prayers for use at the burial of a still-born or newly-born child, who would presumably be unbaptized.) Modern Anglican rites also recognize cremation, and the ASB has a Form which may be used at the Interment of Ashes. Provision for an (optional) Eucharist is made in modern Anglican burial services. In the Byzantine rite the burial service opens with various prayers and psalms, continues with the singing of the eight odes of the (hymnological) *canon, which includes the *contakion 'Give rest, O Christ, to Thy servant' (EH 744), and ends with an *epistle and *gospel, the whole being interspersed with litanies and prayers. The coffin is normally left open, the deceased holding an *icon of Christ and covered with a *pall; four candles are placed round the coffin and those present carry tapers. The body of the deceased is anointed, censed and blessed with *holy water, and the service ends with those present making their farewell with a kiss. A shortened form of this service (Greek: λιτή; Slavonic: panikhida) may be celebrated on the 3rd, 9th and 30th days after death, and on anniversaries, as well as on other occasions for all the departed. See also DEAD, PRAYERS FOR THE, and REQUIEM MASS.

W. Gresswell, A Commentary on the Order for the Burial of the Dead (2 vols., 1836). G. Rowell, The Liturgy of Christian Burial (Alcuin Club Collections, 59; 1977). D. Sicard, La liturgie de la mort dans l'église latine des origines à la réforme carolingienne (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 63; 1978). R. Rutherford, The Death of a Christian: The Rite of Funerals (Studies in the Reformed Rites of the Catholic Church, 7; New York, 1980; 2nd edn., by Rutherford and T. Barr, Collegeville, Minn., 1990).

Buridan's Ass. The famous 'case', traditionally (but wrongly, it appears) ascribed to the Paris philosopher John Buridanus (*c.*1292–1358 or later), acc. to which an ass, set between two heaps of hay, absolutely equal in respect of quality and quantity, through having no motives to choose one rather than the other, died of starvation. The problem which it poses on the psychology of moral action goes back (though in another context) to *Aristotle.

Buridan's name is also connected, and here too erroneously, with the logical problem known as the inventio medii or 'Pons Asinorum', i.e., the bridge by which stupid scholars can find their way from the minor or major to the middle term of a syllogism. In fact the 'Pons Asinorum' is first found in the *Scotist, Peter Tartaretus (Rector of Paris University, 1490).

The problem will be found stated in Aristotle, De Caelo, 2. 13, p. 295 b 32. Überweg, 2, p. 597.

Burkhardt, Georg. See SPALATIN, GEORG.

Burkitt, Francis Crawford (1864–1935), NT, Semitic, and patristic scholar. He was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and from 1905 till his death he was Norrisian (from 1934 'Norris-Hulse') Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. He was esp. attracted to some of the more out-of-the-way fields in the history of early Christianity, and did important original work on the *Syriac versions of the NT, putting on a wholly new footing the study of the relation of the *Peshitta to the *Old Syriac Gospels. He also made valuable discoveries in the allied field of Syriac liturgies. Among his more important writings, nearly all of which reflect his brilliant and unconventional mind, are The Old Latin and the Itala (1896), *St Ephraim's Quotations from the Gospel (1901), the art. 'Text and Versions' in the Encyclopaedia Biblica (vol. 4, 1903), Evangelion da-Mepharreshe (2 vols., 1904), The Religion of the Manichees (1925), Palestine in General History (Schweich Lectures, 1929) and Church and Gnosis (1932).

E. C. Ratcliff, 'Francis Crawford Burkitt', JTS 36 (1935), pp. 225–53, with note by G. G. Coulton, ibid., pp. 253 f., and list of his writings pp. 337–46. J. F. Bethune-Baker in DNB, 1931–1940 (1949), pp. 124 f., s.v.

Burma, Christianity in. Burma, formed from the Kingdoms of Ava and Pegu, came under British rule during the 19th cent. Though Ludovico di Varthema at the beginning of the 16th cent. states that there were Christian soldiers in service of the King of Pegu, it was the arrival of *Portuguese merchants that opened the way for serious attempts to convert the Burmese people to Christianity. The first RC missionary was a French *Franciscan who worked in Pegu for three years in the 1550s. Italian *Barnabites founded a mission in 1722; from 1830 this was transferred to various other religious orders. In 1807 English *Baptists began missionary work, but the first permanent Baptist mission arrived in 1813 from the *United States of America under Adoniram *Judson. Anglican missionary activity was initiated by the *SPG in 1859 and by the *BCMS in 1924; the diocese of Rangoon was formed in 1877. American *Methodists arrived in 1879 and British Methodists in 1887. Christianity gained few converts from Burmese of Buddhist background, but has had some success among the Karens, Kachins, and other tribal minorities. In the RC Church the first indigenous bishop was appointed in 1954 and a hierarchy created in 1955. The Anglican Church, formerly part of the Church of India, Burma, and Ceylon, became a separate Province in 1970. The largest Christian body in the country is the Burma Baptist Convention. For much of the period since independence in 1948, Burma has been ruled by a military-socialist government and contacts with the outside world have been restricted. In 1965–6 the government nationalized all Christian schools and hospitals; foreign missionaries were ordered to leave. In 1989 the country was renamed Myanmar. Christians comprise about 5 per cent of the population.

W. C. B. Purser, Christian Missions in Burma (1911); A. McLeish, Christian Progress in Burma (1929). P. A. Bigandet, An Outline of the History of the Burmese Catholic Mission, 1720 1887 (Rangoon, 1887). R. L. Howard, Baptists in Burma (Philadelphia [1931]); H. G. Tegenfeldt, A Century of Growth: The Kachin Baptist Church of Burma (South Pasadena, Calif. [1974]). H. P. Thompson, Into All Lands: The History of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, 1701–1950 (1950), pp. 384–93, with further bibl. p. 732. D. E. Smith, Religion and Politics in Burma (Princeton, NJ, 1965), esp. pp. 78–80, 244 f., and 249 f. Latourette, 6 (1944), pp. 225–35, and 7 (1945), pp. 319–23; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, 3 (1961), pp. 419 f., 5 (1963), pp. 338–42. P. Clasper in G. H. Anderson (ed.), Christ and Crisis in Southeast Asia (New York [1968]), pp. 13–28.

Burnet, Gilbert (1643–1715), Bp. of *Salisbury. He was a native of Edinburgh, educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, and in 1661 became a *probationer in the ministry of the Church of Scotland. He travelled widely, was the Minister of Saltoun 1664–9, and Professor of Divinity at Glasgow University from 1669 to 1674, when he settled in England. He enjoyed influence at the English and Scottish royal courts, and from 1675 to 1684 was Chaplain to the *Rolls. In 1685 he went abroad after the collapse of the *Exclusion agitation had led to the execution and exile of some of his friends. There he was much in the confidence of William of Orange and Mary, sailed with William in 1688, and was made Bp. of *Salisbury in 1689. A staunch Whig in politics and a *latitudinarian in theology, he unsuccessfully endeavoured to carry through plans which should allow for the incorporation of the Nonconformists into the C of E. His episcopate was a model of zeal and activity, pastoral and administrative. He was also a voluminous author and a determined political controversialist, his most noteworthy writings being his History of the Reformation in England (3 vols., 1679–1714), his Exposition of the XXXIX Articles (1699), and his History of My Own Time (2 vols., 1723–34).

Burnet's History of My Own Time, ed. M. J. *Routh (6 vols., Oxford, 1823) and O. Airy (2 vols., reign of *Charles II only; ibid., 1897–1900; suppl. from unpub. MSS by H. C. Foxcroft, ibid., 1902). The Everyman edn. of 1906 (consisting of T. Stack-house's abridgement of Bks. 1–4, orig. pub. in 1724, and the full text of Bk. 5) was reissued, with introd. by D. Allen, 1979. The best study is that of T. E. S. Clarke, H. C. Foxcroft, and C. H. Firth (Cambridge, 1907). J. J. Hughes, 'The missing "Last Words" of Gilbert Burnet in July 1687', Historical Journal, 20 (1977), pp. 221–7 [text of a document prepared when Burnet's life appeared to be at risk]; J. E. Drabble, 'Gilbert Burnet and the History of the English Reformation: The Historian and his Milieu', Journal of Religious History, 12 (1983), pp. 351–63. O. Airy in DNB 7 (1886), pp. 394–405.

Burney, Charles Fox (1868–1925), OT and Semitic scholar. In 1899 he was elected a Fellow of St John's College, Oxford, and in 1914 Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture. He was one of the most original OT scholars of his generation. Among his more important writings are his Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Book of Kings (1903), his Schweich Lectures for 1917 on Israel's Settlement in Canaan (1918), and his commentary on Judges (1918). In his Aramaic Origin of the Fourth Gospel (1922) and his Poetry of Our Lord (1925), he emphasized the importance of the *Aramaic background of the Gospels for their proper understanding.

burning. Burning alive was a penalty for certain criminal offences in late Roman and early Germanic law and was subsequently adopted in the penal code of most W. European states. In medieval English Common Law burning was the penalty for women found guilty of high treason, petty treason (i.e. conspiring against the life of a husband or employer), or counterfeiting coinage.

The burning of convicted heretics was a medieval development. Although the Emp. *Diocletian had enacted in 287 that *Manichaean leaders should be burned, this law was rescinded by his Christian successors and seems to have had no influence on later practice, even though the *Cathari were known as Manichees in the Middle Ages. In 1022 Robert II of France burned some ten convicted heretics at Orléans, and burning subsequently became the normal penalty for heresy throughout the W. Initially such executions were carried out against the wishes of the Church authorities but in 1184 Pope Lucius III decreed that unrepentant heretics should be handed over to the secular authorities for punishment and this practice was followed by the *Inquisition from its inception. In 1298 *Boniface VIII in the *Sext (5. 2. 18) recommended that the heresy laws of the Emp. *Frederick II should serve as a model in all states. It is widely supposed that this refers to the constitution Inconsutilem, promulgated for the Sicilian Kingdom in 1231 and extended to the rest of the Empire in 1238–9, which ordered that heretics should be burned; it may, however, refer to the milder imperial constitution of 1220, which enacted banishment and confiscation of goods for heresy. Even before 1298 all rulers in fact punished heresy by burning. In England the Crown claimed the right to issue a writ to order the burning of condemned heretics, a procedure followed in 1401 by Henry IV in the case of William *Sawtree, a Lollard. Subsequently the act De Haeretico Comburendo (1401) gave statutory force to the burning of heretics. It was repealed in 1533, restored by *Mary, and again repealed in 1558. The *Six Articles of 1539 imposed burning as a penalty for the denial of *transubstantiation, but they were repealed in 1547. *Elizabeth I and *James I ordered heretics to be burned for *Arianism and *Anabaptism. The last such burning was in 1610. The Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Act 1677 abolished the death penalty for heresy and other doctrinal offences.

Criminal acts accomplished by *witchcraft were punishable by burning in early Germanic law. In the later Middle Ages witchcraft was equated with *apostasy as an act of treason to God and both offences, if unrepented, were punishable by burning, but the prosecution of witches was not common before the 16th cent. The penalty in Catholic countries was invariably burning, and this was also the case in some Protestant countries, such as Scotland, though in England witches were hanged. The last burning for witchcraft in the British Isles took place at Dornoch in 1727 and the death penalty for this offence was abolished in the Witchcraft Act 1735. In parts of Europe witches continued to be burned until at least the 1750s.

Burning for heresy declined in the 17th cent., and even in Spain and its dependencies where the Inquisition had the full support of the Crown the death penalty became unusual. Only four people were burned in the half-century before the Spanish Inquisition was abolished in 1808.

Burning remained a penalty for criminal offences in many European states throughout the 18th cent. (in England it was not abolished until 1790), but the offenders were often hanged first, their corpses alone being cremated.

See bibl. to INQUISITION and WITCHCRAFT.

burning bush, the. The scene of *Moses' call, where the Angel of Yahweh appeared to him 'in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush' (Exod. 3: 2–4). The burning bush has frequently been used by Christian writers as a type of the Blessed Virgin.

Burrough, Edward (*c.*1643–63), *Quaker. Having heard G. *Fox preach in Westmorland in 1652, he determined to become a *Friend and began to preach himself, travelling up and down the country. In 1656 and 1657 he defended Quaker doctrines against an attack by J. *Bunyan. In 1661 he took up with *Charles II the cause of the Quakers in New England, who were then being persecuted by the Puritans, but without much success. In 1662 he was arrested in London for holding a meeting illegal under the Quaker Act and committed to Newgate Prison, where he died. He issued a large number of writings, most of them very brief.

His writings (mainly hortatory treatises and polemical letters) were pub. as The Memorable Works of a Son of Thunder and Consolation, ed. E. Hookes (1672). [F. Howgill, G. Whitehead, and others], A Testimony concerning the Life, Death, Trials, Travels and Labours of Edward Burroughs ('1662' [1663]). 'A Memoir of the Life and Religious Labours of that Eminent Servant of Christ and Minister of the Gospel, Edward Burrough' in W. and T. Evans (eds.), The Friends' Library, 14 (Philadelphia, 1850), pp. 380–491. E. Brockbank, Edward Burrough: A Wrestler for Truth, 1634–1662 (1949). [J. E.] C. Hill, The Experience of Defeat (1984), pp. 143–53.

burse. A cover consisting of two squares of stiffened material in which until 1970 the rubrics of the RC Missal ordered that the *corporal should be kept. Its use became general in the 17th cent.; though no longer required, it is still widely employed both in the RC and Anglican Churches.

Braun, LP, pp. 215–17.

Busch, Jan (1399–*c.*1480). One of the principal members of the *Brethren of the Common Life. He was a native of Zwolle, and from 1420 to 1424 was professor at *Windesheim. In 1424 he was ordained priest at Bödingen, near Cologne, and thereafter filled a variety of offices in the Netherlands and Germany. His ideals were those of the Brotherhood at their best. He took a prominent part in reforming the monasteries in the spirit of the Council of *Basle and for a time worked in close co-operation with *Nicholas of Cusa, who appointed him 'Visitor Apostolic' of the *Augustinian houses of Saxony and Thuringia. He also wrote the history of the Brethren's house at Windesheim.

His Chronicon was first pub. by the *Bollandist, H. Rosweyde, SJ, at Antwerp, 1621, while a treatise 'De Reformatione Monasteriorum quorundam Saxoniae' first appeared in G. W. *Leibniz's Scriptores Rerum Brunsvicensium, 2 (1710), pp. 476–506 and 806–972. New edn. of both by K. Grube (Halle, 1886). Lives by K. Grube (Freiburg i.B., 1881) and S. van der Woude (Diss., Edam, 1947). C. Minis in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 1 (1978), cols. 1140–2, s.v.

Bushnell, Horace (1802–76), American *Congregational divine. Born at Bantam, nr. Litchfield, Conn., USA, he graduated at Yale University in 1827 and was assistant editor of the New York Journal of Commerce from 1828 to 1829. In 1829 he became a tutor at Yale, at first studying law until, throwing off his religious doubts during a college revival, he entered the theological department of Yale College in 1831. From 1833 to 1859 he was pastor to the North Congregational Church of Hartford, Conn. Owing to ill-health he held no official position in his later years, though he continued active as a writer. In 1856 he assisted in the organization of the College of California at Oakland.

Bushnell was the pioneer of liberal theology in New England. Characteristic was his restatement of the doctrine of the Trinity. On the ground that language was essentially symbolic and relative to the subject, he held that while this doctrine might be true for man in that God was experienced under three different aspects, it did not give him real information as to the inner nature of the Godhead or require the existence of eternal distinctions in His Being. He also stressed the immanence of God in creation, explaining miracles as part of the Divine law of nature, and he interpreted the *Atonement in terms of moral influence to the rejection of penal theories of satisfaction. Among his chief works were Christian Nurture (1847), God in Christ (1849), Christ in Theology (1851), Nature and the Supernatural (1858), Work and Play (1864), The Vicarious Sacrifice (1866), Sermons on Living Subjects (1872), and Forgiveness and Law (1874).

Selection of his writings, ed. H. S. Smith (Library of Protestant Thought; New York, 1965), with introd. and bibl. M. B. Cheney (his daughter), Life and Letters of H. Bushnell (ibid., 1880). B. M. Cross, Horace Bushnell: Minister to a Changing America (Chicago [1958]); W. A. Johnson, Nature and the Supernatural in the Theology of Horace Bushnell (Studia Theologica Lundensia, 25; 1963); J. O. Duke, Horace Bushnell on the Vitality of Biblical Language (Society of Biblical Literature, Centennial Publications, Chico, Calif. [1984]).

Butler, Alban (1710–73), author of The Lives of the Saints. Educated at *Douai, he was ordained priest in the RC Church in 1735. After long studies and many travels on the Continent in search of hagiographical material, he published in 1756–9 The Lives of the Fathers, Martyrs and other principal Saints, compiled from original Monuments and other authentic records, illustrated with the remarks of judicious modern critics and historians. The Lives (over 1,600) are arranged acc. to the Church calendar, and, though their chief purpose was edification, and history and legend are not distinguished, they remain a monument of wide research. From 1746 to 1766 Butler was a mission priest in England in the Midland District. From 1766 until his death he was President of the English College at *St-Omer, where he was a frequent counsellor of the French clergy.

Drastically rev. edn. of The Lives of the Saints, by H. Thurston, SJ, N. Leeson, and D. Attwater (12 vols., 1926–38). A Dictionary of Saints to serve also as index to the rev. edn. was compiled by D. Attwater (London, 1938), and suppl. vol., by id. (ibid., 1949). New revision of Lives (abbreviated, but further improved) by D. Attwater, incl. substance of Dictionary and of suppl. vol. (4 vols., 1956). [Charles Butler, nephew], An Account of the Life and Writings of the Rev. Alban Butler (1799). E. H. Burton, The Life and Times of Bishop Challoner, 1 (1909), pp. 166 f., 221–4, 331 f.; 2 (1909), p. 161, incl. extracts from his letters and a portrait. T. Cooper in DNB 7 (1886), pp. 43 f.

Butler, Joseph (1692–1752), Bp. of *Durham. A native of Wantage, Oxon, and the son of *Presbyterian parents, he studied at the dissenting academy at Tewkesbury, where T. *Secker was his fellow-student. At an early age he entered into a correspondence with S. *Clarke on his 'Boyle Lectures' which revealed his remarkable powers of reasoning. Abandoning Presbyterianism he entered Oriel College, Oxford, in 1714, was ordained deacon and, two months later, priest, at *Salisbury in 1718, and from 1718 to 1726 was preacher at the Rolls Chapel. Here he delivered the sermons which won him his reputation. Fifteen were published in 1726, with an important preface, to which six others were added in later editions. In 1722 he had been presented to the rectory of Haughton-le-Skerne, nr. Darlington, and this he exchanged in 1726 for the wealthy benefice of Stanhope, Co. Durham. Here he lived in seclusion, engaged in pastoral duties and preparing his famous Analogy of Religion (1736; q.v.). In 1736, through Secker's influence, he was appointed Clerk of the Closet and from now on was constantly in attendance on Queen Caroline till her death (20 Nov. 1737). Commended to George II by the Queen on her death-bed, Butler was rewarded in 1738 with the poorly endowed see of Bristol, where he came into hostility with J. *Wesley and G. *Whitefield. To supplement his income, he was preferred in 1740 to the deanery of *St Paul's in commendam, and in 1750 he was translated to the bishopric of Durham. He is said (apocryphally) to have declined the see of *Canterbury in 1747 as he believed it 'too late to try to support a falling Church'.

Butler ranks among the greatest exponents of natural theology and ethics in England since the Reformation. His writings, which were esp. directed against attacks on the Christian conception of the world and the fundamental grounds of morality, stand out by their firm grasp of principle, sustained reasoning, caution, moral force, and, at times, irony. Their elevated tone is in marked contrast with that of the writings which they oppose; and, though his works make considerable demands on the reader, their moral qualities have won for them a permanent place in English literature.

Butler's moral philosophy, developed in his Fifteen Sermons and in the 'Dissertation on Virtue', appended to the Analogy, is directed esp. against the theories of T. *Hobbes, which had risen to popularity in the 18th cent. He maintained that true morality consisted in living in accordance with one's nature and that the primary constituent principles in human nature were self-love, benevolence, and conscience. Actions whose motives lie in the natural passions and instincts do not conform with the interests either of self-love or of benevolence. In criticism of the hedonists of his age, Butler argued that the desire for an object was evoked by the desired object itself, and not by any anticipation of the resulting satisfaction, and that true benevolence or love of one's neighbour was strictly disinterested. To conscience attached a supreme authority which compelled in those who admitted it an obedience which could not consider consequences. The principles of morality were intuitively evident and errors of moral judgement arose only from superstition and self-deception. Belief in Providence, however, convinced Butler that in the end the dictates of conscience and the demands of self-love will be found to have pointed to the same conclusion. (For his apologetic position, see ANALOGY OF RELIGION.)

The writings of Butler went through a number of editions in the 18th cent., but for a long time did not attract the serious attention which they merited. Throughout the 19th cent. they were widely studied by Anglican candidates for Ordination. J. H. *Newman acknowledged his great debt to the teaching of the Analogy on probability and the sacramentalism of nature. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 16 June.

The best edn. of his Works is that by W. E. *Gladstone (2 vols., 1896), with a suppl. vol. of Subsidiary Studies (also 1896). T. Bartlett, Memoirs of Joseph Butler (1839); W. A. Spooner, Bishop Butler (1901); C. D. Broad, Five Types of Ethical Theory (1930), pp. 53–83; E. C. Mossner, Bishop Butler and the Age of Reason (New York, 1936); A. Duncan-Jones, Butler's Moral Philosophy (1952); P. A. Carlsson, Butler's Ethics (1964); J. Downey, The Eighteenth Century Pulpit: A Study of the Sermons of Butler [and others] (Oxford, 1969), pp. 30–57; I. [T.] Ramsey, Joseph Butler . . .: Some Features of his Life and Thought (Friends of Dr Williams's Library, Lecture 23; 1969); T. Penelhum, Butler (1985); C. Cunliffe (ed.), Joseph Butler's Moral and Religious Thought: Tercentenary Essays (Oxford, 1992). L. Stephen in DNB 8 (1886), pp. 67–72.

Butler, Josephine Elizabeth (1828–1906), social reformer. She was the daughter of John Grey of Dilston, and in 1852 married George Butler (1819–90), sometime Canon of *Winchester. Her main interest was in the reclamation of prostitutes and the suppression of the 'white slave' trade. To this end she formed in 1869 the 'Ladies' National Association for the Repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts', and in 1875 called a meeting at Geneva which resulted in the establishment of the International Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice. Her inspiring work can best be studied in her Personal Reminiscences of a Great Crusade (1896). Behind her activities as a reformer lay a life of almost continuous prayer in which she took as her model St *Catherine of Siena (whose Life she published in 1878). In the ASB, feast day, 30 Dec.

G. W. and L. A. Johnson, Josephine E. Butler: An Autobiographical Memoir (1909). G. Petrie, A Singular Iniquity: The Campaigns of Josephine Butler (1971). Other studies by A. S. G. Butler (grandson; London, 1954), E. M. Bell (ibid., 1962) and J. Williamson (grandson; ibid., 1977). E. S. Hooper in DNB, 1901–1911, 1, pp. 282 f.

Butler, William John (1818–94), Dean of *Lincoln. Educated at Westminster and at Trinity College, Cambridge, he was ordained in 1841, and in 1846 became Vicar of Wantage. Here through a long incumbency he was a model parish priest of the *High Church school and trained several curates who later became famous (A. H. *Mackonochie, V. S. S. Coles, W. C. E. Newbolt, H. P. *Liddon, etc.). The Wantage diaries covering his incumbency (preserved in the Berkshire Record Office) provide one of the most detailed accounts of Tractarian parochial work in practice. In 1848 he founded in his parish St Mary's Sisterhood, which as the Community of St Mary the Virgin (CSMV) has grown into one of the largest and most active of the Anglican religious communities. In 1864 he was elected to the bishopric of Natal after J. W. *Colenso's deposition; but owing to Abp. C. T. *Longley's disapproval, declined the invitation. In 1880 he became a canon of *Worcester and in 1885 Dean of Lincoln. He remained warden of the CSMV.

Life and Letters of William John Butler [ed. by A. J. Butler (son)] (1897); [A. L. Hoare] CSMV, Butler of Wantage: His Inheritance and his Legacy [1948]. T. Seccombe in DNB, suppl. 1 (1901), pp. 359 f.

Butterfield, William (1814–1900), architect. A keen Churchman who had come under the influence of the *Oxford Movement, Butterfield was inspired by the architectural ideals of the *Cambridge Camden Society. His works include: St Augustine's College, *Canterbury (1844–8); Cumbrae College (1844–51); All Saints', Margaret Street, London (1849–59); St Alban's Holborn (1859–1862); buildings at Rugby School (1867–85); Keble College, Oxford (1867–83); and the three Anglican cathedrals at Perth (1847–90), Adelaide (1868–78), and Melbourne (1877–91) in Australia. He was also a noted designer of church furnishing.

Full study by P. [R.] Thompson, William Butterfield (London, 1971). Victorian Church Art: Exhibition Catalogue, Victoria and Albert Museum (1971), pp. 22–32. P. Waterhouse in DNB, suppl. 1 (1901), pp. 360–3.

Butzer, Martin. See BUCER, MARTIN.

Bye Plot (1603). Also known as the Priests' Plot. The lesser of two plots (the 'Main' and the 'Bye' plots) against *James I of England at his accession. William Watson and William Clarke, two RC priests, conspired with George Brooke and Lord Grey of Wilton, two Protestants out of sympathy with the new regime, to kidnap the King's person and extort concessions from him, partly on behalf of the *recusants. The plot was revealed by a Jesuit and another RC priest; Watson, Clarke, and Brooke were executed, and Lord Grey died in prison.

Byrd, William (1543–1623), English composer. Prob. born at *Lincoln and a pupil of T. *Tallis at the *Chapel Royal, he was appointed organist of Lincoln Cathedral in 1563. In 1570 he was sworn as a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, where he became organist with Tallis. In 1575 he and Tallis were jointly granted a monopoly of printing music. He resided at Stondon Massey, Essex, from 1593.

Though he was a practising Catholic and involved in frequent litigation for recusancy, Byrd's religion never seems to have prevented him executing his duties in the Chapel Royal. Besides his three superb Masses (written c.1593–c.1595), his two books of Gradualia (1605 and 1607), and other music for the Latin rite, he set to music the Preces and Responses and Litany of the English liturgy and composed at least two complete Services ('Short Service' and 'Great Service') for Morning and Evening Prayer, and two other Evening Services. In addition to writing various sacred songs and setting to music Latin motets, he was one of the pioneers of the verse anthem. His many anthems include 'Sing Joyfully', 'Sing Merrily', and 'Bow Thine Ear'. He also wrote a large body of string music, keyboard music and secular choral music, esp. madrigals. His publications include Cantiones Sacrae (jointly with T. Tallis, 1575), Psalms, Sonnets and Songs (1588), Songs of Sundry Natures (1589), two further books of Cantiones Sacrae (1589 and 1591) and Psalmes, Songs and Sonnets (1611).

Complete Works ed. E. H. Fellowes (20 vols., London, 1937–50); new edn. by P. Brett (ibid., 1976 ff.). E. H. Fellowes, William Byrd (Oxford, 1936; 2nd edn., 1948); J. Kerman, The Masses and Motets of William Byrd (1981). Id. in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 3 (1980), pp. 537–52.

Byrhtferth (d. c.1020), Anglo-Saxon scholar. He was a monk of Ramsey Abbey and a student of *Abbo of Fleury during the latter's time in charge of the monastic school (985–7), but little else is known of his life. He left a substantial corpus of computistical, hagiographical, and historical writings. These include a computus (principally preserved in Oxford, St John's College MS 17) and a commentary, partly in English, on this computus and known as the Enchiridion (written in 1011); Lives of St *Oswald (Abp. of *York and founder of Ramsey) and St Ecgwine (an early 8th-cent. Bp. of *Worcester and founder of Evesham Abbey); and a historical miscellany known as the Historia regum which draws heavily on earlier sources such as *Bede and Asser's Life of Alfred and treats English history up to the reign of *Alfred; it was long attributed to *Simeon of Durham. Byrhtferth was clearly a scholar of exceptionally wide reading (he is the only Anglo-Saxon author whose range of interests will bear comparison with Bede's), but his writing is marred by pedantry and stylistic pretension.

The Enchiridion and Computus are ed. by P. [S.] Baker and M. Lapidge (EETS, suppl. ser. 15; 1995); Vita S. Oswaldi, ed. J. Raine, The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, 1 (RS, 1879), pp. 399–475; Vita S. Ecgwini, ed. [J. A.] Giles, Vita quorundum [sic] Anglo-Saxonum (London, 1854), pp. 349–96 (these two Lives are both preserved uniquely in Brit. Lib. Cotton MS, Nero E. i; crit. edn., with Eng. tr. by M. Lapidge, Oxford Medieval Texts, in preparation); Historia regum, ed. T. Arnold, Symeonis Monachi Opera Omnia, 2 (RS, 1885), pp. 3–91. G. F. Forsey, 'Byrhtferth's Preface', Speculum, 3 (1928), pp. 505–22; C. [R.] Hart, 'Byrhtferth and his Manual', Medium Ævum, 41 (1972), pp. 95–109; P. S. Baker, 'The Old English Canon of Byrhtferth of Ramsey', Speculum, 55 (1980), pp. 22–37; id., 'Byrhtferth's Enchiridion and the Computus in Oxford, St John's College 17', Anglo-Saxon England, 10 (1982), pp. 123–42. S. J. Crawford, 'Byrhtferth of Ramsey and the Anonymous Life of St Oswald', in Speculum Religionis: Essays and Studies in Religion and Literature ... presented ... to ... Claude G. Montefiore (Oxford, 1929), pp. 99–111; M. Lapidge, 'Byrhtferth and the Vita S. Ecgwini', Mediaeval Studies, 41 (1979), pp. 331–53. Id., 'Byrhtferth of Ramsey and the Early Sections of the Historia Regum attributed to Symeon of Durham', Anglo-Saxon England, 10 (1982), pp. 97–122.

Byzantine rite. The liturgical rite of the E. *Orthodox Church, so called because it was the rite used in *Constantinople (anciently the city of Byzantium).

Byzantine text of the NT. The form of the Greek NT text which has become the standard one in the Greek-speaking Church, now more generally known as the '*Lucianic Text' (q.v.). It is to be found in the great majority of the extant Greek MSS of the NT, and was closely followed by *Erasmus in his 'Greek Testament' (1516) and in the *Textus Receptus. It is probably in essentials the text of *Lucian of Antioch, somewhat corrupted, and perhaps also further 'revised', in the course of transmission. See also SYRIAN TEXT.

Byzantium. See CONSTANTINOPLE.

C

Cabasilas, St Nicholas (b. *c.*1322), Byzantine mystical writer. The nephew of Nilus Cabasilas, Abp. of Thessalonica (with whom he has often been confused), he appears to have remained a layman throughout his life. The date of his death is unknown. In his principal work, a set of seven discourses 'Concerning the Life in Christ' (Περὶ τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ ζωῆς), he explained how, through the three mysteries of *Baptism, *Confirmation, and the *Eucharist, spiritual union with Christ was to be achieved. He also wrote an 'Interpretation of the Divine Liturgy' (Ἑρμηνεία τῆς θείας λειτουργίας). Although contemporary with the *Hesychast controversy and on friendly terms with the supporters of *Gregory Palamas, in these works he does not adopt the characteristic Palamite standpoint, and nowhere mentions the *Jesus Prayer, but he defends Palamism in a short work against Nicephoras Gregoras. He was proclaimed a saint in the Orthodox Church in 1983; feast day (in the E.), 20 June.

'Sacrae Liturgicae Interpretatio', Life in Christ, a Sermon 'Contra Feneratores', and Life of St Theodore in J. P. Migne, PG 150. 367–772. Three sermons on the Nativity, Annunciation, and Dormition of the BVM ed., with Lat. tr. and introd., by M. Jugie, AA, in PO 19 (1926), pp. 456–510. The work against Nicephoras Gregoras is ed. A. Garzya in Byzantion, 24 for 1954 [1956], pp. 521–32. Crit. edns. of his Interpretation of the Divine Liturgy by R. Bornert, OSB, and others, with Fr. tr. and notes by S. Salaville, AA (SC 4bis; 1967), and of his Life in Christ by M.-H. Congourdeau, with Fr. tr. (ibid. 355 and 361; 1989–90). Eng. trs. of Interpretation by J. M. Hussey and P. A. McNulty, with introd. by R. M. French (1960); of Life in Christ by C. J. deCatanzaro (New York, 1974); also, slightly abridged, by M. Lisney (Worthing, Sussex, 1989). M. Lot-Borodine, Un Maître de la spiritualité byzantine au XIV^e siècle, Nicolas Cabasilas [1958]. W. Völker, Die Sakramentsmystik des Nikolaus Kabasilas (Wiesbaden, 1977). S. Salaville, AA, 'Vues sotériologiques chez Nicolas Cabasilas', Études Byzantines, 1 (1943), pp. 5–57. I. Ševčenko, 'Nicholas Cabasilas' "Anti-Zealot" Discourse. A Reinterpretation', Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 11 (1957), pp. 79–171. J. Gouillard in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 14–21, and S. Salaville, AA, in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 1–9, both s.v., with bibl.

Cabbala. See KABBALA.

Cabrol, Fernand (1855–1937), liturgical scholar. In 1877 he was professed a Benedictine monk at *Solesmes, and in 1896 elected prior of the projected monastery at Farnborough in Hampshire, of which in 1903 he became Abbot. In conjunction with H. *Leclercq he edited the Dictionnaire d'archéologie chrétienne et de liturgie (1903–53) and the Monumenta ecclesiae liturgica (1900–13). His own writings include Le Livre de la prière antique (1900; Eng. tr., Liturgical Prayer, its History and Spirit, 1922), Les Origines liturgiques (1906), and L'Angleterre chrétienne avant les Normands (1909). His edition of the Roman Missal, with Eng. tr. and notes [1921], was widely used.

L. Gougaud, OSB, in RHE 33 (1937), pp. 919–22, with refs. to other obituary notices.

Cadbury, Henry Joel (1883–1974), American NT scholar. Of *Quaker descent, he was educated at Haverford College and Harvard University; he taught at Haverford College (1910–19) and Andover Theological College (1919–26) before becoming Professor of Biblical Literature at Bryn Mawr College (1926–34) and Hollis Professor of Divinity at Harvard (1934–54). One of the founders of modern Lucan scholarship, he was a *form critic and a pioneer of *redaction criticism; both methods are reflected in The Making of Luke-Acts (1927). An earlier work, The Style and Literary Method of Luke (1919–20) virtually demolished the contention that St *Luke's writing betrayed any specifically medical knowledge or interests. He played a large part, with F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. *Lake in the production of their influential Beginnings of Christianity (5 vols., 1920–33). Two popular books, The Peril of Modernizing Jesus (1937) and Jesus, What Manner of Man (1947), addressed the difficulties posed by cultural change for the claim that the teaching of Christ, or 1st-cent. interpretations of Him, could be authoritative in the 20th cent. Cadbury's encyclopaedic knowledge of Greek and the Graeco-Roman world lent authority to these and his many other books and articles on biblical subjects. He was a member of the panel which produced the Revised Standard Version of the NT (see BIBLE (ENGLISH VERSIONS), no. 5). After his retirement he published revised editions of H. C. Braithwaite's The Beginnings of Quakerism (1955) and The Second Period of Quakerism (1961), major achievements which followed his earlier work on George Fox's 'Book of Miracles' (1948) and specialized articles on Quaker history. Throughout his life he played a leading role in the work of the Quakers, making several journeys to Europe on behalf of the American Friends Service Committee and accepting the Nobel Award for Peace which the Committee shared with its British counterpart in 1947.

Obituary notice by A. N. Wilder in Harvard Magazine, May 1975, pp. 46–52. Then and Now: Quaker Essays: Historical and Contemporary by friends of Henry Joel Cadbury, ed. A. Brinton (Philadelphia [1960]), with biographical sketch by M. Hoxie Jones, pp. 11–70. M. Hope Bacon, Let This Life Speak: The Legacy of Henry Joel Cadbury (ibid., 1987), with bibl. D. E. Nineham in A Dictionary of Biblical Interpretation, ed. R. J. Coggins and J. L. Houlden (1990), pp. 95–7, s.v.

Caecilian (d. before 343), Bp. of Carthage from 311, or perhaps 307 (so T. D. Barnes). His importance lies in his part in the opening stages of the *Donatist controversy. As archdeacon he had supported Mensurius, Bp. of Carthage, in his efforts to suppress the fanatical desire of many Christians for martyrdom and the uncritical veneration for *confessors, and on Mensurius' death he was elected to succeed him. The opposing rigoristic party at Carthage then consecrated a rival bishop, urging that Caecilian's own consecration was invalid on the ground that he had received his orders from one Felix of Aptunga, a '*traditor'. He is the only bishop from Latin Africa who is known to have attended the Council of *Nicaea (325).

The chief sources are *Eusebius of Caesarea, St *Optatus of Milevis, and St *Augustine. P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, 4 (1913), passim. T. D. Barnes, 'The Beginnings of Donatism', JTS NS 26 (1975), pp. 13–22, repr. in id., Early Christianity and the Roman Empire (1984), no. 8. A. Mandouze, Prosopographie Chrétienne du Bas-Empire, 1: Prosopographie de l'Afrique Chrétienne (303–533) (1982), pp. 165–75. See also other works cited under DONATISM. For the Lat. version of the Nicene Canons which goes under his name ('Interpretatio Caeciliani', also 'Vetus Interpretatio'), see Turner, EOMIA (1899–1939), passim, and F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, 1 (1870), pp. 8–11; there are no sufficient reasons, however, for the common assumption that Caecilian himself was the author of the version, cf. E. *Schwartz, 'Über die Sammlung des Cod. Veronensis LX', ZNTW 35 (1936), pp. 11 f.

Caedmon (d. *c.*680), the earliest English Christian poet. Acc. to *Bede, the source of almost all our knowledge of him, Caedmon was a labourer at the monastery at Whitby, who received in a vision the gift of composing verses in the praise of God, and as a result became a monk. He was instructed in the Scriptures, which, as Bede also tells us, he turned into verse. He was the first Anglo-Saxon writer of popular religious poetry. Prob. Caedmon's only surviving work is a hymn which he is said to have composed in a dream, and which appears in an 8th-cent. hand as an addition to the Moore MS of Bede. Many other traditional poems are ascribed to him, with doubtful justice. He was venerated as a saint at *Jarrow, and his feast kept on 11 Feb.

The principal source for his Life is Bede, HE 4. 22 [24]; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 165–7 and 240. Modern edn. of his Hymn by A. H. Smith, Three Northumbrian Poems (1933), pp. 38–41; it is also ed., with full comm., by U. Schwab (Messina, 1972). Eng. tr. from Junius MS by C. W. Kennedy, The Cædmon Poems (1916), p. 1. E. van K. Dobbie, The Manuscripts of Cædmon's Hymn and Bede's Death Song (New York, 1937), pp. 1–48. C. L. Wrenn, 'The Poetry of Cædmon', Proceedings of the British Academy, 32 ('1946' [1951]), pp. 277–95, with bibl. D. W. Fritz, 'Cædmon: a traditional Christian Poet', Mediaeval Studies, 31 (1969), pp. 334–7. J. Opland, Anglo-Saxon Oral Poetry (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1980), pp. 106–20 and 128 f. Further bibl., incl. that of Caedmon School and notes of other works attrib. to him, in CBEL 1 (1940), pp. 73–5; NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 267–9.

Caeremoniale Episcoporum. In the RC Church, the book ordering the liturgical celebrations of a bishop. Its remote ancestors were the Ordines Romani* produced in Carolingian times when it was necessary to adapt the rite of Rome for use elsewhere. From the 13th cent. there were various compilations dealing with the ceremonial in use at the Papal court (see the following entry); the earliest dealing specifically with episcopal ceremonial was that drawn up by Paris Grassi, Bp. of Pesaro, during the pontificate of *Julius II (1503–13) and pub. in 1564 under the title De Cerimoniis Cardinalium et Episcoporum in eorum diœcesibus. This work was the basis of the Caeremoniale Episcoporum promulgated by *Clement VIII in 1600 which, despite some changes, remained in force until the Second *Vatican Council (1962–5). A new Caeremoniale Episcoporum was issued in 1984. Part 1 describes the bishop's role in the diocese and provides general rules of ceremonial. Part 2 is devoted to the 'stational Mass' (no longer called 'pontifical'), when the bishop celebrates with his clergy and people in the cathedral church or elsewhere in the diocese. The other six parts cover all the occasions when the bishop officiates, incl. *ordinations, *confirmations, the blessing of *abbots and *abbesses, the *dedication or blessing of churches, and the ceremonial to be observed at *General Councils and local synods. The whole is marked by a strong pastoral sense. Unlike its predecessor, its regulations have no superiority over the liturgical books issued since the Second *Vatican Council.

For works on the Ordines Romani, see s.v. Comm. on the 1600 Caeremoniale by J. Catalani (2 vols., Rome, 1744), L. Gromier (Paris [1959]), and J. Nabuco (in Lat., ibid. [1959]).

Caeremoniale Romanum. A Latin service book dealing with the ceremonies of the Papal court. Apart from the early Ordines Romani*, the first such book was that compiled *c.*1273 at the command of *Gregory X which contained the ceremonial for the election, ordination, and enthronement of a Pope (Mabillon, Ordo 13). A more elaborate compilation made by Card. J. Cajetan Stefaneschi *c.*1341 (Mabillon, Ordo 14) included also the ceremonial for *canonizations, a *General Council, and the coronations of emperors and kings. Other ceremonials followed, incl. that drawn up in 1488 by Augustine Patrizi, Bp. of Pienza. It was rewritten by Christopher Marcello, Abp. of Corcyra, and published at Venice in 1516 under the title Rituum ecclesiasticorum sive sacrarum Cerimoniarum SS. Romanae Ecclesiae. It remained in use until after the Second Vatican Council (1962–5).

J. *Mabillon, OSB, Museum Italicum, 2 (Paris, 1689), pp. 221–443; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 78. 1105–274. Crit. edns. of the compilation made at the command of Gregory X by M. Andrieu, Le Pontifical Romain au moyen âge, 2 (ST 87; 1940), pp. 525–41, with introd., pp. 277–88 and 317–19, and of that of Patrizi by M. Dykmans, SJ (ST 293–4; 1980–2), also with full introd. B. Schimmelpfennig, Die Zeremonienbücher der römischen Kurie im Mittelalter (Bibliothek des Deutschen Historischen Instituts in Rom, 40; 1973). See further the historical introd. to the Caeremoniale Episcoporum* (1984), pp. 7 f.

Caerularius, Michael. See MICHAEL CERULARIUS.

Caesar. The word, which was virtually a title of the Roman emperors in the 1st–3rd cents. AD, occurs several times in the NT (e.g. Mk. 12: 14–17, Jn. 19: 12, Acts 25: 8–12). To the inhabitants of Palestine and the provinces, the name denoted the Imperial throne rather than the person occupying it. The emperors contemporary with the NT were: Augustus, 27 BC–AD 14; Tiberius, AD 14–37; Gaius (Caligula), AD 37–41; Claudius, AD 41–54; *Nero, AD 54–68; Galba, AD 68–9; Otho, AD 69; Vitellius, AD 69; Vespasian, AD 69–79; Titus, AD 79–81; and *Domitian, AD 81–96.

Caesarea (Palestine). Originally known as 'Straton's Tower', the city on the coast of Palestine north of Jaffa (to be distinguished from the '*Caesarea Philippi' of Mt. 16: 13, Mk. 8: 27, the modern Banias south of Mount Hermon) was rebuilt by *Herod the Great, *c.*25–13 BC, prob. as a port for Sebaste (Samaria), and renamed in honour of the Emp. Augustus. It became the capital of Palestine (*c.*13 BC). In the Apostolic Church it was visited by *Philip the Evangelist (Acts 8: 40), who took up his residence here (21: 8), and by St *Peter who, in obedience to a vision, made himself known to Cornelius and was the instrument through whom the Holy Spirit was first given to the Gentiles (10: 44 f.). St *Paul was brought from *Jerusalem to Caesarea after his conversion and sent on thence to Tarsus (9: 30); he landed here on his way from *Ephesus to Jerusalem (18: 22); and he was imprisoned here for two years (23: 23, 24: 27). Under Vespasian it became a colony (AD 70). Prob. the scene of a small Council regulating the celebration of *Easter *c.*196 (*Eusebius, HE 5. 25), it became 'Metropolis Provinciae Syriae Palestinae' under Alexander Severus (d. 222). In consequence its bishop became metropolitan of Palestine (recognized at the Council of *Nicaea, can. 7) and held this dignity until the Council of *Chalcedon (451) subordinated him to the Patriarch of Jerusalem.

The home of *Origen from 231, Caesarea became noted as a seat of learning, with its episcopal library which contained many of Origen's works (incl. his Hexapla). Its most notable bishop was Eusebius (Bp., 315–*c.*340), the most learned man of his age. St *Jerome also studied here. The city suffered severely in the 7th cent. It was captured by the *Crusaders in 1101, when a chalice was found among the spoil, believed to have been used at the Last Supper. Important during the Crusades, the city was demolished in 1265 and remained in ruins until the 19th cent. In the past 40 years this has become one of the most intensively excavated sites in Israel. Both the town and the harbour installations have been studied by archaeologists and some major buildings have been partially restored.

C. T. Fritsch (ed.), The Joint Expedition to Caesarea Maritima, vol. 1: Studies in the History of Caesarea Maritima (Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research, Supplemental Studies, 19; Missoula, 1975). J. Ringel, Césarée de Palestine: Étude historique et archéologique (Association des Publications près les Universités de Strasbourg; Paris, 1975). L. I. Levine, Caesarea under Roman Rule (Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity, 7; Leiden, 1975). Id. and E. Netzer, Excavations at Caesarea Maritima, 1975, 1976, 1979—Final Report (QEDEM. Monographs of the Institute of Archaeology, the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 21; 1986), with bibl. K. G. Holum and others, King Herod's Dream: Caesarea on the Sea (New York and London [1988]). R. Janin, AA, in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 206–9, s.v. 'Césarée de Palestine'; K. G. Holum, A. Rabin and others in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 1 (Jerusalem and New York [1993]), pp. 270–91, s.v.

Caesarea Philippi. The scene of St *Peter's confession of Christ's Messiahship (Mk. 8: 27, Mt. 16: 13). It was the ancient Paneion, now Banias, at the foot of Mount Hermon. Acc. to *Eusebius (HE 7. 28), it was the home of the woman with the issue of blood (Mt. 9: 20), where a house was shown in his day with statues commemorating the event. The site has been thoroughly surveyed and parts of it excavated since 1967.

C. Kopp, Die heiligen Stätten der Evangelien (Regensburg [1959]), pp. 291–4; Eng. tr. (1963), pp. 231–5. Modern guide by J. Murphy-O'Connor, OP, The Holy Land (Oxford, 2nd edn., 1986), pp. 153–6. R. Janin in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 209–11, s.v. 'Césarée de Philippe'; Z. U. Ma'oz in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 1 (Jerusalem and New York, [1993]), pp. 136–43, s.v. 'Banias'.

Caesarean text. A form of the Greek text of the NT (comparable with that of the *Western and *Alexandrian texts) which B. H. *Streeter claimed to have identified. In The Four Gospels (1924) he argued that in the early centuries distinctive forms of the text arose in different local centres, and he connected this 'local text theory' with his suggestion of a different geographical provenance for each of the four main sources underlying the Synoptic Gospels. In contrast to B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort, Streeter identified the so-called *Neutral text as Alexandrian and distinguished this from the text of Mk. used by *Origen after his move to *Caesarea in Palestine in 231. The *Koridethi Codex (Θ) and two families of *minuscules (fam. 1 and fam. 13) are the main representatives of the Caesarean text, but even they present an impure form extensively assimilated to the *Lucianic standard. Several problems attend the local text theory, including: (1) it has proved very difficult to establish a distinctively Caesarean text in the rest of the NT apart from Mk.; (2) Origen exhibits 'Caesarean' readings even in his Alexandrian period; and (3) recent discoveries of early papyri from Egypt attest the presence of several different forms of text in the same locality. What remains of interest in Streeter's theory is the observation that there was an early form of the text of Mk. which is closer to the wording of the parallels in Mt. and Lk., and this, if original, would ease one of the difficulties for the classic 'Two Source' solution to the *Synoptic Problem.

B. H. Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924), ch. 4, pp. 77–108. McNeile, pp. 387–91. K. Lake, R. P. Blake, and S. New, 'The Caesarean Text of the Gospel of Mark', HTR 21 (1928), pp. 207–404; T. Ayuso, 'Texto cesariense o precesariense? Su realidad y su trascendencia en la critica textual del Nuevo Testamento', Biblica, 16 (1935), pp. 369–415; B. M. Metzger, 'The Caesarean Text of the Gospels', Journal of Biblical Literature, 64 (1945), pp. 457–89; repr., with additional notes, in his Chapters in the History of New Testament Textual Criticism (New Testament Tools and Studies, 4; 1963), pp. 42–72; E. F. Hills, 'Harmonizations in the Caesarean Text of Mark', Journal of Biblical Literature, 66 (1947), pp. 135–52; E. C. Colwell, 'The Significance of Grouping New Testament Manuscripts', New Testament Studies, 4 (1958), pp. 73–92, repr. in id., Studies in Methodology in Textual Criticism of the New Testament (New Testament Tools and Studies, 9; 1969), pp. 1–25; see also pp. 63–83.

Caesarius, St (*c.*470–542), Abp. of Arles from 502. About 490 he entered the monastery at *Lérins. He took a prominent part in the ecclesiastical administration of S. Gaul, and with the help of Alaric II and Theodoric the Great succeeded in establishing the claim of Arles to be the primatial see in Gaul. He was largely instrumental in securing the condemnation of *Semipelagianism at the Council of *Orange in 529. A large collection of canons, known as the '*Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua', has, almost certainly mistakenly, been ascribed to him by many modern scholars. He was a celebrated preacher, and a considerable number of his sermons have survived; many of them are based on the works of earlier authors. He also composed two monastic rules, a brief one for monks and a longer one for nuns; as well as showing the influence of *Cassian and the monastic tradition of Lérins, they are indebted to the Rule of St *Augustine. His Life was written by St *Cyprian of Toulon in conjunction with some of his other pupils. Feast day, 27 Aug.

Several of his writings ed. J. P. Migne, PL 67, 39, etc. Crit. edn. G. Morin, OSB, 2 vols., Maredsous, 1937–42 (vol. 1: Sermones; vol. 2: Concilia a Caesario habita, Regulae Monasticae, Opuscula Theologica, Testamentum, with Vita Caesarii in appendix; 2nd edn. of Sermones in CCSL 103–4, 1953), which supersedes all earlier texts. Sermones de diversis (nos. 1–80) repr., with Fr. tr., introd., and notes, by M.-J. Delage (SC 175, 243, and 330; 1971–86). Œuvres monastiques, ed., with Fr. tr. and full introd., by A. de Vogüé, OSB, and J. Courreau, OSB (ibid. 345 and 398; 1988–94). Eng. tr. of his Sermons by M. M. Mueller, OSF (Fathers of the Church, 31, 47, 66; 1956–73) and of his 'Rule of Nuns' by M. C. McCarthy, SHCJ (Washington, DC, 1960). S. Cavallin, Studien zur Vita Caesarii (Lund, 1934); also several studies by G. Morin preparatory to his edn. M. Dorenkemper, CPPS, The Trinitarian Doctrine and Sources of St Caesarius of Arles (Paradosis, 9; 1953). L. de Seilhac, OSB, L'Utilisation par S. Césaire d'Arles de la Règle de S. Augustin (Studia Anselmiana, 62; 1974). W. E. Klingshirn, Caesarius of Arles: The Making of a Christian Community in Late Antique Gaul (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 4th ser. 22; 1994). Bardenhewer, 5 (1932), pp. 345–56; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 475–7 and 652. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 329–33 (nos. 1008–19a). G. de Plinval in DHGE 12 (1953), cols. 186–96, s.v. 'Césaire d'Arles'; H. G. J. Beck in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 1046–8, s.v.; R. J. H. Collins in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 531–6, s.v. 'Caesarius von Arles'. See also bibl. to STATUTA ECCLESIAE ANTIQUA.

Caesarius, St, of Nazianzus (d. 369). He held various offices at court, including that of physician. There exists a set of four dialogues attributed to him, but they are much later in date. Our knowledge of him derives mainly from a panegyric delivered at his funeral by his elder brother, St *Gregory of Nazianzus. Feast day in the W., 25 Feb.; in the E., 9 Mar.

J. P. Migne, PG 38. 851–1190. R. Riedinger, Pseudo-Kaisarios: Überlieferungsgeschichte und Verfasserfrage (Byzantinisches Archiv, 12; Munich, 1969).

Caesarius of Heisterbach (*c.*1180–1240), ecclesiastical writer. Born in or near *Cologne, in 1199 he entered the *Cistercian Order at the monastery of Heisterbach (near Königswinter, on the Rhine). His best-known writings are his 'Dialogus Miraculorum' (*c.*1219–23), a collection of spiritual anecdotes for the edification of novices, full of supernatural incident, and his eight books (not all extant) 'On Miracles'. They both throw important light on the events and popular beliefs of his age, as well as on the history of the Cistercian Order. He also wrote a Life of St *Elizabeth of Hungary and a number of sermons.

Dialogus Miraculorum, ed. J. Strange (2 vols., Cologne, etc., 1851, repr., Ridgewood, NJ, 1966; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1929). For the work On Miracles, see A. Hilka (ed.), Die Wundergeschichten des Caesarius von Heisterbach, 3 (Bonn, 1937): bks. 1–2 ed. A. Hilka, pp. 1–222; bks. 4–5 (the life and miracles of St Engelbert, murdered at Cologne in 1225) ed. F. Zschaeck, ibid., pp. 223–328. Life of St Elizabeth ed. A. Huyskens, ibid., pp. 329–90. The life and miracles of St Engelbert also ed. A. Poncelet, SJ, in AASS, Nov. 3 (1910), pp. 644–81. Sermons pr. Cologne, 1615; the 'exempla' (or stories) excerpted and ed. A. Hilka, op. cit., 1 (1933), with full introd. A. E. Schönbach, 'Studien zur Erzählungsliteratur des Mittelalters. Teil IV: Ueber Caesarius von Heisterbach', Sb. (Wien), 144 (1902), Abh. 9. F. Wagner, 'Studien zu Caesarius von Heisterbach', Analecta Cisterciensia, 29 (1973), pp. 79–95; B. P. McGuire, 'Written Sources and Cistercian Inspiration in Caesarius of Heisterbach', ibid. 35 (1979), pp. 227–82; id., 'Friends and Tales in the Cloister: Oral Sources in Caesarius of Heisterbach's Dialogus Miraculorum', ibid. 36 (1980), pp. 167–245. J. M. Canivez, O. Cist., in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 430–2, s.v. 'Césaire d'Heisterbach'; K. Langosch in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 1 (1978), cols. 1152–68, s.v.

Caesaropapism. The system whereby an absolute monarch has supreme control over the Church within his dominions and exercises it even in matters (e.g. doctrine) normally reserved to ecclesiastical authority. The term is most generally used of the authority exercised by the Byzantine emperors over the E. patriarchates, esp. in the centuries immediately preceding the Schism of 1054.

Caiaphas. The Jewish *High Priest before whom Christ was tried (Mt. 26: 3, etc.), and at whose instigation He was condemned (Jn. 11: 49 ff.). He was appointed High Priest *c.*18 and deposed in 37. He was son-in-law of *Annas.

Cainites. A *Gnostic sect mentioned by *Irenaeus and other early writers which, regarding the God of the OT as responsible for the evil in the world, exalted those who withstood him, e.g. Cain, Esau, and Korah. They are said to have had an apocryphal Gospel of *Judas Iscariot.

St Irenaeus, Haer. 1. 31; St *Hippolytus, Haer. 8. 20; Ps.-*Tertullian, De Praescr. Haer. 33; St *Epiphanius, Haer. 38. On the Gospel of Judas, see H.-C. Puech, rev. by B. Blatz, in Schneemelcher (5th edn.), 1 (1987), pp. 309 f.; Eng. tr. (1991), pp. 386 f. G. Bareille in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 1307–9; G. Bardy in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 226–8, s.v., both with further refs.

Caird, Edward (1835–1908), Scottish philosopher and theologian. In 1866 he became professor of moral philosophy at Glasgow and in 1893 succeeded B. *Jowett as Master of Balliol College, Oxford. He was one of the chief representatives of the Neo-*Hegelian movement in British philosophy. In The Evolution of Religion (1893) and The Evolution of Theology in the Greek Philosophers (*Gifford Lectures, 2 vols., 1904) he maintained that the religious principle was a necessary element in consciousness, and that Christianity, in that it overcame the antithesis of the real and the ideal, was the absolute religion. He also published two important works on I. *Kant, A Critical Account of the Philosophy of Kant (1877) and The Critical Philosophy of Immanuel Kant (2 vols., 1889, a recasting of the previous book) and a monograph on G. W. F. Hegel (1883).

H. Jones and J. H. Muirhead, The Life and Philosophy of Edward Caird (1921). Obituary note by B. *Bosanquet in Proceedings of the British Academy (1907–8), pp. 379–86. Study by O. Bellini (Pubblicazioni del Seminario per le Scienze Giuridiche e Politiche dell'Università di Pisa, 23; 1990). DNB, 1901–1911, 1, pp. 291–5 (unsigned).

Caird, John (1820–98), elder brother of the preceding, divine and philosopher. In 1845 he entered the ministry of the Church of Scotland and in 1862 was elected professor of divinity at Glasgow. In 1873 he became Principal of Glasgow University. Like his brother, he was a Neo-*Hegelian, though somewhat more orthodox. His chief writings were An Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion (1880) and a posthumously published set of

*Gifford Lectures on The Fundamental Ideas of Christianity (1899).

Memoir by E. Caird (brother) prefixed to Fundamental Ideas of Christianity, 1 (1899), pp. ix–cxli. C. L. Warr, Principal Caird (The Scottish Layman's Library, 1926). A. P. F. Sell, Defending and Declaring the Faith (Exeter and Colorado Springs, Colo. [1987]), pp. 64–88 and 239–42. T. Bayne in DNB, suppl. 1 (1901), pp. 368 f.

Caius. See GAIUS.

Cajetan, St (1480–1547), founder of the *Theatine Order. A native of Vicenza, he was ordained priest at Rome in 1516. From the first he exerted himself to spread a fresh spirit of devotion among the clergy and to that end in 1524, with Pietro Carafa (later *Paul IV) and two other priests, he founded the congregation known as the Theatines, for clerics bound by vow and living in common, but engaged in pastoral work. He was beatified in 1629 and canonized in 1671. Feast day, 8 (formerly 7) Aug.

F. Andreu, CR (ed.), Le lettere di San Gaetano da Thiene (ST 177; 1954). Life by Antonio Caraccioli, O. Theat., orig. pub. in Cajetan's De Vita Pauli IV . . . Collectanea Historica (Cologne, 1612), pp. 176–260; repr. in AASS, Aug. 2 (1735), pp. 282–301. Another early Life by G. B. Cataldo, O. Theat. (Rome, 1616). P. Chiminelli, San Gaetano Thiene (1948), with full bibl. Other modern studies incl. those by G. M. Magenis (Venice, 1726; Ger. tr., 1754), M. A. R. Maulde la Clavière ('Les Saints', 1902; Eng. tr., 1902), O. Premoli (Crema, 1910), Silvestro da Valsanzibio, OFM Cap. (Padua, 1949, with docs.), and A. Veny Ballester (Barcelona [1950], with bibl.). P. Paschini, S. Gaetano Thiene, Gian Pietro Carafa e le origini dei chierici regolari teatini (1926). B. Mas in Dict. Sp. 6 (1967), cols. 30–48, s.v. 'Gaetan de Thiene', with refs.

Cajetan, Thomas de Vio (1469–1534), theologian. He was called Gaetano ('Cajetan') from his birthplace, Gaeta. He entered the *Dominican Order in 1484, and taught philosophy and theology at Padua (where contemporary philosophical movements were represented by P. *Pomponazzi and others), Pavia, and Rome. As *General of his order (1508–18), Cardinal (1517), and Bp. of Gaeta (1519) he played an important part in ecclesiastical affairs, urging the cause of reform before the fathers of the *Lateran Council of 1512, reasoning with M. *Luther in 1518, contributing to the elections of the Emp. *Charles V (1519) and the Pope *Hadrian VI (1522), and opposing the projected divorce of *Henry VIII (1530). Except for some years during the pontificate of *Clement VII, he was seldom free from onerous duties, but he contrived to study and write continually. In philosophy and theology his acute Commentary on St *Thomas's 'Summa Theologiae' (1507–22) was the first monument of a great revival of *Thomism in the 16th cent., and remains today one of the chief classics of scholasticism. Finding that Humanists and Protestants alike were making polemical use of the Scriptures, he subsequently turned to biblical exegesis, for which he sought the assistance of scholarly philologists; and his commentaries on the Bible contain much enlightened criticism of an unexpectedly 'modern' kind.

There are modern crit. texts of many of his works, as well as some Eng. trs. Quétif and Échard, 2, pp. 14–21 and 428. The Register of his letters while Master of the Order, ed. A. de Meyer, OP (Monumenta Ordinis Fratrum Praedicatorum Historica, 17; Rome, 1935). J. F. Groner, OP, Kardinal Cajetan (Louvain, 1951), with bibl. G. Hennig, Cajetan und Luther: Ein historischer Beitrag zur Begegnung von Thomismus und Reformation (Arbeiten zur Theologie, Reihe 2, Band 7; Stuttgart, 1966). A. Bodem, SDB, Das Wesen der Kirche nach Kardinal Cajetan (Trierer Theologische Studien, 25; 1971). J. Wicks, Cajetan und die Anfänge der Reformation (Katholisches Leben und Kirchenreform im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 43; 1983). B. Hallensleben, Communicatio: Anthropologie und Gnadenslehre bei Thomas de Vio Cajetan (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 123; 1985). U. Horst, OP, Zwischen Konziliarismus und Reformation (Rome, 1985), pp. 27–54. Nos. 86–7 of the Revue Thomiste, NS 17 (1935), also contain arts. specially devoted to his life and teaching. D. A. Mortier, OP, Histoire des maîtres généraux de l'ordre des Frères Prêcheurs, 5 (1911), pp. 141–230. J. R. Volz, OP, in CE 3 (1908), pp. 145–8, s.v.; E. Iserloh and B. Hallensleben in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 538–46, s.v. 'Cajetan de Vio, Jakob', with further bibl.

Calamy, Edmund (1) (1600–66), 'the Elder', English *Presbyterian divine. Of *Huguenot descent, he was educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he was excluded from a fellowship on account of his opposition to *Arminian teaching. From 1626 to 1636 he was lecturer at Bury St Edmunds, and from 1639 perpetual curate of St Mary Aldermanbury in London. He took a leading part in the production of the composite work Smectymnuus directed against J. *Hall's apology for a moderate episcopacy. As an active member of the *Westminster Assembly of 1643, he sought to defend presbyterianism as a middle course between prelacy and congregationalism. During the Commonwealth he worked for the return of *Charles II, and at the Restoration was offered as a reward for his services, but did not accept, the see of *Coventry and Lichfield. At the *Savoy Conference of 1661 he continued to take a moderate line, and hopes were entertained by the bishops of his conforming; but he refused to yield, and in 1662 he was ejected from his preferments. In 1663 he was committed for a short time to Newgate Prison for disobeying the Act of *Uniformity. Several of his sermons were published.

His Sermon preached on 17 Aug. 1662 is pr. in Farewell Sermons of Some of the Most Eminent of the Nonconformist Divines, Delivered at the Period of their Ejection by the Act of Uniformity in the Year 1662 (1816), pp. 1–13, with biog. introd. pp. vi f. Cromwell's Soldiers' Bible . . . compiled by Edmund Calamy, and issued for the Use of the Commonwealth Army in 1643, was repr. in facsimile (London, 1895). C. G. Bolam and others, The English Presbyterians (1968), esp. pp. 50 f. and 59. A. Gordon in DNB 8 (1886), pp. 227–30.

Calamy, Edmund (2) (1671–1732), historian of Nonconformity, the only son of Edmund Calamy 'the Younger' (1635?–85), who was himself the son of Edmund *Calamy 'the Elder'. His works threw much light on the history of Nonconformity. Esp. valuable is a chapter (9, nearly half the first volume) in his *Abridgement of Baxter's History (1702; new edn., 2 vols., 1713) entitled 'A Particular Account of the Ministers, Lecturers, Fellows of Colleges, etc., who were silenced and ejected by the Act for Uniformity; with the characters and works of many of them'.

A. G. Matthews, Calamy Revised: Being a revision of Edmund Calamy's Account of the Ministers and others ejected and silenced, 1660–2 (1934). C. G. Bolam and others, The English Presbyterians (1968), esp. pp. 127–35. A. Gordon in DNB 8 (1886), pp. 230–5.

calced (Lat. calceatus, 'shod'). A term applied to some branches of certain religious orders to distinguish them from their '*discalced' brethren (q.v.). Thus the unreformed *Carmelites, who wear shoes, are called 'calced' as opposed to the discalced members of the *Teresian reform, who wear sandals; the same applies to the 'calced' Conventual *Franciscans.

Calderwood, David (1575–1650), Scottish Church historian. He was educated at Edinburgh University and ordained to the charge of Crailing, Roxburgh, in 1604. A vigorous opponent of the ecclesiastical policy of *James VI and I (esp. of his attempts to reintroduce episcopacy into Scotland), in 1608 he was prohibited from attending Church courts or synods. He then devoted himself to the study of the origins of civil and ecclesiastical authority. When the King visited Scotland in 1617, Calderwood was summoned to the royal presence and put up a fearless defence of his views. He was deprived, imprisoned and subsequently exiled until after James's death. In 1641 he obtained the charge of Pencaitland in Lothian and not long afterwards co-operated with A. *Henderson in drawing up the 'Directory of Public *Worship'. His most important work, The True History of the Church of Scotland, was commissioned by the *General Assembly, which provided an annual pension of £800 during the last years of his life. It is characterized by anti-Erastian bias and a spirited defence of the liberties of the Church, but is still a valuable source of information on ecclesiastical history in Scotland during the 16th and 17th cents. He also wrote a number of polemical works.

Editio princeps of The True History of the Church of Scotland, pr. in the Netherlands, 1678, is incomplete. Fuller, but still incomplete, ed., based on MS in the British Library, by T. Thomson (Wodrow Society, 8 vols., 1842–9), with Life in final vol. [separate pagination]. Repr. of 1678 ed., with introd. by R. Peters (Menston, Leeds, 1971). W. G. Blaikie in DNB 8 (1886), pp. 244–6.

Caldey Island, off the S. coast of Wales, near Tenby, the seat of a monastery as far back as the 5th cent. In 1906 an abbey for Anglican Benedictines was established on the ancient ruins by Aelred Carlyle (1874–1955). In 1913 nearly the whole community transferred their allegiance to the RC Church. In 1928 they left Caldey for their present house at Prinknash, near *Gloucester, and the island was taken over by *Trappists from Chimay in Belgium.

The Benedictines of Caldey Island (Caldey, 1907). P. F. Anson, The Benedictines of Caldey: The Story of the Anglican Benedictines of Caldey and their Submission to the Catholic Church (1940). Id., Abbot Extraordinary: Memoirs of Aelred Carlyle, OSB (1958), pp. 65–179. F. L. Cross, Darwell Stone (1943), pp. 108–12.

calefactory (Lat. calefactorium, 'warming place'), the room in a medieval (esp. *Cistercian) monastery in which a fire or fires were maintained for the use of the monks. Where it existed, it was generally placed, as at *Fountains, between the refectory and the eastern range. The term survives as a designation for a communal place of recreation in modern religious houses.

calendar. The calendar in use at the time when Christianity began was the Julian, devised by Julius Caesar in 46 BC, in which the length of the years was almost but not quite accurately calculated. By AD 325 the error was enough to cause the vernal equinox to fall on 21 instead of 25 Mar., so that the 21st was then fixed as the earliest date for the Paschal full moon. The system was reformed by *Gregory XIII, who in 1582 caused ten days to be omitted from that year to balance the current error, and by altering the leap-year rules prevented its recurrence. The Gregorian Calendar was adopted in England in 1752. Certain parts of the Orthodox Church have not adopted it, and here the year now runs 13 days behind the W.

The beginning of the Christian Era with the date of the Incarnation was suggested at Rome by *Dionysius Exiguus in the 6th cent., and in due course adopted throughout Christendom. Calculation began from 25 Mar. AD 1, the supposed date of the *Annunciation, which was taken to be New Year's Day. The Gregorian Calendar restored New Year's Day to 1 Jan.

The observance of commemorations dates from early times. *Easter and *Pentecost were both observed from the very first as Jewish festivals with a new Christian significance, and like the Jewish Passover they were movable according to the moon, the calculations proving at times a source of controversy. Later the fixed festivals grew up, as well as further movable feasts depending for their date upon Easter. Of saints' days, those of the martyrs were the first and most obvious; others followed. So also the periods of fasting were gradually fixed by custom. At a very early stage the Jewish custom of a seven-day week produced regularly recurring fasts on *Wednesdays and *Fridays, an arrangement later modified but in substance preserved; while the observance of *Sunday as a festival dates from the Apostles, though it was only in 321 that an order of *Constantine forbade unnecessary Sunday work.

The new Roman Calendar of 1969 did much to bring out again the importance of the great feasts of *Christmas, Easter, and Pentecost, and to restore the primacy of Sunday over the feasts of saints; the number of saints' days was reduced, while an attempt was made to give the calendar a universal significance both in time (by including modern saints) and place. See also YEAR.

The study of chronology was put on a scientific footing for the first time by J. *Scaliger, De Emendatione Temporum (Paris, 1583), and D. *Petavius, SJ, De Doctrina Temporum (ibid., 1627). Important works of more recent date incl. the Benedictine L'Art de vérifier les dates de faits historiques, des chartes, des chroniques et autres anciens monumens, depuis la naissance de Notre-Seigneur [by M. F. Dantine, OSB, C. Clémencet, OSB, and U. Durand, OSB] (Paris, 1750; 2nd edn. [rev. by N. V. de Saint-Allais], 18 vols. + index, 1818–19; further continuation from 1770 to date by J. B. P. J. de Courcelles and F. d'Urban, 4 vols., 1821–38; another complete edn., 18 vols., 1821–44). C. L. Ideler, Handbuch der mathematischen und technischen Chronologie (2 vols., 1825–6). B. Krusch, Studien zur christlich-mittelalterlichen Chronologie (1880). H. Grotefend, Zeitrechnung des Mittelalters und der Neuzeit (2 vols., 1891–8). O. Pedersen, 'The Ecclesiastical Calendar and the Life of the Church', in G. V. Coyne, SJ, and others (eds.), Gregorian Reform of the Calendar: Proceedings of the Vatican Conference to commemorate its 400th anniversary, 1582 1982 (Rome, 1983), pp. 17–74, with other relevant arts., pp. 3–14 and 75–134. J. Gerard, SJ, in CE 3 (1908), pp. 738–42, s.v. 'Chronology (General)', and H. Thurston, SJ, ibid., pp. 158–66, s.v. 'Calendar'. The Oxford Companion to English Literature, 5th edn. by M. Drabble (1985), pp. 1126–55, gives miscellaneous calendrical data. See also bibl. to CHRONOLOGY (BIBLICAL), YEAR (LITURGICAL), GREGORIAN CALENDAR, and PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES.

Calendar of 354. See CHRONOGRAPHER OF 354.

Calfhill (or Calfield), James (*c.*1530–70), *Calvinistic divine. Educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge, in 1548 he became one of the early Students of Christ Church, Oxford. In 1560 he was ordained priest, and in the same year appointed to a canonry at Christ Church. In 1564 he became Lady Margaret professor of divinity at Oxford, in 1565 Dean of Bocking, and in 1570 he was elected to the see of *Worcester, but died before consecration. One of the leading Elizabethan Calvinists, he published in 1565 his principal work, an Answer to the 'Treatise of the Cross' [by John Martiall, 1534–97].

His Answer to John Martiall's Treatise of the Cross ed. R. Gibbings for the *Parker Society, 1846, with biog. note on Calfhill, pp. vii f. Unsigned art. in DNB 8 (1886), pp. 252 f.

Calixtines. The moderate party of the *Hussites of Bohemia and Moravia, also known as the '*Utraquists' (q.v.). They were so named from their contention that the laity should receive Communion in both kinds—i.e. from the chalice ('calix') as well as under the species of bread. Both Calixtines and Subunites (sub una specie) received ecclesiastical recognition at the Prague Compactata of 1433 (confirmed at Iglau, 1436).

G. Constant, Concession à l'Allemagne de la communion sous les deux espèces: Étude sur les débuts de la réforme catholique en Allemagne, 1548–1621 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 128; 2 vols., 1923).

Calixtus. For Popes of this name, see CALLISTUS.

Calixtus, Georg (1586–1656), Protestant theologian. He was educated at the University of Helmstedt, where he became an exponent of eirenic tendencies and conceived a high regard for P. *Melanchthon. He then spent four years (1609–13) travelling in RC and *Calvinist countries. On his return to Helmstedt he was appointed professor of theology (1614), and held the office till his death. He endeavoured to build up a theological system which should lead to reconciliation between *Lutherans, Calvinists, and Catholics. The basis of the proposed reunion was to be the Scriptures, the *Apostles' Creed, and the faith of the first five cents., interpreted in the light of the *Vincentian Canon. He expounded his position (which became known as '*Syncretism') in a long series of writings, of which perhaps the most important was his treatise Judicium de controversiis theologicis quae inter Lutheranos et Reformatos agitantur, et de mutua partium fraternitate atque tolerantia propter consensum in fundamentis (1650). He took part at the Colloquy of *Thorn in 1645.

E. L. T. Henke, Georg Calixtus und seine Zeit (2 vols., Halle, 1853–60). W. C. Dowding, German Theology during the Thirty Years' War: The Life and Correspondence of George Calixtus (1863). H. Schüssler, Georg Calixt, Theologie und Kirchenpolitik: Eine Studie zur Ökumenizität des Luthertums (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte Mainz, 25; 1961), with bibl. I. Mager, Georg Calixts theologische Ethik und ihre Nachwirkungen (Studien zur Kirchengeschichte Niedersachsens, 19 [1969]). J. Wallmann in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 552–9, s.v.

Calling. As a technical theological term the word came into use in Reformation theology for the Divine act whereby those destined for salvation are persuaded to accept the Gospel. It was used in this sense, e.g., in the 'Shorter *Westminster Catechism' of 1647. *Calvinist theologians have commonly held that the Divine Calling is in itself efficacious, whereas *Lutherans have held that it requires a voluntary response. In much Evangelical Christianity of more recent times the Call of God takes a very important place in the immediate and conscious conversion which is considered normal and necessary in the religious life of every Christian.

Callistus (or Calixtus) I, St (d. *c.*222), Bp. of *Rome from *c.*217. He was apparently originally a slave. Acc. to *Hippolytus, his first appearance in history was in connection with some fraudulent banking operations, which finally led to his being sent to the mines of Sardinia. After his release at the request of Marcia, the mistress of the Emp. Commodus (180–92), he was given a pension by *Victor I. In 217 he succeeded *Zephyrinus, whose chief minister he seems to have been. His pontificate was marked by acute controversy. He was attacked by Hippolytus for countenancing *Sabellianism and for his laxity, esp. in readmitting to communion those guilty of adultery or fornication; but some of the charges against him may be discounted as based solely on the evidence of his adversary. The catacombs of 'San Callisto' on the *Appian Way are named from his having been in charge of them under Zephyrinus. Callistus himself was buried in the cemetery of Calepodius on the Aurelian Way. Feast day, 14 Oct.

Hippolytus, Haer. 9. 12. LP (Duchesne), 1 (1886), pp. 141 f. J. J. I. von *Döllinger, Hippolytus und Kallistus (1853; Eng. tr., 1876). That Callistus was the pontifex maximus quod est episcopus episcoporum who issued an edict on penance (edictum peremptorium) attacked by *Tertullian in De pudicitia, 81, has been maintained by many modern scholars, incl. O. *Bardenhewer and A. d'Alès, L'Édit de Calliste (1914); on the other side, see B. *Altaner and C. B. Daly, 'The "Edict of Callistus"', Studia Patristica, ed. F. L. Cross, 3 (TU 78; 1961), pp. 176–82. J. Gaudemet, 'La decision de Callixte en matière de mariage', in Studi in onore di Ugo Enrico Paoli (Florence, 1956), pp. 333–44. Bardenhewer, 2 (2nd edn.; 1914), pp. 636–8; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 159, 164, and 169. S. G. Hall in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 559–63, s.v. 'Calixtus I'.

Callistus (or Calixtus) II (d. 1124), Pope from 1119. Guido of Burgundy was a descendant of the counts of Burgundy and closely connected with almost all the royal houses of Europe. He was made Abp. of Vienne by *Urban II in 1088, became Papal legate in France in 1106, and took part in the Lateran Council of 1112, which declared null and void the *investiture privileges which the Emp. Henry V had extorted from *Paschal II. In the same year he himself presided at a Council held at Vienne, which condemned lay investiture as a heresy. Having been elected Pope at *Cluny, he excommunicated Henry at the Council of *Reims in 1119, but the intervention of the German princes, esp. Henry of Bavaria, facilitated a peaceful solution. The long-drawn-out struggle between Pope and Emperor was brought to a conclusion by the Concordat of *Worms (q.v.) in 1122, which was promulgated at the *Lateran Council of 1123, where the Pope also issued a series of decrees concerning simony, the marriage of priests, and the election of prelates. In the quarrel between his old see of Vienne and that of Grenoble, Callistus took the side of the former and authenticated a collection of forged privileges of which, however, the larger part dates from earlier times.

U. Robert, Bullaire du Pape Calixte II (1119–1124): Essai de restitution (2 vols., Paris, 1891); id., Histoire du Pape Calixte II (1891). Studies by M. Maurer (Munich, 2 vols., 1886–9) and G. Ender (Greifswald, 1913). M. Stroll, Symbols as Power: The Papacy following the Investiture Contest (Brill's Studies in Intellectual History, 24; Leiden, 1991), esp. pp. 1–92. Mann, 8 (1910), pp. 139–227. É. Jordan in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 424–38; G. Miccoli in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 16 (1973), pp. 761–8, both s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under INVESTITURE CONTROVERSY.

Callistus (or Calixtus) III (1378–1458), Pope from 1455. A native of Valencia, Alfonso de Borgia enjoyed a considerable reputation as a jurist both at the University of Lérida and at the court of Alfonso V of Aragon (King, 1416–58). He originally supported the cause of *Benedict XIII (antipope 1394–1417), but eventually induced his successor Clement VIII (antipope 1423–9) to submit to Pope *Martin V in 1429. He was thereupon appointed Bp. of Valencia in the same year and created a *cardinal in 1444. The main efforts of his Papacy were directed to the organization of a crusade against the Turks, to which project he had been esp. devoted since the fall of *Constantinople in 1453. In spite of the victory of St *Giovanni Capistrano (q.v.) at Belgrade in 1456, his plans met with little success, largely owing to the unsettled state of Europe, which his attempts to arrange peace did little to allay. After the death of Alfonso V (1458), he refused to recognize the claims of his illegitimate son to the throne of Naples, of which Alfonso was overlord. His intervention in the subsequent dynastic disputes lent substance to the charge of nepotism already raised by his elevation to the cardinalate of two of his nephews (incl. the future *Alexander VI) and the appointment of a third as Duke of Spoleto. Prob. the most interesting event of his pontificate was the revision of the trial of *Joan of Arc by the annulment of the sentence and a declaration of her innocence. He was also responsible for the canonization in 1457 of *Osmund, Bp. of *Salisbury.

Regesto Ibérico de Calixto III, ed. J. Rius Serra (Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Científicas. Escuela de Estudios Medievales. Textos, 10, 29, etc.; 1948 ff.). Vita a Bartholomæo Sacho, pr. by L. A. *Muratori, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, 3, pt. 2 (Milan, 1734), cols. 961–66. N. Housley, The Later Crusades, 1274–1580 (Oxford, 1992), esp. pp. 102–5 and 293 f. Pastor, 2 (1891), pp. 317–495. E. Vansteenberghe in DHGE 11 (1949), cols. 438–44, s.v., incl. bibl.; M. Batllori in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 1081 f.; M. E. Mallet in Dizionario Biografico degli Italiani, 16 (1973), pp. 769–74, all s.v., with detailed bibl.

Calovius, Abraham (1612–86), German *Lutheran theologian. In 1650 he was appointed to the chair of theology at *Wittenberg, and in 1652 General-superintendent. A man of great learning, he took part in many controversies, and as a strenuous defender of rigid Lutheran orthodoxy opposed G. *Calixtus's policy of reuniting the Confessions. He also made vigorous attacks on *Socinianism and *Pietism and controverted the liberal views of H. *Grotius on biblical inspiration. In his doctrine of the 'Unio Mystica', however, he departed (probably far more than he was aware) from the Reformation doctrine of justification. His chief dogmatic work, Systema locorum theologicorum (12 vols., 1655–77), is a monument of Lutheran scholasticism.

J. Wallmann in TRE 7 (1981), pp. 563–8, s.v. 'Calov, Abraham', incl. bibl.

caloyer (Gk. καλόγηρος, from καλός, 'fine', + γῆρας, 'old age'; i.e. 'venerable'). A designation for Greek monks.

Calvary, Mount (Lat. Calvaria, Gk. Κρανίον, Heb. 'Golgotha', all meaning 'skull'). The place of Christ's crucifixion, just outside *Jerusalem. It may have been originally a place of public execution where the skulls of the executed were to be seen, or the name may have been derived from a neighbouring cemetery or connected with the shape of the ground (traditionally a hill) which may have resembled a skull. Acc. to tradition it was the burial place of *Adam's skull. See also HOLY SEPULCHRE.

Calvin, John (1509–64), French reformer and theologian. Born at Noyon in Picardy, Calvin appears to have been intended for an ecclesiastical career; he obtained his first benefice and received the *tonsure at the age of 12 through the patronage of the Bp. of Noyon. Sometime between 1521 and 1523 he went to Paris, studying arts at the Collège de Montaigu, presumably with a view to proceeding to the study of theology, but from 1528 he studied civil law at Orléans and later at Bourges. Here he became familiar with the ideas of Humanism, and possibly (through the influence of Melchior Wolmar, who taught him Greek) those of M. *Luther. After the death of his father in 1531, Calvin returned to Paris to study letters, publishing his commentary on *Seneca's De Clementia in 1532.

